been carried out properly? - That is correct.

And beyond that you would not go? - Beyond that I would submit these documents for further examination to my superior officer.

And who was that? - This, I assume, would be Mr. Matchett.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: You have given I think two statements to the police prior to today's appearance; is that right? - I am not aware of having given two statements. I was interviewed by the police on one occasion.

Right. Are you able to explain how I have been given two different statements with your name on them? - No, I am not aware of two different statements.

I wonder if you could just have a look at the statement? I will pass it over to you. Now, that statement bears to have been taken from you and has your name and address on it; is that right -- is that right, it has your name and address on top? - It has my name and address at the top here.

And then there is a section which says "Taken by". That is blank. It just says, "P.C.", and then the rest of it is not filled in? - That is correct.

And then if you could turn to the second page of that statement it says, "I formed the impression that Hamilton was a fit and proper person to have a firearm certificate"? - That is what it says on this statement. It also says I am 55 years of age on this statement, which I am not.

So you have no recollection of having given this statement? - Well, I certainly didn't give my age as 55 years of age.

On the second page it also has a section on it which says something about "Any other relevant information to be inserted" -- do you see that, or words to that effect? Can I ask you to read out the section about inserting other information? - It says "Any other information should be inserted here",/ here", and then a new sentence "The inquiry was carried out in a satisfactory manner and I signed the form and passed it on as per Force Standing Orders".

But you have no recollection of having given this statement? - I made a statement to the police. I don't know whether this is the statement, or any other statement.

So it may be that somebody else has compiled this? - I have no idea.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: Presumably -- can you tell me what rank you hold? - Chief Inspector.

In your capacity as Chief Inspector certain information about various people within the areas you had responsibility for would doubtless come to your attention in the course of your duties? - A lot of information came to my attention.

If some information came to your attention regarding somebody's non-suitability to hold a firearms certificate, when you came to process the certificate as you have described to us, would you consider it appropriate to draw your own personal observations to the attention of the person up the line from you? - I would.

And to enable you to do so, is that part of the reason why the certificate passes through a chain such as we have seen in the documents which were shown to you? - Yes.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Do you remember who took your statement? - Yes. It was a D.C. from Stirling. I think - would it be Hamilton his name? I am not quite sure.

What about Mitchell? - Mitchell -- that is the one.

Do you remember when it was taken? - I honestly don't remember exactly when it was taken.

The incident we are inquiring into was on 13th March. Do you remember how long after, roughly, it was? - No, I couldn't honestly say -- a/a fortnight, three weeks.

Would 2nd April fit into the period, roughly, that you recollect this statement was taken? - It could do, yes.

That is a fortnight to three weeks? - Yes. I remember the D.C. phoned up, made an appointment and came down and saw me.

GEORGE MATCHETT, Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you a superintendent with Central Scotland Police? - I am a Chief Superintendent.

And how long have you been with Central Scotland? - I have just completed 30 years' police service.

I wonder if you would have certain documents in front of you that we have just been looking at with Mr. Paterson? You will be given the same documents. Now, one of these is a renewal and variation application at the instance of Thomas Hamilton. The other two are an RL3a and a supplement to it. Your name appears on the RL3a? - Yes.

Do you remember the application? - Not in detail, no.

At that stage you were a superintendent? - That is correct.

Where? - At Stirling.

So are you a Divisional Commander at that stage - No. Under the old organisation I would be a sub-divisional officer, acting in capacity/capacity at that time, in the absence of the Divisional Chief Superintendent.

Well, I see on the form we have already got a sub-divisional officer signing it in the form of Mr. Paterson? - Yes.

So why does the form come to you next? - Because I am the Deputy to the Chief Superintendent at that point.

You/

2.50 p.m.

You are standing in for him, are you? - That's correct, yes.

Now, do you remember in general terms what document you would have in front of you when you were considering the RL3a and whether to sign it? - Yes, I would have the RL3a and the yellow form together with the firearms certificate.

When you say the RL3a and the yellow form, is that the supplement to it? - That is the supplement to it, yes.

And did you also have the application in front of you? - I would have, yes.

And the firearms certificate? - Yes.

No other file? No other papers? - No other papers at all.

Now, how did you then in general terms in those days go about considering an application? - Well, the core factors within the application process are outlined in Items 1 to 6 initially in RL3a, to consider if the applicant is a suitable person to hold a firearms certificate and look at what in actual fact the enquiry officers are saying in that regard. The same follows up through the Questions 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 and finally to Question 7.

So are you checking simply that it appears on the face of it that the enquiry has been done properly? - That is the purpose of my examination at that stage.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: Did Mr. Hamilton mean anything to you at this time? - No, Mr. Hamilton was only at that time one of many hundreds of names that pass across my desk.

No re-examination.

JOHN/

JOHN BROWN (35), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you a Constable with Central Scotland Police? - That is correct.

Are you based in Stirling? - Yes, I am.

How long in the police? - 16 years.

Can you have certain documents in front of you please? FA43, 44 and 45 which are D65, 58 and 69. I think you have there an application by Thomas Hamilton dated 14th January 1989? - Yes, that is correct.

And that is for renewal and variation? - No.

Just for renewal? - For renewal.

And 68 is what? That is FA44. That is an RL3a? - That's correct, yes.

And the supplement is the other document which is with it, is that correct? - Yes, that is correct.

Now, you were the enquiry constable in this case? - That's correct, yes.

Do you remember it? - I have vague recollections of it.

What do you actually remember about it? - I can remember dealing with it, I can remember parts of it.

Do you remember being in Hamilton's house? - Yes, I do.

Where was that at that time? - It was at Kent Road in Stirling.

One of the things mentioned on the RL3a is that the serial number on the Browning rifle has been wrongly recorded on the firearms certificate? - Yes, that is correct.

Who/

Who discovered that? - I discovered that.

How did you discover it? - When I was checking the serial numbers of the firearm against the firearms certificate I noticed the discrepancy.

So you had the firearms certificate with you when you made the enquiry? - I believe so.

Or would that be checked later possibly? - It may have been possibly later, yes.

Now, if you look at the additional document, you are dealing there with the reason for duplicate calibre weapons, is that right? - Yes, that is correct.

Now, Mr. Hamilton already had authority for these duplicate calibre weapons, is that right? - Yes, that is correct.

But you were looking at that question again, were you? - The question on the left-hand side of the form is that he has applied for duplicate calibre for competition purposes and I have just specified why he had the duplicate.

Can you remember anything of the enquiry into that? - I don't recall that part of it, no.

So you can't help us on what the distinction between these two weapons really was or what the distinction between the purposes for which they were required was? - No, I don't recall that part.

Do you remember checking his security? - Yes, I do.

And were you happy with that? - Yes, I was.

We see a description of it there. Was it particularly good? - Yes, it was. I do recall that part of it.

There is then a question about intended purchases. Do you remember anything of the enquiry into that? - No, I don't recall that part.

Can/

Can you remember what the appropriate approach to the question of intended purposes was in those days? What information did you want to know about his intentions? - As I say, I don't actually recall that part of the form but I would probably ask him if he intended to purchase the thing in the near future and if so the reason for the purchase.

What would you mean in that context by the near future? - Well, probably within the life of the certificate.

The one you are about to renew? - Yes, that is correct.

Which nowadays would be five years? - Now it is five, yes.

Could you discover any reason why Mr. Hamilton should not be given the authorities he was seeking in terms of his application for renewal? - No, I did not.

There is one possible oddity in that application in respect that it says that he possessed 7.62 calibre ammunition but he didn't actually have the weapon at that stage. That was one of the weapons he wanted to acquire. Was there anything wrong in your view with his having ammunition for that weapon before he got it? - I see above it under the details of firearm to be purchased or acquired he has a 7.62 rifle that he would want to.....

Yes, I appreciate he wanted to buy a 7.62 rifle but ought he to have some of that ammunition before he actually has the rifle? - No, I don't see why he would want the ammunition. I don't know.

And I think I may be right in saying to you that he had indicated an intention to acquire that rifle at the last renewal. So he has obviously possessed the intention without implementing it for a while but that was not something you remember dealing with? - No, I don't recall that.

Now, you have recorded that he possessed a fair amount of ammunition. He had or at least it is/is recorded on his form he had 930 rounds of 9mm ammunition at that stage? Is that right, on the application form? - He had now many, sorry?

930 rounds of 9mm. That is on to the right-hand side of the page, the front page of the application form? - Sorry, I see it.

Is that correct? - Yes, that is correct.

340 rounds of .357? - That is correct, yes.

Do you remember checking the storage of his ammunition? - I don't specifically remember the ammunition. I remember his general security.

Do you remember the security for the guns? - Yes, I remember the guns.

Do you remember actually handling the guns, examining them? - Yes, I do.

Is there any particular reason why one thing you do remember about this Inquiry is actually dealing with the guns? - I think it is maybe because, I don't know, it may be because it is the only one I have ever had where there has been a discrepancy in one of the serial numbers. It may be that.

Was it your job in those days to make behind-the-scenes checks on the record and other information about an applicant? - Yes, that is correct.

So what checks did you normally do at that time? - You would normally check SCRO, a Scottish Criminal Records Office check and a Police National Computer check and a local criminal intelligence check.

At that time how was the criminal intelligence check done? - I think it would be by phoning our Criminal Intelligence Officer then.

Can you now look at one further Production which is D49L, inevitably without a number. It is an AD2A document dated 11th November 1994/

1994. It is FA26. Are you Constable 403 J.R. Brown? - No, I am not.

So that is someone else's form? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: When this application came in did you see your role as testing in any way the use that any applicant made of this firearms certificate during the previous period? - No, I would not do that.

There was not any question of saying "How often do you shoot or are you still a member of X club or Y club?"? - I don't recall asking him that.

And you would not have asked him anything about the use of ammunition or the certificate showing the amount of commercial ammunition checked during the currency of the previous certificate? - No, I would not ask that.

So there really would not be any testing of the applicant as to the use he is making of his certificate or his intended use of the certificate? He would simply be taken at face value on the form which said he wanted to do target shooting at a facility? - If there was a specified club I might have checked with the club but I don't recall that, I am afraid.

But would you as a matter of routine ask any applicant what use they had made of the facility during the validity of the previous certificate? - No, I would not.

So you would not ask them to show positively a good reason? You would see the application showing what they wanted to have and basically you would take that at face value? - If there was a specified thing I would check that.

Because you are really the only link between the applicant when your report goes up the line. You have got the information from the applicant. There is no one else has any dealings with the applicant other than the enquiry officer? - That is correct.

Were you aware at all of the name Thomas Hamilton/

Hamilton at that time from other dealings within the Force? - I don't recall that at all.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: Are you familiar with the prerequisites for being granted a firearms certificate? - I believe so.

Is one of these prerequisites that the applicant requires to have good reason to hold a certificate? - Yes, that is correct.

What is the criteria or criterion which is normally used to say whether there is a good reason on the part of an applicant? - Well, as I stated, if it was to join for instance a gun club you would check that side of it out.

And would you enquire of the applicant how he constituted good reason? - I am sorry, I don't understand that.

Would you ask the applicant what the reason was for him applying for the firearms certificate? - If he was applying for the grant of one?

Yes? - Yes, I would.

And if he said that it was his membership of a club, what would you then do? - You would then verify the details.

How would you verify them? - You would get in touch with the club and verify with them.

BY LORD CULLEN: Just taking that point a little further; under the head of good reason are you concerned also with the good reason for the holding of the ammunition to which the application refers? - Yes, you would be.

And does that include the quantity, the amount, of ammunition which is proposed to be either held or acquired? - I'm sorry, do you mean good reason for the ammunition.....

Good reason for that amount to be held or acquired? - I am afraid I don't know.

Well, did you have any role in examining whether/whether there was a need for an applicant to have as much ammunition as the applicant asked for? - No.

If you were dealing with an application for renewal of the firearms certificate, would it be any part of your responsibility to find out the extent to which the previous authorisation for ammunition had in fact been used? - No.

So to what extent therefore were you involved with ammunition as far as good reason was concerned? - If it was wanted for say pest control and he had ground to shoot on, you would check that the ammunition asked for would be the appropriate type of ammunition to use for that.

If for example he was asking for renewal and he mentioned quantities of ammunition that were considerably larger than previously authorised would you think that was a matter which required to be looked into or not? - It would be but that would not be done by me. I wouldn't do that.

Who would do that? - I think the Firearms Department would look into that.

And which particular officer going up the chain? - I don't know what particular officer. If I had two applications at the same time and one wanted 20 rounds and one wanted 500 rounds for the same purpose, if it was target shooting, I wouldn't know if it was excessive to have that or whatever.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Does the question of good reason arise on renewal applications? - Yes, it does.

HEATHER/

3.10 p.m.

HEATHER MARION MORTON (31), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: I now live in Stirling.
In 1989 I lived at a former address in Stirling, 19 Kent Road.

How long did you stay there? - Nine years.

So when did you first move there? - 1984.

During your period in Kent Road did Thomas Hamilton and his family move there? - Yes.

When was that? - 1986.

How far away was his house, No. 7? - It was one block away.

Did you know him? - To look at.

Did you ever speak to him? - Yes.

Frequently? - No.

In what circumstances did you speak to him? - On the passing.

"Hello", or did you stop and talk? - "Hello".

Did you know any other member of the family? - Did he know any other member of the family?

No, did you know any other member of the family? -
Yes.

Who did you know? - Jimmy, his Dad.

Did you know him to speak to? - Yes.

How often did you speak with him? - Quite often.

Where would you normally meet him? - In the local Stirling Miners' Welfare where I was employed/employed at the time, or out in the garden.

Did you know what Thomas Hamilton did either for a living or what his main activities were? - No, I didn't. I thought he was unemployed.

What about spare time or leisure activities? - He was a photographer.

You didn't understand that was an occupation? - Well, he had said that he wasn't a professional photographer, he was just an amateur.

He told you he was a photographer? - Yes.

And in what circumstances did he tell you that? - When I was speaking to him.

So it was more than just "Hello" -- you did speak to him? - Yes, I would stop like at the garden as I was passing, and he offered to take pictures of my children.

Did you accept the offer? - No, I refused.

When was this? - This would be about 1987.

And why was it you refused? - I just didn't like the look of the guy.

Did you know anything of his interest in boys' clubs? - I had heard that he had a boys' club. He had put leaflets through the local doors, and he knew that I had one son and two daughters.

Did he do more than put leaflets through the doors? - He did, yes.

What else did he do? - He had put videos through my letter box.

Plural -- how many? - One video.

When was that? - That would be in 1987.

What/

What age was your boy then? - He was five.

What did you do with the video? - I went to Mr. Hamilton's door and chapped, and it was his Dad that answered it, and I told him to give it back to Mr. Hamilton.

Had you viewed it? - Yes I did.

What did it show? - It was boys running along like a beach area with short black trunks on.

What did you make of it? - I thought it looked ridiculous.

What did you think? - I just thought it wasn't the kind of video that a person in their right mind would make.

What did you think was his purpose, though, in showing it to you? - He thought obviously with me seeing that, that maybe it would interest my son to go to one of his clubs. He said he had a boat on Loch Lomond, and that maybe my son would like to go with him; and I refused.

But presumably he put it through the door thinking it would impress you or influence you favourably towards him? - Yes I think so.

But it certainly didn't do that? - No, it certainly didn't.

Did Hamilton ever try to take any photographs of your family? - Yes, he did. On a few occasions when my son was coming home from school he had to pass Mr. Hamilton's window, and my son had come in and said that he was trying to photograph -- take pictures of him through the window.

Did you check on that? - Well, I had asked my son if it was like a camera or if it was like a video camera that he was using, and he had said it was a video camera.

Did you check up with Mr. Hamilton? - No.

Did/

Did you do anything about it? - No.

Were you ever in his house? - Yes.

And you didn't raise that with him? - At that time, when I had got into his house, that was before I had known about that.

I went into his house -- well, I had went to the door to give him back this video that he had put through my letter box, and when I chapped the door it was his Dad that answered, and he asked me to come in, because he knew me quite well with working in the bar that he drank in. And when I got inside his son was there.

Now, were you speaking to Hamilton, the son, on that occasion? - Yes.

Can you remember what about? - Again he was trying to persuade me to get pictures -- to let him take pictures of my children.

Were there photographs on his walls? - Yes, there was.

What were they photographs of? - All of boys dressed in the black trunks on the left-hand wall, and like self-portraits (sic) on the right-hand wall, again all of boys, none of which were smiling, which I thought was very odd -- very creepy.

What was the difference between the ones on the right and the ones on the left? - What was the difference?

The difference? - The ones on the right-hand side were of boys with black trunks on, was on the fireplace wall, on the right, and the ones on the left -- no, sorry, the ones on the right were the ones that were like he said he had drawn them himself.

So were they sketches? - Yes.

And how were the children clothed in the sketches? - It was just bare skin -- it was like head and shoulders, and none of the kids were smiling, they were really frightened looking and I didn't like that.

Now/

Now, you were formerly related through marriage to a police officer involved in dealing with one of Hamilton's applications for his firearms certificate, Mr. Goldie? - That is correct.

What was the relationship? - He is my brother-in-law.

And you have got some knowledge I think of one investigation or one occasion when he was involved in dealing with a firearms application, have you? - Well, I am not so clear on that, but I remember when they first moved into the street my brother-in-law had made a comment that he was quite a shady character, that there had been an incident in his house, something to do with guns, but Mr. Hamilton never ever mentioned guns to me.

Did you know he had guns? - No, I didn't.

And is that as much as you can remember of this? -
Yes.

Roughly when was that? - That would be 1986 or 7.

And you think something was said about an incident in his house with guns? - In his house, yes.

Is it possible that you misunderstood what was said? -
Well, I don't know what was happening in the house. I didn't know the man then. I had just moved into the street at the time.

So is this a very vague recollection? - Yes.

No cross-examination.

EDWARD GOLDIE (36), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I am a Constable with Central Scotland Police. I have been in the police for nearly 18 years now.

Where/

Where are you based at present? - At Dunblane.

Have you had a role to play in the Dunblane Inquiry?

- Yes.

I think we have heard -- I should have said to his lordship -- I think we have heard evidence from you already when you told us about arriving at the school; is that right? - Yes.

Now, I want to ask you about something else. You had some dealings with Hamilton in relation to firearms applications? - That is correct.

Do you remember it? - I can't recall that far back.

Do you remember meeting him at all? - I am afraid not.

Apart from dealings with a firearms application was there any other occasion you met him? - Not to my knowledge.

Or even heard about him? - No.

Now, your former wife's sister I think lived near him? - That is correct.

Did you visit there at all, so that you would have a chance of social contact with Hamilton? - I wouldn't have met him socially, no. I possibly just dealt with his file.

And that would be the only reason? - That would be the only reason.

Can you look at two documents, FA39 and 40, which are D59 and 60? Now, is this the application that you dealt with? - Yes.

Is it an application dated 15th March 1987 -- if you go to the third page of the form? - Yes.

And is it an application for variation of a firearms certificate? - Yes.

And/

And I think the other document you have is the RL3a?

- Yes.

And you were the enquiry officer and have completed it as the enquiry or reporting officer? - Yes.

You have answered the six questions "Yes"? - That is correct.

You have answered the seventh question, which is the space for providing supplementary information, at some length, so that it has been necessary to have two pages? - Yes.

Does seeing this help at all to remind you of the circumstances? - I am afraid not, no.

Now, this is apparently the stage at which Hamilton asks for a significant increase in his ammunition purchasing and holding power? - Yes.

And you have commented on that, as well as his plan to purchase a 7.62 rifle and a .22 rifle? - Yes.

It still doesn't ring any bells? - I am afraid not, no.

Now, can you read out to us what you have actually recorded as his reasons for the variation? - At Point 7?

Yes, please? - "The applicant has sold the .22 Anschutz rifle, No. I02541 and has purchased the 9mm Beretta pistol, No. C58230Z as shown. The applicant wishes to purchase one 7.62mm rifle and one .22 rifle. All weapons will be used for target shooting. With reference to 2(i) and 2(iii) on the certificate, maximum quantity of ammunition to be purchased or acquired at any one time is 1500 and 1,000 rounds respectively for each calibre. Applicant would like to have maximum for weapons he possesses and those which he would like to purchase. Applicant's security for weapons and ammunition has been checked and is very secure. With reference to the applicant's wish to be able to purchase and have 1500 .38 ammunition maximum, this is due to the fact that this .38 Special ammunition can be fired in his .357/

.357 revolver. There is no real basic difference in the ammunition in that the .38 Special is slightly less powerful".

Did you know that for a fact? - Yes.

So you were not just regurgitating what he told you -- you knew that? - I knew .38 Special can be fired in a .357.

The effect of this was to give him authority to hold 3,000 rounds that could be fired in that weapon? - That would be correct.

Now, it looks as though you have gone into it in some detail, but I still can't jog your memory? - I am afraid not.

Do you remember at all being in his house in the course of this enquiry? - I am afraid not, no.

Checking what weapons he had, for example? - I have no recollection.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: Constable Goldie, on this occasion would you, as a matter of routine, have tested out the need for the increase in ammunition? - No. I would submit the report through the chain of command.

Yes, but you wouldn't say to Hamilton "This is a big increase. How often do you shoot? Why do you need so much?"? - I would have asked at the time obviously why he wanted that amount of ammunition. It was obviously for target shooting, sporting purposes.

But would you as a matter of routine have said to him "What clubs are you a member of? How often do you shoot? It seems a large amount to have"? - I think I would have asked those questions, yes.

But there is no indication on the form of that? - No. I can only go by these two forms I have.

Did you carry out many enquiries either of authorisation or renewals, or for new applications/applications for firearms? - I think mostly -- I can't recall how many I have done, but it was just usually applications for grants of firearms.

Would you consider your role to test out in any way the information on the application form as to whether or not in fact there was a genuine good reason, as required by the Firearms Act? - Well, if he was doing a lot of shooting he would require a number of bullets.

What/

3.30 p.m.

What I'm trying to get the flavour of is whether you would test him out and actually do a bit of probing as to why there was such a thing? - I would ask him why he would want that amount of ammunition but if he is firing on ranges and things and does a lot of shooting he would require a lot of ammunition.

But would you say to him "How often do you shoot a week or a month? What clubs do you go to?"? - Yes, I would obviously ask these questions.

Was any alert put on you because of the significant increase in ammunition he was wanting here? - I wouldn't have thought so, no. Not at that time, no.

BY LORD CULLEN: Do you have any recollection of there being an increase or are you simply dealing with these questions theoretically? - I can't honestly recall having dealt with the man at all.

If you are asking questions because you found that the applicant was asking for more than he had previously been authorised to hold or acquire in the way of ammunition, did you have any kind of yardstick by which to test whether it was any more than was reasonably adequate for the purpose or whatever? - I don't think there would be any yardstick to go by.

So was there any limit? I mean, suppose for example he asked for 10 or 15 times what he had been previously authorised. Were you in a position to say "Well, that is more than I am satisfied is reasonably required" or something like that? - I don't think there is any maximum under the Firearms Act in relation to that.

So does it come to this then; that provided he can give some reason to account for an increase you had no means of knowing how to measure how much was a reasonable request, is that right? - That is correct. That is right.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: Do you still/still have D60L before you which is the LR3a? - Yes.

If we go to answer 7 we find in the first page that it says "Applicant would like to have the maximum for weapons he possesses". Do you see that? - Yes.

Can you give any meaning to that? - I think the maximum would be the maximum he wished to have, 1500 or 1,000 rounds.

So that is the maximum as contained in his application as opposed to a maximum which you might have in mind for the yardstick? - Yes.

Can you have D35L before you please. That is a firearms certificate issued to Mr. Hamilton. What I am particularly interested in is Table 2 which is the ammunition Table. Do you see that? - Yes.

And I think we see in the copy which I have that it starts to record sales of ammunition to him in December of 1979 and concludes in late 1984, is that right? - Yes.

And we see that he has virtually exceeded in space -- in fact not virtually exceeded but he has exceeded all the spaces available in Table 2? - Yes.

Can you then please have a look at document 49L. That should be an AD2A from I think Mr. Brown to the Chief Superintendent in A Division? - Yes.

And we see that Mr. Hamilton has handed his firearms certificate into the police because he has run out of space in Table 2? - Yes.

And he is asking for a duplicate to be issued to him I think and if we then look at Production 50L, that should be a further firearms certificate which was renewed on the 30th of January 1986, is that correct? - I can't see the date at the moment but it is the 14th of February 1986 it has got here. Until the 14th of February 1986.

Yes, I see that. I think the date is the 31st/

31st of January 1986. It is two lines below that. It says from the 14th of February 1986 and is signed Thomas G. Whitson, Police Force Central Scotland dated the 31st of January 1986? - It has got Thomas G. Whitson, Depute, Central Scotland 17/12/84. Sorry, I see it. It is on the right-hand side. I beg your pardon. 31/1/86.

And that is issued with effect from the 14th of February 1986? - Yes.

But issued on the 31st of January 1986? - Yes.

And if we look at Table 2 on this firearms certificate, again we see that Mr. Hamilton has taken up quite a large amount of the available space recording his firearms purchases? - Yes.

Now, is that in your experience unusual? - I couldn't comment on that.

Well, have you seen it before? - I can't recall seeing this before.

No, not this particular firearms certificate before. Have you seen the appropriate Table, Table 2, on a firearms certificate being filled up to the extent one sees in the document and a need for a duplicate to be issued? - I don't think I have seen as many as that.

Well, would you have seen those in the course of the inquiry which you made into Mr. Hamilton's application for renewal if you then looked at it? - There is a possibility I would have seen them but I can't say if I have seen them or not.

If you had seen them would that have influenced you in considering the amount of ammunition which might have been appropriate for Mr. Hamilton to have? - Well, it would tell me he was doing a lot of shooting but other than that I couldn't comment.

And if he was doing a lot of shooting would that influence you in your view on the amount of ammunition which he might have reason to hold? - Yes.

Are/

Are you aware of there ever having been an incident in Mr. Hamilton's house involving a gun? - No.

No re-examination.

NORMAN JOHN LYNCH (35) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you employed by Central Scotland Police as a firearms examiner? - Yes.

Since? - Since April 1991.

Prior to your appointment in April of 1991 was there an equivalent post within Central Scotland Police? - No.

Since your appointment has anyone else joined you in the same post? - No.

Since 1991 have your duties been the same? - They were increased.

That is volume? - Yes.

But what you actually do, has that been the same? - That has increased from the original conception of it.

Was the job advertised? - Yes, it was.

Where was it advertised? - In several newspapers. Twice actually.

And you responded to the advertisement? - The second time, yes.

What were you doing at that time? - At that specific time I was working in a whisky bond.

What was the experience you had that made you think you might get the job? - I had almost 10 years experience in the gun trade in a Glasgow gunsmiths doing sales.

During what 10 years? - It would be from 1981 to 1988.

Had/

Had you chosen to give that up? - No, the shop closed.

Did that reflect some changes in the gun trade? - No.

Was it a voluntary closure or did it run out of business?
- We acquired a new managing director who was a financial wizard rather than a shooting man.

Prior to the closure of that business was there any noticeable trend in the sale of handguns? That is over the period of what, the eight years or so that you were there? - The particular company I worked for never sold handguns as such but there was a notable difference in the gun trade in general because of mail order.

And what was the effect of mail order? - Well, there was a greater discount offered for mail order guns rather than shops with their overheads.

Did the shop you worked for not even supply handguns to order? - Very seldom.

Did you have any training in the job of running a gun shop or is that something you pick up on the job? - Initially I was taken on as junior sales staff but I later became assistant manager in the Glasgow shop.

You just worked your way up really? - Yes.

I take it that gives you then a knowledge of weapons and ammunition? - Yes.

But no particular knowledge of handguns or was there a way of you acquiring that? - We never sold many but there were other shops that did that already had a market for it in Glasgow.

And did you have dealings with them so that you could gain some experience of handguns? - No.

When you joined the police did you have to undergo any training there? - There was in-house training.

And/

And what was the form of that? - The computerised system which was recently installed before I was installed and the current legislation and pending legislation.

What do you mean by the computerised system? - It is the computerised system that we use to keep a record of all firearms and shotgun certificate holders in Central Region.

Is there some way in which that automatically brings certain events to your attention such as the need for someone to renew his licence? - They have expiry dates on them which are highlighted by the machine, yes.

So you are trained in retrieving information from a computer? - To do with firearms and shotguns, yes. You can retrieve a person's certificate records.

Sorry, you did say the training involved training in the computer? - Well, learning the computerised system. Working on it.

Well, can you tell us what you were trained to do in that regard? - Well, I was trained from the paper applications coming into the office, processing it from the details on the forms on to the computerised system.

Now, what manuals or other documents did you have to hand for guiding you in dealing with applications for firearms certificates? - We have the 1968 Firearms Act and the 1988 guidelines, guidance to the police and the 1992 rules. That is about the most up-to-date.

If you look please at D1 which is the guidance to the police. Can you confirm to me that that is the document you are talking about published in 1988 I think you said? - Yes.

Now, from the time you started in the police what were the duties to be? - Originally I was six months learning the computerised system for licensing. I then had six to eight weeks instructions from operational officers and then I went out on doing inquiries myself for renewals.

What/

What were the instructions you got from operational officers? - It was the standard procedure, Force procedures for renewing shotgun and firearms certificates.

What ranks were you with? - Police constables.

So you were out doing inquiries? - Well, I was in the wings as it were. They were doing the actual inquiries and I was to be present with them to see.

So you went out visiting homes and so on? - Yes, just to see how the procedure was normally done.

What about the procedure followed by their superiors in the light of the reports that they made? - I would not have any involvement with that at that time.

Were you expected at that stage to deal with new applications? - No, only renewals.

So no new ones and no variations? - No grants and no variations, that is correct.

Is that still the position? - It is at the moment.

What if the renewal incorporates a variation? - Well, that comes under the.....the applicant has an opportunity to vary his certificate at renewal.

So that is a renewal? - It is classed as a renewal. You can make separate variations at any time throughout the term of the certificate.

Yes, but if the application for a renewal involves a variation you would deal with it? - If it was renewals, yes.

What then is the procedure that operates when someone's certificate is coming up for renewal? - The Firearms Department computer can be asked to generate an amount of renewals that are due between certain dates and we would then physically key in codes to allocate the printer to spool off renewal letters/letters to applicants roughly six to seven weeks before the expiry of their certificate.

Who does that? - It is a colleague in the office.

What is her name? - Maureen Johnson.

And what is her designation? - Firearms and explosives officer.

And she works exclusively in the office? - Yes.

Once the letter has been generated to the holder who is due to renew his certificate, what action do you take? - I am slightly different from operational. What I do in particular is I would contact the applicant, as I say six to seven weeks before the certificate is due for renewal, and arrange at an agreed time to go out with the forms and the renewal letter to do a renewal inquiry.

And do operational officers do the same job or something different? - Because of their other duties they may have to just take the opportunity if they are passing in the area to call with the renewal letter and form and come back at a later date.

Now, it is implicit in what you are saying that you are not dealing with all renewals for Central Scotland Police. Can you tell us what ones you are dealing with? - At the moment?

Yes? - It is what they class or did class as B Division which is Falkirk, Bo'ness and Grangemouth.

Are you doing only these ones? - At the moment, yes.

Now, since when has that been the case? - Since December of 1994.

Until when will it be the case? - It will be December 1997 and by that time everybody with a three year term certificate will have been renewed with the new five year term certificate.

And/

3.50 p.m.

And why would you finish in B Division at that stage, when presumably -- you expect a two year gap, roughly? - There will be a two year lull with the new certificates. There may be new proposals on what I do then.

Now, prior to going on to doing B Division where were you? - In A Division.

And did you do all the renewals there? - No, not them all.

How many years were you there? - Three.

Well, you must have got pretty close to doing them all? - They are in different Divisions. The area I covered would have come under Stirling and Clackmannan.

So part of a Division? - Yes.

How many Divisions are there in Central Scotland Police? - There was only two, A and B.

So at the present time A Division's renewals are being done by officers? - Yes.

In the ordinary course? - Yes.

When did the system change from three year certificates to five year certificates? - On the 1st of January 1995.

Have you any idea why the system was changed to allow certificates to run for five years instead of three? - I have no idea at all. It was a Home Office decision.

Is there any system in Central Scotland Police for any sort of routine investigation of a certificate holder during the period between renewals? - None that I know of. If he came to the attention of the police then it would obviously have to be seen to.

Now, you said earlier that your duties had extended between 1991 and now? - Yes.

Can/

Can you tell me what the extension has been? - A great deal of in-house training for myself and my colleague Maureen, given to probationer police officers now in relation to firearms licences.

So you have a training role? - Yes.

But the actual on-the-job work you do is the same, but perhaps increased by volume? - Yes. I also do what they call -- there is paid variations and free variations. So free variations can be dealt with by me at the Headquarters, whereas a paid variation may involve other aspects being checked by enquiry officers.

What is a free variation? - It is an applicant who would like to surrender or give up a .22 rifle because it has seen the best, and replace it with a similar weapon. That is what they call a one-for-one variation.

So you do those? - Yes.

For the whole Force area? - Yes.

Now, your inquiry into an application for renewal is done by appointment? - Yes.

And you take the letter intimating the need for renewal with you? - Yes.

And what other documents do you take? - There would be a renewal form, a DMT101, which is a standard renewal form which is used nationwide. And I also used to take an example of the counter-signatory requirements for the back of the photographs, and I also use a freepost envelope facility for the applicant to return their application back to me direct, rather than go to operations, as I had been dealing with it.

So you always anticipate leaving the application form with the applicant? - Yes.

What is the purpose of the visit then? - Well, you have to maintain that the criteria are still being met for the guns that are held, and the security as well.

So/

So is that you doing the check before the application comes in? - I do the full inquiry before I see the applicant.

And that is before the application comes in? - Yes.

Do you ever get the application completed by the applicant and take it away with you? - No, because I wouldn't have time to fill that out, because counter-signatories would have to be got at a later date.

I take it that there are a number of matters you have to deal with in the enquiry at that stage? - Yes.

Could you take us through them please? - Yes. On arriving at the agreed time I would discuss -- well, I would explain the certificate was due for renewal at a certain date, it had to be renewed timeously. I would explain the form to the applicant, and run through the form with them explaining the different sections in it, and then I would usually proceed to check the weapons and the ammunition and check the security they were held in.

Would you have D91, which is -- I am sorry, I don't have the other number again (FA61). That should be an application form for renewal of a firearms certificate. It is dated the 15th of January 1995? - Yes.

Now, this post-dates the time when you were actually dealing with renewals for Stirling? - Yes.

I want you just to use this as an example -- it is the most up-to-date example we have of the procedure to be followed. You are looking there at the standard DMT101 form; is that correct? - Yes.

And we have the basic purpose of the application on the first page and then a question at No. 14 "Have you now or have you ever had epilepsy or any form of mental disorder"? - Yes.

Do you deal with that on your inquiry? - In what way?

By/

By asking? - Well, it is indicated on the form.

So you don't do it as an eye-contact enquiry in the course of your investigation at the home? - Well, once I receive the form back from the applicant I am required to complete an enquiry form to submit with the form, so I would check the application.

But these particular questions are left to the applicant in the quiet of his own home to fill in his own answers to? - Yes.

There are then at No. 16 -- sorry, 15: "Have you been convicted of any offence?" Now, can I take it that you do check that one out? - Yes.

How do you do that? - Well, at the time -- I am now qualified to check the PNC and SCRO records myself, but at the time the checks would be made by the Records Office.

How do you become qualified to do that? - I was trained in-house.

And since when have you been able to do the checks yourself? - Since early 1994.

Now, what can you learn from the Police National Computer? - The Police National Computer, if a person say residing in this area had committed an offence say in England, it would automatically be updated on the National system. And the SCRO system, the Scottish Criminal Records Office is for Scottish police use. It is a double cross-reference.

What about checking Criminal Intelligence? - I am not qualified to check Criminal Intelligence.

So what do you do about that? - That is done by Divisional Criminal Intelligence officers.

But do you do that by asking them to do it, or do you get the information some other way? - There is a form that I submit to Criminal Intelligence officers.

And/

And you do that for each case? - Yes.

Are they required then to do a check? - They would be, yes.

What are they actually checking for? - I don't know.

Well, what does your form ask them to do? - Well, it is a new form that is devised. It comes from the Records Department to different departments, to check if they have any information, I presume, on the system about a person.

I am not sure I have seen one of these. What is the title given to that form? - It is just a form I have devised myself for my own inquiries.

How long has it been in operation? - Since December.

You don't have one with you, I take it? - I don't.

Well, if you come back tomorrow, as I suspect you will have to, you could perhaps bring one with you. It would be helpful to see that. It may be somewhere I haven't located, but just in case we haven't got it, it would be helpful if you would? - Right.

The next part of the form, it then deals with the weapons the person has; is that right? - Yes.

And you would check these and the serial numbers on your visit? - Yes.

And it then deals with the weapons he wishes; is that right? - Yes.

Now, there is an oddity -- well, maybe it isn't an oddity, but it looks odd on this form, where the various weapons that he is seeking authority to acquire have both the "Yes" and the "No" after them ticked. Could you explain how that happens? - Yes, no problem. If you refer to the front of the form you will see that every entry by an applicant has been ticked, and that is my colleague Maureen ticking off the information as it is/is checked on the computer system, the ones in the blue ink.

There is then a statement of the amount of ammunition in the possession of the applicant? - Yes.

Now, do you check that when you make your inquiries?
- I would check the ammunition he had at the time of the application when I saw him, yes.

It might be slightly different by the time the application comes in? - Yes.

There wouldn't be much difference, I shouldn't imagine?
- It would depend on the amount of shooting he was doing. It may be.

And there is then the calibre and quantity of ammunition that he wants to hold? - Yes.

Now, are there any rules about this? - On how much he is allowed to hold?

Yes? - There is no arbitrary limit set down in the legislation.

Well, I have heard that before, but is there a limit perhaps in the mind of the police as a sort of guideline, when a police officer, or yourself, is visiting a home enquiring into the circumstances of an applicant? - Not to my knowledge. Each one would be taken on its own merits.

So how high do these figures go, in your experience? - I wouldn't imagine much higher -- that is probably more than sufficient to cover most active members who are shooting.

Can I ask you that question again. How high in your experience do these actually go? - Well, I couldn't answer that specifically. They vary from certificate to certificate.

I follow that, but you must have seen a large number of certificates, and I would have thought you were the man to ask in general terms? - Well, it is not uncommon to have these amounts.

Have/

Have you seen them with 2,000 per calibre? - There could be the odd one or two that has 2,000, yes. There is the case of some club secretaries may have more than that, because they are buying in bulk for a club.

Well, we could perhaps review that differently, but taking the Thomas Hamilton individual marksman type of shooter, what is the most that you have seen authority given for such a person to hold for each calibre? - I really couldn't honestly answer an exact amount, but I have holders with smaller amounts and others with slightly more.

Just slightly more? - Yes.

And 1,000 at a time to purchase -- that is common, is it? - If they were shooting that much then it may be. I am a shooter myself. I shoot handguns. I don't purchase that much myself because I don't shoot that often. But some prefer to buy in batches to have the consistency of the ammunition, for accuracy.

Yes. So to buy 1,000 at time would be common in that situation? - It could be if they are offered a discount as well, yes, albeit it is through the club or through a registered firearms dealer.

So you anticipate that we might hear evidence in this Inquiry that it is common for marksmen to buy 1,000 of any given calibre of ammunition at any time? - Well, it is not uncommon.

You did say a moment ago that it would depend how much shooting a person was doing? - Yes.

You dealt with the 1992 renewal, which we will come back to in due course, and you would know at that stage that Hamilton hadn't been acquiring or purchasing ammunition? - Yes.

But there was no change made then in the authority to hold, and also the authority to acquire ammunition? - I would have asked him at the time if he still required those amounts, and he would have indicated yes at the time.

So/

So even although he had perhaps by that time a four to five year history of not buying any ammunition, you would be satisfied with that answer? - Well, at that time I wouldn't know if he had not purchased ammunition for four to five years beforehand. That would not be present on his renewal application.

Yes. Would you not in the course of the renewal application have sight of his existing firearms certificate? - Well, the existing one, yes, but not the previous ones. They are on file.

No, but the existing ones would tell you how much he had bought for the last three years at least? - It would have done, yes.

And if it ran for longer than three years, as I suspect that one did, it would tell you for longer than three years how much he had acquired? - It ran for three years, the previous one, 1989 to 1992 was the period.

If you have D58L -- it is FA42. Is that the certificate in force immediately before the 1992 renewal? - There would have been another certificate.

Is that not the one that was in force immediately before the 1992.....? - Beg your pardon, yes.

Is it? - Yes I think so.

And did it not run from March 1987? - No. I think this is a certificate that was replaced in 1987 -- in the bottom left-hand side, it has been dated "31st March 1987", with the expiry date 1989. So that is not a full -- that has been a replacement certificate.

Well, it may be because he needed a continuation of the ammunition section. Would he get a new certificate for that purpose? - He would normally, if all the entries had been taken up.

And if you go to the front page you will see the word "continuation" at the top. Now, if that is the explanation, it nevertheless is the certificate which he had from 31st March 1987? - Yes./

Up until 14th February 1992? - 1989.

No, it is renewed -- it says on it "I renew this certificate for three years from 14th February 1989"? - Yes, but that wouldn't have shown the ammunition, if it had been replaced. That wouldn't have shown the previous certificate with all the ammunition.

No, but look at the ammunition Table, Table 2? - I don't have that here.

No, /

4.10 p.m.

No, it was missing earlier. It will be given to you separately. Do you have it now? - Yes.

That only records purchases in April, September and October of 1984? - Yes.

Would you not have that before you when you dealt with the 1992 application? - The applicant would have had that, yes.

Sorry? - In with his renewal application.

Yes, so you would have information that disclosed that he was not purchasing ammunition? - Well, the certificate would indicate that, yes.

Well, I can tell you that the extensive police inquiries in the case have not thrown up any other sources of commercial purchase of ammunition during the period from the last date on that form up until his renewal in 1992. Now, it must follow that you were satisfied in 1992 that he still ought to have authority to possess 1,500 rounds of each calibre and acquire 1,000 on any occasion of each calibre. Now, do you think there might have been a reason in 1992 to reconsider that? - On what grounds?

On the basis that he has not been buying any for four to five years? - Well, I would have noted at the time the amount of ammunition he had still in his possession and I don't remember exactly but it may have indicated he was not shooting as often as he was in the past but he certainly had ammunition still in his possession.

So as long as he has got ammunition in his possession and he says he needs this authority you would tend to approve it? - Provided all the good reason requirements were met, then yes. There is also the possibility that he might have been obtaining ammunition from the Club. That is quite normal. They would keep their own register for the transactions normally.

Yes, it might have been normal for normal people but was there any evidence known to you to suggest that Thomas Hamilton actually bought ammunition/ammunition at the Club? - No.

Now, the next question up to No. 22 is about the reasons for requiring each of the firearms and the ammunition listed and that is simply stated there as target shooting and indeed the applicant is guided along these lines because immediately above these words appear the words "for example"? - That is correct.

"Pest control, target shooting etc."? - Yes.

Now, I take it that that sort of reasoning is enough to justify possession of all seven weapons that we see there? - If they were used exclusively or in a Home office approved Club, yes.

That question was wrong. There are six weapons there and can I take it that target shooting is a good enough reason to get authority to have all six weapons? - It is a good enough reason providing it meets certain other requirements.

What other inquiry would you normally make into that sort of statement? - There would have to be inquiry of the Club if the applicant was either a probationary member or a full Club member which would affect their firearm certificate.

Now, is that done on renewal each time? - They are usually not granted a firearm certificate until they become a full member of a Club.

But we have heard some evidence that the police office has a copy of the membership lists of some of the local Clubs? - That is correct.

And if Hamilton's name appeared on the membership list of one of the local Clubs, would you have occasion to inquiry any further? - Well, myself personally, I would inquire with the Secretary of the Club despite having a written list to ensure they are still a member of the Club.

And do you do that with every renewal? - Every handgun firearms renewal, yes.

So/

So has that always been your practice since 1991? -
Yes.

Why single out handgun firearm renewals for that additional inquiry? - Well, handguns should not be granted unless, as I say there are exceptional circumstances, unless the applicant is a member of a Club which is Home Office approved so they are only issued for that reason.

BY LORD CULLEN: Why does it have to be a Home Office approved Club? - That is the only Club that the police would recognise as having the appropriate safety certificates for operating on the ranges or military ranges owned by the MOD.

Is that a matter of practice so far as the police are concerned or is that a matter you have to follow? - Each police force should follow that.

No, is it a matter of practice or are you required? Are the police required to follow that? - That is a good question.

I mean, you said it had to be a Home Office approved Club and I simply want to know why? - It is the only Club that we recognise as a police force.

So all you are saying is that is what in fact is done? - Any group of people can become a Club but they don't have to be Home Office approved necessarily but the police should not recognise them from a firearms licence point of view to give them a Club membership.

But you say that is a line that is followed by the police? - Yes.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:
Now, I think that you as a police force require a sort of probationary period before a person can get a firearms certificate? - Well, that is stipulated by the Home Office, the probationary period.

Of? - It used to be six months and was changed last year. It is now reduced to three months probationary period.

Do/

Do you still adhere to the six months or are you.....? -
Well, we would not give a firearms certificate if it was a probationary member. We would advise them if they did apply to wait until they were accepted as a full member and it would be up to the Club to notify us that they had been accepted or not. So it would be the Club that would have to decide whether they served the full probationary period, not the police.

What is your approach to the renewal of certificate where included is a variation which would result, if granted, in the applicant having two more or less identical weapons of the same calibre? - Target shooting is one of the few that you can grant duplicate calibre for. There are certain people would like them for sporting purposes but target shooting, good reason can be made for the different disciplines that they may have to shoot.

Now, we have heard the word disciplines a number of times in the Inquiry. What do you mean by different disciplines? - In target shooting there is slightly more than 50 different disciplines which may involve the use of up to 25 different weapons if a person was just to participate in each discipline at competition level.

Do you mean it is a different type of competition? - It is a different type of weapon used for each type of discipline. Different ranges and different response times between the targets and so on and so forth.

Yes, but when you are dealing with handguns there will be a number of different types of shooting done with these handguns, is that right? - Yes, there can be.

Different types of competition for example? - There is different classifications where you have to use specific weapons if you want to compete say nationally or at Bisley or inter Club shoots with certain weapons that need to have certain types of grips, barrel weights and trigger pull.

What evidence do you know of that Thomas Hamilton ever competed anywhere? - Well, I know that the Club itself shot with inter Clubs at various/various ranges.

Yes, but what evidence is there that Thomas Hamilton ever competed anywhere? - Besides the Club?

Yes? - Well, he may have competed at the Club. The idea of the Club is to learn to be proficient with the gun.

Now, he had two Smith and Wesson revolvers and two Browning pistols? - Yes.

Why would he need two of each? - Well, at the time when I renewed his certificate the revolver he had stated that he wished to buy had a different barrel length. A 6 inch barrel absorbs more recoil of the gun and can give you slightly better accuracy and it would harder to shoot with a 4 inch or 2 inch barrel weapon.

So why did he need to have two of them? - If he was wanting to do different disciplines. That is what I was saying about different disciplines.

So what is the discipline you can only do with the shorter barrel Smith and Wesson revolver? - It would depend on the individual. I don't shoot competition myself. The people at Bisley are the ones that can maybe answer that for you.

So there will be different disciplines of shooting of revolvers? - Yes.

For 6 inch long barrel and 4 inch long barrel, is that right? - There is long barrel shooting done at further ranges and there are shorter ranges.

Is having a spare a good reason for having two identical weapons? - It can be with semi-automatic weapons because they can jam depending on the maintenance of the weapon that is kept so it would really depend and if you were in competition then quite often I would imagine a lot of shooters would have a duplicate weapon.

And do you know of a reason for having two/two semi-automatic Brownings? - Well, in Mr. Hamilton's case it would be for the competition shooting.

What competitions were these? - Well, within his Club and I assume whatever shoots the Club organised through Bisley or whatever. You also don't have to be a member of a Club to shoot at Bisley. You can turn up as an individual and shoot on the day and compete in all disciplines. You don't necessarily have to be a member of a Club to do that.

WEDNESDAY, 12th JUNE, 1996.

ELEVENTH DAY.

NORMAN JOHN LYNCH,

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:

Mr. Lynch, one of the things you mentioned yesterday was the form that yourself had devised for making Force inquiries about criminal records and so on for applicants? - Yes.

And you have been good enough to bring that form with you this morning. A copy will be put in front of you, and copies circulated to everyone. Now, when was it you devised the form? - It was approximately December 1995. I had adapted it from a previous form.

And what was the purpose of introducing this? - Just to give a kind of more general picture on my own applications for renewals.

So do you issue one of these with every renewal application? - I have only started using them recently.

But as from now do you do it with all applications? - Only with my own renewal applications, yes.

Who does it go to in the Central Police Service? - The first entry would be signed by myself as coming in to me from the applicant. Then it would go into the Records Department, which does the PNC and SCRO checks, and then the Computer Section, which is further checks that can be made. I am not sure how in-depth they are.

Do you know what they are about? - I don't know. I imagine it would be for longer cases, from years back, where they could obtain more in-depth information that wasn't held on the PNC system.

Is that particular check one that you have put on just because you have seen it on another form, rather than because you have personal experience of how it operates? - I had an experience/experience of a previous applicant who had drunk driving offences and they weren't detailed on the current PNC system, and any in-depth explaining how the offences came about. So the Records can elaborate on that.

Have you had any discussion with the Computer Section about how they ought to do this and what they ought to be looking for? - No. They would know themselves.

The next section? - Would be criminal intelligence checks, and then Special Branch.....

Does that mean it goes to the Criminal Intelligence section? - Yes.

Is that a section in Central Police that is always manned? - I couldn't say.

And can I take it it is for the Criminal Intelligence Officer to search for what he considers to be relevant material in respect of a firearms certificate renewal? - Yes.

And then Special Branch? - Yes.

Do you have Special Branch within your own Force Headquarters? - I think so -- I assume so.

You don't know that? - I don't know the persons that work in it, but it is internal mail it goes through.

And you expect them to provide what -- intelligence? - Well, if there are any reasons they may think that the person would be unfitted or unsuitable.

And then it has come full circle back to the firearms licensing? - It would come to us, and we would endorse it coming back into the Department.

Have you actually seen this in operation? - Well, I started using it late March, and I have had a few back, yes.

And have they been largely routine, producing nothing, or have you had signs on any of them/them of effective production of information? - It is largely routine, but there has only been one drunk driver been highlighted, who had previous offences from 10 years ago.

And which of the sections brought up that material?
- It would be the Records, PNC and SCRO. I also had to obtain a separate form from DVLA, which gives you in more detail the drunk driving convictions.

Obviously DVLA is something outwith your own force? - Yes. I have to request that.

In what circumstances do you actually check with DVLA? - I would request on a form, a DQ1, and they would ask for the person's name, date of birth, and they would then return back details of the offences they had committed.

MR. BONOMY: Sir, I think this form might be given a number. I am not sure where we have reached. It may be R34 -- no, I am told 36?

LORD CULLEN: 36 I think, yes.

MR. BONOMY: 36, then.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMY:
Now, yesterday when we finished I was going to proceed to the 1992 renewal, and if you could now have these documents in front of you which are D83 and D85, that is FA55 and FA56? Now, is D83 the application for renewal in 1992? - This? Yes, it is.

And you dealt with that renewal? - Yes, I did.

And just one or two features of the application first of all. If you go to the second page, Part B, there is a record there of the possession of two weapons, a Smith and Wesson revolver and a 9 mm Browning pistol? - Yes.

And that is followed by the section dealing the firearms he still wishes to acquire. Now, what were they at that time? - He still had permission to purchase or acquire a 7.62 rifle and a .22 rifle.

Yes, and another two on the other side as well? -
The other two on the other side is the applicant requesting to purchase a .357 revolver and a 9 mm pistol.

And this is a new request? - Yes.

So we have got the two rifles continuing from the last time? - Yes.

And we have this new request? - Yes.

And I think we have seen that the authority to purchase the 7.62 rifle was sought about 10 years before the eventual incident at Dunblane? - Yes.

Is it common for someone to have an authority like that to purchase a weapon for 10 years without actually doing anything to put it into practice? - It is quite often common that they have outstanding authority. At the time I would point out that they hadn't purchased these weapons, and did they still require to retain that authority, as they would have to indicate it.

Do you remember doing that when you saw Hamilton in this case? - I don't remember actually doing it, but I always go through the application form with every applicant to make them fully aware of each section, so I would have spoken to him about it.

Can you remember anything of what you were told by him about this? - Well, he would have indicated at the time he would have retained them for Club use, as previously stated. Provided the Club still met the criteria for rifles as well as handguns, then he would be permitted to keep them.

Is it effectively simply a declaration he needs to make that he wants this rifle for target shooting and he is a member of a target shooting Club, and you will really ask no more questions about it? - Well, that is all he has to say, is...

That is all he has to say because that is basically your approach to it? I am not criticising you, but that is because that is your approach to it? - Well, I would probably ask the person/person if they still intended to purchase them, and they would usually indicate yes or no.

It really does mean though, doesn't it, that there is no limit in practice on the time that an applicant should take to acquire any weapon that they have got authority to acquire? - There is no arbitrary limit applied.

Well, is it not more that there is no limit at all? - Well, there isn't according to the Guidelines, that is right.

So you obviously take the view that it is a good reason to get this authority that you simply want, over a period of 10 years, without doing anything about it, to acquire such a rifle? - Well, he may have had opportunities to acquire them through the Club, or at any time. There is no stipulation by which time they must be bought.

Now, if we move down to the ammunition section, he has to declare the amount of ammunition in his possession; is that right? - Yes.

And one of the quantities declared is 100 rounds of 7.62? - Yes.

Now, he has had this for a long time as well, if we look through the certificates. Should he have 7.62 ammunition when he doesn't have a 7.62 rifle? - He should have it if he has permission to purchase it on his certificate. As he never purchased a 7.62 rifle I can only assume, from the present application I was working with, rather than the files previously, that they had been obtained from the Club, possibly using a Club weapon, a 7.62 rifle; and he hadn't used the ammunition he had purchased or was given, and that had been taken away from the Club. That is the only reason I could give for that there.

But it wouldn't be unusual to see a person who simply wants to acquire a particular calibre of weapon actually being in possession of ammunition for that weapon before he got it? - That can be, yes.

Now, could you look please at the RL3a form? You have noted his good reason as "Target shooting/shooting only at Stirling Rifle & Pistol Club". Now, is that "For target shooting, only at Stirling Rifle & Pistol Club", or is it "for target shooting only, at Stirling Rifle & Pistol Club"? - It could read both ways. I think at the time I meant "Target shooting only".

And the place he indicated he would do that was Stirling Rifle & Pistol Club? - Yes.

There was no indication given to you of an intention to seek membership of Callander in 1992? - No. Most of the Clubs have inter-club shoots, though, where they arrange various nights where they can shoot at different Clubs.

And are you conscious of having noted that he had not been acquiring commercially-produced ammunition? - I wasn't at the time, no.

Looking back at it is there not something odd about the large volumes of ammunition that were purchased in the years up to 1987, and then the gap from 1987 to 1992, when you are dealing with it, when there is no sign of any being purchased? - I wouldn't have had the large volume certificates that you are speaking of at the time of the application. I have only seen them lately, but I wouldn't have had that at the time of the renewal application.

If you had had them do you think that would have caused you to ask more detailed questions about the shooting he was doing, or would it have made no difference? - I wouldn't think it would have made much difference, because he still had quite a large amount of ammunition in his possession. He may have, for one reason or another, not have been shooting as often as what he was.

But people looking at the Dunblane tragedy might say there is some significance in the fact that a person isn't doing target shooting but has guns and a large quantity of ammunition at home, and that that is something that you ought to ask questions about in future? - That may well be, but there is no restriction on the ammunition he can have at home. That is not for us. That is for the Government.

No, but in the light of the Dunblane incident, do you not see that as a significant feature of Hamilton, that he wasn't, for a period, doing any shooting at target ranges -- possibly wasn't doing any shooting at target ranges, and yet he was in possession of weapons and a large quantity of ammunition? - Well, as you say, it is possible he wasn't doing it. I mean, he could have been supplied ammunition from various other people at the Club.

Yes. All I am suggesting though is if you had had the opportunity to see this pattern changing because you had the additional certificates from the past with you? - Yes.

It might have prompted more questions about why he needed to keep the pistols at all? - No.

It wouldn't? - I may have asked him why he wasn't shooting as often, if he wasn't shooting as often as he was in the past, and he may have given me sufficient reasons for it.

BY LORD CULLEN: Why would you ask that question? - Well, only, as the gentleman says there, he was asking me if I had seen the previous lapse in buying ammunition.

I am not quite clear. You say it is not your practice to see them, but you are being asked questions on the footing that you did see them for some reason. Would you in those circumstances have asked the sort of question you have just described? - Possibly.

And if so why? - Well, it would depend on -- if they didn't have as much ammunition as he had at the time I saw him, he would obviously not be buying any at all. But he already had a substantial amount, which I presume he didn't need to buy any more until these were used up.

But why would you have asked that question? - I don't know.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:
You see in the application form we are dealing with he declares that he is in possession of 663 rounds of/

of 9 mm ammunition? - Yes.

Now, if you had had the old certificates and you could see the pattern whereby he was a person who bought commercially-produced ammunition, and bought it in fair quantities, and then stopped in 1987, and you are at 1992 dealing with the application, and you see he is still sitting with 663 rounds of 9 mm ammunition, would you not have wanted to know why this had happened? - Well, I may have asked him as he wasn't buying any, was he home-loading, or was he obtaining it from the Club.

But/

10.20 a.m.

But you don't know? You can't remember that? -
Well, I don't know because it never happened at the time.

BY LORD CULLEN: I want to be clear. I mean, was it simply idle conversation with you or was it for a particular purpose that you might have asked that question? - It would be maybe for a particular purpose, if he wasn't using the guns or..... it is provided they meet all the criteria for club membership. There is no amount of shooting stipulated that they must do.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:
Well, let's assume then that the answer to the question was "I haven't been shooting since 1987"? - Well, if he hadn't been shooting since 1987, provided he still met all the criteria he would have the opportunity to shoot.

What would his good reason then be for continuing to have a gun and ammunition? - If he was still a member of an approved club and at any time he could participate in that club.

And that is all? - Yes.

And whether or not he intended to shoot would be irrelevant? - Yes. It is up to him as an individual if he is going to shoot.

So we would have a situation then under the present regime that a person might declare to you no immediate intention to engage in target shooting but because he has already got a firearm and ammunition he would be left with it to do as he pleased? - If all the proper criteria was met, yes.

Well, that simply means that he has got a secure cabinet and he is of good character on the face of it and so on. That is what you mean by the proper criteria? - Yes, that is the criteria which we grant the certificate on.

Yes, because we have already removed the good reason in that situation. You have established good reason and you are looking at criteria/criteria other than good reason? - Yes, as long as he is a member.

You did note in response to Question 6, the one about security..... well, you have noted the detail of his security and you were clearly happy with that? - Yes, the security was very good.

The RL3a form that we looked at is used in all Central Scotland Police firearms enquiries? - Yes.

Is it a national standard form or is it devised by your own Force? - I'm not 100 per cent but I think it is just a Force form. I think there are variations for other Scottish Forces.

Do you have any direct experience of the forms used by other Scottish Forces? - I have seen two from other Forces and they are not the same.

Are they more detailed or less satisfactory in your view? - I would say they are about the same.

Just slightly different? - Slightly different layout and format.

But achieving the same objective? - Yes.

The place that Hamilton declared he would be shooting in 1992 was Stirling. Can you remember whether you checked up on his membership in any way? - I would ask the applicant himself where they shoot and then when I received the paperwork back I would confirm it usually with the Club Secretary, that they were a full member of the club.

Is it your practice to actually check with the Secretary? - Yes.

You don't just go by the lists of members that you have in the police station? - No, these lists were only obtained recently at our request, the Firearms Department.

BY LORD CULLEN: Do some clubs issue membership cards or the like? - Some do but someone/someone could be a member of a club and they maybe have not..... they usually pay a subscription every year to the club and they could fall away from the club and they have not paid their dues and the club would consider them as possibly not still being a member so that really has to be affirmed every time.

So the card in itself would not be enough? - It is an indication they are or were a member of a club but you are always better to check with the club itself.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMY:

Now, I am right in saying that all these checks that you do on the applicant and his security are done before he actually fills in the form? - Yes.

And you don't in practice go back and check again once the form comes in? - No, there is no need to unless the security was inadequate. Then I would arrange to go back and re-inspect the security.

In Central Scotland Police do all renewals, and by that I mean the ones you do and the ones that are the subject of beat police officers' enquiries, do all renewals result in a personal visit from a member of staff of Central Scotland Police to the home of the applicant? - Yes.

Do you know of Forces in which some renewals are handled by post? - Yes, I think Lothian and Borders are currently the only Police Force in Scotland that do postal renewals.

Is that experimental? - I don't think so now. I think they are quite happy with that.

Are there plans for Central to do it that way? - There was an HMI report that suggests that every Force should go postal but our Chief Constable and Depute Chief Constable would rather keep it the way it was.

Is that the inspection report you are talking about?
- Yes.

The inspection by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary? - Yes.

Which/

Which I think is in draft form rather than a finalised document? - Yes.

Now, having completed RL3a, where do you send it? - The RL3a with the application and the photographs is then submitted to my colleague, Maureen Johnson, in Firearms Licensing.

What did she do with them? - She would check off the details on the form with the computer records and the file and previous applications would be in the file, the certificate would be processed with any variations made to it and then it would be sent to the Inspector or Chief Inspector of her Department.

Now, that sounds like a clerical exercise, is that right? - Yes.

And then it goes to? - It would go to the Inspector and Chief Inspector.

Now, the Inspector and Chief Inspector are in the Chief Constable's staff office? - They are at the moment, yes.

One of them has signed this RL3a? - Yes.

Who was it? - Ian MacKenzie. At the time, though, Ian MacKenzie was not in the Chief Constable's staff office. It wasn't formed at that time.

He was in charge of firearms though, was he? - Administration and firearms licensing, yes.

From him where did the form go? - It would go to the Depute Chief Constable or the Chief Constable for signing.

Can you have D87L which is FA something or other? I think we have had it already. It is the firearms certificate for 1992. That is the actual certificate that was issued following this enquiry? - Yes.

It is not actually signed by either the Chief Constable or the Depute Chief Constable? - It is Mr. John Adamson.

What/

What was his position? - I think he was a Superintendent at the time.

And I think it is stamped 19th February 1992? - Yes.

Why would he come to sign it? - I can only assume that either the Depute Chief Constable or the Chief Constable were on holiday or were not available and he was standing in for them.

Do you know from experience what material a person signing a certificate has in front of him before finally deciding to sign it? - I am sorry, I don't understand.

Well, does the Depute Chief Constable or whoever is doing this simply have the RL3a and the application and a blank firearms certificate to be signed or does he have more material? - I wouldn't know. I have never actually seen that.

So you have not participated in that? - No, I have never seen what has been presented to the Chief Officers.

Have you on occasions expressed a gut feeling on one of these RL3a forms before submitting to the Depute Chief? - I have, yes.

What sort of thing, without giving me chapter and verse, would give rise to you expressing a gut feeling? - Persons with previous drink driving offences and who were slightly intoxicated when I spoke to them.

That is a bit more than gut feeling? - Well, those are.....

Well, have you ever had a situation where you can't put your finger on something specifically but you have got a feeling that the person is not a suitable person to have a firearms certificate? Have you ever been in that position? - No, I have refused them in the past for not being members of a club.

Yes, these are tangible things. Even drunk driving or being under the influence when you speak to them is fairly tangible? - Well, I have never/never actually had any gut feeling.

So is there anything at all you can remember about the enquiry into Hamilton that made you hesitate about recommending the grant of the application? - None at all.

And effectively you did recommend the grant, is that right? - Yes, that is correct.

Is there also a move afoot or has there been a move afoot to give civilian officers like yourself more power than simply the power to recommend the grant? - It was recommended by Her Majesty's Inspectorate.

That you should do what? - That the civilians that are working the actual system should be the persons responsible for issuing and granting certificates and the signing of them.

Now, I asked you some questions yesterday about your experience particularly in the gun shop? - Yes.

Are you also a marksman? - I am a fair shot but I am not a marksman.

Have you been in the past the member of a shooting club? - I am a member of Central Scotland Police Club.

But prior to that were you a member of a local club of any kind? - No.

As a marksman have you some knowledge of the types of activities that handgun owners engage in at clubs? - I can only assume that they are the same as our club. The idea of a club is that we practise different disciplines to possibly compete with other clubs or at an annual event called Bisley.

Now, do you shoot against other clubs? - I don't as yet. I am not proficient enough.

Is participation something you only began since joining Central Scotland Police? - Since October of last year I joined the club.

So/

So prior to that what knowledge did you have of competitive shooting or target shooting in general among club members? - Well, I gained a lot of experience in the gun trade as such with persons coming into the shop. I mean, there were a lot of handgun shooters like myself that also did sporting shooting so you do meet a large section of people.

Are you in a position now to discuss with applicants the types of disciplines that they are intending to engage in and make a judgment about how many weapons they will need because of the different disciplines that they plan to compete in? - I can discuss different disciplines with them, yes. As I said yesterday, there is slightly over 50 different disciplines that a person can compete in if they wish to. I am not saying it would but if a person wished to compete in every discipline it could require 25 different weapons.

Even if there was no particular discipline involved but a person said to you "Well, I have got this particular 9mm pistol because I find it particularly good for accuracy and I have got this other one because I find that if it is a competition where I have to fire quickly I can load this one more quickly and complete the exercise more quickly and I would like to do these two different things, largely on my own or with other club members who happen to be there", would that be a good enough reason to have these two weapons? - That is partly good reason but they would both load to the same extent and probably discharge and fire the bullet to the same speed. The sights and the handgrips would be probably the most differences between them. There is certain disciplines where you have to use fixed sight weapons and other ones where you are allowed to use adjustable sight weapons with telescopic sights on them as well so they can be set up differently and be different types of handgun shooting.

Now, if I said to you "I just like to do that at the club and I like to do it on my own and find out how I manage with the two weapons or if there are other people I would like to do it that way", that would be good enough reason? - I would expect you to say if you would like two of the same then give me a reasonable explanation why.

"I/

"I just like to do shooting with two different guns and see what the different results are". Is that a good enough reason?
- If they are entirely different and handle different, yes.

What if they are more or less identical Browning pistols? - Well, again with semi-automatic pistols they can jam so that is another thing as well.

So you would help me out and give me good reason for having two? - Well, if they came forward with that.

We have heard evidence about two Brownings that Hamilton had and one of them was particularly sensitive so that even in the loading process you could accidentally fire the gun, it was so sensitive, whereas the other one was standard. Would that difference between the two weapons indicate that he might have them for two different types of activity? - As far as I understand it, the trigger pressure has to be a set poundage. I'm not sure which poundage but they are all checked at competition so that no one has got an unfair advantage as far as I understand it.

So in the end of the day, what is the good reason for Hamilton having permission to possess and permission to acquire 9mm Brownings? - Well, it may have been a standard production model with, as I say, fixed sights or adjustable sights or telescopic sights or different handgrips. That is the different disciplines that they have to meet.

If I can go briefly back to the form you gave us this morning. Do you have access directly in your Department at Police Headquarters to the Scottish Criminal Records? - No.

Do you have access directly from your office to the Police National Computer? - No.

But you are now entitled to access them yourself? -
I am, yes.

Does that mean you have to go to somebody else's terminal in another Department to get access? - Yes.

Is/

Is that easily done or do you have to queue up in some way to get use of the terminal? - No, it is relatively easy to do.

Would it be an advantage to have a terminal of your own? - I was offered a terminal of my own but the amount of work that I go through would not have justified having a full-time terminal dedicated to me.

Is there a plan in the Force to add another member of staff like yourself? - There was always a proposal to employ a second firearms examiner but finances have not allowed it.

That is the plan, though? - If they ever have the finance I would imagine they would still do it.

Would a second firearms examiner make up a big enough complement for the two of you to do all new applications, renewals and variations throughout the whole of the Force area? - It probably would, yes.

BY LORD CULLEN: Can I just ask you on that point; you not only carry out examinations in the sense of going out to examine particular applications but you also have a role within the Department itself, is that right? - Well, I have to stand in for my colleague when she is on holiday.

So is some part of your time set aside for Departmental work as opposed to going out and about? - A small portion, yes.

And only one person would be required for that particular purpose? - Yes.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMY:
Do you think that your approach to renewals is different in any way from the approach of the Force generally to new applications? - On new applications we require written submissions from the applicant, whether it be for clubs or sports use, and the renewal is slightly different. It is affirmed every time rather than a written submission being submitted every time it is due on the renewal. That is mostly the main difference.

What/

What about the situation where permission has been given to acquire a weapon and the renewal comes along, as distinct from a situation where at renewal a request is being made to add a new weapon? Do you think it is easier to refuse to add a weapon than to take off the weapon which has already been authorised? - Easier to add it?

Yes, does the approach of the Force make it easier for a person who has already got the authority to keep it than for the person who wants authority for an additional one to get it? - I wouldn't say there is a difference made.

You were never told during the period you were being trained for this that it was very difficult to remove from a certificate that which had already been granted? - Well, I have because it is obvious from reading the legislation that it is.

Why should that be if exactly the same test applies for renewal as applies in the case of a new application? - Well, I presume because it has been previously granted and the person would be entitled to appeal if it was removed, if the police had been unjustified in removing it.

Now, do you play any part in the training of police officers? - Recently my colleague and I Maureen have recently started giving instruction to probationary officers. They serve 18 months of a probationary period and then they come to Headquarters for various departments to give them input, and I give them firearms licensing input.

What sort of things do you deal with in the course of this input? - We explain -- well -- Maureen explains the procedures for renewal and the grant of firearms, shotgun certificates, and I mainly explain the difference between firearms, shotgun identification, between different types and classifications.

So she is the one that tells them how to go about an enquiry using an RL3a form? - Yes.

Because you are a civilian are there any powers you don't have that other police officers carrying out the same enquiry do have? - Yes. I wouldn't be permitted to charge a person, say they had been committing an offence.

Anything else? - Registered firearm dealers -- I am not permitted to enter and inspect the premises; that must be a police officer.

That/

That is because of legislation to that effect? - Yes indeed. A police officer accompanies me when we do go to registered firearm dealers. I can't go in on my own. I think that is about all.

Is there any problem about you actually possessing or handling weapons in the course of the job because you are not a policeman? - No, I am permitted. There was something changed in recent legislation.

That used to be a problem? - Yes.

If I can go back to the two Browning pistols just to be clear on this. In fact, you might have in front of you document R7, the ballistics report. It is in a number of sections. If you go to almost three-quarters of the way to the back there is a report which is headed "Tayside Police Identification Branch Joint Report". It is not numbered and I can't help you any more with that. If you go to page eight of that report you will see a description of the third and fourth weapons which were the two Brownings? - Yes.

And you see it says, "The third item was a self-loading, magazine fed, pistol of Belgian manufacture chambered for 9mm Luger centre fire cartridges. This was a custom built, competition target pistol, having an extended barrel with a barrel weight, fixed to the extended barrel cover, for balance. This weight would appear to be missing and a custom-built foresight put in its place. The hammer spur had been removed and ground down to a smooth finish. Due to its manufacture as a competition pistol, the magazine safety had not been incorporated within the weapon with the result that the gun could be fired without the magazine being in place. Normally, in standard models, when a magazine is taken out a spring-loaded safety lever is forced out into the magazine well: this lever is linked to the trigger lever and forces it forward from beneath the tail of the sear-lever. Thus when the magazine is removed and a cartridge is left in the chamber, the pistol cannot be inadvertently discharged and the magazine must be replaced before firing is possible. This type of weapon, when fully loaded, normally has a holding capacity of 14 shots -- 13 in the box type magazine which fits into the butt/handle/butt/handle and one in the chamber. The gun was in good outward condition, and when fitted with a magazine, was found to be in full working order. Another feature of this type of competition gun is the minimum pressure on the trigger required to fire it (sensitised trigger fitted during manufacture)"? - Yes.

If you look at the bottom of the page you will see another self-loading Browning chambered for the same cartridges, standard model, fitted with a magazine safety device. The registered number of that one is PZ69756. From the firearms certificate you will see that is the one he actually had when you went to his house? - Yes.

Now, why would someone get authority for these two separate weapons? - Well, the one he had on this, going from the description here, would appear to have been a standard 9mm. There is a discipline called "Police Pistol 2" for semi-automatic weapons where he could have participated with that weapon with the standard adjustable sight and what not. There is a specific discipline -- I can't remember the exact name of it -- but there is a specific discipline for another classification of Browning pistols which would require the other type.

What sort of discipline would that be? - Well, it is a certain classification for the competition pistol but I don't know the exact detail myself. I had never seen the second pistol he purchased.

Once he has got authority as long as it fits the bill of being a 9mm Browning he can get any kind of Browning? - He could have.

In fact, he could have got one absolutely identical to the one he had? - He could have, yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: You told us yesterday that you dealt with renewals but not grants? - Yes.

Is that because a first time applicant for a firearms certificate is considered to require closer scrutiny than somebody who is already a holder? - Yes. I would imagine a lot of local knowledge of the police, that is required for input/input to grant.

So if we imagine you dealing with an existing firearms certificate holder who is renewing his certificate and keeping the same guns on his certificate, might you tend to assume that the reason he gave for having those guns the last time is still a good reason. This is the same reason as he is giving to you? - Well, the handguns had been granted -- well, I assumed that when I did see him, but previously the two rifles he had been permitted to have, I would have re-affirmed the need for them.

But the hypothesis I was putting was somebody coming forward with a firearms certificate for perhaps four guns which he had or owned, and all they are doing is seeking renewal, they are giving the same reason, it is the same guns, would you tend to assume that what held true last time continues to hold true? - It would be verified at the time of renewal.

If they had been considered to be a fit person to have those guns the last time might you tend to assume on finding no information about convictions and so on, might you tend to assume they were still a fit person? - You would, yes.

You told us about the checks you carried out with criminal intelligence and we see from your form this is one of the boxes that is ticked. Yesterday you explained that this is not something done by you directly. Can I ask you, is that because you are not trained to do that or are you actually denied access to Intelligence records? - I am not trained to do that.

So that there is nothing that you are aware of that says you can't have access, it is just like.....? - I think there is an intention for everybody in the Force to have access. We are having a new computerised system installed at the moment and hopefully once it is all linked up we will be able to access that ourselves once we are trained.

Just tell me if you don't know the answer to the question, but is there any kind of rule that says that you can't have access to the intelligence records? - Not to my knowledge, no.

So/

So it is just a question of training, and once you get the training.....? - Yes.

The document that you have shown us which contains the boxes for amongst others Criminal Intelligence, Police National Computer, SCRO has a column headed "Result": if something is found will the person making the search tell you in every case what they have found or might they write "Nothing adverse" or "Nothing to prevent grant of the firearms certificate"? - They would usually write "No trace" or "Negative result". If they identified -- in the case of the one the Records Department sent a spool in from their department indicating what they had seen on a trace of the person and that was attached to the document.

If they had seen anything they might say something like "Nothing to prevent grant of firearms certificate"? - They wouldn't write that, no.

If they found anything at all they will tell you what they have found? - Yes.

Do you then make a judgement as to whether what they had found ought to have some implication for the person's firearms certificate? - I would then elaborate on it with the person who had found that out and depending on the line manager they may request them to follow up with an AD2A which is the in-depth report into their findings, and that would be submitted.

Let's take the intelligence records as an example: if what had been found was some intelligence report which didn't mention firearms at all, is that something you would always discuss with somebody senior to you, or may you say to yourself this is not sufficiently important or relevant? - I would usually bring it to the line manager's attention.

Usually or always? - Always, because this has only happened this once with firearms, and that was brought to the line manager's attention.

When you started working did you get any instruction about following that course of conduct, to say when something came up.....? - The prescribed form we use does decide this, the standard/standard form for renewals. The enquiry officer himself is requested to undertake physically whether there is a trace or no trace. If something is attached to the spool copy we use it from the Records Department and submit it to line management. The information may already be on file. It is decided from there whether to look further into it.

A check on the Police National Computer and the Scottish Criminal Records Office -- are you aware whether or not that would disclose road traffic convictions? - I have been told that some -- there are some that stay on for quite a long time but I am aware that certain road traffic offences only stay on for a three month period and then fall off for some reason.

Do all road traffic convictions make it on to the SCRO? - I honestly can't comment on that. I don't know.

What about minor convictions. I am not speaking about road traffic convictions, I am just speaking about something like breach of the peace or something like that. Will that always be put on the SCRO? - If the police were involved I would imagine it would be. It would probably be highlighted as pending.

Might there be a conviction for breach of the peace which didn't involve the police? - I don't know.

Can I ask you a little bit more about the number of different disciplines which exist. You said that someone could require 25 different weapons to participate in all these disciplines; is that correct? - They could apply -- I wouldn't like to say whether they would be granted permission for 25 weapons -- but they could apply.

I would like to explore that a little bit with you. If I came to you and I told you that there are no constraints of time or money on what I could spend on shooting and I want to acquire these 25 different weapons, can you see any reason to say No? - Due to the fact of the amount you are applying for you would probably be put -- if you can justify having them it would be difficult to refuse. You can appeal against it, the Chief Constable's decision./ decision. That has never happened as yet.

If you can just imagine if I say to you 'I have got unlimited amounts of time and money to spend on shooting, shooting two evenings a week and a day at the weekend', there wouldn't in the end of the day be anything that you could do to stop me getting permission for these 25; is that so? - We could refuse but at the end of the day you could take us to Court and under the current legislation probably win your case.

And/

11.00 a.m.

And so when I come to you with my request you are going to be influenced by the thought that I might appeal and be successful? - Well, possibly, but that is not for me to decide.

And taking it a little further, if I have explained to you that I want a number like 25 guns, and I then say to you that I know from my own experience that handguns can jam, and that I would like to have spares for some or all of these guns, it follows from what you have said about the need for some people to have spares that you would accept that as a good reason to have the duplicate guns, would you? - There is not as many disciplines for semi-automatic weapons as what there is for revolvers and the rifles that are used.

So how many disciplines are there, just roughly, for semi-automatic? - I am not really sure. I have never really examined this.

So if I said to you I want my 25 guns and that there are 10 disciplines for semi-automatic weapons so I would like to have 10 spares for these, then you would presumably take what I am telling you on trust and recommend that I have the 10 spares as well, would you? - Well, it would probably be looked into due to the volume of guns and also their security as well, that amount of guns would be taken into -- you are probably getting near to what they call a dealership with that amount of weapons, so....

Well, if there is no suggestion that I am selling them. I am keeping them all, and my security.....? - Well, I was meaning for security arrangements, so there could be different considerations made regarding the amount of weapons.

But providing I can demonstrate very good security arrangements for that number of weapons, there would be nothing in theory to stop me from succeeding with that application? - Under the current legislation, no.

Turning to ammunition, you gave some evidence yesterday about people being entitled to seek and obtain permission to have 1,500 rounds of ammunition/ammunition for each gun -- that is correct? - Yes.

So if I have, following this hypothesis through -- if I have explained to you why I need to have my 25 guns and 10 spares, could I then have 1,500 rounds of ammunition for each of these guns? - No, I wouldn't say so. I mean, you can only shoot so many guns at any one time, so it is unlikely you would need 1,500 rounds for every gun.

What would you have in your own mind as a limit that you might place upon me in that situation? You have told us that there are no arbitrary limits? - That is right, there isn't. I wouldn't imagine any persons would need any more than that amount, to shoot competitions.

Well, than, what amount -- 1,500 per gun? - Well, 1,500 -- if it was for three calibres, say, 1,500 per calibre, but not per gun.

I think you are going to have to help me with that? - Well, Mr. Hamilton had two 9 mm handguns. He didn't need permission for 1,500 bullets for each handgun, it was only 1,500 bullets in total for both guns.

Yes, but I am really asking you about this more general example of somebody who says they want 25 guns in order to participate in as many disciplines as there are? - Yes.

What sort of quantities of ammunition could they obtain for that? - Well, they could apply for whatever amounts they saw fit, that they may think they need, but whether they would be granted that would be a different issue.

You have said several times there are no arbitrary limits on things like quantities of ammunition? - Yes.

But do you ever impose what you consider to be a justified limit? - I wouldn't like to let people go to excess. I mean, if they were shooting target shoots, sporting shoots, or vermin problems, they wouldn't require an excessive quantity of ammunition.

Well, what is an excessive quantity of ammunition?/

ammunition? - It depends on the individual. Myself personally, I only shoot 200 rounds maximum a week for target shooting, but someone might shoot more. I don't have the opportunity to shoot as often as I would like, so it really depends on each individual.

If the person has an amount of ammunition for each calibre, what would be an excessive quantity of ammunition for each calibre? - I would say once you start maybe going into three, four, five, six thousand you then, depending on the level of security, you then have problems with larger amounts. As far as I know there is set amounts of ammunition, and there are Council regulations as well, that persons can't keep for fire purposes. You have all these considerations for large amounts of ammunition.

Just finally on my example of somebody perhaps wanting 25 different guns for 50 or so disciplines, how many different calibres would he be talking about? - Again I am not too sure. It could be possibly 15 -- I would need to have -- there is a document produced every year by Bisley, if you are in the National Pistol Association, and it explains all the disciplines and the type of weapons that are required to compete in them. So I really couldn't say for sure.

But if you are right in your estimate, and in my 25 guns there will be something like 15 different calibres, but an excessive quantity of ammunition for each different calibre wouldn't be reached until I was asking for three, four, five or six thousand, then perhaps if I said I wanted two and half thousand for each of these different calibres, then I could get that, provided I told you I was doing a lot of shooting? - If you could show you were going to be using it, then you could apply for it, but it may or may not be granted in the end of the day.

But if I tell you I am in one, two or three Clubs, and do a lot of shooting, then you can envisage a situation where I may get that? - You could apply for it, and you may be granted it, yes.

The different disciplines -- you were asked yesterday some questions about having a 4 inch barrel/barrel revolver and a 6 inch barrel revolver; do you remember that?

- Yes.

And you weren't very sure of the different disciplines one would be using these weapons in. If I applied for permission to have a 4 inch barrel revolver and a 6 inch barrel revolver and you said to me "What different disciplines are involved?", and I gave you an answer, you would just have to take that answer on trust, because you don't have the personal knowledge about those different disciplines; is that correct? - Well, you would usually indicate what they were for, and in the years that I have been working with firearms, as well as in the gun trade, I would know whether you were just saying it for the sake of it.

You would know if the answer I was giving to that sounded right or not? - Yes.

Yesterday you told us that it is not necessary to be a member of a Club to shoot at Bisley? - That is right.

It is necessary however to be in a Club to obtain a firearm certificate for target shooting; isn't that right? - Yes.

What puzzles me then is, if I am not a member of a Club, where do I get the weapons with which I shoot at Bisley? - Well, you can be -- it could be rifles that you have, a sporting rifle. I mean, you can use sporting rifles. If you had a personal firearm certificate, and say you were a member of a Club, we are saying because -- the Club certificate, I am referring to more so. We only recognise a Home Office-approved Club as receiving a firearm certificate from the police; but individuals who have their own personal firearm certificate within that Club can also, if they wish, set themselves up as a Club, not necessarily Home-Office approved, which we wouldn't recognise.

I am not sure that I quite understand this. Your answer yesterday was that it was not necessary to be a member of a gun Club to shoot at Bisley; do you remember that? - Well, I think I said that they didn't -- you would have to have a firearm certificate, and if you had a handgun, the person should be a member of some Home Office- approved/approved Club, wherever it be in the country. But they can participate as an individual, not necessarily represented by the Club, at Bisley. They don't have to turn up with the Club and say "We are shooting as a Club". They can participate as an individual.

So what you were talking about yesterday was the possibility of shooting at Bisley as a member of a non-Home Office-approved Club; is that what you meant? - No. They could be shooting as an individual. I personally don't have intentions to shoot at Bisley. Not every Club may shoot at that kind of competition level at Bisley. That is up to them as individuals. But if there was an individual in that Club who felt he was proficient enough and wanted to shoot at Bisley, he could go and shoot as an individual rather than as the Club.

When you considered Mr. Hamilton's renewal in 1992, I would like to be quite clear about what documentation was available to you. You would obviously have his application form? - Yes.

And you told us yesterday that you would have his immediately preceding certificate? - He would have had that -- he would have had his current certificate in his possession.

But you would see that at some point? - Yes.

You would see it when you went to visit him; is that right? - Yes.

So the sequence of events is you go to visit him, you see his current certificate, and then he fills in the form, and when you come to consider the renewal of his certificate all you have is the form and your recollection of what was on his last certificate? - Yes, and I also have an A4-sized sheet on which I take down various details when I am speaking with the applicant as well.

But in terms of the history of his shooting, what documentation do you have? - How do you mean -- how often he shoots?

Well, what is on his file at that point? - I wouldn't have access to his file at that point. I/

I would only be dealing with the renewal papers I have. The file is later submitted to the Chief Inspector.

So that you have his application form in front of you and the RL3a you had -- is that right? - Yes.

And your handwritten notes from your meeting with him? - Yes.

That is the only documentation that you have? - Yes.

And then you carried out the checks of SCRO and intelligence and so on, or you asked someone else to carry out those checks? - Yes.

So when does the file make an appearance? - The file -- once I had put the application to my colleague for processing she would withdraw the file together with the application, for processing.

But by that time you have answered the questions on the RL3a, have you? - Yes.

How would you discover a piece of information such as that the applicant had been attending his doctor for a psychiatric problem? - It would depend if the applicant had been truthful on the declaration on the form where he has to indicate mental disorder, epilepsy, previous convictions. That is a declaration that the applicant has to sign.

What about something else that might have changed, say, since his last renewal -- perhaps difficult domestic circumstances, something like that? Would that be something that you would find out, or would it possibly be something that would never emerge? - It would depend on whether that had been reported to the police or not, and inquiries had been made about it.

You wouldn't enquire about something like that yourself, though? - Well, I wouldn't know to inquire about it if it hadn't been brought to our attention.

You told us this morning that you have never seen all the documentation as presented to the Chief Officer, or whoever is signing the firearms certificate? - That is right.

Does it follow from that that you have never been summoned to a Chief Officer to explain or elaborate on any aspect of a firearm certificate being renewed? - There may have been the odd time maybe the Chief Inspector has called me through and asked -- I am trying to give you an example -- maybe address amendments, or lack of notification of change of address, say for example, and that is about that, really. I think it is only the certificate, once it has left the Chief Inspector, that goes forward for signing. I think it is the certificate that goes forward.

Can you actually recall any incident where you have been asked to clarify or explain something in a firearm certificate renewal? - Not particularly, other than on a minor change of address, or non-notification of transactions of guns -- other than that.....

So you have an actual recollection of being asked to clarify things like that? - Yes.

But nothing any more substantive? - No.

When you are looking at the application form and your handwritten notes and the RL3a, does it follow that at that point you would not know of any recommendation that another officer in the force had made at some point that this person's certificate be revoked? - Not unless it was in the file, or if it had been brought to our attention.

But you said at the initial stage before your colleague looked out the file you wouldn't have what was in the file anyway? - No -- well, if something had been previously submitted to the Department it would previously have been dealt with, I presume.

It would just have been part of the history? - Well, if no proceedings were taken, yes.

Now,/

Now, you were asked about proposals for change that have been made, and my recollection of your answer was that there is a recommendation that civilians, as you are, should be responsible for issuing and granting firearms certificates. Would you be happy if you were given that responsibility? - No.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: Can you assist us as to what the cost is for a new application? - For a firearm certificate application?

Yes? - It is currently £56 for a grant.

Can you tell me what it is for a variation? - A paid variation would be £26.

And a renewal? - A renewal is £46.

£46. How quickly could you deal with a variation? - Well, as I explained yesterday, there is two types. There is a one-for-one variation where a person would maybe relinquish.....

Yes? - And that can be done within three to four days usually. If a variation was received where it was paid, if it was different lands, say, for example.....

Well, let us say it was the purchase of a new weapon? - Well, that is what I am leading to. If it needed further inquiry, if it was a paid variation it would go out to operational police officers for inquiry to be made. So that could take as long as five weeks.

If someone had an intention, and had found a weapon they wanted to purchase, presumably there is no reason why the seller couldn't retain the weapon pending the application for variation, so that the purchaser could then take possession of the weapon? - Yes, that is correct.

Because, you see, we have heard a lot of evidence -- and you were asked by Mr. Bonomy -- about Paragraph 17 on the application where Mr. Hamilton, certainly for many years, had an intention to purchase a 7.62 rifle, but had never bought it? - Yes.

And/

And it has been suggested by earlier witnesses that the purpose for that would be that if a weapon became available it would avoid the necessity of seeking a variation before purchasing; but you say only some five to six weeks would be needed, even for a full variation? - For a variation, but that would also be on the certificate.

Yes, let's assume that that category is removed from the certificates and you have now got to apply. You think it could be done in five to six weeks? - It probably could, yes.

Now, you said I think that you don't get the previous applications or the previous certificates. You only get the certificate that is about to expire? - Yes.

Do you go back and check the earlier records? - No.

So you would not for instance have known that Hamilton had had permission to purchase a 7.62 rifle for many years and had not done it? - No.

That would not come to your attention? - No.

I think also that the only club you were aware of that Hamilton was a member of was the Stirling Club? - Yes.

You knew nothing about Callander? - No.

And I think you indicated that you would have contacted Mr. Crawford, the Secretary of the Stirling Club? - Yes.

And I think we have heard evidence from Mr. Crawford and probably all you would ask Mr. Crawford was whether Mr. Hamilton was a member? - I would have asked if he was a full member of the club.

That would be all? - Yes.

If you had asked more and if for instance you had been told that Mr. Hamilton only shot three or four times a year, would that in itself have changed your attitude about the renewal of his certificate? - No.

If you had been told that Mr. Hamilton did not comply with the club discipline and tended not to behave in an acceptable manner on occasions, would/would that have affected your attitude about renewing his certificate? - If the club had informed us to that effect we would have asked them to elaborate on it and possibly made enquiry into it.

If you were aware that Mr. Hamilton had been warned by Mr. Crawford about his conduct in the shooting range.....? - If we had that information.

If you had asked that and you were aware of that because again we have evidence that Mr. Crawford did warn Hamilton about his conduct? - I didn't know.....

Would that have had a bearing on your attitude about renewal? - If we had been told that we might have enquired into it. Yes, I would expect so.

If you had been told that Hamilton did not follow the course of fire and this was a criticism of him, would that have a bearing on your attitude about renewal? - We would probably have consulted with the club as to if they still considered him to be a safe and competent shot and depending on what action the club themselves had taken would have a bearing on the matter.

BY LORD CULLEN: Suppose no question of safety arises but it is simply not conforming to the course of fire? What would you do about that? - Well, we would hope that the club would take the appropriate action that they deemed suitable. Then if they still allow him to be a member of the club then we would have difficulty in saying that he does not have membership of the club.

So membership really would be the critical thing as far as you were concerned, is that correct? - Yes, if they refused him membership then we would have to.....

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. GIBB: But if he misbehaved but retained his membership, it would be a factor obviously? - It would depend, yes.

And so far as the question of actual use was/was concerned, all that you needed from a prospective applicant on their renewal was that they intended to use either the weapons or the ammunition? - Yes.

You don't retrospectively need any evidence that during the previous period they had actually used the weapons? - No.

So on that scenario someone could be a member of a club for 10 years, never have been to the club and as long as they retained their membership the odds are that that renewal would be granted? - As long as they retained their membership, yes, but I would imagine most clubs if someone was not shooting on a regular basis would probably reconsider them being a member as they were not making use of the facilities.

You were asked by Miss Dunlop about your reaction to signing certificates yourself. You were asked by Mr. Bonomy about postal renewals. What is your view as a firearms examiner about the efficacy of postal renewals as opposed to the system operated by Central Scotland Police? - I would prefer the system that we have because you are still keeping in touch with the applicant. That is my main personal feelings about it. The postal system, when you go postal then you could lose the rapport maybe you have built up with the person over the years and they may lose their shooting grounds on farms or whatever which may not be reaffirmed at the time.

We have heard evidence I think that the Home Office guidelines have suggested that the six months' probationary period be reduced to three months? - That is right.

And that there need no longer be any counter-signatory on the application and we know the period of certificates have been extended from three years to five years? - That is correct.

And there is this question of going postal. It gives perhaps the impression of not total deregulation but an element of deregulation of firearms. Is that a fair impression to gain? - I would say it is a fair impression. It is not one that I agree with but it is a fair impression.

CROSS/

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: Can you have D87L in front of you please? That is the RL3a which you completed in February of 1992. We see the first question which is asked is whether the applicant is a suitable person to hold a firearms certificate? - That is correct.

When you approach such an applicant do you go there with an open mind? - Yes.

You don't go there with any preconceived ideas? - No.

So you are starting from scratch if you like in seeing whether this person is a fit and proper person? - Yes.

So if anything which you have said in evidence up until now could be interpreted as you going there with some assumptions, would that be incorrect? - I don't know.

Well, are you going there with any assumptions? - I am not, no.

And if we could have a look please at No. 5 on the second page. We see there that one of the questions which is posed is whether the locations entered at Question 23 in the firearms form are suitable for the use of firearms held or to be acquired, is that correct? - Yes.

And I think we have heard evidence already at the Inquiry that the purpose of this is to ascertain if the club of which the individual is a member is properly qualified to shoot particular guns which he has a licence for, is that correct? - Yes, that is correct.

And it would only be at such ranges that the licenceholder would be entitled to shoot, is that correct? - They would have to be approved ranges, yes.

So it would not be correct for example to say that once he had a certificate he was then in a position to do with the firearms as he pleased? - No.

So again if anybody sought to take such from/from your earlier evidence, that would be somewhat mischievous, would it? - Yes.

If a person who holds a licence for a particular calibre of weapon wishes to purchase another weapon of the same calibre and sell the one for which he originally acquired permission, does that require a variation? - Yes.

I appreciate you don't deal with variations or do you deal with one to one variations? - I do, yes.

Let's assume that the person who is making an application has permission to hold two guns of the same calibre and the permission which he has permits him to hold these two guns and they are differently adjusted perhaps by sight or by grip. I think that was the normal ways in which they differ, is it, the sights and the grips? - Usually, yes.

And if in the variation he seeks to sell one of the guns and acquire another one which is identical in all respects to the gun of the same calibre which he is electing to hold, would that raise any questions in your mind? - If it was an exact duplication then possibly, yes.

Would that cause you to ask any questions? - We would usually enquire as to why and if they gave a reasonable explanation then it would be allowed.

You are answerable to an Inspector and to a Chief Inspector, is that correct? - I am, yes.

How often are you in contact with these people? - Quite frequently.

On a daily basis? - Yes.

In the course of your contact with them will you discuss with them anything which has arisen in the course of your enquiries? - If there is anything untoward, yes, it would be brought to their attention.

And you would obtain the benefit of their views on that presumably? - Yes.

So/

So whilst they might not make specific enquiries of you when you submit documents to them, nonetheless you may well have dialogue with them in relation to particular applications? - Yes.

Am I right in thinking that the firearms certificate is not a prerequisite to shooting at a recognised club? - No, you have to first become a member.

But you can become a member of a club and not hold a firearms certificate, is that correct? - That is correct, yes.

BY LORD CULLEN: Perhaps I can just ask you one or two questions. Can you just help me by describing the system where a certificate is granted in which there is authority to acquire a weapon of a certain calibre and that acquisition eventually takes place. What is the procedure which is followed? - Once an individual has purchased or acquired a weapon that he was given permission to buy we would be notified by the seller and that information would then be transferred on the computer records from 'purchase' or 'acquire' to 'possess'.

Is there any entry made on the firearms certificate? - There is, yes.

So it passes through the system for that purpose, is that right? - Yes.

The information that goes into the firearms certificate about the weapon which is authorised to be acquired simply states the type and the calibre, is that right? - That is correct.

And by the type the word 'pistol' or 'rifle' or 'revolver' would do, is that correct? - Yes.

Now, suppose you have a situation in which at renewal the applicant wants to acquire a second firearm of the same calibre and type that he already possesses and he gives an explanation that he wants to have that one with some special features on it and on that basis you are content to pass the thing on for approval. If in the course of that period of the renewed certificate he in fact buys one which is exactly the same as the one he already holds, is there anything that can be done about that/that? - That is a good question. It would probably be decided upon renewal whether anything should be done. I don't know whether anything actually could be done because he had purchased..... on the certificate it would just stipulate the calibre and type, no specification of weapon to buy.

So he is doing something entirely within the four walls of what he has been authorised to do? - Yes.

And in view of a question asked by Mr. Taylor, can I just be clear; if he starts shooting at some different location from the one which is mentioned at the time of the application, is there anything that can be done about that? - Well, if it came to our attention it was not an approved range then he would not be complying with the conditions of his certificate and there may be something done about that, yes.

But supposing he still sticks to approved ranges but he had been going to shoot at one which is not mentioned on his application? - Well, he would not be complying with the conditions of his certificate. There is a specific condition which says it must be ranges that have the relevant safety certificates. So he would be in breach of the conditions of his certificate.

Thank you. One other matter. When you are considering whether authority should be given for a particular acquisition, are you concerned also with whether the security will be adequate to contain the weapons proposed to be acquired? - Yes.

So if we take Miss Dunlop's example of 25 or 26 or whatever it was weapons proposed to be acquired, then the applicant might be in some difficulty, might he? - If he didn't have..... they would have to improve their security for the proposed weapons, yes.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: In connection with the 1992 renewal, was any check done on Criminal Intelligence? - Not by me, no.

And you didn't instruct any? - No.

When the application form and the RL3a go/go to the Inspector, the Chief Inspector and the Depute Chief Constable, where is the current licence? - It would be retained in the file.

So the applicant hands in his current certificate when he sends in his application? - We request them to return their certificate to us although we have no grounds under the current legislation to ask that but most of them do comply.

And is the RL3a completed by you in the office after the application comes in? - Yes, definitely.

And prior to that at the house you use a blank sheet of A4 paper? - I do, yes.

Have you had experience of Maureen Johnson sending an application back to you for further enquiry as a result of something that she has discovered on file? - Yes.

Can you give me an example of that? - There was an omission that an applicant had made. He still had outstanding authority to buy a 2.2 sound moderator which is commonly known as a silencer and they had not mentioned it on their application form and she referred it back to me to confirm whether the applicant still required it or not.

You were asked about shooting albeit you did not have a firearms certificate. Do you in fact even need to be a member of a club to shoot? - I do have personally a firearms certificate.

But can a person go to a club as a guest of a club member and shoot? - They can go as a guest, yes.

You were asked some questions about preconceived ideas about whether a person is a fit and proper person. Do you not in fact approach a renewal on the assumption that the person is a fit and proper person unless something crops up to suggest otherwise? - I assume they ought to be fit and proper unless the PNC or SCRO system would show differently.

So you do make assumptions? - Well, not full assumptions that they are unfit.

MICHAEL MILL (Recalled)

LORD CULLEN: You are still on oath, Mr. Mill.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:

Would you remind me of your present position in the Police Force?
- I retired from the Police Force as a Chief Inspector in charge of Callendar Local Command Unit in April, 1994.

I want to ask you about one of Hamilton's renewal applications which you dealt with. Could you have various documents in front of you. First of all D51A which is an application dated 3rd January, 1986, the RL2a which goes with it which is D52, and the AD2a form which is D53. If we start with the last of these, the AD2a form, you will see this is from Acting Chief Inspector Mill at Stirling to the Chief Superintendent of A Division on 29th January, 1986. Is that from you to the Chief Superintendent? - Yes, it is.

That relates to what is headed up "Variation of firearms certificate 4588". It was actually a renewal with a variation built into it? - That is correct.

If you look at the application form you will see that? - That is correct.

And it relates to Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

We have heard a little evidence of your involvement before in the Inquiry when you dealt with some of Hamilton's complaints about the police investigation at Inchmoan Island? - That is correct.

And we heard that you were the person he did from time to time come to try to plead his case, as it were? - Yes.

You became involved somehow or other in this particular renewal variation application. Can you explain to us how that came to be? - Yes. In January, 1986 I was Inspector at Stirling and Chief Inspector/

Inspector Reid was my immediate supervising officer. He initially processed this RL3a form, and he went off ill, and in that interim I took over from him, at that particular stage of the variation and the renewal.

Are you in the chain of command which would normally, as a result of that -- that would normally deal with applications? - Yes.

Had you come in only because a query is raised? - With the processing of the application, the firearms application, the renewal variation, as Inspector I would check the officer who is actually dealing with the application themselves. It would go through the chain of command through the officer who actually is doing the application, go through the Sergeant, through the Inspector, and then the Chief Inspector or Sub-Divisional Officer would then put his remark with "no objection" and it would then go to the Superintendent.

If you look at the RL3a, the Inspector has initialled it under the word "Station". You see that? - Yes.

I don't think that is your initials? - No. Yes, that would be Inspector Marshall. He would be the Inspector who initialled the renewal.

You would come in because you were deputising for the Sub-Divisional Officer? - Yes.

We don't see your signature anywhere on that document? - That one would have went through to the Superintendent with no objection at all to the firearms -- well, the Deputy Chief Constable's office, who would then have seen something in the application and would have returned it. At that particular stage then I would have been deputising for the Chief Inspector.

Attached to AD2 is a note addressed to Sergeant Binning? - Yes.

Is that Marshall's written note? - Yes, it is.

He is asking him -- well, he is saying it is unlikely a second 9mm pistol will be granted. See/

"See Mr. Hamilton and obtain full details of his reasons for requiring two pistols of the same calibre." Did you actually make that enquiry yourself of Hamilton? - No, I didn't. That would have been returned to the officer who was dealing with the application.

So that is Bell, is it, or Lesley Johnston? - Yes, it would be Constable Johnston. Sergeant Binning would be her immediate supervisor.

Why would she not simply complete the AD2 form herself? - Well, she would normally do that. I don't understand why she hasn't done it. I just can't remember as to why I would have done it. It may have been to expedite the variation and the application. It may have been she was off, she went off ill or whatever.

Are you sure you didn't speak to Hamilton? - I didn't speak to Hamilton.

Were you yourself aware of the information in this AD2a from what you knew of Hamilton or is this information that could only have come from the enquiring officer? - This could only have come from the enquiring officer. I wouldn't have made any investigation into this particular variation.

No cross-examination.

ROBERT OLIVER CAMPBELL (63) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Do you live in Stirling? - Yes.

And do you work as a security officer? - Yes.

How long did you know Thomas Hamilton? - From 1977 to 1984.

How did you get to know him first of all? - I came to work in the shop next door to the shop he occupied in Cowane Street in Stirling at that time.

And for how long were you neighbours in shop/shop premises? - During that period, from 1977, mainly from 1980 to 1984.

What happened in '84? - Hamilton left that shop and in '85 I left the shop next door.

During the period he was a neighbour in the shop did you know of his interest in running boys' clubs? - Yes.

How did you learn about that? - Well, it was obvious. He came in and talked, he wittered on quite a bit because the boys' club was very much at the top of his mind. I also saw boys leaving to go to camps, and I also saw them on a Saturday morning, they would come in and assist him tidying his shop, washed his van.

Can I take it there would be several conversations between you and Hamilton which were fairly regular? - Well, from time to time, yes. He would come in and -- yes, I would say fairly regular.

Did he ever mention the Scout organisation in any of these conversations? - He led me to believe he had resigned from the Scout organisation.

Did you know anything about his family background at that time? - Well, I understood that the father, who now transpired to be the grandfather, stayed in the house at Riverside. He also referred to a lady as his sister, but I knew virtually nothing more about that. I did meet the person who he named as father at that stage, an elderly gentleman.

Were you ever at his home? - No.

Did you ever see anything happening in his relationship with the boys of any kind that caused you any anxiety? - Never.

What appeared to be the relationship? - Similar I suggest to a club leader and boys participating in a club. That kind of relationship was similar to what I possibly experienced myself in the Boys' Brigade between members of the Brigade and officers in charge of it.

Did/

Did you know Hamilton had a boat? - Yes.

Were you on it? - Yes.

Can you tell us about that? - Well, I am quite interested in boats and have been all my life, I suppose -- and never had one. But I am also a painter to trade, and he acquired a boat, and he had been doing some work on it. He knew I was a painter, and he had purchased timber and was renewing woodwork on the boat, and he asked me to varnish it and bring it up and do some other painting jobs on the boat, which I was quite happy to do because I enjoyed messing about on boats.

Can you remember the number of times? - Maybe two or three times I worked on the boat. I have sailed maybe four times.

When was that? - It is difficult to date. Some time between 1980-84 I would have thought.

Were you ever there when he had boys with him? - Yes.

What were the circumstances? - Well, it was just again the boys were around, a posy of boys about, much the same as a Saturday morning. They were on the boat, there were lifejackets on the boat. When I sailed on the boat I had my wife and my own two girls with me. It was a family outing.

On any of these occasions was Hamilton camping with the boys? - No.

What was the name of the boat? - "TROPICAL LINDA" I think.

Do you know what happened to it? - It went on fire.

Were you there at the time? - No. He was on it alone. I was shocked when that happened to the boat. He claimed at that time it was a gas cylinder which had gone wrong.

From what you saw of his relationship with the boys at Loch Lomond was there anything there to cause you concern? - No.

Were/

Were you satisfied with his attention to safety with the boys? - Yes.

What was the first time Hamilton ever discussed what may be described as official dealings in relation to his dealings with authority? - That would be when some -- I think the let of the accommodation in the schools was stopped by Central Region.

Can you remember when that was? - I could refer to -- I have noted the date in my pocket if I can refer to it. I don't know if I would be allowed to?

I don't think there will be any objection to that and with his lordship's leave you can do that. Where did you make the note from? - From -- well, I have got my own CV with me, and I just checked up trying to find out dates, because at the time the statement was made I was more or less taken out of my daily routine and I wasn't quite sure the dates may be accurate, and I tried to get better accuracy.

On you go then? - That is 1984 that case was coming up because the Ombudsman's report was drafted on 22nd August, 1984 and he supplied me with a copy of that, both the draft and the final document, but I don't think I read it at the time. He asked for my advice because I had been a Councillor from 1965 to 1980 -- not with Central Region, I was with the Burgh of Stirling and subsequently with the District Council. He asked questions about administration and how things worked and things like that and generally discussed it. I didn't know much about the circumstances about the stop of the let, but he was quite disturbed at what was going on and worked quite assiduously at trying to clear his name and reinstate the lets.

Did he give you any indication about why he was having difficulty with the lets? - No. I don't really recall at the time, but there had been an incident at a camp or something of that kind. I think this was the basis of it. But subsequent to reading the report that would seem to be the basis of it.

What was the first you knew he had an interest/interest in guns? - It would be about the same time in the conversations when he spoke of shooting. He was a member of Dunblane Rifle Club I believe.

Were you aware of him taking boys that he had at the shop for shooting practice anywhere? - Not that I can recall. I don't know whether they did. I think perhaps on one or two occasions he took them to the range, yes, I think he did say this, because we discussed discipline and I understood that his discipline on the range was very strict and he looked after the boys.

Did you have any interest in guns? - No, not at all.

Did you have any views about them? - I am anti-gun really -- that kind of gun anyway. I can appreciate guns are necessary for environmental control, pest control and stuff like that, but the kind of weapons that have been discussed here, I don't think they should be in the public domain at all.

Are you a Justice of the Peace? - Yes.

Since when? - I have been a working Justice of the Peace for 28 years. The Justice of the Peace -- we were given that after reorganisation of Local Government in 1974-75. Any Burgh Magistrates who were serving in Court at the time were automatically put on the Justices Register and continued to be in Court.

Does that mean you get asked to sign a lot of things?
- Yes.

Can you just give us a rough indication of the sort of forms you will be asked to sign? - Well, the principal one is in fact search warrants for the Police Force, drugs warrants for the Police Force, child care Orders. It goes through a range from people changing their name, changing a lair in a cemetery or something of that kind. There are various things. I would also get asked to testify photocopy documents are true facsimiles of the original document. Generally the Justice is the point the lay public have access to the legal system, the bottom rung of the ladder.

Hamilton/

Hamilton asked you to sign a form; is that right? -

Yes.

Were you ever asked about a firearms form? - I signed a form -- I had forgotten completely until such form was presented to me in the course of this Inquiry. I signed a firearms form. I also signed one saying he was a fit and proper person to run a boys' club for the Strathclyde area, Bishopbriggs, I'm not sure.

Did/

12.00 p.m.

Did you, prior to the Dunblane tragedy, ever have information in your possession to suggest he wasn't a fit person to run a Boys' Club? - No, never. I would never have signed the form if I thought that. I knew him well enough to tell him to go and get lost. But I had never any reason to suspect it. What I had seen of his activity with the boys and the Club, I didn't suspect it had changed. I asked him how things were going and I was given the affirmative, everything in the garden was lovely, according to him. Obviously he wasn't going to tell me anything different if he was wanting a form signed.

When was the first time he asked you to sign a firearms form? - I am not sure, but the date was on the form. I don't recollect it.

Could you look at FA55, which is D83. That form is dated the 12th January 1992. You will see that date on it, and then the date opposite your own signature is the 14th January 1992? - Yes, that will be correct. That is my signature and that would be the date, then.

Now, this is the first time that he came and asked you, was it, 1992? - Yes, to my recollection. I can't answer. I don't know anything other than that. I didn't keep a record of any of the signatures I gave.

You will see you have signed a form that says "(a) to the best of my knowledge and belief the information given in answer to questions 1 to 15 above is true", and if you go back you will see that 1 to 15 are all on the first page? - Yes.

And they are personal particulars of Hamilton, and I take it to the best of your knowledge and belief these were true? - Yes.

The second point you have signed, (b), is "I know of no reason why the applicant should not be permitted to possess a firearm" -- and is that the position? - That is the position, yes.

And then I think you confirmed that the photographs produced bore a current true likeness to the/the applicant? - Yes.

And you had endorsed one to that effect? - Yes, that is correct.

And you finally said that you were resident in Great Britain and had known him for 10 years? - Yes.

Which is probably just a little less than you had known him properly for? - 1992, 10 years takes you back to 1982. There is a complication on the next application, actually, which I think explains the reason. 1982 -- 1977 I think I came to know him, yes, that is correct.

But you were erring on the cautious side? - Yes.

You weren't erring on the wrong side? - Yes.

And I take it from what you have told me you signed two firearms application forms? - I have signed one subsequent to that one, which I have no doubt you will bring up.

Yes. The other one is D91 (FA61). And you can see your signature, dated the 15th January 1995? - That is correct.

Yes. The complication you are mentioning is that you have known him for 26 years? - Yes. I can expand on that.

conversation was amiable enough, there was no problem in that respect, and I had said something like 15 years or something of that nature, without putting too fine a point on it and calculating everything down to the last..... But he said 25/26 years, and we then began to discuss how this came about, and his claim to 25 years, 26 years was that he first knew me when he delivered documents from the Borough Architect's Department to Councillors.

I was elected to the Council in 1965, and he delivered documents from the Borough Architect's at that time to the house on a scooter, documents for the next committee meeting or something. And I could recall him at that time, I could remember of him. I didn't know him as well as I subsequently got to know him in Cowane Street, but I did remember him, and he felt he would like that length of time to be recorded, and as I felt 10 years, 15 years or 26 years -- I think if you don't know someone in 10 years I doubt if you will be much further on in 26 years.

Well, I don't know that you will be faulted for that, but if you could look at the back of that form, there is a series of notes which are Guidance notes for people filling up forms. Have you got that? - Yes.

Now, if you go to the foot of the page, in the first column, do you see a sentence beginning: "The person who countersigns the application is required by the Firearms Rules 1989 to declare that he knows of no reason why the applicant should not be permitted to possess a firearm"? - Yes.

That was your position at that time? - That was my position at that time. I understood he had had guns of various kinds for something like 20 years.

If you go to the next column, does it say: "The countersignatory should therefore be aware that the Firearms Act 1968 requires a Chief Officer to be satisfied that an applicant can be permitted to possess a firearm or ammunition without danger to public safety or the peace". Does it say that? - Yes.

And were you satisfied yourself? - At that/that point in time, yes.

That he could do that without danger to the peace?

- Yes.

It goes on to talk about the Chief Officer is prohibited from granting a certificate "To any person whom he has reason to believe to be of intemperate habits or unsound mind or to be for any reason unfitted to be entrusted with a firearm". Now, had you any reason at that time to think any of these would apply to Hamilton? - I knew that he didn't drink at all. I had never known him to take alcohol at any time. I didn't think anything of his mind. He was different from most people, but I didn't think he was of unsound mind. He was a very shrewd businessman.

And then the last one "For any reason unfitted to be entrusted with a firearm"? - I couldn't see any reason for him being unsuited. I had seen no change in his condition from the previous time.

Now, did he tell you anything about what was going on in his life at that renewal? - No -- when he came to get his certificate signed?

Yes? - No, not specifically. Things were just going on quite well, and the law required that he get his certificate renewed, and he came to me, a justice who knew him, to have his certificate signed.

And between 1992 and 1995, that is between the two forms, did you see him at all? - Only passing in the street.

And between 1985 when your own business terminated and 1992? - Similar.

When you first signed the form had you any dealings with him? - No, no contact other than passing him in the street, something of that kind.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: If we look at the second application which you signed in January 1995? - Yes.

And we can see that you are asked the question/question "To the best of your knowledge and belief is the information given by the applicant in answer to questions 1 to 15 true?"? - Yes.

Would I be correct in understanding -- and I don't criticise you for this, please understand that, but would I be correct in understanding that in so certifying on this occasion, to a degree you were taking Mr. Hamilton on trust? - Yes -- well, I knew that his previous address had been 7 Kent Road. I asked him what he had been doing in the line of business, and he assured me that he was in photography. We briefly discussed that he was buying lenses on mail order catalogue from London, polishing them up and reselling them on the market in Scotland at an enhanced price. He was a shrewd businessman. I accepted that.

It would be a reasonable summary of your relationship with him to say that you knew him, but not particularly well? - Yes, that would be reasonable.

If we look at the second question, the second matter you were asked to certify, on the back -- you may be looking at the Guidance there. The bit you signed is the bit I am asking you to look at? - Oh, this here, sorry.

Part F for the countersignatory, the question you are asked in B, or the matter you were asked to certify in B, is "I know of no reason why the applicant should not be permitted to possess a firearm"? - Yes.

And of course we know that you knew of no reason why the applicant should not be permitted to possess a firearm? - That is correct.

Supposing you had been asked "Is this man a fit and proper person to have a handgun?", or a firearm, would you have felt able to so certify? - I knew that he had handguns and I felt I had no reason -- handguns are permitted by law under a firearm certificate. The police were aware of the firearm certificate.

I questioned whether they were kept securely in his house, because I had not any thought that he would use them in the way he subsequently did, but I feared for break-in and theft, / theft, and someone else using guns in this particular way. In that the certificate allowed it, a gun was a gun, whether it be a shotgun or whether it be a handgun. I don't think we need handguns in civilised society, but the law allows it.....

Can I just interrupt you for a moment, and give you a word of reassurance? Nothing I am saying or asking you about involves any criticism of what you did. Can I just assure you on that. The question I am asking you is a hypothetical one? - Yes.

You have been asked in this form -- and it is really the contents of this form that my question is directed to, nothing that you yourself did. The form says "Do you know of any reason why the applicant should not be permitted to possess a firearm?". And of course you said, quite understandably, given your knowledge "No, I don't know of any reason", and that is what what you certified.

Would you agree with me that the form was not asking you to certify yourself that Hamilton was, in your view, a fit and proper person? - I am not following what you mean "certify"?

Is is my fault entirely. There is a difference, would you agree, between being asked whether you are aware of any reason why somebody should not have a gun, on the one hand, and on the other hand being asked your own opinion as to whether he is a fit and proper person to have a firearm? - That is the wording of the form you are talking about, the answer to the question.

Yes, indeed? - I would probably have answered the same question, because I knew of no change in his situation that would have made me think otherwise. If I had I wouldn't have signed that form in the first place. And I knew he was competent in his business, and he was competent at handling guns, whether it be a handgun or a .22 or whatever, it would not, I don't think, have made any difference to whether I signed it or not.

So if B had read "I certify that Mr. Hamilton is, in my opinion, a fit and proper person to have firearms", how would you have answered that question? - Well, I don't think I am a fit and proper/proper person to answer that question. Who knows what someone is going to do? It is a very very hypothetical question, and I can only give a hypothetical answer. I am not a competent person to say that anyone is a fit and proper person to have a gun. You don't know what someone is doing to do. How long does it take someone to go mad? I think the question is worded the way it is to avoid that situation.

And when we see in the same part of the form that you were asked to tell how long you had known the applicant for, be it 10 or 26 years, you are not asked to give any information as to how well you know the applicant? - I would reckon this is a weakness in the form, yes. But there is another problem to that also, that most people who come to get a form signed are not au fait with JPs every day of the week, who know they have to get in contact with a JP if they might need a form signed in 10 years' time. You have to do it. I mean, what is knowledge of a person? What does that mean?

If I understand the general situation -- correct me -- but you were not familiar with Mr. Hamilton's family background? - Oh no, I knew enough about his family background in that I knew his so-called father. I didn't know his sister, or mother, but I knew the circumstances. He often discussed his parents. He was very good to his parents at this time, so I knew something of his family background, and I had met his so-called father. I had met him and spoken to him in conversation down at the shop in Cowane Street, so I did know something of his background.

You had never been in his house? - No, I hadn't been in it.

Did any police officers ever ask you any questions about Mr. Hamilton? - No.

So your only involvement in the whole process of Mr. Hamilton obtaining a firearm certificate -- your only involvement was the two documents which we see before us here? - That is correct.

You told us that you were a Justice of the Peace -- you may still be a Justice of the Peace?/

Peace? - Yes, I still am.

And Justices of the Peace are one of the categories of persons who can be asked to sign forms such as applications for firearms certificates and the like? - Correct.

Have you ever been given any instructions or training in the matter of considering the signature of applications such as this? - Not specifically to my recollection. I did in 1985, when the new Justice System was set up -- training was introduced then. Training was introduced, and you had certain training to go through, and there would be instruction during the course of that lecture which more or less stood for the honesty of the person in signing the form -- and it would be on oath, taking an oath and signing, most of the forms, the same way as I took the oath when I came in here. Other than that, no, I can't recollect any specific firearms training. Indeed, I wonder what it would be.

I think you were shown the guidance for countersignatories in the notes attached to the form? - Yes.

Have you seen these before? - I don't think I have paid specific attention to them before. If they were in fact attached to the firearm certificate, I don't think I read the small print, under the circumstances of the signing.

Again, it is not a complaint or criticism, please understand me, but before signing these two applications, to the best of your recollection, you didn't read the Guidance? - To the best of my recollection I don't think I read that Guidelines, no. I dealt with the questions above my signature, A, B, C and D and answered these truthfully.

I/

12.20 p.m.

I may be corrected but I don't see anything in Part F directing your attention to guidance or giving any advice on that part of the form? - No. "See Note 68 overleaf before completing this part". Perhaps that is it.

It must have come as a considerable shock to you to discover that Hamilton did what he did? - That is an understatement.

An understatement I am sure. If you were asked again by someone else to countersign a firearms application, would your approach to the matter be any different? - I don't think it could be because again, as I said, I am the first point of contact. People who are known to me and I know who wish to have firearms come to the JP. I am territorially placed within the situation to be of access to the community that I live in and I think I have a duty as a Justice of the Peace to be satisfied on the points in the questions and now obviously on the guidance that this is correct and true. Until the law is changed then I feel I have a duty to sign. My own personal views on it should not in any way..... I can't inflict my personal views on the community where I have a service to perform for that community.

But I think you have offered some personal views of your own as to guns in the community? - I am anti-handguns and all these things. I don't think that they should..... as I said already in a statement earlier.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: You were asked if the police officers asked any questions of you as to Hamilton's suitability when they called to see you. Can I just have your evidence on whether the police officers did call to see you after.....? - I am sorry, I'm not picking you up.

Did any police officers call to see you following you having countersigned the application made by Mr. Hamilton? - No.

Did police officers come to see you in 1992 after you had signed, just to check.....? - Not to my recollection. I think I was telephoned.

You/

You were telephoned? - Yes, and asked to confirm it was my signature. I have no recollection of a police visit.

Perhaps it is my fault. You were contacted in some shape or form in both 1992 and 1995? - Yes.

No re-examination.

DONALD COWAN (35), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: Are you a Sergeant with Central Scotland Police? - That is correct.

Based at Alloa now? - I am.

And how long in the police? - I have 17 years' police service.

Did you know Thomas Hamilton? - Yes, I did.

When did you first encounter him? - It would be around 1979 or 1980 if my memory serves me correctly.

Who introduced you to him? - A gentleman by the name of Mr. William MacDonald.

Was he in the police at the time? - Yes, he was.

Has he already given evidence to the Inquiry? - I am led to believe he has.

What were the circumstances in which you came to meet Hamilton? - Mr. MacDonald and his son David were in the Stirling Pipe Band of which I was a member and when I used to take David home sometimes Hamilton was there.

In those days did you have any occasion to speak to him at length? - I wouldn't say speak to him at length. It would be just maybe short periods of five to 10 minutes whilst I would be in Mr./

Mr. MacDonald's house just passing the time before I left.

Did you form any opinion or impression of him at that stage? - Yes, I did. I formed the opinion that I would say he was strange, quietly spoken and an introvert. There was just a gut feeling I had about him, that I didn't take to him very well.

Did you know of his involvement with boys' clubs at that stage? - None whatsoever.

So you would not have any reason to be concerned about his activities with boys at that time? - At that time, no.

How well did you know Mr. MacDonald who introduced you to him? - I knew Mr. MacDonald fairly well, yes.

What about his son? - I knew him fairly well as well.

Were you able to work out how friendly they were with Hamilton? - I would have said they were fairly friendly, yes.

Did you ever go to Hamilton's boat on Loch Lomond? - Yes, I did. That would have been back around 1979 or 1980 if memory serves me correctly. I went up there with the MacDonald family but Mr. Hamilton was not there on the once or twice that I was on the boat.

Now, I am going to ask you about your involvement in Hamilton's firearms certificate renewal in 1995. Prior to that did you have any information about him and his involvement in boys' clubs or on his behaviour in general which might have caused you to be wary of him? - None whatsoever.

You hadn't picked up rumours or innuendo or tittle tattle there was about him? - None whatsoever. Although I have 17 years' police service, in the main I have spent that over in Clackmannanshire and I would say I have spent maybe only four and a half years of my service in Stirling and the Stirling area and have not been party to any report/report or muster room or canteen tittle tattle about Hamilton.

But there is more to it than that as well. By 1995 there were a number of police complaints about him, at least complaints that the police had investigated. That is a separate chapter. Now, were you aware of any of that material? - I was not aware of that whatsoever.

So neither from the simple talk nor from the material that the police had did you know anything about him? - That is correct. I knew nothing whatsoever about him.

So what was your role in dealing with his renewal application in 1995? - I was the supervisor at that time of the Area Constables and being their supervisor, when either a grant or a renewal of firearm or shotgun certificate came through it was my duty to allocate these enquiries to individual officers.

Now, can you have D91L please which is the 1995 application and can you have D92L and can you also have DI06 which is FA63? Now, to deal with that form first of all, that is the RL3a form and your name appears on it? - On the form RL3a, my name appears on the rear of it and I have signed it underneath "Reporting Officer."

The reporting officer was Constable Anderson? - That is correct.

What was your role in the enquiry? - Again it was to supervise that the enquiry had been carried out, that the officer allocated the enquiry would go to visit Mr. Hamilton, check that his guns on his certificate married up with the details of the firearms in Section 3 of the report and that everything was in order.

Now, you signed it on the 14th February 1995? - Yes, that is correct.

But you had seen it before? - Yes, I had seen his application form before.

Not the RL3a? - No, that is completed after the enquiry has been done.

So/

So are you sure you didn't see the RL3a as well? If you look at the application you will see it is dated 15th January? - Yes, the application form came to me and because I knew Mr. Hamilton I had a quick look at it and before I gave this enquiry to PC Anderson, the control docket which was attached to it, I folded it up and put a comment on it for PC Anderson. I thereafter gave the form, DNT01, along with this control document to PC Anderson.

Now, we see your comment that you have referred to on the other document which is there which is D92. What was it you said to her? - I put at the top, and I folded it over, and I said "PC660 Anderson. With regard to pre-cons could you oblige and check that this is a definite No" and I have underlined the "No". "I have a feeling he has or at very least is on CI". I mean by that Criminal Intelligence, and I have signed and dated that. I have initialled and dated that, sorry, 18th January 1995.

Now, what was your basis for writing that? - Again it was just on my initial meeting with Mr. Hamilton. I had maybe seen him two or three times in the passing in Stirling and I had thought he was a strange man. I have thought many times as to why I thought he had previous convictions or as to what type of previous convictions he might have but again it was just a feeling that I had. Nothing more than that.

Now, you got a reply along with presumably the RL3a? - Yes, that is correct.

And what was the reply? - The reply is "No trace PNC. CI intelligence on Hamilton" and it is signed A. Anderson 660. "Nothing to stop firearm application going through".

Is that last bit in the same handwriting? - Yes, it is.

So what documents came to you at the stage you signed the RL3a? - They all come to me. The application form and the RL3a along with this control docket as I call it.

You didn't have any other document like the file or the existing firearms licence? - Sorry, the/the existing firearms licence which was due to be renewed would be there as well.

But not the firearms file relating to Hamilton? - Not the main file, no.

And from you where did the papers go? - After I have checked it I put it into the Duty Inspector's basket.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Just looking at the note that you wrote, D92L. You didn't actually say "I have a strange feeling about this man" although that was the basis for your intervention?? - I have on the note "I have a feeling he has or at very least is on CI", yes.

No, I am sorry, the answer to my question I think is "No, I have not put that down" because the feeling is a reference to previous convictions. You are saying "I have a feeling he has previous convictions", not "I have a strange feeling about this man"? - Yes, it is. Yes, "Check that this is a definite No. I have a feeling he has.....", yes.

You see, it might be thought that if what lies behind your intervention at all or what lay behind your intervention in the first place was a gut feeling that you had had about this man, one might have expected that gut feeling to be recorded? - My gut feeling was back to, as I said, 1979 or 1980 and it was in purely social circumstances and it was nothing more than that.

But it was a gut feeling which prompted you to ask somebody to check out the previous convictions? - Yes.

So it is not purely social, is it? - But it is now in the police environment when as a supervisor I was wanting her to carry out that check, PC Anderson to carry out that check.

What was your understanding at the time as to the reason for a firearms certificate holder requiring to apply for a periodic renewal of the certificate? - Sorry, I don't quite understand that question.

What was your understanding as to the reason/reason for the requirement that a firearms certificate holder would require to apply from time to time for a renewal of the certificate? - Because his previous one was due to expire.

What training, if any, did you receive in the law relating to firearms regulation? - Well, going back to my probationary period, I would have received input from the Scottish Police College and I would have received input at local level, at Headquarters, and also I would be referred to local Standing Orders and obviously the experience over the years of having dealt with firearm and shotgun renewals and grants.

So it may be a difficult matter but did you receive any training in the law relating to firearms regulation? - In relation to firearms, yes, I would have in my probationary period and, as I said, at local level.

So in 1995 were you aware of the matters which required to be taken into account by those responsible for renewing Mr. Hamilton's certificate? - I was aware of the role that the constables enquiring, making enquiry, had to do and I was aware of the role that I had to play in the renewal process.

What was your understanding then of the role which you were required to play? - Obviously to check that all the details on the renewal form married with the details on his certificate which was due to be renewed and that they married with the enquiry officer's report on the form RL3a.

So the instruction which you had as to your role did not go beyond that purely administrative matter? - Well, basically that would be the case, yes. I give it to the enquiry officer and with the answers that she gives me and the RL3a I can see or otherwise that the enquiry has been done.

But we can see that you have taken it upon yourself, because of the gut feeling, to do just a little bit more than that and you have written the note here of the 18th January 1995 to PC Anderson? - Yes.

Did anybody ever come to you and say to you "We have read your note here. Why did you write it?"? - No, nobody.

So/

So the only response which you received was a note received from PC Anderson relating to the CI Intelligence? - Yes, that is correct. When I put this back on the Inspector's desk -- well, when I initially got that I actually folded the docket up and when I put it on the Inspector's desk it may well have been the case that was down and nobody would have reason to actually see it.

In the paperwork is there any record of a contact with the counter-signatory Mr. Campbell? - In the paperwork -- as I say, there isn't. I must add that it is normally something that I stress that it is done and I normally get the officer to put another part, at No. 7, on the rear of form RL3a, to say that the counter-signatory has been verified, but on this occasion this has not been put on.

What do you mean verification of the counter-signatory? - By that I would expect the officer to call on the counter-signatory and confirm that he has signed the counter-signatory's section of the form, the application form.

BY LORD CULLEN: Is that all, nothing further than to ask, simply that? - Well, I can personally say that I would generally ask him to maybe write his signature so that I could personally confirm rather than just taking his word.

This is all directed to making sure the person who bears to have signed has in fact signed? - That is correct, yes.

That's the object? - Yes. Although PC Anderson hasn't signed it to that effect, knowing PC Anderson as I do as her supervisor, I would think it would be a fair chance that she would actually do that, although, as I say, I haven't actually put that on.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Would you expect any such visit to be recorded? - Recorded in what way?

In some shape or form? - Again, as I say, I normally record it on the rear of the form, the RL3a, but on this occasion that hasn't been.

Would/

Would this be done by a visit or done by a telephone call? - Again, depending on the individual, speaking from my own experience I would do it from a visit.

But others may have a different approach? - Well, they may well do, yes.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: You were asked there about the role you played in supervising the constable. Is the extent of your check that the paperwork looks as though it has been done properly? - To my satisfaction, yes.

You don't go asking her: well, did you check this, this, this and this? - No, in general that wouldn't be the case. I would think that PC Anderson is a fairly experience officer, a fairly mature individual, and she is an officer I could trust to do that.

ANNE ANDERSON (31) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you a constable in Central Scotland Police? - I am, yes.

How long have you been in the police? - Five years.

Where are you based at the moment? - Stirling Police Office.

Over what period were you a probationary constable? - For two years I was a probationer.

That is the first two years? - Yes.

During that period did you get some training in firearm renewals and grants inquiries? - Myself personally I would go with a senior officer on enquiries and I would learn basically how to do an enquiry from that.

Did you attend Tulliallan? - I did.

Were there courses there about firearms that you remember? - Basically at Tulliallan, the basic training course would cover various aspects of firearms/firearms.

So far as the Central Force is concerned, during the period when you were a probationer constable was there any formal training in firearms certification? - Yes, I got some training from the Firearms Department as part of a module that I took part in.

And did you undergo that? - Yes.

That was in force when you were a probationer? - Yes.

Can you remember who it was that taught that module? - PC Moodie.

Now, who is he? - The firearms officer for Central Scotland Police.

In the period since you completed your probationary training how many firearms enquiries in a year on average have you done? - I think possibly only the one. That would be the one for Thomas Hamilton.

Have you any recollection of doing any others? - Not for firearms. I did, however, do shotgun renewals.

How frequently? - During the time that I was an area constable for St. Ninian's and Braehead, I would guess probably four or five.

Do you shoot at all yourself? - Yes, I was a member of the Police Gun Club. I don't go any more.

When did you stop going there? - Basically the club tended to run when it was quite a good attendance, and it tended to fall off during the summer months, so whenever it was up and running and if it fitted in with my shift.

Had you shot before when you were in the Royal Air Force? - Yes, I had.

So you have some practical knowledge of firearms? - Yes, that is correct.

In/

In carrying out an enquiry and looking at individual application forms you would know what they were? - I would recognise some weapons. I wouldn't say I could tell you exactly everything.

Did you shoot with handguns or rifles? - Yes, both.

Did you get any renewal applications in 1995 to enquire into? - Yes.

Could you have the form in front of you which is D91. This is the form you were given to make an enquiry into? - Yes.

Would you also have D92 which is a note that went with it -- it may even be attached to it in fact. This is a message from Sergeant Cowan? - Yes, from the rear of the note.

Did that come with the application form? - Yes.

Now, that really instructs you to look into something in particular, that is the previous record, Criminal Intelligence? - Yes.

But without this instruction would you have done that? - Yes, I would have.

Would that be automatic? - Yes.

So far as the record is concerned, is it you who does the check yourself or do you get someone else to do it? - I would get someone else to do it. I am not qualified to use the PNC/SCRO computer.

And on this occasion did you get someone else to make these checks? - Yes, I went to the PNC/SCRO through a phone call to the Control Room which I made.

And they did the check for you? - They did the check.

On the spot? - Yes, they do it on the spot and ask for your own personal shoulder number.

What about the DVLA. Do you know if there/there was any check there, in Swansea. Did you have any reason to check with them? - No.

That is not part of your process? - No.

It has been suggested earlier in evidence that is a way of getting additional evidence, additional material on criminal records that might not actually have got on to the SCRO? - Yes, I think that is right, but it would generally be for road traffic offences.

They may be relevant, but it wasn't your understanding such a check should be made? - That is correct.

How did you go about dealing with the Criminal Intelligence check? - That came about after I had been on a home visit to check the security at Hamilton's house. I came back and had a feeling about -- I had never met him before, and I had a strange feeling about the man. I came back, and because he had a firearms certificate the chances are he would have no previous convictions, so thereafter I spoke to one of my colleagues who was in the office at the time, PC Stolaker, and I asked him if he knew Hamilton. He said he didn't know him. I explained I had been at his house and found him a bit strange and he had an effect on me when he had presented or showed me the handguns which I had to check.

Can I just interrupt you because I do want to ask you quite a lot about this. But what I was more concerned about was whether at that stage, about whether you had actually done the check automatically because Sergeant Cowan had given you instructions? - No, I hadn't done it immediately.

You say you would have done that anyway? - I would have done it.

You are telling us about doing the Criminal Intelligence and seeking advice of a colleague? - I was trying to explain how the check came about.

On you go then. It may be best if I just let you do that? - The check came about after speaking to the Detective Inspector at the time, Detective/

Detective Inspector Anderson. He knew of Hamilton and there were no previous convictions on him although he did know of him. I thereafter went to the Criminal Management Unit where they have various computers and I wanted to check the Criminal Intelligence on Hamilton because obviously what I seen in the note for my personal reference. When I went in there I spoke to Douglas Hamilton and Gordon Munro and a check was carried out.

You wouldn't be able to do the check yourself? - I couldn't do that because I didn't -- I wasn't very familiar with the Textrack at the time; that is the search you do on the computer.

So you relied on them to do it for you? - Yes.

Did the Criminal Intelligence check throw up anything? - Yes, it did.

What was that? - There was one piece of information on Thomas Hamilton. It was only about three lines in total and it was referring to Hamilton trying to set up boys' clubs in Bannockburn area, and because I didn't know Hamilton, I knew nothing about him, I personally actually found that irrelevant because it had nothing to do with a firearms certificate. As I say, I had no idea of this person at that time.

What did it say about him trying to set up boys' clubs in Bannockburn? - That was all it said really. It was very brief. There wasn't a lot of information on it. It just had his name, where he lived, the fact he had either tried to set up clubs or was actively setting up a club in Bannockburn, something like that. I can't actually remember.

It is not certainly in that sort of form the type of material you would expect to find on Criminal Intelligence? - I couldn't say.....

Unless it was related to something else? - Just depends. Criminal Intelligence is just basically snippets of information that, if the police know a character it may be that they have changed their appearance or whatever, and if they know this character and if there is anything different/different about the character that can help to identify him or whatever, and they put it on. Basically it builds up a picture.

Douglas Hamilton thought that it threw up nothing at all when he gave his evidence. That is wrong? - That is wrong. I read it.

On stream? - Yes.

Nothing was printed out? - No.

And that's the only thing you read; is that right? - Correct.

And you regarded that as irrelevant? - Basically to his firearms inquiry I did.

You actually replied to Sergeant Cowan's note by saying "No trace"? - That is correct, no trace on PNC.

And CI intelligence? - No. There was a full stop after "PNC". "No CI intelligence on Hamilton". I signed it and put "Nothing to stop firearms application going through".

Whatever way we read it then you did contact Sergeant Cowan that there is no reason from your searches why the firearms application should not be granted? - That is correct.

If I can go back and ask you just a little about the circumstances in which you decided yourself that you needed to know more about Hamilton. You went and asked other officers. That was because of something that happened in the house? - Just when I went to do the enquiry at his home address. I recognised him by the photograph on the application. He invited me in, I was only in as far as the hallway. Generally when you go to people's houses they quite like to chat, small talk, invite you into their living room, whatever. I was aware that there was someone else in the living room of the house, I could see through the hinge of the door. Mr. Hamilton closed the door but he didn't lock it and it was slightly open. I remember feeling a wee bit uncomfortable about the fact there was someone else in the house who could possibly hear what we were speaking about. Thereafter, I had taken/taken a copy on a blank RL3a form with me which I filled in in handwriting and would go back to the office and type up. We went through the form section by section.

Now, something in the course of that disturbed you?
- It was just basically when I was checking the serial numbers of his guns, just the way -- it may sound strange -- the way he looked at me. It is very difficult to put it in words, you know.

Was it the way he looked at you that caused you to be disturbed in some way? - Yes.

Anything that he did that contributed to that? - Nothing in particular, just, as I say, it was just he came over as being very strange.

You have said a bit more than that in a statement you gave about this. Can you help us a bit more, what it was you felt, how it was you felt he was viewing you? - Sometimes people when you are dealing with them, they don't particularly like female officers for one reason or another, and I just got the feeling that he might have thought he could get some kind of reaction from me when we were talking about these guns. I remember when I was completing the form actually having to kneel down, because there was nowhere for me to write, so he was standing up and I was kneeling down. It was as if, you know, he was above kind of thing and he was sort of gloating -- like when he was opening up the oilcloth and showing me the gun it was like "Look what I have got".

So it is at this stage when you are looking at and checking the weapons that you felt most uncomfortable? - Yes.

After/

2 p.m.

After an adjournment for lunch.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMO: I just want to look now a little at the Intelligence position when you carried out this check. Could you have a document D10I(iii), which is D Intel F1, and I think it is D10 -- but needless to say the hole in mine has been punched through the number. Now, is that an Intelligence submission with a date 25th of something? - 25th of January.

Which year? - 1995 I think.

Now, the check you were doing was after that date, was it? - I believe so.

This isn't what you saw? - No. The Criminal Intelligence I saw was only that one piece.

My problem is I can't find anything that looks like that at the moment, but I want to look at this just to make sure it isn't what you did see, and secondly, to discover what difference it might have made if you had seen it. You will see that says the following: "There is a previous Criminal Intelligence submission regarding the above named and his activities in connection with young males"; do you see that? - Yes.

And if you go down to the bottom paragraph does it say "There is little doubt that Hamilton's interest in the males does not stem from any footballing interest, and, judging by his past dealing with youngsters and the training, Boy Scout and Youth Ranger sections, he should be considered as a suspicious youth worker"; do you see that? - Yes.

If you go over the page does it say "Hamilton resides by himself at the address given and has been the subject of police interest in the past"? - Yes, that is correct.

"He has not been charged with any crime resultant from these incidents, and will vehemently deny any abnormal associations with youngsters"? - Yes.

And/

And then "This information was received third-hand, that one of the three parents mentioned contacted a friend", and so on. Now, if you had found that piece of information what would you have done? - It is very difficult to say. I would probably have got in touch with my supervisor at the time and made him aware of it, with a view to having it printed off.

You will see it talks about a previous Criminal Intelligence submission, the very first line. That wouldn't have encouraged you to perhaps look a bit further into the Criminal Intelligence system? - Yes, I would have. I would have been looking to find out anything I could about Hamilton, but because there was only one submission at the time when I made the enquiry, then this didn't come about.

Now, if you look at one more, just for the moment, which is D9, and it is also D9I(iii) in the folder I. You will see that is an Intelligence information input form? - Yes.

And it comes from a Constable Farquhar at Bridge of Allan on the 12th of May 1989? - Yes.

Do you see the heading -- can you read the heading for me? - "Indecency file".

And then Hamilton's name, date of birth and address, and then the words "He is suspected of being involved in indecent practices with young boys"; have you got that? - Yes.

Now, if you had that Criminal Intelligence, would that have made any difference to the approach you took to the application? - It is very difficult to say, because at the end of the day he would not get his licence revoked on the Criminal Intelligence. It would be on having previous convictions, and he still didn't have any previous convictions. But I wasn't privy to any of this information, so it is very difficult to say what I would be doing, but I would also be looking to find out what Criminal Intelligence had on him. When you do a search that is what you do, to piece everything together.

You were looking for Criminal Intelligence?/

Intelligence? - Yes.

Therefore it must have had some potential relevance to your investigation? - I was looking for Criminal Intelligence because of the feeling in the house that I had about him -- I just wanted to find out if there was anything on him with regard to his background or behaviour.

But does it not follow from the fact that you were making that enquiry, not now because you were told to, but because you wanted to, that there could possibly be something in Criminal Intelligence that would affect the issue of whether he should get his certificate renewed? - I know what you mean, but could you rephrase that?

Well, perhaps one other way of looking at it would be that Criminal Intelligence information might point you in a direction that gave you enough material, but if your starting point is that convictions are necessary for the decision not to renew the certificate, what good is Criminal Intelligence going to be to a person like you, making this firearms enquiry? - I think probably the only thing I can say is I would probably be able to add my feelings about Hamilton to it. As far as the application goes it wouldn't actually stop him getting his firearms certificate.

Now/

Now, could you look at the RL2a -- sorry, the RL3a which you completed? Can you remember much about completing it? - I remember completing and going through the questions with Hamilton regarding the various sections, in his house -- which I had a blank pro forma form with me -- and filling it in in my own handwriting, and then coming back and typing it on to the paper.

The first question: "Is the applicant a suitable person to hold a firearms certificate?" you have answered "Yes". Now, applying what criteria did you answer "Yes"? - Basically because I have carried out the checks on the PNC and the SCRO, and he has not got any previous convictions. So from that point of view everything regarding the security, which was in order, and all the various sections, he actually did qualify.

Then the second question is to do with his reasons for requiring firearms or ammunition. You have written "Competition and shooting practice with Stirling Shooting and Pistol Club"? - Yes.

Did you make any check with him about how much shooting he had been doing? - When I was in Hamilton's house he basically volunteered -- you know, he had had that many firearms enquiries done he knew the formula they went along, and he said "You will be wanting to see my membership card?" and he showed me it.

Did you check with the club? - No.

So you accepted what he showed you? - Yes.

Did you ask him at all about how much shooting he was doing at the club? - No. He told me that he did do the shooting at the club, and did various different competitions, disciplines and whatever.

Did he give specification of these? - He wasn't particularly chatty.

So you didn't check on what these competitions were? - No.

And you would check his security? - Yes/

Yes.

And it was satisfactory? - Yes.

Now, you then have to sign the form; is that right?

- Yes.

Now, when you sign the form what is the effect of that? What are you actually saying -- "I have done the enquiry, I recommend the grant", or what? - When I sign the form I have completed the enquiry to the best that I can and I am basically signing it to say that the RL3a has been completed and it will be going back to my supervisor.

And I presume you would have signed it even if the answer to some of the questions had been "No", and you had explored that, and even if you thought he shouldn't get the licence -- or is that not your understanding of the procedure to be followed? - Not really. If any of the questions were "No", then obviously that would be getting brought to my supervisor's attention, and I couldn't put my name there.

So you wouldn't be signing it formally? - I wouldn't have thought so. It is all "ifs" and "buts" just now.....

I am just trying to find what the procedure is if the answer is "No", and you are unhappy with the explanation. Is the procedure that you hand the form in without signing it? - Well, I have never had one of those, so I can't answer that.

So you don't know? - No.

Did you ask why he wanted authority to acquire additional weapons? - Yes I did.

And what explanations did you get for that? - The question at No. 4, his words were obviously that he required duplicate firearms because he did different disciplines within his club, and therefore he requested that he could buy the duplicate weapons for competition.

And you just passed on that information? - Yes.

In/

In that form? - Yes.

How long do you reckon you were in the house? - About 10 minutes, 15 minutes.

Now, taking account of what you said before lunch time about his attitude towards you, did you think that he was uncomfortable in female company? - I can't say.

What did you think he was trying to do, then? - I just felt that he was looking for some kind of reaction from me. And it is very difficult to describe the feeling I had.

Did you feel intimidated? - Slightly, but I wouldn't let it show.

I appreciate you have had difficulty answering the question about signing the form, but bearing in mind what you have said, and your view about signing it if you had doubted his fitness, may I take it that the fact you did sign the form meant that you could see no reason why he shouldn't get his firearms certificate renewed? - That is correct. I didn't know a lot about him, so I can't say I doubted his fitness. I felt that I wanted somebody to know that I had been in his house and done the enquiry, and although I found him strange, the fact that he had guns in his house made me want to let somebody know that I had been there and come across this chap and had a feeling about him. That is the only way I can explain it.

But what had you in mind as the reason for conveying that to other people? - Because basically if anything happened I wanted them to know I wasn't particularly happy about signing his form. That is how I felt then, not knowing him.

The person, I suppose, who should really be told that is the person who is responsible for granting it at the end of the day, the Deputy Chief Constable? - Well, obviously I am not going to go and chap his door, but I felt happier when I had spoken to the Detective Inspector at the time and when I was basically told by him that they knew of him and that reports have gone in about him, and he had no previous convictions, and that there was nothing we could do or I could do to stop, or not to sign/sign his form to allow him to have his firearms certificate.

That is basically what he said to you? - Yes.

And that is by one of the Detective Inspectors? -
He is now a Chief Inspector.

But he doesn't really feature in the chain of command which is dealing with the application? - That is fair comment. Obviously my supervisor wasn't working the same shift as myself. I would have spoken to him about it, but because I had spoken to PC Stolaker and he knew I was unhappy about this chap Hamilton, he advised me to go and speak to someone.

The man who gave you the note in the first place was Sergeant Cowan? - Yes.

And he actually underlined in the note "Check that this is a definite 'No'" -- in relation to previous convictions. You didn't take from the note that he had an anxiety not unlike your own which might have merited discussing your feelings with him? - As I say, I would have discussed it with him, but for some reason we have either been working different shifts or on leave or whatever. With him putting "a definite 'No'", I took it he meant he was pretty sure there was intelligence on him; and when I checked and there has only been that one piece, that is when I have written back to him.

CROSS/

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Even if you hadn't had any feeling about Hamilton, and even if he hadn't intimidated you in the way that you have explained, what did you do to enable you to sign a form to the effect that Hamilton, in January, 1995, was a suitable person to hold a firearms certificate? - What did I do?

Yes? - Well, basically the form was signed by a J.P., who has known the chap for 26 years. He is saying he is of good character. I am not sure what you mean, what did I do?

Well, you had signed a form which is D106L. Part of that form is a question: "Is the applicant a suitable person to hold a firearms certificate?", and the answer to that question is "Yes" -- right? - Right.

On what basis did you answer that question "Yes" -- on what information? - Right -- on the basis that I had no previous convictions on him, that he is known to a Justice of the Peace who has known him for a considerable length of time, and there is basically nothing about him that could stop him being a firearms certificate holder.

Did you speak to the Justice of the Peace? - I can't recall. I think -- obviously knowing how pernicky Sergeant Cowan is, I would have just telephoned him to confirm that he did know Thomas Hamilton, although I have had several warrants signed by Mr. Campbell and I do know Mr. Campbell, and I did recognise his signature. But I would have got in touch with him.

Just to check that he did sign it? - Yes.

Of course it goes beyond just that. You in fact, having met Hamilton, had a very unpleasant experience? - I don't know if it is fair to say an unpleasant experience. At the end of the day it is a feeling I had, and basically I can't stop someone getting a firearms licence because I have a bad feeling about them. Really I don't know what the feeling was, there was nothing on him that would put him as being any kind of risk. The feeling -- it may have been if someone else had done the enquiry they could have come away thinking he was pleasant, or/or whatever.

I'm a little puzzled, because you are not being asked to determine whether he does or does not have a firearms certificate. You were asked: "Is he a suitable person to hold a firearms certificate?" - Well, I can hardly say he is unsuitable because I had a feeling about him, but I couldn't explain what it was about this man.

You see, in the statement which has been provided -- and confirmed in your evidence-in-chief -- you say that you did not feel threatened by him, "But I did feel he might have intended in some way to intimidate me in the manner in which he unwrapped his Smith and Wesson revolver". Now, if you as the investigating officer feel that you have been intimidated by the applicant, by the way in which he treats you, is that something which is at all relevant to his suitability as a person to hold a firearms certificate, in your view? - Again I would say that everybody can interpret different things -- I can't really answer that, I am afraid.

Does it come to this, that having gone to a more senior officer and communicated your feeling to him, the message to you in a nutshell was "There is no criminal convictions so there is nothing you can do"? - Basically, yes.

Who was that person who said that to you? - My Detective Inspector -- Detective Inspector Anderson at the time.

Were you encouraged by anybody to record in a formal manner that you had concerns about the way you were treated? - No.

Do I understand, if I have understood what you have been saying correctly, would it be fair to say that you were hoping that you would find evidence in the search of the records which would justify refusal? - Yes. I was hoping that there would be something else that would back up my feeling. As I say, it was only a gut feeling that I had, and because there was nothing else there I felt maybe it was just me misinterpreting his manner.

Now, more generally, your role, if I have understood matters correctly, in addition to completing/completing the form which we have seen, was to generally check the terms of the application with the applicant? - Yes.

You would check security of the guns? - Yes.

You would check that the guns tallied, presumably, with the declared information? - Yes.

And the ammunition? - Yes.

You would check that the counter-signatory signed the counter-signatory part of the form? - Yes.

And you would check that the applicant was a member of a gun club, as he said he was? - There is no actual requirement to check that they are a member of the gun club, although he did show me a membership card.

So did you do any checking on that, apart from that?
- No.

Was there anything else that you were required to either check, or investigate and confirm? - Not that I recall.

This is something -- a procedure which you have carried out, I take it, on a number of occasions? - No. That was the first one I did.

That was the first one you did? - That was the first one I did on my own, but there was nothing wrong with the security or anything else in his application.

Perhaps just moving away from this one specific case, either from your experience before or since, what we have just been through is a comprehensive list of the matters which would require to be checked or investigated by the officer concerned in this part of the renewal process -- yes? - Yes.

So would you agree with me that in effect apart from relying upon the counter-signatory's declaration, the terms of which we can read for ourselves? - Yes.

And/

And a check on criminal convictions, nothing else is done to check whether the person is a suitable person to hold a firearms certificate? - No.

You would agree with me? - I would agree.

Is/

Is anything else done at the time when a certificate is applied for for the first time? - The application form, the renewal and the grant, are basically the same.

So the procedure and the checks are the same whether it is a renewal or a first time application? - Yes. If he had been applying to shoot on land or anything like that and it was the first time, you would get that in writing from the landowner but if it was just a renewal then obviously just contact with them would be sufficient.

Would you agree with me that this is a wholly inadequate system for finding out whether a person is or is not suitable for a firearm? - Yes, I would agree with you.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: You have indicated that you only did four shotgun renewals and only one firearms. Why did you get this renewal to do? - Basically because I work as Community Constable for St. Ninian's and the Braehead areas and basically he resided within the area which I covered.

And all you got was the present certificate and the application? - Yes, which obviously had been completed.

You didn't get any sort of protocol or brief resume of the firearms legislation which would enable you to refresh your memory as to what the Acts said about people who hold firearms. That was not given to you? - The only other thing is obviously the Standing Orders that are kept within Headquarters but there is nothing else given. As I say, I had been with other persons when they had carried out enquiries.

But here is a one-off enquiry that you don't do very often and you were not given even a copy of the relevant Section of the Act which showed what people who hold firearms certificates require to be? - No.

I think we have heard evidence of the training/training that you get at Tulliallan. Did you attend both the basic training course and the advanced training course? - Yes.

And do you recall as part of these training courses periods dealing with firearms? - Yes.

I think we heard there were five 50-minute periods in the initial course and I think three in the second, in the advanced? - I couldn't honestly tell you.

But you got course papers with it and again I think we have heard evidence that these course papers were not as full as they might have been about the criteria in relation to holding firearms certificates? - Yes.

In your view is it appropriate that someone such as yourself should carry out a firearms enquiry with the information you had available at that time or do you consider in hindsight you should have had more information? - My personal view does not really come into it. I would say basically I had got an enquiry to do and I have to do it.

You had this gut feeling and you went to speak to a Detective Inspector, is that right? - Yes.

Who was that? - John Anderson.

Did he suggest that you might put in a Criminal Intelligence memo? - No.

Did he suggest that you might qualify your report, your RL3a, to simply make a comment about your gut feeling? - I basically went to him because I didn't know Thomas Hamilton and because he had had an effect on me which I was not particularly happy about. I wanted to know if the Detective Inspector knew of him because obviously, as I say, he would not have had any previous convictions if he is holding a firearms certificate and if he didn't know about him I wanted him to know I had been in his house and I found him strange and because he clarified that by saying "Yes, we know of him, there has been reports gone to the Fiscal's in the past, Paul Hughes put reports in", or whatever, because he knew/knew of him I felt happier in myself that it just sort of confirmed that he was particularly strange and it wasn't me that just found him like that.

But you indicated earlier you certainly would not go and knock the Depute Chief Constable's door? - No, hardly.

Did it occur to you you might put some sort of additional paper with your RL3a simply expressing your concern? - No, because at the end of the day it is just a feeling.

Well, it may be just a feeling but we have heard a lot about feelings in this case? - Yes, I know that.

Clearly if you had put such an addendum on to the Chief Inspector's report it might have.....? - It wouldn't have made any difference.

But you see, we know that it goes up the line. You enquire into the facts. You do the basic enquiry? - Yes.

And you didn't see other intelligence logs that clearly were somewhere? - No, I only saw the one entry which I described to you.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: One of the checks which you carried out, one of the computer checks which you carried out, is in relation to the Scottish Criminal Records Office, isn't it? - Yes.

And when one looks at what is contained on the SCRO one finds that there are cases pending? - Yes.

And if you on checking SCRO discover that a case was pending and you were in the course of your firearms investigation at the time, would that be a relevant consideration? - Yes, I would have thought so.

And if the offence which was pending was sufficiently serious, would that give you some grounds for concern as to whether there ought to be a renewal? - Yes.

And/

And does it therefore follow from that that it would not just be in the case of a conviction that you would consider the refusal of an application? - Yes.

When you spoke to Inspector Anderson I think you have just told us when answering questions put to you by Mr. Gibb that what you were told was that the police knew of him, that there had been some reports made to the Fiscal in the past and I think also reference was made to the then Sergeant Hughes' memo, is that right? - Yes. Well, he told me that the Family Unit had put in reports regarding Thomas Hamilton and basically that they did know of him because I said to him that I obviously felt quite unhappy and he said there were no previous convictions and there is nothing we can do about him.

Well, is that right? - Yes, he did mention that reports had been put in, that there were a number of reports put in by Paul Hughes and various people.

Yes, but the bit that I am wanting to clarify is the bit which you added on just at the end there when you said that because there were no previous convictions there was nothing which you could do? - Yes.

I mean, are you sure that is not something which has developed in your mind since then? - No.

I mean, you have just told us that is however not the test, haven't you? - Sorry?

You have just told us a few minutes ago that whether someone has previous convictions is not the test? - No, he didn't have anything pending when I made the enquiry. That would obviously have made a difference to it.

Would it be fair to say that since the events of the 13th you have been under quite some pressure? - Yes.

And you have felt quite emotional at times about what has happened? - Yes.

Would/

Would it be also fair to say that some of your concern about Mr. Hamilton may have become more acute since the events of the 13th? - It is difficult to say. I can't answer that.

Well, can I look at it this way then; you have told us a little bit about Criminal Intelligence. How is it that Criminal Intelligence is built up within Central Scotland Police? - Basically officers put in submissions regarding an individual, snippets of information, some knowledge that they have, which helps us obviously to build up a picture about a particular character.

And how are officers told about Criminal Intelligence and their role in providing information to Criminal Intelligence? - It used to be that you filled in a handwritten or typed submission on a form which was actually a form with four copies. It now goes on to a computer system. You have to put it in manually and then if you want to refer to it you have to carry out a search.

I am looking more to know when it is that something ought to be put on to Criminal Intelligence. What sort of guidance are you given as to what sort of material you should be referring to Criminal Intelligence? - Just basically if you feel that you have heard or you have seen something of some relevance that might help someone else with further investigations. You would put that on.

Now, you didn't do anything such as that after you had met Mr. Hamilton in the 1995 renewal, did you? - No, I didn't.

So does it follow therefore that the feelings which you had after meeting with him in his house did not perturb you sufficiently to cause you to put something on to Criminal Intelligence? - That is correct, because at the end of the day he didn't point any gun or anything at me. It was down to a feeling that I had about him.

Yes, you would not have been able to formulate any reason which would have been able to stand up to any scrutiny as to why he should not get a firearms certificate? - Yes, that is correct.

What means did the police have available to/to them in order to make checks on individuals? What records do they have which they can research to make checks on individuals? - Obviously you have the PNC and SCRO computers and you have what we call the trace terminal.

That is Criminal Intelligence? - That would be part of Criminal Intelligence. Not everyone can search Criminal Intelligence if they have not been shown.

But everybody knows about it? - Yes.

And everybody can access it if they choose to access it? - They can ask someone to do it for them if they can't work it themselves.

In the same way as you did? - Yes.

So we have got the Police National Computer and the Scottish Criminal Records Office and we have got Criminal Intelligence. Is there anything else which is available? - Not that I can think of.

You see, it was suggested to you and you agreed with the proposition that the procedures which you adopted when carrying out this enquiry were inadequate. Do you remember that? - Yes.

And I was wondering what further checks you think you could have done from those which you did? - Well, I am hardly in a position to change the law. I mean, it is not for me to look into. It may well be that someone obviously a lot higher up than me could make these changes, you know.

So does it come to this then; that it is the law you think is deficient as opposed to any procedures of Central Scotland Police Force? - Yes, absolutely.

You were also asked one or two questions by Mr. Gibb, that is the gentleman sitting three along from me, in relation to the courses which you attended at Tulliallan and the adequacy of the documentation which was presented to you at that time. Can you recall clearly what was contained in such documentation at this stage? - Not at this stage, no.

So/

So any comments that you made upon the adequacy of that have to be looked at in the context that you can't remember clearly what was there, is that correct? - I suppose if you put it like that, yes.

THE DEAN OF FACULTY: My lord, I wonder before Mr. Bonomy comes in, if I can really seek clarification through your lordship on one matter.

In view of the questions that my friend Mr. Taylor was asking this witness, can I just establish through you, sir, that Central Scotland Police Force is not dissociating itself in any way from Constable Anderson and that it accepts that what she did was in accordance with the procedures and the system then in force because if not, clearly I would want to make representation.

LORD CULLEN: Well, Mr. Taylor, what is your position?

MR. TAYLOR: I am quite happy to give the assurance which is requested by Mr. Hardie, that Central Scotland Police Force is not in any way seeking to suggest that this witness has done other than that which she ought to have done.

LORD CULLEN: Very well. Now, Mr. Bonomy?

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I just want to ask about one matter which I should have found earlier but I found while cross-examination was proceeding. Can you look at one other Intelligence entry please which is No. II? Now, I know that this is too long for it to have been the entry that you say you saw on the screen but can you read the first paragraph of the entry please? - The heading is "Matter of Interest/Person of Note" and the first paragraph is "This evening I was contacted by a member of the public from Hillpark who was expressing his concern for a youth club which was or is presently being run at Bannockburn High on a Tuesday evening".

Just stopping there. If we forget the rest of this for a moment, is that entry similar to what you say you saw on the screen? - What I recall or pieces of what I recall about the entry was that Thomas/

Thomas Hamilton from 7 Kent Road was either in the process or was applying to set up a boys' club in Bannockburn so it could refer to that.

Now, what is the date of this entry? - 13th February 1995.

And if you look please at the RL3a form, which is D106, what is the date of your signature? - 13th February 1995.

Now, does that make it impossible that we are actually looking at the right entry? - Yes.

I mean, how long before you signed the form was it that you did the check? - I can't actually pin down when I actually did the check. However, I know in the week prior to that I had been on sick leave and when I had done the home enquiry and came back I would have had the RL3a in my handwriting. I was on a course actually on the 13th and I came in knowing that the renewal date was coming up very soon and I didn't want the application to run out so I came in from my course and typed it and then submitted it.

Well, was the Criminal Intelligence check done days before? - Yes, before I had been off on sick leave. But it would appear to be relevant, along these lines, but this is not exactly what I saw.

JAMES/

2.50 p.m.

JAMES MOFFAT (49) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you a Chief Superintendent with Central Scotland Police? - I am, sir.

How long with the police? - 28 years.

Now, you had some responsibilities to undertake in respect of renewal of the certificate of Thomas Hamilton in February, 1995? - That is correct.

Would you have various documents in front of you. These are the application itself (D91), the RL3a (D92) and what we know as D92, a separate piece of paper that accompanied the application. At some stage did you deal with this application? - I did, sir.

And if you look at the RL3a form can you tell us at what stage we see signs of your involvement? - On the second page, on the reverse side I should say, in the second last paragraph which is marked "To Chief Constable".

You have stamped it. Are these your initials on the right-hand side? - That is correct.

What forms did you have in front of you when you dealt with this? - The form RL3a, the firearms form DMT101 and the applicant's firearm certificate.

Did you also have the note that is there? - I have no recollection of that note.

What is the job you were doing at that point in processing the form? - To satisfy myself that all relevant checks had been carried out by the reporting officer, validate the details on the firearms certificates -- correction, the firearms themselves -- and either recommend or not recommend that the renewal should go ahead and then pass the relevant correspondence onwards to the firearms licensing section.

So/

So if the answers which are given to the various questions justify recommending grant when viewed against the background of how those are normally dealt with, and the paperwork looks as though it has been completed properly, is the course you would follow to recommend grant of the application? - That is correct, unless I had other reasons or other information that would cause me to take a different course of action.

Did you have any information that caused you to hesitate about recommending the grant of this application? - No sir.

Did you know Hamilton? - I knew of Hamilton but I had never had any direct contact with the gentleman.

Did you know about a police investigation into his camps, for example? - I knew that there had been a police involvement with Hamilton and that he had subsequently complained against Central Scotland Police but that was my limit of my knowledge of the man.

Did you know of complaints that were coming in about the way in which he conducted clubs in the area? - I was aware of gossip, uncorroborated statements regarding Hamilton and the boys' clubs that he was involved in.

And were you aware though that other people have actually made complaints to the Family Unit. While no action had been taken on these I think the Family Unit had taken them seriously? - At that time, no.

No cross-examination.

MAUREEN JOHNSTONE (23) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: You work in the Firearms Department of Central Scotland Police? - That is correct.

What is the title of your job? - Firearms Certificate Disposal Officer.

How long have you held that job? - About five/five years.

Who did it before you? - Maria McEwan.

Exactly the same job? - No, Maria McEwan would be called a clerical assistant.

What is the difference between the job she did and the job you do? - The difference between what Maria McEwan did and what I would do is that when the work comes to myself I would look at the paperwork, assess it as okay, process it, and put it straight through to the Deputy Chief Constable.

What did she do that was different? - She would put it up to the Chief Inspector.

Before going to the Chief Inspector was she essentially doing the same job as you did? - Yes.

Can you tell us in a little more detail what it is you do in relation to applications for grant, renewal and variation of firearm certificates? - When the grant of a certificate is received at Headquarters we would, the paperwork is sent out, we would send it out a station and get a reporting officer to go and see the person. Once the paperwork comes back to myself there would be either an RL3a or an RL3b completed, and once the RL3a or b is completed we would check the paperwork, see the person's reasons, their security, check their guns, the counter-signatory and the photograph, and once it is all complete we would then process the paperwork.

You are taking that on the face of it the answers given are adequate and are consistent with your historical records of what that person has had in the past, for example? - That is correct.

And are you saying that applies to both grant and renewal? - The only difference between grant and renewal is once we receive the grant it goes for a check to the department that the renewal does not go to. It would go to a Special Branch Department who would check.

What check would they do? - They would check/check the records to see if they had any note of that person.

Now, this is a specialised area of police activity? -
Yes.

Have Special Branch got their own Criminal Intelligence records? - I don't know the answer to that. I don't know.

You mentioned a form 3b. We have seen a few 3as in our time but what is a 3b? - It is a form for a shotgun certificate.

And serving the same purpose but in relation to a shotgun? - Yes.

Does the work you do differ when it comes to a variation? - In what way?

Do you do the same things with a variation or is it not as formal as the system you have told us about for a renewal or grant? - When we get a variation we would do as much checking as we would do on a renewal and we would ensure the form is complete and the historical paperwork we have and the application form we have tallies together.

Is there an enquiry done by an enquiry or reporting officer in relation to a variation the same as that in relation to a grant or renewal? - Yes, we would expect the officer to do the same enquiry into a variation as they would for a grant or renewal.

Is an RL3a form completed? - Yes.

Do you have at your fingertips figures for the number of certificates held by firearms and shotgun holders in the Central Region? - The exact amount?

Yes? - No.

What is the closest estimate you can give from your knowledge of the system? - About 1200 firearm certificates and about 3,000 shotgun certificates.

If/

If a renewal is being dealt with by Mr. Lynch who has explained his role to us already is it handled or is it not any differently from the ones which are being dealt with in areas he does not cover? - No.

The Central Scotland enquiry began into events on 13th March and it would be necessary to go to you, would it, to find the firearms records relating to Thomas Hamilton? - Yes, that is correct.

Did you turn them over to the investigating officers?
- Yes, that is correct.

Could you describe to us just what these records were, just in general terms, what they were and how they were stored and kept? - They were kept in a manual file which is in numerical order and consisted of all applications and all documentation we would have relevant to that certificate holder.

So that documentation would relate to past grant and renewals? - Yes, and variations.

Did the file have copies of his firearms certificates in it? - Yes.

Did it contain much in the way of ancillary information about police inquiries into Hamilton? - No.

Did it contain anything of that sort? - No.

Did it contain anything in the way of Criminal Intelligence inputs in relation to Thomas Hamilton? - No.

You may be relieved to know I am not going to go through your statement and all the documents that you had some dealings with; I simply want to ask you about a number of matters that you can help us with. One transaction that is mentioned is the private sale of the firearm to Hamilton. Can I ask you what the system is for informing the police if a private firearm owner sells his firearm to another private owner. How does that differ from the situation where the gun is sold by a dealer? - What would happen would be the person/person selling the firearm should make an entry on the Table of the person to whom he is selling the firearm to and he then has within seven days of the transaction to send by Registered or Recorded Delivery a notice to the Chief Officer of Police by whom the certificate was granted that he has sold the firearm.

Does that mean there is no difference between a private sale and a commercial sale? - No.

No difference at all? - No.

Which Police Force does the seller notify of the sale? - When he makes the entry on the certificate he should notify the Chief Officer of Police by whom the certificate was granted. He should notify the Chief Officer of Police for whom the certificate was granted.

If Mr. Hamilton goes into a shop in Glasgow and buys a gun that should be entered on his certificate? - Yes.

And the shop should send the notice to the Chief Constable of Central Scotland Police? - That is correct.

Have you had experience of sellers in a private sale sending notice in fact to their own local police rather than to Central Scotland Police? - Yes.

Is that acceptable? - No. What would happen in these circumstances is we would send a copy to the Police Office.

Could you look please at Production No. D34. It may be ME17. I am looking at a membership card for the Clyde Valley Pistol Club. Was that card on the file? - No.

So you had never seen that before? - No.

But it is a membership card of the Clyde Valley Pistol Club; is that correct? - Yes.

In the name of Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

And it has the club secretary's signature on/on it; is that right? - Yes.

Is it "McFarlane"? Is it illegible to you? - Yes.

And it covers season 1985-86; is that right? - Correct.

But that didn't come from your folder? - No.

Could you look please at FA39 now which is an application dated 15th March, 1987? - That is correct.

Is that an application for variation? - Yes.

Is one of the variations to add a 7.62 rifle? - Yes,
that is correct.

And does the form include the declaration that Hamilton already possessed 100 rounds of 7.62 ammunition? -
Yes.

Even though he didn't have the rifle? - Yes.

Is that okay? - I would have to look at the application before to see if he was allowed to purchase or to acquire a 7.62 rifle before.

Can/

3.10 p.m.

Can I take it from that answer that if you have authority to acquire a 7.62 rifle you thus have authority to acquire ammunition? - That is correct.

But that you ought not to have ammunition before you have got authority to acquire the rifle? - That is correct. You would need to apply for the rifle and then you would automatically get the ammunition or you would have to apply for the ammunition.

LORD CULLEN: Do you want to refer to an earlier document, Mr. Bonomy? D50 I think is the certificate of the year before. The 31st January. That varies referring to a 7.62 rifle and 100 rounds of 7.62 ammunition.

MR. BONOMY: I wonder if I might have a moment because I want to deal with this here and now. This has arisen once or twice, sir, in the course of the evidence.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMY: So it follows I think from what you have said that once a person has authority for the weapon and the accompanying ammunition there really is no reason in law why he should not acquire the ammunition without ever acquiring the weapon? - No.

And each time he renews his certificate and he has not acquired the weapon but his application discloses that he has ammunition, there is nothing that you would do about it? That would be acceptable? - In normal circumstances, no, we would not query it.

Now, can I ask you please to look at FA68. Does that have a D number? Is there a number on the top right-hand side? - No.

MR. BONOMY: Sir, I'm sorry I don't know the number for this.

LORD CULLEN: Do you have a date?

EXAMINATION CONTINUED: Can you confirm that is a Criminal Intelligence submission which is dated/dated the 1st September 1995? - That is correct.

It is irrelevant for our purposes in connection with the renewal but are you able to tell me whether that was on the file?
- It was not in his file until the day after the incident. I was given the criminal intelligence submission.

Who gave it to you? - Depute Chief Constable Mr. McMurdo.

And did he give you that on the 14th March? -
That is correct.

Now, this is a submission by one of the constables of Central Scotland? - Yes, that is correct.

Does it name anyone? - A police officer?

No, does the submission give you a name of any complainers or any people? - I don't understand the question?

Is there any person named in it? - Apart from Thomas Hamilton?

Yes? - Billy Caven.

LORD CULLEN: That is D12 I(iii).

MR. BONOMY: Thank you, sir.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMY: I think it records that on the 28th August 1995 a reporter contacted the office to inquire about Thomas Hamilton, is that right? - That is correct.

And that was in relation to a letter dated the 18th August which had been posted through letterboxes in Dunblane and signed by Hamilton? - Yes.

Does it go on to say "The gist of this somewhat rambling letter is basically Hamilton attempting to dispel any doubts parents may have regarding rumours he thinks are circulating about him"? - That is correct.

"Also/

"Also circulating is a hand bill advertising the re-opening of Dunblane Boys' Sports Club on Thursday, 7th September, 1995 at Dunblane High School gymnasium"? - That is correct.

"(The reporter) has spoken to Hamilton and also to local reporters who filled him in with Hamilton's background", is that right? - Yes.

And then it says "(The reporter) is no longer interested in looking into this matter any further", is that right? - Yes, that is correct.

If someone noted when your statement was taken that there were 3,420 shotgun certificate holders and 1,214 firearm certificate holders in the Central Police area, does that sound right to you? - Yes, that sounds correct.

Now, you have certain training duties for police officers? - That is correct.

What are they? - We give lectures on Module 8 to probationary constables.

On what subject do you lecture? - On firearms administration.

And can you tell us the sort of areas that covers? - We would go through the process of firearm or shotgun grant or renewal and explain to the constables the processes that they go through and also other aspects of firearms administration.

You will given a document just now which is a police document and it says "Firearms Licensing" which should have been handed over this morning some time which will have the number R38 if it has not already been numbered. Now, what is that document? - This document is a package that we give out after we have given the lectures to the probationers and this basically goes over everything that we have gone over the lecture.

Apart from yourself, who lectures in firearms? - Both myself and Norman Lynch, my colleague, give lectures on everything which is within here.

It deals with things like what is a firearm/firearm and what is a shotgun, is that right? - Yes.

It deals with a number of things like certain offences and possession by minors and so on? - That is correct.

It also I think deals with security which is something that officers do have to know about if they are carrying out these firearms inquiries, is that right? - Yes.

And it deals with cabinets and clamps, is that correct? - That is correct.

I take it all of this material is submitted in the course of the lecture? - Yes.

Do you deal at all with the question of what would amount to a good reason for a person applying for a firearm certificate? - Yes.

Can you tell us what sort of instructions an officer is given on that? - We would explain to the officer that if a person is applying for a firearm certificate, if it is for the use of sport that we would require written permission from the area of land over which they are shooting on and that would need to be from the landowner who would permit that. If the person is applying for a firearm certificate which is for target shooting we would expect a letter to be given from the Club Secretary to say that that person is a full member of a Club.

Now, if you go to the page which is headed "Firearm Certificate", do we see on that page reference to good reason and that there must be good reason for requiring each gun? - That is correct.

And does it also say what we have seen elsewhere, "A certificate for a handgun with ammunition will not be granted (except in very rare cases) unless the applicant has regular and legitimate opportunity of using the gun, for instance for target practice as a full member of a pistol Club. To obtain full membership of a Club it is normal that a six months' probationary period is served"? - That is correct.

And/

And you talk about the initial written permission from the Club, is that right? - Yes.

And it goes on to say "If the applicant is applying for Club use then the Club must be one that is approved and recognised by the Home Office"? - Yes.

Do you give any instructions to police officers on the elements of a person's character that have to be considered and some decision taken upon before the application is granted? - We would say to the officer that when they were out doing the inquiry, the question on the RL3a and RL3b is is the applicant a suitable person and if they think that he is suitable they would put a yes or a no. We would also explain to the officer that if they had any doubt at all of the person they are doing the inquiry into then they should note that on the RL3a or RL3b.

Any doubt at all? Now, what does that mean? - I mean if they found a person was of intemperate habits or they had numerous previous convictions or they did not have legitimate use for the gun or good reason.

So you are thus instructing the officers on the language used by the statute when you talk about intemperate habits but that is a bit different from simply being in some doubt about a person's character? - Well, we would say to the officer that if at all they felt that there was a reason that the person was not suitable to have a firearm, we would tell them to put it on the form.

And do you give examples of the sort of reason that would make a person unsuitable? - Yes.

Can you tell me again these examples that you gave? - We would say to the officer if they felt that the person had a drink problem or a drug problem or, as I say, if they felt they didn't have legitimate use or good reason to have a weapon, we would tell them to note that on the form. If they have local knowledge as well of the person.

BY LORD CULLEN: Is there some standing instructions for that purpose? Is there somewhere where all of this is written down in black and white?/

white? - No.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMY:

Now, did you ever speak to Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

How often was that? - I spoke to him I think that I can recall on two occasions.

What about? - The first time I spoke to him was with regard to him putting his firearm certificate in to have a condition attached for expanding ammunition. I returned the firearm certificate to him stating that he didn't need a condition to be put on because the ammunition which he held did not require the condition. The second time I spoke to him was when he had acquired a gun from a gun dealer and he was not happy with the weapon and he phoned me to inform me that he had returned the weapon to the dealer.

Do you remember where the dealer was based? - If I recall correctly it was York Guns that he had dealt with and that he had got the weapon from.

We heard evidence from someone from York Guns. Can I take it that he would be doing that because he would be expecting you to be notified of the transaction? - That is correct.

And he was effectively cancelling the transaction? - Yes, he phoned us up to say that the gun had been returned to them and that it was no longer in his possession.

Did either of these conversations give rise to any anxiety or concern on your part about him being the holder of a firearm certificate? - No.

Since you have mentioned the question of expanding ammunition in this context, can you explain a little more for us why there was a problem over that subject? - He put his certificate in and asked that he have a condition put on it for expanding ammunition. At that time we had a Scottish Office circular which showed you types of ammunition on two lists. One list had ammunition that didn't need a condition put on and the other list had the ammunition that did need a condition put/put on. When he put his certificate in for that condition to be put on, when we checked it against the list he didn't need the condition put on for expanding ammunition.

And was that a mistake or was that interim measure that had been resolved or not? - Yes, what had happened was that we had received notification that all expanding ammunition was to have a condition put on. What we did was put the expanding ammunition condition on the certificates held at the time and later there was the Scottish Office circular saying some types of ammunition did not need the condition so that is why he didn't need it.

And the condition you are talking about is a condition especially to allow a person to possess that type of ammunition? - That is correct.

There does not sound as though there was anything sinister in that from Mr. Hamilton's point of view, was there? - No.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: Can you tell us please what you did when you left school? Did you go straight into the police? - No, I worked for one of the local Councils here in one of their offices first.

And when did you join Central Scotland Police? - On the 8th August 1988.

And at that time you would have been what, about 16? - Yes.

What/

3.30 p.m.

What has been your progression within the Force? - When I started I started off in the mail room and from there went into the Accounts and Administration Department and from there on I moved into the Firearms Section.

You explained that in March you withdrew Thomas Hamilton's firearms file; you were asked to do that following this incident? - Yes.

Contained within it were all the firearm certificates going right back to the first one for 1977; is that correct? - That is correct.

And in some cases there was both the original and the copy? - That is correct.

In fact, in your statement -- it may be difficult to find because there are no page numbers on my copy of your statement - you do list at one point all the firearms certificates which were in the file and they were all there when you looked? - Yes, that is correct.

Was there any record in them of when they had been placed in the file? - There would be a date when the certificate was signed by the Deputy Chief Constable. What would happen is we would post the original and take a photocopy of the original and put it in the file on that day, so it would be round about that time.

But the original certificates which were found within the file must have been returned by Mr. Hamilton at some point? - Yes, that is correct. What happens is when Mr. Hamilton applied for a renewal he returned his original certificate along with the renewal papers.

But in the period before somebody asks for a renewal certificate they may need their certificate. You send it out to them and they send it back or.....? - What happens is when they put in renewal papers they put their original certificate in along with the application form.

And you hang on to the previous certificate?/

certificate? - Yes, correct.

You told us that the Criminal Intelligence submission which is D12Y3, that is the form relating to the reporter from the Daily Record, was given to you by Mr. McMurdo the day after the incident at the school? - That is correct.

What did Mr. McMurdo tell you to do with that document? - To place it in the file.

In the firearms file? - Yes.

Did he give you any idea why you were to do that? - No.

One of the checks that you said may have to be made on an applicant was that he had permission to shoot over land. If he was seeking a firearm for the purpose of shooting over land it has to be checked that the permission he has is given by the land owner? - Yes.

Can you explain what is the nature of the check made in these circumstances is? - We would ask the landowner or the person who has the shooting rights on the land to issue a letter to us saying that the person is being permitted to shoot over the land and it is suitable for the calibres of weapon that he is applying for.

Do you make any independent checks that person actually owns that land? - That would be for the enquiry officer to do that.

One of the examples you gave of something which might make a person unsuitable was if they had numerous previous convictions? - Yes.

Is that on the view that one or two previous convictions would be all right? - It would depend on the type of convictions.

But if a new constable attending one of your training courses asked for some examples of the sort of things that would disqualify a person you would give an example such as the one that you have given today, like intemperate habits or numerous previous convictions? - Yes.

BY/

BY LORD CULLEN: How is the constable to know when convictions become sufficient numerous or sufficiently serious? - We would ask the officer obviously to put a copy of the previous convictions in with the application and judge each conviction on its severity. We would say to the constable if there was, for instance, somebody with two or three convictions for serious assault then it may be found the person isn't suitable for a firearm or -- I mean, we would also ask the officer if somebody applied for a firearm certificate or a shotgun certificate and he had 30 or 40 convictions to look at each conviction and determine again whether or not they are suitable to have this licence.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MISS DUNLOP: How many members of staff are there in the Department? - At this moment in time?

Yes? - There is myself, my colleague Norman Lynch, we have a cadet working with us and we have a sergeant working with us.

Have you been there longer than Mr. Lynch has? - We roughly started round about the same time, 1991.

Who is the senior member of the Department? - Chief Inspector Colin Mather.

But the day-to-day running, who is in charge of the Department? - From the administration point of view?

Yes. Who oversees the job that you are doing? - Chief Inspector Colin Mather.

But he presumably has other responsibilities within the Force? - Yes.

How often do you see him? - We would go and see the Inspector first obviously if there was a problem with some of the certificates. If it was a serious problem and we were to decide somebody maybe wasn't suitable we would go to the Chief Inspector and discuss it with him.

If the Chief Inspector doesn't hear from you she assumes everything is working well? - That is correct.

CROSS/

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: How frequently are you in contact with the Inspector? - We could be in daily contact with the Inspector if need be.

In practice, does it work out that you are in daily contact with her? - Do you mean is she available daily?

No, I take it she is available daily? - Yes.

In terms of how often are you in fact in contact with her? - I would only go and see the Inspector if there was a problem with one of the applications.

So how frequently are you in contact with her? - Well, I would probably say I would have been in contact with her at least once a week anyway.

You won't know what sort of contact she then has with the Chief Inspector I take it? - No.

BY LORD CULLEN: Who are you referring to? Who is the Inspector? - Inspector Dewar.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. GIBB: The Chief Inspector I think you told us is Colin Mather? - That is correct.

We have heard some evidence at the Inquiry that if an officer finds any trace when carrying out a PNC or SCRO check he gets a print-out and that he appends that to the RL3a when submitting it up the line? - That is correct.

So if there is any trace that is something which is put up for discussion with the superior officers? - Yes.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: The role of the Inspector has been raised with you: can I take it from what you said that most applications will go straight from you to the Deputy Chief Constable? - That is correct.

Only if you see a problem do you raise it with the Inspector? - That is correct.

How/

How long has that system been in force? - Roughly since about May, 1995.

What was the system before that? - Once the paperwork was received and processed by myself all files would go to the Inspector, so I would see the Inspector on a daily basis for all renewals, variations and grants.

Why did that change? - I think it was due to the HM Inspection. It was felt we were working with the job and it would be better to go from ourselves direct to the Chief Constable.

JAMES MARSHALL (47) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: You are a Chief Inspector in Central Scotland Police? - I am.

And how long in the police? - 28 years service.

I am going to ask you about one matter before I get to the meat of your evidence. I am not having a good run with the Productions but the reference to this may be D53. It is an AD2 form dated 29th January, 1986 (FA36). You have been mentioned in dispatches in relation to this form. I think we may find your initials are shown on it? - That is correct.

Your initials appear on the handwritten note to Sergeant Binning? - Yes, that is my handwriting.

You wrote that note. Do your initials appear on the AD2a as well? - Not on the AD2a. That is Acting Chief Inspector Mill.

Now, do you remember this? - Very vaguely. It is 10 years ago.

We see it says "Apparently it is unlikely a second 9mm pistol will be granted". Was that something you were relating on behalf of someone else or was that personal knowledge or can you not remember? - I believe I had a conversation with a senior officer as Force Standing Orders say just cause/cause for purchasing or acquiring a weapon of the same calibre as you have already held on the certificate is required, and a 9mm Browning -- he already had a 9mm pistol.

Was it you who was raising this with a senior officer?
- I honestly can't say how the conversation started. I believe someone mentioned it to myself first.

What was your role in this particular application that led you to write the note at all? - To check the relevant enquiry by the enquiry officer who was the constable who did the original enquiry.

Would you also have D52 which is an RL3a form. Do we see your initials anywhere on that? - That is correct. Immediately under "Station" in the middle of the form.

The reporting officer signed it apparently on 12th January? - That is correct.

The AD2a is dated 29th January? - That is correct.

So can I take it it looks as though you instructed this additional check after the RL3a form was submitted to you? - Yes.

And the check resulted in material information about Hamilton's reasons for wanting these two additional weapons? - Yes, that is correct.

Did that pass muster with you? - It didn't go through me at that stage.

At all? - It has gone through the Acting Chief Inspector who was above myself.

How then has it got your signature on the RL3a? - Because the form originally came through myself.

Does that mean you have signed the RL3a before initiating the enquiry? - The conversation came after my signature.

If I can turn to the other matter that you/

you are able to deal with: I think you have certain responsibilities in regard to firearms officers within Central Scotland Police Force? - That is correct.

What are your responsibilities? - I have the responsibility for the training and supervision of operational firearms officers.

Are you a firearms instructor yourself? - No, I am not.

You are supervising that operation? - Yes.

Have you anything to do with the selection of suitable officers to be firearms officers? - Yes, I do.

What are your duties there? - Well, anyone who wishes to become a firearms officer is first and foremost a volunteer. They apply seeking to join the Firearms Unit of the Force. The initial paperwork is processed by myself at all stages and comes back through myself.

Who actually makes the decision that they should be given the duty of a firearms officer? - At the end of the day it is a matter for the Chief Constable and he has powers to delegate.

Who does he principally rely on for advice on an officer, as to which officers should be selected? - Once everything is completed, every one of the supervisory officers of that officer must submit comments as to the suitability of the officer for that role.

How important is your role in deciding which ones are the appropriate ones? - I have to collate all the information and make sure nothing has been missed out and highlight any matters which I feel are relevant which may preclude that officer being considered for firearms, and to maintain checks for the duration of the time the officer remains in the Firearms Unit.

You'll appreciate I am asking these questions to see if there is something to be learned from the way in which the police go about deciding who/who should bear arms in the Force? - Yes.

With a view to comparing it, I suppose, with the approach to members of the public? - Yes.

Can we look at R35 which is a questionnaire. Is that a document completed in respect of each officer who wishes to be a firearms officer? - That is correct. It is the initial form which starts off the officer as a firearms officer.

Now, it goes into a lot of personal detail on the first page including marital status, whether divorced, whether right or left handed, whether the applicant wears spectacles or contact lenses, why he wears spectacles or contact lenses, and whether he suffers from any hearing deficiency? - That is correct.

There is consent sought for eyesight and hearing tests? - That is correct.

A question about drugs, being examined for hay fever? - That is correct.

Whether he is a smoker or non-smoker? - That is correct.

Experience with the Forces or any organisation where he might have used weapons in the past? - That is correct.

Information about marksmanship skills and tactical firearms experience? - That is correct.

And then there is question 23, "Have you discussed this application with your partner, spouse or family"? - That is correct.

And then, "Have you considered that an additional strain or stress may be imposed on your domestic situation if you become involved in armed operations"? - That is correct.

There is an obvious difference between the potential duties of an armed police officer and the things that are done by marksmen as part of his leisure or sporting activity. Can you tell me what in particular it is that you have to try and find out about a person who may use firearms with these questions?/

questions? - These officers are in a fairly unique position, sir, and the use of firearms by the police is a last resort when all other avenues have failed. We are authorising officers, knowing full well that there is a distinct possibility that at some stage while they are firearms officers they may require to fire their weapon at another human being, which is totally different to licensing a gun for other people.

3.50 p.m.

But you have obviously decided that not every police officer ought to have this authority?

- That is correct.

So what is it that you are looking for in the individual police officer before he gets authority? - Maturity, stability, responding well under pressure and able to work as part of a team which is essential from the firearms point of view and that none of these things change at any time when he remains a firearms officer.

If a person gets authority to bear arms at times in the course of their police service, do you do anything to monitor the continued stability and reliability of such a person? - Yes.

How do you do that? - There are several ways. On his or her annual staff appraisal the supervisors must draw to attention any matter which might affect that officer's ability to carry on as a firearms officer so that comes through in their annual appraisal. The firearms officers themselves are seen regularly by the instructors who will comment on anything which they think is affecting that officer. The officers themselves are duty-bound to notify any matter which may affect their continuing as a firearms officer. For example, marital difficulties, financial difficulties, anything which means they are not able to concentrate 100 per cent on what they are doing and their supervisors are duty-bound to report similarly.

When the initial form is completed and you are collating information in the way you described, what other officers who have contacted the applicant do you get reports from? - From the Sergeant or if it is the Sergeant that is applying, the first one would be from an Inspector. From the local or Sub-Unit Commander who can be an Inspector or a Chief Inspector and Chief Superintendent in charge of operations. The form also goes to the Director of Human Resources to check if there is anything in that officer's personal record which would debar the officer from becoming a firearms officer or might cause concern.

What/

What gets into their personal record? - Virtually everything.

Well, can you give me examples of things that we might not readily assume would be in the personal record of a police officer? - Anything they get into trouble on outwith the police service, problems marital, financial or anything like that.

Intelligence? I mean, is this intelligence on police officers? - It is exactly what it says. The personal record is the personal history of their career as a police officer. That is exactly what it is.

Does that lead to information in the form of intelligence that other officers might actually submit in relation to a colleague or does it not work that way? - Other information officially put in by supervisors, yes, in regard to that officer. It also goes as a check to our Complaints and Discipline Department because if that officer has a complaint pending against him or her at that particular time then there is no way that they are going to be able to concentrate on firearms.

Do the officers who are asked to comment on the applicant give their account in narrative form or do they themselves answer a questionnaire? - It is part of this initial form initially and they complete the relevant section.

So we have the assessment by Sergeant at No. 26?
- That is correct.

Assessment by local Sub-Unit Commander at 27? -
That is correct.

And the Chief Superintendent's comments under that? - That is correct.

And then we have various searches carried out into his record, complaints and discipline and previous staff appraisal, is that right? - Yes.

And then your paragraph 29? - That is correct.

And/

And then the decision whether it is to be recommended or not or reviewed in due course? - That is correct.

Now, what do you expect the supervising officer to actually tell you about in these comments? - The maturity of the individual concerned and they must state whether they consider that that officer is worthy of considering recommending for training.

Is there anyone else in your Department considers the application along with you? - I consult with the firearms instructors.

What about higher up the scale than yourself? - My Chief Superintendent.

You discuss it with him? - Yes.

But is it you who actually makes the recommendation to the Chief? - No, I give them my recommendation but the decision is his delegated from the Chief Constable.

What about training thereafter for the officers? - There is considerable training which is ongoing all the time so that the officers are being seen virtually every other week so that we can see if there is any change in their make-up.

Well, how important is their being seen by other either training officers or colleagues on a range on a regular basis? - Very important.

What do you learn from that? - How they are responding under stress because the levels that they have to achieve to maintain their authorisation as marksmen are very high.

How often do they go to the range? - It depends on the skill that they possess. Training can vary up to as much as 33 days in total per year.

Do you have no minimum requirement? - There is a minimum requirement, yes.

Do you know what that is? - It is three refresher courses per year plus re-qualification/qualification which means in addition to that they must re-qualify.

At the refresher courses are you able to see how they are performing? - Yes.

Are most of the officers also marksmen for leisure or sporting purposes or is there not a pattern to that? - There is not particularly any pattern to that.

Do officers lose this authority readily? - Yes.

Or when they have got it is it easy to hold on to? - No. They must maintain standards continually.

Do you find that you regularly have to remove officers from these duties? - Bearing in mind that the officers are volunteers themselves, as soon as an officer does not want to take any further part in firearms then when they say they want to leave that is them left.

But of course they are only volunteers in the sense that they are willing. You are the person or your Chief Constable is the person with the decision to make about whether their services are retained as firearms bearing officers? - Yes.

Now, are decisions taken from time to time that a person can no longer be allowed to remain in that position? - Yes.

Can you look please at R37? Now, here we have a series of extracted material. What has that been taken from? - The Police Manual and Guidance to the Use of Firearms.

Is that a nationally-used Manual? - It is.

Is it confined to Scotland or the United Kingdom? - It is the National UK Instructions to Chief Police Officers in England and Wales with a Scottish Revision.

Now, the sections that have been extracted to form this Production relate to what? - Selection/

Section and training of firearms personnel.

Now, the first page is really concerned with monitoring the performance when on duty? - That is correct.

And there is then Chapter 2 dealing with "Minimum Standards for Authorised Firearms Officers, Selection Criteria and Safety Factors"? - That is correct.

And I think selection is Chapter 2.2? - It is.

And there are a number of factors mentioned there as important in this, including "Motivation and Interests"? - That is correct.

"Temperament, Maturity and Personality"? - That is correct.

"Relationships with Colleagues and Supervisors"? - That is correct.

And then there is a section dealing with "Quality of Initial and Refresher Training", is that correct? - That is correct.

Can I take it then that the approach which you have outlined taken by Central Scotland Police is the approach taken nationally to the selection of suitable persons to hold firearms from time to time in the course of their duty? - That is correct. These are the minimum standards to be applied.

CROSS/

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Do I understand correctly that the general idea behind the various tests and investigations which you have outlined is to assess the character and personal attributes to any applicant for the position of Firearms Officer? - That is correct.

Because it is appreciated amongst other things that a firearm is a lethal weapon? - That is correct.

So it is important that a legal weapon of that nature is not given to an unsuitable person? - Yes.

So it is not enough for the officer to demonstrate technical competence or accuracy as a marksman? He must display other appropriate personal qualities? - No, it is not enough just to display marksmanship. He or she must be the right type of person.

And do I understand correctly that having become a firearms officer that the officer submits himself to in effect ongoing continuous assessment? - He does or she does.

Amongst the checks is there a check to determine whether or not there is an relevant complaint or disciplinary record relating to the applicant? - Yes, that is part of the checks.

What if an officer is currently the subject of a complaint? Would that at least delay his application until that matter is resolved? - If he was just applying to start that would delay the application. If he was already an authorised firearms officer it would result in a temporary withdrawal of his authorisation. In other words, he would not be used operationally.

Is there a minimum period of time of police service before an officer can apply for this position? - Four years.

Supposing a review for example revealed that the applicant had been to blame in a road traffic accident. Would that be relevant? - It would be relevant if that officer was suffering personal guilt because of that road accident, yes. Yes, /

Yes, that would be relevant.

But not if he was not suffering personal guilt? - Each incident would be taken on its own merit and considered as to how it would affect the officer because we are looking to protect that officer as well.

So it is the sort of thing that might be relevant? - Yes.

Do I understand correctly from what you have been saying that having become a firearms officer, that officer may be either suspended completely or subject to interim suspension from time to time in appropriate circumstances? - Yes, that happens frequently.

A change in domestic circumstances? - That is correct.

If your wife left you or your husband left you, something of that nature? - Well, I don't think your mind is liable to be on your work and bearing in mind in these circumstances firearms are the last resort, we do not want anyone out with a firearm in these circumstances.

So a whole variety of domestic circumstances, serious illness in the family or divorce and the like? - That is correct, yes.

Presumably also any illness or medical condition relating to the officer himself or herself might be a cause for suspension? - Yes, and they must submit themselves to an annual medical.

Suppose colleagues came to the view that the officer was behaving oddly or there was some deterioration in his personal performance. Would that be relevant? - If there was any doubt at all I would have no hesitation in recommending a temporary withdrawal until we sorted out whether it was right or not.

So safety first? - Absolutely. They are in a unique position.

Is there an obligation on an authorised firearms officer to report himself any change in circumstances/circumstances which might be relevant? - There is.

Are persons such as yourself provided with guidance as to how to go about assessing applicants? - Yes, in the use of experience.

Is there, apart from the documents which we have seen, written guidance or documentation relating to the assessment of an applicant and ongoing assessment? - The main items are the minimum which were laid down in the manual. We actually have higher than that in our own force orders.

Sorry, can you tell me again what you are referring to? - The minimum is what is laid down in the manual of Guidance. Each force can apply their own level as long as it is above that minimum, again bearing in mind it is safety first all the time.

Is there any Guidance as to what might be described as contra-indicators? - That would come through their own workmates or their supervisors. Acting out of character, anything like that would be enough to raise a doubt which would result in temporary withdrawal so that an investigation can be made.

So any aggressive tendencies would be a contra-indicator? - Yes.

What about things that might be regarded as extremist views? For example, towards race or religion? - I think that would result.....I am quite positive that would result in a temporary withdrawal of authorisation until a full investigation could be made.

And in a case where somebody occasionally lost self-control or their composure? - That would result in temporary withdrawal for a full investigation. As I say, they are in a unique position and we have to make sure it is correct.

Suppose I was a police officer of five or six years' service and I joined a gun Club and became an enthusiast in firearms and indicated that I wanted to become a firearms officer principally because of my interest in firearms. What would your/your approach to that application be? - You would still be subject to the same strict procedures as anyone else wishing to become a firearms officer but the fact you are in a gun Club is not automatic.

The fact that my principal reason for wanting to become a firearms officer because of my enthusiasm for firearms would not rule against me in any way? - Yes, it would. They are asked to say in the form why they want to become a firearms officer and I would have grave doubts about anyone who said they wanted to become a firearms officer because they enjoyed using guns. Guns are still the last resort as far as I'm concerned and I would raise that as a grave doubt.

There is obviously a very considerable body of experience and expertise in firearms in persons such as yourself and others like you and firearms officers in the force but has any consideration ever been given to using these resources in the context of civilian applications? - Not from my side. It is purely police response in firearms which is the function which I serve.

Just one last matter. If I was an authorised firearms officer in the police force, would I be allowed to take my weapon home? - No.

Why not? - Because you would then require a firearms certificate, your own, and the weapons belong to the police and I think it would be rather remiss of us to allow these weapons to go outwith our care and protection and into the Community.

Even/

4.10 p.m.

Even an authorised firearms officer must hand in his weapon to the firearms armourer? - Check in and check out.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: One point: In Section 2 of the application there is a requirement for a supervisory officer to complete an assessment and among the other things he has to encompass such issues as general temperament, stability and relationship with colleagues and supervisors? - That is correct.

The only equivalent we have on the firearms application for a member of the public is the counter-signatory -- in fact, now no longer needed -- and simply one is dealing with it in a negative way, if that person knows of good reason why the applicant should not be permitted to possess a firearm. Do you think that general temperament, stability and relationship with their peers are important considerations in assessing those to hold firearms? - I think the two disciplines are very different. We are looking for a certain type of individual in the certain knowledge that they may have to use that weapon against another human being and therefore we have to be ultra-cautious about getting that right. In terms of the general public, we are not receiving firearms and firearms certificates for anything other than competitive shooting or for sporting purposes. I think the two disciplines are very much removed from each other.

Would I not be entitled to know as a member of the public that anyone who was applying for a firearms certificate had a temperament which was suitable and had personal stability and appeared to have a reasonable relationship with his or her peers? - I don't know how you would find out that information, sir.

Well, what about, for instance, on each renewal a confidential report from the secretary of any gun club this person was a member of. Would that be a way of dealing with this particular question? - It wouldn't solve the question of the person who is shooting for sporting purposes on land.

It/

It may not do that, but what about the gun club? Is there something to be said for a confidential report to show (a) that someone is using a gun for which they have authorisation and (b) that they continue to be of suitable temperament to hold a firearm?
- I don't know if the secretary of a gun club would be qualified, a qualified person to talk about someone's temperament.

I am just trying to think of something.....? - In fact, he may not see that person a lot really.

Well, if he doesn't see that person he reports that he is not in a position to assess therefore that is taking the matter.....?
- I honestly don't know that he would be in a position to do that.

No re-examination.

DOUGLAS McMURDO,
Examined by Mr. Bonomy.....	4
Cross-examined by Mr. Campbell.....	57

THURSDAY, 13th JUNE, 1996.

TWELFTH DAY.

DOUGLAS McMURDO (55), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: What is your present position? - I am presently assistant to Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary.

Is that based in Edinburgh? - It is.

How many years have you been a police officer? - I joined Dumfries and Galloway in 1959 so I have been a police officer up until April of this year.

When did you move to your current position? - 1987. September 1987.

No, your present position with the Inspectorate? - Sorry, the 1st of April.

And until then you were? - Depute Chief Constable in Central Scotland Police.

From when? - From September 1987.

As Depute Chief Constable you had delegated to you responsibility for granting firearms certificates and renewals and variations? - That is so.

And that had been the position in Central Police before your time? - Yes, it was a continuation of present practice at that time.

You also had responsibility for complaints and discipline? - That is so.

What did you have to do in respect of complaints and discipline? - It was my responsibility to decide who the investigation officer would be, decide on what action I would take in any disciplinary matter, whether I put it up in front of the Chief Constable or whether I would issue/issue a warning and so forth.

Does actual disciplinary action, if it involves resignation or something significant, require the decision of the Chief Constable? - Yes, indeed.

What are the range of decisions you yourself could make? - The range of decisions varied from deciding to warn an officer, to warn under Regulation 6(5) which is part of the Regulations or I could decide to put the case in front of the Chief Constable and if in fact I did put it in front of the Chief Constable I could also decide what level of punishments were available to the Chief Constable.

But warnings were something you could do yourself?
- Yes.

Now, that is two areas of responsibility which we have covered. As No. 2 in the Force you would have a wide range of operational responsibilities? - Yes, that is so.

And in that connection when did you first become involved in the investigation into the Dunblane tragedy? - I was one of the first senior officers there on the morning of the 13th.

Around what time? - Just shortly before 10 a.m.

Can you tell me just very briefly the structure, the management structure, of the Force below Depute Chief Constable? - Yes, we have three Chief Superintendents who carry responsibility for Crime Management Services, for Operations and for Traffic and Support Services.

And who at that time in March was in charge of Crime Management Services? - Chief Superintendent John Ogg.

And that is still his position? - It is indeed.

Territorially was the Central Force area divided into Divisions? - It was divided into six Command Units.

And/

And that is territorial Command Units? - Indeed.

Are there also Divisions which are constituted some other way? - Yes, there are three distinct areas. As I said, one is Crime Management Services and what we traditionally see as the CID and Community Safety and then we have operations which virtually covered the six territorial Command Units and then we had Traffic and Support Services which is a fairly wide Department which covered Traffic and Firearms Support and the Control Room and a fairly wide area of Support Services.

So the Divisions that each of the three Chief Superintendents are in charge of are Divisions constituted according to the work that they are in charge of? - Indeed.

The impression may have been created earlier in the Inquiry that there were two territorial Divisions as it were in Central, that there was Falkirk and there was Stirling. Now, that is a false impression, is it? - That is the historical position.

What do you mean by historical? - Once that was the case.

So when Mr. Lynch told us that he was dealing with renewals in the Falkirk area and that was for about half of the territory, is that something which is understood within the Force? - Yes. If I could explain. There used to be two Divisions, 'A' Division and 'B' Division. 'A' Division consisted of the Stirling and Clackmannan Counties and 'B' Division consisted of what was the old Falkirk District. Does that perhaps explain that?

When did these Divisions cease to exist in that form? - It is certainly two or three years ago.

So when Mr. Lynch is dealing at the moment with renewals, is he largely doing this in the area that formerly was the Falkirk Division? - Indeed.

And does that make up three of the current/current Command Units? - That is so, yes.

Now, at Dunblane Primary School on the 13th March what were your initial responsibilities? - When I first heard of the tragedy, the news was broken to me, I spoke with the Chief Constable who was in his office. I explained to him the information I had and said I would go to the locus and ascertain just what sort of incident we in fact had on our hands and he would go to the information room and set up the procedures there. So the first duty I had was to assess the situation.

What information did you have before you left the police station? - That there had been a shooting at Dunblane Primary School and it was feared that people had been killed.

When you got there and assessed this situation, what was the initial decision you had to make? - The first priority was to ensure that the injured were removed as soon as possible to hospital. That was the first priority.

What about dividing up responsibilities of the senior officers immediately below you? - Yes, that happened very soon afterwards when the senior officers started to arrive. I should explain that once having assessed the situation I put a call through to Headquarters telling them exactly what the tragedy was that we had on our hands and to put into place the Force Standing Orders for an emergency. That brings in automatically a whole host of procedures. We then decided who would in fact handle what area. Mr. Matchett was put in charge of the school and its immediate environment and all operational matters. Mr. Ogg was put in charge of the Inquiry and Mr. Moffat was put in charge of the Force Incident Room and the various other aspects that went with it.

Now, I don't want to dwell on that except to place you on the day. Did you spend very long at the school or did you go elsewhere to attend to your duties? - I spent some time at the school and we then had a visit from the Secretary of State and Under-Secretary of State and I left to go down to Headquarters to prepare a brief for the Chief Constable and also to assess the situation at Headquarters.

Were you still at the school when the Procurator-Fiscal arrived? - I was indeed.

By which time can I take it that attention had to be turned towards identification? - It had already turned to..... well, it depends on what you mean. We had already tried to identify the children before but if you mean formal identification, yes, this was discussed with the Fiscal.

And when was it you reckon you left the school to go back to the police station? - About mid-day probably.

Before 1987, was it, when you moved to Central, did you have any direct responsibility for firearms control? - I had obviously enquired into firearms certificates but if you mean did I have an overview of firearms, the answer is No.

You would have conducted the enquiries we have heard about officers carrying out in the course of applications being considered by the Force? - Indeed, and being a Sergeant and Inspector and so on, but I certainly was not in charge of a specialised department.

But you had been at the various stages of the chain of command that dealt with these enquiries? - Indeed.

In the time that you were doing the job was there any significant change in the procedure that was followed for dealing with firearms certificate applications? - No major change.

One feature we have seen as a change and you can perhaps time it for us was the introduction of a counter-signatory on the application form? - Yes, that followed the Hungerford incident when they changed the Regulations. I think it was 1988 and they brought in a counter-signatory at that time.

During your time there has been what has been described as civilianisation of the system? - That is so.

Now, did that make a significant difference to the procedure that was followed in dealing/dealing with an application? - It didn't bring any difference in the procedure other than that the police officers handled approximately half of them and the civilian employee covered the other half. It had been our intention in fact to totally civilianise it.

One thing we have seen in this Inquiry is that the involvement of the Sergeant, the Inspector, the Sub-Divisional Officer and the Chief Superintendent disappears when Mr. Lynch is involved? - Well, I'm not sure that is just absolutely accurate. Like every organisation, we flattened the structure and whereas previously you are right in saying that the document would have gone through the Sergeant, Inspector, Chief Inspector, Superintendent and possibly Chief Superintendent, we considered that to be unproductive and there was a first line supervisor and then there was a Commander who looked at it.

When you came to consider any application for a firearms certificate, did you feel that the legislation provided a sort of policy framework which meant that you should either approach it on the basis that the individual has to justify his application or on the other side that the police have to justify refusing the application? - I think it is twofold. It is not as simplistic as that. I think he has to justify his good reason but then we have got to find a reason for not granting it. Providing he provides a good reason to justify applying.

A good reason for a number of reasons we have seen as we go along in relation to handguns has tended to be simply target shooting? - And membership of a club.

And was that a requirement from your Force, that there should be club membership? - Indeed, following Home Office guidelines there.

In relation to handguns? - Indeed.

In your period in Central Scotland Police have you had any occasion to refuse an application for the grant or renewal of a firearms certificate? - On a number of occasions, yes.

Did/

Did you ever revoke any? - I did indeed.

And revocation was a power you had? - Indeed, it was.

These decisions would be subject to the possibility of appeal? - That is so.

Can you tell the Inquiry to whom an appeal would be taken? - To the Sheriff.

Were any of your decisions ever subject to an appeal?
- Yes.

Were any appeals successful? - No.

Can you remember how many appeals were taken against any of your decisions? - There were numerous appeals against my decisions. Some of them ceased at the time of applying for Legal Aid. Some went on in an exchange of letters between solicitors but in all the time I have only actually had to appear in front of the Sheriff once although I have had one put off because of this Inquiry so I would probably have had two.

Do you remember how many roughly you either refused or revoked? - I think I can only go back to 1991. That is as far as I can go back through the records. 34 people, which involves something like 45 shotgun and firearms certificates because some were duplicate holders.

These were either refused or revoked? - Indeed.

In any of these cases, and I appreciate we are relying largely on recollection, in any of these cases were grounds for refusal or revocation used that related to complaints about the individual which were never substantiated by a Court decision or by a clear admission of guilt of something that would be a criminal offence? - Certainly there were a number of cases which I felt so seriously about at the time that I didn't wait on the Court decision and I made my decision on reading the police report but these were cases which I felt were solid, that the grounds were there and indeed I had a fear that the person might do something with the firearm/firearm.

Yes, I can understand that you might take action before there is a conviction for obvious reasons? - Yes.

But what I am asking you is were there cases in a sense like the present one where you have complaints, they are over a period of time, there looks to be some substance to them, they don't directly relate to the use of a firearm, they don't result in a conviction and they don't contain material which was likely to result in a conviction in something serious. Now, are there any cases like that? - I can't think of any.

I know I am asking you this at an early stage but if I can put it in these simple terms; were any of the cases comparable to Hamilton's case? - None.

Now, I will ask you that question again at the end when we have come through the circumstances of his case. Is there a system for ensuring that pending the determination of proceedings a person's firearms certificate can be suspended rather than revoked? - Can you repeat that one please?

Yes, is there a system for suspending a person's firearms certificate pending the outcome of proceedings that he might be involved in? - Not officially.

Is there an unofficial way? - Sometimes you would speak to a person and say "Look, I am not happy with this, there is a date fixed for trial and would you mind handing your firearms over to a firearms dealer until this matter is clarified".

And have people co-operated with that? - Yes, quite often it was a short-term thing. Perhaps there was a breakdown in a marriage or something of that nature and real aggravation between the couple and you might take it from him in an attempt to be sensible but it would be by agreement.

Did/

10.20 a.m.

Did you have examples where people refused? - I did not.

So people co-operated when you made the suggestion?
- They were usually responsible people and if you put it to them in a way which they understood it was usually accepted.

You could, of course, revoke such a firearm certificate; that would be within your power? - Indeed.

BY LORD CULLEN: Would that suspension, informal suspension, involve handing over the firearms or merely doing something about the certificate? - No. The certificate was given to us and the firearm to a firearms dealer.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:
When did you first encounter or learn of the existence of Thomas Hamilton? - This is in July 1988. He was running a summer camp in Inchmoan Island and that's when he first came to my attention.

Can you remember how he came to your attention? - Yes. There was a camp started on the 3rd of July of that year, and one of the lads who had been camping on the island spoke to his mother on his return and expressed his dissatisfaction with the camp. The mother decided to return to Balmaha the following Saturday, that would be the 17th, to speak to other parents of other children as they arrived for the second week's camping, because this was a camp that was continuing to, I think until the 14th of August.

How was it you found out about all of this? - It was reported to me eventually I think probably by Mr. Hamilton complaining about our, as he saw it, intrusion into something which was none of our business.

Did you know about it before there was any correspondence started? - Not really I don't think.

Can I take it then that other officers within/within your Force were dealing with it before you ever came to know about it? - Oh, indeed.

Was one of these officers Inspector Mill? - Yes, Mike Mill.

And was he in fact in a position where he tried to resolve what appeared to be a complaint emerging from Hamilton? - That's right. I knew about it later, pretty soon after the initial action by the police, and in fact I asked Mike to give me a report on it in order that I could answer various letters that were coming in.

I wonder if you would look at a Production DCD6 which is K(iii)D5. Do you recognise that document? - Yes.

What is it? - This is from Mr. Hamilton writing to me about the camp. I should explain that he had spoken to various officers to try and ascertain why it was that after 55 camps and having been complimented on them in the past they suddenly began to intervene as he saw it for no good reason. This starts to explain various parts about how he ran the club and about complaints and the answers to them.

It is actually written to Mr. Oliver, the Chief Constable? - That is so.

Could you read this handwritten letter please? - "I trust that you are keeping well. I am upset by events which took place this summer. My aim is to find ways to avoid any similar problems at future camps. For your information, I have enclosed brief extracts of a report of events of which I have passed to my solicitors for advice. This letter is not a complaint. I am reluctant to make a formal complaint as we have always had such good relations with the police in the past. Can you help in any way?" He copies it to Mike Mills at Dunblane Police Office.

The report on the camps runs to how many pages? - Seven and a small bit at the back -- seven and a bit pages.

Does it include a list of complaints that appear to have been made about his camp and his answer/answer to these complaints? - That is so. These were some of the things that had been highlighted by the boys and this was him answering various complaints.

These are things like some boys not enjoying the camp, not being allowed to return home early, not being allowed to phone home? - Yes.

Not liking the food? - Yes.

Not being allowed to know the time? - Yes.

Parents not being allowed to visit? - Yes.

Not being allowed to wear long trousers most of the time? - Yes.

Having to gather firewood? - Yes.

And doing exercises in which they had to keep their tummies in? - Yes.

Now, there is no reference there at all to any complaint that he was hitting boys? - He saw that as chastisement. This was something which came over once or twice, that it was not assault, it was simply acting on behalf of the parents to chastise a child for misbehaving.

It does go on a bit and becomes extremely repetitive; is that fair comment? - Yes.

I think in the weeks following that letter there were a series of letters sent to Inspector Mill; is that right? - Yes.

All centring on the actions of two of the officers at the camp. Who were these officers? - George Gunn and -- I can't recall the other.....

Could a name have been Sloan? - Yes.

I can't remember the order but Constable Sloan? - Yes.

I think you can confirm that most of his letters bore the heading "Disruption of summer camp"?/

camp"? - Yes.

I wonder if you could look please at a document DCD16 which is D12 in the volume. This is a letter dated 19th October replying to the one you have just looked at and perhaps taking account of intervening events; is that right? - Yes.

It is written to Thomas Hamilton and it is signed by you?
- Yes.

So you are replying on behalf of the Chief Constable? -
That is so.

Could you just read that letter please? - "I refer to your letter of 28th September, 1988 to the Chief Constable, together with subsequent correspondence to Inspector Mill, Dunblane, relative to the above. I understand that the matter has now been thoroughly discussed by yourself and Inspector Mill and there is little that I can add to his explanation. I have examined the statements provided to Strathclyde Police by police officers of this Force after their visit to the camp. These contain a straightforward report of the prevailing circumstances and conditions, as observed by them, at the time of their visit. They refute any suggestion that their observations were other than a fair assessment of the situation as viewed by them and indeed there is nothing in their statements to indicate that their actions were improper or in any way biased. You will appreciate that I cannot comment on the subsequent action taken by officers of Strathclyde Police but I am advised that this action was as a result of the overall information available to them and not based merely on observations made by officers of this Force".

Can I stop you there for the moment. The action that he is referring to there is that the Strathclyde Police contacted parents of children at the camp and gave them the opportunity to come and see if they wished to take the children away? - Yes.

And that decision depended to some extent on information that Gunn and Sloan are provided to Strathclyde Police. They had been at the camp? - They had indeed.

Could/

Could you carry on reading the letter please? - "As you are aware the action taken on this occasion was not initiated by the police but by concerned parents of boys returning from the camp. In such circumstances the police have no option and indeed would be failing in their duty if they did not make enquiries into any such allegations. As the location of this particular instance was within the jurisdiction of Strathclyde Police, the matter was passed over to them for investigation. The course of enquiries thereafter was as directed by them and without pre-empting anything that they might say, it would be fair to comment that these enquiries would be pursued until the matter was satisfactorily clarified. The report from officers of this Force would form a part of that investigation, viewed in the light of other available information. I understand your concern relative to similar disruptions occurring in the future and I can only emphasise that where allegations are made to the police then an investigation has to be undertaken. I cannot therefore give you any positive assurances in this respect other than that any action taken by the police will only be when circumstances dictate a necessity for it".

You got a reply to that letter. Look at DCD18 which is D13 in the folder. Can you confirm this is dated 24th October from Hamilton to the Chief Constable and the last paragraph says, "Regardless of the disagreement which still exists over your officers' report I thank you for your help and please accept my personal assurance that should circumstances dictate a necessity for the police to visit the summer camps in future, your officers may always be assured of my fullest co-operation"? - Indeed.

Looks as though he is not satisfied but accepts what you have said? - You would have thought so.

Look at DCD19 which is D14, the same date; is that right? - Yes.

Another one also to the Chief Constable? - Yes.

Handwritten this time? - Yes.

He/

He has learned from Inspector Mill that Constable Gunn lives in Dunblane and is a Scout leader? - Yes.

Was that information accurate? - No, it wasn't.

He lived in Dunblane; that was accurate? - He was not a Scout leader.

In the last paragraph did he say, "In view of the long history of resentment shown to our group by many adult members of the Dunblane Scouts, I do not feel that it is right or proper to have a police officer who lives in Dunblane and is a Scout leader to visit our summer camp for the purpose of making a fair and impartial report"? - Yes.

It looks as if that letter must have been written after the one we have just looked at? - Yes.

Do you remember if they came in together or not -- or is that a silly question? - I honestly couldn't say.

I think there was more correspondence keeping the issue going, mentioning police observations on the camp, and he did enlist the assistance of his Member of Parliament simply to forward correspondence to you? - Yes, he wrote to Michael Forsyth.

And he was concerned I think about the inadequacy of the police complaints procedure? - That is so.

Could you look at DCD25 which is D20. This is your reply to another letter that was in fact keeping the issue going; is that right? - That is correct.

I think this is a letter extending to four pages from you to Mr. Hamilton's Member of Parliament giving him a full explanation of events? - That is so.

I think that outlines the involvement of the police and the difficulty that you saw in giving any assurance that the police would not interfere in future/future camps? - I didn't think I could give that assurance.

And did you make it clear that if there was a complaint raised about the welfare of a child that would have to be investigated?
- I did.

Now, /

10.40 a.m.

Now, look please at DCD27, which is D21, and is that Hamilton's formal complaint to the Chief Constable about the actions of Duncan and Gunn? - That is so.

As a result of that you, as the Complaints & Discipline Officer, would have to take action? - Yes I did.

What action did you take? - Appointed an investigating officer.

Who was that? - Jim Keenan.

I think the correspondence continued and Hamilton continued to query points that you had tried to explain, through his Member of Parliament? - That is so.

And indeed these points became personal in the sense that there was criticism of the professionalism of yourself and the police force? - Indeed.

Do you remember any of the descriptions he gave of the police officers who had been involved? - I think he referred to them as "Village idiots" or something of that nature.

Generally did you reply to his correspondence? - If he raised something new I replied. If he got bogged down in something and I didn't think there was a reply necessary, then I didn't.

Now, could you look at FA41, and I am afraid this is in a different D file. It is D58L.

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, to put this in a chronological context it is necessary to pass between the K and L folders.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:
Now, that is a firearms certificate? - That is so.

You have signed it? - Yes.

And in February 1989 you were dealing with/with one aspect of that certificate? - It was a variation. The number had been wrongly noted as "FND", I believe, or is it "FNO" -- the "O" and "D" had been misread, I understand.

So on the 9th February we see an entry relating to that mistake; is that right? - That is so.

And I think a letter was sent to Hamilton apologising for that; is that correct? - I can't recall.

I may be wrong. Sorry, it is my mistake. Could you have DCD41?

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, this is in the bundle of additional material which was given to you this morning and distributed.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:
This is the letter I am thinking of. It is 10th February, from you to Thomas Hamilton. It is replying to some of the things he has been saying, and I think at the end you ask him to apologise -- would you just read the last paragraph? - "I would be grateful if you would reconsider the contents of your letter of 8th February 1989 to Mr. Forsyth and make a wholesome apology for the remarks which impinge on my professional ability and integrity; that without prejudice to any further action I may take on this matter".

Now, if you have still got the firearm certificate in front of you, we may see on the back of it you also dealt with the renewal? - Yes, that is right. That was 14th February I signed that.

And that was you formally renewing it for three years?
- Indeed.

Now, if you had simply been in charge of firearms you may have got reports from other officers alerting you to things that were going on with your force involving a man like Hamilton, but you happened to be in charge of both Discipline and Firearms, so you knew all that was going on? - Indeed.

And you knew what the allegations were against/against him? - Yes.

Can you briefly summarise for us your understanding at that stage of the allegations against him? - Yes. The majority were clearly non-criminal -- not being able to phone home, send postcards, food perhaps not the variety it ought to have been, conditions at the camp. The only one which possibly could have been criminal was the chastisement of children could have been a simple assault.

Was that a significant factor in deciding whether or not to query his renewal? - On a certain view of the circumstances of the case, I didn't consider it serious.

At that stage you would have to consider the various provisions which would allow you, on the basis of his behaviour or character, to refuse to renew? - Indeed.

As far as he is concerned, these could be summarised too. Could you summarise too as to the terms of the statute which would have allowed you to consider refusing on the basis of his character or behaviour? - Yes. If he was intemperate, if he was insane, or if he was in any other way considered to be dangerous to the public safety or to the peace.

That is not quite.....? - Unsound mind, then.

Unsound mind is one, yes. There is a third category in relation to character which you haven't touched on there. You have dealt with the unsound mind now? - In any other way unfitted to hold a firearm without danger to public safety or peace.

Well, is it not just "Otherwise unfit to be entrusted with a firearm"? - Yes.

Which is really not directly related, certainly in the terminology of the statute, to the public safety or peace? - That is right.

But you didn't think there was a serious issue here over the renewal of his firearm certificate?/

certificate? - I did not.

When you dealt with this renewal, apart from your knowledge of this complaint about him at the camp, what other material was placed in front of you to consider? - None.

Well, you must have had the application, you must have had his old certificate? - I had this certificate.

You had that one, so you had his application, certificate -- RL3a? - No.

Would that not be in front of you? - No.

Why not? - It was only brought to my attention if there was anything in it worth reading -- in other words, if there was any detrimental comment made upon it.

Well, that is certainly not the impression we have been given by other witnesses so far. We, I think, could fairly have formed the impression on the evidence so far that the RL3a form always accompanied that certificate for your signature? - No.

What about the firearms file? - No.

Now, could you look please at DCD42, which is D26. This time the letter is addressed to you? - Yes.

Dated 20th February 1989? - 14th February it is, sir.

Sorry, I should have asked you to have DCD45. Now, in that letter there is a number of points made, but could you again read the last paragraph? - "I am planning the 1989 summer camp to be held on the north-east point of Inchmurrin Island from 2nd to 30th July, and although we will be in Strathclyde Region you and your officers will be welcome to visit the camp at any time and enjoy our hospitality".

And sign of the apology you were looking for? - No.

Did/

Did that come in any of the other letters? - Not that I am aware of.

But you got the invitation to visit the camp? - Yes.

"And enjoy our hospitality"? - Indeed.

Did you ever go to the camp? - No.

Now, would you look at DCD48, which I think is D28. Bearing in mind that Mr. Keenan is on the job of investigating Hamilton's complaint, do we get another complaint? - Well, he is questioning how the Inquiry is being carried out.

"The only question I was asked by Inspector Keenan was whether or not I would like a cup of coffee" -- is that his comment - the second paragraph? - Yes.

So he is complaining about the way in which Keenan is carrying out the investigation into his complaint? - Yes.

Would you look now please at DCD54, which I think is D32, dated 5th May 1989? - Yes.

Just read that one out please -- the heading included? - "Disruption of summer camp. I refer to the photograph of members of the Dunblane Brotherhood of Scouts & Police which appeared in the 'Stirling Observer' on the 3rd May 1989".

Now, does the expression "Brotherhood of Scouts & Police" appear elsewhere in the correspondence? - I am not sure if it is in exactly that terms, but certainly their relationship is mentioned.

And the word "brotherhood" appears in relation to the Scouts, I think? - Indeed.

Now, could you read the second paragraph? - "Please confirm that one of the Cub Scout leaders in the photograph is the wife of the officer appointed to investigate my complaint, Inspector Keenan".

So we are now into an area of obsession, / obsession, paranoia, that you come to learn more about as time passes? - I wouldn't put it in those terms.

You don't think that he was obsessed and paranoid about the way in which from time to time he saw a relationship between the Scouts and the Police? - He certainly had a resentment against the Scouts and us.

I take it you refused to get into a debate over this particular point? - Indeed.

Now, would you look please at DCD56, which is D34. Just read the second paragraph? - "Why, therefore, are members of the Brotherhood of Dunblane Scouts permitted to be photographed with police officers, and for publication on 3rd May 1989 in the 'Stirling Observer' newspaper".

And the next one? - "This photograph and other photographs in the local press show to me the blatant bias and favour that the Central Scotland Police has for the Brotherhood".

You would describe that as a further example of resentment? - Indeed.

Perhaps you would also look at DCD58, which is D36, where perhaps you would read to us -- in fact, just read us the second paragraph. Again can you confirm it is headed "Disruption of Summer Camp"? - Indeed.

It is dated 12th May 1989? - That is so.

Right. Read please the second paragraph? - "I understand that many Members of Parliament are concerned about police officers being involved with, or being members of, the Brotherhood of the Masons, and indeed some Members of Parliament have also expressed concern about members of the police being involved in any 'brotherhood' organisations. Why, therefore, do you not also tell those Members of Parliament that their similar concerns -- 'would be an unwarranted intrusion of personal liberty', and what about the 'unwarranted intrusion of the personal liberty' of our summer campers?"

So/

So "brotherhood" does feature a lot in his correspondence? - Indeed.

Now, would you look please at DCD 275 which is D80 in L. This is an AD2a -- or is it? Now, that is a memorandum with accompanying papers from Inspector Nimmo to the Chief Superintendent of A Division? - That is so.

Now, this was drawn to your attention, was it, at the time? - Yes. Mr. Gunn drew it to my attention.

And we see his handwriting, addressed to the DCC on it? - Yes indeed.

Now, this was a report of activity of Hamilton on 20th May 1989? - That is so.

Can you just read the memo please? - "About 11.25 a.m. on 20th May 1989 Mrs. Doreen Hagger, 57 Auldhill Crescent, Linlithgow, telephoned Police Headquarters' Control Room to report that the above-named had possession of firearms which he had taken to 44 Acredales, Linlithgow, occupied by the Smith family. I was aware that Inspector Keenan, Stirling, was investigating a complaint against the police made by Hamilton, in which Mrs. Hagger was a witness. I contacted Sergeant McGrane, Bathgate, and requested he visit the Smiths' and obtain statement regarding Mrs. Hagger's allegation.

The attached statements and photographs have now been received and I forward them for your information and attention".

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, I should have directed Mr. McMurdo not to go into details of names there, and I hope the privacy of those people will be respected, as it has been all throughout this Inquiry.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: I think accompanying that were photographs and statements from the witnesses? - Indeed.

Did you have to decide on any action to be taken in regard to this complaint? - Yes.

What did you do? - I read through all the/

the information which was available and came to a conclusion.

And what was your conclusion? - My conclusion was that this was a visit by Hamilton to a home at the instigation of the people there. He showed them guns, he allowed the children to hold them. He apparently had been informative in his instruction on the safe handling of weapons, and what was important was that there was no ammunition there, and indeed at no time were the family in any way distressed or concerned by Hamilton's visit.

So does that mean "No action"? - Yes.

Is it appropriate for a person with weapons such as these ones, one of which I think was an automatic rifle? - Yes.

Or a semi-automatic rifle -- was it appropriate for such a person to be carrying the weapon round the country to demonstrate it to other people, particularly children? - As I have said, the statements are plain there. They had been talking about weapons. They showed an interest. He took them there. He was instructional in how to use them and how safely to handle them. Whether it was a good idea to do that or not, you know, is open to question, but it seemed to be absolutely an innocent instruction.

It/

11 a.m.

It is not an offence to do that, is it? - Well, if it was an offence it would not have been my problem because it was not in my police area but I didn't consider it was. The possession clearly by a person under 14 is an offence but I didn't consider that he relinquished the weapons to the child. He was there all the time and still in possession in all senses of the word.

With hindsight, is it behaviour that warrants a warning? - Yes, with hindsight I could possibly have sent him a warning. I think you are right in that.

Now, did that report find its way on to the firearms file?
- I have no idea. I gave it back to Chief Superintendent Gunn after noting it.

I take it it remained in your head anyway? - Indeed.

You will see that that particular one has been recovered from the Complaints and Discipline file I think. There will be a backing indicating where it came from? - Yes, I see that.

BY LORD CULLEN: Can you say in what capacity that was being handed to you? I mean, what role were you fulfilling at the time? - Well, clearly you can see by the note from Chief Superintendent Gunn he says "This may be a harmless display but it leaves a lot to be desired". I think he wanted to make sure that I was aware of it. He himself didn't show any great concern about it but he felt in my position as Depute Chief Constable I ought to be aware of this particular incident.

Was that having regard to your responsibility or matters of firearms? - Indeed, and also..... well, clearly in firearms and of course there was an association across from the person who had reported it to Complaints. I think it was Mrs. Haggart who was also a witness in the Inchmoan business so there was a connection there.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: I think you also learned around that time that Lothian Regional Council were suspending a let Mr. Hamilton had/had at Linlithgow Academy? - That is so.

And they sought information from you, is that right? - That is correct.

Did you actually speak on the phone to someone from Lothian Region? - Yes, I looked through the file to see if there was a letter. I can't recall ever writing a letter but I do recall speaking on the telephone.

Can you remember the gist of the information you gave Lothian Region? - Yes, I told them what the facts were.

Can you give me the gist of what you said to them? - Yes, I gave them a balanced view on it, that Hamilton was a person with no criminal record whatever. He had been running children's clubs, boys' clubs, for many many years. However, in 1988 there had been a complaint against him that had been investigated by Strathclyde Police and that I still had not received at that time the outcome of that investigation.

Did you receive a visit or a call from the Ombudsman? - I did indeed.

Was that a visit? - Yes.

What was he interested in? - He was interested in what I had said to Lothian Regional Council Education Authority.

And did you get the impression the Ombudsman was investigating actions by Lothian Region? - Indeed.

When you got Inspector Keenan's report into his investigation, what did you do? - I did two things. Firstly, with regard to the complaint itself I read through it thoroughly and came to the conclusion that the officers had acted quite properly. I also did a second thing in that in the report from Inspector Keenan he suggested to me that perhaps there were statements within that report that had not been available to the Procurator-Fiscal in Dumbarton as a result of the Strathclyde enquiry, so I telephoned the Depute Chief Constable there and made him aware of that and sent the file to him in order/order that the Fiscal would have the full information available to him.

Now, Mr. Keenan gave his evidence that his understanding was the Fiscal re-considered the complaint against Hamilton on the light of these additional statements? - Yes.

Do you know whether in fact that happened? - Yes, I got a letter back. I got a phone call and then it was confirmed by letter.

And that is a letter from Strathclyde Police I think? - No, both.

You got a letter from the Fiscal? - I got a letter from Mr. McMaster who was signing on behalf of the Depute Chief Constable and attached to it was a letter from the Fiscal.

I will get these documents and show them to you when they are available. There may be evidence later in the Inquiry that the papers did go back to the Fiscal in Dumbarton but he didn't consider that it was for him to look again at this complaint and the papers simply made their way to the Fiscal in Paisley to deal with the complaint against your officers. Now, you don't know whether or not that is what happened, do you? - I can't answer for what the Fiscal Service did.

I will give you the letters as soon as they come down and you can see if you recognise the correspondence. In any event, your intention was that the Procurator-Fiscal at Dumbarton should look again at the case against Hamilton because there were additional statements? - I simply wanted to make the Fiscal have all the available information before him in order to ensure that he took a decision on full information.

But Hamilton still had not been charged with anything?
- That is so.

And no one had drafted any charges against him that were being proposed to the Fiscal? - None at all.

Now, what was Hamilton's reaction to your decision that the complaint against your officers/officers was unsubstantiated? - None too pleased.

So did you begin to get more correspondence? -
Indeed.

And eventually did you offer to meet him? - I did.

And did you meet him? - I did.

Do you remember the date of the meeting? - Oh, would that be about October, somewhere about 1989, is that right?

Look at DCD87 which is D49. That is a letter dated 31st October 1989 from Hamilton to you? - Yes.

Can you read the heading and the letter please? - "Disruption of 1988 Summer Camp. Thank you very much for giving me the interview with you today which was a general discussion and exchange of views and present-day attitudes and opinions relating to children's camps. Although we may not be in absolute agreement, I feel that our communication today can only be helpful to both parties in bringing about a better understanding of our positions. Moreover, I am obliged to have had the opportunity of replying to you personally concerning various criticisms of the camp which, until today, were secret. I am very impressed with most respects of your work in investigating the concerns and with your grasp and understanding of the matters involved. Since my efforts at achieving better communication with Central Scotland Police have now been achieved, I am happy to consider the entire matter closed and I thank you for your co-operation".

What was the meeting like? - It was a fairly lengthy meeting but it was very courteously conducted.

Had you met him before? - I hadn't, no.

What did you make of him? - I can't say I really warmed to the chap at all but we had a very amicable discussion. He had different views from me on how to run camps. That was obvious.
He seemed/seemed to be taken aback when I suggested there could be improvements made.

Well, did he accept it? - His difficulty was that he tried to run camps that people who were perhaps out of work or whatever could afford and one of the great difficulties he had was that he said he wanted to reach families who might otherwise not have a holiday and some of my suggestions would mean that the camp would go up-market and the people he was trying to help would not be able to afford it.

Did he question your qualifications to criticise his camps at all? - Indeed he did.

How did he go about that? - Well, I think that this was with regard to the physical chastisement of children. I told him that there was always a danger that there would be a complaint from parents if he used physical chastisement and I was making that point as a policeman and, more importantly, as a parent. I really did not put myself up as an expert in running camps. I am sure he knew far more about it than I did. I was just trying to make sure, as he was, that there would be no more complaints and disruption to his camps and the sullyng of his good name.

Did the apparent lull in the barrage of resentment last long? - Indeed it did not.

What happened? - I am trying to remember just how it started up again but he clearly thought about some of the things I had said and he took issue with some of them.

I think there was some correspondence in November or just after Christmas in fact of 1989. There was a whole barrage of correspondence about the failure of the police to investigate the complaints properly? - Yes.

And ultimately he took it further? - Indeed he did.

Look please at DCD97 which is D56. This is a letter dated 5th January addressed to whom? - Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary.

Can/

Can you read the second last paragraph of the letter?

- "Following a meeting with the Deputy Chief Constable of Central Scotland Police on the 30th October 1989, I have given the matter further consideration and with regard to my suspicions and the information available to me, I can no longer accept the statements by the Deputy Chief that my complaints cannot be substantiated. I have always been a strong supporter of the police in their often difficult and thankless work and my sole objective in pursuing this matter is simply to try to prevent a recurrence of such blatant police incompetence at future summer camps for the protection of our members. Each summer camp can cater for about 80 boys on a rota basis and involves a total cost of around £5,000".

That was a formal complaint against you and your investigation and indeed Inspector Keenan's investigation of the complaint he had made? - Indeed.

Now, that was investigated by the Chief Inspector's staff? - That is so.

I think by looking at the paperwork? - Yes, the Superintendent came across and I think he spent about two days going through the report and looked at both the investigation and at the decision I had taken.

So Hamilton was told I presume that there was no substance in that complaint? - That is so. I didn't see the report but I got a letter from Mr. Sim saying that he was happy with the way matters had been investigated and with my decision.

In early 1990 do you remember a series of letters complaining about another employee of the police called McKellar? - Yes.

What was all that about? - Jim McKellar had put his police extension number on notepaper of the Scout Movement and this he objected to.

And that went on for some time, did it? - Not really.

Did he not raise the matter in a number of/

of letters? - I can't recall that.

What was your feeling about that correspondence? - I wrote back and said it was none of his business really.

Yes, but what did you think was the objective of this particular line of complaint? - He had real animosity towards the Scout Movement and any excuse to write about the Scout Movement he would do so.

LORD CULLEN: I think as the evidence of this witness is going to be rather protracted it might be useful if we had a short break in the course of this morning so I intend to break now for 10 minutes.

After/

11.30 a.m.

After a short adjournment.

Coming back to the report of the Procurator-Fiscal on which I said I would try to find some documents, could you have in front of you DCD273 which is D2K, Mr. Keenan's report of the investigation. In there there are some loose documents including a letter from Mr. McMaster to you which may be the letter you were referring to? - There should in fact be another letter there.

Well, have you got the one of the 24th October? - Yes.

And there is one with it? - I haven't got it unless it is further down the file.

There should be one dated 17th October from the Regional Procurator-Fiscal to Chief Inspector Brockie? - Yes.

If you go back to the first one, I think it says, "I refer to your report dated 22nd May in the above regard". Could you read the rest of it please? - "I refer to your report dated 22nd May in the above regard and have to advise you that the circumstances of this complaint was reported to (1) Mr. James Cargill, Procurator-Fiscal, Dumbarton, who advised that no criminal proceedings would be taken in respect of Thomas W. Hamilton, and (2) Mr. Robert Lees, Regional Procurator-Fiscal at Paisley, who decided that no proceedings should be taken against the police officers concerned. A copy of the letter indicating Mr. Lees' decision is attached for your information".

We have a letter dated 17th of October from Mr. Lees. Mr. Lees was considering the complaint against the police? - Yes.

That is in fact the letter that is being referred to in Mr. McMaster's letter to you? - Yes.

He has also said that the Fiscal at Dumbarton was considering the complaints against Hamilton? - Yes.

But he doesn't refer to a letter. There doesn't/doesn't appear to be a letter there in the file? - My understanding was that there was no proceedings. That was the indication to me.

But you have not got a Fiscal's letter to that effect; that's what I'm trying to establish? - It does say "Mr. James Cargill, Procurator-Fiscal, Dumbarton, has advised no criminal proceedings be taken against Thomas Watt Hamilton".

That is a letter from the police to you? - Yes.

In the chronology we have got to July 1990 in the correspondence with Mr. McKellar. Could you now look at the correspondence a bit later that year and DCD125 which is D76K. This is a letter of 8th June, 1990 to you from Mr. Hamilton. This time it is headed "Arbitrary disruption of 1988 summer camp"? - Indeed.

Could you read that letter please? - "I read in the Stirling Observer about the Chief Constable being refused £1200 by the Regional Council for a trip to Korea. I wholeheartedly agree with the Council particularly as many children from deprived homes can no longer afford to attend their summer camps due to the circumstances arising to our group due to the arbitrary condemnation of our 1988 summer camp by Central Scotland Police. A change in tax laws in recent years means that people such as salesmen etc. who have the personal use of their company cars have to pay tax for this perk. I am therefore writing to ask you if the Chief Constable pays for any formal use of 'Tango One' to Central Regional Council and Her Majesty's Inspector of Taxes".

Now, would it be fair to say that he is looking for -- taking the account of McKellar in this -- he is looking for any opportunity to get at the police? - There is no doubt that he never missed an opportunity to write if something was upsetting him.

Then in early 1991 he tried to re-open the issue of the summer camp with the then Chief Constable Mr. Wilson? - Yes. This occurred because we had a change of Chief Constable and he started to reiterate the same points to the new Chief/

Chief Constable. I had words with the Chief Constable and suggested in fact the ground had been covered.

Then we get to July 1991 and something happened at another camp? - That is so.

How did you first learn about that? - I think probably through the morning briefing by the Detective Superintendent.

Could you look at DCD148 which is D94. Is this the briefing you are talking about? - No, I had briefings prior to this. This was an up-date.

This was a report by DCI Holden? - I told him I wanted to know the ins and outs of it.

At the conclusion it says, "The inquiry is ongoing at present but I fully expect a police report containing charges of assault, Section 12 of the Children and Young Person's Act, lewd and lib. practices against Hamilton will be submitted to the Procurator-Fiscal"?
- Indeed.

So this is a bit after you first learned of the investigation? - Yes.

Was one of the issues at that stage the propriety of photographs that Hamilton had been taking? - Yes, he had been taking photographs since 1988.

In relation to the 1991 camp what was the concern? - The concern was were the photographs he was taking in any way indecent.

I think one of the issues you did get involved in was the question of whether equipment removed by the police should be returned to him? - Yes.

Can you remember what equipment was removed by the police? - Cameras, I understand.

Who was the reporting officer in relation to that investigation? - Paul Hughes who was then a D/S.

I think it was he who made the report to the/the Procurator-Fiscal in which there were charges drafted? - Yes.

And the decision was to take no proceedings on those?
- Yes.

Before that decision was taken I think there was a memo sent by Hughes up the line which eventually got to you? - The decision was known but it was not on paper.

Look at FA207 which is D82 in L. This is the memo which ultimately came to you? - Yes.

And the view of Hughes that consideration should be given to revoking the firearms certificate appeared to be endorsed by Holden? - In a sort of a way.

He agreed with Hughes' appraisal of Hamilton; is that right? - Yes.

Then said, "Do we have any latitude for progress in respect of the revocation of his certificate"? - Yes.

Mr. Miller, on the other hand, said while he appreciate Hughes' concern he could not recommend the action proposed for obvious reasons. Hamilton hasn't been convicted of a crime and it seems that the Procurator-Fiscal is likely to No Pro the recently reported case? - Yes.

What was the total information available to you when you got that? - I knew all about the case.

You marked it "No action", it is stamped on the front? - Yes.

What was the date of that? - Yes. The date stamp shows 10th but that clearly can't be right. My recollection is that was brought up by the Detective Superintendent in the morning and perhaps the date stamp hadn't been changed.

Was this discussed the day it comes in? - Yes.

And a decision taken that day? - Yes.

Who/

Who did you discuss this with before deciding on no action? - Discussed it with the Detective Superintendent.

Anyone else? - I knew all about this case. It had been discussed between myself and the Detective Chief Inspector, between myself and the Detective Superintendent, and I had reports. I had read the reports and I knew all about the case.

Did you discuss it with the Detective Sergeant? - No, I did not.

You and Hughes never actually discussed this? - No.

His suggestion? - No.

Did you discuss it with Mr. Holden? - Yes.

Out of that it had appeared that Holden supported Hughes? - Yes.

In your time with Central Scotland Police did you get any other memos from officers suggesting revocation which you did not accept? - Invariably reports come in such as this, sometimes a constable who suggests revocation, and sometimes it would be agreed by the senior officer and sometimes it was decided the other way. Sometimes they both agreed. I mean, that decision was mine.

Here we have got a sergeant and was it Chief Inspector Holden at the time? - Yes.

Agreeing and the Detective Superintendent disagreeing? - Well, that is not quite so. You have got the view of the Detective Sergeant, you have got Holden's views asking a question, and you have got the Superintendent who disagrees.

Did you consider there was any basis at all for doubt even about whether Hamilton should be allowed to continue to hold a firearm certificate? - I don't take a report like that lightly.

So/

11.45 a.m.

So what was your assessment of how close we had got to deciding to revoke his certificate? - Well, frankly there was no evidence in this report whatever -- I agree with the first paragraph, he was a controversial person, but a controversial person is not someone that you take their licence away.

There is evidence of assault, though? - Beg your pardon?

There is evidence of assault further down the document in the second bottom paragraph on the first page? - That is quite misleading.

Why is that? - It says "It emerged from inquiries that he, during the course of the first week of camp, seemed to become increasingly stressed and had difficulty managing the group. It was during one such moment that he became extremely angry and assaulted one of the boys. This particular child was in fact assaulted three times by Hamilton during the first few days of the holiday, and was eventually removed by his parents". You would be led to believe if you read that that this was an unprovoked assault by Hamilton on a child, when in fact it was chastisement for bullying other children, kicking and punching, throwing a stone at a child and hitting him on the head. If you didn't know the circumstances you would be led to believe that this was an unprovoked assault.

So would your view be that in 1991 it was acceptable practice for someone in Hamilton's position to slap a boy on the face? - I had already told Hamilton -- you know that -- back in 1989 that I disagreed with that, and it would be liable to lead to further complaints.

Well, I will ask you that question again. What is your view that in 1991 it was acceptable practice for someone in Hamilton's position to slap a boy on the face? - No.

So it was an assault? - It is not for me to decide whether it was an assault. It was for the Procurator-Fiscal. We simply report the fact.

You are not going to tell me when a police/police officer charges someone with assault he hasn't made a decision he thinks it is an assault? - He didn't charge him with assault.

No, not in this case, but surely police officers regularly charge people with assault? - Yes.

And it is their job to make up their mind whether they think there is evidence of assault? - Indeed.

Well, in this case do you think there was evidence of assault? - The evidence was for the Procurator-Fiscal. What I am saying to you is it wasn't an unprovoked attack.

I am not arguing with you about that. What I am suggesting to you is that there was evidence of assault? - It is a grey area.

Now, the investigation by Hughes resulted in a complaint against him? - It did indeed.

And would you look please at DCD163, which is D117. Is that the complaint? - Yes.

And was that submitted after Hamilton had for some time been shadow-boxing or pussy-footing around, and making complaints that weren't formal complaints? - He said he had no faith in the complaints procedure, and he tried to go through his MP.

And he was told by his MP that the way to deal with this was to make a formal complaint to the Chief Constable? - Yes.

But there had been a series of letters again, which could be construed as complaints, but where he had carefully stressed he wasn't making a formal complaint? - Yes.

And I think there was also correspondence around this time where he got in touch with parents, trying to defend himself and attack the police. Look please at DCD167, which is D121. Now, is that an example of a letter being circulated to parents, copied to Mr. Wilson, among others?/

others? - Yes, indeed.

And it is a lengthy letter justifying his position? - Yes.

Was it around this time that he also tried to involve the Scottish Office in a significant way in his complaints? - Yes.

And tried to -- or wrote to them in a sort of informal complaining way about the way in which the police were handling his complaint? - Yes.

As a result of which you had to regularly update the Scottish Office on what was happening? - Yes, that is right.

Now, could you look please at DCD174, which is D133? Is this one of the letters in which you had to explain things to the Scottish Office? - Yes.

Now, the second paragraph I think may sum up the state of play on the 1988 camp. Could you read that paragraph please? - "If I may refer to the points in your letter I would make it clear that the inquiry into your correspondent's complaint about the 1988 camp is concluded, has been independently assessed by a staff officer to HMCIC and will not be reopened by me. Every point repetitively and tediously dragged up by Mr. Hamilton has been examined and re-examined, explained and re-explained, to the point where I am seriously considering referring the matter to the Legal Department of the police authority. I am in no doubt that his ever more offensive statements are becoming actionable and I would refer in particular to his circular to parents dated 20th December 1991 and his letter to Mr. Forsyth of 9th January".

I think you also go on to explain the extent to which the 1989 complaint against the police was investigated? - Yes.

Now, could you go to the second page and read the second paragraph there, please? - "References to the statements being noted in pencil but signed in ink are a regular feature of the complainer's letters. His inference can only be that/that they were subsequently altered, although he avoids saying so directly. I have personally examined the notebooks concerned and I'm totally and unreservedly satisfied that they have not been tampered with in any way, not that I expect this inconvenient fact to alter Hamilton's opinion in the slightest".

Would you read the next paragraph also? - "It is true that many police officers do give up some free time to helping with voluntary youth organisations, including Scouts, as do bus drivers, engineers, airline pilots and thousands of other public-spirited people who do not find it necessary to make a charge for their time. How Hamilton can draw a sinister inference from such a healthy and worthwhile pastime is beyond my comprehension".

And I think also on this page read the next paragraph please? - "For Mr. Hamilton to see his tiny local organisation as a serious rival to the Scouting movement indicates a certain lack of perspective. The Scout movement is a world wide organisation of longstanding with about 16 million members. As far as I am aware its reputation as a bona fide organisation has never been in doubt, and it has never been suggested to me by anyone other than Mr. Hamilton that an officer's credibility or professionalism could be in any way affected by membership of the Scout movement".

Now, if you go to the third page, and can you read the first full paragraph to the end, that is "For the Record", to the end of the letter? - "For the Record, my principal administrative officer at this Headquarters holds the distinguished position of Area Commissioner with Forth Valley Scouts; at least three serving officers are Cub/Scout leaders; my personal clerical assistant and her husband are actively engaged in the organisation, and the wives of several officers contribute to Scout work in numerous ways. In common with most right-minded people I am proud of the connection between Central Scotland Police and all the Youth Organisations which which we work. Only a bitter and petty-minded individual like Thomas Hamilton could pervert such a relationship into something sleazy and dishonourable and imagine some undercurrent of corruption".

Just/

Just read the whole letter please? - "I am sorry about the length of this letter but, as a comparatively recent beneficiary of Mr. Hamilton's vindictive correspondence, you should be aware of the background to almost four years of ever more irrational outpourings. Both I and two Chief Constables have tried very hard to resolve the matter but, as always when trying to reason with a zealot, each time a point appears to have been settled he reintroduces it in another guise, adjusts the facts selectively to suit his ends, and it all begins again. Now that he has managed to involve yourself and the SOHHD into the debate I can see the correspondence continuing indefinitely and this, quite frankly, I am not prepared to do".

Now, Mr. McMurdo, you on that page describe Hamilton using a number of adjectives. You describe him as a bitter and petty-minded individual who perverts a relationship into something sleazy and dishonourable. That is the first description I think. You talk about vindictive correspondence and you mention ever more irrational outpourings. And then finally you talk about the difficulty in trying to reason with a zealot. Are we by this time talking about someone who is obsessive and paranoid? - I think by this time you have got somebody who has lost his cool. This is three and a half years after I started writing letters. The letter was designed for one purpose and one purpose only, to signal to the Scottish Office that I was not prepared to enter into any other correspondence. I admit I lost my cool on this occasion, but I think I was entitled to call him a zealot. I mean, if somebody continuously goes on about the same things time and time again -- and I have got to admit I did lose my cool when I wrote that letter.

I won't be surprised if you find no one disagreeing with your view at that stage. What I think my concern was is whether, when you take that along with the advice you had got from other officers in relation to his behaviour at Milarrochy Bay, that perhaps it was time to revisit the Firearms File? - No. We are talking here about something totally different. We are talking about his persistent follow-up of complaints. I thought he was taking absurd complaints, but it was something he was entitled to do. That is the society we live in -- and probably it is all the better/better for it. But he can approach his MP, go to the Scottish Office, go to HMCIC. These are all there to ensure people in my position do their job properly. But it does really eventually -- you get somewhat fed up with it, and I certainly lost my cool on this occasion. But there is another factor to it too, if I may add. It was about the same time that one of the officers expressed his feelings about the letters as well.

That is Mr. Gunn? - Yes.

And he really was wanting some legal advice I think about his own position? - That is right.

And you indeed consulted the Legal Department of the Regional Council? - That is so.

And I think the advice was "Better left alone"? - Yes.

Which no doubt you now agree was probably sensible advice, looking at the isolated circumstances of Gunn? - Yes.

I think there was also a complaint made around this time to the Chief Executive of the Regional Council about the involvement of a man called Keilloh, who was the social worker who accompanied Hughes when he made his investigation? - That is so.

So we get a quite separate complaint that the Chief Executive of the Region has to deal with? - It is because of the joint working between social work and police.

Can you tell us about that system? - Yes. In the Family Unit the police and social workers do joint investigations. So when the complaint at Milarrochy Bay was undertaken it was by a joint team of social workers and police.

BY LORD CULLEN: How long has that arrangement been in existence? - 1988, January 1988.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:
Now, could you look please at another AD2a, which is DCD277, and which is the result of the investigation by/by Ferguson. That is D4K, which is the large report.

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, it is D4K.

LORD CULLEN: It is D154; is that right -- it is in D4, but I think it is D154; is that right?

MR. BONOMOY: It might be.

LORD CULLEN: I have a helpful list beside me which seems to tell me that is the answer to the question. Is that a letter of 6th May?

MR. BONOMOY: If your lordship would just give me a moment. I had one marked, and it is not this one.

It is D4 I want to look at, and I am not so sure it does have another number. It is the large report, and the very first thing in D4 -- it could be D276, DCD276.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:
Now, is that a report to you by Chief Inspector Ferguson? - No.
What I have got here is a Report to the Procurator-Fiscal by Mr. Allan.

Have you now got the right one? - Yes.

What is the number of the back of it so we are clear?
- DCD277. On the label is says "DCD277".

All right. It is good to be right occasionally. I think the first item there is a memo from Ferguson to you dated the 21st April 1992? - It is not the first thing I have got, but I could turn to it?

Right? - I think I have got it now. It is the 21st April 1992.

That is it. And is this a report to you following an investigation that Ferguson carried out? - That is so.

And he was the person you appointed to investigate the complaint against Hughes? - That is so.

It/

It is simply a number of the points on this that I want to look at. Mr. Ferguson is referring to how he conducts his enquiry and I think in the last paragraph on the first page he says "About 10 a.m. on Tuesday, 17th December 1991 I called once again on Mr. Hamilton at his home. The visit lasted approximately three hours, again the main topic being his 1988 boys' camp. However, on this occasion and with great difficulty, I obtained a form of statement from Mr. Hamilton", is that right? - Yes.

And if you go to the next page and go to the middle, can you read the paragraph beginning "I have completed thirty years....."? - I have completed thirty years' police service, a long number of these as a CID officer. Throughout these years I have interviewed many hardened criminals, many aggressive people, many reluctant witnesses, many complainers against the police but I can honestly say the interviews with Mr. Hamilton were the most exasperating of my career".

I think if you go to the third page there is reference to just how wide this enquiry went because in the fourth paragraph Mr. Ferguson reports that he interviewed the Procurator-Fiscal Depute at Stirling and the Procurator-Fiscal's precognition agent at Dunfermline? - Yes.

So it was a wide-ranging enquiry looking for evidence of improper conduct by Hughes? - Yes.

And I think there were two expressions of concerns by parents about the enquiry, is that right? - Yes.

But neither of these was of any real significance in the context of the enquiry? - I don't think so.

The mother of the child assaulted however was concerned about the fact that there were to be no criminal proceedings? - That is so.

Now, again Hamilton was unhappy I think with the result of this investigation? - That is correct.

And/

And your decision was what? - Unsubstantiated.

And you intimated that to him? - Yes.

And I think there then followed a flood of correspondence to a Member of Parliament, the Scottish Office and so on? - Yes.

I think you again offered to see him? - Yes.

Did he accept your offer this time? - He declined.

Now, while all this has been going on his firearms certificate was due for renewal again in February 1992? - Yes.

Did you play any part in that renewal? - In 1992 it was renewed by Mr. Adamson. I was on holiday at the time.

So you just don't get involved at all? - Not when I am on holiday, no.

No, but you were not involved at any stage in the renewal? - No.

What rank was Adamson? - He was a Chief Superintendent then and he was at Headquarters and when I was on holiday he was Acting Depute Chief Constable during my absence.

Is it normal for him to deal with firearms renewals in that capacity? - Yes.

Or would that not normally have gone up the way rather than down the way? - It could have gone either way.

The Chief Constable could have dealt with it? - Yes.

If the form that you indicated was followed then Adamson would only have a certificate stuck in front of him and he would be expected to sign it unless someone brought something adverse to his attention? - Unless there was something adverse, yes.

Would/

Would he know the history of Hamilton? - Yes.

Were you consulted at all in relation to that particular renewal? - No.

Now, would you look please at DCD203 which is DI74? It is a letter dated 6th April from Hamilton to the Chief Constable? - Yes.

Do you recognise this one? - Yes.

What was this about? - Apparently Mr. Hamilton had witnessed a child being chastised and had reported it to the police because the child was crying. The police had gone to his house but he was out and we had attended to the incident. We spoke to the parents. We found in fact the child was having a tantrum and the mother had left it to come out of it on its own in time and the officers were satisfied there was no child abuse.

What did you make of this complaint? - He is quite entitled to bring it to our attention in fact. The actions of a good citizen really.

Well, read the first sentence, though, of his view of the complaint? - "On Thursday 1st April 1993 I reported by telephone to your Force an incident of a young boy being forcefully and repeatedly hit on the head by a woman who frog-marched the boy into a house at 5 Muir....." will I miss out the details?

Yes please. So that is his view of it and your officers established that it is someone dealing with a child having a tantrum? - Yes.

And I think he is really comparing the approach in that case or trying to compare it with the police approach to himself? - Indeed.

And if you go down to the last paragraph. Would you read from "In my own view...."? - "In my own view, when I opted out of the Scout authority 20 years ago and set up what they considered to be a rival group, I was told by a senior official that if I continued they would see that I failed and it was said that they have influence throughout the country. What we are seeing/seeing in 1988 and 1991 is the Scouts using their influence within Central Scotland Police to undermine my group as they did in 1983 using a gullible Central Regional Council. Indeed, it took two years for Central Regional Council to fully understand that they had been used as a vehicle to further the aims of the local Scouts by removing our competition."

I think I ought to take this short from you; I think in September of 1993 you were aware of complaints about Hamilton's behaviour at other clubs where he was requiring children to dress in swimming trunks? - And shorts, yes.

And nothing on their upper body and was taking photographs? - That is so.

And a number of these complaints came to the attention of the police? - Yes.

Now, can we take it that in so far as there has been evidence here of these complaints coming to the notice of the police, you would know about them? - Yes.

One of the things that occurred during that period was an attempt by your Child Protection Unit to get a warrant from the Fiscal to search Mr. Hamilton's house principally for photographs? - Yes.

Which may be of an indecent nature? - Yes.

And what was the decision of the Fiscal on that one? - I don't think we got one.

Well, you got a decision but you didn't get a warrant? - Yes.

Were you aware of an incident in the summer of 1992 where children were running away overnight from the camp at Dunblane High School? - As I recall that, they were got wandering about about 10 o'clock in the evening or something.

Yes? - That is when he held the camp actually within the school.

You/

You were aware of that incident? - Yes, indeed.

So we then come to February of 1995 when his firearms certificate is up for renewal? - Yes.

Can you now have DI06L which should be an RL3a form for the 1995 renewal? Now, can I take it that you didn't actually have that form in front of you when you dealt with the renewal in 1995? - You are quite correct.

What did you have? - I had the certificate.

Can you have FA64 please which is D101? Was that sent to you for signing or handed to you? - Yes.

Which? - I would get it in my basket.

And if it came with nothing else you would sign it? - Yes.

So when it came to dealing with this application in 1995, was it just a piece of paper amongst a number of other pieces of paper that you just more or less automatically signed? - I don't sign anything automatically.

So what attention did you give to the certificate before signing it? - I read it through and signed it.

Is there anything really on reading this that is of significance to the issues which arise on renewal of a firearms certificate? Is there anything in there that will tell you whether he is of unsound mind or otherwise unfit to hold a licence? - I should explain to you actually the way the system works. If there was anything at all being said about any individual who applies for a firearms certificate or a shotgun certificate, anything at all which was said other than the straightforward application, it was brought to my attention. Now, as you see if you look at the form RL3a, my staff officer has checked it through and he has passed it. There is nothing there that I could have read which would have made one whit of a difference to my decision. There is no point in me looking/looking at files which tell you absolutely nothing. If they have nothing on them of a detrimental nature it is pointless me reading them. If there is something, no matter how little, of a detrimental nature on it, the file is brought to my attention.

Any chance that the name of the individual would not mean anything to you when you were dealing with the renewal and you had no other material in front of you? - You are joking. Thomas Watt Hamilton I think was pretty well known to me by that time.

So can you just take us through the exercise you undertook when this came out of your basket? - Yes. I knew there was obviously no new information had been raised.

Since when? - Well, there was obviously nothing further had been reported by the officers who made enquiry or the senior officers or it would have been on my desk.

So what did you do? How did you apply your mind to it? - Yes, I thought about it but there was absolutely nothing that I knew about Thomas Hamilton that would prevent me from signing the certificate and I doubt if there would be many people who would know any more about him than I did.

Now, I recognise we don't live in a police state, thank goodness, and that you do have to have reasons to make decisions which remove a certificate or an entitlement a person has? - Yes.

But by February 1995 had things not got to such a pitch with Hamilton that you ought to have been collating all the information available on him, studying it again and reconsidering it before you made your decision? - What we had against Hamilton at that time was a report that went to the Fiscal at Dumbarton for child chastisement which was no pro'd. We had one at Milarrochy Bay for chastisement which was no pro'd. We had a memo from Paul Hughes which was a gut feeling and no more. The man had made complaints against the police but he was quite entitled to make those complaints. There was nothing there to suggest that this man would in any way be dangerous with a firearm.

There/

There were a number of complaints made by parents about what they perceived as inappropriate conduct towards their children? - They all centred round the wearing of shorts and a bare top. There was not one single photograph that I have seen, and I have seen hundreds upon hundreds of them, which were in any way indecent. Things almost had reached a witch-hunt by that time. Rumours were circulating about the town but there was nothing, nothing at all, in all the photographs we looked at. There was not one we found that was in any way indecent.

We know that on the police intelligence system, if it produced all the material which was on it, there was a card, an index card, which classified him as "homo" and then the letters "indch" which is suspected indecency towards children. So it went that far so far as police intelligence was concerned, did it not? - Intelligence I am not proud of. Intelligence does not add up to much, I am afraid.

What do you mean not proud of? - So many things I doubt if they should have been there.

It is better you have them than you don't have them because you can always consider them and discard them, can you not? - Yes, you are supposed to weed them from time to time.

But there was a feeling, wasn't there, that there was something about Hamilton's attitude to children which was very peculiar? - There was always a debate of whether this was a man who had a genuine interest in children or whether there was something unwholesome about it but it was never ever proved that his interest in children was in fact unwholesome.

But he appeared to have an attitude which was quite different from what might be described as the normal attitude in the late 1980s and early 1990s, for example the way children should dress when they are carrying out exercise? - In shorts and bare tops.

And in swimming trunks? - Swimming trunks. Well, you have seen the correspondence on it. He said when they were on the island they were better/better in swimming trunks rather than long trousers and when he did allow one to wear long trousers he came back with his legs all sore from wet clothing.

But he knew the attitude of parents to that sort of thing. He would never see reason from anyone, either you or the parents? - But there was nothing..... I mean, he used to say he took videos and photographs because everybody who was into gymnastics took such things so that they could improve performance. I think it went beyond that but there was absolutely nothing in those photographs which you could in any way say was indecent. Indeed, the Procurator-Fiscal at Stirling told us not to bring any more back because there was nothing he could do about him.

There is something very odd, isn't there, about somebody who has 80 hours plus of video recordings of the activities of children in his home? - He was proud to send them out to parents and he sent them photographs as well.

Have you seen any parents come forward and demonstrate a framed photograph they are keeping of a child? - I haven't seen a framed photograph, no.

Has any parent come forward with photographs Hamilton gave them? - Some parents in their statements said that they saw nothing wrong with the photographs and kept them still.

Did the enquiry reveal parents who had actually received photographs and kept them? - Yes, indeed.

Did that happen to a significant degree or were these isolated cases? - He sent photographs to me as well to show me what he was doing at the camp.

That is to justify himself, which is not what I am looking at, and we know he sent videos and photographs to parents to try to justify the type of activities he was engaging in but is there any evidence he actually produced photographs fairly professionally so that parents could have them and put them in a frame and stick them on the wall? - Yes.

Did/

12.25 p.m.

Did he do that frequently? - Yes.

Have we got any as exhibits in this case? - No idea.

One of the features of the firearms certificate history is changes of weapons. Indeed, his final position approved by the police was to enable him to have two 9mm pistols and two .352 revolvers? - Yes.

I think that is quite a common feature of a firearms certificate in Central and perhaps elsewhere? - Yes, where it involves shooting at clubs. It is less common, in fact, fairly rare, for sporting.

Was the obtaining of two firearms of the same calibre fairly easy? - You had to show good reason for having them but, I mean, the guidelines were wide open. If the person said he took part in certain disciplines and he needed the guns for that -- it is even shown in the guidelines if he requires it as a back-up weapon, so the reasons for the police turning it down were not too strong really where it was used in clubs.

Now, the Inquiry has revealed certain incidents which may or may not be true -- the evidence may or may not be true, certain incidents which you were not aware of. I'd like to ask you just a little about these. We have heard a little about Hamilton showing guns to other people, particularly children, from time to time when he had been transporting his guns, doing nothing untoward and there is no sign of ammunition with the guns except perhaps on one occasion. Do any of these incidents or would any of these incidents have put a different complexion on renewing his certificate? - I would certainly have wanted to know all about it. You don't seem to be telling me anything that caused anybody any alarm. I would have wanted reports on them and look at them in detail.

You have dealt with the one which was reported to you where a gun was taken to a house? - Yes.

These/

These other incidents are similar but perhaps a bit worse in the sense that a youngster on his own in company with Hamilton may be shown a gun? - Yes.

Which he happened to be carrying with him, and he may have been perfectly entitled to carry with him. Would that sort of situation have been viewed differently by you from the incident in Linlithgow? - Yes.

Would it have merited any action if it had been known to you? - I would need to know the full circumstances of it, but clearly if he started showing guns around to various people I would be very concerned about that.

If the incident involving Mrs. Haggart -- possibly two incidents involving Mrs. Haggart -- where at least on one occasion a gun may have been pointed in her direction by Hamilton: if you had known about that would that have affected your judgement on his firearms renewal? - Yes.

To what extent? - Well, you are saying to me he pointed a gun at someone.

Yes, if that is true? - Well, if it is true. If it had been true.....

And if it had been reported to the police. You have got two hypotheses in there? - Yes, two "ifs".

What effect might that have had on your decision? - If it had happened, and if it was true, I would have viewed it very seriously indeed.

Would that have meant revocation? - Indeed.

Would you have needed really to know much more? - I think it is quite sufficient if somebody points a gun at somebody in a threatening manner. Surely to goodness that is not behaviour acceptable from a firearms certificate holder.

And if the incident involving James Gillespie we have heard had occurred and the empty gun was aimed at him and the trigger pulled, would that/that have an effect on the question of renewal? - Yes, totally irresponsible.

What would have happened in the light of that if you had known about it? - Well, I would have revoked it.

One other incident that we have heard of I want to ask you about to complete the picture involved the surrendering of a weapon following changes in legislation after 1988? - Yes, I recall that.

Hamilton had one of these rifles which became illegal? - Became a prohibited weapon.

He wouldn't get authority to keep it from the Secretary of State; it would be pointless asking? - Indeed.

And he would have been entitled to compensation for surrendering it? - Yes.

There was a compensation scheme arose out of that change in the legislation? - Yes.

And there was correspondence again in the form of complaints about police action when he tried to surrender that weapon? - Yes.

Do you remember the circumstances well enough just to summarise that for us? - Yes. First of all he volunteered to make a present to the police which I declined and brought to his attention the "buy-in" scheme. We put out an order saying that people were to be advised to come to see the Firearms Section between nine and five because they were the people who knew best about how to handle these things. Mr. Hamilton came in on a Saturday and he handed a bag with the weapon, as I understand it, with ammunition and with clips, ammunition clips, over to the bar officer. He accepted them and sent them up to the Firearms Department on the Monday when they returned. They looked through the bag and found that they contained not only a firearm but it was accompanied by about 800 rounds of ammunition plus the clips for putting the ammunition in. Now, the "buy-in" scheme applied only to weapons, it did not apply to accessories or to ammunition, so an officer in the Firearms Department decided/decided to send the bag back together with a slip asking Mr. Hamilton to relinquish his ownership of the ammunition and the accessories. An officer was appointed to go to Mr. Hamilton's house to hand over the bag and get a relinquishment for the rest if that is what Mr. Hamilton wanted to do about it. It was a young officer who went to the door, asked if he was speaking to Mr. Hamilton, he was told that he was, so he asked him, gave him the bag back and asked him to sign the relinquishment form for the ammunition and other accessories and this he did. Unfortunately the Mr. Hamilton he was speaking to was in fact Tom Hamilton's father and the officer clearly hadn't established it was the right Mr. Hamilton. Following on from that, Mr. Hamilton asked about the compensation for the ammunition and the accessories. Now, it was then discovered that in fact he had not signed the relinquishment form and in fact it was his father. By this time -- in fact it was the day before -- the ammunition etc. had been destroyed. So Mr. Hamilton I think on this occasion was quite right in pointing out that we had made a mistake.

You accepted it was a mistake? - Indeed.

Was there anything about Hamilton's undertaking his responsibilities under the firearms certificate that you were aware of which caused you any concern about whether he should retain his certificate? - No.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: In the course of my cross-examination I will ask you to look at a number of additional documents. The first one I would like you to look at please is D60K which is also DHNCIC/F140. D60K is to be found in file K3. I think we know that amongst other things Mr. Hamilton complained about the investigation into him carried out by Constables Gunn and Duncan? - Yes.

And that matter then became the subject of an investigation by one of your staff officers, by Mr. Moulson? - No, that was HNCIC's staff officer.

The HNCIC officer reported to Mr. Sim? - That is correct.

Who/

Who was then the Inspector of Constabulary? - He was.

I think we know this is a copy of Mr. Moulson's report to Mr. Sim dated 20th February, 1990 and one might expect also it was copied to yourself? - No, it wasn't in fact.

Sorry.....? - It wasn't copied to me.

It appears to suggest on the top page -- I may be wrong -- a copy was sent to DCC Central Scotland? - In fact I got a letter from Mr. Sim which indicated that he was satisfied with my handling of the complaint, Mr. Keenan's inquiry, but I didn't in fact get this whole report. I got a letter to Mr. Hamilton and a letter to me.

You didn't ask to see the report? - I didn't, no. I was happy he had looked at it and he was satisfied with the way it had been handled.

Well, that explains that. Perhaps we can put that document to one side for a moment. Still on that file, the immediately preceding document, D59K, which is also DCD100, that is a letter to Mr. Sim from yourself dated 12th January, 1990? - Yes.

You have obviously been asked to provide Mr. Sim with some kind of summary of events; is that right? - Yes.

And making reference in the front page to events with which we are now reasonably familiar? - Yes.

And turning the page, you indicate that Mr. Hamilton refused to accept your decision on the matter, and then there is reference to a meeting you have talked about this morning. Mr. Hamilton wrote to you declaring himself happy to consider the entire matter closed. Could you read from the second paragraph on that page to the end of the letter please? - "Unfortunately this desirable state of affairs was short-lived and since 14th November I have received a number of increasingly bitter letters going over all the old ground again as if our meeting had never taken place. I have now stopped answering these. As an aside you may care to note that Mr. Hamilton invariably copies his correspondence/correspondence to Michael Forsyth, M.P., and has recently complained to the Ombudsman, Mr. Peggie, about the refusal of Lothian Regional Council Education Committee to renew his long-standing let of school premises. This decision too, he alleges, is as a result of the police inquiry about which he originally complained to me. As you will see this is a long and complicated matter which is not helped by Mr. Hamilton's prejudices. I look forward to discussing it fully with you on your next visit to this Headquarters".

What did you mean by your reference to Mr. Hamilton's prejudices? - He is -- anything which involved the Scout movement, he has a great deal of animosity between himself and the Scout movement and that would be referred to as "prejudices".

I/

12.45 p.m.

I don't quite understand that, because this is a letter about the investigation into complaints against police officers who were concerned about certain camps? - Yes, but you recall what I said this morning, that the Scout movement came into all that, because he would complain that the actual inquiry officer would be influenced because of the fact that his wife was involved in the Scout movement, and so on. I mean, he was certainly biased in that regard.

So who was Mr. Hamilton prejudiced against? - I think it was the local Scout movement.

What about the local police force? - Well, I am sure he didn't have a high regard for us either, at times.

Was it your view that he had a prejudice against the local police force? - He certainly was no great friend, that is for sure.

No great friend? Now, just at this stage of events we know that Mr. Hamilton was complaining about almost everything, it would appear to be the case -- would you agree? - He was certainly a persistent complainer.

And you refer here to prejudice. At this stage was there any question arising in your mind as to his fitness as a person to possess a firearm certificate? - No. I mean, you speak as though this was quite unusual, for people to write and complaint and follow things up and write to HM Inspector of Constabulary. I mean, it is not unusual at all. Mr. Hamilton isn't the only one who follows things right through to the bitter end. It is not unusual to have persistent complainers who will complain to the police, in the first instance; if they are not satisfied, go to their MP; if they are not satisfied they will write to HMCIC. That is not an unusual case. I am sure that happens in every force.

And is it usual for these people to possess a firearm certificate? - I have no idea. I mean, there is nothing wrong with people doing that./

that. It is their rights.

But just looking at the matter generally it becomes plain that you regarded Mr. Hamilton's behaviour as excessive in this regard? - Yes I did.

Can I ask you to turn now, still in the same volume, to document 68K, and also 69. 68 is DCD115 and 69 is DCD69? - The one I have got, 68K, is that the first one?

Yes, a letter from Mr. Hamilton to Ian Oliver of the 7th April? - Yes.

And that is making a formal complaint to the Chief Constable at that time that the Central Scotland Police telephone number is given as a telephone number on the letterhead of the Forth Valley Area Scout Association? - That is right.

And he says "Although I am not fully aware of the involvement and relationship between Central Scotland Police and the Scout Association it seems to me that police time and telephones should not be used to conduct the business of the Scout Association"? - That is correct.

You reply to Mr. Hamilton in the next letter in the bundle, D69K? - Yes.

And you point out that many public spirited individuals give up a great deal of their leisure time to youth and community work, and so on? - Yes.

Basically you are defending Mr. McKellar's position, and I suspect most people would understand why you did that. Could you read the second-last paragraph of the letter? - "The Chief Constable has no objections to Mr. McKellar's action, which he is sure would receive the approval of right-minded members of the public, who would appreciate its wider benefits to the Community at large".

This is a letter of 9th April 1990. It is a clear inference from that comment that your view was that no right-minded member of the public would make the complaint which Mr. Hamilton had made?/

made? - Mr. Hamilton made this complaint because of the bitterness that existed between himself and the Scout movement, but all other members of the Community I think would have accepted it quite reasonably, and that is really what I am saying.

Can I ask for a yes or no answer if it is possible? Please just say if it isn't. Isn't it a fair inference from this sentence in your letter that you took the view that no right-minded member of the public would make Mr. Hamilton's complaint? - I think I explained fully what I meant by that remark.

Is the answer to my question yes or not? - I don't think there is a "Yes" or "No" to it.

BY LORD CULLEN: But you must have a view, I think, on this matter? - Yes. I have stated my view quite clearly. I think because Mr. Hamilton -- there was considerable bitterness between Mr. Hamilton and the Scout movement -- one can understand how he felt about it, but for normal members of the Community where his animosity did not exist, they would have seen this as perfectly reasonable.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. CAMPBELL: So your view at the time was that Mr. Hamilton was not a normal member of the Community? - No. He had a grudge against the Scout movement. That was clear. And because of that he was looking for any reason to find fault. What I am saying to you is generally speaking -- he was saying members of the public would object to this. I didn't think they would. And what I am saying is "Okay, he objected to it, but I would have thought most people would have found it quite acceptable".

Is it in your view appropriate to arm a member of the community who holds a grudge against the Scout Association? - There was simply bad feeling between him and the Scout movement. I don't think that is a reason at all for taking away a firearm certificate.

Well, forgive me, some may take the view if a man has a grudge that may raise a question as to whether he should be given lawful possession of firearms. You take a different view, do you? - We/

We know there has been a history of animosity between Mr. Hamilton and the Scout movement for many many years about something that happened away in the past. I don't think it was any more than that.

Turning all through the bundle -- I don't want to go through all the detail, and I certainly don't want to cover the detail already dealt with by my learned friend -- but if we go on just a little in time to June of that year, June 1990, to D76? - Yes, I have it.

This is another letter from Mr. Hamilton to yourself dated 8th June 1990 and it is headed "Arbitrary Disruption of 1988 Summer Camp". Just pausing there, is it a common theme of Mr. Hamilton's correspondence that he regarded many of the police investigations as arbitrary and wholly unjustified? - Yes. I mean, clearly he had run camps. This was I think the 55th he had run before any complaint had been made, and it was part of his claims that he had run the camps in the same way over many many years, "So why should the police intervene on this occasion when I have run the camps in exactly the same way year upon year upon year". And in fact he thought he had improved the camps over the years by adding equipment.

But did you think Mr. Hamilton had any justification for any complaints about so-called arbitrary disruption of the camp? - I don't think so.

Anyway if we read on this letter, he says that he read in the Stirling Observer about the Chief Constable being refused £1,200 by the Regional Council for a trip to Korea? - Yes.

"I wholeheartedly agree with the Council, particularly as many children from deprived homes can no longer afford to attend their summer camps due to the circumstances arising to our group due to the arbitrary condemnation of our 1988 summer camp by Central Scotland Police"? - Yes.

"A change in tax laws in recent years means that people such as salesmen, etc., who have the personal use of their company cars have to pay tax for this perk. I am therefore writing to ask you if the Chief Constable pays for any personal use of 'Tango One'" -- I take it that would be the Chief Constable's/

Constable's car? - The Chief Constable's car, yes.

"To Central Regional Council and her Majesty's Inspector of Taxes"? - Yes.

What did that letter tell you about the type of person Mr. Hamilton was? - It certainly would show there was no love lost between him and the Central Scotland Police Force.

That is all it tells you? - He is trying to find fault with them.

If you look on to your reply to him in D77K? - Yes.

It is quite a short letter. Could you just read it out for us please? - "I refer to your letter dated 8th June 1990, which you head 'Arbitrary Disruption of 1988 Summer Camp'. As you are well aware, the visit by Central Scotland Police to your Summer Camp was not arbitrary, but in pursuance of a complaint by members of the public, and at the specific request of Strathclyde Police. I have written countless letters to you and given you the benefit of a lengthy interview, and which there was a frank and free exchange of views. In addition, my files on this matter have been meticulously scrutinised at the instance of HM Inspector of Constabulary. I am frankly at a loss to think of any other way which would satisfy you that the officers involved in this inquiry were simply acting in good faith in the execution of their duty. It is now almost two years in which we have been in fairly regular correspondence, and I do feel it is time we brought this matter to a close. I very much regret that after all this time we have been unable to reach an amicable agreement".

Now, am I right in understanding that whenever a member of the public applies to Central Scotland Police, in particular to the Chief Constable of Central Scotland Police, for a Firearms Certificate, or for renewal of such, that person would require to fill in a form and declare that the information on that form was true and accurate, or something to that effect? - Indeed, that is so.

And I think we have learned in this Inquiry -- and can you please confirm -- that at least/least a degree of trust is placed upon the applicant in signing a true declaration? - Yes.

So it would be important that the police officers involved had trust in that individual? - Yes.

So if he has demonstrated himself as an untrustworthy person then that would be a very relevant consideration in assessing the application? - Yes.

And putting it bluntly, if a person has demonstrated himself to be a liar, then that would raise a very serious question when scrutinising his application? - We don't have authority to take firearms certificates off liars.

That is not an answer to the question? - Yes, it is a factor.

After an adjournment for lunch.

I/

2 p.m.

I wonder if I might start by just asking you some general questions. Let's take as an example the renewal of Mr. Hamilton's firearm certificate in the early part of 1995. You have told us a little bit about that earlier on today. How much time did you spend on that particular exercise, do you think? - Personally a very short time.

What is your best estimate? - I have thought back over the various incidents before I signed it.

I'm sorry, I am not quite catching you? - What I'm saying is the time that I personally spent on it as opposed to the time spent by other officers.

Yes, the time you personally spent? - I thought through the various actions which had affected Mr. Hamilton over the years and I signed the certificate.

How long would it have taken? - A very short time. A few minutes.

And the only documentation which you had in front of you during those few minutes was the form that we looked at this morning? - That's correct.

Did you consider at that time that you had to come to any decision? - A decision whether to sign the certificate or not. Whether to grant it or whether not to grant it.

Did you consider that you had to exercise or apply your mind to anything in the course of deciding whether or not to sign the certificate? - Yes, whether there was reason not to.

BY LORD CULLEN: Sorry, I didn't hear that? - Whether I had good reason not to.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. CAMPBELL: What are we to understand by a reason not to? - Whether there were any factors in the whole of the history of Mr. Hamilton to justify taking/taking away his certificate.

Taking away his certificate? - Well, failing to renew it.

You said something this morning about a difference depending on whether or not there was any adverse comment coming to you from the officers below you in the hierarchy? - Yes.

Can I just be clear as to what that difference is? - Can I explain the form RL3a is completed by the enquiry officer. The enquiry officer should make the necessary checks and enter on the form whether or not they have made those checks. It will then go to the first line supervisor, the sergeant, who will check that all the various actions of the officer making the inquiry has been done to his satisfaction. It then goes to the Commander in charge of the local area, in this case it would be a Superintendent but not necessarily so depending on the size of the area, and he would make his recommendation on whether or not the certificate should be granted. Now, where there is any adverse comments in the file, and it is not unusual for a constable perhaps to say "I found this or that out about the individual and I don't recommend you give it", it then goes to the supervisor who sees it perhaps with more experience and knowledge of the reason why or why not you should revoke a certificate and he would make a recommendation. In those circumstances I always saw all of the file and the basis on which he came to those conclusions and then I would make my own decision.

Why should the issue as to whether you see all of the file or not depend upon the actions of the officers below you? - Well, in roughly about 30 or 40 certificates probably a week, and I'm saying roughly weekly, there is nothing for me to read. If there is nothing for me to read there is no point in bringing the file to me. I mean, we are talking here as if I was dealing with firearms certificates as an exclusive part but it is only a very, very small part. I have got stuff to read from a dozen different directions and I have a limited amount of time. There is no point in bringing a file to me that contains absolutely nothing that would in any way influence my decision./

decision. Where there was something in it material then it is brought to my attention. It is simply relying on the officers to draw to your attention matters of concern.

You said a moment ago that the decision, as you understood it, was whether there was reason to take away Hamilton's certificate or more correctly any reason not to renew it? - Yes.

The view may be taken that the decision which you were called upon to take went a little further than that and required you to consider the suitability of Mr. Hamilton as a fit person to be entrusted to have firearms? - Indeed.

Now, as at January 1995 did you apply your mind to the question as to whether Hamilton was a fit and proper person to be entrusted with firearms? - Yes.

And what was your view? - My view was clearly that he was.

Now, did you apply your mind to the question as to whether there were any contra-indicators? - Yes.

What were these contra-indicators? - There were none.

None? - Well, I mean, what we had was a report to the Procurator-Fiscal at Dumbarton in which not only had the police report by Strathclyde gone to them but all of the information that Mr. Keenan had acquired in the course of his investigation into the complaints against the police and that was No Pro'd. We then come to the Milarrochy Bay incident. The incident was reported to the Procurator-Fiscal. We thoroughly investigated it, including having the children precognosed, and his decision is no proceedings. We have various incidents about photographs being taken and not one did we find which is of an indecent nature. So much so that the Procurator-Fiscal tells us not to send any more because there is nothing in it. So over the period, I mean, I have got absolutely nothing at the end of it.

But when you say absolutely nothing, just so/so that we understand the position correctly, nothing which in your view would stand up in a Court of law? - Nothing that I could not renew his certificate on.

Well, did the question as to whether or not any of these matters amounted to proof which would stand up in a Court of law enter into your decision making process?

MR. TAYLOR: Before the witness answers that question, I think it would be appropriate if the question were to define which Court of law.

LORD CULLEN: Well, I assume we are talking about the Sheriff Court. Is that what you were talking about, Mr. Campbell?

MR. CAMPBELL: I am happy to make that plain, sir.

MR. TAYLOR: And the particular procedure in the Sheriff Court.

LORD CULLEN: Well, I also assume that that was to do with any matter of appeal. Is that what you meant, Mr. Campbell?

MR. CAMPBELL: Indeed, sir.

THE WITNESS: I understand what you mean and it is always a consideration for any police officer in my position who takes these decisions that he has got to justify his decision before the Sheriff and I knew I couldn't.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. CAMPBELL: You knew you couldn't? - I couldn't.

Was there anything in all that you knew about Hamilton which indicated that he may not be a fit and proper person? - I had reservations about his running of boys' clubs. The question about him being dangerous with firearms, quite frankly I never saw any evidence of that at all.

Not a jot? - No.

Suppose there had been something which would provide some foundation for a belief that Hamilton/

Hamilton was not a fit and proper person to be trusted? I appreciate you regard that as hypothetical but allowing me that hypothesis, what would your approach then be? - If you had produced to me some evidence that this person could not have been trusted with a firearm certificate.....

Well, if there was something in all of the information which would provide a reason or a reasonably minded person to believe that he was not fit and proper? - If I believed that I would not have issued the certificate.

You see, I think you set out the terms of the relevant legislation in your precognition or your statement? - Yes.

At page 10? - Yes.

Can you have your statement before you please. That is S909L? - Can you remind me which bit we are on?

I am not sure if they are numbered. I have numbered my copy and it is the 10th page in if that helps you? - Is this the relevant section, 27(1), that the firearms certificate shall not be granted by the Chief Officer.....

That is it. I don't need to ask you to read it out at the moment? - Okay.

If we look at that provision we see that, as you point out in your statement, it falls into two parts, doesn't it? - Yes.

And the second part is a proviso and it says, provides, "The firearms certificate shall not be granted to a person who the Chief Officer of Police has reason to believe to be prohibited by this Act from possessing a firearm to which Section 1 of this Act applies or to be of intemperate habits or unsound mind or to be for any reason unfitted to be entrusted with such a firearm", is that correct? - Yes.

Now, would you agree with me that all that is required before the proviso operates is a reason, indeed any reason, to believe that the applicant is an unfit person? - Yes.

Now, /

Now, is it your evidence to this Inquiry that no such reason, that all the information available to you discloses no such reason? - Absolutely.

What would be required before such a reason existed?
- Oh, many things.

Well, like what? - Well, let's suppose that Mr. Hamilton had been convicted of one of the.....the Fiscal first of all had decided there was evidence to support a charge of assault and that resulted in a three month sentence, then clearly that would have provided it. Let's say it was a lower amount, then we would have needed to consider the particular case and all of the various ramifications of it to see whether it would be enough to cause us some concern as to his holding a firearm.

Anything else? - I mean, there's a whole host of things. I mean, if he had been in some way threatening with a firearm for example, although it does not necessarily mean he had to be threatening with a firearm. There could be instances of two or three drunk driving convictions for example which might have suggested to me that this person was unsafe to have a firearm certificate. I mean, reading through past refusals and revocations, approximately 80 per cent arise as a result of previous convictions or a strong pending case. That is generally speaking.....I'm talking about Scotland, that generally is the main reason why refusals or revocations come about. There may be many other ways. It may be an offence where there is additional medical evidence to suggest that a person is suffering from a mental disorder or whatever. There is a whole host of different circumstances which would give you cause to revoke or refuse a licence.

Would you look please at Detective Sergeant, as he then was, Hughes' memorandum of the 11th of November 1991 which is D82L? - Yes, I have it here.

Now, I take it you are familiar with the terms of this document? - Yes.

Does it describe a person who is fit to be/be entrusted with firearms? - I think you have got to look beyond the actual memorandum to the evidence on which Mr. Hughes bases his opinion.

Before you go on to that, can I ask for an answer to my question? - Which is?

Does it describe a person who is fit to be entrusted with firearms? - No.

So your view would be that Mr. Hughes is describing an individual whose firearms certificate, if he had one, should be revoked? - I'm not saying that at all. I have said you can't look at this memorandum and say there it is, there is evidence here to remove the firearms certificate. There clearly is not. From the start of the memo the only part that I thoroughly agree with was that he was controversial which would not be a reason for cancelling the firearms certificate. The whole memorandum from Mr. Hughes was an impression. An impression. A gut feeling. A sixth sense or whatever. It did not have any evidence to substantiate these remarks at all. I have got to look at the evidence substantiating the remarks. If the remarks that were made could have been substantiated then what you are saying I take it when you said you would revoke it if all of these things were true, the underlying facts and circumstances to back this memorandum up are not there. It is an impression. It is a gut feeling. A sixth sense. It is whatever but that is certainly not evidence.

BY LORD CULLEN: Just to be quite clear about this point; if you look at the last paragraph in that memorandum you see there the Detective Sergeant's description of Hamilton as an individual? - Yes.

If that was an accurate description of him, would that indicate somebody who on the face of it was unfit to be entrusted with firearms? - Yes, I would agree with that but what I am saying is that the underlying evidence wasn't there.

That is what I wanted to get quite clear. It is the evidence you are talking about rather than the conclusion? - Indeed.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: Again just to be clear; I think you indicated just a moment ago that a gut feeling that a person was unsuitable would not be enough? - No.

Now, having received this memorandum and having decided to take no action despite its terms, before coming to that decision did you speak to Detective Sergeant Hughes? - No.

Why not? - Because I knew all about the case. I had read it. I had spoken to his senior officer. I didn't need to speak to him.

Well, forgive me just a little surprise about this. Here is presumably a competent officer, Detective Sergeant Hughes? Agreed? - Yes.

Stating to you, would you agree, in very clear and unequivocal terms that his view was that Hamilton was unfit for firearms? - Yes.

And setting out in detail the reasons for that, is that correct? - The reasons are that this was an impression that was left by Hamilton.

I don't want to go into the reasons at the moment but are you agreeing he sets out in detail his reasons in the memorandum? - There is very little evidence at all there.

He sets out in detail his reasons, doesn't he? - Can you draw my attention to it?

Well, do you not read them here, looking for example at the third last paragraph on page two? - That is an opinion. It is not a reason.

Well, we won't quarrel about that and you took it upon yourself to decide that this is wholly without foundation without even speaking to DS Hughes about the matter? - I read the case on which he had based his judgement. Not only that, I have spoken to Mr. Hamilton every bit as long as had Mr. Hughes and had the opportunity of a two hour interview with him. I can go further than that. I can say that very much later on the Chief Inspector who agreed with him at this point was asked by me personally to go back and see Mr. Hamilton. He had a lengthy discussion with him and he came back and said/said "Well, he is a bit of an oddball but maybe we have misjudged him a bit" and that was his view at that time and that was prior to me taking the decision in 1995 on the firearms certificate.

Did you share the view he was a bit of an oddball? - He was somebody you wouldn't take to. He was not a personable sort of individual. He could perhaps be described as a bit effeminate but that is all you could say about him.

Bitter and petty minded? Could he be described as bitter and petty minded? - He could certainly be bitter in certain circumstances, yes.

Petty minded? - Yes, I thought he picked up on small points which weren't worth it to me.

I am sorry? - I think he picked up on small points at times. That is what I mean by petty minded.

Was he somebody who was in your view fit to be given the let of Local Authority premises? - Well, that was a debate that went on as well.

Can you answer yes or no please? - Well, I know that the Council looked at this very carefully and their view was that there was not sufficient evidence to take it away.

Well, did you at any time express a view prior to 1995 that he was not an appropriate person to be given the let of Local Authority premises? - I certainly, when I was asked about the situation in Linlithgow, told them exactly what the situation was and because the matter was still under review by the Fiscal at that time I think they decided to take it away and then re-let it when the case was No Pro'd if I remember correctly.

2.25 p.m.

Am I not right in saying -- we can go to it in due course and indeed we will go to it in due course -- that your view was he was not an appropriate person to be given the let of Council property? - I wouldn't have said that.

You wouldn't say that? - Not that I can recall.

Can we for a moment revert to Mr. Hughes' memorandum. You were faced with a recommendation from Mr. Miller which we read at the bottom of the page; is that correct? - Yes.

"While appreciating Detective Sergeant Hughes' concern I cannot recommend the action proposed, for obvious reasons, i.e. Hamilton has not been convicted of crime and it seems the Procurator-Fiscal is likely to No Pro the recently reported case." What was your reaction when you read that recommendation from Mr. Miller? - Mr. Miller didn't agree there was evidence to support Hughes' claims.

Did you indicate to Mr. Miller that he plainly had a mistaken understanding of the relevant criteria? - No.

So you agreed with his approach, did you? - Well, I spoke to Mr. Miller. He did not support the view of Sergeant Hughes on the basis that there was no evidence to support his conclusion.

We have heard a good deal of evidence over the last few days -- indeed I think you have largely confirmed this in your evidence so far today -- that great importance was given to whether or not any applicant for the grant or a renewal had received any criminal convictions? - That's so.

But would you agree with me, Mr. McMurdo, that society in the shape of Parliament when it passed the 1968 Act and the various amendments to it placed a degree of trust in Chief Officers of Police that they would carefully consider and form a judgement themselves as to whether any applicant for a firearms certificate was or was not fit to have one? - I agree.

The/

The whole phrase "Fit to be entrusted with a firearm" indicates that trust is being put on that person, doesn't it? - Yes.

And the safeguard between society and people like Mr. Hamilton is people like yourself? - Indeed.

So it is an extremely solemn task; would you agree? - I agree.

And a very important one? - Indeed.

And above all, it is a decision or judgement which a Chief Officer of Police requires to take? - Indeed.

Having regard to the system which was operated by Central Scotland Police -- we have obviously learned a lot about it and you will be very familiar with it -- how did that system go about identifying whether or not a person was or was not fit to be entrusted with a firearm? - We had a system whereby any pending case or indeed any conviction was drawn to the attention of the Firearms Department. This was done because the men within the firearms office had no access to the SCRO and PNC computer. I also put a memorandum out at one point also to consider any Intelligence which may exist within the Force. In normal circumstances those issues would arise. In addition to that, in the Force Standing Orders officers were told to draw to our attention anything at all which they thought might assist on the question of whether or not a person should be allowed to have a firearm or a shotgun certificate.

Can you help me with this: assuming some thought was given to it in the first place, why was it considered that that system stood a chance of identifying whether or not a person was fit and proper to be entrusted with a firearm certificate? - I don't follow your line of questioning.

Well, I understand the description of the system which you have given to us. The fault may be mine, but where I have difficulty is in understanding why it was thought that that system would identify whether or not there was any reason to believe that a person was unfitted to be entrusted/entrusted with a firearm. I understand what you said about pending cases and presumably previous convictions; it doesn't seem to go much beyond that? - We asked all officers of police to bring to our attention any matters they regarded as important. I mean, what more can we do. It is the system that is used universally.

Of course, we know that in the case of Hamilton this is not an example of a paucity of information, you have file upon file of information upon him, don't you? - Yes, there was several incidents all of which came to nothing.

None of which was in the firearms file? - No.

Why not? - Well, there were some things which I would expect to be in the firearms file and there were others which I wouldn't have expected to be in the firearms file.

I am not asking you what you would expect to be in the firearms file. I am asking you why was none of this in the firearms file? - I don't know what the answer is.

Why not? - I don't do the filing.

Was there any system in force for the provision of information about firearm certificate holders to be placed in the firearms file? - Yes. I would anticipate that any matter which related particularly to firearms would be placed in the firearms file. What I wouldn't expect to be placed in the firearms file was pending cases. I wouldn't expect intelligence to be in the file because it maybe got from the Intelligence Unit. It is the same with previous convictions. I wouldn't expect them to be in the file because you can get them through a check with the SCRO. Provided the information from any other aspect, you can put your hand on it, it doesn't need to be in the actual firearms file provided the officer knows how to go about getting it.

Forgive me, but your expectations or anticipations are not a system. What I am asking was whether there was any system to ensure that relevant information was in Hamilton's firearms file?/

file? - Yes. There was a system of filing. I don't know how it wasn't there. I would expect certain records to be in it.

What was that system? - Well, there was a system of filing which -- I don't know how I can describe to you the filing system of the whole Force -- but it was under different heads. If it was a disciplinary matter it would be in the disciplinary file. If it was a case file it would be in the case file. If it was a firearms matter it would be in the firearms file. If it was an administrative matter it would be in the administrative file. There is a host of files in a police Force all under different headings. I wouldn't expect every single scrap of paper that bore the name Hamilton to be in the firearms file.

Do we find this system written down anywhere? - Yes. There was an administrative memo -- I can't remember the number of it -- but I am sure there is.

No doubt that can be checked. Did you ever have any occasion to look at Mr. Hamilton's firearms file? - No.

So throughout the whole history of your involvement in the matter you never once looked in his firearms file? - Not until after the event.

After the event we heard from Constable Anderson yesterday that you took a document to her and asked it to be put in the firearms file, Hamilton's firearms file? - I don't think that is the case.

Sorry, Maureen Johnstone's evidence? - I really don't know what you are talking about.

We heard evidence yesterday from Maureen Johnstone who is I think an officer in the Administration Department relating to firearms -- correct? - Correct.

You know Maureen Johnstone? - Yes, I do.

She told us that on the day after the incident, that is the 14th March, you gave her a Criminal Intelligence Report and asked it to be placed/placed in the firearms file? - I remember speaking to Maureen Johnstone on the day of the incident. The file was brought through with various other piece of information when I was making up a briefing note for the Chief Constable, and I did tell Maureen at that stage to make sure that everything was kept under lock and key because it would be required for the Inquiry. But as to a piece of Intelligence, it is of no relevance really.

We can maybe take a look at the document concerned with is D/12/5/3? - I don't really know why I would want an inconsequential piece of information like that to be put in the firearms file. That could be got from the Criminal Intelligence file. I don't really see the significance of it at all.

Have you seen that document before? - Yes.

When did you see it? - I think the Fiscal showed me it, Mr. Miller.

Did you ask Maureen Johnstone to do anything at all with the firearms file? - Yes, I told her to keep it under lock and key because it would be required for the Inquiry.

Did you carry out any investigation as to what was on Hamilton's Criminal Intelligence record? - Yes. I was shown that by Mr. Miller, that precognition.

What was on the Criminal Intelligence file? - Very little really.

Was it just this document? - No, there were other documents -- nothing of any great consequence.

So it is just a mystery, is it, as to why Maureen Johnstone told us that you asked her to do this? - I think it is totally inconsequential. I don't recall ever telling her to put that in the file. I certainly sat with Mr. Moffat and with Maureen, with the file, the number of children who had been killed, injured, all the rest of it, all the rest of the information, to put together a briefing paper for the Chief Constable that day. But/

But as to saying "Put this....." -- there was absolutely nothing in this. I could see no reason why it should be put in the firearms file or whether it was not put in the firearms file. It is totally inconsequential.

With respect, the question is not whether it is or is not inconsequential, the question is whether Maureen Johnstone gave accurate evidence yesterday at page 1413 of the transcript that you gave her this document on 14th March? - Well, I have no recollection of it.

So you may have done? - Well, as I say, we were sitting with a whole pile of papers and I was making up a briefing note, and whether that was part of the papers that was there or not I have no idea. I can't honestly remember reading it at that time.

In cross-examination she told us that you specifically asked her to put this document into the firearms file. Is that evidence accurate? - Well, I'm saying I have no recollection of it at all.

Is/

2.40 p.m.

Is that something you may have done? - I mean, I am not going to contradict her. I have certainly no recollection of it. As I say, the whole purpose of the actual meeting was to make a briefing note for the Chief Constable. And whether she took from my comment that she had to make sure everything was to be locked away for the inquiry, and this document was to be locked away as well, I have no idea if that is the conclusion she drew from it. But I can see no point in the question. The paper is inconsequential, and whether it was in the Firearms File or not is of obviously no consequence.

Should it have been the Firearms File? - No.

Why not? - There is no point in putting things in the Firearms File that you can get quite readily from the Criminal Intelligence.

Could you look please at a document you have already looked at, which is D133K, which I think is in K(iv)? D133K is also known as DCDI74, and it is a letter from yourself to a Mrs. Hogg in the Scottish Office. This I take it was dated the 14th January 1992? - Yes.

All part of what must have seemed the interminable correspondence relating to Thomas Hamilton? - Indeed.

And if we look in the first page of this we see that you are responding to a letter from Mrs. Hogg which had enclosures from Mr. Hamilton about what you described as "Misconceptions concerning the relationship between the police force and various youth organisations"? - Yes.

In the handling of his 1989 complaint? - Yes.

You tell us in the next sentence that "Every point repetitively and tediously dragged up by Mr. Hamilton has been examined and re-examined, explained and re-explained to the point where I am seriously considering referring the matter to the Legal Department of the police authority"? - Yes.

And/

And was that, as you explain in the next sentence, because you were in no doubt "That his ever more offensive statements are becoming actionable"? - Yes.

So you were contemplating in January 1992, about a month before his certificate was renewed, suing him for defamation? - Yes.

Now, would any indication of this be in -- obviously not -- I take it there was nothing to this effect in Hamilton's Firearms File? - You are correct.

So when you were on holiday, whoever was in your place, if they had chosen to look in Hamilton's Firearms File, they would have been none the wiser? - The officer that took the decision in 1992 was well aware of it.

And over the page -- sorry, just pausing on Page 1, in a nutshell why was it you were considering suing him for defamation? - One of my officers had been disturbed by the continuing letters in which he was named. As the officer said, it was okay for a while, but things had gone on long enough. So as I said this morning, I think I had lost my cool when I wrote this letter, and I wrote it in fairly severe terms to the Scottish Office, with one purpose in mind -- "Don't send me any more letters about Mr. Hamilton because I am not wanting to reply to any more". And I think after three and a half years I was justified in perhaps going over the top a bit in this letter.

I am not sure that will do, because we know that in fact you did seek advice whether to sue him or not? - Yes, that is very true.

So this was not just a pretext put up to Mrs. Hogg to try to persuade her to stop bothering you? - Oh no, that is perfectly true, I did consult the Council. Unfortunately they didn't think I had sufficient evidence.

And I take it you would appreciate that the essence of defamation is an untruthful allegation? - Yes.

So you were of the view at that time that/that Mr. Hamilton was making untruthful allegations about police officers? - Yes. I mean, he was never ever satisfied that the officers had given an unbiased report to Strathclyde. He thought that they had defamed him in that particular statement, and he never changed his opinion on that. I thought the officers put in a perfectly reasonable report to Strathclyde.

If we turn the page, you deal with certain of the allegations made by Hamilton, and am I right in understanding that one of them was an allegation that officers were altering their notes or tampering with their notebooks? - Yes. I mean, officers can write in their notebooks in pencil or in ink. It is up to them, but I mean he never ever said that they had altered them, but the inference was there.

But some may think that if a member of the public makes a very serious allegation like that without any foundation whatsoever to do so, that raises a very substantial question mark as to the character and personality of that individual; would you agree? - Yes.

Yes. Nonetheless that same individual, in your view, is somebody who can be safely trusted with firearms? - Yes.

You have worked with other police forces -- am I right? - Yes.

Is the general approach which you adopted to Hamilton's applications over the years representative of your understanding as to how others in similar positions to yourself would deal with the matter? - Yes.

So to broaden the question a little bit as to the procedures and systems adopted by Central Scotland Police in processing firearms applications and applications for renewals, is it your evidence that the system in Central Scotland Police is broadly representative of other police forces throughout Scotland? - Yes. Most forces follow the Home Office Guidelines. In fact, I am sure they all do.

But as to the way in which Central Scotland/

Scotland Police followed the Guidance, in your understanding is that broadly representative of other forces? - Yes, indeed.

Not just in Scotland, but also in the UK? - I wouldn't like to speak so much of the UK, but in Scotland we have different Committees of the Association of Chief Police Officers, and normally when there is legislation comes out the matter is discussed there and pretty well a common policy is adopted throughout Scotland. This is also important because we have only one National Training Centre, and they are all trained in the same centre. So generally speaking the police forces in Scotland work in a very similar way.

I don't know -- his lordship may receive evidence about how other police forces deal with these matters, but the implication from your understanding would be that if -- and I am just putting it forward as a hypothesis -- if there were any failings or deficiencies in the system operated by Central Scotland Police, the chances are they will be repeated in other police forces throughout the country? - They may be.

Going back to the letter, there is a reference -- this is in the third paragraph -- to public-spirited people giving up their time to help voluntary youth organisations? - Yes.

And you ask: "How Hamilton can draw a sinister inference from such a healthy and worthwhile pastime is beyond my comprehension"? - Yes.

And "For Mr. Hamilton to see his tiny local organisation as a serious rival to the Scouting movement indicates a certain lack of perspective". What did you mean by that? - I am referring -- if you go back through the correspondence, Mr. Hamilton took issue because we apparently -- there were photographs taken with the Chief Constable and the Area Commissioner of the Scout movement, and there was no such endorsement of his own group. But when you look at the particular occasion as I recall it, it was a new Scout Police badge, so it was of fairly reasonable local interest. He referred to another occasion when his group were given instructions by the police on some matter, and there was no photograph taken on that occasion, so he seemed to think we were treating him differently.
on/

You indicated "It has never been suggested to me by anyone other than Mr. Hamilton that an Officer's credibility or professionalism could be in any way affected by membership of the Scout movement"? - Well, I honestly don't think somebody's professionalism is affected by being a member of the Scout movement.

What does it tell you about somebody's character and personality if they do have that view? - As I said, there was tremendous animosity between Mr. Hamilton and the Scout movement which dated back to what he saw as an unjustified removal of his warrant.

And this goes back to the grudge which we were talking about? - Well before my time in Central Scotland Police.

Can I ask you a question: suppose somebody applied for a firearm certificate in 1995 to yourself and it transpired in the course of investigations that that person held a grudge against his next door neighbour, a longstanding grudge, of an almost obsessive nature to the extent that he lacked perspective? - Well.....

Now, let me ask the question: if that was the general picture that emerged, would you nonetheless regard him as a fit and proper person to be entrusted with a firearm certificate? - Yes.

Why? - Just because you disagree with your next door neighbour doesn't mean to say you can't get a firearm. You are not going to shoot him. We are talking about somebody who has a disagreement.

No, I am talking about somebody with a longstanding grudge which has become an obsessive matter and a matter on which he completely lacks perspective? - Well, I think we have to treat each individual case as it arises. It is difficult. It is hypothetical. You would have to take each case as it arose.

Well, /

Well, we will leave that at that point. We will read on in the letter. We see that Mr. Hamilton -- this is the second-last paragraph -- "Mr. Hamilton's interpretation of these events" -- this is a photograph of Chief Constable Oliver with the Scout Area Commissioner to mark the inauguration of a new Cub Scout Police badge -- "Mr. Hamilton's interpretation of these events in his letter of 4th May 1991 was that 'this clearly illustrates the influence which the Scouts have over Central Scotland Police'. And we read on "At no time to my knowledge has the force been asked to take part in a photograph" -- we can read this for ourselves -- "It is for the Chief Constable, or for that matter any other officer, to choose with whom he should wish to be photographed. In doing so he would use his professional judgment and good sense". You then in the next sentence wrote "It would not be good sense in my view to associate with an organisation or person where serious allegations were under investigation, as has been the case with Mr. Hamilton since 1989"? - Yes.

What did you mean by that? - This is one of the great difficulties with Mr. Hamilton. He went out of his way to ask us to come to his camps, to come to this, come to that; but while somebody is under investigation it is always difficult for us to endorse wholeheartedly his organisation. In other words, we were being asked to put a stamp of approval on something which was under investigation, and that to my mind would not have been wise.

So it would not be good sense to associate with Mr. Hamilton, but there was no problem in giving him a firearms licence? - We are talking about two separate things entirely.

And then in the next paragraph we come to the passage which my learned friend Mr. Bonyon read out to you earlier on this morning, and again we can read that for ourselves, but what it boils down to is that Mr. Hamilton was to be distinguished from most right-minded people, that he was a bitter and petty-minded individual, he was somebody who could pervert a straightforward relationship into something sleazy and dishonourable, he was somebody who imagined undercurrents of corruption, he indulged in vindictive correspondence, and there was a/a background of almost four years of irrational outpourings, dealing with him was like trying to reason with a zealot, and he was somebody who adjusted the facts selectively to suit his ends, and then it all begins again. Now, that is not Detective Sergeant Hughes' views, these are your views; is that correct? - Yes.

And do you stand by them? - When I read that letter -
- I recognised this morning I had gone over the top when I was writing. I said this morning at some points you lose your cool, and I certainly lost my cool when I wrote that letter, but after three and a half years I think I was entitled to.

BY LORD CULLEN: You say you lost your cool, but is there anything in that letter that you would want to withdraw? - Yes. I think I went over the top in the second-last paragraph.

Just tell me which bits of it you would withdraw? - "Ever more irrational outpourings". What I meant by that, he was taking his complaints to what I thought was almost absurd lengths. Fair enough, he is entitled to go through all the various avenues, write to his MP and so on, but now we were on to the Scottish Office, and it was a step too far, I suppose, for me.

Is that the only passage you would withdraw? - Some of the language is a bit strong, but generally speaking, I mean, most of it I stand by, in general terms. I mean, he was selective in the way he chose to write things, and take parts out -- and every single word you had used would be put under the microscope. The general tone of it is a bit strong. But it served the purpose that I had written the letter for, it stopped the correspondence from the Scottish Office.

Presumably/

3 p.m.

Presumably after you dictated this letter it would have gone up for typing; correct? - Yes.

In due course it would have been brought back to you for signature? - Yes.

And you signed it? - Yes.

Without entering into any debate about the tone or the choice of words, it was based upon your personal experience of Hamilton, wasn't it? - Yes.

Nothing that we have learned about Hamilton suggests that anything you said there was factually incorrect; would you agree? - Certainly the various points that are covered here are covered fairly well.

Just to take one of them, "He adjusts the facts selectively to suit his ends". You are saying he is a liar? - He was certainly economical with the truth. He would select parts out of it, which were accurate, didn't tell the whole story.

Forgive me, Mr. McMurdo, but I think there are probably at least some people who find it very, very difficult to understand how such a person can be entrusted by you as a fit and proper person to have a firearm. Could you enlighten us at all? - This gentleman gave me no reason to believe that he was in any way a danger or to be untrustworthy with a firearm. He had a firearm certificate for many years and to the best of my knowledge had given nobody any concern whatsoever about the handling of firearms.

Well, that can hardly be true standing Detective Sergeant Hughes' memorandum when he said -- well, when he clearly stated his view he was an unsuitable person? - What I am saying is never did Mr. Hamilton give people cause for concern about his use of firearms; that is what I am saying.

Do you still have your statement before you? Could you turn please two pages beyond the page setting out the terms of Section 27? - "Looking back since 1991"?

That/

That is it, you say, "Looking back since 1991 I am able to say I have refused or revoked 35 firearms or shotgun licences and temporarily suspended one pending inquiry. In each and every case I considered public safety as being paramount. However, I was also conscious of the freedom of the individual in remaining within the parameters of the discretion given to me under the law". That reference to freedom of the individual: can I ask you to explain what you mean by that? - That is the law of the land -- provided a person has good reason to have a firearm and can be entrusted with it he should be able to have one. That is the freedom of the individual.

Yes, but is the proviso not of critical importance, clearly that he is regarded as a fit and proper person to have a firearms certificate? - That is true.

What has the freedom of the individual got to do with whether he was a fit and proper person? - What I mean by that is there are certain freedoms available to a person under the law to hold firearms certificates, and that freedom has been changed over the years. It used to be you could hold a repeater rifle for example prior to the late 1980s and they put a restriction on this freedom, but it is a freedom to hold certain firearms; that is what I am saying.

I probably didn't put the question very well. Let me put it another way. If you are required to exercise a discretion as to whether person X is or is not fit to be entrusted with a firearm why does any notion of freedom of the individual enter into the exercise at all. What has that got to do with it, as to whether person X is or is not a fit and proper person to be entrusted with a firearm? - I really don't know where you are going with this question.

You told us in each and every case when you considered whether or not to refuse or revoke a firearm or a shotgun certificate you were conscious of the freedom of the individual. What I am asking you is why is the freedom of the individual relevant, if it is relevant, to the question of whether a person is a fit person to have a firearm? - I mean, I wouldn't revoke a firearm certificate on/on a whim. I have got to remain within the law. Provided there is good reason for a person, he is to be entrusted with it, he has the freedom to use a firearm under the firearms legislation. It is as simple as that.

One may think that there is really only one question which needs to be asked -- is there reason to believe this person is not a fit and proper person? - Absolutely. I have got to have good reason to say that. I don't just come to an arbitrary decision; I have got to have good reason for revoking a certificate. In making that decision Chief Officers are always very conscious of how Sheriffs or indeed how people would react to that decision.

So the applicant gets the benefit of the doubt? - No, he doesn't.

That is what it comes to, isn't it, according to your philosophy? - We made a judgement on other firearms certificates in the past which was upheld. If we got it wrong then the man can go to the Sheriff and the Sheriff can either agree with me or disagree with me.

What has the Sheriff got to do with it? Why should consideration about a man going to the Sheriff make any difference? - Why shouldn't it?

Well.....? - Police officers come to a decision, and it is a decision on what is right and proper and what is good reason.

Let's just look on a paragraph in your statement. "I never refused an application unless I had reason to do so. I was conscious that I could be called before the Sheriff to justify my decision"? - Yes.

What has that got to do with your decision as to whether or not a person is or is not a fit and proper individual? - What I am saying is I can't do it on a whim. I do it where you have got evidence, no more than that.

What I am puzzled about is why you thought it necessary to emphasise that to be an issue that you could be called before the Sheriff to justify/justify your thinking? - I think all Chief Officers are.

Why? - Because it is just the way the law is. It is the appeal system.

So unless you are happy that a Sheriff will agree with you you wouldn't do anything? - No, I am quite happy to go up in front of a Sheriff provided I can show him good reasons and provided it is not shown it is totally unreasonable why I have made that decision, I would be very happy to go up in front of a Sheriff and say those are the reasons why I took this away.

What is more important -- the proper exercise of discretion by the individual charged with that responsibility by law, or the avoidance of embarrassment in the Sheriff Court? - The former.

Let's take an example of it in 1995 when Hamilton's renewal application came to you. What was your understanding at that time as to the law that would be applied to an appeal by the Sheriff? - The Sheriff would consider whether or not he felt that my judgement was reasonable.

So did you anticipate that the Sheriff would investigate whether or not in his view Hamilton was a fit and proper person? - He would have considered whether my judgement on the matter was reasonable.

BY LORD CULLEN: I didn't catch the end of the answer? - What I was saying was the Sheriff looked at the circumstances and he judged whether my decision was reasonable. I mean, two reasonable people can come to totally different decisions and it was up to the Sheriff to say: "Well, I think your reason was good".

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: Were you never given any advice that the legislation entrusted the decision with Chief Officers? - Indeed.

Would you agree with me, looking again at the terms of the proviso to Section 27(1) which you will find two pages back in your statement, the thrust of it is if there is any reason to believe that/that someone is unfit then the application must be refused? - Agreed.

And there doesn't have to be a reason which will satisfy any particular legal standard to prove in any Court of law; it is simply any reason which would justify the belief that a person was unfit? - It has got to satisfy me in the first place.

There is no hint there, though, is there, that the applicant has the benefit of any presumption arising from the freedom of the individual or civil liberties? - No.

Quite the reverse in fact; would you agree? - Yes.

So if we turn back two pages on, you told us that during the course of your time as Deputy Chief Constable you had decisions that were challenged on a number of occasions and none were subsequently overturned? - Yes.

Would you agree with me that is hardly surprising if a man like Hamilton might be granted a licence? - The number of firearm certificates and shotgun certificates that I revoked were probably more than most Chief Officers did. At no time did I have any reason to revoke Hamilton's firearms certificate.

Going back to Detective Sergeant Hughes' memo, D8224, how much time did you spend considering this matter? - Quite some time.

And did you consider that the renewal of a person's firearm certificate gave rise to any different consideration or any different approach from the consideration of a suggestion from an officer that a person's firearms certificate should be revoked? - The only difference between a renewal and a revocation is good reason doesn't come into revocation.

So the consequence of that would be that having decided to reject this request in November, 1991 then that decision would apply to any subsequent renewal applications? - Yes.

There would be no need for you to revisit or reconsider Detective Sergeant Hughes' concerns in the context of a renewal? - I had already considered it. By the time the renewal comes through I think there is no difference in the circumstances.

Can we look again at the relevant statutory provisions which you will find at pages in your precognition. If we turn to Section 30(1) "A firearm may be revoked if a Chief Officer of Police for the area in which the holder resides (a) The Chief Officer is satisfied that the holder is prohibited by this Act from possessing a firearm to which Section 1 of this Act applies or is of intemperate habits or unsound mind, or is otherwise unfitted to be entrusted with such a firearm"? - Yes.

The wording is noticeably different, is it not, from Section 27(1), in particular the provision to Section 27(1)? - That is the part I said no good reason.

Well, what we have in 30(1) in relation to revocation is that the Chief Officer must be satisfied, for example, the holder is of intemperate habits or of unsound mind or otherwise unfit to be entrusted with such a firearm? - Yes.

On the one hand, whereas the prohibition in the proviso against grant is triggered by any reason to believe that the person is unfit to be entrusted with a firearm? - Yes.

Do you detect any difference in approach? - In one it says the Chief Officer is satisfied, and the other one says "shall not be granted" which surely comes to very much the same thing.

So you yourself, I take it, you having detected no difference in approach, you certainly didn't understand there was any difference in approach when you were dealing with Hamilton? - No. The only thing I said that was different is whereas in the first Section it says the applicant has good reason for having it in his possession or for purchasing or acquiring, when it comes to revoke that part was missing. That is really the only difference I can see between the two Sections.

BY/

BY LORD CULLEN: What about the words in Section 27 before we get to the proviso, "And can be permitted to have it in his possession without danger to public safety or to peace". That is not in Section 30, is it? - No.

Do you attach or did you attach any significance to that expression when it came round to renewal as opposed to the question of revocation? - There is a difference in words, my lord, but really in essence I don't see a great deal of difference.

So far as you are concerned, other than the language, the words of the language are more extensive, you says it made no practical difference? - Not really.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: Did you as the officer responsible for the granting or renewal of all firearms certificates ever seek or obtain legal advice as to the meaning of the relevant Statutory provisions? - I never sought legal advice unless we were into an appeal situation.

I am just wondering whether your understanding of this Section was based upon legal advice which you had received or whether it is simply on your own reading of the words? - I have had legal advice on a number of occasions all arising from my decision to revoke or fail to renew or not to grant in the first instance these certificates which happened fairly frequently before.

What is the answer to the question? Is your understanding, that we have just been discussing in the last two or three minutes, based on your own reading of the provision or on legal advice? - My own.

Going back to Sergeant Hughes' memo, did you consider it, or was it appropriate that some note be taken of Detective Sergeant Hughes' advice or recommendation the next time Hamilton's certificate came up for renewal? - I took the decision on that memorandum in November 1991.

That is not quite an answer to my question. Did you consider that it was appropriate that some consideration be given to Detective Sergeant Hughes' recommendation when Hamilton's certificate came up for renewal? - No, I didn't think there was evidence in the memorandum in 1991. I was not going to think any different later.

One difficulty I have about this aspect of your evidence, Mr. McMurdo -- maybe you can help me with it -- but if a question did arise as to whether or not there was reason to believe that Hamilton -- as to whether Hamilton was or was not a fit and proper person, and if the matter did end up in the Sheriff Court, would I be correct in assuming that Detective Sergeant Hughes' memorandum would be very relevant evidence? - Yes.

And would I be correct in understanding that you would anticipate that the Sheriff would pay careful attention to what Detective Sergeant Hughes was saying? - The underlying facts of Inspector Hughes' memo is important, and the report there is not supported by any facts at all. It is a gut feeling it starts from, a feeling he had, and I have already said this morning that it is biased in aspects in so far as it is leading you to believe that, for example, in the second-last paragraph, that Mr. Hamilton assaulted a boy on three occasions because he became extremely angry and stressed, when in fact the facts underlying this incident is that he chastised a boy on three occasions, two of which he was kicking and punching somebody, and another occasion when he was hitting somebody with a stone. Now, that doesn't come out on reading that memorandum/memorandum, and what I am saying to you is you have got to look at the facts and circumstances underlying what is there.

So does it come to this that your approach to this is that a gut feeling, however understandable in the circumstances it may be, could not amount to a reason within the meaning of the Section? - Absolutely.

So was it your approach that a gut feeling could never be treated as a sufficient basis for coming to the view that a person might be unfit? - I think you have to have some evidence.

Well, would it surprise you to know that the Guidance given to Grampian Police Force officers under the heading "Suitability of Applicant" says this: "The enquiry officer is in the prime position to assess the suitability of an applicant. Personal knowledge, local intelligence, and often gut feeling may convey that an applicant is unsuitable"? - That was one of the factors, I take it?

"Personal knowledge, local intelligence and often gut feeling may convey that an applicant is unsuitable"? - And what was the evidence in addition to gut feeling in this particular case you are talking about?

This is the Guidance given to Grampian Police Force officers? - In all the stated cases I have ever read I haven't seen one that there wasn't evidence. I mean, I don't know which case you are talking about, but I can never ever recall any case I have ever read through that, purely on the basis of gut feeling, was the decision taken in favour of the police. In fact, I don't even know one that was ever taken by a police officer purely on gut feeling.

BY LORD CULLEN: I take it it is your view that memorandum should have gone into the firearms file? Why? - Well, it was to do with the firearms certificate subject.

Well, I understand that, because it is concerned with something to do with firearms, but if it has the status you have just described, why would it go into the file? - Well, the decision was taken/taken on it, but certainly, I mean, I think it is something that should have been put in the file.

Yes, but I want to know why? - Just simply because it is a firearms certificate-related subject, no more than that.

Well, is it because it might assume added significance if later events had tended to confirm its conclusion? - Yes.

And I suppose there will be an importance that although you know a great deal about Mr. Hamilton, and of course a lot of the correspondence concerning him, the person taking the decision, the person in your position, might not be you but might be somebody else? - Indeed.

So it would be important that he should be au fait with what was already known in the past? - Yes.

And I suppose in a situation like this there could easily be significance in the cumulative effect of a number of different pieces of information arriving at different times? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: Could you have before you please D3K, which is Detective Sergeant Hughes' report to the Procurator-Fiscal in Stirling, and it is also known as -- well, I don't know what it is also known as, but it is found in K(II)? - Yes, I have it.

LORD CULLEN: Sorry, what is the date?

MR. CAMPBELL: I am not sure I know the date, sorry. I don't know that it has the date on it, but I think it was submitted, if I remember rightly, round about August/September 1991. Does my lord have that?

LORD CULLEN: The numbering is D.....

MR. CAMPBELL: D3K, which is in K(II)

LORD CULLEN: Yes, I have got it now.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: Just to put this in its context, were you/

you aware that round about the time when Detective Sergeant Hughes was writing his memorandum about his recommendation that Hamilton's firearms certificate should be revoked, there was also a report going to the Procurator-Fiscal which included a list of some 10 proposed charges? - I think the timing is wrong, with respect, on that.

This was submitted, as I recall, about August. I was well aware of this report. Mr. Hughes' memo was in fact put in not when the report went in, but when it was well known that the Fiscal would be taking no action. I think you will find the memo was dated in November. This report went in in August. The incident happened in July.

Do you regard that as a matter of some significance, that the memorandum came in when it was well known that the Fiscal would take no action? - Well, that is when it did come in.

Why do you specifically mention that? Is that a matter of some importance, in your view? - Well, I think it is pertinent it didn't come in earlier.

Why? - Well, why wasn't it put in at the time the report went in?

Well, what is the significance, if any, of the Fiscal's failure to take action? - Well, clearly the Fiscal didn't see there was evidence to take any action.

But the legislation asks you to take a decision yourself as to whether or not Hamilton is a fit and proper person? - Yes. I have got to base this on facts, and the facts are that the Fiscal decided this incident wasn't worthy to take to Court.

But that decision by the Fiscal may have been based on a whole variety of reasons -- for example, the view may have been taken that the evidence didn't satisfy the criminal standard of proof beyond reasonable doubt? - Yes.

Or it might have been some other reason. The Fiscal has a wide discretion on these matters, I understand -- am I right? - Yes.

Whereas/

Whereas the legislation entrusted you with the solemn task of applying your own mind to whether or not there was any reason to revoke the certificate? - Yes, but I think I said earlier on that when there is a case goes in to the Fiscal it is not necessarily an occasion for me to wait until the judgment on the case, provided there is sufficient evidence there in the case, I will take the decision to revoke at an earlier stage. The view that I took on reading this report was that there was no evidence to do that.

So you read through, did you, everything which we have in D3K? - Yes.

And in your view there was quite literally no evidence?
- Yes.

In support of the charges drafted by DS Hughes? - I didn't say there was no evidence to support the charges. It is a very mixed report. You have some children there who were perfectly happy with Mr. Hamilton. You have an adult helper who was perfectly happy with him. You have some children who say that the striking of the child was because he was a bully. So it is a very mixed report with very many different views contained within it. There was no one injured. There was no one who suggested gratuitous violence had been used here. The question was whether or not in the circumstances it amounted to assault or not, but it certainly didn't indicate gratuitous violence.

Would you look please about two-thirds of the way through at the statement of Stephen Ramsay.

MR. CAMPBELL: I do apologise for having mentioned that person's name, Sir. I trust that the usual admonition will be understood.

LORD CULLEN: Yes, I hope that is the case, as per normal practice.

MR. GIBB: It is page 90.

THE WITNESS: Yes, I have it here.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.
CAMPBELL: Now, please don't follow my example, but if/

if we could try to avoid mentioning specific names? - Yes.

But if we see the statement of this particular child, and if we turn to I think the fourth page. This is a time I think when the children are being video-ed for the purpose of some film that Hamilton was wanting to make, and I think we see from the previous page that he had a bag of trunks and the children were asked to put on the trunks? - Yes.

One of them got trunks that were too big for him, and we can read much of this for ourselves. The child was asked to lie in freezing cold water. The witness was crying, wanted to come out of the water, and Hamilton then said "We're no' fucking going to get this film done", and then he was swearing at another boy called Ross, and he said to him "You need fucking disciplined"? - Yes.

"When we were on the island it started to rain and we all had to stand, and nearly everybody was greetin'?" - Yes.

One boy was allowed to put a towel over himself, but everybody else had to stand in the rain for about half an hour, asking if they could go back, and he said 'No, we still had the video to do'. Then the sun started to come out and Hamilton rubbed suntan oil over everyone "and we had to rub it in to each other" -- they had to make out as if they were enjoying themselves? - Yes.

And then there is a reference at the bottom of the page to Hamilton shouting and swearing at another boy; do you see that? - Yes.

He shook the boy back and forward, had a hold of him by his clothes, and he threw him back and forward, and then threw him down into his seat. There was another time the child was spanked on the legs because he had been picked for the football team. Hamilton took him into a green tent and when he came out he had red marks on his legs. The child was crying? - Yes.

Now, that can't just be dismissed as some equivalent to parental chastisement? - Excuse me, that is a statement that you have chosen to read out/out. It is not typical of all the statements that are there. There are very different views of the incident, and the one you have picked out is not the only view. I think somebody, to get a proper perspective on this particular case, would need to read all the statements and not just pick out one statement which can put an emphasis on a thing and which is totally different from all the other statements contained within the report.

Well, you may be back here tomorrow, and I will certainly have a look through the documentation to see whether I am being unfair, but are you suggesting that there is some information in Detective Sergeant Hughes' report which would suggest that this particular witness's evidence is actually incorrect? - No, I am not saying that at all. I am saying that the different children in the report have different stories to tell, they are conflicting, and all I am saying to you is that not every child saw it in that way. That is all I am saying. I am not saying that is not the statement that was taken and that is not what the child said. All I am saying to you is there are very different views between the different children.

Well, one understands that some of the children perhaps were not assaulted and therefore their views may be somewhat different? - But they saw the assaults differently, they saw the reasons for them differently. That is what I am saying.

Well, if you just forgive me, I won't take up a lot more time on this, but if you look on to the next witness statement -- have you got that one? - Yes.

And turn on to the second page of that, we see about the middle that the witness says that the child was taken into a tent and Mr. Hamilton's hand was lifting up, and he thinks it hit across Ross's face; that Ross came back out of the tent crying, holding his face, but he couldn't see any red marks. And then a little while later football teams are being picked.....? - I don't know if I have the right -- could you just excuse me a wee moment?

Yes, sorry. It is the third page of narrative. It may be my fault? - I have a blank page/page here.

Yes, so do I. The blank page is the second page, so go on past the blank page and then there is a page of typing starting at the top "couldn't afford it"? - Yes, I am with you.

And then the next page is the one I am wanting to refer to. It begins at the top "We were on the island. The child swore at Hamilton and Hamilton said to him 'You need fucking disciplined, ya bastard"; do you see that? - Yes.

And all the child was really doing was he was talking to a boy standing beside him? - Yes.

And then there is another incident, as I mentioned earlier, where there is evidence of Hamilton hitting the child across the face; do you see that? - Yes.

Then/

3.40 p.m.

Then the incident at the bottom of the page where the child is told by Hamilton he should need spanking for no apparently good reason; you see that? - Yes. You will find if you look at some of the other statements that will tell you why that happened.

But the result of all of this, putting it shortly, was that Detective Sergeant Hughes who carried out the investigation not only wrote the memorandum to you but set out detailed charges for submission to the Procurator-Fiscal? - Yes.

Charges relating to breaches of the 1937 Children and Young Persons (Scotland) Act and various charges of assault, breach of the peace? - Yes.

Whether you agree with the Fiscal's decision can I suggest is beside the point so far as your duty under Section 30 was concerned; your duty under Section 30 was to come to a view yourself as to whether there was fitness or unfitness on the part of Hamilton to have a firearms certificate? - Yes.

Can I put this to you for your comment: whatever else there is, even if you look at nothing else in the whole catalogue of information we have about Hamilton, there is evidence within the report from Sergeant Hughes which amounts to a reason to believe that Hamilton was unfit to be entrusted with firearms? - I don't agree with that.

No evidence at all? - There is no evidence there on which I could have refused the firearms certificate; that's my view.

Did you ask Sergeant Hughes to explain to you why he considered it appropriate to make a report in the terms which he did to the Procurator-Fiscal? - What do you mean by that?

Did you, before you decided to take no action on Detective Sergeant Hughes' memorandum, make contact with him and ask him to explain his thinking which led him to make a report which he did to the Procurator-Fiscal? - The Procurator-Fiscal instructed/instructed him to put the report in without caution and charge.

That is not an answer to my question, Mr. McMurdo? -
Sorry, would you repeat the question?

Did you, before you decided to take no action on Detective Sergeant Hughes' memorandum of 11th November 1991, make contact with him and ask him to explain to you the reasons why he submitted a report to the Fiscal in terms which you see in D3K? - It was his duty to report it to the Fiscal. I didn't see why I needed to speak to him about it.

But you have told us, if I have noted you correctly, that you read this material? - Yes.

You did read it? - Yes.

All of it? - Yes.

And took a view which plainly differs from the view taken by Detective Sergeant Hughes? - Yes.

All I am asking you is before deciding to take no action on Mr. Hughes' memorandum did you ask him to explain to you why he submitted the report in the terms he did? - No.

It may be thought somewhat cavalier to disagree with Detective Sergeant Hughes on such an important matter without even discussing it with him? - On the information before me -- I made my decision on it.

Can I ask you to look please at the statement of Chief Inspector Colin Mathers which is S719L? Do you know Colin Mathers? - Yes, I do.

He is a Chief Inspector in the Chief Constable's staff office at Police Headquarters in Stirling? - That is so.

Amongst other things in the statement I think he gives us some information about revoked certificates. If you turn to please page 10? - The one highlighted half-way down "revoked"?

Over/

Over the next few pages I think on an annual basis Mr. Mather gives brief details of the instances where firearm or shotgun certificates have been revoked by Central Scotland Police? - Yes.

Would I be correct in understanding that the person responsible for these decisions would generally speaking be yourself? - Indeed, that is true.

Nearly always yourself -- unless you were on holiday or something? - Yes. There were occasions when other people did it but most of these will be mine.

Many of them, as one might expect, relate to previous convictions or discharging of guns in inappropriate circumstances? - Yes.

I would like you to have a look at an example on page II. In 1992 do we see that a gentleman's shotgun certificate was revoked after a domestic incident at home, and it was felt in view of his depressive state he should not have guns? - Yes.

In the last incident for that year another gentleman was refused I think a firearms certificate on the view of having no land and on checking his permission it contained a false declaration? - Yes. He failed to show good reason.

So far as 1993 is concerned, the top of the page, a gentleman's firearms certificate was revoked because he was not a member of a club and would not make himself available to the police to carry out the renewal enquiry? - Sorry, he needs good reason and he didn't have good reason.

Two down from that, a gentleman's shotgun certificate was revoked by you because in view of his depressive state it was felt he was not suitable to hold firearms? - Yes.

If you go on to 1994, the second entry, a gentleman's shotgun certificate was revoked because of marital problems and it was felt he was not stable to hold a shotgun? - I think there was medical evidence on that particular one.

And/

And then in the next page, the second entry, a gentleman's shotgun certificate was revoked -- had been revoked previously -- eventually he got a certificate and then he was convicted of assault? - That was one where the previous convictions prevented the man getting a certificate over a long number of years and he applied year after year. Eventually the convictions became quite old, the evidence was that he had changed his ways completely, he was now safe to hold a firearms certificate, but unfortunately that didn't prove to be the case.

Then in 1995, the second entry, a shotgun certificate is revoked because of the applicant sexually abusing his step-daughters, and a letter was received to say he was medically unfit to possess a shotgun? - Yes.

Just generally speaking, it would be open to you to require anyone to undergo medical examination or to require medical evidence of somebody's fitness before coming to a decision? - Medical evidence was volunteered in that instance.

But might you say to somebody: well, we are seriously concerned about your mental state and in the absence of satisfaction in the form of medical evidence that you are medically fit we will refuse you a firearms licence? - I didn't have the power to look at anybody's medical records.

That is not quite an answer to the question. Might there be circumstances where you would have a concern as to an applicant's mental state and intimate to him that until he satisfied you by medical evidence his application would fail? - I have never done that and never heard of it done either.

I did not ask you whether you had ever done it or ever heard of it being done. I am asking you whether you can envisage such a circumstance might come about? - It is possible.

At the foot of that page a gentleman's shotgun certificate is refused, it is in somewhat similar circumstances to the previous one, refused because the applicant was sexually abusing his grandchildren and where he was thought to be medically/medically unfit to possess a shotgun? - That was the view of the doctor. These were brought to our attention by family members.

And you sought medical evidence, did you? - Yes, medical evidence was produced.

So whatever else it would appear that there are documented examples in recent days that certificates have been revoked in the absence of any criminal conviction? - That is so.

Can I take it that there is one point of distinction between these examples which I have just given and Hamilton, in that Hamilton had proved himself over the years to be a troublemaker? - A troublemaker?

Yes, trouble? - What do you mean by that?

Well, is it not a reasonable description of somebody continuing to make unfounded complaints and putting you to all the bother which he did? - He certainly put me to considerable trouble; there is no doubt about that.

That would be a point of distinction as between Hamilton and most if not all of these other cases? - Well, I honestly couldn't tell you. I think there will be a few troublemakers among that lot as well.

Must have been pretty clear to you that if you had revoked Hamilton's certificates then that would have inevitably provoked complaints to all and sundry? - I don't think so. I think he would have gone to the Sheriff. I don't think there is any doubt about that. I wouldn't have been bothered about that, if I had good reason to take it away.

Only human nature, wouldn't it be, to have regard to the troubled history of unjust complaints and bother that Hamilton put you to? - I think it would be the only avenue he would have to go to the Sheriff, same as everybody else who had their certificate revoked. That wasn't a problem.

But did the history not demonstrate or strongly indicate that whether he went to the Sheriff/

Sheriff or not there would be letters written to almost everybody you can think of complaining about what you had done? - I don't know I can answer that question. I would have thought he would have put in that position to be reviewed in front of the Sheriff. I don't think I am really concerned about anything else.

Am I correct in understanding that Detective Sergeant Hughes has received promotion since? - Indeed.

Since this memorandum? - Yes.

What position does he hold? - Chief Inspector.

He is a University graduate; is that right? - I don't think so.

Detective Sergeant Hughes? - I don't think so.

I may have got that wrong. Did you consider that in exercising your discretion in these matters you exercised any form of what may be described as preventative police work? In other words, let's anticipate a problem before it happens? - Yes.

However, the general culture in your Department appears to have been that nothing could be done until a person was convicted of a criminal offence? - I don't think that is the case. You have been through quite a number of cases which are quite to the contrary. I was going on to say it is true to say that about 80 per cent of the revocations in Scotland rest on conviction, that's a fact.

We heard evidence yesterday from Police Constable Anderson to the effect that she was, putting it generally, concerned about Hamilton's conduct towards her when she visited him in the course of her investigation? - I didn't know anything about that.

And she spoke to Detective Inspector Anderson about this who told her that in the absence of criminal convictions nothing could be done? - That is not the case obviously.

And/

4.00 p.m.

And it was made quite plain to her that in the absence of criminal convictions there was really no point in her recording her concerns because the eventual outcome would be just the same? - I don't know anything about that.

Would you agree that that would be the direct opposite of preventive police work in this context? - Yes. I mean, even when you are talking about preventive, and you are talking about previous convictions -- for example let us say a man had two or three drunk driving convictions. Now, there is nothing at all which is violent or whatever. I have no doubt it would be preventive by taking away his firearm certificate, because if he is going to be so reckless in his attitude to the proper use of the car then he might be equally reckless in the use of the firearm -- and that is when he has not done anything like physical assault or violence, or the use of the firearm wrongly.

It has been suggested in this Inquiry that this terrible tragedy can be blamed upon some fault or defect in the law. Do you subscribe to that theory? - I think the law could be improved.

In what way? - Well, I would have questioned, post 1988 when we took away the rifle, which had a similar shooting capacity to the guns Hamilton had, and I wonder why they weren't taken away at that time. I think there could be much more helpful Home Office Guidance to police officers. It is very vague in certain areas -- and this could be tightened up. I also would question whether in fact if a person was using a gun for shooting at a pistol Club, whether he actually need have that gun at home at all.....

BY LORD CULLEN: We really would like to hear what you are saying. We are not hearing you? - Sorry. I am saying I really honestly can't see why a person needs to have a firearm at his home at all if he is shooting at a Club. Now, I understand at the moment Clubs wouldn't be safe places to keep firearms on many occasions, but the law can lay down conditions in which it would be safety to keep firearms there.

What/

What is that last point you were making? - The security could be very much improved.

At the Clubs? - Yes, and the firearms could be there as opposed to being in the person's house. I don't really understand why he needs a gun in the house at all if he shoots in a firearms Club.

He doesn't need it at home. There is no purpose for it being at home. I think too even the rifle weapons that were available to Mr. Hamilton, I really honestly don't see any need for that type of firearm to be on the market. There is a thing that concerns me -- and I am not just too sure what the right way about it is -- but I was interested this morning when there was put to me various information by members of the public who had come forward after the event of Dunblane to say "I was asked". Did you know about this? Did you know about that?" And I have also seen it mentioned that the person should advertise that he wants a gun. I know the danger -- you are saying it would advertise where the person lived, if he had firearms; but if they were kept within a Club in most cases, that position wouldn't arise. And what interests me is the fact that I have had various hypothetical situations put to me which were coming from people who have thrown into this Inquiry facts and circumstances which the police were totally unaware of. And what I am saying is if we had known all those facts, if people could be encouraged to come forward and tell us all they know about a person, then we would be in a better position to have a full assessment of the facts.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: One very noticeable feature about this tragic case is that relatively little that is new has been learned about Hamilton since the incident? - Indeed.

Almost all of the information which we have before us just now was information available to Central Scotland Police before the incident occurred? - Yes.

So, whatever else, the view that was taken by you as to Hamilton's fitness tragically was erroneous? - If we had been sitting here on the 12th March discussing this matter I don't know what conclusion we would have come to, on the evidence; but/but clearly with hindsight, which is a great thing, Mr. Hamilton ought not to have had firearms; but it is a different question if we had been discussing it on the 12th March.

Detective Sergeant Hughes didn't need the benefit of hindsight -- you agree? - In 1981 he was predicting that this would happen in 1996?

In 1991 Detective Sergeant Hughes was telling you that Hamilton was an unsuitable person to have firearms? - He had no evidence to support that.

And that recommendation was supported by Mr. Holden? - At that time. I think if you asked Mr. Holden what his view was after he had had the benefit of a two hour interview, it might be quite different.

Who in Central Scotland Police takes responsibility for the decisions that were taken concerning Hamilton's certificates? - Me.

Are you, to your knowledge, the most senior police officer who will be giving evidence at this Inquiry from Central Scotland Police -- or former officer? - As far as I am aware.

What lessons, if any, has Central Scotland Police Force learned from this tragic event? - Central Scotland Police will be having a full debrief on this whole incident to see what lessons can be learned.

What lessons have been learned as a result of this tragic event to date, to your knowledge?

MR. TAYLOR: Before the witness answers that question, it requires to be borne in mind that he is no longer a member of Central Scotland Police Force, having left the Force on the 1st April.

I am authorised to say it is the intention of Central Scotland Police Force to make a submission to your lordship in terms of which they will be indicating to your lordship areas where they consider -- instances where learning can take place.

LORD/

LORD CULLEN: Do you want to press the point in view of that?

MR. CAMPBELL: Yes, please, Sir.

LORD CULLEN: In what respect then?

MR. CAMPBELL: Perhaps I can rephrase it.

LORD CULLEN: Well, rephrase it and we will see what happens next.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: You were the individual who took the decisions in the end of the day? - Yes.

I mean, this was just an awful tragedy, and you must have turned it over in your mind many times? - It has never been out it.

What lessons do you think can be learned from what happened? - I mean, to be frank with you, I left Central Scotland Police a matter of weeks after it. I don't want to make a hasty decision here about what lessons Central Scotland Police can learn. I am sure everybody who was involved in this will be sitting down and looking at every aspect of the whole business and seeing what changes can be made and what lessons can be learned. I don't want to make some off-the-cuff remark here when I haven't even been involved in it.

Well, is it a possibility that one lesson might be learned, namely that if any senior police officer has any doubt whatsoever about an individual's suitability then that should be acted upon immediately in a positive way? - I think that is what always happened.

And if we look at Page -- to go back to your statement just for a moment, at Page 19 -- I am sorry, yours is not paginated. It is about halfway through and it begins on the top "On 14th February 1989 I signed Mr. Hamilton's firearm certificate, formally renewing it for the next three years". Have you got that? - Yes.

We read there "In reality, unless as I have previously stated, there was something which the/the staff within the Firearms Department or Senior Police Officer in Headquarters Administration, to whom they reported, required to draw to my attention, this and all other similar uncontested applications were routinely passed to me. In this type of instance there would be no need for me to refer to the actual Firearms File. I should make it clear that even where the grant or renewal was recommended, if there was some adverse comment the file was brought to me for final decision"? - Yes.

Can I suggest for your consideration that one lesson may be that no application should ever again be categorised as "uncontested"? - Well, what I mean by that is if there is nothing in that file for me to read other than the person who made the inquiry saying "The applicant I think is suitable", and the Chief Superintendent or whoever it was saying "I recommend this" -- I mean, what is the point of me looking at something there which would in no way influence my decision? I mean, it is purely an administrative process. If the decision is taken earlier then I am going to learn absolutely nothing from reading the file.

The legislation, presumably for good reason, has asked the Chief Officer to consider the matter? - Yes.

Not some subordinate further down the chain? - I take your point.

The obvious difficulty in this system -- among a number of others, if I may respectfully suggest to you -- is that you were proceeding on the basis of decisions taken below, and those below were proceeding on the basis that you would take the decision upstairs? - I am sorry, I just can't agree with you on this one. I mean, if there was anything at all in that file which in anyway would influence my decision, the file was brought to me. If there was nothing for me to read on the file I see no point in bringing it to me. I mean, it really isn't adding anything to it.

You see, the clear implication of your statement here is that in the absence of any adverse comment from officers below this was treated as a matter of routine? - All the checks had been made. There was nothing to tell me -- other than to say the officer had done all the inquiry, and there was nothing -- the senior officer agreed with them. I mean, what reason is there for me to read it when there is absolutely nothing there for me to read? I mean, I could certainly have the file in future brought in front of me, but it wouldn't add one whit to it.

Would you agree in general terms that any system of firearms licensing should be rigorous and effective? - Yes.

Both in concepts and in enforcement? - Yes.

Would you agree with me that one lesson to be learned from this terrible event is that Central Scotland Police Force failed to identify Hamilton as an unfit person? - That is clear.

And that, given all the information that Central Scotland Police Force had about Hamilton, one can have very little confidence that other "Hamiltons" are not at large in this area today? - They could be anywhere in the country.

BY LORD CULLEN: If you agree that they failed, as I understand you do, where was the failure? - We have a man who has shot children. I am not saying there was a failure in anything that we did. I don't think anybody could have done anything which would have weeded this individual out, but clearly how can I say otherwise when somebody has shot so many people, than that somebody got through the system but ought not to have. I mean, I just couldn't answer the question in any other way.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: You have agreed that any firearms licensing system should be rigorous and effective? - Yes.

And you have agreed that that should apply not only to the conceptual framework, but also to/

to the implementation of that framework? - Yes.

Trying to lift our eyes above and beyond this terrible tragedy, to the future, can I seek your help in this way: suppose one comes to a position whereby society at large can have no confidence that any firearms licensing regime will be rigorous and effective in these two manners -- it is a hypothesis I am putting to you.....? - If you are expecting me to say that whatever system we put in will be 100 per cent foolproof, I doubt if you can have that, quite frankly.

That is helpful, thank you. Do you think any system would have identified Hamilton as an unfit person? - No. In all the time I have known Hamilton I never ever dreamt for a moment this man would be dangerous with a firearm. My only concern about him was whether his actions towards youth were totally wholesome, which was a different matter entirely. I never dreamt for one moment that Hamilton would do such a thing, that he would be dangerous with a firearm.

If one does reach the view -- I appreciate it is a big "if" - - but if one does reach the view that we can have no confidence that any system would be put in place and implemented which will identify other "Hamiltons", if I can put it that way, in that very general way, would you agree that those who make the rules in our society face a very stark choice either to ban such weapons more or less completely, or even completely, on the one hand, or on the other hand tolerate the risks that flow from the possibility that unfit persons may have lawful possession of firearms? - Yes. I think there are various ways you could think of to try to tighten it up, but at the end of the day to have some system which is 100 per cent foolproof, I obviously don't believe that would ever be possible. I mean, I have tried to suggest that supposing Mr. Hamilton even had the exact same firearms as he had now, if they had been kept at a club under lock and key for his own use, then he wouldn't have had the use of them outside. And this is one of my suggestions. But quite frankly, there is lots of things you could put in which would improve the situation, but to ask me can we ever have a 100 per cent system, I doubt if we ever can. You never know when somebody is suddenly going to crack.

4.20 p.m.

And one issue which presents itself to the law-makers, would you agree, is whether indulging those who want to spend their leisure hours using firearms outweighs the risk flowing from ready availability, lawful ready availability of firearms? - I don't think there is any comparison. I would ban them before suffering another crisis like this.

FRIDAY, 14th JUNE, 1996.

THIRTEENTH DAY.

DOUGLAS McMURDO (Recalled)

MR. CAMPBELL: I have no further questions for the witness.

MR. GIBB: Can I simply say, as I think I said previously, Mr. Campbell and Mr. Bonomy have ably covered the concerns I had on behalf of the Mayor family and in light of the police view they will review their procedures in-house I do not need to cross-examine on these matters.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: Mr. McMurdo, I would like to explore with you just exactly what it was that was in your mind at the various periods of time with which we are concerned. The starting point is the incident which took place at Inchmoan Island in 1988. Can you tell us what it was that you analysed the Inchmoan Island incident to amount to? - Yes. The Inchmoan Island event showed in my view a number of matters with regard to the running of boys camps which could have been improved upon. First of all, in my personal view there were insufficient supervisors at the particular camp. There were incidents happened there which ought not to have happened at a camp such as drunken behaviour, albeit not by Mr. Hamilton, but nevertheless it did take place at a camp. Whether there was total consideration of the children's comfort and interests, wet trunks, is a matter of opinion, but nevertheless they were things which we debated. We also debated the question of whether physical chastisement was right or was wrong in the circumstances. So we talked through a host of things and I thought it was a learning point there in terms of running a camp. I am not an expert on it but really it was about the way in which a youth leader conducted himself when running a boys camp.

But apart from your own ability to analyse the statements which had been obtained -- sorry, can I just check that with you, did you have the statements which had been obtained? - I certainly had a summary of the case and I knew a fair bit about it.

You would have had an opportunity to have discussions with other officers? - Indeed.

In fact, we have heard that you requested Mr. Mill to have an informal look at the conduct of the two officers against whom a complaint was eventually made? - That is so.

Did you enter into dialogue with Mr. Mill after he had carried out that investigation? - Yes.

Did Mr. Mill at any time express any reservation about Mr. Hamilton's continuing to have possession of a firearm? - Not at all. The whole consideration was whether he was a suitable youth leader.

So after Mr. Mill had carried out his inspection, albeit informal, Inspector Keenan then became involved on a formal footing; is that correct? - Correct.

After Inspector Keenan had produced his report did you have dialogue with him? - Yes, I did.

In the course of that dialogue did Inspector Keenan at any time raise concern about Mr. Hamilton being a suitable person to be in possession of a firearm? - Again all his concern was restricted to his suitability as a youth leader.

Did you have respect for these two officers? - I did.

And when you came to form views as to whether or not there should be revocation or whether there should be renewal were these views taken into account by you in influencing your decision? - We take into consideration all we hear and see.

I think you told us yesterday this was Mr. Hamilton's 55th camp? - That is correct.

Had the manner in which he conducted himself at the previous 54 camps ever come to your attention? - Well, I wasn't in the Central Scotland Police area over all of that time but I have not ever heard anybody say there had been a complaint from the previous camps.

What was the position to your knowledge taken by the parents of the children who attended Inchmoan camp? - They were mixed. Some parents were dissatisfied; others were satisfied. There were independent people who thought it was the best camp they had been to, they had been there for years, so there was a very mixed response from parents and people who visited the camp.

Did you later learn that the Procurator-Fiscal had elected to take no proceedings in relation to the Inchmoan incident; is that correct? - Yes. I hadn't heard anything up until the point that I had Inspector Keenan's report, and if you look at the summary which is at the start of that report Inspector Keenan suggested to me that perhaps some of the witnesses that he had interviewed might not have been interviewed in the course of the Strathclyde enquiry.

I think you told us this yesterday? - He suggested I send the report over which I did.

Now, you told us yesterday that you had a meeting with Mr. Hamilton on the 31st October, 1989? - That is so.

Can you tell me what the purpose of that meeting was from your perspective? - Yes. There has been considerable correspondence, as we heard yesterday, between us, and clearly there was just no way that by letter we could ever reach agreement. It was my hope that we could sit down and discuss in an open and frank way the various issues and come to some resolution of the matter.

Can you tell us very briefly if you can just what sort of points you were putting to Mr. Hamilton in the course of that meeting? - Yes. There were really two issues in it, because in the first instance he clearly thought our intervention at the camp was quite unjustified and that the camp had been run very well indeed. So the first part of the interview was with me saying to him various issues that had arisen to my knowledge at the camp which I thought were unsatisfactory. I told him too I was doubtful about the age, as young as eight, for the type of camp he was running, I didn't personally think it was appropriate.

What/

What was that type of camp? - Well, it was quite rugged. His view was it was boys who needed toughening up, he wanted to get discipline into them, healthy bodies meant healthy minds and all the rest of it. For someone of eight I just couldn't equate that point of view. But I am not expert in it, it was only a personal opinion. In the letter writing he was trying hard to get an assurance from me that I wouldn't intervene with a future camp but I couldn't give him that assurance, but I tried to help him on how we might prevent it.

When you were putting the various points to him which caused you concern in relation to the camp did he have answers for each of the points which you put to him? - By and large, but there were some points on which he gave way and accepted, yes, that ought not to have happened.

On the points which he didn't give way on and which he provided answers for did you accept these answers? - They were very logical. Whether there were some points that myself -- they were well reasoned.

Did you find in the course of the interview that you were forming a view about him that he was an irrational man? - Not at all.

Did you form the view during the course of the interview that he was in any way unstable? - No.

So does it really come to this, that you were expressing some views, he was expressing the opposite view in some respects which you could follow but which you didn't necessarily agree with? - Yes. I mean, the points I made that he ought to improve the camp, for example, he said, "Well, look, you are pricing this out of the market. I am trying to run camps in many cases for people who can ill afford the holiday I'm trying to give them." Some of my suggestions were going to make the camp quite a bit more expensive.

Did the impression which you formed of Hamilton at that meeting influence you in the decisions which you had to make on subsequent occasions? - Yes. We had a very good discussion, and at the end of it we shook hands and went away quite/quite amicably. I mean, we fully disagreed or didn't disagree in an angry fashion. It was quite an amicable discussion.

After you had met with Mr. Hamilton on 31st October Inspector Mill came back on to the scene, as I understand it; is that your understanding? - I think that was in relation to one of the officers being a Scout leader as I recall. There was certainly that incident, yes.

Do you recall that Inspector Mill had occasion to visit Milarrochy camp? - We are not talking about the Inchmoan one. This is a later year he visited the camp, not that year.

We heard evidence from others in the course of the Inquiry that Mr. Hamilton had been extending interviews to the police to attend camps following the 1988 camp? - He was very keen we attend any of them that we wished.

And to your knowledge did the Inspector take that up? - That is so.

Did you hear from Inspector Keenan after he had taken that up? - He had no complaint to make at that time.

We heard yesterday of the fact that Mr. Hamilton wouldn't accept Mr. Mill's informal report and also Mr. Keenan's informal report and that subsequently there was a report completed by Mr. Moulson. I wonder if you could have before you the letter D61K (DCD102). You should have before you a letter from Mr. Sim, Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary? - Yes.

I think this is a letter in which he says that because of the circumstances of the complaints made by Mr. Hamilton and the very large correspondence which followed he deemed it appropriate that Superintendent Moulson prepared a detailed report for his consideration. "I am most grateful for the assistance he received from you and your officers in undertaking this task. I have now had an opportunity to study the report and Superintendent Moulson's statement and I enclose a copy of the letter I have sent to Mr. Hamilton"? - That is it.

It/

It does appear that supports the evidence you gave yesterday to the effect you didn't have sight of Superintendent Moulson's report? - No, I didn't.

Following the incident in 1988 we have heard of the considerable volume of correspondence which you had with Mr. Hamilton, but from that date until 19991 at the Milarrochy camp did Mr. Hamilton come to the adverse attention of you or any other member of the Force throughout that period in any way? - Not that I'm aware of.

So if it hadn't been for the fact he was making these complaints about the conduct of the two officers you wouldn't have had any contact with Hamilton in that three year period? - That is so.

Now, yesterday you were asked to have a look at some of the statements from the boys who attended the Milarrochy camp. Whilst I am not proposing to take up much of the Tribunal's time I think it may be helpful if we were to look at some of the alternative views which were expressed in fairness to yourself. I wonder if you can have D3K before you. I think we have established already this doesn't have an alternative number; it could be DFU145. You should have before you a report to the Procurator-Fiscal, Stirling, in the case of Thomas Watt Hamilton? - Yes.

I wonder if you could look please at a statement from a child which you will find at pages 41 to 43. The initials should be GW? - That is so.

We see there the child indicates that he is nine years of age? - Yes.

And says that he attends one of the sports clubs run by Mr. Hamilton? - Yes.

The last sentence on that first page says that he likes Mr. Hamilton? - Yes, "I like Mr. Hamilton".

I think when one goes to the second paragraph on the next page he says that he liked the camp but there was one of the boys whom he didn't like and he named that child? - Yes.

He/

He said he didn't like him because he was a bully? -
Yes.

He kept bullying some of the other boys? - Yes.

He goes on to say he saw him kick and punch another child? - Yes.

The child who had done the kicking and punching had been taken into a tent and emerged crying? - That is so.

And then if we go on to the next paragraph where it is said they were playing football again and the same child kicked the person whom he had previously kicked; do we see that? - Yes, he did the same again.

And again the perpetrator of the kicking was taken into a tent? - Yes.

And/

10.20 a.m.

And if we move on to Pages 48 to 50 we have a statement there from the child who was subjected to the kicking and the punching; do you see that? - Yes.

And he states his age as being that of eight and states at the bottom "I like Mr. Hamilton. We play football and acrobatic stuff at the Clubs". Do you see that at the bottom of the page? - Yes I do.

And if we turn over the page we see in the third paragraph that the person giving the statement didn't like a particular individual because he kept on being bullied by him? - Yes.

And he was hit on the eye with a stone? - Yes.

And the person who had caused the witness to be hit on the eye with a stone was given a row by Mr. Hamilton? - Yes.

And then he goes on to describe the footballing incident which was spoken to by the other child? - Yes.

And he goes at the very end of the statement to say that he liked his holiday, he did like Mr. Hamilton but he didn't want to go back, he missed his Mum and he didn't like chicken curry? - Yes.

Now, those were the views which were expressed by two of the children? - Yes.

There were also in this report some statements from some of the adults; is that correct? - Yes, an adult leader.

And I think from some of the parents of the children as well? - Yes.

Could you very briefly look at Pages 70 to 72, and we find there a statement from somebody who has "D" for the first initial of his surname? - Yes.

And/

And he tells us that he has known Mr. Hamilton for about two years and he has helped Mr. Hamilton on a Friday night, and he has allowed his son to go to both Clubs which he knew Mr. Hamilton was then organising? - Yes.

And he then describes the activities as being football, swimming, relay racing and some exercises? - Yes.

He tells us in the next statement that his son has been on three camps? - Yes.

And he concludes by saying that he is more than happy with his son going on camp and more than happy with Mr. Hamilton's handling of the kids? - Yes.

And he had no problem with the supervision of the kids, as Mr. Hamilton can handle them? - That is so.

But in order to get a proper view and a proper perspective of this one would really need to look at them all, wouldn't one? - Yes. That was what I said yesterday. You can take selective items, but you have to take an overview of them.

And do I take it that you did look at all of the statements when they came to you at the time shortly after the camp incident? - Indeed.

Put briefly, what was it that the facts amounted to in relation to the Milarrochy Camp? - I think that it does again raise concerns about whether or not he was a suitable person to run a camp, despite some very favourable statements, there are others which are not favourable. And the whole problem I have got about it, I don't think there was sufficient supervision. Again, it is quite interesting that in the second week of that particular camp you can see some of the statements from the children who were at the second week, with the additional helper it went very very smoothly. And the root cause of this I think was there were far too many kids there for one person, no matter how capable.

In terms of assault/chastisement, how many children were actually subjected to such conduct/conduct by Mr. Hamilton? - On this occasion, one.

And on each occasion was it after that child had done something which most would consider to be wrong? - Yes. One was the stone-throwing incident, and then there was the two times when he allegedly, one of the boys, kicked and punched one of the boys on the football field.

I think there was an incident on one of the boats as well? - Yes, but that is spoken to in different fashions, but it would appear that he was leaning over the side of the boat.

I think some of the statements suggested Mr. Hamilton might have been shouting and swearing on occasion? - Yes.

In the report is any explanation accorded by Mr. Hamilton as to why he might have been shouting and swearing? - He said the shouting and swearing came to him first, and he replied in kind.

And I think there was also some suspicion regarding certain photographs? - Yes.

What did you take from the statements in relation to the photographing of the children? - This is a difficult one. We never ever came across a photograph which anybody could describe as indecent, but he did seem to take a tremendous number of photographs, taking photographs of children in activities and poses -- this is something some of us don't feel comfortable about, but not something you could put your finger on and say it was an offence.

And on looking at the statements does one form the view that Mr. Hamilton might not have been fully forthright with the inspecting officers in relation to the number of schools? - It would appear so, yes.

Yesterday you were shown a document which was D94K and I don't think it is necessary for it to be before you just now. It was a memorandum from Mr. Holden, and was dated, from memory, round about 12th August of 1991? - Yes. This was an update on the inquiry report.

That/

That is correct, yes? - Yes.

Now, did I understand you to say yesterday that you had been aware of the investigation which was taking place in relation to the Milarrochy Camp before you received that memorandum? - Yes, indeed. I had letters from I think Mr. Hamilton, even, before that date, so I was getting constant updates about what was going on from my senior investigating officers.

And did that dialogue with the senior officers continue through their investigation? - Yes indeed.

I wonder if you could have before you document D154K, the alternative reference being DDH202. That should be a letter from yourself dated the 6th May 1992 addressed to Mr. Hamilton; is that it? - That is correct.

And this is a letter in which you are informing Mr. Hamilton of the fact you are aware of the formal complaint against the police pertaining to the police inquiry of the 1991 Summer Camp, and the fact that Inspector Ferguson had investigated the camp, and you now have his report? - That is so.

If one goes over to the second page of the letter we see in the second paragraph that you first of all narrate the assertion made by Mr. Hamilton that the police officers have, by tone and innuendo, influenced the parents of children into staying away from Clubs and summer camps wasn't borne out in the statements which had been taken? - That is so.

And then you go on to give a balanced view by saying that while some parents and children do not wish to return, and the reasons range from lack of supervision, being bullied, favouritism being shown, pumping them for information, and so on, you then in the next paragraph set out the alternative views? - Yes, that is so.

Can you just read what these alternative views are for us please? - "A number of the parents have in fact indicated their support for your Clubs and camps, and the following comments were/were noted: 'My son still goes to the Club and I would not stop him going to the camps'. 'My son still goes occasionally to the Boys' Club and I would allow him to go to another camp'. 'Mr. Hamilton does good work and my son still goes to the Club and if he so wished would be allowed to attend another camp'. 'I personally think Mr. Hamilton's commitment to the Boys' Club is excellent'".

BY LORD CULLEN: Just for the notes, I think these are a series of quotations, are they, all from different parents? - They are all from different parents.

You read them out without indicating they were -- it is just for the notes? - I beg your pardon.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

TAYLOR: And again were the views of the parents which we see expressed in that letter matters which were taken into account by you in the decisions you made in relation to firearms? - Yes.

The next incident which one comes across when looking at this in chronological order is the incident at the summer camp which was held by Mr. Hamilton in Dunblane? - Yes.

What in your view did that amount to? - I think there was three boys had wandered out of the school, I understand.

And what time of day? - I think it was about 10 o'clock at night.

And what did you read into this in relation to Mr. Hamilton's character? - I don't know what you could read about his character.

Well, perhaps that wasn't a particularly well-framed question. What did this inform you of Mr. Hamilton, if anything? - Well, you could say perhaps a lack of supervision, that it wasn't what it ought to have been.

And after that I think we have heard evidence of a number of incidents at various Boys' Clubs which were run by Mr. Hamilton? - Yes.

Can/

Can you tell us just in your view and in your perception what these amounted to? - They all really had a similar vein, that he was taking pictures of boys in black shorts or black trunks and bare chests, and parents felt uneasy about this. On any occasion to your knowledge did the boys appear to be alarmed or concerned? - It usually came from the parents.

Was there any evidence of any improper act? - None at all.

I think it was at this point that you asked the officers in the Child Protection Unit if they would make some inquiries of the Procurator-Fiscal? - Yes.

And we have heard that they sought a search warrant in respect of Mr. Hamilton? - Yes.

To your knowledge was that search warrant granted? - I don't think so.

Did that say anything to you about the view which the Fiscal was taking in relation to the incident? - Well, I could understand the Fiscal's view, because I mean it is very very difficult to see any criminal offence in a child in swimming trunks or shorts and bare-chested. I mean, what was the Fiscal going to see in that?

And meanwhile, whilst these issues were coming to you attention, Mr. Hamilton continued to correspond with you in relation to this dissatisfaction over the conduct of the police; is that correct? - I didn't have all that much from him, I don't think, from about mid-1994. I can't really recall much correspondence from him from around that date.

Yes. I think it did start to taper off about 1994? - Yes. We had a sort of flurry when the new Chief came, but really from I would say somewhere about mid-1994, if my memory serves me right, I don't think I was in correspondence.

I think there might have been some letters, but nothing like the correspondence there was before? - Well, there could have been some copy to me for my information.

But in any event there was the occasion when Mr. Hamilton made the complaint to the Scottish Office, and this resulted in an inquiry coming from them which you responded to by letter of 14th January 1992? - Yes, I did.

And I think it would be helpful if you did have that letter before you. It is D33K, and it is Production No. DCD174. Now, this is a letter which we have already spent some time going over in the course of your evidence? - Yes.

And I would just like to spend a little more time looking at it. The first paragraph, which was taken from you, was that contained on the first page, the second paragraph, where it says that "Every point repetitively and tediously dragged up by Mr. Hamilton has been examined and re-examined, explained and re-explained to the point where I am seriously considering referring the matter to the Legal Department of the police authority".

10.40 a.m.

You told us yesterday that having taken advice you did not take the matter any further in Court? - That is so.

And then if we go over the page we see in the third paragraph, in the final sentence, you say "How Hamilton can draw a sinister inference from such a healthy and worthwhile pastime....." -- that is being involved in Scout and other youth organisations -- "..... is beyond my comprehension"? - Yes.

Now, this may seem a silly question perhaps but what do you mean by "comprehension"? What does "to comprehend" mean to you? - To understand.

So are you saying no more there than you could not understand Mr. Hamilton? Is that what it comes to? - I think I did say yesterday that if I learned one lesson from writing this letter, if you write it when you have lost your cool, leave it till the next day to sign it.

Yes, I mean, what I was trying to say was that he seemed to be of the opinion that we were biased because we had people connected with the Scouts which was not so and I couldn't understand that.

And over the page in the second paragraph, the second whole paragraph on page 3, it is stated in common with most right-minded people I am proud of the connection between Central Scotland Police and all the youth organisations with which we work". The phrase "right-minded" is one which I think you have used? - I use that quite a bit. I just mean ordinary people.

You are not there meaning any sort of psychiatric analysis, are you? - No. I mean, unfortunately this is a letter which was written in a totally different context and is being picked over word by word and it was written not with regard to his capabilities with firearms but because I was by this time totally annoyed with the number of letters written about complaints and I think we are looking at it in a totally different light today.

You see, you use the word "zealot" as we read/read about yesterday. What did you mean by the word "zealot"? - Well, really somebody who pursues a cause with great determination.

And are we to read into it no more than that? - No.

You also just above that make reference to his "ever more irrational outpourings". Now, you have also indicated that in October of 1989 you did not consider him to be irrational. That is following your meeting with him? - I regret making that remark.

BY LORD CULLEN: When you say you regret it, are you saying that it was not justified or are you saying it is unfortunate you said it? - No, I am saying it was unjustified, my lord. Can I elaborate, my lord?

If you wish to, yes? - I thought he had taken things to considerable lengths and that is as far as I would go on that one.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

TAYLOR: And you were trying to stop him from taking them to even further lengths, is that correct? - Well, that was the whole purpose of the letter.

BY LORD CULLEN: You see, on the previous page, you do say of Hamilton that his attitude indicated a certain lack of perspective. So was it your point of view that he could not, in certain respects, see matters in their proper perspective? That is the paragraph right in the middle of the previous page? - Yes, "For Mr. Hamilton to see his tiny local organisation as a serious rival to Scouting Movement indicates a certain lack of perspective". Yes, I mean, I may have been lacking a bit in understanding there as well. I mean, Mr. Hamilton as far as the local situation was concerned spent four and five nights a week with various boys' clubs and it was probably a bit churlish of me to say that his organisation could not be a serious rival to the Scout Movement which had been going for I don't know how many years and it is a world-wide movement but in terms of locality, probably Mr. Hamilton as an individual did a great deal for the youth and perhaps it was a bit churlish/churlish of me to put it in that way.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

TAYLOR: Well, perhaps Mr. Hamilton's little organisation might not have been a serious rival to the Scout Movement on a national basis but looked at locally from his perspective would it be reasonable for him to conclude that perhaps he was a rival? - Well, that is what I am trying to say. In terms of a world-wide Movement it clearly was not but in terms of locality he had quite a number of boys at various clubs.

But in any event, what is important at this stage is what your perception is of the facts. Do you still come to the view that describing Mr. Hamilton as having a certain lack of perspective was a fair summary to apply? - No, I have indicated you could take that view of a world-wide scheme but locally you couldn't say that.

Also in that letter you make reference to Mr. Hamilton taking a point which at one stage in the dialogue appears to have been settled but then finding that he reintroduces it in another guise and adjusts the facts selectively to suit his aims and it all begins again? - Yes.

Is that something or an attribute which is unique to Mr. Hamilton? - Unfortunately not.

Does one find such attributes relatively commonplace?
- Yes. I am afraid that in my position as Depute Chief Constable we do have a number of people who complain about things and you write a letter of explanation and you get it back slightly changed, slightly altered, picked up on one or two words you have said in your letter and quite frankly it goes on and on and on and on. It is not all that strange. Indeed, since I've been in my present post I have seen similar people from all Forces in Scotland and I have only been there two months.

Is it not just a function of somebody looking at a set of facts from a different perspective from another person? - Yes, indeed.

BY LORD CULLEN: But we have heard yesterday and seen correspondence where he seemed to have/have expressed satisfaction? - Yes.

And all seemed to be well and yet a matter of months later he returns with the theme with even greater vigour? - Yes.

Now, is that usual or unusual in your experience in dealing with awkward people? - Yes, they sit and think and brood over it and come up with another opinion.

Well, is it common or uncommon? - Yes, it is fairly common, sir.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

TAYLOR: Now, in October of 1991, who was your Chief Superintendent? Can you remember? - I think it was John Adamson.

I wonder if you could have DI05K which is DCDI56 before you please. This is a letter addressed to Mrs. Mary Hogg at the Scottish Office and it is dated 3rd October 1991 and it appears to have been signed by a Chief Superintendent and the Chief Superintendent has initialled the copy letter which is what we have as a Production? - Yes, that is John Adamson.

How closely did you work with John Adamson? - At that time John Adamson was if you like my right-hand man and he was the person who always deputised for me when I was on annual leave.

How often would you be in conversation with your Chief Superintendent at that time? - I would say, if I wasn't away on other business, every day. I mean, I kept him informed on all that was going on because he undertook my duties when I wasn't there.

And would he have been aware of the actings of Mr. Hamilton? - Yes.

LORD CULLEN: Perhaps that is a matter we should ask Mr. Adamson about. We may have that opportunity.

MR. TAYLOR: Very good, sir, in which event we will leave that letter for the next witness as well perhaps.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

TAYLOR: Still looking at the matters which influence you, we have heard evidence that Mr. Hamilton first acquired his firearms certificate in 1977 and apart from the incident in Linlithgow in the early 1990s involving the photographs which we have already heard evidence about, has any other improper use of a firearm by Mr. Hamilton been brought to your attention? - No.

And was that a factor which influenced you in the decision which you had to make in relation to him holding a firearm? - I think I explained yesterday I thought that was innocent.

I don't want to go into the facts of that incident but leaving aside that fact and looking at the negative if you like, the fact that there was not anything else drawn to your attention during that period from 1977, was that a matter which influenced you? - I understand. Yes.

Now, yesterday the statement which you gave to a police officer was put to you and I wonder if you could have that again in front of you. It is Statement 909L and the page which I would like you to look at again, if it is numbered correctly, is page No. 12. It should start at the top with a paragraph saying "Looking back since 1991....."? - Yes, "Looking back since 1991....."

Yes, it is not that particular paragraph I would like you to look at, however. It is the next one which is the one where you say "In each and every case that I considered I held public safety as being paramount. However, I was also conscious of the freedom of the individual and remaining within the parameters of the discretion given to me under the law. I never revoked or refused an application unless I had reason to do so"? - Yes.

Now, you answered a number of questions which were put to you yesterday in relation to that paragraph and I wonder if the answers which you gave could be summarised as being that in that paragraph which has just been read you are no more than saying that you have to make your decision by applying the relevant statutory provision? - Indeed.

And that if an individual meets the criteria/criteria set down in the statute for possession of a firearm you have a duty to issue to him a firearms certificate? - Yes.

Is that what you were meaning to convey in that passage? - Well, that was the full meaning, yes.

Now, you told us yesterday on a number of occasions that in your view there is no need for a conviction before you would be entitled to revoke a firearms certificate or refuse a firearms certificate, refuse to renew a firearms certificate? - Yes, that is so.

And that must be borne out by the statute because one does not see the word "conviction" appearing I think in Section 27 or 30 of the Act? - That is so.

And in a sense it will work both ways because whilst there is no need for a conviction before revocation or refusal, on the other hand you can have a conviction and still be entitled to have a firearm? - Yes, indeed.

So the mere fact of conviction on that analysis does not really say terribly much to the person who is deciding whether a firearms certificate should be revoked or issued? - It depends on whether the particular offence gives rise to an apprehension that the man might be a danger to public safety or to the peace.

BY LORD CULLEN: Is that the test for revocation? - No, I understand it has two parts to it.

MR. TAYLOR: I think, my lord, to be fair I said revocation or refusal.

LORD CULLEN: I'm sorry, I was thinking about revocation.

BY LORD CULLEN: It is right, isn't it, as far as revocation is concerned that the language is not that language? - Yes, if I could just enlarge on that point, my lord. While you are absolutely right in saying this, police officers and senior police officers in particular do take guidance/guidance from cases which your lordship's or Sheriff's decide, and whether it is revocation or not we frequently refer to that, that evidence.

Yes, indeed, it is highly pertinent? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

TAYLOR: So if the conviction itself is not per se of importance, I think you have just said you look at the facts? In other words, you discard the label which is attached to the facts and look at the underlying facts themselves? - Yes, indeed.

Now, let's go back a little bit and take the Milarrochy incident, and in particular the issue of an assault or chastisement? - Yes.

On one view of the evidence there was a child who was saying he had been assaulted by Mr. Hamilton, is that correct? - Yes, that is correct.

And one had I think an admission from Mr. Hamilton that there had been some laying of his hands on to the child? - Yes.

Albeit it gives an explanation for why it is that he did it? - Indeed.

And perhaps on one view that might be thought to be an assault? On one view? - That is so.

But looking at the facts themselves, leaving aside whether it is an assault or not, looking at the conduct of Mr. Hamilton do you consider that such conduct as was described there in relation to that assault such as would warrant you to revoke his firearms certificate? - No.

Since there is a different test in relation to renewal, would it be such as to justify you in refusing to renew his firearms certificate? - No.

Now, if subsequent to you coming to a view that you were not going to revoke you learned that the Procurator-Fiscal had decided that he would take proceedings and that he subsequently perhaps even gained a conviction, what would that cause you to do, if anything? - It certainly would cause us to/

to review the case, because it would automatically be put in front of me for review.

But you may change your mind or you may not? -
That is so.

And I suppose some cases will be quite easy to assess as to whether there ought to be revocation or a refusal to renew? - Yes, some are very straightforward.

If somebody had for example committed an act which could be described or given the label of armed robbery, it might be difficult in the circumstances to see how you would avoid coming to the view that there ought to be revocation? Would that be fair? - I think that would be a fair decision.

And if one went to the other end of the spectrum and considered an act of petty shoplifting, a single petty shoplifting commission, what would you do then? - No, I don't think that would give me any rise for concern.

And that would be concern in relation to the holding of a firearms certificate? - Yes, that is so.

And then there will be perhaps those circumstances, facts, which would come in the middle? - Indeed.

Tell/

11 a.m.

Tell me, what would your view be in relation to somebody who was charged or convicted with reset. Would that be something which you would need to enquire further into or is that something which would give rise to a clear-cut decision for you? - No. I think you have got to look at each one and know the background of it I know there is a stated case where his lordship makes it quite plain the convicted person has been convicted of receiving stolen property but nevertheless does not give rise to any concern about his safety to hold a shotgun I think it was; I think it was Lord Bingham who gave the judgement in that one.

You were talking about receiving stolen property? - It was an English case.

Which would be English equivalent. If we can just stick perhaps with the concept of reset meantime, from that answer you have given do I understand that somebody could be convicted of reset in your view and yet still in your opinion be a person who was fit in terms of the legislation at any rate to hold a firearms certificate? - That is so.

Now, reset I think can be defined as the retention of goods obtained by theft, robbery, fraud or embezzlement with the intention of keeping them from the true owner. Would you accept that definition of reset? - Yes.

What if theft, robbery fraud or embezzlement, one of these four constituents as go into the constitution of the charge, if you could apply labels to them, on these descriptions could one equally well be taken as deceitful? - Certainly so, deceitful.

Could it be in fact somebody might be devious? - Yes, could be.

Certainly might not be trustworthy? - That is so.

So anybody who commits the act of reset could have these labels applied to them; is that so? - Yes indeed.

You have just told me it wouldn't necessarily be the case anybody convicted of rest would necessarily in your view lose their firearm certificate? - It would be a question of whether we thought he was unfitted to be entrusted with a firearm. The fact he is convicted of an offence per se doesn't mean to say you would consider him to be unsuitable to be entrusted with a firearm.

You see, yesterday Lord Cullen asked you very specifically if someone who could be said to be deceitful, scheming or devious or untrustworthy was somebody who per se was a person unsuited to be the holder of a firearm.

LORD CULLEN: I am not sure that was quite my question. I was simply referring to that description of Mr. Hamilton.

MR. TAYLOR: I haven't checked the transcript.

LORD CULLEN: I think it was rather more specific. I was referring to the passage in the memorandum. I am not sure if I was quite as general as that.

MR. TAYLOR: I stand corrected.

THE WITNESS: I think the word is "trust" there with a firearm.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

TAYLOR: So if you could have D82L in front of you again please, if you could look please at the final paragraph of that memorandum you will see it says, "It is my opinion he is a scheming, devious and deceitful individual who is not to be trusted". Is that right? - Yes.

Do you consider, given the evidence which you have just given in relation to the offence of reset, if that description applied to Mr. Hamilton it would cause you to have doubts as to whether he ought to be the holder of a firearms certificate? - No, it is in the context -- scheming, devious and deceitful itself is not.

If that description could be applied to Mr. Hamilton do you consider that that ought to have caused/caused you to revoke or fail to renew Mr. Hamilton's firearms certificate? - No.

LORD CULLEN: I have some difficulty because that seems to be essentially the same question I asked yesterday. The witness, as I recollect it, indicated it was not that that concerned him, it was the evidence that supported that conclusion. Could we possibly get hold of the question because I would like just to be quite clear what the witness's position is. I am afraid I don't have the notes with me.

MR. TAYLOR: Sorry, sir, we can perhaps move on and we could perhaps check in the meantime.

MR. CAMPBELL: It may be page 1509.

LORD CULLEN: Is that the passage, Mr. Taylor?

MR. TAYLOR: Yes, I think it is, sir.

LORD CULLEN: In that case perhaps we can deal with it now. Perhaps you could read the question and the answer to the witness and just let it be quite clear what he said and what was put to him.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

TAYLOR: At 1509 yesterday his lordship put to you, "Just to be quite clear about this point: if you look at the last paragraph in that memorandum you see there the Detective Sergeant's description of Hamilton as an individual?" and you said "Yes".

And then question "If that was an accurate description of him, would that indicate somebody who on the face of it was unfit to be entrusted with firearms?" and you said "Yes, I would agree with that but what I am saying is that the underlying evidence wasn't there"? - Scheming, devious, deceitful in itself -- it may be the word "trust" should be added on. It all depends on the context of "trust" whether you are talking about trust in relation to something trivial or whether you are looking at it in relation to firearms. That is one of the essential facts, that the person should be being entrusted with a firearm. I am sorry if I am causing confusion. It is not scheming, / scheming, devious and deceitful which I take issue with, the word "trust" does come in from the firearms section. That is perhaps where I was being confused.

BY LORD CULLEN: I want to be quite clear, do you stand by what you said or do you want to change it? - I can understand somebody may be scheming, devious and deceitful in itself in certain circumstances where it would have no bearing on whether you felt they could be entrusted with a firearm; that is what I am saying.

I simply want to know, do you stand by what you said or do you want to change it? - Change it.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

TAYLOR: If I have understood you correctly, what had caused you difficulty was the use of the word "trust" as we see being the final word in the paragraph? - Yes indeed.

And if you came to the view that somebody wasn't a person who could be entrusted with a firearm then you would be honour-bound to revoke or fail to renew? - Yes indeed.

Does that mean that anybody who could not be trusted, using "trust" in the wide sense, is somebody who ought not to be entitled to have a firearm? - No.

If the facts were such that the label "lack of trust" could be put on them, and "untrustworthy" might be put on them, do you still need to look at the facts; is that what you are saying? - Yes.

Because you know of no circumstances in which lack of trust arose? - Yes. We use the word "trust" in so many ways. You can trust somebody to be there on time and that is quite trivial and you could be talking in terms of trust to be safe with something which is entirely different.

Just taking that on a little bit then, and applying it again perhaps to Milarrochy, you told us a few moments ago about the fact that persons Mr. Hamilton hadn't told the police officers everything/everything about the photographs he had been taking in that he hadn't shown all of the photographs he had taken? - That would appear to be the case.

And on your understanding of the facts is that what gave rise to the trust or lack of trust which was narrated in the memo? - Yes.

Were there any other facts which you could identify in the report which gave rise to the view of lack of trust on the part of Hamilton? - I am trying to think of something else about -- the parents trusted there would be more youth leaders there. There weren't any serious issues that I can think of.

If we look at the facts as opposed to labels, do you consider if somebody says to a police officer that he has taken only six spools of film when in fact he has taken eight spools of film, that is somebody who is not fitted to hold a firearm? - No. He may be telling lies but that's it.

Does somebody who tells lies, again using the label of "lies", does that mean they ought not to be able to hold a firearms certificate? - No.

Again I suppose one has to look at the lie which has been perpetrated by them? - You have got to look at everything. It is very, very difficult to answer these questions without looking at the whole circumstances which arose.

You were asked some questions also in relation to whether the fact that Mr. Hamilton had a grudge against the Scouts would be such as to disqualify him from holding a firearm certificate. To your knowledge when was it that Mr. Hamilton was removed as a Scout leader? - I think it was around 1974. It was about 15 years before I arrived in Central Scotland Police and that was 1987, so about '74 as near as I can get it.

From your knowledge of Hamilton at the time, did you consider that he had borne a grudge since then against the Scouts? - Yes. I don't know if "grudge" is the right word or not but he felt he wanted to show that he could compete with the Scout movement.

At/

At any time in the course of that period from 1974 on when you came to be considering his firearms certificate did you consider that his conduct towards the Scouts was such that would justify you doing anything in relation to removal of his firearms certificate? - No, I did not.

Apart from writing letters in relation to the Scouts had he taken any other action to your knowledge? - No.

You were also in the context of "grudge" asked whether you would revoke or refuse the grant of a firearms certificate to a neighbour who had a grudge against his fellow neighbour; you remember that? - Yes.

You remember that question yesterday? - Yes.

Is the fact of a grudge sufficient or do you require to go beyond that? - I think it has got to be a bit more than that. There is a lot of neighbours don't get on with their neighbours but arguing over the garden fence is hardly a reason for not getting a firearms certificate.

I suppose if the grudge had manifested itself in threatening behaviour by one neighbour to another.....? - That is quite a different matter.

Then/

Then you might consider that there would be reason to.....? - Yes. In each one you need to look at the full circumstances involved.

Now, yesterday you said that you would have to look at the facts to see if there was anything to suggest that a person would be a danger with a gun when you were coming to consider a revocation or refusal to renew; is that right? - Yes.

Now, it was pointed out to you yesterday that the criteria for revocation and renewal were slightly different? - Yes.

And I think you had answered the question in relation to revocation, where the concept of "Danger to the public safety or peace" does not enter the equation? - That is so.

Looking at the test in relation to renewal, where one does have the concept of "Danger to the public safety or peace", is it your view that any danger to the public safety or peace justifies a refusal to renew? - With the use of firearms.

It has to be a danger to the public safety or peace arising out of the use of firearms; is that what you are saying? - Yes, or if you perceive it could have.

Or the likelihood of that happening? - Yes.

Now, applying these tests which you have just given us to the facts, which you have also been telling us of today, and the various influences which bore upon these facts, you would have had to come to your view in 1995 as to whether Mr. Hamilton should have been granted the renewal of his firearms certificate? - That is right.

And you told us yesterday that it didn't take a great dealt of time for you to come to that view? - Yes. I knew Mr. Hamilton fairly well, I thought.

But for the avoidance of doubt, had the consideration/consideration of Mr. Hamilton and the possession of firearms been something which had exercised your mind prior to 1995, when you came to consider his application? - Yes indeed.

So this wasn't the first time that you had to look at all the facts and consider and weigh up all the facts? - No.

I suppose it is easy for us now after the events of the 13th to say that the conclusion which Mr. Hughes came to in his memo was correct and that you were wrong, but on the facts then known to you, that is the facts known to you on the 12th March 1996, do you still consider that it was a reasonable exercise of your discretion to renew Mr. Hamilton's firearm certificate? - Certainly.

And is that looking at the incidents both individually and cumulatively? - Indeed.

I wonder if you can help me just a little bit in relation to the chain of command which exists in the force when one is making inquiry into the holding of a firearm certificate -- that is an application to hold a firearm certificate? We heard the evidence that the Detective Constable or the Firearms Officer goes out and visits the applicant at the first time that an application comes from that individual. Now, if we look at the role of the Detective Constable first.....? - The constable?

The constable, sorry. What is it that you are expecting that constable to do when he or she goes and visits the applicant? - Well, there is a number of things. First of all, he has got to satisfy himself that the form has been correctly filled in. He checks -- if it is an absolutely first application he checks the firearms. He has to establish the reason why he wishes the firearm, check it out that the reason is right -- say for instance he says he is going to shoot over land for vermin, has he got written permission? Is the land suitable for the type of weapon he wishes to use? If he is using it at a Club, has he got membership of the Club, and is the Club one which is suitable for that bore of weapon that he is applying for. He would make an assessment of the security arrangements for the firearm -- were they satisfactory? He would check the man out, using the/the SCRO computer and the PNC, check out if he has had any criminal convictions or pending cases. He would check out Intelligence to see if there was anything there. In other words, he would make inquiries to ensure that all of those things were satisfactory. He would also check.....

What about -- sorry, carry on? - He would also check with the countersignatory to see if that was genuine, that it wasn't a forgery.

How significant to the police force and to the individual who has to make the decision is it that the countersignatory has certified as he is required to do? - Yes, it is important. As I say, it was a safeguard which was brought in by the Amendment Act of 1988, as I recall, in which a countersignatory was seen as someone who knew this man well, and he has got to say from his knowledge that the man is not unfit -- he has got no mental disorder and so on.

Do you know why that was introduced? - It was introduced as a safeguard so that we could have another view of him from somebody who knew him, who would be able to say that this person could be entrusted with a firearm.

How long would you expect the constable to spend in interviewing the applicant? - I don't know -- about half an hour.

And that would be the total -- potentially the total exposure of the particular applicant to the police force, in total, wouldn't it? - Yes.

And when the constable returns to the police station, armed with that information, and completes the RL3a, as we have seen? - Yes.

To whom does that constable then pass it on? - To his immediate superior, which is the sergeant.

And what role does the sergeant play? - Well, that is a difficult one, because on every shift you have officers of different ability. I mean, at one end of the scale you will have officers there who will have done that type of inquiry many many/many times, and maybe you have recommended him already to be a sergeant. You know he is perfectly capable of doing this, you have checked it out many times before. You would probably give that a supervisory check over. But at the other end of the scale you might have somebody who is a very junior officer, and you would ask questions -- "Did you do this? Did you do that? How do you know that is right?", and so on. So what you would do -- it is not a simple answer. It would depend very much on the age and experience of the officer who did the initial inquiry.

And is that approach peculiar to firearm certificates, or does that come into play in other aspects of policing? - It pertains to the whole range of police duties. I mean, you have certain members of your shift who are highly experienced officers you can entrust with any type of job, and you have others who will be less experienced and less able, who you need to help along and give assistance. In fact, there might be somebody you could feel they might just not be capable of doing it.

And from the sergeant where does that then go to? - Well, the procedure changed and I really can't recall the exact date it changed. At one time it used to go right through the chain of command. Now the position is it goes from the sergeant to the local commander. Now, he could be of various ranks. He could be a Superintendent or a Chief Inspector.

And what role does the local commander play? - It is his duty to look at all the material that is in front of him and make a recommendation. I would also expect him to exercise his own knowledge of that particular area. Usually when you get to Chief Inspector or Superintendent you have a very good knowledge of the people and of the force.

And from there where does it go? - It would go to the Firearms Department.

And what function are they performing? - They look through carefully to see everything is there, and if there are any adverse comments at all -- by that I mean anything in there -- supposing it is/

is convictions, but they still say he should get it -- if there is something adverse there they would bring it for me to look at.

What different role does the Firearms Department play than that which was played by the local unit commander? - Well, it is the centre of administration for them, really. That is where they finish up.

And from there -- by "there" I mean the Firearms Department -- it goes to where? - It goes to me for signature -- although can I just make clear there is a staff officer in between them and me who checks it too.

So there is a further check? - Yes.

But again is that check more for administrative purposes? - To make sure there is nothing there that should be drawn to my attention.

Am I right in thinking that the system relies upon the inquiring officer and the sergeant, between them, making sure that all proper inquiries have been made? - Yes.

And thereafter it is other people inputting such information as they have to the final decision-making, but the inquiry is done at the lower end? - Yes. The recommendation is made by the local commander.

I asked you some questions earlier about what had influenced you, and I omitted to look at certain items which you didn't, I think by common consent of the Inquiry -- you did not see, and that was the local intelligence. I just would like you to have a look please at the various items of intelligence which were contained in the force's system at one time, at any rate, and to see if any of what is contained therein would cause you to have a different view. I think these items have been put before you. They are found in Chapter I, starting at D1I(iii), or alternatively D INTEL FD1. I think it was known as the nominal card for Mr. Hamilton? - That is D INTEL F1?

D INTEL F1 -- that is D1? - Yes.

Apart/

Apart from the comment which is "OMO" and "INDCHE", the rest is of a purely factual nature, or formal nature. There is nothing in that document which tells you anything; is that correct? - Nothing at all.

I wonder if you could over to the next item which is D2 I(iii), and this is dated the 15th November 1981, before you had joined the force, and what we see is a flyer? - Yes.

And a comment is put in the top left-hand corner. I wonder if you could just read out what that comment is? - "Hamilton is a suspected homosexual and operates the above-mentioned Youth Club. Boys playing truant from school, and being members of this group, have been found in Hamilton's shop. He would appear to encourage these boys and is prone to influence them against their parents".

Is there anything contained there which was unknown to you when you were coming to your view in relation to the holding by Mr. Hamilton of a firearm certificate? - I am not actually sure that I read that particular one, but it would not have influenced me one way or the other.

The next item is D3 I(iii), and that is from Sergeant Lowe. Is that something which you had seen at any point? - Yes, I have seen that before.

Can I ask you this, had you seen it when you were coming to your view as to whether Mr. Hamilton ought to hold a firearm certificate? - I don't think I did see it, but it would not have influenced me at all.

The next item is a submission from Detective Sergeant McBain of Alexandria, and it is D4I(iii), and that relates to the Inchmoan Island incident, of which you were aware? - Yes indeed.

The next items is a press cutting, and that is D5 I(iii), and again I think that is further comment upon the incident on Inchmoan Island? - Yes. I knew about that.

And you knew about that. The next one is D6 I(iii), and that is Mr. Hamilton's response in relation/relation to the previous news cutting which we saw? - I am aware of that.

And finally -- sorry, not finally, but the next one we have is D7 I(iii), which is another cutting from a newspaper dated the 20th January 1989, and relates to a dispute which has been ongoing with Mr. Hamilton and Central Regional Council regarding the letting of schools? - I am aware of that.

You were aware of that. And going through we next come to D8 I(iii), which is a further cutting from the Falkirk Herald of 31st March 1989, and that would appear to be the further information which came to light after the police inquiry, Inspector Keenan's Inquiry, into the Inchmoan Island incident? - Yes, indeed. I am aware of it.

And there is nothing there of which you were unaware. D9 I(iii) is a comment that Mr. Hamilton is suspected to have been involved in indecent practices with young boys at a Boys' Club which he runs. I think you were aware of that allegation, I think, having been made against Mr. Hamilton? - Yes.

Is/

11.40 a.m.

Is there anything else contained there which you were unaware of? - No, I don't think there is anything at all there.

The next item is D10 I(III) and that is dated in 1995 I think, is that correct? The 25th? - 1995, yes.

I think we have established it was 1995. The month I am afraid is still obliterated on my copy? - Yes, the 25th January 1995.

And again is there anything contained in that piece of intelligence of which you were unaware at the time when you were coming to your views? - No, not a thing.

D11 I(III) refers again to an expression of concern about a youth camp being run at Bannockburn High on a Tuesday evening? - I think that also was something which you have told us you were aware of even if you had not seen that particular piece of paper, is that correct? - Yes.

And the final item, D12 I(III) is an entry following a contact made by a reporter from the Daily Record? - Yes.

And it narrates that hand bills advertising the re-opening of Dunblane Boys' Sports Club were being circulated on the 7th September 1995. Sorry, the sports club was to be held on that date but leaflets were circulating advertising its existence but that the reporter was no longer interested in looking into the matter any further? - Yes.

Is there anything in that at all? - Nothing of any significance there at all.

Can you recall having seen that before, before it was shown to you yesterday? - Not really.

You see, I think it was suggested to you yesterday that this contains a document which you had asked to be inserted into the file after the events of the 13th and perhaps it might be taken in some/some way that this was a devious act on your part to put into the file what ought to have been there but wasn't there. Can I ask you whether this document ever should have been in the file? - I mean, there is nothing actually in it in the first place and if it should be anywhere it should be in the Intelligence file where anybody can have access to it. If I understand the question, it is a totally innocuous document and could be got from where it should be got, the Intelligence file.

THE DEAN OF FACULTY: My lord, I wonder if I may just seek clarification. There were a series of questions from my friend, Mr. Taylor, on behalf of the Central Police about the system and commenting in a question to the effect that the system is relying upon proper enquiry being made by the investigating officer and the Sergeant and the witness agreed with that and it was left in the air at that. I wonder if there is any implied criticism of the investigating officer or the Sergeant in that question and perhaps I could seek through your lordship an assurance that there is not to be any suggestion that the proper enquiries were not made by the investigating officer or Sergeant.

LORD CULLEN: I am not aware of that. I think he was simply giving a description of what their respective roles were, that that was part of the exercise going through the chain, as it were. Is that right, Mr. Taylor?

MR. TAYLOR: That was certainly my understanding, sir, and I did give an undertaking in relation to this matter when Constable Anderson was in the witness box and I have no reason to depart from what I said on that occasion.

THE DEAN OF FACULTY: It was the fact the Sergeant was introduced as well. That would concern me but presumably that would be covered?

LORD CULLEN: Just for the notes, the role you are fulfilling at the moment I think is on behalf of the Federation?

THE DEAN OF FACULTY: Indeed.

LORD CULLEN: I think that is the first time you have actually donned that mantle.

THE/

THE DEAN OF FACULTY: No, the second time. I think the first time I secured an undertaking from Mr. Taylor in respect of the Constable. I am just seeking it to the extent of the Sergeant now.

LORD CULLEN: Yes. Very well.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: One suggestion emerging from your evidence was that there is no entry in Scottish Criminal Records if a person is not charged with an offence, is that right? - Yes, the way the system works is we put on pending cases with the various charges that have been put against an individual and then it is updated later on when either, you know, no proceedings are taken or if in fact he is convicted and the punishment, the sentence, goes on to it.

And if he is acquitted is it removed? - It is indeed.

No matter how suspicious it was? - Yes.

Are there also certain charges, even when a person is convicted, which don't get on to Scottish Criminal Records Office? - That is correct.

What are they? - Traffic offences which go on through the DVLC.

Now, serious traffic offences must get on to SCRO I take it? - Yes, we have a list of disqualified drivers for example which is on SCRO. That is used to indicate the more serious ones.

If someone is disqualified, can we take it that will be on SCRO? - Indeed.

One of the additional matters that you mentioned in cross-examination was the view, as you put it, of Mr. Holden of Mr. Hamilton after the benefit of a two-hour interview with Mr. Hamilton? - That is so.

Were you suggesting that at some stage in this whole history Mr. Holden's view might have changed? - Yes.

When/

When was that? - Subsequent to his interview of some two hours' duration with Mr. Hamilton following on from a complaint round about 1993 I think.

Right now, is that an interview that Mr. Holden had with Mr. Hamilton at Mr. Hamilton's home? - Yes.

Can you remember the nature of the complaint he was investigating? - It was regarding photographic activity.

Was this a complaint about a child being photographed in what were circumstances that disturbed a parent? - Yes.

Can I take it that following that interview Mr. Holden had a discussion with you? - Indeed he did.

And what was the change in his impression of Hamilton? - Well, he said to me that perhaps the man had been misjudged and that he had answers to all of the questions he had put to him.

Now, that is a gloss obviously on Holden's comments on Sergeant Hughes' memo? Would you agree with that? - I am sorry.

That is a qualification to the view that Mr. Holden had expressed when he put his piece on to Sergeant Hughes' memo? - No, this was long after that.

Yes, I appreciate that but at the time his position was "I do agree with Detective Sergeant Hughes' appraisal of Mr. Hamilton. Do we have any latitude for progress in respect of revocation of his certificate?"? - Yes.

So by 1993 are you saying that his position was different? - Yes.

Did that difference affect your overall judgment on your approach to Hamilton on the question of revocation if it was going to arise in 1993 and the question of renewal in 1995? - Yes, we take into consideration everything that comes to us and certainly I hold in high regard the officer's points/points of view.

So if anything could be said it is that the concern of the officers below you by 1995 might be viewed by you as not so great as it was in 1991, the end of 1991? - No, I am not saying that at all. I am only telling you that the particular officer's view had changed.

Now, you were asked a number of questions about where lack of trust might be relevant to a firearms certificate and you have quite rightly pointed out that many of the questions are hypothetical and might be said to be posed after the event. However, do you agree with me that the only proper way to read Detective Sergeant Hughes' memo is that he was talking about trusting Hamilton with children? - Yes, that was the subject matter.

And indeed he uses the words "I would contend that Mr. Hamilton will be a risk to children whenever he has access to them"? - Yes, that is correct.

Now, if we then take the last words of the memo, "He is a scheming, devious and deceitful individual who is not to be trusted", I take it we can view that as not to be trusted with children? - Yes, in terms of that being the memo.

If that is an accurate description of him, does that provide a basis for saying that his firearms certificate should be revoked? - No.

Why? In what circumstances do you think he can be trusted with children? - We are talking about his abilities as a youth leader, whether he can be trusted as a youth leader, which is entirely a different matter to considering whether he could be trusted with firearms.

This is a man that you, by that time, know has exhibited his weapons to children? - Yes.

So how do you divorce the question of possessing a firearm from the care of children when you know these things about the individual you are dealing with? - I think I explained that I felt that that incident that you are referring to has been totally innocent.

"I/

"I would contend that Mr. Hamilton will be a risk to children whenever he has access to them". You say you can divorce that? - Yes.

From the possession of firearms? - Yes.

Now, you were also asked about trust in one other regard and that was in relation to lying about whether or not he had taken eight rather than six spools of film but that lie was in the context of an investigation into a complaint that a child had been filmed posing in compromising positions wearing scanty clothing. Now, taking that lie in that context, does that affect the question of whether he is a fit person to hold a firearms certificate? - No.

Have you during your period in Central Scotland Police had complaints about any other youth leader insisting on this type of scanty clothing and photographing children? - No.

So we have a complaint repeated on a number of occasions that is unique? - I am certainly not aware of another.

And that unique complaint is well known to you both in 1991, late 1991, and in 1995? - Yes.

Have the police in Central Region ever in your period of service had to attend at any other youth leader's camp because of complaints? - If they have I am unaware of it.

Have they ever had to attend at any other youth leader's clubs because of complaints? That is a general statement, complaints without qualification? - Quite frankly, all I can say to you is that if they have I am unaware of it. I won't want to give a categoric assurance that they have not.

You said at the end of your evidence yesterday that the only way to avoid a repetition of Dunblane or to be sure to avoid a repetition of Dunblane was to ban, I think you said, these semi-automatic weapons or did you say guns in general? - Yes, I was asked if there was, as I understood it, any/any system which could be 100 per cent foolproof and I was asked what my preference would be to people losing the privilege of their sporting activities or banning all guns and my answer was to ban the guns.

That is guns completely. Can I just ask you a few questions which I think will arise in the minds of Lord Cullen in due course? That is whether short of that there are other methods of improving the system of regulation of gun control. You have described the system which exists at present which means that enquiries are done by a fairly junior officer, a decision is made by you as senior officer but without going back over the old ground as it were on the basis of what you know and have in your head about somebody. Can that system be improved upon? - There is no doubt that we would be moving every way in which we can to improve the situation. The trouble is that no matter how much you improve the present situation, within the definition of the law just now I can see no way of making it foolproof. I mean, there would be no system you can't improve clearly but readily off the top of my head I don't know what we can do under the present legislation.

There is a suggestion we may hear a little more about later on today that the decision should be delegated further down the line to the civilian officers or civilian staff that police forces are being encouraged to employ? - It has been suggested.

Is that a good idea? - It is an onerous responsibility.

But it goes then to the person who is actually conducting the enquiry to make the decision? - Yes.

Is there no room in this for a suggestion that the person who makes the decision, whether he be at a more junior level or whether he be the Depute Chief Constable, should undoubtedly interview an applicant at every renewal stage? - Well, the opposite has been suggested as you are well aware. I mean, we are being encouraged to do it by postal method. We didn't go down that particular road. I think it is important that they are spoken to at each renewal but we are being encouraged/encouraged to take an opposite view. We have not adopted that although some Forces have.

Well, it is not for me to give evidence. All I was trying to do was to see if you have identified any particular thing that the officers of your Force might have done or could do in the future in relation to improving the way in which the system works to try to avoid a repetition of this. Now, can you think of anything such as further interviews and so on that would help? - I honestly can't think of any.

Now, just lastly you were asked to describe the system as it is or at least as it was just before the Dunblane tragedy. Would you look please again at FA63 which is DI06. That is the RL3a form relating to the 1995 renewal and if you look on the page with the signatures on it you will see we have got Constable Anderson? - Yes.

Sergeant Cowan, Inspector Cameron, Chief Superintendent Moffat, is that his initials? - Superintendent.

Superintendent Moffat, sorry? - Sorry, you are correct, yes, he was not at that time.

But as Superintendent Moffat he has signed it as Unit Commander? - Yes.

And then Mr. Mather, the Chief Inspector in the Firearms Department, is that right? - Yes.

The only difference I think there from the list you gave was that the Inspector has got involved down the line here? - Yes.

In addition to the Unit Commander? - Yes, I wouldn't have expected that.

BY LORD CULLEN: Just one or two matters about procedure I would like to get clear in my mind; so far as the enquiries are concerned, do I understand from you that there may be circumstances in which a Sergeant may make some enquiry of the enquiry officer? - Yes.

As opposed to merely taking the paperwork which appears to be all in order, is that right/right? - Yes, my lord, it depends very much on the experience of the officer.

It is a variable thing depending really on the discretion of the Sergeant? - And the confidence he has in the officer.

And according to the procedure you have now, neither the Sergeant nor the enquiry officer has the file, is that right? - Yes.

But that will be before the Superintendent and the Chief Inspector, is that right? - Yes.

12 o'clock

So far as the counter-signatory is concerned what enquiries are to be made of the counter-signatory? - To see if in fact he has signed the form and he is happy with the applicant.

He is happy with the applicant? - Yes.

What does that mean? - Well, just to make sure he has read the form through and knows exactly what he is signing.

Do you mean that he is confirming to the enquiry officer that he fully appreciates what he is putting his signature to? - I agree with what you say.

So it is not just a question of asking him "Is that your signature? Did you sign this" but asking, going further than that, making sure he is fully aware of what he is putting his signature to? - I would expect that.

Presumably that would involve drawing attention to the substance of the guidance notes? - Yes. It does say so on the form.

And was that the practice? - That is what I would expect.

Is that laid down in Standing Orders? - In the Standing Orders it says you have to validate the counter-signatory.

What does that mean? - Check it and make sure the person who signed the form -- I would say I would expect them to phone the chap up and make sure he has signed it, make sure he is spoken to and understands what he has signed.

Is that what validate means? - Maybe I am expecting too much. I am only saying that is what I would expect.

You have been asked a number of questions about the terms of Section 30 which uses the expression about being a person unfitted to be entrusted with a firearm? - Yes.

If/

If a person is entrusted with a firearm does that involve certain responsibilities are expected of him? - Yes.

And I suppose to be unfitted to be entrusted with a firearm means that a person is unfitted to discharge those responsibilities? In other words, he couldn't be trusted to discharge those responsibilities? - Yes.

Can we perhaps just explore for a moment what those responsibilities might be. Can you give me some indication as to what they might include? - Well, it certainly would include safe handling of the weapon, safe storage of it.

Safety is one? - Yes.

Presumably that means the safety of everybody, whether it is a member of the public or a fellow shooter? - Yes indeed.

I suppose obedience to the law would be another so far as was concerned with the use of a firearm? - Yes.

Or anything involved with a firearm? - Yes. Poaching, for example, would be one.

One responsibility is to act safely; another is to comply with the law. Can you think of any other responsibilities that would be effectively undertaken by a person who gets a firearm certificate? - (No answer).

What about his relationship with those in authority particularly so far as firearms are concerned. Are there certain responsibilities which would be expected, which you would expect of somebody holding a firearm certificate? - In relation to authority?

Yes, the police authority in particular? - I really don't understand the question.

For example, would you expect him to be honest in his dealings with the police authority? - Yes. I think that is expecting a bit much.

Well, if one can't rely upon a person to be/be honest in his dealings with the police authority is he fit to be entrusted with a firearm? - You get many people who have dealings with the police and are not 100 per cent honest but doesn't in any way make him, mean this person is a danger with a firearm.

I don't know whether this applies to Central Region but I suspect that some police authorities do issue some kind of guidance to certificate holders as to what is expected of them. Is that the case in Central Region? - No.

Are you aware of any authorities issuing any form of written guidance to certificate holders to show in black and white what are the responsibilities of a certificate holder? - I know there is some guidance but whether it goes as far as that, my lord, I am not too sure.

Thank you very much. I am much obliged to you.

JOHN SHARP ADAMSON (50) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Do you live in Stirling?

- Yes.

Are you a retired police officer? - Yes.

I think you work with the Scottish Office? - Yes.

When did you retire from the police? - I retired from the police in April, 1995.

After how many years service? - 30 years service.

What rank did you hold then? - Chief Superintendent.

Could you please have a document in front of you which is FA64 (D101). You will see that is a firearms certificate of Thomas Hamilton which was current at the time of the Dunblane tragedy. I think you actually signed that certificate? - No sir.

Whose/

Whose signature is it you see there? - Douglas McMurdo.

Sorry, I have given you the wrong document, my mistake. I should have asked you to look at D87 which is an earlier certificate in 1992 (FA57). Is that one where we see your signature? -
Yes.

And at that stage were you a Chief Superintendent? -
Yes.

And what role would you be fulfilling when you completed that certificate? - I was Chief Superintendent in Headquarters Division and in the absence of the Deputy Chief Constable I had received a memo from the Chief Constable asking me to act in his stead for discipline matters and to sign papers acting as Deputy Chief Constable.

And did you regularly do that in his absence on leave?
- Yes, I did.

Can you remember dealing with this document? - Not in particular, no.

Was it common for you to have a firearms certificate, whoever be the applicant, to sign in Mr. McMurdo's absence? - Yes, it was.

What documents did you have in front of you when you did that? - In the majority of cases I would have no documents other than the certificate itself.

In what circumstances would you have any other documents? - If the enquiry into the application or renewal had raised any question as to the suitability of the applicant then I would have been passed the file.

In the absence of a file what did you have to do before signing the certificate? - I had to be satisfied that the enquiry into the application and into the renewal had raised no facts which affected that renewal.

And how would you be satisfied about that? - The file was not passed to me.

So/

So in other words you are just having a piece of paper put in front of you for you to sign automatically? - The enquiry would have been carried out by officers and would have been checked by senior officers who would have recommended the certificate be renewed. It would have been checked by Headquarters and passed to me. I would only expect the certificate to have gone through if the process hadn't shown up any facts which.....

That means you didn't make the decision, you were signing the document as a formality? - No, I was making a decision inasmuch as I was satisfied the enquiry had been completed.

Only because nobody handed any other documents to you? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Would you have a look at D82L. That is a memorandum dated 11th November, 1991 from Detective Sergeant Hughes. Have you seen this document before? - No, I haven't.

Could you just take a moment to read through from the beginning of the memorandum. You will see it relates to Thomas Watt Hamilton in relation to his firearms certificate. Were you aware when you were carrying out the renewing process in 1992 that in terms of the legislation you were required to consider whether you had any reason to believe that Hamilton was unfitted to be entrusted with a firearm? - Yes, I was.

If you had had in front of you Mr. Hughes' memorandum would that have provided a reason to believe that Mr. Hamilton was unfitted to be entrusted with a firearm? - No, it wouldn't.

Why not? - In my view the information contained in the report wasn't sufficiently factual to prevent the renewal in terms of my understanding of the Act.

I thought a moment ago you told me you hadn't seen the document before? - I was aware that the document had been submitted. I hadn't seen it before.

So you hadn't seen it but you were aware that/that it existed? - I was told by Mr. McMurdo the report had been submitted and he had recommended no action be taken.

When were you told that? - I would assume that it was about the time that the report was submitted.

Let's just see if I am following this. You were aware in general terms that a report had been submitted about Hamilton's fitness? - Yes.

And you were aware that the decision was taken to take no action? - Yes.

Mr. McMurdo had mentioned this to you? - Yes, he did.

What -- just in the course of conversation or some specific reason? - I can't recall whether it was a specific reason or whether it was part of a conversation.

Now, when the matter then came before you for you to exercise your decision you were aware that this memorandum existed but you hadn't looked at it? - No, I hadn't.

Why not? - As far as I was concerned at that time the decision had been taken by the Deputy Chief Constable.

So when you say the material in this wasn't factual you are expressing that view having only seen the document for the first time five minutes ago? - Yes.

12.20 p.m.

So what happened in 1992 was a rubber-stamping exercise? - I signed the form in 1992 in the knowledge that Mr. McMurdo had dealt with matters previous to his departure on leave; that the people who deal with matters, who directly reported to him and I would have expected to report directly to me, had brought no other matters to my attention -- in other words, the decisions that Mr. McMurdo had taken, nothing was given to me which indicated that those decisions could or should be altered.

At any time before you gave evidence to this Inquiry has anybody discussed the content of this memorandum with you? - No.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: Mr. Adamson, you were at the time the Chief Superintendent; is that correct? - Yes.

And Mr. McMurdo was the Deputy Chief Constable? - Yes, he was.

How often were you in contact with Mr. McMurdo in the course of your duties? - Daily.

And in the course of your discussions with Mr. McMurdo did you become aware of the dealings which he was having with a Mr. Hamilton? - Yes, I did.

Can you tell us what you knew of the dealings which Mr. McMurdo had with Mr. Hamilton? - I was aware that an inquiry had been carried out into a camp which Hamilton had run on a island in Loch Lomond, and later into a camp at Milarrochy Bay, again at Loch Lomond. In addition to that Mr. Hamilton was a prolific letter-writer to the Deputy Chief Constable, and it was almost a continuous process, as far as I was aware, in replying to his correspondence.

Were you aware of Mr. Hamilton having made complaints against the manner in which the Central Scotland Police Force had investigated the incident at the Loch Lomond Island? - Yes I was.

Can you tell us the nature of the incident/incident which was investigated by Central Scotland Police in relation to the Loch Lomond Island incident? - As far as I was aware it was an allegation that the camp wasn't being properly run in terms of the environment and the conditions that the children were being exposed to at that camp.

Are you familiar with the nature of the complaint which gave rise to the investigation for Milarrochy Bay? - As far as I am aware the allegation was very similar. It was the nature and the regime of the camp that had raised the complaint.

In the discussions which you had had with Mr. McMurdo did he make reference to any reports which he had received in relation to Milarrochy Bay? - I can't recall a specific occasion, but I am sure he did discuss the matters at the time.

You have been shown a report from a Detective Sergeant Hughes. Were you aware that Mr. McMurdo had received that report? - Yes I was.

Had he discussed that report with you? - He, he did.

Had he expressed a view on that report? - Yes. His view was that the report in itself contained no evidence which was sufficient for him to make a decision on a revocation at that stage.

And were you aware of this at 1992, when you came to sign the renewal of Mr. Hamilton's firearm certificate? - Yes I was.

So you wouldn't have considered of new the facts which had been investigated in Milarrochy Bay and the content of that report which you have just looked at just now? - Sorry, can you repeat that please?

You wouldn't have looked further into the facts in relation to, or the facts underlying, the report which you have before you, D82L? - No, sir. The matter had been dealt with by Mr. McMurdo and as far as I was concerned he had made his decision on that basis.

So/

So although you may not have seen that report until just now, you were aware of its existence and you were aware of Mr. McMurdo's views on it? - Yes I was.

When you came to sign the certificate for the renewal of Mr. Hamilton's firearm's certificate, did you make the connection between the person whose name appeared on the form which you were to sign and the person who had been involved in the 1988 and 1991 incidents which you have talked of? - Yes I did.

MR. GIBB: Sir, there is one matter I meant to raise and I omitted it.....

MR. TAYLOR: Sorry, there is one document I meant to put to the witness as well -- if I might be permitted to do so.

LORD CULLEN: It seems to be catching.

MR. TAYLOR: Yes. I apologise.

LORD CULLEN: Right. Let's deal with you first and then Mr. Gibb can have his crack after that.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

TAYLOR: I wonder if you could have before you document DCD156, which is D105K? That should be a copy of a letter addressed to Mrs. Mary Hogg at the Scottish Office, and it is dated the 3rd October 1991? - Yes.

And we see that it is signed by a Chief Superintendent and the Chief Superintendent who signed it has appended his initials to the letter. Do you recognise the initials which you see on that letter? - They are mine.

And can you recall the circumstances in which you came to write this letter -- to sign this letter to Mrs. Hogg? - As far as I can recall it was a letter prepared in response to an inquiry which had come from the Scottish Office, prompted by a letter from Hamilton. The letter, as I recall it, has been prepared by Superintendent Archibald for my signature.

And/

And the facts which one finds in it -- and feel free to take a little time to look at it -- were facts which were within your knowledge even although the letter may have been prepared by another officer? - Yes.

And having read the letter, are these facts facts which were within your knowledge? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: If in fact there had been any doubts expressed anywhere down the line, would you get the certificate to sign just on its own, or would the file be made available to you? - No. Had there been any doubts then the whole file would have been passed to me.

Let us assume that administratively there had been a mistake and the file hadn't been passed to you, and you got the certificate simply on its own. Presumably then you would have signed it? - Under these circumstances I probably would have done.

Do you accept that that is not an entirely satisfactory system? - Yes I do.

You didn't even have the RL3a on which the firearm certificate was based? - As far as I can recall, I didn't.

MR. TAYLOR: A point arose out of the cross-examination by Mr. Gibb which I didn't fully understand, and I wonder if I could seek to clarify my own knowledge, perhaps, and it may be of benefit to the Inquiry.

LORD CULLEN: Well, if it is for the benefit of the Inquiry, carry on.

FURTHER CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: This may be my fault, but when the certificate in respect of Mr. Hamilton was put before you for signature did it come alone or did it come with anything else? - I can't recall specifically, but in the normal course of events certificates come in bundles.

Right. And it would only come with some other documentation if there was some concern expressed/expressed further down the chain; is that a correct understanding? - That is correct. Had there been concern expressed anywhere in the administrative system I would have had it separately, with the file.

And can you recall if in relation to Mr. Hamilton's renewal in 1992 anything came before you other than the form for signature? - I can't recall that.

No re-examination.

BY LORD CULLEN: Just one matter. You told us you had been aware of the fact that the Deputy Chief Constable, Mr. McMurdo, had disposed of a certain suggestion that there should be revocation? - Yes.

That would be I think November of the preceding year. When it came to renewal you would have course have to deal with it as it was presented to you, namely an application for renewal of the certificate. So far as you were concerned was there any difference between the test which would require to be fulfilled for renewal as opposed to the test which might be applied in considering the revocation? - Yes. I would have considered if it had been a test for revocation then I would have been given the background and the evidence on which that was based.

What I am really thinking about was the approach you adopted towards the language of the statute -- you follow me? - Yes.

When dealing with revocation obviously you have to be satisfied that a certain matter is established? - Yes.

But when it comes to renewal what is the test? Is it the same kind of test dealing with the same kind of matters, or is it different? - In my view at that stage I would have expected that had there been anything whatsoever in connection with that renewal which had raised any doubt at all, the people who were reporting to Mr. McMurdo would have reported that to me, and in the absence of that I would/would have accepted that the test had been carried out and this was the final part of the renewal process.

So as far as you were concerned, in the absence of any other information, you would dispose of the renewal in exactly the same way as the suggested revocation had been disposed of? - That is correct, if there was no other evidence then I would have.

LORD CULLEN: Now, Mr. Bonomy, what next?

MR. BONOMOY: The timing is not very good in this, because I may seek leave in the afternoon to interpose certain evidence. The next witness I propose to take now is Alexander Robertson, the Chief Inspector who investigated the firearms certification history, and he will not be anything like as long as Mr. McMurdo, but he will be quite a lengthy witness when compared with many of the witnesses in the Inquiry. It is quite convenient to start him, though, at this stage, and it may well relieve some of the tedium to get 20 minute of it done before lunchtime.

LORD CULLEN: Well, perhaps if we start him, and if evidence is available after lunch.....

MR. BONOMOY: Yes, if there is someone to be done I will do it immediately after lunch.

ALEXANDER ROBERTSON (37), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I am a Detective Chief Inspector with Central Police and I have been a police officer for 18 years.

Where are you based at the moment? - I am based in the CID Department at Police Headquarters, Stirling.

Now, what was your role in the investigation in this case? - I was asked to investigate/investigate Mr. Hamilton's involvement with firearms, basically every aspect of that.

And did that include looking at the force's involvement with Hamilton in so far as they dealt with the certification? - Yes, indeed.

I think in some areas the inquiry has gone outwith the Central Force area into other areas? - Yes.

Now, much of the evidence you gathered has been given or dealt with by other witnesses, and I just want to deal with certain aspects of the Inquiry that have not so far been dealt with. The first of these is to look at what was described as the report on a thematic inspection of the firearms licensing systems of the Scottish Police forces in general? - Yes.

Now, before I ask you to look at the document, can you tell me what a thematic inspection is? - I think it is really just an inspection of a theme, so that licensing is a theme, so it is a matter of inspection of firearms licensing.

And this was by Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary and his staff? - Yes.

Now, would you look at first of all FA195, which is right at the beginning of folder L7? - Yes.

Now, is that a letter enclosing a copy of the draft report for the Chief Constable of Central Scotland Police? - Yes it is.

And the letter is dated 8th February 1996? - Yes.

For comments by the 26th? - Yes.

And with it do you have the report itself? - Yes, I do.

Would/

12.40 p.m.

Would you also have FA194? Is that another letter, this time dated 22nd November 1995, also to the Chief Constable? - Yes.

But both of these letters came from the Chief Inspector himself? - Yes.

The November one I think was sent before the Inspection had been done before the report was available? - Yes.

I think if you look at the first paragraph of that letter it says "In the meantime, I thought it would be helpful to briefly highlight some of the main issues raised by the scrutiny of your own Force"? - Yes.

Can you read the next paragraph please? - "There is no doubt that the thematic report will encourage Forces to consider the civilianisation of their Central Firearms Licensing Registries and the appointment of civilian firearms examiners. Central Scotland Police have progressed well along this route and HMIC will continue to support the Force in relation to the appointment of a second firearms examiner to enable the majority of enquiries to be taken away from operational police officers. In addition, the difficulties within the Firearms Department resulting from a lack of permanent clerical support have been noted and, once again, the Inspectorate's full support will be given for the establishment of such a post".

I think the next paragraph really continues the same theme on the question of having a second firearms examiner by making the point that we have heard about, that the firearms examiner's work has been largely restricted to certificate renewals and he has been able to bring a consistency of approach which has not extended right through the whole Force area? - Yes.

It is noted that this issue will be resolved by the appointment of a second firearms examiner, is that right? I think that is the same paragraph? - Yes, it is. Yes.

The only other matter I want to ask you about/about in this letter is at the foot of page 2. Can you read the bottom paragraph? - "The introduction of postal renewal arrangements have facilitated the administration process in a number of Forces and, once your firearms examiner has provided a solid foundation in terms of security, types of weapons held, etc., I would recommend that consideration be given to piloting a scheme in Central Region. One renewal initiative in your Force which is worthy of commendation is the provision of a Freepost return facility. I regard this as an element of good practice and will encourage its adoption by other Forces."

We have heard evidence that this was used in the context of Mr. Lynch actually going out with the application form and meeting the applicant for renewal before he sent in his form in that envelope, is that correct? - Yes.

Now, can I ask you to look at the report itself which is in a number of chapters. We will deal with the ones that are of relevance to the circumstances arising out of the Dunblane tragedy. The first thing I want to ask you to look at is the introduction and paragraph I.3. Can you read that to us please? - "The change is introduced by the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988 allied to concerns expressed by the shooting public in relation to inconsistency and the way in which Forces dealt with firearms licensing across the country have provided the impetus for a number of reviews of practice in recent years. As a result, there is already a wealth of good practice guidance on firearms licensing which has provided the framework for Forces to develop and improve their administrative systems".

That is fine, thank you. Would you now go over the page to I.4 and read that to us? - "Although there was some input from Scotland to both the ACPO and the Home Office reports there has never been a detailed examination of the firearms licensing practice specifically aimed at Forces north of the Border. This is partly due to the fact that during the period 1992-1994 consideration was being given to the introduction of a national non-police Firearms Licensing Board to take over the firearms licensing activities carried out by the police. The proposal for such a civilian authority arose/arose from a desire to produce a more consistent and arguably more effectively administered firearms licensing system at a reduced cost whilst at the same time enabling operational officers to devote more time to eventual police tasks".

Now, does it go on to say that this issue was resolved against having such a Board because the cost compared unfavourably with the best estimated costs of the police system? - Yes.

Now, would you read I.5? - "In view of the uncertain future at that time, HM Inspectorate considered it unreasonable to expect Forces to invest significant resources in their firearms licensing systems. However, now that the ghost of the Firearms Control Board has finally been laid to rest, there is no excuse and the Inspectorate therefore decided that the time was right in 1995 to examine the firearms licensing service provided in Scotland".

I think I.6 gives us some interesting statistical information. Can you read that for us please? - "At the end of 1994 there were 31,952 firearms certificates on issue in Scotland and Forces had dealt with 2,005 applications for a new firearm certificate during the year. There were also 70,424 shotgun certificates on issue and 3,653 new applications processed. The estimated turnover of renewal during the year was 9,210 firearms certificates and 21,140 shotgun certificates. Information on the number of applications for visitors' permits was collected for the first time in 1994 and Forces received 3,311 applications for a firearm visitor's permit and 5,428 applications for a shotgun visitor's permit. There are now 350 registered firearms dealers in Scotland, the highest number recorded in the past 10 years. Appendices 'A'-'D' provide full statistical information on firearm and shotgun certificates derived from the Scottish Office Statistical Bulletin published in December 1995".

Now, can you miss the next paragraph please and would you read to us I.8? - "Many members of the shooting public object to the fact that their pursuit of a lawful sport or hobby is governed by Acts of Parliament which, along with the involvement of the police in administrative procedure/procedure, are seen as placing too much emphasis on the criminal aspects of firearm use at their expense. However, the main customer of the system is the general public at large and public safety and protection is the fundamental principle underlying the current arrangements. HM Inspectorate of Constabulary is therefore firmly of the view that firearms licensing should continue to be a police responsibility".

Now, I think the next two paragraphs tell you the method by which the inspection was carried out throughout the country and that included taking account of points being made by people with an interest in shooting? - Yes.

Now, can I ask you to look at Chapter 2 which is "Organisation and Management" and the second paragraph of that, 2.2, deals with the issue of civilianisation? - Yes.

The second half of that paragraph I think says "However, until recently progress towards civilianisation in firearms licensing has been hampered by legislation which did not exempt civilians from the need to hold a firearms certificate when possessing firearms in the course of their duty" and goes on to say that legislation changes have allowed that now? - Yes.

I think if you go to 2.3, at the middle there is the statement "The lack of knowledge of firearms among some of the officers tasked with firearms enquiries has certainly been a cause for friction in the past and contributed little to the professional image of the service in such matters"? - Yes.

"In order to address this problem the ACPO....." -- that is the Association of Chief Police Officers -- "..... scrutiny recommended that nominated trained staff should be used to deal with enquiries"? - Yes.

Can you confirm what I think is already fairly clear from the evidence, that in so far as Mr. Lynch did not carry out enquiries in Central, it was just whatever police officer was in the area and available to do the enquiry? - Yes.

Rather/

Rather than a specially trained officer? - That is correct.

Now, can you look at 2.5 at the foot. It says there "Although Forces have a wealth of civilian firearms licensing experience, the level of delegated authority varies enormously across the country" and we are looking there at the question of who actually makes the decision, is that correct? - Yes.

And in some areas it is the Assistant Chief Constable who does so, is that right? - Yes.

And indeed in relation to shotgun certificates an Inspector in some areas actually signs the shotgun certificate? - Yes.

There is also reference to one area where all the certificates are passed to a police officer in Headquarters for facsimile stamping? - Yes.

Now, the last sentence I think gives us the opinion of the Inspectorate to that procedure? - Yes.

What is that? - "Such an arrangement is completely unsatisfactory".

Now, I think we then look at the question of how an enquiry is carried out at 2.6. Will you read that paragraph please? - "One of the most important aspects of firearms licensing is the procedure used by Forces for making enquiries with applicants for a certificate. This is the practical interface between the police and the shooting public and the way in which such enquiries are carried out can have a significant influence on perceptions in relation to the professionalism and efficiency of a Force in terms of firearms licensing. In addition, the recent change to a five-year certificate and progression towards the increased use of postal renewal arrangements place even more emphasis and importance on the need for thorough enquiry to be made into all initial applications".

So what we are looking at here is thorough enquiry into applications for an original grant/grant? - Yes.

Because there is the potential for postal renewal coming along? - In the future, yes.

And then it goes on "Forces can only be certain of achieving this if the personnel undertaking the enquiries are suitably qualified and knowledgeable about firearms issues"? - Yes.

Can you read the next part please? - Of the same paragraph?

Yes, from "Many shooters....." towards the right-hand side? - "Many shooters are able to regale any willing listener with anecdotal evidence of police officers who have very little knowledge or experience of firearms and their uses attempting to make 'thorough' enquiries regarding an application for the grant or renewal of a certificate".

And the word "thorough" is in inverted commas there, is that right? - Yes.

Carry on please? - "If a professional approach is to be achieved then it is no longer acceptable for Forces to delegate such enquiries to police officers who have not been sufficiently trained to do what is expected of them".

So the encouragement is towards civilianisation, is that correct? - Yes.

And is it also correct to say that the Inspectorate confirms that the civilians who have been appointed are good at their job? - Yes, experienced.

I think if you look at just over half-way through the next paragraph, "They are all well qualified to undertake firearms enquiries and have a strong commitment to providing a quality service. The Inspectorate was impressed by their approach and enthusiasm and, although it is early days yet, their introduction appears to have been very well received by the shooting public"? - Yes.

And then just to complete this chapter, can you go to 2.9 where the recommendations are set out and do the recommendations go as far, at the end of/

of 2.9, as "that Forces delegate both decision-making and signing authority where appropriate to authorised officers who are directly responsible for the administration of firearms licensing"? - Yes.

Now, what officers do you understand that the recommendations relate to? - The civilians within the Department.

So in your case it would be Mr. Lynch? - Yes.

And the proposal there is that he should have the responsibility for making the decision? - Yes.

Now, the next section deals with technology. Can you confirm the one thing that the Inspectorate was concerned about was the lack of an available terminal within the Firearms Department on which the necessary checks could be made on records kept by the Police and by Scottish Criminal Records? - Yes.

And that there is a recommendation that that sort of equipment should be installed? - Yes.

I think there are various other recommendations about improving the technology used for processing firearms certificates in the administration part of the exercise? - Yes.

And anyone who wishes can read the detail of that in these documents? - Yes.

Can I take you to 3.7 please? It is also being suggested that technology could be used to improve the storage of records? - Yes.

And there is a recommendation at 3.8 that "Forces review the level of technology provided to their Firearms Registries, particularly from the point of view of providing 24-hour access to the database to operational officers"? - Yes.

If we now turn to Chapter 4. That I think deals with licensing procedures? - Yes.

Now, the paragraph in the centre there I think deals with the fact that there has been a review/review of licensing forms? - Yes.

Apart from those in relation to firearms dealers? -
Yes.

"And following protracted legal consultation, it is now anticipated that the revised rules will be issued in mid-1996". Now, does that suggest that it was anticipated at that stage there would be new forms for applying for a firearms licence? - Yes, it appears to be.

Do you know what the position is in regard to these forms? - No, I am sorry I don't.

Now, can you go to 4.5 which deals with the amount of guidance given to enquiry officers who are carrying out the enquiry at the homes of applicants? - Yes.

Can you read that to us please? - "The level of guidance available to enquiry officers differs significantly from one Force to another. One Force has designed an excellent 'Beat Officer's Guide to Firearms' pocket book which provides information and advice on a wide range of firearms issues. In other Forces guidance is incorporated into instructional or Standing Orders. The quality of this guidance varies enormously and in one Force the Standing Orders have been revised to such an extent that information on firearms licensing is almost non-existent. Officers with difficulties in relation to firearms licensing enquiries are directed to contact the Registry for advice. However, outwith office hours the Registry personnel are unavailable. In all cases where firearms enquiries continue to be carried out by operational police officers....." -- and that is highlighted -- "It is essential that they receive appropriate training and guidance to enable them to undertake the task required of them. It is unsatisfactory and unprofessional to expect officers to muddle their way through a firearms enquiry by relying on other shift colleagues, or even supervisors, who may themselves not be well acquainted with what is required. Comprehensive but concise and user-friendly guidance is required, supported by an input to training courses by firearms administration officers. In addition, the Home Office 'Firearms Law: Guidance to Police' publication should be readily/readily available to all enquiry officers. In order to provide a quality service, not only to shooters but to the general public at large, police officers undertaking firearms enquiries must know what they are doing and be confident to ask the necessary questions".

Now, is that document, the Home Office "Firearms Law: Guidance to Police" available to all Central police officers? - It is available at most stations, yes.

Do you know which Force has this excellent "Beat Officer's Guide to Firearms"? - I think it may be Grampian but I am guessing.

It is not Central which has that? - No.

And can I take it the Home Office Guidance is generally available to officers along with Standing Orders? - It would be available in stations but I would imagine there is only one copy per station.

What about the Force Standing Orders? - The Standing Orders would be available to every officer in each station.

Is every officer sent a copy of the Standing Orders? - No, there will be a copy held by each supervisor so each Sergeant, Inspector and Chief Inspector would have a copy for use by the officers.

These are supplemented by circular letters every so often? - Yes.

Are they held in the same way? - Yes.

After/

2 p.m.

After an adjournment for lunch.

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, I am sorry about the delay in re-starting this afternoon but a number of administrative matters have required attention and there are certain other matters I would like to deal with if I may.

The first of these relates to a witness who was invited to attend the Inquiry called Victoria Haggart who has been reported in the Press as missing from home. I have considered the position very carefully and have formed the view that the Inquiry would be put at no disadvantage by not hearing her evidence. From what I can tell of the police investigation it does seem to me that all the evidence that the Inquiry needs is covered by other evidence already before the Inquiry. So with that in mind I suggest to you, sir, that it will not be necessary, subject to comments that may be made by any other parties, to require her attendance here. I hope that that decision may give some reassurance to her if it is the invitation to this Inquiry that has caused her to leave home.

LORD CULLEN: Thank you. Any of the parties have any comment on that to make or any other alternative suggestion? Very well, we will proceed on that basis. I am content that should be the course of action.

MR. BONOMOY: All I can do in the circumstances is to intimate to her mother by letter that her attendance is not required.

The second matter I wish to deal with at this stage relates to a report which appeared first of all in the Daily Record, at that time an anonymous witness making certain allegations about evidence given by Constable Hamilton. That witness has been identified and has been interviewed and an invitation extended to him to attend the Inquiry and give evidence that he thought may be of assistance to the Inquiry. He has declined that invitation. He has given a reason for declining the invitation which on the face of it does not appear entirely satisfactory. In view of the fact that it does appear/appear he may be able to attend personally I have extended a further invitation to him to come on Monday. If, however, he still declines to come what I propose to do is to read to you, sir, the statement that was taken from him by the police following the report in the newspaper. Now, intimation will be made to his solicitor that that decision has been made so he is fully aware of what I propose and hopefully we may well have his evidence on Monday.

LORD CULLEN: Any party want to comment on that particular matter? Very well, we will proceed again on that basis, I am content with that having considered the matter.

MR. BONOMOY: The third matter is this: I have invited Dr. Hanley who was Mr. Hamilton's general medical practitioner to give evidence to the Inquiry. It would be most unfortunate if, with his responsibilities, he was kept waiting for the rest of the afternoon which he may well be while we take the evidence of Mr. Robertson. I would accordingly invite you, sir, to allow me to interpose his evidence at this stage.

LORD CULLEN: Certainly.

DR. ROBERT IAN HANLEY (34) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you a general medical practitioner? - I am.

I think your practice is at Park Avenue Medical Centre in Stirling? - It is.

How long have you been qualified as a medical practitioner? - Nine years.

What are your professional qualifications? - M.B., Ch.B.

I wonder if you would look please at a Production which should be the medical records of Thomas Hamilton which are in file H(iii)D1 (DANT13). Are these your practice medical records for Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

What address did you have recorded for him?/

him? - There was some confusion about that. The address in the records is stated as 13 Charter Street, Stirling. There is a handwritten note next to that telling us that we were advised of that address by the Health Board in May, 1993. But that is wrong, given the recent entry, the only entry in the notes for the Casualty attendance when he gave his address at Casualty as 7 Kent Road, Stirling.

Apart from the Casualty Department entry which is a hospital entry were you aware of that address? - He isn't a patient I have ever consulted so I wasn't.....

Am I right in saying apart from the hospital record his address 7 Kent Road doesn't appear in the medical records but there are certain older addresses? - That is correct, yes.

Now, that may be a reflection of the frequency with which Mr. Hamilton consulted the practice? - Yes.

When did he last consult your practice? - From recollection it was 21 years ago; can I just check that.

Just confirm that, would you? - Yes, 22nd January, 1974.

We have already had evidence about the records to the effect that he only really had minor skin complaints and had stomach upsets to attend the doctor with. Can you also confirm that you have got there the Glasgow medical records from the time before he moved to Stirling? - There is an address in Bellrock Street, which I believe is in Glasgow; it doesn't actually say. Just about that, the Charter Street address subsequently listed -- we had another patient called Thomas Hamilton and I suspect the Health Board was confused over that and I think that is where that address came from.

I take it this follows the fact the only attendance that you know of at either doctor or hospital in the last 21 years was the attendance at the hospital for the sprained ankle? - That is correct.

And that was when? - 16th March, 1993 -- 5/

5 o'clock in the morning was the attending time.

Do you know anything about shooting? - No.

Do you know if you have got any patients who have firearms certificates? - Yes.

Have you ever had to do anything in your capacity as a doctor that relates to the fact they have a firearms certificate? - I have one patient that on the past two occasions I signed the necessary form.

You are the counter-signatory on the application form?
- Yes.

Because you know the patient you fell into the necessary category? - Yes.

Apart from that have you had any involvement professionally with the granting of firearms certificates? - No.

If someone had wanted information from you about the fitness, the medical fitness of an applicant wanting to hold a firearms certificate would you have been able to provide it? - Certainly not without knowing him.

You would have had to carry out some sort of examination? - Well, in those circumstances, I mean, I certainly wouldn't sign a form for somebody I don't know. It isn't actually so far as I know a pre-requisite that a patient needs to be examined but obviously it needs to be somebody that you know, have knowledge which I clearly didn't have of Mr. Hamilton.

So if it was something separate from the application form, more of a medical opinion about fitness from a medical point of view of the person to hold a firearm certificate, if you were asked to do that for Hamilton you obviously would need to see him? - Yes.

Do you think you could do that on the strength of the records there? - Certainly not on the strength of his records, no.

Could/

Could you do it for a patient who attended regularly without having a special examination of him for the purpose? - I don't think I would be qualified to medically examine somebody as to his suitability for firearms in any event.

I take it you don't see a role for yourself in the process for applying for or vetting for a firearms certificate? - Not necessarily. I certainly don't think we should be put in the position where we say this person is fit to have a firearms certificate. I have thought about this, and I can see where I may be in a position if I know something about this patient that perhaps nobody else would know that in our opinion would raise doubt about that fitness.

It may be very difficult to devise a proper question and a proper scheme for that, but would you see your role as covering the role of identifying the reasons which should prevent a person getting a firearms certificate? - I think that is perhaps more realistic than saying somebody is fit. I think almost perhaps some sort of veto to say they should not be allowed a firearm, he would be a danger in that situation.

Even in the situation where you knew the patient well? - I think, yes, personally I would still perhaps in the light of this event, still have reservations about the proposition I might not have had before.

Are you aware of a procedure that you might follow which relates to something being pointed towards one of your patients being a danger with a firearm for which he had a certificate? - As far as I know I don't know of any procedure because I have never come across the circumstances.

There is a suggestion in evidence which I think the Inquiry will consider that at the present time it is possible for a doctor to inform the police that a person does have a weapon which the doctor has cause to think may be misused or be dangerous to others? Are you aware that that would be an acceptable thing under GMC guidelines that a doctor should disclose to the police? - Yes. I think that would probably be a course of action for which you would have to -- I mean, most GPs will not know/know whether their patients have firearms certificates in the first place.

What I am anxious to establish though is whether it is generally known by doctors who have patients with firearms certificates they wouldn't be breaking any pledge that they have taken if they were to disclose to the police that one of their patients was a suspected danger with a firearm? - I think there is a potential problem in that you would be breaching the patient's confidentiality by informing the police the patient had -- this is assuming you are doing it outside the patient's consent, which perhaps is slightly.....

I am advised or instructed by some evidence to the Inquiry that the GMC has guidelines on confidentiality which does allow doctors to disclose that type of information? - The over-riding concern is you are acting in the patient's best interests. Obviously there is a duty to the public at large as well, and if you can make a sufficient case to say in all the circumstances you may breach confidentiality then you have an obligation to do so, but I would not be very certain of the situation.

Is that similar to the situation that applies to patients who are drivers with licences and if you think they may be a danger on the road? - Yes. The obligation clearly rests with the patient to inform the DVLA if they have a condition, if they have any complications, to let them know. If you know, you are certainly allowed to breach their confidentiality and pass that information on.

If any system involving doctors were to work of course it would be necessary for the doctor to be told in every case where a patient had a firearm certificate? - Yes.

Do you see any problem about a requirement that a person should disclose to a doctor or the doctor should be told he has got a firearm certificate? - I don't see a problem with the doctor knowing that. Almost intrinsic in that is that the doctor does have some obligation in terms of the patient maintaining his licence which I think some people may have some reluctance with.

CROSS/

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Do I understand correctly from some of your evidence that what you had in mind as a potential role for the medical profession is to participate in what could be described as information gathering by the police in investigations for suitability of an applicant for a firearm certificate? - Personally, speaking personally, I think that is reasonable, but I can envisage circumstances where the only person that might know something that would be extremely relevant where a patient has a firearm certificate will be that patient's GP. If they are excluded from assistance that information may never come to light.

To take a hypothetical example: if a patient has been referred by yourself to a consultant for treatment of a psychotic condition and that patient subsequently applies for a firearms licence I think plainly it would be desirable that the police authorities should know about his mental state? - Yes, I think so.

And in these circumstances an inquiry of the GP would seem to be a fairly basic and obvious step? - I would have thought so. There again, the confidentiality aspect comes into that. It would involve certainly the applicant for the licence giving permission for medical details to be released to a third party.

Unless perhaps one has the kind of guidance from the GMC mentioned a moment or two ago by my learned friend Mr. Bonomy which might provide some reassurance to doctors in that regard? - My understanding of that was in different circumstances where it would be that something came to light and you have an obligation perhaps to pass on that information: whereas if you are talking about the initial application process -- I mean, probably these are grey areas -- perhaps somebody had a drink problem in the past, should they be able to have a firearms certificate. I don't think many GPs would want to have the responsibility to say Yes, this patient is fit. As I say, providing the information and somebody else makes that decision is perhaps reasonable.

I can understand that entirely, and what you have in mind is responding to a request for information/information rather than responding to an inquiry as to stability? - Yes.

Would you agree that when police authorities are considering whether or not a person is or is not suitable to be entrusted with a firearm the more information they have about that person the better? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: I wonder if you could elaborate a little bit on the evidence you gave a few moments ago as to why it is you feel that you wouldn't like to certify that a patient you have seen regularly was fit to be entrusted with a firearm? - I have thought a lot about that because of my personal views perhaps as a general practitioner, and I suspect that there are general practitioners who would say no member of the public should have a firearm, which then puts them in an impossible position in deciding on a patient where perhaps another GP would seem perfectly satisfied. It is maybe too much of a personal decision based on a GP's personality as to his thoughts on the whole issue of the public having guns, rather than just the suitability of that one particular patient.

What would be your position in regard to the suitability of one patient -- this is leaving aside reservations which a GP may have -- from the ethical point of view? - I think they would be able possibly to say I have no particular reservations about the patient in the light of my knowledge of him, of his past behaviour and illnesses that he may have, whether he is or isn't fit to hold a licence. The problem is that you can have people from perfectly stable backgrounds who then develop mental illness and that will always be at the back of a GP's mind.

Would that mental illness not be detectable by the GP? - It may develop the week following the consultation. You can't predict who is going to get a mental illness. It can happen to anybody.

BY LORD CULLEN: Your concern really would be you may feel somebody may be fit at one point and become unfit later? - Well, also you are making a value judgement about something perhaps which you are not qualified to do. Some patients you/you get to know very intimately; a lot of patients you don't get to know at all because you have seen them a very few number of times, perhaps they are fairly new applicants for a licence, and we are put in a position of not knowing enough about them to say they are fit to hold a gun licence. Perhaps Thomas Hamilton was an example of that. Had he attended his general practitioner at the normal rate for minor illnesses, I don't know, I don't see that I or anybody else would have been in a position to say this man is mentally ill or in any way predict what he may be capable of.

No re-examination.

ALEXANDER ROBERTSON (Recalled)

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: We have dealt with paragraph 4 and 5 dealing with guidance of enquiry officers. Paragraph 6 deals with the question of the RL3a form by which the Force has developed its own style of enquiry report pro forma to assist in the processing of the application? - Yes.

I think there is a move afoot at the moment to standardise these? - Yes.

The Home Office seem to be working on that? - Yes, that is correct.

Can we move now to 4.8. That deals with background checks. Could you read the paragraph please? - "Before a firearm or shotgun certificate is granted Chief Constables must satisfy themselves that the applicant is not prohibited under the Firearms Act from possessing firearms. The police must also be satisfied that the safety of the public will not be endangered by an applicant's possession of weapons and ammunition. Forces therefore carry out full background enquiries on all applicants in order to establish their character. The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 does not apply to an application for a firearms certificate and applicants are therefore not entitled to withhold information on their previous convictions. In most Force the enquiry officers themselves are required to carry out the necessary checks with SCRO/PNC and details of any previous convictions need to be attached/attached to the completed firearms report. If an applicant has resided within another Force area during the previous five years then background checks will also be made with the Forces concerned, particularly in relation to any cases where a previous application has been refused".

Was that last practice followed in Central? - As far as I know, yes.

The next paragraph deals with refusal or revocation. I wonder if you could read that please? - "The Police may refuse or revoke a certificate if they have good reason to believe that the applicant is of unsound mind or intemperate habits. All the relevant facts need to be taken into consideration and this includes drink-driving offences. Most Forces now automatically check with the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Authority (DVLA) and the use of such offences in consideration of an individual's suitability to become a certificate holder has been upheld by the Court of Appeal. Also of relevance are the applicant's antecedents and associates. For this purpose local Criminal Intelligence is of value. Although an applicant may not have any previous convictions local Intelligence may reveal a degree of involvement with criminal associates which would put public safety at risk. The level of guidance given to enquiry officers in this respect varies and HM Inspectorate would encourage all Forces to enhance the awareness of the importance of thorough Intelligence checks not only with local collators but with other colleagues who may have personal experience of the applicant which has not been recorded".

I think the rest of that paragraph goes on to deal with the civilian firearms officers who in the early days didn't have any personal contact perhaps that the police had, didn't know the police all that well, and stressing the importance of getting to know their colleagues and finding out all they can from police officers? - Yes.

And there is also encouragement there on operational officers to pass on information to enquiry officers and administration personnel? - Yes.

Now, there is a lot about security but that/that really is not a subject I think that is of particular importance at the moment. If I can pass on to paragraph 4.25 which deals with counter-signatories? - Yes.

What I would like you to do is perhaps read the last six lines of the paragraph, "It is understood that"? - "It is understood that the ongoing revision of the firearms rules will probably abolish the list of appropriate counter-signatories and in future the requirement will be for such a person to have only known the applicant for two years, family members excluded. Notwithstanding this measure HM Inspectorate fully support the view that the current counter-signatory requirement should be discontinued".

So HM Inspectorate does not need a counter-signatory at all? - That appears so.

Now,/

2.30 p.m.

Now, can we move to Chapter 5 and 5.2? - Yes.

And do we see there the question of postal renewals?

- Yes.

And does it say there that both the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Home Office have encouraged forces to carry out the thorough investigation of all initial applications so that a postal renewal system, supplemented by home visits only where strictly necessary, could be introduced, thereby reducing the time, workload and cost of the renewal process? - Yes.

And 4 Scottish forces have introduced a postal renewal system for shotguns; is that right? - Yes.

Now, no one has it, or does anyone have it for firearms? - I think Lothians may have some sort of scheme, but I am not sure.

They are the only ones? - Yes.

And it is suggested that home visits could be done on a random basis; is that right? - Yes.

Just to check up on how the scheme is working? - Yes.

Now, then, read 5.3? - "There is no doubt that, with the recent increase in certificate life to five years, there is a need to provide an adequate system of checks and balances to maintain the integrity of the postal renewal procedure and guard against complacency. A 10 per cent to 15 per cent monitoring sample would appear to be adequate for this purpose. However, the effectiveness of such a procedure might perhaps be enhanced if steps were taken to ensure that future samples do not focus on the same individuals to any large extent".

Could I just stop you there. That is so that the reviews will be spread over the whole population of holders of certificates? - Yes.

Could/

Could you go just to the end of the paragraph now. Does it say there, "Discussions with the civilian firearms inquiry officers revealed that discrepancies were often identified at renewal time, for example the possession of shotguns which are now classified as Section 1 Firearms"? - Yes.

Now can you go to 5.5, over the page. I think there we do have confirmation of the one force which has introduced a postal renewal procedure for firearms? - Yes.

And that force "Considers the postal renewal is both appropriate and safe, provided that thorough inquiries and checks are carried out at the initial grant stage, supported by an efficient system of quickly flagging any certificate holders who adversely come to the notice of the police"? - Yes.

Can you tell me this, if you have investigated the system at Central for notifying the Firearms Department should anyone come to the adverse attention of the police in connection with something other than firearms? - Standing Orders contain an instruction that anything which may affect the suitability of a firearms certificate holder should be notified to the Firearms Department via a particular form or report.

If something gets on to Scottish Criminal Records, does that automatically end up on a firearms administrator's desk? - It should, yes.

If you now go to 5.6, does that tell us in the second sentence that some forces appear more willing to progress towards the introduction of postal renewal for shotguns, but are opposed to extending the procedure to firearms certificate renewals"? - Yes.

And then "It is perhaps surprising that some of the critics of firearm postal renewals are the civilian firearm inquiry officers themselves"? - Yes.

And I think the paragraph goes on to stress that shotguns do play a large part in criminal activity; is that right? - Yes.

And/

And more shotguns tend to be stolen and used in criminal activity even than handguns? - Yes.

And then there is a recommendation towards the end of 5.7. Can you read the recommendation in black? - "That forces which do not currently have postal renewal arrangements consider the introduction of such a scheme, in the first instance for shotguns certificates, but with a view to extending the procedure to firearm certificates once the shotgun initiative has been fully evaluated. Suitable monitoring arrangements also need to be implemented to safeguard the procedure."

Now can I take you to 5.12, which deals with refusal or revocation? - Yes.

And I think it would be best if I just invited you to read that paragraph? - "The incidence of certificate refusals or revocations in Scotland is not high, and during 1994 there were 14 refusals to grant a firearms certificate (0.7 per cent of the total applications received), and 23 revocations (0.07 per cent of the total certificates held at the year end). With regard to shotgun certificates there were 35 refusals (0.9 per cent) and 61 revocations (0.09 per cent). Although there is no statutory requirement for a Chief Constable to give his reasons for refusing or revoking a certificate, the Home Office Guidance recommends that these should normally be given. HM Inspectorate is satisfied that forces adhere to this Guidance and only withhold such information if it is deemed absolutely necessary. All refused applicants and revoked certificate holders have a right of appeal to the Sheriff Court. The number of appeals made in Scotland is relatively small, and the BSSC questioned whether this was due to there being less chance of success north of the border. However, the Inspectorate is of the view that forces are correctly using their discretion regarding refusals and revocations and making their reasons clearly known to applicants, holders and their legal agents. This obviously influences the decision of those concerned regarding the justification for proceeding with an appeal.

So what that says basically is you don't get many appeals in Scotland? - That is correct.

Now, /

Now, the next section I don't need to look at on registered firearms dealers. Just one -- not quite peripheral matter -- but it is perhaps not as directly relevant as some that I might invite you to look at -- is Paragraph 7.7. It is dealing with a European Community Directive in 1993 about moving firearms between countries? - Yes.

The second sentence -- can you read from the second sentence? - "Exports had to be declared to Customs who checked the documentation in every case" -- do you want me to continue?

I am looking at the wrong part of it, sorry -- have you got 7.7? I don't mean the second line, I mean the second sentence. I think it is at the end of the third line -- "The obligation.....?" - "The obligation to declare such movements of firearms no longer exists, and monitoring is by means of selective intelligence-based checks".

Read the next part please? - "Unfortunately, the participation of member states in the operation of the Weapons Information Exchange System (WIES), which was set up under the Directive, has been sporadic and this has not made the task of HM Customs & Excise any easier. Concern has been expressed by a number of forces regarding the checking of weapons entering and leaving the country under the Visitors' Permit Scheme. This concern is mirrored by HM Inspectorate".

This reflects a relaxation in Customs Controls within the European Union; is that right? - Yes.

And a concern by police forces about control of firearms coming into their areas? - Yes.

And can I then ask you to go on a bit now to certain miscellaneous issues, 10.3? - Yes.

And there we find a reiteration of the earlier problem associated with postal renewals that you can get discrepancies where perhaps weapons have changed hands in between renewal times? - Yes.

And can I then take you to 10.6? - Yes.

And/

And that is to do with the need for handguns as humane killers in certain circumstances, but could you read the last two sentences to see what the police view is -- "All forces"? - "All forces expressed extreme reluctance to issue a certificate for a handgun for any other purpose than target shooting, although every application is considered on its own merits. HM Inspectorate fully supports this stance".

So I think that takes us through the essential elements of that thematic inspection. I think that you recovered as part of your inquiry the Force Standing Orders. I think the ones that matter are D10 in Chapter L. In fact, it doesn't have a number on the back here. Are these the revised Force Standing Orders of 1990? - Sorry, yes, they are.

And I think the heading there is "Operations: firearms/shotguns: guidance on administrative procedures"? - Yes.

And is this a section of the standing orders that deals with firearms? - Yes.

I think if you go to 2.1, the standing orders set out for officers the circumstances in which a firearms certificate is granted? - Yes.

So we have there the test for the grant, the test for not granting, is that right, as well? - Yes, that is correct.

Go to 2.12. We have a statement there of what should be done or what the position is in relation to duplicate calibres? - Yes.

Can you read that one please? - "In normal circumstances the acquisition of two or more weapons of the same calibre including smooth bore guns (see paras. 2.26 to 2.27) will not normally be permitted. If, however, the applicant can show good reason for acquisition then his application may be viewed favourably".

And if you go to 2.15 you will see what Guidance is given in relation to renewals? - Yes.

Can you read that please? - "Applications for renewal will be made on Firearms Form/

Form 101 and afford an opportunity for reviewing the circumstances of each case and the extent to which the provisions of the Act have been complied with by the holder of the certificate and by the person supplying the holder with firearms and ammunition".

No. 16 as well? - "It is stressed that applications for renewals will not be granted as a matter of routine. The certificate will not be renewed if circumstances have changed materially since the original grant, unless a good and sufficient case is made for renewal. The same strict police inquiry must again be made in the same manner as that made into the original application, and a form RL3a submitted".

It doesn't spell out a renewal should be viewed in the same way as a grant. It rather suggests the circumstances in which you check up on renewals particularly are if there has been a material change in circumstances since the original grant; is that a fair summary of it? - It says each one should be treated as a review, so each one is really a review of the position, even if it is a renewal.

So the last sentence should be read as applying to all renewals, should it? - Yes I think so.

Perhaps it could be clearer? - Perhaps.

Now, could I ask you to go to Paragraph 6.9 with the heading "Firearms Certificates"? - Yes.

And here we are dealing with revocation? - Yes.

And I see the test for revocation is set out there? - Yes.

BY LORD CULLEN: Just while we are on that page at 6.7 -- is that the procedure which you referred to earlier? - Yes.

That is to say bringing to the attention of the Chief Constable any information relating to a firearm or shotgun certificate holder which may warrant revocation of that person's certificate? - Yes./

Yes.

Does it say to whom -- what the method of bringing that attention should be? - No. I think there are options. There is a form RL3e, which is a form devised for a report on the conduct of a firearm certificate holder. So that is a form devised for that purpose. But there is an option also just to submit an internal memorandum for his consideration.

Is that form part of the Standing Orders? - Yes, it should be in standing orders.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: Is it part of these Standing Orders or is it a separate chapter? - Yes. If you go to Appendix A in these Standing Orders you will see at the bottom of the page "Force Forms", and Form RL3e is a report of Inquiry into the conduct of a firearm/shotgun certificate holder".

BY LORD CULLEN: In effect it covers the situation where, in a non-firearms related situation, something may bear on the suitability of the holder? - Yes.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: Can you go now to Paragraph 9.20? That is dealing with approved Gun Clubs? - Yes.

And that says it is for the Secretary of State to approve these? - Yes.

And over the page, that approval allows the Club to obtain a firearm certificate free of charge? - Yes.

And then there is Paragraph 9.22, setting out the criteria for the Club constitution? - Yes.

Before the grant of such an approval can be given? - Yes.

And you see a number of notes there about membership and so on. Can you go to Paragraph E and read that one? - "An applicant for probationary membership must be sponsored by one full Club member and by one other person who knows the applicant personally".

And/

2.50 p.m.

And the next part? - "A probationary member must at all times when in possession of firearms or ammunition be personally supervised by the range master or by a full member of the club who holds a firearms certificate".

And then (g)? - "A probationary period of at least six months applies in respect of new probationary members (unless the club wishes to terminate a probationer's membership during this period) during which the probationary member must be given a course of regular instruction in the safe handling and use of firearms".

Now, in the same folder as you have got do you also have the various supplementary circulars that have been sent out by the Chief Constable in relation to firearms? - Yes.

Do you have D12 at all which is the one of 20th October 1987? - Yes.

And that is clarifying certain definitions? - Yes.

What gave rise to that? - I think there was some dubiety with regard to interpretation of firearms legislation and officers were looking for further guidance on them.

And that is the sort of thing that would be issued by the Chief Constable to clarify matters of any uncertainty following changes in legislation, is it? - Yes.

Now, do you have D13? - Yes.

That is a circular about a firearms amnesty in August and September of 1988? - Yes.

And setting out how the amnesty would work? - Yes.

And what police officers were required to do to make it work? - Yes.

And then D14, do you have that one? - Yes.

Now/

Now, what were the circumstances of this instruction?
- This followed upon the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988 introduction.

So that is explaining the provisions of that Act which were then to be brought into force? - Yes.

And then if you go to DI5, we see another of the same when more provisions to that Act were brought into force? - Yes.

Now, can you go to D16 which is dated 22nd October 1990? - Yes.

And is headed "Firearm/Shotgun Certificate Enquiries". Can you read that one please? - "With the introduction of a computerised Force Criminal Intelligence file, enquiry can now be made more easily into the background of all firearm certificate/shotgun certificate holders. Consequently it will be the enquiry officer's responsibility to undertake a Force Criminal Intelligence check at the same time as an SCRO/PNC check when completing a firearm form RL3a and RL3b. While the Intelligence file is available on a 24-hour basis it is anticipated that firearm enquiries will only be carried out during normal office hours Monday to Friday. Firearm forms RL3a and RL3b will be amended in due course".

So that is an instruction to all officers carrying out enquiries to check Criminal Intelligence? - Yes, it is a reminder with the inception of the new system.

If you go to DI7. Is that another one similar to earlier instructions giving information about further legislative changes? - Yes.

Do you also have in that folder "Firearms Law: Guidance to the Police" from the Home Office? - Yes.

Can you have that just very briefly in front of you? Does the second paragraph of the preface make it clear that the revised guidance was to be made available publicly for the first time? - Yes.

Would/

Would you look at Chapter 6 please? We have already looked at some of the detail of this, but can you just confirm to me that that is a chapter dealing with firearms certificate procedure? - Yes, it is.

Can you now look at Chapter 13? Have you got that? - Yes, I have it.

And confirm that this deals with Rifle and Pistol Clubs and Cadet Corps? - Yes.

Chapter 14 deals with security of firearms and ammunition held on certificate? - Yes.

And if you go to Appendix 2. If your pages are numbered like mine then it is page 162? - Yes.

Does that set out standard conditions that are to be put on all firearms certificate? - Yes.

Now, I take it that not all of them applies in every case because there is a direction given at the top? - Yes.

What is the direction? - "Please refer to Chapter 6 when considering which conditions should be applied to a firearms certificate".

Now, there are certain standard conditions on certificates in your Force, is that right? - Yes.

If you look at the example, the blank example, which you have which is D5. It is a bit further on in your book. Do we see the Standard Conditions? - Yes.

And these are to sign the certificate? - Yes.

To report the theft of any firearm or ammunition? - Yes.

At once? - Yes.

And then without undue delay to notify a change of address to the Chief Constable? - Yes.

And/

And then a condition about secure storage? - Yes.

And then security precautions when the firearm is removed from its storage for any purpose? - Yes.

Now, I appreciate there is other Home Office Guidance on more recent legislation. Having mentioned that without looking at it in any detail, can you tell me if I have missed out anything of the documentary guidance that was available for Central Scotland Police before the 13th March? - No, apart from the statutes themselves.

Now, perhaps the quickest way of doing the next exercise is to ask you to have Hamilton's firearms certificates. I am not so sure I have got all the proper backing numbers but I think you may be given them very quickly. The D numbers I will try and give you in order in a moment? - Yes, I have it.

Now, FA3 or D24 is the first one I think? - Yes, I have it.

Is that Hamilton's first firearms certificate? - Yes.

Now, that discloses on the table that he was fairly frequently purchasing ammunition? - Yes.

And that throughout 1977 and 1978 he was purchasing ammunition? - Yes.

Well, certainly more frequently in 1977 than apparently in 1978? - Yes.

Have you worked out just what sort of quantities he was buying over the various years that the certificate covers? - Yes.

Are you able just very quickly to give us a breakdown of the pattern? - I have it in my briefcase if I can refer to it.

Yes, I think there is no objection to that. If you have done that it will certainly simplify it for us. I think if you had one of the charts/charts. That is perhaps what I should have directed you to? - That may be easier.

C3L1 to 4 and then we have a summary of rounds of ammunition purchased on various certificates. Now, do you have that? - I should have, yes. Yes, I have it.

Now, all I wanted to do was to ask you to confirm the accuracy of these so do you have in front of you C3L1, 2, 3 and 4? - Yes.

And do you also have a number of pages 1 to 12 setting out ammunition purchases? - Yes.

Now, is that an accurate record of what you found in the course of the enquiry? - Yes.

Right. I don't think I need to ask you any more about that. Now, at the end of your enquiry were you satisfied that Hamilton had been a member of Callander Rifle and Pistol Club some time many years ago? - Yes.

Roughly when? - Certainly from 1977 until the early 1980s. The exact year was not readily ascertainable.

Now, were there records to confirm that? - No, there were not any records to confirm that.

So we are relying on oral evidence for that? - From fellow members, yes.

Did the records not disclose the membership? - No.

I think some membership records had been destroyed but there are accounts and certain other items? - Yes.

In those days was Callander a full bore shooting club? - No.

Do you know when it changed to allow also full bore shooting? - The range was upgraded in 1988.

Did you at some stage establish that Hamilton was a member of a club called the Clyde Valley/

Valley Rifle Club? - The Clyde Valley Pistol Club, yes.

Sorry, Pistol Club? - Yes.

Would you have D34 which is a membership card which I think we had out yesterday. FA14. I may have given you the wrong reference? - D34 is the reference I have here and it is a membership card for the Clyde Valley Pistol Club.

Where was that found? - That was found at his home address.

What year does it cover? - It covers the season 1985 to 1986.

Did you have any other evidence of his membership of that club? - No.

BY LORD CULLEN: Do you know where that club shot? - It is a range at Larkhall, my lord.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMY: And Larkhall would also be consistent, we have heard already of somewhere called Ashgill? - Yes.

That is the same place, is it? - I believe so, yes.

There has also been a reference to a range under Hamilton Police Office? - They had the use of the range there prior to getting their own premises so it was the same club, the Clyde Valley Pistol Club.

Is the range under Hamilton Police Office a police range? - Yes, I believe so. I don't know if it is still in existence but it was at that time obviously.

Were you able to establish that Hamilton had prior to becoming a member of that club also been a visitor? - Yes.

Now, there is evidence from what you have already told us of purchases of ammunition in the early 1980s but am I right in saying you have not got a lot of evidence of where exactly he was shooting in the early 1980s? - No.

Then/

Then in 1984 I think there are a series of transactions in which he disposes of weapons and purchases weapons? - Yes.

Was there anything in your enquiry to point to the motivation behind that? - No, apart from it appeared that he was moving towards full bore shooting. You know, having started off on small bore shooting.

So the disposals were in 1984 and were .22 weapons largely? - Largely, yes.

And a rifle? - Yes.

And in 1984 he acquired his first Browning semi-automatic pistol? - Yes.

Does his membership of the Stirling Club then commence about 1986? - I think he attended around the end of that year but I don't think he joined until into the Spring of 1987.

Had he prior to that on any former occasion been a member? - No.

In 1987 Hamilton sought an increase in amount of ammunition he could hold and acquire to fairly substantial levels? - Yes.

Were you able to establish any reason for that? - There was nothing definitive but he did seem to go through the amounts he had been authorised up to that time fairly quickly and on a couple of occasions he had to have his firearms certificate replaced because the ammunition table had been completed so presumably he either worked out or perhaps he was advised that if he asked for more ammunition he would not have that trouble.

Was it on one or more occasion that he had had to have additional.....? - He had it replaced because it was full at least twice before the expiry of the certificate itself.

Now/

3.10 p.m.

Now, you had occasion in the course of the enquiry to investigate a suggestion that Hamilton may have been involved in the reckless discharge of a firearm? - Yes.

Can you tell me the source first of all of that suggestion? - Inspector Ralph came forward and offered an explanation that having known Hamilton at some earlier stage he had come across him one day. Hamilton had approached him and alleged that a day or two previously he had been approached by two police officers who had accused him of recklessly discharging an air weapon in the area of Stirling Castle, in the Back Walk, which is behind Stirling Castle, and he was objecting to these officers' actions and the fact he thought perhaps he was going to be reported for that reckless discharge offence.

Was he able to give a period for that? - I think it was very vague. Inspector Ralph thought this may have happened between 1986 and 1990.

Now, did you cause a search to be made of the records to see if this could be identified? - Yes.

And what was the result of the search? - There were no offences of reckless discharge recorded, detected or undetected, in that area, and certainly no evidence of any type by Mr. Hamilton. The only offence that could be found was an offence in 1980 regarding an undetected reckless discharge, with regard to which no one had ever been traced, and there was no information.

Now, you were able to identify the officer who dealt with that? - Yes.

Who was he? - Constable Mailer.

What was his account of that? - He couldn't remember very much about it apart from the fact obviously he created a crime report to record the offence, and apart from that he couldn't remember any detail at all.

I think though he had no name for a suspect/suspect for that? - No, there was no description of any suspects and certainly the circumstances did not fit with this version Inspector Ralph had given regarding Hamilton alleging he had been approached by two officers. None of that seemed to fit, nor did the timescale, which was at least six years out of date.

To be clear about this, I think there was another report you discovered in relation to April 1983? - Yes. I think there were named persons detected for that.

So you excluded that one on the basis of the names of the suspects? - Not being Hamilton, yes.

And two people I think were cautioned and charged in relation to that? - Yes.

Neither being Hamilton? - Neither being Hamilton.

But that was an incident on 30th April 1983 involving reckless discharge of an air weapon? - Yes.

At the Back Walk area of Stirling? - Yes.

So were you able to identify any report that would confirm the recollection of Inspector Ralph? - No.

Now, I think you have also compiled a report which sets out the details of the ammunition which Hamilton had at the time of the incident? - Yes.

Now, that I think has been circulated to everyone and given the number R39? - Yes.

Now, what I am concerned about is the position at the 13th March, and if you go to page 3 of your report, you have recorded there that when the certificate was renewed in 1995 Hamilton declared his possession of four calibres of ammunition? - Yes.

What were these? - 643 9mm, 203 .357, 11/

11 times .38 Special, and 100 times 7.62 ammunition.

Now, between the renewal and February -- indeed 13th March 1996, what purchases did he make? - In total he purchased 1700 9mm and 500 .357.

And they were of different types? - Yes.

Now, I think on page 4 you have set out the details of the ammunition shot at the school and then the totals found in his house? - Yes.

Now, can you tell me what ammunition was found in his house please? - In total 715 9mm of different types, 280 .357 of the same type and 11 .38 Special.

So if we take the total that he must have had when he went to the gymnasium, and what he had in the house, what do we have? - 1216 9mm and 522 .357.

And then there is the 11 -- I am just trying to understand that. Do we also have 11 .38 Special? - Yes. These 11 .38 Special were recovered in his house.

I am trying to get the total ammunition he possessed at the time this incident took place. Was it 1216 9mm? - Yes.

And 522 .357 - Yes.

11 .38 Special? - Yes.

And what about -- we haven't lost the rifle bullets, have we -- he has still 100 7.62? - No, they are missing. They are not in the house.

They have disappeared? - They haven't been found.

So having been on his firearms certificate for about 10 years? - Yes.

And his never having had such a rifle?
- That is correct.

These were never found? - No.

Now/

Now, I think you then have set out on page 5 and subsequent to this an Inventory of all the things related to guns which were found in the house? - Yes.

And these included a box of gun-cleaning equipment, wooden gun handle butts -- now, what are these? - Well, it is just the insert. You can replace the grip -- if you like, I mean, you can have a wooden effect or metal effect or a smaller grip or larger grip, just depending on your needs.

And then gun target sheets -- where were they? - They were in the room where most of the equipment was all found.

And were they on the wall? - Yes.

And then there is a strongbox containing a number of cases containing ammunition? - Yes.

Where was it found? - In the same room.

Is that on the table? - Yes.

And were there actually two of these strongboxes? - Yes.

And we see the details of the other one later? - Yes.

In fact, I think there are another two mentioned? - There are, yes.

In fact, there is even more -- can you tell me how many strongboxes there were? - I think there were four in total.

And were they all in the same room? - No. I think one was actually in a cupboard in the hallway.

And then we have a whole catalogue of anything relating to the shooting that was found in the house? - Yes.

Now, I think you also did a study of the number of duplicate calibre weapons held on Central Police Firearms Certificates, by just dipping into the/

the certificates, choosing a number at random and seeing what the result was? - Yes.

And what was the result of that? - Well, we found that of 12 files that were chosen at random, at least 10 had one pair of duplicate weapons, and seven had more than one pair of duplicate weapons.

BY LORD CULLEN: When you say "duplicate weapons", do you mean according to the type of calibre shown on the certificate? - The calibre, my lord, yes.

So there may be more detailed differences perhaps between the firearms? - Yes, there may be different sights, maybe different weights, maybe different lengths of barrel, even, on the same calibre.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: And now, just lastly, can I ask you this: I think you sought statistical information from the other Scottish Police Forces? - Yes.

What was the purpose of that? - Really just to obtain an over-view in terms of a national picture in terms of how Central Scotland compared, in terms of refusals or revocations.

And what did you find? - Basically from the provisional statistics for firearm certification from all Scottish Forces encompassing the years 1991 to 1995, and they have been collated by the ACPO Working Party.

Does that mean you gave the information to a representative of the Association of Chief Police Officers of Scotland? - No, we received it from the ACPO.

You got it from them? - Yes, and we compared it, for comparison, for analysis, which revealed over this five-year period, for example, Central Scotland Police had refused 0.50 of all grant applications, whereas the national average stood at 0.90. In terms of refusal of renewal applications the figure related to Central Scotland Police was ascertained to be 0.06 per cent, whereas the national figure calculated as being 0.05. As regards/regards revocation of certificates over the period, Central Scotland Police had revoked 0.58 per cent of firearms certificates, while the national figure reflected a 0.48 revocation rate.

Are all these certificates relative to firearms certificates, and exclusive of shotgun certificates? - Yes.

BY LORD CULLEN: Just one point I would like to clarify before we go on. A bit earlier you were shown on tables to do with ammunition. I don't know if you have these in front of you? - No.

It doesn't perhaps matter very much, but the heading of a typical page gives the number of rounds which Mr. Hamilton in each case wanted to purchase or wanted to possess, and then underneath I think you listed the actual purchase -- take page I as a typical one. I think it is the first of your 12 pages? - Page No. I? C/3/L1?

Yes. Just taking that as a typical example, am I right in thinking in each case where he applied for authority to purchase or possess a certain number of rounds he was, in each case, given that authority? - Yes.

So wherever we see "wants to purchase" he got it, so to speak? - Yes.

And wherever it says he applied for it, he got it? - Yes.

So these headings really apply to the authority he had obtained in each case? - These tables relate to the purchases at the retail outlets, at the gun shops, as opposed to being authorised by the police.

Yes, but I am only concerned with the heading "Wants to purchase", "Wants to possess" -- do you see on page I? - Oh, right.

That is what I am concerned with? - Yes.

And what I wanted to clear up -- I think it was my understanding that in each case he had been/been given what he asked for? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Could I ask you to look again at the very first document that you were asked about, the Thematic Inspection Report? - Yes.

Which is the first document in L7? - Yes.

The second letter, dated 8th February 1996, from Mr. Boyd to the Chief Constable, refers to the enclosure of a draft report? - Yes.

The document which follows, is that the draft report or is that a final report? - I believe that is the draft report.

Is there a final report? - Yes, I believe there is.

It may not be something you can help us on, but is the final report different? - No, I don't believe so.

There were no changes made? - Not as far as I am aware.

That is presumably something that could be checked? - Yes.

LORD CULLEN: It may be I may be wrong, but it is my understanding it hasn't been finalised until we have a published report -- I think it is still in draft stage. I am not sure if Mr. Bonomy can throw any light on that, but that is my understanding.

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, that is my understanding, but I haven't asked Mr. Robertson before today. I will double-check it now.

THE WITNESS: I am not 100 per cent certain. I thought it had been published.

MR. TAYLOR: My understanding from a conversation with the Chief Constable at lunch time is it is not yet finalised, but it is at the point where it is going to the printers -- I should say not finalised in the sense it is not yet published/published.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: Your understanding is that if we look at the draft report we are not going very far wrong? - They have not made any major changes at all.

3.30 p.m.

I appreciate that you have no responsibility for this document but I wonder if you could just help me with one or two passages in it, turning firstly to paragraph 4.8 dealing with background checks. "Before a firearm or shotgun certificate is granted Chief Constables must satisfy themselves that the applicant is not prohibited under the Firearms Act from possessing firearms. The police must also be satisfied that the safety of the public will not be endangered by an applicant's possession of weapons and ammunition". Can you confirm that is an incomplete rehearsal of the statutory provisions? - It sounds like it, yes.

And in particular there is no reference to the need to consider matters such as intemperate habits, unsound mind or any reason to believe that the person is unfitted to be entrusted with a firearm? - Yes, it goes on to speak about that at 4.9 but there is nothing on that paragraph.

Now, if we look at 4.9, you are quite right there is a reference there to "The police may refuse or revoke a certificate if they have good reason to believe that the applicant is of unsound mind or intemperate habits"? - Yes.

But that again misses out the requirement to consider whether there is any reason to believe that the person is unfitted to be entrusted with a firearm? - No, it doesn't refer to that.

BY LORD CULLEN: Is it a question of "may" or is it "shall"? You see the word "may" is used but is it "may"? - "May", yes.

Well, is it in fact "shall"? In other words, if it is then they must, is that right? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: So if one was reading HM Inspectorate's consideration here or description of the background checks which are necessary, they have either got it wrong in the sense of missing out the reference to unfitness to be entrusted with a firearm or they don't think that has much practical application? - Well, they talk about character and I suppose you could infer from that that they are concerned about the character of the person but they don't refer to the term you are using. Not in these two paragraphs anyway.

It is not a matter of putting emphasis upon unfitness to be entrusted with a firearm. There is simply no mention of it at all? - I don't know.

That is not something you can help us with because you are not responsible for this document? - No.

I understand that but if there was any impression to be gained from other material that when it comes to granting or refusing a firearms certificate the police tend to concentrate on hard fact as opposed to matters of subjective judgement, this paragraph in this document would tend to confirm that impression? - Yes, I think it goes without saying that you need some form of evidence on which to base an opinion.

When one looks at 4.9, "The police may refuse or revoke a certificate if they have good reason to believe that the applicant is of unsound mind or intemperate habits", I think I am right in saying that everything, at least almost certainly everything which follows in that passage refers to criminal conduct and in particular criminal convictions or pending criminal convictions? - Yes, or associations.

So the emphasis is very much upon looking for evidence that the person has been involved in criminal conduct? - Certainly here, yes.

In 4.8 we are told in the fourth line "Forces therefore carry out full background enquiries on all applicants in order to establish their character"? - Yes.

So we do have a reference there to character but not a description as to how Forces either do or are expected to carry out these background enquiries, is that right? - That is right.

And again what immediately follows after that/that reference to background enquiries to establish character seems to be a reference in the main to checking on criminal convictions and the like? - Yes.

Turning on in the document if I may to 4.25 dealing with counter-signatories. We see in the middle of that paragraph the sentence "The majority of Forces consider that the counter-signatory procedure has outlived its usefulness and such enquiries are usually carried out by telephone". Can you help us with why the majority of Forces consider that the procedure had outlived its usefulness? - No, personally I wouldn't have thought that it would have because it is not an opinion I would hold personally and it is not an opinion I know that is held widely in my Force.

And there is some sympathy for applicants who were being charged by professionals for this? - That is certainly a thing I have never heard of previously.

But are we to understand that the final report when it is published, according to your understanding, will suggest the discontinuance of the counter-signatory requirement? - To the best of my knowledge it is going to make the same recommendation as you see there.

Some may find that astonishing in the light of what happened on the 13th of March? - Yes.

Would you agree? - Yes.

It is astonishing? - Yes.

We turn on to Section 5 on "Licensing procedures-certificate renewal" dealing with pistol renewals. "Both ACPO and the Home Office have encouraged Forces to carry out the thorough investigation of all initial applications so that a postal renewal system, supplemented by home visits only where strictly necessary, could be introduced thereby reducing the time, workload and cost of the renewal process". Would you agree with me that it would be more satisfactory if ACPO and the Home Office required Forces to carry out a thorough investigation of all initial applications, come what may? - I am sure that is what they mean when they say/say "encourage" but they are not expressing it in the terms that you have just quoted. When ACPO or the Home Office encourage Forces to do something, they generally do it.

Now, so far as the postal renewal system recommendations are concerned, the benefit of this would appear to reduce the time, workload and cost of the renewal process? - Yes.

And we see that it means that it can then be done much more quickly? - Yes.

And in 5.3, lest it be thought that this is revealing an attitude of complacency, we are told that some 10 to 15 per cent of renewals will be monitored in some shape or form? - Yes.

And then in the middle of 5.3 we see "The enquiries made in relation to the initial grant of a certificate also assume greater significance with the advent of postal renewal. It is essential that such enquiries are exceptionally thorough and can withstand the test of time". Would you agree with me that this reveals a basic misunderstanding of the legislation which requires renewals to be treated in exactly the same way as initial applications? - Yes.

Does it also, in its reference to carrying out thorough initial investigations which can then withstand the test of time, indicate the only material change of circumstance which the authors of this document have in mind for the future which might cause some doubt on an applicants suitability would be changes which are brought to the attention of the Police Force in some shape or form? - Well, I don't know if it necessarily means that, does it?

It wasn't a very good question. Let me put it another way; the basic procedure which is being recommended here is that you carry out a thorough check on day one? - Yes.

And then as long as you have done that check thoroughly then that will withstand the test of time? - I don't think that is very good advice anyway.

Why/

Why is it not good advice? - Because circumstances change.

Exactly but what it does reveal is that the whole ethos and culture is that as long as nothing has been positively brought to the Police Force's attention, for example a criminal conviction, then all is well? - Well, I don't know if it means that exactly but I don't agree with the fact that enquiries made at the initial stage should then be relied upon at later stages without at least some sort of regular check by way of renewal.

This kind of approach in paragraph 5.3 would only be understandable at all if the basic thinking was that only relevant matters should be brought to the attention of the Police Force anyway without any subsequent thorough investigation? - Well, it seems to infer that the police will learn of any change.

Yes, I'm obliged. You put it much better than I did. Turning the page, if we may, to paragraph 5.5. Again, on the subject of postal renewals and I think there is reference there to one Force which had introduced postal renewal procedure. Which Police Force was that? - I believe it was Lothian and Borders.

And we also see "The Force considers that postal renewal is both appropriate and safe provided that thorough enquiries and checks are carried out at the initial grant stage supported by an efficient system quickly flagging any certificate holders who adversely come to the notice of the police". So again, that would appear to display a misunderstanding of the legislation, am I right? - Well, I think they are talking about circumstances again which the police will learn of and not allowing for any other circumstances perhaps.

In paragraph 5.6 we are told "It is perhaps surprising that some of the critics of firearm postal renewals are the civilian firearm enquiry officers themselves". Do you find that surprising? - No.

This paragraph raises a point that I would like to explore to you but only briefly, if I may. The document reads "Arguments for maintaining the/the status quo include stricter controls in place for firearms, territorial conditions, security arrangements and the good reason requirement. However, firearms and shotguns are both lethal barrelled weapons and overall more shotguns are stolen in any year and more are used during the commission of serious crimes such as robbery" and there are some detailed statistics relating to these matters. Would you agree that firearms and shotguns are both lethal weapons? - Yes.

Is there in your view any good reason why shotgun licensing should be treated in any different way from firearms licensing? - Well, I'm not an expert in the field but, no, I would not have thought there would be any difference.

But I think we know that in fact there are considerable differences between the two types of firearms or weapons? - Yes.

Is it in your experience true to say that shotguns are the most used and easily acquired firearm by criminals? - Yes.

Turning on, if we may, to Section 9. It is headed "Quality of service" and it begins at 9.1 "Members of the shooting community pay for the service provided by the police in relation to firearms licensing. It is therefore essential that they receive a quality service and value for money" and then we can read the rest of that paragraph for ourselves. Paragraph 9.2, "In providing a quality firearms licensing service the police must balance the needs of the shooting community with those of the non-shooting public. The safety of the public must be of paramount importance where firearms are concerned. The licensing service must therefore be exceptionally thorough. However, in order to provide a quality delivery of service to the shooting fraternity the system must also be efficient and fast". Now, do you agree that speed is a must so far as firearms licensing procedures are concerned? - No.

Now, would you agree with me that to require speed is somewhat contradictory to any philosophy that thoroughness and the safety of the public are paramount? - I think no timescale should be placed on firearms.

Because/

3.50 p.m.

Because the safety of the public should be paramount?

- Yes.

In paragraph 9.3 the document says: "Forces in Scotland appear to have a good relationship with the members of the shooting community that they serve. This was confirmed by the BSSC". And then we are told about four or five lines down: "One way in which to enhance the relationship and understanding between shooters and the police is by the establishment of good liaison arrangements", and so on. Do you see any potential danger in police forces establishing too close a relationship with the shooting community? - Well, I think any renewal process should be fair and be seen to be fair. Are you trying to infer that in some sort of close relationship matters might be overlooked, or conditions might be relaxed? I don't know. I think with a professional approach we would always avoid that by the police, so I don't really think that would come into it.

You don't see any potential conflict between, on the one hand, being told to establish good and close relationships with members of the shooting community, and then on the other hand being entrusted as the guardians of public safety in terms of revocation? - (Answer inaudible).

BY LORD CULLEN: I am sorry, we are not hearing you clearly? - I think we are encouraged to be on good terms with all sections of the community -- and we are, I think.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: So why is it necessary, do you think, for such emphasis to be placed on having such a good relationship with members of the shooting community? - I don't know.

You see, this passage and other passages in this document has the tone almost of a Marks & Spencers or British Airways promotional, wanting to foster good relationships with their customers. Do you agree? - Yes.

Whereas some may think that there may be value in the Police Force maintaining a degree of distance/distance or detachment from those they are having to scrutinise -- you are nodding your head? - Yes, I agree with that.

Turning on to paragraph 10.5 in Section 10, these are miscellaneous issues, "Warning letters". "Holders of firearm or shotgun certificates must satisfy the police that their continued possession of the weapons will not endanger the safety of the public or the peace". Now, again I am very conscious that you have no responsibility for this document, but do you have any explanation as to why there is again this mention of the one test "Endangering the safety of the public or of the peace", which does of course appear in the legislation, but no reference to other important matters, such as fitness to be entrusted with a weapon and so on? - No.

LORD CULLEN: Mr. Campbell, is that not covered in the next sentence, or at least partly covered?

MR. CAMPBELL: I beg my lord's pardon, yes. My lord is quite right. It is. I should read on. "If the police have reason to believe that a holder is no longer a fit and proper person to possess firearms, for example, by virtue of his intemperate habits then they can revoke the certificate immediately and seize the weapons concerned", yes.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: So far as satisfaction is concerned, do you agree with the general philosophy set out at least in this paragraph that the onus should be upon the holder of the certificate, and perhaps by parity of reasoning, any applicant for a firearms certificate -- that the onus should be upon him to satisfy the police of certain matters, rather than the police requiring to investigate for themselves? - Well, the applicant must show good reason, but the police at the end of the day have to be satisfied.

Just perhaps lifting our eyes from the detail of this document, and thinking about things more generally, would you see any value in a system which made it clear that the onus was upon the applicant to provide sufficient information to the responsible/responsible authority, rather than putting an onus upon the responsible authority to consider whether there is or is not any reason to refuse.....

LORD CULLEN: I think possibly you may want to clarify with the witness what actually you are talking about -- onus in regard to what? Do you mean onus in regard to both matters mentioned in this sentence? Is that what you mean?

MR. CAMPBELL: I think perhaps I will take the question out.

LORD CULLEN: You might want to rephrase it.

MR. CAMPBELL: I will try to rephrase it.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. CAMPBELL: What really I have in mind is really a very general matter, but perhaps we can try and particularise it just to avoid any misunderstanding. Section 27 of the Act, for example, states that a firearms certificate shall not be granted to a person whom the Chief Officer of Police has reason to believe, for example, to be for any reason unfitted to be entrusted with such a firearm? - Yes.

Now, at the moment as I understand the general approach, the intention is that the Force will carry out some form of enquiry into an application, and if that enquiry reveals any reason why a person may not be fit, then the application should be refused? - Yes.

What I have in mind is whether you would see any value in a system which requires the applicant to make out a case, if you like, to the police authority that he was a fit and proper person, rather than just relying on any enquiries carried out by the authority? - I would think that in the future that could well be something to be considered.

Can you elaborate on any thoughts you have on it? - Well, I personally would agree with the principle that someone should not only show good reason, but should prove good reason.

Don't/

Don't misunderstand me, I am not suggesting there shouldn't be some enquiry by the police authority as well, but do you see perhaps almost a philosophic distinction that can be drawn between on the one hand a presumption that a person is entitled to weapons in the absence of any reason to the contrary, and on the other hand an approach where nobody is entitled to a weapon unless they can make out a good case to the contrary? - I personally agree with your second comment.

As far as warning letters are concerned, again we can read this paragraph largely for ourselves, but there is again reference to incidents involving certificate holders that may come to the notice of the police, for example criminal convictions, and it is indicated that some offences are more important than others in this context, and then in the middle of the paragraph, or just below it we read: "Each case is judged on its own merits and usually a letter is sent to the holder warning him/her that the incident has been recorded and that similar conduct in the future will seriously call into question their fitness to possess weapons". Now, that is in the context of, I grant you, of a general discussion about different types of offences, but would you agree that there is a danger in this approach of sending out a warning that another incident will call into question a person's fitness, because that next incident may be a very serious one, possibly involving firearms? - Well, I am sure that approach has been taken for good reason, and not having the background in Firearms Licensing, I am not aware of why that was invoked, but I am sure that is based on sound reasoning. But I agree with you that any offences or any conviction of a certificate holder would worry me.

Would you agree with me that when it comes to deciding whether or not a person should be entrusted with weapons, if there is any doubt on the matter then no certificate should be granted, or a certificate should be revoked? - If there is any doubt at all, the whole case, the circumstances should be thoroughly examined and a decision reached on that basis.

But if at the end of all your investigations you are still in a situation where the matter is problematic, or there is some doubt on the/

the matter? - Yes.

Who gets the benefit of that doubt? - Well, I would think the public do.

By? - By erring on the right side, on the safe side.

Namely? - Namely if you have any doubt and it is within the law to revoke or refuse, you do that.

And if we turn to the final section of this document, the conclusion? - Yes.

Would you agree with me that there is precious little, if anything, in the conclusion -- indeed in the document as a whole -- about how to improve the protection afforded to the public? - Are you talking about the recommendation and the conclusion?

Well, I am looking -- let's try to keep this within bounds - - the conclusion, for a moment? - No, there is no specific reference to that.

There are lots of references about improving the quality of the service to the shooting community? - Yes.

Perhaps we can just leave the rest of the document to our own reading. Can I ask you now to turn to the Guidance document, which is D1L? - Yes.

If you forgive me just a moment -- I want to ask you to look at Section 6, please, at page 65? - Yes.

Looking at the guidance in paragraph 6.1: "Firearms legislation, and indeed the subject of firearms generally is complex and often highly specialised. Providing comprehensive training for every police officer on the administration of the Firearms Act is not practicable. It is therefore essential that copies of this Guidance are available to all police officers involved in the licensing procedures. Where difficult points arise, advice should be sought from the Firearms Department at the appropriate Police Force Headquarters". Would you see any value in a system for guidance which ensured that/that every police officer who was actually involved in the administration of the Firearms Act received comprehensive training in the matter? - Yes.

Is it in your view satisfactory that the matter is left -- the guidance is left simply on the basis that copies of this guidance are available? - I don't think that is the best position, no.

In paragraph 6.2: "Before issuing or renewing a firearms certificate, the Chief Officer must satisfy himself that the applicant can be permitted to have the firearm/ammunition in his possession without danger to the public safety or to the peace. This may necessitate an interview and consideration of his security arrangements". Can you conceive of any situation where the chief officer could satisfy himself on this matter without an interview and consideration of security arrangements? - No.

We read on: "Where a visit to the applicant's home is considered necessary, this should, wherever possible, be made by prior appointment". Now, if you take it from me that we are told more than once that visits should be made, whenever possible, by prior appointment, do you agree with that approach? - No.

What would your preference be? - I would prefer to arrive and see the person as they are, not when expecting the police.

For the obvious reason, I suppose, that if normally someone had empty gin bottles around the house, then if he knew the police were coming he might hide them away? - Yes.

And no doubt one could multiply examples of that kind of thing? - Yes.

Looking at the Guidance relating to the application, on page 66 in paragraph 6.5 -- again dealing with the question of counter-signatories, if I may, just for a moment? - Yes.

We/

4.10 p.m.

We read halfway down the page "Discretion must be used in deciding whether a particular countersignatory meets the legal requirement in respect of a person 'of similar standing' but it should be recognised that the category may have to be extended fairly widely where an applicant has few contacts in the Community". Does that surprise you, because it may be thought that if an applicant has few contacts in the Community then that would be a good reason for being very careful about the identify of the countersignatory? - I think it is making the point that perhaps if that was the case you may need to take information from more than one person.

That is your interpretation of what it says? - Yes.

Others may interpret it as meaning that you don't have to be quite so punctillious about the standing of the countersignatory?
- No, I would take it to be the reverse, that if someone was not well known you should take more than one view. The very reason they are not well known, you might want to gather more than one opinion on them.

Well, I won't debate the interpretation with you. Are we agreed in general terms that if it transpires that an applicant has few contacts in the Community then that might be an indicator that particular care should be taken? - Yes.

If we read on, why is it thought helpful if the countersignatory is someone whose name can be found in public books of reference? - I don't know.

Easier to check? - I suppose so. Perhaps it is getting back to a person with a recognised standard. I don't know.

I won't go through the detail of this but if we go right to the end of Section 6.5, the document sets out what the countersignatory is required to do. Then we read "The application form provides guidance on the criteria which the countersignatory should bear in mind when considering an applicant's fitness to possess firearms"./

firearms". Would you see a value in a system which ensured not only that the countersignatory read this Guidance but thoroughly understood what it was he or she was being required to do? - Well, I think on the application form that Guidance is given to the countersignatory and he is required to read it. On the application for the firearm certificate. He is reminded of the Chief Constable's obligations in granting the certificate and that is contained on the application form.

You see, we had the gentleman who countersigned Mr. Hamilton's certificate? - Yes.

And he explained the circumstances in which that happened. An unwelcome visit when the family was at home and what have you? - Right.

Do you foresee these circumstances in which countersignatories might simply be shown the relevant section of the document, perhaps on renewal or what have you and will simply sign it without taking time to read the Guidance? - Confirmation from the countersignatory that he is vouching for the applicant, when the police officer goes round to see that person or contact them I would anticipate that the way it has worked in the past when I have been involved is that he would be asked if he read the certificate, if he read the conditions on the back, having to bear in mind that he would have to confirm that he had and that is what I would check by confirming the countersignatory's vouching for the applicant.

Would you, if you were doing the exercise yourself, I take it from that answer, go and see the countersignatory? - Yes, personally.

Every time? - Unless he was someone who I knew very well but generally, yes, I would.

Amongst other things would you want to be satisfied that the countersignatory knew the applicant well? - Yes. I mean, I don't think it is the case that the countersignatory should necessarily be friendly with the applicant but he would need to know of him well and have adequate knowledge of him.

Yes, that is what I mean? - Yes.

Is/

Is it fair to say that the system to date has placed considerable reliance upon the countersignatory requirement? - I think it is considered a very important part, yes.

Now, we then come to "Grant or Refusal" and in Paragraph 6 this is described as the most important duty imposed by the act on the police, namely deciding whether or not a firearms certificate should be granted and we have a reference then to three categories which require to be considered? - Yes.

Which we have discussed to date. Would I be right in suggesting that in practical reality police forces tend to give very careful consideration and examination to Item (a) but find it more difficult to deal with the more subjective criteria in (b) and (c)? - Yes, I think (a) is black and white, isn't it? So, yes.

Is it thought that there is considerable benefit in dealing, if I can put it in that general way, with irrefutable hard facts like previous convictions? - I think the person or the officer requires to be satisfied on firm evidence of what he is looking at.

And if we look at Paragraph 6.9, "In deciding whether a person can be permitted to have a firearm or ammunition without danger to public safety or to the peace, the main consideration is his character"? - Yes.

Would that hold true in your view to the other requirement, namely whether there is any reason why the person is unfitted to be entrusted with a firearm? - Yes.

So the essence of the investigation here is into the character of the applicant? - Yes.

Why is that? - Well, it may show some traits or some behaviour that would cause a danger to public, public safety, public peace.

Would you agree that it is a dangerous thing to the public if an unfit person is entrusted with a weapon? - Yes.

And/

And what this boils down to is that the legislation enjoins the Chief Officer to investigate whether the character of the applicant is such that he can be trusted with the responsibilities involved in having lawful possession of a weapon? - Yes.

And thus the character in this context goes well beyond criminal convictions? - That is correct.

So if you investigated an applicant and discovered him to be a deceitful liar, would you be content to grant him a firearms certificate? - I think you would have to be satisfied that the person posed a risk or a danger to the public through ownership of weapons. Now, if the circumstances that you are relating or that you have brought up fitted that, yes, but I would have to say that unsuitability or lack of fitness would have to relate to again danger and that is my interpretation of a person unfitted or unsuited and that is where character comes into it, that you have got to be able to infer some sort of danger or behaviour, some anticipation of violent behaviour on his part with his weapon. That is the way I view it.

Well, if you were asked to countersign an application by somebody that you knew to be a deceitful and lying person, would you be happy to recommend to the police that he could be trusted with a weapon? - No, I would not.

Why not? - Because if he is untruthful about that sort of thing he could be untruthful about other things.

And if a firearms certificate holder is untruthful with the police about matters relevant to his having a firearm, that is a very serious matter indeed? - Obviously it has to be taken into consideration very seriously.

Can we turn on please to "Renewals" which is Page 79?

FOURTEENTH DAY.

ALEXANDER ROBERTSON, (Recalled),

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: I think at the end of the evidence on Friday you were looking at the guidance to the police from the Force Laws which is D1L. Do you still have that before you. Can you turn to Section 6 which is on page 79. This is the section dealing with renewals and I think there is only one specific point that I want to put to you. If we look at the bottom of the page at 6.29 we read, "Applications for renewals give an opportunity for reviewing the circumstances of each case and the extent to which the provisions of the Act have been complied with by the holder of the certificate and by the person supplying them with firearms or ammunition. If the applicant's circumstances have changed materially since the original grant special care will need to be taken to ensure that the applicant still satisfies the criteria regarding public safety or the peace and has a good reason for having the firearm"? - Yes.

In that context what is the procedure in Central Scotland Police for finding out whether or not an applicant's circumstances have changed materially since the original grant? - Well, I don't think the individual enquiry officer can really judge. He is treating his enquiry as a one off and.....

MR. TAYLOR: Sir, before the witness carries on answering this question it may be helpful to know if he can tell us just what his experience is in the form of administration of certificates within Central Scotland so that we can ascertain whether or not he is speaking from knowledge of this or speaking from some supposition on his part.

LORD CULLEN: Are you objecting to the question?

MR. TAYLOR: No, I can't object to the question. I think that itself is unobjectionable. It/

It would seem helpful if we knew what the basis was for this.

LORD CULLEN: I think we will let the answer proceed. Mr. Campbell I am sure has taken the point.

THE WITNESS: I did indicate on Friday I had very little practical firearms licensing experience and my observations are based on my reading and the results of my enquiry. My interpretation of your question would be that the enquiry officers themselves only look at the particular renewal or variation they are carrying out and it does not appear that they take an over-view of the firearms file and can see back to what a person's circumstances were for any given period in the past.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. CAMPBELL: I am not quite sure I follow the last part of that answer. Could you elaborate? - In as much as any review or checking that circumstances have changed materially would have to be done within the Firearms Department; that is my understanding.

So that an enquiry officer sent out to interview a person who is making a renewal application according to your understanding at least -- imperfect as it may -- would not be specifically charged with the responsibility of an investigation as to whether or not the circumstances have materially changed? - They would of course have the current certificate and the information which the applicant has endorsed on his application. My understanding would be that all that information, the previous application or a number of previous applications, to see whether circumstances have changed, that is done by the Firearms Department; that is my understanding.

Since it may be causing my friend Mr. Taylor some problem if we could just perhaps move away from Central Scotland Police procedures and just think about this whole matter a little more generally, because plainly the guidance is addressed to all Police Forces. Let me give an example: presumably an applicant or a Firearm's Certificate holder's domestic circumstances may change materially during the period between the original grant/grant and the renewal application? - Yes.

For example, his wife may have left him, problems with children, loss of employment, deteriorating health, what have you, a whole variety of circumstances. Would you agree that it would be a good idea if some procedure was instigated which had some prospect of detecting that kind of thing? - Yes.

Why? - It may affect suitability if circumstances have changed. The suitability was originally agreed upon or seen to be suitable at an early stage, and if these circumstances have changed it may have to be reassessed.

So inevitably any such system would require, if I can use the term, to be pro-active rather than reacting to events; it would require to be some positive conduct by the investigating officer to see what the circumstances were? - Yes.

Can I ask you if you can assist me just in a fairly general way, moving away from the guidance now, to consider the information available to Police Forces in Scotland in general -- please tell us about Central Scotland Police if that is of some assistance to you -- from national records and the like. Perhaps starting first of all with the Scottish Criminal Records Office. Please tell me if I am taking you outwith your knowledge and experience at any time. Let's assume that a person is convicted of a criminal offence. Would I be right in thinking that the Court Officer in the particular Sheriff Court or whatever would be the person who would have the responsibility for advising Force records of this matter? - Well, I think the Court Officer and disposal from the Procurator-Fiscal ultimately as well, so a double check, if you like.

Is there a requirement to inform or is the matter left to the discretion of those two organisations? - No, there is a requirement.

And then the information goes to the Records Department of the relevant Police Force? - Yes.

So that if somebody was convicted in Stirling/

Stirling the matter would be reported to the Records Office of Central Scotland Police? - Yes.

Would that individual have a discretion as to what to do with that information or is there a mandatory requirement? - No, the information would have to be forwarded to the Firearms Department because the system operates, as I understand it, that all Firearms and Shotgun Certificate holders are placed on SCRO and markers are created in this which means if notification is received of court proceedings or pending court proceedings a print-out is automatically generated and that has to be forwarded by the Department.

Any criminal convictions relation to firearms? - A Firearms Certificate holder or a Shotgun Certificate holder automatically generates a print-out regarding that matter.

So just to get some idea, how does this work. The information comes in from the local Court Officer? - Yes.

To the Records Office of the police? - Yes.
Is there some computer system which automatically transfers that to the Firearms Department? - A print-out is automatically generated by the Records Department and I understand it is then forwarded manually to the Firearms Department.

Thinking more generally, what about advising the Scottish Criminal Records Office on a national basis. Is there a system for doing that? - Well, each Firearms Department will notify their own records bureau who will insert details of the holder on to the SCRO database. So each Force is responsible for their own holders and they appear on the SCRO as a Firearms Certificate or Shotgun Certificate holder.

Again if we are not necessarily thinking specifically about firearms at the moment, although I appreciate the relevance of what you are saying, just as a matter of procedure the criminal conviction is notified to the Force Records Department who are under an obligation then to inform the SCRO? - Yes.

In/

In every case? - Yes.

No matter how minor the conviction may be? -
Some road traffic offences wouldn't be forwarded. They go to the DVLA I understand. Again I am not entirely 100 per cent on that.

Then it comes the other way round, how does the Force retrieve the information from the SCRO about an individual? - Well, if anyone requires information you merely punch in the name and the date of birth and you then get the necessary information. You may not get details and you have then got to punch in some more information if you are not satisfied it is the right person. Maybe you will see the person's record if he has one or if there is no trace of the person on the system.

Is this done by a specified individual in the Central Scotland Police Force? - Yes. There are a number of personnel who are authorised as SCRO operatives, so if you are qualified and hold a card which gives you access to the system you can check. Obviously there are a number of personnel at various stations who are authorised outwith the SCRO Bureau itself.

This whole procedure we have been through is in terms of a person being convicted and then intimation to the Police Force and so on and then nationally. Is there a time delay for all of that happening in general terms? - Very short I would think. In practice weeks I would think at the most, although again I am speaking really just from best estimate.

And will the SCRO records have the conviction intimated to them? - Well, I would imagine so.

This is not something you specifically know? - No.

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, I wonder if it would assist at all for Mr. Campbell to know that I intend leading evidence about how these records, including the Police National Computer and the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Authority, operates so far as Firearm's Certificate holders are concerned.

LORD/

LORD CULLEN: I am sure that would be helpful.

MR. CAMPBELL: That would be helpful.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: Can we turn to the Standing Orders of the Central Scotland Police which I think are to be found in D6L.

LORD CULLEN: I thought the last time it was D10?

MR. CAMPBELL: Sorry, it is D10.

BY LORD CULLEN: What is the distinction between 9 and 10? - 9 is a copy of Standing Orders in 1977 which was thought to be relevant and D10 is the existing document.

Of course, as we see, 10 is the 1990 version? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: I only want to ask you about one chapter in this document at page 12, Section 6, dealing with refusals and revocations. Paragraph 6.7 is the provision dealing with the duty of all officers to bring to the attention of the Chief Officer any information relating to a Firearm or Shotgun Certificate holder which may warrant revocation of that person's certificate? - Yes.

Is any specific procedure laid down as to how this is to be done? - I think we covered some of this on Friday as well, but form RL3e relates to any information that an officer discovers which can affect suitability of a Firearm's Certificate holder and is a report on his conduct. Alternatively, an officer can submit an internal memorandum with the same information.

So far as the type of information which triggers off this duty, is there any guidance given as to that? - Apart from the paragraph there, no, not to my knowledge.

You told us last week about your conversation with Inspector Ralph? - Yes.

If/

If I followed it correctly Hamilton had been complaining about the conduct of two officers of the Force in dealing with an incident when he was alleged to have discharged an airgun? - Yes.

In a public place? - Yes

I/

10.20 a.m.

I gather that an investigation revealed no record of this incident? - No, that is right.

What did Inspector Ralph do when he was told by Hamilton that this had occurred? - I am not aware of him taking any action.

Should he have? - Well, it could be argued that it was relevant.

I take it it is not suggested that the lack of a record of a prior notification of this by the two police officers concerned who spoke to Hamilton means that in Inspector Ralph is not to be believed about the incident? - No, I don't believe so.

So what it means is that if we assume the two officers did speak to Hamilton about this incident that they failed to report the incident? - It is difficult. You are relying on information Hamilton put before Inspector Ralph, and he may have exaggerated, told lies or told the truth. It is very difficult to know what happened and what circumstances prevailed.

It is not easy to envisage why Hamilton would complain about this if it did not happen? - Well, I would say the opposite. He was quite a habitual complainer, wasn't he?

And a liar? - Well, some people thought so.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: You may be aware that the Scottish Office have made a submission to this Inquiry, and among other things, at paragraph 61 they made reference to the fact that the Inquiry Officer on new applications should assess the personal suitability of any applicant; and in paragraph 73 it refers to the fact that renewal should not be treated in any different way. Was there anything in the RALC form prepared by Central Scotland Police which required the Inquiry Officer to deal with the question of personal suitability? - I think it is a yes or a no, is the person suitable to hold a firearm certificate.

We have heard evidence from the final Inquiry Officer, Constable Ann Anderson, that she had/had concerns about Hamilton after her visits, and she mentioned this to a senior colleague: but there is nothing other than a yes or a no? - Yes.

From your experience, the only person who does any enquiry at all is the Inquiry Officer? - I don't know if I could blandly say that. With regard to the report the Inquiry Officer is completing, he or she is the only person who has personal contact with the applicant. I am not sure if the Firearms Department make any other contact.

But the Inquiry Officer does not have a file, and perhaps should have the file? - Yes.

If you could turn to the thematic report, which is in the front of Volume L7, if you could look at paragraph 4.6 -- have you got that? - Yes.

If you could turn to the second sentence, it says "Many of the forms are multi-functional" -- that is the style of Inquiry Report -- and some require officers to ask a number of questions which are not required by law and seem to be at variance with the guidelines, for example, a good reason for possessing shotguns? - Yes.

If I read that evidence correctly, it is suggesting it is not necessary to apply one's mind to the good reason for applying for a shotgun, and that question does not require to be answered by law? - My understanding of the law is that for a shotgun the applicant does not have to show he has a good reason; the Chief Constable has to satisfy himself that he has no good reason.

What about in relation to a firearm certificate? - In relation to a firearm certificate the applicant has to show he has good reason.

And in your view should some investigation be made of the good reason? - Yes.

I think we have heard evidence that the only good reason as a matter of fact is to be a member of a gun club? - Yes.

In your view is that adequate? - I think/think the guidance stipulates that the person should have legitimate and regular opportunity to partake. That may well require to be tightened up.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: I think you are presently in the CID Department; is that correct? - Yes.

How long have you been in the CID Department?
- Currently a year.

What were you doing immediately prior to being in the CID Department? - I was doing Complaints and Discipline.

How long were you in Complaints and Discipline?
- About a year and a half.

Prior to that what were you doing? - I was a uniformed inspector for about a year and a half.

And prior to being a uniformed inspector? - I was a detective sergeant for five years, a uniformed sergeant for a year and a half, a detective constable for five years and a uniformed constable for four or five years.

In that time what experience did you have in the administration of the firearms legislation? - Very little.

You gave a view on Friday as to the desirability of visiting a counter signatory when somebody made application for renewal of a licence? - Yes.

And the view you expressed was that someone ought to attend and visit the counter signatory? - Yes.

Was that a personal view you were expressing? - Yes, it was something I would do myself.

Do you know for example what view the Scottish Office hold as to whether that would be considered a proper use of police time? - No.

Would I be right in thinking that the various/various police forces throughout Scotland obtain guidance on how people should go about their duties from the Scottish Office? - Yes.

And another source from which they will obtain some guidance as to how they will go about their duties would be from the Inspectorate? - Yes.

Is it fair to say that the Inspectorate set out what might be determined good practice? - Yes.

You were asked questions on Friday in relation to whether you would countersign an application for somebody who was deceitful and a liar, I think was the way it was put. Now, when a counter signatory is asked if he would be prepared to endorse somebody's application he will be at liberty to decline, for whatever reason; is that correct? - Yes.

He could act on a whim, for example? - The view I would take personally is that if somebody lied I would not endorse an application.

But he is in a position whereby he could act on a whim in refusing? - Yes.

Which is not a position which the Deputy Chief Constable is able to take? - No.

He has to be able to justify his actions to a Sheriff if called upon to do so? - Yes.

And he must therefore operate within the framework of the legislation? - Yes.

Would it be fair to say that one would need to look into the facts of what went to make up the deceit and what went to make up the lie before coming to a view? - Yes.

One would not just be able to take the label and apply it in every case across the board? - No. The circumstances of each case would have to be examined on their own merits.

If one had a fisherman, for example, who reported to you that he had just lost a 5 pounder when/when he knew it was really just a 2 pounder that got away, he would be telling you a lie at that point, wouldn't he? - Yes.

In fact he would be seeking to deceive you as well in believing he really caught a 5 pounder when it was a 2 pounder?
- Yes.

That conduct however would not be such as to warrant you declining to countersign his application, would it? - In my interpretation, the way the question was put, somebody who was deceitful and a liar, would not encompass the description you have just given, no.

So one does need to go back to the facts in each case? - Yes.

You were asked some questions this morning about the Scottish Criminal Record Office. There was one point I would like to explore with you on that. In what circumstances does an officer normally make a search of the Scottish Criminal Record Office? - Whenever you have to submit a police report to the Procurator Fiscal you would check to see whether there were previous convictions, and if you were checking a person for the submission of criminal intelligence or for some reason during an enquiry, you would check whether there was anything known about them in the system.

Does that invariably happen, that if you are making a report to the Procurator Fiscal you will do a search of SCRO first?
- Yes.

If one looks at SCRO one finds there is a record of someone holding a firearm certificate? - Yes.

So for example when then Detective Sergeant Hughes would have made his report to the Procurator Fiscal arising out of the Milarrochy incident in 1991 would he have checked the SCRO report at that point? - I am sure he would have, yes.

And when the system was operating properly it would be disclosed that Mr. Hamilton was a firearms certificate holder? - Yes.

RE-EXAMINED/

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: I have just one question. You have expressed in answer to Mr. Campbell's questions a number of views about the guidance and about the thematic inspection. In the exercise of considering what is to be learned from this whole business have you been asked to express your views to the Chief Constable of Central Scotland Police? - Not yet.

MR. BONOMY: The question witness, sir, is John Perry. He will be examined by Mr. Lake.

JOHN PERRY (54), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: I understand you live in Longniddry? - I do.

And it is correct you have now retired? - Yes.

What was your occupation prior to your retiring? - I was Assistant Director of Education for Lothian Regional Council.

For how long had you been Assistant Director of Education? - Since 1978.

I understand that within Lothian Region as it was then you had dealings in relation to Thomas Hamilton in relation to the letting of educational establishments? - Yes.

Were you made aware during that time of several complaints against Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

Rather than go through these in detail it may be useful if I could summarise them for you and you could confirm whether or not you were aware of them; is that acceptable? - Yes.

The first was a complaint in May, 1988 relating to Linlithgow Academy where a mother expressed concern about her son being required to remove the clothing on the upper half of his body and then cancelled a cheque, causing a disagreement with Mr. Hamilton. Were you aware of that? - No.

Were/

Were you aware of a complaint round about May, 1988 from the same parent, in which she said her son was uncomfortable in the presence of Hamilton in the showers? - No, I was not aware of that particular complaint.

Were you aware of a verbal complaint that was made early in 1989, but was not followed up with anything in writing? - Yes.

And subsequent to that was a complaint made through Councillor Gray, again in May of 1989, making certain complaints? - Yes.

Before dealing with the response of the Regional Council to the various complaints I would like first to look at the means by which the let was taken. If you could have in front of you please document DLRC/CE/6, which is D1 within folder J(iii), do you see here in front of you what should be two different application forms? - Yes.

Can you explain what these two forms are for? - The first form, the application for registration as a youth group, was to allow a youth group to qualify for reduced rates for the let of educational premises.

And the second one? - The second one was an application to actually use premises.

Dealing with the first one, the registration of the youth group, what criteria must be satisfied in order for registration to take place? - The criteria were that the group ought to be run for the benefit of youth, and they ought to submit details of the members of the group or organisation behind the group. There was no other criterion that I recall.

If such a form as this were submitted to the Regional Council what would they do in response to it? - I think they would consider the application, and in normal circumstances would grant it. They would normally require Community Education staff to check out the group and give a view on the appropriateness of the group.

How/

10.40 a.m.

How would the Community Education carry out the check? - They would normally carry it out through a member of the Community Education staff, possibly the youth officer.

Who would they speak to? - I'm not sure in detail; I think they would normally contact the leader and speak to him.

So an interview with the applicant? - Yes.

Would there be any check with the external agencies, whether the police or other Councils? - I am not sure at that time that there would be.

On what basis might an application for the registration of the youth group be refused? - I think it would be refused if the arrangements were not as stated and if the activities were clearly unsuitable or inappropriate.

Were applications or are applications ever refused? - They are -- I don't recall any particular instances but they are.

Can you give me any indication of how many out of every hundred might be refused? - I can't, sorry.

What is the significance of the refusal of registering as a youth group in relation to obtaining lets of premises? - It would simply mean that that group would not qualify in a reduced letting rate.

They would, nonetheless, still be able to obtain a let of the premises? - Yes.

I think we heard previously due to an oversight in this case there was no check made to the response to this application for a youth group? - Yes.

Was there therefore a follow-up after the application had been granted? - Yes.

Could/

Could I ask you to look at the application for the use of educational premises now; what would be the response of the Regional Council in response to that application? - I think they would normally have accepted that.

That would be the normal procedure? - Yes.

Are any checks carried out on applications in this context? - Not that I recall unless there was evidence that the application was unsatisfactory.

When you say "Evidence that the application was unsatisfactory" what sort of evidence would that be? - That might have been from the Community Education staff.

But that would have to arise if any formal checks were made, it would just be if someone happened to register a particular alarm? - Yes.

Although you said that you don't recall a complaint being made in May, 1988 Mr. Jeffrey has referred to such a complaint and said he went to carry out certain investigations at Hamilton's club with a view to verifying the details; were you aware of Mr. Jeffrey going to make visits to the club? - No, not at that time.

When did you first become aware that there was some concerns with Hamilton's club? - That was in the early part of 1989 when concern was voiced by the parent you referred to earlier.

Could I ask you please to look at the document which is D2 within folder J3 and has the other reference DLRC CE3; you will see that this is a letter addressed to Mr. Jeffrey from Hamilton and it has attached to it various letters including two from the Commissioner of the local administration in Scotland; at the time that the complaint arose in relation to Hamilton in 1989 were you aware that Hamilton had made previous complaints to the Ombudsman? - In 1989 I was aware of that, yes.

Were you aware what the nature of that complaint had been? - Yes.

Were/

Were you aware what the outcome had been? -
Yes.

What was the outcome? - The outcome was that the Ombudsman had found in favour of Mr. Hamilton on the grounds of mal administration.

Were you aware of the basis of that finding? - That there had been mal administration in the decision not to grant a let.

Were you aware of why the Commissioner was of the view that the decision not to grant a let amounted to mal administration? - Yes.

What was the basis of that view? - The basis was that the procedures for granting the let and for consulting with the person having the let had not been properly carried through.

Again this may relate to the time prior to your involvement; could you look at document DLRC CE7 which is D5 in the folder; you will see that this is a handwritten letter or a memo from Mr. Sinclair to Mr. Williamson and it is dated on the final page the 3rd of June, 1988; may I take it from what you have already said you were unaware of this memo and the concern it contained? - That is correct.

Turning now to the complaints that were made in 1989 and, in particular, in May 1989 what was the nature of the complaint that was made to you? - The first complaint was that there had been inappropriate activities I think at the camp in Inchmoan Island.

How did you get to hear about that? - I heard about that I think first from Mrs. Haggar, a parent phoned up.

Was any action taken in response to the complaint by Mrs. Haggar immediately? - The action I took was to ask her to confirm in writing this complaint; I also consulted within the office about the situation; beyond that we didn't have written grounds for proceeding.

Were you aware of an incident which occurred on a night in May 1989 in which Mrs. Haggar poured/poured various noxious substances over Hamilton? - Yes.

Were you taking any steps in relation to Hamilton at that time? - I am not sure of the timescale but we also, through a local member to whom I have referred, Malcolm Gray, we were looking at the situation to see whether there were any grounds for terminating the let.

Were you aware of Press coverage following the incident in which Mrs. Haggart poured the stuff.....? - Yes.

And reference within these newspapers to police investigations? - Yes.

Were you aware of police investigations prior to that date? - No.

On becoming aware of the Press cuttings and the reference to the police investigations what action was taken by the Region? - We, within the Education Department, consulted our Legal representatives because there was concern that this let was going on in these circumstances when there was an investigation or there appeared to be an investigation to see whether we could take any action that was justified.

What was the advice received from your Legal Department? - The advice was that the Region had, in terms of its duty to ensure the safety of those using its premises, a course of action that it could take during the course of possible inquiries to protect the the children in its charge.

How was that desire to protect the children to be carried out? - It was to be carried out by terminating the let of Linlithgow Academy pending the decision as to whether or not to prosecute.

Did you have a chance to consult with the police carrying out the investigations prior to the decision to terminate the let? - Yes.

Was this carried out over a period of time or was it as soon as you became aware of the information regarding the police investigations? - As/

As soon as we became aware of it and had discussed our course of action with the legal advisers we contacted the police and contacted them regularly after that to find out whether anything was likely to happen.

Could I ask you to look at two documents, one is DLRC CE9 and the other is DLRC RSH and they are D6 and D7 within folder J3; the first of these is a memorandum from the Community Education service, do you have that? - Yes.

And that is dated the 18th of May 1989 and refers to an incident at Linlithgow Academy on the 16th of May, 1989? - Yes.

Attached to that there are various newspaper articles? - Yes.

The second of these two documents is a letter addressed to Hamilton from the Scottish Education Officer and copied to yourself, do you have that? - Yes, that is correct.

That is dated the 17th of May, 1989? - Yes.

That is actually the day before the memo from the Community Education Service? - That is correct.

I think you indicated you are terminating Hamilton's let of the premises? - Yes.

Did you discuss with your Legal Department whether it was necessary to consult Hamilton prior to terminating the let? - We discussed that, yes, as I recall.

And I take it from the fact that you didn't consider it necessary to speak to Hamilton? - No.

Whose decision ultimately was it to terminate the let at Linlithgow Academy? - The decision was mine in consultation with my Depute Director of Education at the time whose initials are on this memo.

His name was? - Mr. Angus K. McKay.

Was/

Was it only yourself in consultation with Mr. McKay that could terminate the let in these circumstances? - We had the power to terminate under the Director of Education.

Well, following that Hamilton made a large number of representations and complaints to you which I don't think we need to go into but I understand that subsequent to that he made an application for further lets of Linlithgow property? - That is correct.

If I could refer you to document DLRC RS15 and RS15 which are also D14 and 15 within the folder; the first of these is a memorandum from yourself to the Regional Solicitor? - Yes.

You say that you note you have additional application for the letting of the premises? - Yes.

And then you request information whether or not criminal proceedings are to be taken against Hamilton? - Yes.

The response to that is document D15 from the Regional Solicitor who says he is in no better position to get information about these actings? - Yes, that is correct.

Did you do anything subsequent to these letters? - Yes, we contact the police and the Procurator-Fiscal, I think, in Dumbarton.

Was there a response to these letters? - Yes, they couldn't confirm that the proceedings would go ahead, I think they were still in the course of considering them.

Can I refer you again to two documents, DLRC RS3/2 which is D8 and the other is DLRC RS5/9 which is D24 in the folder although you will have the correct document which is D18 and not D8; looking first to document RS3/2 that is a letter from Strathclyde Police? - Yes.

And what did they say to you in response to your query? - That they couldn't help, that the report was with the Procurator-Fiscal.

Looking at the other letter do you see that/that is a response from the Procurator-Fiscal? - Sorry, is this RS5?

RS5/9, it may be the ninth page? - Yes.

Is that a letter which you received from the Procurator-Fiscal? - Yes.

That is dated the 20th of March, 1990? - Yes.

What is the reply to your query? - That no criminal action was going to be taken.

What action did you take in response to the information that there was to be no criminal inquiry? - The action taken was to, as I recall, write to Mr. Hamilton to say in the circumstances we would receive an application from him and give it due consideration.

But was it not the position that you were determined there would not, in fact, be any let to Hamilton? - I think that we would have preferred for there not to be a let that we would have acted.....we would have acted properly in the sense if there hadn't been grounds for refusing we would have to accept.

Was there any attempt by the Region to ensure that any lets sought by Mr. Hamilton were taken up by the Community Education so were not available for him? - Yes, that was the line we took.

Why was that line taken? - Because there was the concern that in view of the public concern, in view of the possible proceedings, that we could have been leaving people in jeopardy.

By what sort of proceedings and what sort of jeopardy? - There was the feeling that the organisation was not suitable but we couldn't prove it.

Why did you simply not just tell him he wasn't going to get a let, full stop? - If we hadn't been able to fill the let place then Mr. Hamilton would have got a let.

Could/

Could you not just have refused him out of hand? -
No.

Why not? - Because that would have been improper and we couldn't have done that.

Ultimately Hamilton did make representation to the Commissioner with the local administration in Scotland in respect of the action by Lothian Region in terminating his let? - Yes.

The Region made a response to the Commissioner regarding that? - Yes.

Could I ask you to look at that response which is document DLRC RS4/5 and D22 in J3, do you recognise this document? - Yes.

Were you involved in the preparation of it? - Sorry, is it the document from the Commissioner of Local Administration?

The one I am referring to is dated the 25th of January, 1990 and is a response by the Region to an invitation from the Commissioner? - I don't have that in this document.

On/

11.00 a.m.

On the backing of that there is reference DLRC/RS4. The alternative reference is RS2/4? - I have a memorandum that I wrote on the 14th of March in front of me.

Can I ask you first of all to have document RS2/4. Is that a document dated 25th January, 1990 which is the response to the Commissioner? - Yes.

Did you prepare that? - Yes.

The first page of that narrates some of the general legal policy of the Region and the second page refers to certain of the complaints that were made regarding Hamilton? - Yes.

On the third page you set out in paragraph 4(ii) the position of the Region. Could you read that paragraph please? - "In suspending the letting the authority did not judge whether Mr. Hamilton was guilty or not. The allegations against Mr. Hamilton were subject to police investigation. It was not for the authority to prove or disprove the allegations. The authority's prime and only concern was to ensure the care and wellbeing of the children using these premises. The judgment was that in order that the authority be confident in discharging responsibility the let to Mr. Hamilton should be suspended. In the circumstances it was not considered appropriate to invite Mr. Hamilton to discuss the allegations. The point at issue was the fact of the police investigation."

At the foot of that page, "Mr. Hamilton made no application for a further let and if he had it would have received consideration"? - Yes.

What was the response of the Commissioner to that reply by the Region? - The response was to uphold the Region's action.

BY LORD CULLEN: Is it correct that the let was technically suspended only and not terminated? - Yes.

I noticed in some of the other correspondence it does give the impression it was actually terminated? - No, it wasn't, it was suspended.

EXAMINATION/

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: To be clear on that point, the period of the let, can you recall what that was? - I think it was from September, perhaps late August through to April or May.

So that it would require to be renewed annually? - Yes, that was the general procedure.

When you suspended the let in May, 1989 it effectively had the effect of terminating it for the rest of that year? - For the rest of that school session, yes, and then any reapplication for a new session would have been considered. But, of course, there was no change in the circumstances so we didn't grant.

Was there ever a refusal to Hamilton in respect of further applications to the Region? - No.

Did you ever receive any further correspondence requesting a let of the premises? - My recollection is no. After the Ombudsman upheld the Region's decision as I recall we wrote to Mr. Hamilton and said that we would consider a let if it came up.

I would like to turn now to general issues of the letting of local authority premises. What is the purpose of the Region behind letting its school premises to parties? - Well, first of all to make the premises as widely available as possible for use outwith school hours and to have them used for the benefit of the community.

Generally what sort of parties or what sort of groups apply for lets of school premises? - A wide variety of youth groups, some uniform, some not, some informal. Football training groups are quite frequent. We have other groups that are under the aegis of the Community Education and they have priority.

Are lets that are granted for the period of the school session or are one-off lets also considered? - Oh, yes, one-off lets are considered.

How frequent are they by comparison to the long-/ long-term or longer term lets? - Difficult to say. They are fairly frequent. Usually what we do is if there is no space we would liaise with the group that would be affected and try to fit the let in. They are fairly frequent.

Are you in a position to say how many applications for lets were received in the former Lothian Region each year? - I can't recall. It was a large number. It was a substantial operation.

To whom would an application for a let be sent in the first instance? - It would normally be sent to the Director of Education. In practice it went to the Principal Officer (Administration) to process them who would refer any lets that required further consideration to the Directorate members most immediately concerned; that was me and the Deputy Director Mr. McKay.

So that they would be referred to you only if there was an element of concern in relation to the let? - Yes.

What factors may give rise to that concern? - Well, there may be concerns about conflicting priorities.

What do you mean by "conflicting priorities"? - If there were several lets that fell into different categories, for example old folk, young folk, community education, then we would have to come to a decision as to who had priority.

Sorry, I interrupted you. What factors gave rise to the matter being referred to you? - I think those were the main ones. The other issues of concern were where a let may be politically sensitive in the sense of falling within two categories such as Blood Sports or the National Front.

Did the Region have a policy in respect of lets to such bodies? - Yes. It would not allow lets to the National Front or organisations representing Blood Sports.

When you referred to the decision whether or not lets should be taken, am I correct in understanding one person takes all the decisions for the/

the entire Region, as it then was? - Yes.

Are decisions to let ever taken at local level at the particular centre or school involved?

- I think in practice, yes, in the sense there would be programming from the local centre but they would have to go through the central letting system for formal acceptance.

If it had been accepted at local level would it ever be the case it case it was overturned at Regional level? - I don't recall any cases. It is possible.

Are you aware whether any applications were rejected at local level? - I am not aware of that.

When the School Board was set up what say did they have in the decision to let? - They say they had was they were responsible for the programming of the facilities and for commenting on the pattern of the lets and the priorities, and they had to operate within the Regional policy which was framed naturally.

When you say they would comment on lets, that would be a comment to yourself or the Director of Education within the Region? - Yes.

Did they have some personal contact with the person seeking the let? - Yes, they would.

Would they interview that person? - I am not sure they would, no. I think they would simply receive the lets and be taken through them by the head teacher or Community Education Officer.

Would they take any decision, real decision taking power in relation to which lets they preferred? - Yes, they would.

Are they able to reject lets on any basis they see fit or do they have to give a reason which conforms with the Region's policy? - They would have to give a reason which conforms.

Is the Region's policy contained within a written document? - It is.

Can/

Can I ask you to look please at a document which isn't contained within Folder J(iii), it is within J(iii) other documents (D/LRC/RS7). I have got a document here headed "Regulations for Letting of Educational Premises"? - That is right.

Is that the Region's policy you referred to? - Yes, that in association with letting charges would also indicate priorities.

Is that a list of what the various groups would be charged even for a one-off let of the premises? - It broadly indicates the charges and it also indicates the categories of priority by allocating within these categories.

I think it is actually attached to the back of the document within the Production D/LRC/RS7 setting out the order of the various priorities? - Yes.

Can I just refer you to the second paragraph within these regulations. Could you read that out please? - "A responsible person must be present throughout the duration of each meeting. In the case of sports lets the activity must be carried out supervised in accordance with the appropriate rules and recommendations of the governing body of the sport concerned."

The fourth paragraph refers if any ball game is to be played it has to be done within the recognised rules for the appropriate game? - Yes.

Is this the whole of the Region's policy as it stood at that time in relation to lets of school premises? - As I recall.

If a School Board or Region wished to refuse it it would have to be taken somewhere within this framework? - Yes.

If they were concerned regarding what may be said to be a person's general suitability to have custody of children how would that be handled within these regulations? - I think at the time we would have had an investigation by the appropriate Community Education staff and we might ask an adviser in physical education to check on anybody if they were sporting, for instance.

To/

To whom would that person report? - That person would report -- the Community Education person would report to the Community Education Officer at the time who would refer to the Letting Section. The physical education adviser would report directly to the letting person.

That may deal with the point referred to in paragraph 2 there whether or not the responsible person was a person dealing with supervision. Would that also cover someone's suitability as a person to have custody of children? - If there was anything known that could be founded on, yes, it would.

Is there any record of register kept by the local authority of persons who might not be suitable to have custody of children? - I am not sure. I think there is. I don't know.

Are the activities that go on within the various let premises supervised on a regular basis? - Do you mean by somebody external to the groups concerned?

Yes? - There is normally a head of evening school who would be there who would keep general supervision. I don't think there would be any regular inspection of what was going on.

Is the person, the external supervisor, a member of the school staff? - Maybe a member of the school staff or could be a member of the Community Education Service hired specifically for that purpose.

Is there one person in each school or other premises?
- In the larger premises there would be one and in others -- actually in certain schools there wouldn't be necessarily an evening school head, classes would be under the formal supervision of the head teacher concerned and the Community Education Officer and the school janitor would be the person who would let people in and out but wouldn't have any responsibility for supervising the suitability of the let.

So/

11.20 a.m.

So there might be no person who actually had a day to day eye on what was actually going on? - That is conceivable.

The circumstances in which the Region terminated Hamilton's lets after these complaints which arose in 1989: in response to that it was only the lets of the Region's premises that were terminated; is that correct? - Yes.

Did the Region have any power at all to prevent Hamilton running clubs within privately-owned and leased premises? - No.

Would the Region be able to undertake such a task of supervising persons with the custody of children in private premises? - I think it would be difficult but not impossible, given the existing powers. It would be possible if the Region were given that task.

If there was concern expressed regarding a let in private premises would the Region have powers to intervene through the Social Work Department? - I am not sure. That might be possible.

If you are not aware, please say so. Would the Region be able to refer the matter to the Reporter to the Children's Panel for him to investigate? - I am not sure. I think that would be possible.

But neither of those two courses were adopted in this particular case? - No.

In the file of correspondence which has been recovered it is clear Hamilton was a frequent complainer to the Region? - Yes.

Are you able to give any indication of how common or otherwise it is to be faced with that barrage of correspondence from a resident within the Region? - It is fairly common to have a barrage of correspondence with particular clubs which are having difficulty meeting their charges, and there are some difficulties there. Sometimes there are difficulties over accommodation and over the general conditions/conditions that apply in an area where a let is taking place; but the kind of complaints that we had from Mr. Hamilton I think were fairly unique.

So he did stand out from all the other complainers?

- Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: Am I right in thinking you would not have access to the Scottish Criminal Records Office for those who were other than intended employees of a local authority? - That is correct, yes.

Am I right in thinking that the new unitary authorities have themselves access to the SCRO for that purpose? - Yes.

So it would be possible to extend that facility to enable them to do a Scottish Criminal Records Office check on anybody involved in youth groups? - Yes, it would.

You have indicated it would not be impossible to have a vetting procedure for those involved in youth groups in local authority premises? - Yes.

How would you have seen that operating? - I think we would have had a policy on child protection that would have been known to all staff and in which all staff have been trained.

But would you interview every applicant? Is that possible when you have got single lets? - I think it is impossible. I think we would look at particular cases. It is possible in the sense that you do have a body of individuals and organisations, and it would be possible to pick up individual organisations and investigate.

For instance, if a boys' club was a member of the Scottish Association of Boys' Clubs I suppose you might not have the same concern about that than you would have in relation to a boys' club that did not have that affiliation? - That is correct.

I suppose there would be no problem with the mainstream organisations, such as the Scouts, the Guides and the like? - No.

Do/

Do you appreciate, however, that parents might think there was an imprimatur of approval on an organisation which was carrying on in a school? - Yes.

And they might assume certain checks had been carried out? - Yes, they might assume that there was some validation given to that organisation by its presence there.

And therefore if a local authority are to continue to grant lets it is all the more important that vetting should take place?
- I think so. I think authorities should be empowered to refuse lets more readily than we were able to do in the circumstances.

Mr. Lake suggested that they were your premises, and you could refuse a let without reason? - We certainly felt we could not do that at the time, and the legal advice that we had bore out that view. What might be possible of course is to include in the authorities' guidelines an indication that the authority reserved the right not to grant a let; in other words, giving the authority a wider scope than it had in relation to the specific organisations that were banned from lets.

One of the concerns about Hamilton's groups was that there was no management group of parents. I suppose that could be seen as an essential pre-requisite before there were any lets? - That is in hindsight a pre-requisite. I also think that the constitution and the management arrangements for the groups could be vetted as well; in other words, the officebearers and the conduct of the group.

You were asked by Mr. Lake about other premises. I suppose, subject to resources being available, local authorities could be responsible for vetting of those involved with children under a certain age in any premises where organisations were being set up? - Subject to the law on entering these premises I would have thought it would be possible.

Certainly it is fair to say that would involve a significant increase in the resources available to local authorities?
- Absolutely.

BY/

BY LORD CULLEN: What kind of system do you envisage, given the powers and funds? - I think the system would have to be one that allowed authorities the right to enter premises and require organisations to secure validation from the authority and to require an organisation to indicate, as I said earlier, their constitution, their arrangements for management and their arrangements for involving members of the public, parent body, for example, and the general supervision of the organisation. I also think it would be necessary to have a policy on the inspection and monitoring of organisations. That could be on two levels: one could be by the Community Education staff of the authority, the officers of the authority; the other would be by having a system of monitoring organisations, that entailed regular inspection of activities and the registration of the details of these inspections: in other words, there would have to be a recorded system for the officers who were dealing with this that it would be available to the authority.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. GIBB: Yes? - There is another significant aspect in this, and I think it arises partly from the devolvement to schools, that it is necessary for authorities to keep an overview on lets and of the people who are taking lets. In the situation where letting is devolved to schools I am not sure the authorities will have the overview that we would have had in this situation, and I am also not sure that the individual organisations would have the access to the body of experience and to the advice that the Education Authority itself would have. So that is something I think that has to be looked at very carefully, the effects of devolving letting to the individual establishment, with the possible fragmentation of control and the loss of oversight that could entail.

Really you could find a headmaster who was keen to let out as much as possible to increase his income out of school lets? - Very much so.

That he wouldn't need to come anywhere near the new unitary authorities? - That is correct.

How many one-man shows have you come across/across such as the Hamilton type? Were they common or uncommon? - I think there was a few. I mentioned football organisations. They were not one man, but they were just a few individuals. The actual one man type of organisation was fairly rare on the local authority. There are organisations like that that have a small number of individuals but who do not belong to a uniformed organisation or organisations like boys clubs and so on. I think there could be concern there.

No further cross-examination.

No re-examination.

MR. LAKE: The next witness is David Somerville.

DAVID WILKIE SOMERVILLE (51), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: I understand you live in Kirkcaldy? - I do indeed.

What is your present occupation? - Head of Community Services, Fife Council.

For how long have you been Head of Community Services? - Since the 1st April of this year.

What was your position prior to that? - Immediately prior to that I was Assistant Director of Education for Fife Regional Council.

Do your responsibilities in these two posts cover the letting or an overview of the letting of educational establishments within the Council's jurisdiction? - No, they entailed me in the community use of schools, which is slightly different.

Do both community use of schools and a direct school letting system exist within the Region? - Yes.

What/

What is the difference between these, community use and direct school letting? - Community schools have a much greater staff resource. Where a school lets it has a letting system whereby groups are able to let the premises. Community schools have a higher staffing establishment, which allows a whole range of classes, rather like a leisure centre, and a whole range of individuals can book into that.

Within the community use the actual operation of the centre is still controlled to an extent by the Council, whereas in a letting of the school it is turning over the premises to a private group? - Yes.

Which category did the lets to Hamilton fall into? - Both categories. Woodmill High School, which I had responsibility for to a large extent, was a community youth school, and Queen Anne High School was a school let.

So your involvement in relation to Hamilton was more in relation to Woodmill High School than to Queen Anne High School, the let there? - It was indeed.

Were you aware nonetheless of the details concerning the Queen Anne let? - I was aware of the Queen Anne details at a later date.

We have already heard evidence of some of the concerns and complaints which were made against Hamilton. Rather than go through these in detail, I propose to summarise them, and can you indicate whether or not you were aware of these complaints having been made to the Region? - Yes.

The first was a lady in 1985, from a parent, in relation to a summer camp of Hamilton's, in which she complained her son had been ill treated. It was a complaint received through the Rights Office? - I was aware of that.

Were you aware of complaints arising out of the 1988 camp run by Hamilton on Inchmurrin Island? - No, I was not aware of that.

Are you aware whether any persons within the/

the Region would have been aware of the problems arising out of the 1988 camp? - I understand -- well, I am aware that the Director of Education in 1989 received an anonymous telephone call suggesting there had been concerns not specifically about that camp, but about Hamilton.

Can I ask you to have in front of you document D/FRC/14, which is D8 within folder J(ii): have you got that? - Yes.

Do you see this is a letter addressed to the Depute Reporter at Glenrothes in Fife? - Yes.

And attached to it there is a report from Strathclyde Police, dated 21st July, 1988? - I see that.

Although this was sent to the Reporter are you aware whether that was ever notified to the Region, or would you have expected it to have been notified to the Region? - I certainly note that there was a group of boys from Dunfermline, so I would hope it would have been relayed to the Region. I certainly have not seen it.

Dealing with the next complaint, which arose in 1990, and this was by a parent who was concerned that his son had been excluded on grounds of his build, his size? - Yes, I was aware of that.

And also in 1990 a mother complained that her child had sustained a serious chest infection while at camp? - I was unaware of that till much later.

In 1992 there was a complaint made regarding boys who lived within the Fife Region running away from the summer camp which had been held at Dunblane High School? - I was aware of that.

11.40 a.m.

I would like to look now at the means by which Hamilton placed lets and sought lets from the Region and the control that may have been available to the Region in relation to them; I would like you to have in front of you documents DFRC26 an 27, these are documents 20 and 21 in the folder J2; these are two application forms for school lets, have you seen these particular forms before? - Yes, I saw them.

These both relate to lets sought at the Queen Anne High School; these would have been lets, not community use lets, just bare school lets? - That is correct.

You wouldn't have been involved with these? - No, I wasn't involved with them.

To whom would an application be made for these lets? - Application is normally made to the Area Office of the Local Authority and a decision would take place with the head teacher and, if necessary, that would be referred to a colleague in the Education Department or the Assistant Director of Education.

You say "if necessary"? - If there was concern, if it as not a repeated let and if there was any concern particularly with sporting activities, the qualification of staff and the advice of the physical education director would be sought to see whether these people had the correct qualifications.

Is that the only concern that could arise? - There would be other concerns such as the nature of the activities and it might be that the application wasn't filled in properly, the correct information wasn't given; there was also a policy with school lets which the Authority had written down and had put into a policy guideline.

What was the purpose of the policy guideline? - The policy guideline was to make sure that the lets that were allowed were conducive to what the Education Authority was trying to do to support the local community.

Did/

Did the policy guidelines contain details of what might and might not be carried out within the school premises? - Yes, it did.

Did it relate to matters such as supervision? - I suggest, and I am not 100 per cent au fait with documenting school lets but I understand that technical aspects had to be taken up; that there were a number of structures relating to the group, that the skill of the instructors equated to the nature of the activity undertaken.

What inquiry would be made to ascertain the qualifications of persons conducting the group? - I don't know, I wasn't involved in that.

Are you not aware of what the routine in respect of such.....? - No.

What inquiries were to be made in respect of a Community Education service let? - Each application as it came in, I have to make sure the application is made to the Head of Community or one of his staff and the qualifications would be checked at that time to see that they were appropriate to the activity.

How would that be checked? - If there was any doubt this would be checked with the governing body of that particular sport.

Was any check made as to suitability of let within schools? - That is more difficult to make a judgement about but if there was evidence to show that person was not capable or wasn't suitable then that would be taken into account.

Where might that evidence come from? - It might come from a variety of sources -- previously known difficulties with young people that had been proven or, in fact, local information that had showed that there was a difficulty.

Is any record or storage system kept for such information? - There is no storage system that I am aware of.

When a let is made at premises for community use or school let how long does that generally last for? - The let itself?

The/

The period of the let? - The let can vary, usually the school term at a maximum but it could be a year and reviewed in a year but mostly the school term.

Might you have a school let for a one-off event, a one night event? - Yes, there are.

How frequently are they? - Reasonably frequent -- I wouldn't like to put a percentage on it but reasonably frequent; most of the lets are a longer time than that.

Are the Region or were the Region or the Council able to meet the applicant or interview them in any way prior to granting a let? - At this moment in time in terms of Community use the applicant is met, it is not a formal interview but it is an informal meeting; in terms of the school let system my belief is that applicants are not necessarily met.

Who deals with the applicants for school lets? - In terms of?

During the period that Hamilton had his let, say this let at Queen Anne High School, who would have dealt with that? - It would be the Assistant Director of Education.

And when the let has been taken up for Community use what level of supervision would there be by the Council for the activities carried out? - In addition to the Head of Community use there are people, what we call deputes -- there would always be supervisory members of staff on it and one of their roles was to ensure that monitoring takes place of activities.

And so within the Woodmill Centre how many rooms or halls would be available for let? - There would be many rooms available for let but most of the lets, because of their very nature, take place in the sporting facilities, the physical education activities so I suggest about five or six in terms of physical education facilities; there are obviously many more classrooms.

There would be at least five or six different groups carrying out activities within the school/school on any given evening? - I would think there would normally be many more because in addition to lets there would be individuals using the premises; in addition to that there would be classes run directly by the Local Authority.

You said supervisory persons from the Council have a duty to supervise these activities throughout the building? - It wouldn't be a question of supervising them all the time but during the evening there would, at least, be several calls in just to see that everything was in order.

What sort of things would they be looking for as a problem? - As a problem -- there are many types of problems; I think the quality of all the activities and the instruction, the lack of supervision but in addition to that the main purpose for looking in wouldn't just be a straight monitoring because of a problem, there would be in many ways a point of view to make sure that the group were part of the overall organisation.

If a person in the Centre had considered that there was a problem with the activity being carried out what would they do about that? - They would deal with it as they saw on the spot, if it was something that needed to be done on the spot, if it was something that didn't need to be done on the spot they would report back to the Head of Community use and depending on the nature of concern it would be taken elsewhere.

What may the Head of Community use do in taking the matter forward? - Again if he felt that it could be dealt with within his level of response he would deal with it; if they felt that it wasn't something they could deal with they would refer it probably to myself.

What sort of matters might they not be able to deal with themselves? - It might be a situation whereby there had been an altercation with somebody who was organising a group and they personally refused to take instructions or requests from the Head of Community use.

If a decision was to be taken to terminate a let at what level would that decision be taken? - It could have been taken by the Head of Community/

Community use but on the basis that there was likely to be repercussions it would be normal it would be discussed with myself and if I felt it necessary I would discuss it with the Director of Education and other colleagues, again to make sure that the grounds for terminating the let were sound.

Talking about the grounds for terminating a let, if an application was made to you for a let and you simply didn't want to grant it would you consider it necessary to have grounds to say you refused the application for the let? - Yes, I think we would have to substantiate why we refused that let.

Why couldn't you just simply refuse to grant any person or body a let? - On the basis that person would have the rights for grounds for appeal and in this particular instance I was aware of the fact that there had been a similar situation with Central Region.

When you talk about an appeal is that to the Parliamentary Commission? - An appeal can take several different ways -- it might be made to the Local Authority and the Local Authority could take a stance on that position and it could also be an appeal to the Ombudsman.

What sort of reasons might you give for refusing a let in the first place? - If there was evidence that the technical qualification of the people involved were not suitable, if there was evidence that the person involved with the group is not a suitable person and there had been proof against that and grounds such as that.

Could you indicate what proportion of applications for Community use lets are, in fact, rejected? - It would be very few.

Something less than one per cent? - Yes, I would suggest something of that order.

Can I turn now to the various responses of the Region to the concerns that were expressed in relation to Hamilton and I refer you firstly to document DFRC8 which is D5 in the Production; do you recall this memorandum? - Yes, I do.

Does/

Does that show who it is to and who it is from; are you the sender or the recipient of this? - I am the sender.

Do you see in the second paragraph there is mention of the complaint that was made or referred to at the outset, do you see that? - Yes.

And then in the second paragraph there are four matters which are said need actioned? - Yes.

These are that the club can't use the Centre as its official address, but although the camp hadn't of itself concerned the Region the Region had to ensure the club is being run properly, there was reference to payments of cash and difficulty with the structure of the club? - Yes.

Would these be matters which you would apply to all clubs within the Regional premises? - I think particularly in the case where concern was raised or an issue was raised that made us look closer at a club, yes.

Particularly in relation to the section in which it is observed that a complaint has been received concerning the activities within the Centre; if the Region was concerned that it would come back to them, if you like, did you have any direct control over the activities carried out by groups within your premises? - Sorry?

Control or regulations of activities carried out in your premises? - We have control to the extent that we would, whilst they were in the premises, we would ensure that they carried out their activities in keeping with what we expected to be normal; it was difficult and is difficult for organisations to be involved in activities that may happen somewhere else within our own premises.

If someone was carrying out activities within other premises within the Council areas would the Council have any power to intervene in respect of these activities? - Yes.

Would that be in respect of certain age groups only?
- No, it would be in respect of all age groups.

How/

How would the Council intervene if it had concern about the way an activity was being carried out? - We would fully investigate.

Which part of the Council would carry out that investigation? - In the context of being in Education premises then the Director of Education would have normally the responsibility.

And if there was a lot of premises owned by some private body which part of the Council would have the authority to investigate? - I think that would be more difficult and I think the administration legal section of the Council may have to investigate that but I would expect that if the main interest of the Council or the Regional interest of the Council was within the Education Department premises I would expect the Educational Department to be involved somewhere.

If it was any other premises would it be a matter for the Social Work Department of the Council to investigate? - If it involved young children I would have to suggest that the Social Work Department would have a major role to play in the investigation, yes.

Do you consider that the Reporter to the Children's Panel would have any input into that situation? - Yes, I would.

Are you aware of any such investigations concerning non-Council premises having been carried out by the Council? - I am unaware of it.

I think we see on the second page of that memorandum that you have just referred to you expressed your view at that time of what has to be done in relation to Hamilton; can you just read that paragraph please? - "At this stage I can see no reason to alter our involvement or my meeting with Mr. Hamilton but obviously it raises the profile of the matter. You may wish to discuss this before Monday".

So if nothing was done directly in relation to Hamilton at that time what action, if any, did the Region take? - I met with Hamilton at that stage and I spoke with him about the operation of his club; at that time I was aware also, I can't give/give you the exact time, of Press cuttings before Central Regional Council at which the Ombudsman had found against Central Regional Council because they hadn't.....it appeared that they hadn't worked on the facts but had worked on rumour; I met with Hamilton and my view at that stage was that we didn't have grounds to terminate his use of the premises because we didn't have any substantive evidence against him but I asked that our colleagues at Woodmill High School undertake supervision of his sessions at a higher level than they would normally do with other groups.

Did you want to terminate the let of the premises at that time in 1985? - I would have preferred to terminate it; on the basis of my experience I had a feeling that at whatever level the concern or whatever level of difficulty we would experience I thought that we would have ongoing difficulties with Mr. Hamilton.

What did you consider you required by way of evidence to support the decision to terminate the let? - Something that could withstand the rigor of anything up to and including the Local Authority Ombudsman, we would have to ensure we had the correct information to go forward.

So was there concern in relation to proceedings before the Ombudsman which related to Central Regional Council? - My concern was that there had been rumours and suggestions that Mr. Hamilton hadn't carried out his activities in an acceptable manner and that Central Regional Council had reacted to the suggestions but subsequently they couldn't be proven and the situation was the let had re-started again and my concern was we would require factual information and evidence that would back that situation.

Did your interview with Mr. Hamilton give you any basis for concern or any basis for terminating the let? - He gave me no evidence whatsoever during that interview as to why we should terminate the lets and my line at that stage was to try and ensure to the best of our ability that we monitor the situation and review it almost well, on a week-to-week basis.

12 noon

You said earlier on in your evidence when it came to the renewal of applications that when one expired if there were any problems you might regard them as a reason for not granting renewal? - Correct.

Did you consider the concerns you had might be sufficient to justify non-renewal even if they didn't justify termination? - The concerns I had were based on nothing that I could substantiate. We were unable to provide any hard evidence at that time that could terminate the let.

You said you carried out supervision or monitoring on a week-to-week basis. What form did that take? - That took the form of Mr. Baxter's staff, particularly one who was a physical education teacher and who was aware of physical activity for boys, in ensuring on a regular basis that group was looked at within the centre, and I also tried to ensure that there was a parental involvement at some stage in some form in this club.

How did you do that? - I tried to encourage Mr. Hamilton to form a parents' committee. Whilst this wasn't formalised for the length of the let Mr. Baxter did inform me that parents were in the gym when activities were going on.

I think you said the first subject of difficulty you referred to was regarding the exclusion of one boy on the grounds of his build, concern about another parent about a chest infection, and the Council did not seriously consider taking action against Hamilton until they had details of the summer camp at Dunblane in 1992? - That is correct.

How did you get to hear about the incident at Dunblane High School in 1992? - The then Director of Education called me to his office and said he had a phone call from the Chief Superintendent of Police in Dunfermline raising concerns about the camp.

What were his concerns? - The concerns were that three boys had been found at a telephone box outside the school at Dunblane High School, and subsequently/subsequently after discussion with the Director of Education I agreed to meet as quickly as possible with the Chief Superintendent and at the Chief Superintendent's suggestion with the Reporter to the Children's Panel.

What was the outcome of those discussions? - The outcome of those discussions was that the information that was available at that time, which was effectively that three boys had left the camp and had been found by the Central Police at a telephone box in Dunblane. I asked if the Reporter to the Children's Panel would be willing to put his concerns in writing which he readily agreed to do. I then discussed it with the Director of Education and it was agreed that we should not at that stage take any further bookings from Hamilton or lets from Hamilton or actions from Hamilton. This was during the school holiday period in July/August so both Woodmill and Queen Anne would be unavailable for use until the end of August.

Was that decision taken on the basis of what had happened at Dunblane or was there a further enquiry into activities within the Region's premises? - It was largely related directly to the activity in Dunblane.

Can I ask you to have two documents in front of you, DFRC/53 and also DFRC/102 (D46 and D58 within J(ii) respectively). I think the first is a memorandum to Mr. Welsh from yourself dated 27th August, 1992? - Yes.

The first paragraph refers to a meeting with Mr. Kelly, Reporter to the Children's Panel, and Chief Superintendent Elder to whom you referred? - Yes.

In the second paragraph you indicate you wrote to all heads of centres setting out your view given the serious concerns of the Reporter to the Children's Panel about the welfare of children which could be directly related to a lack of supervision, the authority could possibly be in a difficult position knowing this if there was an accident related or unrelated during one of our lets in Fife Regional Council premises. The severity of the complaint was such that the activities of the club on camp and during a let in Fife could in my opinion not/not be separated. Is it fair to say on the basis of that your concern was related to carelessness in relation to children? - The answer is yes, I think carelessness.

There wasn't at that time any concern as to abuse or activities which were causing the police concern? - At that stage I was unaware of anything other than lack of care in a classic way for the children. In addition to that, given the situation that related to the difficulty for Central Regional Council in the early 80s I decided the way we would be looking at this was really related to, if you like, care of the children you would expect from other evidence at that stage.

And that was the approach to be taken by the Regional Council? - My view, my personal view was until we had some hard evidence of abuse we had to work on the evidence that was there which we could substantiate, and it was fact rather than rumour, and at that time of this particular incident I had no other information really other than the fact three children under ten years of age had wandered out of school.

Had you heard any rumours of abuse at that time? - In Dunblane?

About abuse? - No.

Referring to that second document, I have a memorandum again from you to Mr. Welsh dated 29th September. This is a large file? - It is a large file.

Unfortunately I think this starts at page 51 of that file. They may be numbered in the top right-hand corner? - Yes.

Is that the memorandum dated 29th September? - It is.

In the second paragraph, "Whilst it could be considered that the normal lets at Woodmill and Queen Anne High Schools were separate from the annual camps the nature of the allegations are such that the future safety and welfare of children require to be assured before activities could be recommenced. Mr. G. Baxter, Head of Centre, Woodmill/Woodmill Centre, confirmed that parents assumed that there was some kind of direct provision or endorsement of the club because it met on educational premises. The complaints related to alleged lack of supervision and sufficient care for the welfare of children and therefore any subsequent accident either at camp or on Fife Regional Council premises could result in the Regional Council being negligent on the basis of having concerns but taking no immediate action pending a full investigation. It was essential that the safety of the children was of the highest priority irrespective of the level of risk"? - Yes.

Was your concern in some sense the Region may be vicariously liable for what was being carried out by Hamilton in the premises? - Yes, because there was some evidence to suggest at that stage Hamilton or his group did not supervise these children properly at the camp, and therefore that was something, it was a fact we could deal with, and subsequently in fact there had been lack of proper staff/pupil ratio in the camp forming a minor incident at Woodmill High School and then we would have thought Fife Council would have had to take steps to ensure these things were done.

Did you consider that by letting the premises to Hamilton the Region might be viewed by parents to be supporting his groups in some way? - I think, yes.

In the fourth paragraph of that letter which is on the second page there is a list of various, a list under various sub-headings of various complaints that have been received against Hamilton; you see these? - Yes.

We have heard these from other witnesses so I don't propose to consider these in detail. But in the paragraph headed No. 6, "Assessment" on page 4, you set out your views of what had been discovered? - Yes.

Page 5 is headed "Supervision", relating to the fact Mr. Hamilton was in sole charge of 18 boys at Dunblane High School? - Yes.

Then at 6.11 you set out the police of the Regional Council on the supervision of groups relating/relating to children; is that correct? - That is correct.

I wonder if you could read for me the policy in paragraph 6.1.1? - "This is the major responsibility which the leader undertakes. This responsibility is both constant and total. There are no occasions during an excursion when a leader may abdicate this responsibility. The leader is also responsible for ensuring that there is at all times an adequate level of supervision. In terms of establishing levels of supervision, it is important that a commonsense approach is adopted. The leader must take into consideration the personal capabilities of all the parties, the demands of the excursion and the conditions and circumstances which are likely to be met. It is more important that these criteria are met than for the authority to established fixed ratios since similar circumstances will require different ratios according to the personal capability and maturity of each group."

You say in the paragraph just before that it is intended for internal excursions run directly by the youth clubs? - Yes.

Is that information given to people taking lets of Council premises? - It wouldn't normally be. It would be given to them as advice. If we were aware that they wished support in terms of running an activity, at a camp, somewhere else -- for example, football teams could quite easily make use of booking football pitches for some football team but some teams may take the youngsters away for residential experience and in these circumstances it would be likely the two situations would be recognised.

Is this an answer to someone who may ask for support rather than have it directed in these terms? - Indeed.

In paragraph 6.1.2 you set out the standards for supervision required of the Scouts Association. Was that because you were liaising with the Scout Association at that time? - No. At that stage I decided to liaise with as many people as possible and get dedicated backing information.

As/

As part of that liaising you talk about in 6.1.3 you have set out the specific ratio regulations for the Boys' Brigade? - Agreed.

Paragraph 7, there is a paragraph in which you give some fixed guidelines and which gives your concluded view regarding the level of supervision at Hamilton's camps? - Yes.

Could you just read that one out? - "There is no doubt that the circumstances in Dunblane fell well before the accepted norm. Responsibility for ensuring adequate cover was for the sports club group committee as an independent organisation".

Similarly in paragraph 6.3 headed "Emergency Procedures". Again could we go to paragraph 6.3.3, the position of the Council on this matter. Could you read that out please? - "There is a need to (a) supply adequate information to parents including details of insurance cover; (b) ensure particularly in residential situations effective links involving party leaders or centre/ club based contact and parents", and I have added "This includes emergency telephone contact numbers".

Is that a matter which you would communicate to an organisation if they sought the support of the Council? - If they sought it, yes.

Without going into detail of the subsequent paragraphs you set out the requirements of that kind of both the Scout Organisation and the Boys' Brigade? - I do.

After that you note that the arrangements made by Hamilton were unsatisfactory? - Yes.

In paragraph 6.4 you indicated that it is not possible to substantiate any complaints of inappropriate language? - Correct.

6.5, telephone access which has already been dealt with. 6.6 is the question of whether or not the children were misled as to the activities to be undertaken? - Yes.

6.7, you return to the activities in more detail in terms of the suitability of the people who were/were involved, and I think there you refer to a report from a Mr. Liddell regarding concern about activities of children? - I do.

Could you read out the text there which is an extract from Mr. Liddell's report? - "The fitness activities were totally inappropriate and better suited to an adult group. The 'ring' work, especially the dip and press work would have been demanding for a mature gymnast, for children of the age group concerned I believe it might be damaging and shows a total lack of anatomical and physiological knowledge on the part of the leader. The other fitness activities would, again, not have been used by a responsible coach.

The trampoline work was dangerous. On occasion no 'spotters' were present and on the one occasion when they did appear they were young boys themselves. An apparent high standard of 'traditional' gymnastics was achieved by some of the boys but only one one occasion was a supporter present. How there was not a serious accident I will never know. On the occasion when support was provided I questioned the method used. Like the trampolining and gymnastics, the athletics activities gave cause for concern. The 400 metres was run in the wrong direction but more importantly was putting far too much strain on the hearts of the young boys participating and could have caused the youngsters great distress. The high jump could only be described as dangerous. The landing area was inadequate for the activity and it was evident that no constructive coaching had taken place. Accidents should have occurred. Lucky leaders!".

It is noted there was a video prepared in July of 1992 and that report would be dated 1st September, 1992? - Correct.

Would/

12.20 p.m.

Would you have expected these matters to show up in the supervision of activities within the school premises? - The answer is not necessarily. I was assured by Mr. Baxter and his staff, one of which included a principal teacher of physical education, that the activities which took place in the school were commensurate with the abilities of the youngsters, and he thought it was perfectly suitable. Obviously the activities which took place in the camp were of an entirely different nature. In terms of the school activities, in view of the qualification Hamilton had, he would not have been allowed to use any of the equipment outlined in that paragraph.

In the next paragraph you deal with the issue of Hamilton's qualifications, and you note that he had a British Amateur Gymnastic Club Coach, Grade 5 certificate? - Yes.

I think at the end of that section you note that there is no evidence that he had any other qualifications, and if that was the case those qualifications were not sufficient? - It would not have been sufficient for him undertaking the activities he was doing at camp.

You said at the outset that Mr. Hamilton's qualifications would have been checked when he took the let? - They were.

Would it therefore be the position that the Region were aware that the only qualification held by Hamilton was the Grade 5 British Amateur Gymnastic Club Coach? - Yes. The staff were satisfied that the level of activity, which was not gymnastics, which was happening at Woodmill High School was appropriate for Hamilton's qualifications.

In paragraph 6.9 you set out your concerns regarding Mr. Hamilton's attitude, and you summarise them in the underlined text at the top of page 11. Can you read out the summary of your view? - "I am concerned that Mr. Hamilton's attitude to this situation is indicative of his overall attitude to the supervision and welfare of children and as such would give concern for future arrangements"./

arrangements".

In the heading 6.12 you refer to the constitution of the organisation carrying out the activities, and you refer to elements which require to be clarified by Hamilton, and that is the names, ages and qualifications of the Committee members, the number and ages of the members, the names, ages and qualifications of Committee members, the constitution and the instructions or guidance to its leaders? - Yes.

Why were the Council concerned in relation to these five matters? - My concern at that time was that Hamilton was writing at that stage on a headed notepaper which if I remember correctly was the "Boys' Sports Club Group Committee". That would have indicated to parents that if there was such a Committee you would expect that Committee to have members and to have a constitution, and at that stage I was anxious to ensure we had all the information that related to the organisation of that Committee.

Does it make any difference if a club has a Committee and a constitution? - In normal circumstances clubs would not necessarily have to have a constitution. Many would, however; many would have a constitution, which would be a standard constitution; for example a youth football club, they would adopt the standard constitution of the Scottish Football Association. Many clubs and many groups operating at local authority level do not have a constitution, because of the nature in terms of development within the community.

Yes? - My concern particularly with Hamilton and particularly in relation to Dunblane was that he was beginning to write under a title that said "Committee" and I was concerned that parents and others would believe there was a Committee, and I was asking Hamilton to outline what the Committee was.

If there had been no reference to a Committee on the notepaper you would not have been concerned about the way this had been set up? - At that stage of the investigation, no.

Looking at the summary sheet contained in/in paragraph 7, it is stated that Fife Regional Council must have concern for the safety and welfare of children either directly in its care or in the care of others with which it is associated? - Yes.

When you refer to others with which it is associated is that purely in the context of lets of school premises? - Not necessarily. In terms of any tangible link there would be between the authority and the particular organisation it is very difficult to separate educational premises from other premises that a local authority would use in terms of leisure facilities, public parks, etc.

The second point of the summary is that logistics make it impossible to monitor all groups associated with the Regional Council. Is it your view that it is absolutely impossible to carry out that monitoring, or whether it is mainly a question of making resources available to enable you to do so? - I think with the resources available it could be monitored, with major resources.

I think the difficulty we have is the fact that -- the best example I can repeat is that this has to be seen in the context of a football club, youth or otherwise, with the hire of public parks. There would have to be a situation where situations like that could be monitored, and the leisure facilities should be monitored. I think it is possible, but I think logistically it would be difficult and would take a large level of resourcing.

Could you suggest how such monitoring might be carried out? - I think there would have to be staff appointed who had the technical knowledge and background and experience in what they were looking at to be able to visit organisations as a spot check when they were operating. I think many of the activities could be categorised. Young people is one category that might narrow the group down, that is seen as the priority.

Yes? - The difficulty I perceive with the suggestions that were made earlier is that these could only be sporadic checks; they could not be monitored on every occasion they met. The difficulty that would have to be overcome is that staff change, and in this context, in the context of the people taking the group, that is important. There/

There are many, many people, but the principle is something that would have to be reviewed.

Would it be possible for a person wishing to run a youth group to have some scheme whereby he could indicate he had approval or had been vetted by the local authority? - I think that would be extremely helpful. The difficulty to be overcome again I think is to find some vetting process able to show attitudes, concerns and the abilities of people to look after young people, which is very difficult to do, even in a face to face situation, over 20 minute interviews.

Do you have any suggestions to make as to how such a vetting process might be carried out? - I think vetting would have to go hand in hand with monitoring. I think monitoring is a crucial situation, and in the situation for example of Woodmill High School there was able to be a much higher level of control, because there were people on duty to look at situations which were of concern, as opposed to a school let system.

Yes? - Vetting is an extremely difficult one, which has to be looked at very carefully, as to what criteria were to be used and how they were to be used.

Turning to the events concerning Hamilton, you have said that following your investigation it was decided not to grant a further let to Hamilton, there being none current at that time? - Correct.

Did you receive correspondence from Hamilton regarding that decision? - Yes, I did.

What was the nature of that correspondence? - It blamed the authority, me in particular, for over-reacting to the situation, and clearly reminded me of the situation that had happened in Central Region in the early 1980s, that being a reference to the Ombudsman's report.

Did you take any action in respect of that correspondence? - Yes, it was discussed internally both with the Director of Education, the Chief Executive and others, because at that stage Hamilton had written to elected members of Fife Regional/Regional Council complaining about the way in which he was treated, and I subsequently wrote back to Hamilton, who wanted the nature of our complaints put in writing, which we subsequently did.

What was the attitude of the elected members of the Council? - The elected members were supportive of the position I had taken.

How would you describe the tone of the correspondence you received from Hamilton? - It was not a pleasant tone. It was accusing me of not dealing with the matter properly. It was not defending his position; it was blaming Fife Regional Council and blaming the children themselves.

In the context of dealing with community use of premises did you receive similar complaints from other persons? - It is slightly unusual, but they are occasional complaints, yes.

Did Hamilton's complaint stand out from the other complaints? - Yes, it stood out on the basis that he defended his decision very strongly, and he wrote to every elected member and to the Chief Executive and to everybody he could complain to about my action, which was unusual.

You said Hamilton asked you to put it in writing for him what the basis of the termination of the let was? - Yes.

How did you put it to him? - I put it to him in the light of the memo that you have just gone through, on the basis of that I indicated to him that there were concerns by the Reporter to the Children's Panel, the Chief Superintendent of Police and myself, and I wrote out very clearly the difficulties which we had, which was that there was an apparent lack of supervision, a lack of access to an emergency telephone number and a variety of other issues we have just gone through.

So lack of care was the nature of it? - Yes, a lack of care and support for the operation of a camp and the care of young children in his control at that time.

Did you indicate these concerns to any other/other local authorities or youth groups? - I relayed it to the local District Councils who had premises which were available in Fife, which he may have gone to to secure premises. I discussed it with the Director of Education, and suggested that he discuss it with his counterparts, particularly in Central Region.

Is there any established system or formal system for sharing such information between local authorities? - No. I think that was the difficulty throughout the whole exercise, trying to get information related to incidents that had allegedly happened in other parts of the country. He was difficult, and I was concerned at the time that we had suspended his let, that while we informally could let people know what the situation was, the concerns that both the Chief Superintendent of Police and I had was that while we could suspend his activities in Fife that he might go elsewhere and start again. There was no mechanism which would allow information in relation to the suspension of the let in Fife to be held centrally.

Is there any such system in place now? - There is not a formal system. All that operates at this time are informal links, at the time of dealing with Hamilton in the early 1990s. The next thing to a formal link we had, which was very welcome at the time, was with Fife Constabulary and the Reporter to the Children's Panel, who both shared information, that was helpful.

And presumably the dissemination of information is more difficult now that there is a greater number of unitary authorities within the old Region? - I think that could complicate it even more. It could bring it under one local authority control, not only the educational use of premises but also for leisure or recreational activities, which are obviously now separate local authorities.

Yes? - However, the difficulty is that most local authorities are moving towards decentralisation, therefore the question of sharing of information and links will be even more crucial than before.

Following your refusal to grant any further lets to Hamilton he made a complaint to the Parliamentary/

Parliamentary Commissioner for Local Administration in Scotland?

- He did.

What was the outcome of that complaint? - The outcome was that the Commissioner upheld the decision we had taken on the basis that Hamilton had consistently refused to meet with us to discuss the complaints which he had.

I think there was a complaint regarding a camp organised by Hamilton for children in Milarrochy Island on Loch Lomond: were you aware of that at the time? - No.

And you were not aware of the 1988 camp either?

- No.

Would either or both of these have made a difference to your decision to discontinue the let in 1992? - I think it would have depended on the basis of the information we were able to secure. As far as the Dunblane situation was concerned, I was able with the support of others to give us a sound basis to establish that. I wouldn't know if there was sound information came out of either of these two camps.

Within the Councils within which you have been employed or are employed what is the role of the School Board in relation to the letting of educational premises? - School Boards who have a statutory obligation in terms of lets. These lets have to be carried out and access has to be carried out within the direction of the local authority. The role of School Boards vary from authority to authority. I understand some School Boards effectively administer the lets of schools and access to schools, whereas in other local authorities there is an involvement of the School Boards, but the administration is carried out centrally, through the local authority mechanism.

What is the position of Fife Council? - The position of Fife Council is that they are carried out administratively by the authority and that School Boards have an element of involvement in the decision as to whether there is access or not.

12.40 p.m.

You say they had an element of involvement; what is their input into the decision? - It would be if the let wasn't in front of them and they would give consideration to whether that let fitted the criteria of the Local Authority.

Is that the only basis on which they could make their decision as to whether or not they want the let to go ahead? - Yes, as I understand it they haven't been involved directly; as I understand it they would have to reply heavily on the conditions as laid down by the Local Authority; if they refused the let there would have to be sound grounds to substantiate why that let wasn't given.

Is it the practice within Fife Council to send somebody to meet the applicant for a let? - I would think that would be unlikely in most cases, if not all cases.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: Just one point, I am not aware that there was any requirement for a public liability insurance certificate to be made available by any organisation running clubs in schools -- is there? - The Local Authority themselves would have its own insurance in terms of the groups that would be let; normally a group using the premises would have public liability insurance of their own, some form of insurance.

That is what I am coming to; I wonder if an element of control would be, in fact, to require the exhibition of a public liability insurance certificate that would amount to the insurer having suitable level of supervision and organisation? - I think that is a valid point; as I understand it some time during this, as I recall it, I am sure that Hamilton's group certainly at some stage had insurance.

I take your point about the question of vetting and monitoring; it must be extremely difficult but I am wondering whether a simple solution would be to make it a requirement for a certificate of public liability insurance to be made available before the Local Authority allows the letting of premises? - I think that may help; I think the difficulty is that an insurance company would/would be like most Local Authorities, it is relatively easy to weigh up what I would call the technical qualifications in terms of support that the person has the right coaching qualifications and it is very difficult in terms of insurance for anyone else to ensure that the people taking these groups were of the correct quality.

That is a way possible? - Yes, it is a way.

Relatively easy? - Yes.

IAN STEVEN BOAL (22) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: You live in Dumbarton? - Yes.

You are an under-graduate student in the subject of sport in the community? - Yes.

Now, I think that you knew Thomas Hamilton; can you tell me when you first met him? - It was actually through an advert on the university noticeboard for a job applying for sports coaches for one of the summer camps; that was in May, 1994.

That is when you saw the notice? - Yes.

Where was the camp to be? - At Dunblane High School, the first two weeks in July.

Did you contact Hamilton? - Yes, I noticed it was, like, a letter with headed notepaper and it said if you wished to apply phone Mr. Hamilton at the number.

Did it give any indication on the notice what his work was? - Yes, at the bottom it was actually.....it was like a graphic to do with photography, a professional photographer.

Was there any pay specified? - I can't really remember the exact amount but I think it was £250 for two weeks.

Did it look official or cheapskate to you? - It did look very official, it was headed notepaper/notepaper and said the Boys Sports Club and also it stated that Thomas Hamilton was actually the President or some official capacity.

How did you get in touch with him? - Through a phone call, I phoned him one afternoon it was.

Is that you phoned him? - Yes.

That was to the number on the notice? - Yes.

Did he ask you to provide information to him about your background? - Yes, I was to send by CV to him.

Did you do that? - Yes.

Was there a follow-up to that? - The follow-up was that.....during the telephone conversation he said I was to send my CV to him and he would get back to me regarding a possible interview.

Did he interview you? - Yes.

Where was that? - At his house, 7 Kent Road.

How long did the interview last? - I think it involved an interview at his house and then there was a practical session at one of the sports camps.

So he was checking you out in some details? - Yes, he wanted to see how I was coaching kids at one of his camps.

So he interviewed you first of all? - Yes.

And then he watched you carry out a coaching session with his children? - Yes.

Before you found out whether or not you had got the job? - Yes.

So far as the interview was concerned at his house what sort of information did he go into? - Well,/

Well, he just asked me most to do with my coaching experience as a sports coach, the types of sports I was actually qualified to coach.

How long did it last? - I think it was about half an hour.

Did you learn in the course of the interview whether he did any other activities with the boys other than camps? - Yes, there was just like he had clubs throughout the Central Region area and like various nights throughout the week.

Did he mention any schools? - Only one, I think it was Alloa, I can't remember the exact name of the school -- Alloa High School.

Did you get the impression he was conducting a number of these in the course of any given week? - Yes, the way he was talking it was as if maybe a Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, Friday.

Did you find out from him what he was interested in apart from taking the boys clubs? - No.

Did he discuss photography with you? - He said that he was a professional photographer.

Did he say anything about photographing children? - No.

Was there any discussion of photographs and what may be provided to parents and so on? - No, not at that stage.

At any stage? - Eventually like once I had actually been accepted for the job he said that he would sometimes take pictures of the kids and sell them on to the parents.

Did he say anything about a video at that stage? - He said he had.....I don't think it was actually at that particular interview, maybe it was subsequent, that there was a promotional video of one of the camps or something.

After the coaching session at which he watched you coach how long was it before you learned whether or not you had got the job? - He actually told/told me that night.

Did you get the job? - Yes.

Where was it you went for the session? - Alloa High School.

Had you actually on the night of your interview been to a different high school with him or was it the same night you had.....? - It was the same night.

It wasn't Dunblane High School you went to? - No, it wasn't Dunblane.

That particular night, the first night when you were being checked out by him, how many children were present? - Between 20, 25.

What were they doing? - There was actually two sessions and the first hour was younger kids and the second hour was older kids and it was playing football they were actually doing.

So the total number over two hours was 25? - It was about 40 kids.

Was it over all different ranges? - Between, I can't remember the actual age, between maybe eight and 12.

Over the whole piece? - Yes.

Was there anything structured about these sessions?
- Looking back on it it was like as if they were just playing football and that was it, there wasn't much of a coaching element to it which I was quite disappointed with.

Anything odd about the set up? - One thing I would say is that generally when I take the kids there were bibs to distinguish between the two teams, one would wear bibs and the other would have on their tops but what he would do would be one team would have their tops on and one team would have their tops off, that was the only difference I would have said.

Have you been at any football session he was running where both teams had their tops off? - I/

I don't think so.

Thinking back to the first session you were aware he was checking out what you did, can you remember whether or not both sets of teams had their tops off on that occasion? - I can't say either way but I don't think so.

The statement I think you originally gave to the police indicates that was the position? - Probably it was actually half the boys would have their tops off.

Now, when did the camp take place? - The 1st or 2nd of July to maybe the 14th, it was a two week period.

Were some kids there for the whole fortnight? - No, some kids were there for the first week and some kids actually stayed for two weeks.

Between your interview and the camp did you go to any of the clubs? - Yes, I worked sometimes at, I think it may have been the Wednesday night, at Alloa High School.

Anywhere else? - I think I was at Dunblane once.

Did you get paid for these visits? - Yes.

Were you at Falkirk at all? - No, not at that time.....yes, I probably would have been.

Which premises was it at Falkirk? - Grahams High School.

Were you at Bannockburn at all in that period? - Yes.

How much did you get paid when you took the club for him? - Generally it was £7 an hour and then it went up to £10 an hour.

Was he there at the same time? - Yes.

So talking now about the period between your interview and the camp was there any difference in the activities at these club nights from the original/original night when you were interviewed? - I don't think so, no.

Any gymnastics? - I believe at the times when he actually had his photography equipment with him that would be the only difference and also gymnastics as well, as you said.

He did gymnastics? - Yes.

He conducted that, did he? - Yes, generally he conducted that.

Did he take photographs of that? - Not of the gymnastics, it would be group pictures.

Is that a group having played football or groups having done gymnastics? - Generally it would be like at the end of the night the kids had been playing football or had been doing gymnastics and obviously the groups were there and he took a group picture of them.

Did he have much elaborate equipment for that? - Yes, I would say so.

Do you know anything about photographic equipment? - No.

Did he simply take snaps like you might do on a holiday or was it more elaborate than that? - It was like he was structuring them, the composition, he would have kids kneeling at the front and kids standing at the back.

Did he have a tripod to put the camera on? - Yes.

Was there a video camera on these occasions? - No.

On any of these occasions did he tell you why he was taking the photographs? - He said he would sometimes actually sell the pictures to the kids' parents.

Now, at the Dunblane camp how many supervisors were there? - There was actually only myself and Mr. Hamilton.

How/

How many children? - About between 16 and 20.

Were they all staying? - Yes -- I tell a lie, actually there was one kid who came on a daily basis.

Did you expect more than that? - I actually did, yes.

But not everyone that might have come turned up? - Well, I wasn't involved in the bookings of the kids; from the way he was talking it was as if there would be quite a lot of kids.

Now, you stayed throughout the period? - I had two days off.

What were the sleeping arrangements? - It was quite surprising because I thought there would be accommodation, separate accommodation for most of the staff and the kids and maybe a room for the kids but it was actually a commonroom area; the kids would be sleeping on sofa seats and some kids were on the floor in sleeping bags which I found quite strange.

What about you and Hamilton? - We would be in the same room on soft seats.

What were the activities of the camp, was there some routine to them? - The routine, he had a particular routine where, like, the kids would get up maybe eight, half past eight in the morning for breakfast and then go straight into the gym, do gymnastics, football, a variety of sports and then maybe between 12 and one have lunch and then after lunch they would do sports again; the work was quite taxing for the kids, it wasn't particularly fair to them because they were being exercised to excess and it was too much I thought and I aired my views, I told him I didn't think it was right that the kids should be constantly working in the gym doing sports, they should have some time off to watch television and towards the end of the camp it became a bit more relaxed, he let the kids have a long lie until about 9 o'clock, watch TV for half an hour so it eventually was a bit more relaxed.

You have told us about the morning and afternoon; / afternoon; what about the evening? - It was sometimes varied, they would consist of sports as well so the kids were doing between probably six and eight hours sports a day which is too much.

What age were these children? - Between eight and 12.

Can you tell me anything about Hamilton's general teaching methods? - I would say that his methods were out-dated and it was very disciplined, he used his authority to tell the kids what to do, sometimes shouted at them; also he was into, like, maybe taking the kids for circuit training which I thought was a bit extreme; he asked me to take the kids circuit training and I said no because kids of that age shouldn't be doing that at all.

Did the children enjoy these camps? - I think it was actually mixed, it was some kids did and some didn't.

Was there anything odd about the clothing arrangements? - Yes, when the kids were doing their gymnastics they would be in black shorts, swimming trunks, which I thought was a bit strange; when I asked him with him taking pictures of them doing gymnastics, something to do with a physical education magazine was interested in pictures of this; I thought it was a bit strange.

You are doing a course that involves, I take it, studying how to undertake activities of this nature? - Yes.

Did you see any place in the type of gymnastic activities with these youngsters that Hamilton was undertaking for them dressing in short black swimming trunks? - He would say that it was the purpose of catching them when they were vaulting; I would say that a kid is more liable to get injured when they don't have their clothes on; if the kids don't have their clothes on and they hit the floor they may hurt themselves.

Have you seen in your studies any examples of people running gymnastic classes with youngsters of this age where the children are required to wear swimming trunks? - No, I haven't.

After/

1.50 p.m.

After an adjournment for lunch.

I was asking you some questions about dress at the camps. Can you tell me how frequently in the course of the fortnight you were there the children were expected just to wear black swimming trunks? - Generally every day, maybe every -- if they were doing gymnastics, say an hour at a time.

If the children weren't wearing these trunks would they normally be wearing a shirt of some kind? - Yes, normally wear their sports stuff, either shorts and a top or a tracksuit bottom and top.

Did they normally have a top on when they weren't doing gymnastics? - Depends. Sometimes they would be outside, it was quite warm, and sometimes some kinds will take their tops off.

Was there anything about Hamilton's behaviour when coaching or helping children with any of the work they were doing that you were concerned about? - He was quite -- he was like -- he pushed them quite hard. Some of the exercises he was trying to get them to do were in my opinion too strenuous. Just simple things like maybe even simple press-ups. He had them doing gymnastics and they were doing like inverted crosses, and that's quite a tough thing to do. I am pretty sure Mr. Hamilton himself couldn't have done it; why should he expect the kids to do it.

Did you intercede on the part of the children at all? - Yes. Sometimes I would say when the kids were training, I would say to Mr. Hamilton, "Look, give them a break" or "Don't do this". I knew what it was going to be like and so I would say, "I think that this is a bit over-strenuous for them".

Was there anything about his approach to them physically that caused you any concern? - No.

What was his attitude to children who couldn't perhaps touch their toes? - He liked kids/kids being quite physical. If they weren't particularly good he would tell them, he said, he would tell them to work harder.

Did he touch them very much? - Depends. If it was gymnastics, if you were going to coach or catch there is a certain degree of contact, but none over the top or anything like that.

Did he take many photographs in the fortnight? - Yes. This -- I was very surprised at the amount of pictures he took, particularly it seemed to be always at gymnastics.

All with the still photographs? - Some of them were action pictures.

But not videos? - No.

Were these largely when the children were wearing swimming trunks? - Yes, generally, yes.

What about the catering arrangements. Were you well fed? - We were well fed, yes, I would have to say. It was very basic food but the kids seemed to sort of like it.

Did you ever ask Mr. Hamilton about how he financed all his activities? - He said that -- do you mean particularly this camp itself?

And the clubs? - What he said was he actually got free lets from Central Region so therefore it didn't cost him for the schools and that.

Did he mention anything about getting assistance from anyone to get these lets? - Councillor Ball.

What did he say about Councillor Ball? - He said he was a friend of him, he generally did assist him getting lets for any school he wished.

After this camp was over did you continue to assist Mr. Hamilton? - Well, once the camp was over obviously it was during the school holidays so therefore the schools and stuff were closed. I never heard from him until maybe August/September of that year, and he would phone me up and ask would I maybe/maybe perhaps like to come up and do some coaching, and that was quite -- maybe about a month later it would be.

During that period in late 1974 were you aware of any clubs folding? - I never actually knew anything about how many clubs he was running therefore I couldn't really be definite and say i.e. clubs did fold.

Were there any clubs that didn't seem to take place in late 1994? - Yes, the Alloa Club, and I once went to a club in Alva, and that was a Sunday morning. He told me that club was quite busy the first couple of weeks and he was needing some help so I went up. There was actually only about eight kids which was quite surprising to see that, so therefore I was never out at that one.

Did that club come to an end? - Yes.

When eventually? - I don't actually know obviously because I wasn't involved in the running of it but I assume yes.

Did the Alloa one come to an end? - Alloa one, I think he only had the let up until when the schools closed. I don't know if he renewed the let, I don't think he did, therefore the club wasn't on after the camp.

So between September when the schools are back and December did you assist him? - I occasionally worked for him.

Where? - He had a club in Grahams High School, Falkirk, and sometimes in Dunblane on a Thursday night.

Did you get properly paid for the fortnight's camp you did? - Well, I had actually to check my bank records on the camp and I checked actually, and the cheque I was actually paid actually bounced. I put it into the bank because I am actually a student myself, so when the cheque bounced itself, so I was straight on the phone again because I had been charged with my bank and I said, "Look, the cheque has bounced". He said, "Look, I am very sorry about it". I actually went to the bank twice and it bounced twice.

Was/

Was it eventually paid? - Eventually, yes.

How much was it for? - £280. Originally it was supposed to be £250.

In September and December were you being paid for temporarily assisting him? - Yes, depending on the nights of the week.

In December I think you brought your relationship to an end? - Yes, because like, the only reason I had -- you might think it strange because I was at Dumbarton and I was travelling away up to Stirling, but the only reason I came to Stirling was my girlfriend at the time was at Stirling University so therefore I had a contact within Stirling, so it was quite convenient for me to work in Stirling.

What was your reason for bringing it to an end? - Well, sometimes he would maybe have me pick him up outside his house and he would have his camera stuff, equipment with him, and I felt that I was getting like a taxi service rather than a sports coach.

It wasn't concern over what he was doing at the clubs that made this end? - No.

When did you next hear from him? - It must have been -- well, after I said I wasn't coming to work for him he kept on phoning to say are you coming up and I said "No." It would be maybe May time.

What was the purpose of him contacting you then? - That was because he was looking for somebody for a sports camp in summer 1995, and he was actually asking myself whether I would be willing to work with him for two weeks.

Did you agree to that? - No, I just felt like it was only two weeks work, and I was unemployed and obviously the school period is over six weeks, so I was hoping to gain further employment.

Was it knowing about the previous year's camp that was influencing your view? - Well, to a certain/certain extent. I never particularly liked the fact the kids had to do so much strenuous work. The sleeping arrangements weren't particularly good as I previously mentioned.

Did he do anything to try to persuade you? - He increased the amount of money that I was going to work for.

To what? - I think it was £300.

In fact, you didn't take that job? - That's right.

You had another job? - That's right.

What was that? - It was actually by Mr. Hamilton I actually gained that employment. It was at the International School teaching Spanish kids sports.

Where was that? - Queen Victoria School.

Was that a longer period than two weeks? - It was for four weeks. I gained that employment because Mr. Hamilton had gave my number on to somebody else.

Well, you were at that training....? - It was a school.

While you were there did you go to Dunblane High School Club at all? - Yes. He phoned me up a couple of times saying "Why don't you come down and see" -- some of the boys who had been at the previous camp were actually there in 1995 and he said "Why don't you come down and see how they are getting on".

Did you go? - I went down three times.

Did Mr. Hamilton have any assistance at the camp? - Yes, he had one qualified teacher and two other students.

Did you see them there? - Yes.

Did they know what they were doing, or appear to know what they were doing? - Yes. It was just virtually similar to exactly why I was there, / there, i.e., while the kids were doing gymnastics, and they were in their trunks once again.

How many kids were there? - I estimate 25/28.

So it was bigger than the year before? - Yes.

On one of the visits you were there did you come across a child who was upset? - Yes. There was a kid in a corner crying. I asked him -- no, I never asked the kid directly -- I asked what was wrong with the kid and they said that he was homesick and he was upset. It was just he was homesick and therefore he was in a corner crying. I thought it was a bit harsh and when talking to him.....

Did he say whether he had run away? - Yes, I think he did. He said maybe two boys had run away the previous night and he said they came back and their parents had been notified. The parents seemed quite happy to have the kids continue.

Were the children wearing black swimming trunks again? - On the occasions I was there I was doing gymnastics, yes, and they were in their swimming trunks.

Generally speaking at that camp did the children appear to you to be happy or unhappy? - I don't think they enjoyed the gymnastics; I think they found that quite hard work. On the whole they seemed -- no, I never really had that much contact at the time. They seemed okay, yes.

What about the people who were working with them this time? Was he getting on with them? - He said he had a couple of problems with them because, in particular the school teacher, because I didn't think they were particularly impressed by his teaching methods, i.e. kids being in trunks, the same as I thought myself, a bit strange.

Were there any photographs taken on any of your visits? - He did take several when I went, yes. There was a picture taken, a group picture outside.

How/

How were the kids dressed for that? - They were wearing swimming trunks. The staff were in the same picture with him.

I think you next became directly involved with him in September, 1995? - Yes, that is right.

He contacted you again? - He contacted me just asking me obviously -- he was saying he was actually thinking about expanding his clubs as an organisation up to the Edinburgh area and round about the Glasgow area.

Whereabouts in Glasgow is that to be? - It was -- he looked at a couple of places like Milngavie and Bishopbriggs and eventually Bishopbriggs.

Were you willing to help on this occasion? - Well, when I was at the camp he said I would be running the club myself. The way I would see it, I had to organise it myself and he wouldn't be there. Subsequently he was there every week.

Did he interfere with your organisation? - I was annoyed with the fact he was there "No, you run this club the way you see fit".

Were you not allowed to run it in your own way? - Obviously his teaching methods are different from mine. You know, as I say, he had the kids with their tops off where I like to have kids wearing bibs like sports bibs.

Is that on top of a tee shirt? - Yes.

Was he insisting you follow his code rather than yours? - It was quite convenient because we actually had two gyms eventually. I was working in one gym myself so I could do coaching the way I seen fit, and he would have a group in the gym.

What did he do? - It was generally football. I did a lot of football and basketball coaching but he seemed to just let them play football.

Were you aware he was distributing leaflets/leaflets advertising his club? - Yes, that is right. I never actually knew until he actually -- the first night in the actual club I never knew that my name had been distributed. There were leaflets there, I was the club coach of the boys' club. I was a bit annoyed because it had my phone number and stuff.

Did you see any of these leaflets? - He eventually posted me one.

Could you look at S BOAL/6 which is also D8 in Volume J(iv)? - Yes, that is it.

Has that got your name in it? - Yes.

What does it say about you? - It says here "Club coach, Mr. Ian Boal". It says, "CV available on request", and also my address.

Would you also look at DSRC/ES3 which is D4 in J(iv). Look at the top of the page. You will see this is an application form for the let of James Muir High School. Does that have your name on it? - Yes. I never actually knew about that until the police said that.

It is relating to a period when you were actually coaching at James Muir High School in Bishopbriggs? - Yes.

You actually knew nothing about your name being on the document? - Yes.

It gave you a position, did it not? - Yes, if I can remember, Secretary of the club or something like that.

Do/

Do you remember the document also had a list of Committee members on it? - Yes. Well, he told me there was a Committee for his clubs.

Did you ever meet the Committee? - Never.

Did you ever meet any of the people whose names are on that form? - No.

I don't know if you have got the form yet or not. Do you see your name there as the secretary? - Yes.

Does it also list the names of the Committee members? - That is right, yes.

Could you read them out please? - Mr. D. McDonald, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew, Mr. and Mrs. Hoggan, Mrs. Munro, Mr. K. Barker, Mr. and Mrs. Hall, Mr. I. Boal, Mr. T.W. Hamilton and Mrs. A. Watt.

He told you there was a Committee and you didn't realise you were on it? - Yes.

Now, when this club in Thomas Muir High School started up was it well attended? - The first couple of weeks we had I think it was 68 kids.

Were you able to cope with that? - We actually only had one sports hall.

Do you remember a waiting list at any time? - Yes, I remember the stuff, there was going to be a waiting list, so I think he was actually writing to the kids or their parents.

Did that club run right up until the incident at Dunblane? - That's right, yes.

Were you involved in that right up until the end? - That is right.

Were you also involved in running any other club during 1995 into 1996? - Occasionally Bishopbriggs would go up to Dunblane High School on a Thursday night. He had got a minibus or something from Central Region, and he would go up, pick up the kids from Bishopbriggs Club, /

Club, and sometimes when they were up there I would go up obviously as I was a coach.

Was it on a Bishopbriggs night? - No, that was a Thursday night.

This is an extra night? - Yes.

Were you also coach of any other sports clubs he had? - Occasionally I would go up to the Dunblane Club when I think it was Bannockburn were the kids that were there.

What about Graham's High School, was it still going on? - No.

Were there any other clubs where the boys were moved from one area to another to make up the numbers at another club? - I think -- I wasn't involved in shifting kids from place to place, but I think actually he did take kids from maybe Callander, maybe that area, up to Stirling.

Were any photographs taken at Bishopbriggs? - No.

So at the time the Bishopbriggs Club starts up his camera equipment disappeared? - Yes. It was quite strange like because he used always to talk about cameras, what he made out of it like, taking pictures of families, various events, the assignments he had, and he seemed to be quite happily involved in cameras and stuff, how he used to buy and sell cameras and just equipment in general.

What took over as the subject of conversation with him? - His guns.

When did the guns first come into the conversation? - The earliest recollection I have of his involvement in guns -- he said at the summer camp that he did have guns but he hadn't been using them, it was just an old hobby or something and the new hobby was photography. So he actually never spoke much about guns, so the earliest was maybe round about just before Christmastime he started talking about how he was heavily involved in using guns and stuff.

From/

From then until March was that the type of conversation? - Yes. He used to annoy me in a sense because I was busy coaching and when I was coaching usually he would stand at my shoulder, next to my shoulder, talking about his guns hobby, various things which, being honest, I didn't have any interest in guns, so it was pretty boring.

Now, when was the last time you met him? - The last time I met him was the Monday previous to the incident.

Was that at Thomas Muir High School in Bishopbriggs? - Yes.

How did he seem that night? - He was talking about guns as per usual. He also -- I can remember his last words, and he just -- I took him down to train station and he just said, "Thanks very much, Ian, see you next Monday". Again, it was just like a normal Monday.

Was there any discussion about bullets in the course of that evening? - It was quite strange because like maybe three or four weeks before he kept talking about guns, bullets, like where he had been shooting. I think he had been shooting on the Wednesday before, the week prior to the shooting he had been shooting, out at actually at the club or something shooting, and how he got a new gun, and also about bullets, what certain bullets could do.

Do you remember any detail about that? - It was something of hindsight, I mean, but it was something that was quite strange because like he used to talk about the spray of a bullet. I don't know anything about ballistics at all but he would be talking about what bullets could do, sprays like, it hit someone and disintegrates in a sense rather than exiting right through, and how he was testing out bullets to see which were the best, to prevent jamming of his cartridge guns.

Did he say what size of gun he preferred and what size of ammunition? - Was it 9 millimetres or something.

In your statement to the police you told them he also used 9 millimetre bullets because they did/did not have a tendency to jam as frequently? - Yes.

Do you remember that being said to you? - Yes.

Did he say anything about the tip or head of the bullets at all? - He says depending on the type of head -- well, it would depend what bullets you actually had, with the spray and stuff. He also said he had been testing bullets to see which were best. When I say tested -- I found this quite strange he actually did this, he would go to the target range in the club and shoot at books and he would see the spray of the bullet going through the thickness. Say the book was maybe this thick, he could actually see where the bullets went through and what it did to the book. Obviously if it sprayed it would go out wide, and he was doing -- he also said he experimented with alcohol and the effects of alcohol upon his shooting, although he said he never actually drank.

Do you know from your own experience he didn't drink? - Yes. He told me he never drank.

Did you ever see him drink alcohol? - No.

What did he say he was experimenting with it for?
- He said he would -- he only did it once -- again this annoyed me because you are obviously working with kids and he was telling me this and, being honest, I wasn't really listening to him. He said he did take a couple of drinks and then go up to the range to see how accurate his shooting had been from this. I said to him "How accurate was it?" and he said "It wasn't particularly very accurate", it wasn't particularly good for him.

Did he say anything about how well the bullets penetrated? - Yes. He talked about bullets and actually -- was this 30 centimetres or 30 inches or something and it would go, the words were, through someone.

How many kids were there on the Monday night? -
On the Monday before, about 20 I think.

When/

When you drove Hamilton to the station that evening was there any conversation about film? - Yes. He offered me -- which was quite strange -- a copy of Aliens video, which I thought quite strange. I said No. He said to me "I have just got it today" or something, and he said, "I have got it in my pocket". I thought that a bit strange.

Did he mention any other video? - The Terminators.

Did he say why he liked the two videos? - He liked them because of the guns.

Was that a reference to one or both videos? - Both of them.

Did he ever involve any of the children in conversations about guns or bullets? - I never found this out until I was actually speaking to the kids and I said to them, "What was Mr. Hamilton talking to you about" and they said -- the kids had said he had been talking about looking at the largest thing he had shot. This was a sort of joke, his type of joke, and it was he had shot a moose, and the kids thought it was a mouse, so he thought it was funny. I thought it was a bit strange, talking to kids about guns.

Did he ever show the children anything? - I don't think he actually showed the children but he actually -- I think he did because he actually had like a flier -- not a flier, a catalogue of bullets -- I never knew there was such things -- and it was a catalogue for types of bullets. There was a picture of a moose on the front of it and he was saying this is what I shot, this is what a moose looks like, not a mouse. I said to him like, "I do not think -- you shouldn't really be talking to kids about guns. You don't want like to influence the kids".

Did you get any reaction to that? - He went like "Ach, it's okay, kids play soldiers all the time".

Did he ever write to you? - Yes.

How/

How often? - Generally it would happen if I was working for him, he would send me a cheque, and the last letters I received were on headed notepaper up until round about Christmas time and I noticed most of the correspondence never had headed notepaper. Also they never had anything to do with photography. They weren't personal letters but they were more of you contacted to work for eight weeks. In January I received a letter from him because one of the nights at the camp -- not the camp, the club -- one of the boys had been, they were not to kick the ball above head height, so this boy had hit the ball into the roof and just missed the lights. I shouted at him -- his name was David -- "David, watch what you are doing". At the time Mr. Hamilton sort of looked at me but never said anything. During the week -- I think it was the Thursday -- I received a letter saying how my teaching method was completely wrong, my attitude was terrible, and I had -- I don't mean that it was threatening or such, it was what are you doing wrong.

He had been there when this happened? - Yes.

He didn't speak to you about it? - No, he didn't speak to me about it.

Did you intend to carry on working with him? - Well, I was quite annoyed at this letter, so what happened was I waited until the Monday night after I received the letter and told him on the Monday night I was going to see out my contract which was up until just before Easter because I wasn't going to put up with hassle he was giving me through writing a letter like that to me.

When were you going to work to? - It would have been Easter time, the Monday before Easter, when the schools finished.

Had you got paid up to then? - I was paid up to then.

At any time in any conversation with him did Mr. Hamilton ever mention Dunblane Primary School? - No.

When you last saw him did he seem any different from the way he had been on the nights, the/

the Monday or two beforehand? - No, just like talking about his guns again, therefore for the four week period leading up to it he was more so talking about guns, where he had been shooting and stuff which to me, it looked as though it was just a hobby he had.

Any change in his personality you could detect even looking at him? - He was very -- his personality was very dry. He wasn't the most interesting person to have a conversation with.

Did that change? - It never changed.

In the time immediately before this incident at Dunblane? - No.

Effectively did you notice any significant change in him as a person apart from conversations dealing with guns? - No.

No cross-examination.

IAN/

2.30 p.m.

IAN COLLIE (62), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: I was the Director of Education for Central Region.

Do you in fact live in Dunblane? - I do.

Have you now retired? - Yes.

When did you retire from the position as Director of Education in Central Region? - In April, 1994.

When did you take up that post? - I was appointed in 1974, and took up post following when the Region came into being in May, 1975.

What were the responsibilities you had as Director of Education? - I was responsible to the Education Committee of the Regional Council for the administration of the educational services within the responsibility of Education Authority.

Now, I am going to ask you questions about a certain phase of your work during which you were assisted in the areas I am going to ask you about by a man called William Ross. What position did he hold? - Mr. Ross was initially Assistant Direction of Education, subsequently became Junior Depute Director of Education. He was third in seniority within the Education Department Directorship.

I think he is now deceased? - Yes.

I think the starting point for the issues I wish to raise with you is in a folder of productions which we have, which is the first folder in the J(i) productions, and I will be dealing with a number of these. The first document I want you to look at is DCRC/AL/B2, which is D1/J(i). Do you see that document? - I do.

You will see that is a memo to you from one of your staff in the Regional Youth & Community Department? - Yes.

And/

And this is confirming to you that Mr. Hamilton, that is T.W. Hamilton, Principal Leader of the Dunblane Rovers Group, has an official let of Dunblane High School gymnasium? - Yes.

Now, can you confirm for me the date of that? - 27th October, 1981.

Prior to this had you heard of Mr. Hamilton? - No.

Why were you being notified? - I had received an enquiry from the local councillor about Mr. Hamilton. As I recall, she had received concerns from constituents and wished me to investigate.

That would be Councillor Davidson? - Yes.

Now, it may be best to set the scene by asking you if you would read out the second paragraph onwards, which is relating to information from a person called Jim Gardiner. Who was he? - He was an officer in the Youth & Community Service, based in Dunblane.

Can you read out from the second paragraph? - "The information from Mr. Gardiner is that the group consists of approximately 20 boys who apparently attend with the consent and knowledge of the parents, as Mr. Hamilton makes a point of visiting the homes. They undertake 'Scout type' activities, including camping, and wear a uniform.

"We would certainly not employ Mr. Hamilton, as Mr. Gardiner is not entirely happy with his approach to youth work and has an unconfirmed suspicion that his motives are questionable, although it must be said that no direct evidence of abnormal behaviour on Mr. Hamilton's part has come to the notice of Gardiner.

"I checked with the Scouts District Commissioner, Mr. Tom Mack, and he has confirmed that the group is not affiliated in any way to the Scout Movement. Mr. Hamilton it appears is the subject of a confidential report at national level which shows him to be totally undesirable in relation to working for the Scout Movement. The report is based on his homosexual tendencies, and he was, for obvious reasons, discreetly removed from the Scout Movement. "I trust the above is helpful with your enquiry from Councillor/Councillor Mrs. Davidson".

In the first paragraph it is explained that this information about an official let of Dunblane High School gymnasium has been processed through normal channels, and the "normal channels" referred to include the source of your information, Mr. Gardiner. Is that just coincidence? - Yes.

So purely because of his coincidental involvement, evidence of a sensitive nature has come into the possession of the authority, and is directed to you? - Yes. Coincidental in the sense that he was the Youth & Community officer in Dunblane and had been involved the let.

Do you know whether at that time there was any formal procedure involved before a let was agreed to, in the sense of either interviewing someone before they complete the form? - They would have had to complete a form. I can't recall whether it was a necessity to conduct any interviews; that would be doubtful.

At that stage did the School Council have any responsibility for agreeing to the let of the gymnasium? - They had responsibilities for the school accommodation, and that would include the gymnasium. The position is slightly complicated, in that it was also a community centre, and that is where Mr. Gardiner was involved. But in terms of a gymnasium, the School Council had a formal responsibility.

How was the School Council constituted? - The School Council was made up by representatives of the secondary schools and the associated primary schools, and one of its functions was the letting of accommodation.

Did this change with the re-organisation of local government? - It changed in that School Boards were set up, and they assumed responsibility for the letting of accommodation.

Did School Boards have any direct responsibilities in relation to lettings, or were the responsibilities they had -- were they largely acted upon by staff employed by the Regional Authority? - The School Boards carried the formal/formal responsibility, but in terms of the routine, that routine would be carried out by staff.

So we will see the signatures of permanent staff approving lets on behalf of the School Board? - I would expect so.

If that happened, would it be the School Board who makes the decision or would it be a member of staff who had delegated powers who would do it? - It would be the member of staff, but there would be a requirement to report to the School Board, in cases of doubt, presumably in consultation with the Chairman, and if necessary in such circumstances ask for a decision from the School Board.

Can we look at D2? That is your letter to the Director of Administration and Legal Services of the authority; is that right? - Yes, that is correct.

And you are explaining the information you have puts you in some difficulty in knowing what to do about this kind of case. You then say "It would I suppose be possible to cancel the let or to refuse any further let, but the Education Authority might be in difficulties in specifying reasons"; is that right? - Yes.

Then D3 is a letter from the Dunblane Rover Group, signed by Hamilton, dated 2nd November, 1981? - Yes.

I take it that is in response to your enquiry to him to provide information about the group? - Yes.

Did you make that enquiry following the concern that was expressed in these earlier letters? - Yes.

I think if we look at D4 we have you in the light of that writing to the Director of Administration again, saying there was nothing on the surface which may be legitimately queried by the Education Authority; is that correct? - Yes.

In D5 we have a letter to Mr. Hamilton from the Regional Youth & Community Organiser, dealing with the queries he has raised in that earlier/earlier letter about registration -- in fact it must have been in another letter, but he has raised a query about registration, and if you go to the second paragraph you see what that query was? - Yes.

Now, so far as your authority is concerned, what did registration mean, when a youth group was registered? - We didn't have a scheme of registration of groups, as that letter says. My assumption is that Mr. Hamilton had enquired whether he might receive such registration, which would allow him accordingly I assume to state to parents that he had the approval of the Region for his activities.

But in fact what you did do was recognise groups by providing financial assistance in terms of free letting, and the like? - Yes.

But there is no other formal register of approved groups? - No.

I think that letter is two years after the earlier correspondence, the 26th April, 1983; is that right? - Yes.

Could I now ask you to look at a handwritten Minute of one of your Committees, the Further Education & General Purposes Committee -- this is document D7 -- of 15th August, 1983? - Yes.

Did you attend that meeting? - Yes.

What was the subject of part of the meeting that we see minuted? - Mr. Ross, who was named in the Minute, the then Junior Depute Director of Education, had come to me very concerned about complaints and allegations he had received about the Dunblane Rover Group and specifically about Mr. Hamilton. We were considering the action to take. I decided it would be appropriate to report this matter to the Further Education Sub-Committee.

Yes? - I think Mr. Ross sets out in the earlier part of this confidential part of the Minute what the complaints were, and he mentions complaints from parents and head teachers who were confused over the title and thought he was acting on behalf/behalf of the Scout Movement.

And several parents had complained about lack of administration, and there was an example of an outing to Loch Lomond in which a child had got an axe in his leg, and another child had been sent on a boat to Luss to take him to hospital? - Yes.

We have already heard evidence at the Inquiry about this. There is then a discussion among the various councillors about some of their own personal knowledge of him and their views as to what might be done. What was the upshot of that meeting? - The upshot of the meeting was that the Committee decided to cancel the let to Mr. Hamilton and therefore to the Dunblane Rover Group.

In the third page of the Minute we note that in one group he had tried to set up in Bannockburn 300 children turned up on the first night? - Yes.

Then Mr. Ross said that head teachers had all now withdrawn support? - Yes.

So the decision is to terminate the let? - Yes.

Can you tell us the reasons which are quoted at the end of the Minute? - "Councillor Anderson. First of all complaints from parents misled into thinking that this was a Scout group, the teachers also gave support on that basis, and this is now withdrawn. Secondly, the man claims the support of the Education Authority, which he does not have. For these two reasons" -- I am sorry, the next bit is missing.

I think we can take it it says "the let was terminated"; is that right? - Yes.

I think if we look at the printed Minute, which follows, which is D8, that is the actual recommendation of your Sub-Committee, it says "The Sub-Committee noted the terms of the Report and recommended that the organisation be not granted any lets of educational premises in the future"; is that right? - Yes.

So that was the decision at that stage? - Yes./

- Yes.

Now, could I ask you to look at D13, which we see is a letter of the 7th October, 1983 from the Assistant Director of Education telling Hamilton that his let at Dunblane High School was to be terminated forthwith? - Yes.

If we then look at D15, do we see that this is a complaint by Mr. Hamilton to the Ombudsman? - Yes.

What was the complaint? - He says "Possible mal-administration. Briefly in that the Council may have acted upon malicious gossip and unfounded allegations without investigation".

I think he goes on in the next paragraph.....? - "I may have been slandered by officials to councillors, resulting in the loss of let of Dunblane High School to boys' club".

And the date of that complaint? - Monday, 10th October, 1983.

I think if we then go to D16, we see that is a letter from the Dunblane Rover Group to you? - Yes.

Is that challenging the decision of the Committee?
- Yes.

Can you read out the last two paragraphs of that, please? - "If after nine years of Rovers we are not formerly recognised, please inform me what we have to do to become recognised. If there is any aspect of our activities that the Authority is not happy about please inform me so that steps can be taken to satisfy you.

"We have 70 boys in our group who are all very enthusiastic and anxious to continue with their training and activities at Dunblane High School subject to your approval. On behalf of the boys, parents, Committee and leaders I respectfully request that the immediate reinstatement of our let".

I think in the earlier paragraph he had said he had not been consulted about any complaints, and he wanted to know the names of the complainers, because/because he had not been given an opportunity to answer or to challenge them? - That is correct.

Is that correct, that he was never told who was complaining about him? - Yes. We had nothing in writing, no piece of hard evidence against him.

I think these are exactly your words in D18, a letter of 19th October, 1983, again to the Director of Administration, and in the second paragraph you say "You will recall that in reporting to the Further Education Sub-Committee about the matter, Mr. W. Ross, Junior Depute Director of Education, indicated that there had been complaints made but there was no formal complaint in writing and not one single hard piece of evidence which could be quoted as the reason for discontinuing the let. Nevertheless, the Committee decided that the let should be cancelled at the first opportunity"? - Yes.

If we now go on to the next item in correspondence, D19, do we see that is a letter dated 25th October, 1983, from one of your councillors? - Yes.

Councillor Ball was the councillor in question. Was he at that time a Regional Councillor? - Yes.

Was he on any Education Committee? - As far as I can recall he would have been on the Committee. My recollection is that all councillors were on the Education Committee at that point. I don't think he was on the Further Education Sub-Committee.

Do you know in what capacity he wrote to you? - He was Mr. Hamilton's local councillor.

I think he was concerned that the decision which Hamilton was questioning had been a breach of natural justice, in that no formal complaints were brought against the running of the group? - Yes.

And Mr. Hamilton was not given an opportunity of replying to such complaints? - Yes.

I/

I think he said "It would seem to me the company could be accused of acting unreasonably in cancelling the let that an organisation has held for five years without giving any reasons"?
- Yes.

I think he also says in the second paragraph that Mr. Hamilton does not seem to run this organisation alone, but has a number of other workers, one of whom is in fact a physical education teacher employed by Central Region? - Yes.

Do you know if that was established to be true? -
Not to my recollection. I don't really know from memory.

Now/

2.50 p.m.

Now, can I ask you to go ahead a little to D21 and do you have there a whole series of letters, 22 in total, all dated around the end of October, the beginning of November 1983? - Yes.

Do you remember these letters? - I remember their receipt, yes.

Now, can you tell us in general terms the substance of them? - The substance of the letters were that they supported Mr. Hamilton and his efforts to have the let reinstated.

Now, I know there is the odd one which is typewritten and simply has the handwritten signature but can you confirm that the majority are actually fully handwritten? - Yes.

And they all look as if they are in different handwriting? - Yes.

I take it that the Council treated these as genuine letters? - Yes.

Can you also confirm to me that there was a petition with 70 signatures also supporting Hamilton? - Yes, there was a petition.

That was dated the 2nd of November, 1983; perhaps you could have DCRC ALB1F4, is that the petition addressed to the Director of Administration and Legal Services dated the 2nd of November, 1983? - Yes.

And the last words in the petition are "We are all proud to have Mr. Hamilton in charge of our boys; he has a most activated, excellent quality of leadership and integrity and absolutely devoted to his lads; above all he cares, yours faithfully, the parents"? - Yes.

And the whole list of 70 signatures? - Yes.

Did this prompt any further consideration of his let by the Regional Council? - Yes, a further Education Sub-Committee considered an appeal from Mr. Hamilton supported by this document to which/which you have referred, the appeal against the decision to terminate the let.

That gave rise to a very long debate on the 7th of November, 1983, if you look at D23? - Yes.

Were you present at that meeting? - Yes.

There was this time not unanimity? - That is correct, as I recall there were some opinions that in the absence of hard evidence the decision, the original decision, might be reconsidered.

But there was still a majority view that the Council was right to sup with a long spoon with Mr. Hamilton? - Yes.

If you look at D24 do we see there the actual decision that was made? - Yes.

Now, what was the decision? - The decision was that the original decision should be reaffirmed.

There was an amendment to that which was out-voted by 10 votes to six? - Yes.

What was the amendment? - The amendment was that consideration of the matter be continued in order that members could meet with office bearers of the organisation to discuss the matter.

That was 10 votes to six? - Yes.

I see also that there were actually over 30 years actually received by the Council although we have only 22 of them here? - Yes.

Now, after that happened did Mr. Hamilton proceed with his complaints to the Ombudsman? - Yes, as I recall it.

Could you look at D36 now? - Yes.

Is that a letter from the Ombudsman's secretary to the Chief Executive of Central Region dated the 3rd of February, 1984? - Yes.

It/

It refers to the Commission having received a complaint from Hamilton which was referred to by Councillor, Dr. Ball? - Yes, that's right.

It is already asking the question what are the reasons for the decision which the Council has taken? - Yes.

Is that the approach that was made? - That was the approach, yes.

I think by this time the Council was already considering further whether they should discuss matters with Hamilton again, is that right? - Yes.

What gave rise to that? - In January I think it was a fresh application for a let was received from Mr. Hamilton this time in respect of a new club, the Dunblane Boys Club.

So the name had gone? - Yes, the name had gone.

That was part of the problem with the previous group? - Yes.

Now, would you look at D42? - Yes.

Which is the report to members I think for part of the meeting or one of the meetings of the Committee dated March, 1984? - Yes.

And is that reflecting just what you have told us, that further information was coming in about the new boys club? - Yes.

Is No. 43 the decision that was taken at the meeting on the 12th of March? - Yes.

What was that decision? - The decision was that consideration of the matter, that is to say the matter you have just referred to "Be deferred pending a discussion by the Commissioner for Local Authorities in Scotland in relation to a complaint which had been alleged alleging injustice caused by mal administration on the part of the Regional Council".

There/

There was an amendment against that application being granted but that was defeated by 15 votes to three? - Yes.

So the Council decided to await the outcome of the Ombudsman's investigations? - Yes.

Now, if we go to D52, do we have there the Ombudsman's report? - Yes.

And this is the official version of the report after the Council had had an opportunity I think to comment on the draft? - Yes.

Now, I think the Council was found to have acted wrongly and that the charge of mal administration advanced by Hamilton was upheld? - That is correct.

If you go to the last paragraph, No. 34, can you read the decision? - "I take the view that these criticisms of the Council's actions justify the complainant's charge of mal administration and that injustice has been caused to the group as a result. The Council have decided to defer a decision on offering a let to the re-constituted group pending the outcome of this investigation and they should now resume consideration of the matter. On the evidence available I see no reason why the Council should not now grant a let, but in any case I shall be unable to record that their future action is a satisfactory response to this finding of mal administration until I am convinced that they have made a decision on the basis of a proper examination of the relevant factors and only those".

Who was the Ombudsman? - A Mr. Eric Gillett.

The date of that report? - The 15th of November, 1984.

What was the Council's reaction to that? - The Council was most unhappy about the finding, it took the view that the Ombudsman had acted outwith his proper jurisdiction and made representation to that effect; they took the view that they did have authority to cancel the let if they so wished and if the matter had been properly debated within the procedures.

Eventually/

Eventually Hamilton got lets of Dunblane High School and other premises again but this is some time after this report, isn't it? - Yes, the Council also took the view that when the representations were not successful that they were obliged to grant the let but they were anxious, as I was, to build in safeguards in terms of the new application at Dunblane's Boys Club and in particular that there should be a constitution that there should be named adults forming a committee and I was anxious that Councillors should themselves meet face-to-face with these representatives of the club who could be therefore expected to take responsibility face-to-face with the Councillors for the activities of the club; that meeting did eventually take place in September 1985; Mr. Hamilton had, prior to receipt of this, had involved lawyers but eventually the meeting did take place.

If Mr. Hamilton had been true to form the meeting would have been on the 16th of November, 1984; can you tell me what difficulties you encountered in trying to arrange such a meeting? - The main difficulty was his reluctance and his insistence certainly at one point that he would be represented by his solicitor.

He wanted more than a solicitor at one time, didn't he; do you not remember him wanting Counsel and a shorthand writer as well? - Yes, I have to say I think that was the scene.

I think the Council agreed to someone attending the meeting with him? - They were not totally unhappy but they were insistent that he should.....the meeting should have the parents to whom I have referred, that was the principal anxiety.

Now, I know that you have told us the meat of this but I am afraid we can't leave this report without looking at it in a bit more detail; could you go back to the beginning of the Ombudsman's report and the beginning, I think paragraph one, reflects the complaints that the let was terminated without proper warning or explanation, the decision was taken on the basis of unsubstantiated allegations to which he was given no opportunity to reply, is that right? - Yes.

So/

So the Council's view that the Ombudsman had no jurisdiction is reflected in paragraph two? - Yes.

But that view of your Council was based on the Ombudsman being excluded from looking into the management of schools, was it? - Yes, I think at the end of the day that was the view and that was the effect of the matter in terms of his jurisdiction.

He decided he had jurisdiction and that was that? - Yes.

Does this reflect in paragraph four that at some award ceremony in October, 1981 there had been communication between an official of the Scouting Association and a Councillor and the subject of the communication between the Rover Group or lack of communication between the Rover Group and the Scout movement came up? - Yes.

And the Scout official expressed displeasure about that? - That is correct.

And it emerged that after inquiries information had come from the Scouts to the Council that Mr. Hamilton had been required to give up his activities some years before? - Yes.

Now, I think if you go to paragraph six we see that that was the end of the 1981 business and the group continued to use the facilities until 1983; you have said about correspondence also in 1983. Can I then ask you to go forward to paragraph 12 and I think the rest reflects what happened at the Council meetings and if you look a paragraph 12 can you read the beginning of that? - The "Y and C officer was asked to deal with the cancellation of the group's lets and he enquired of the Director of Administration and Legal Services what reasons he should give. He was informed that these would be the reasons reported to the sub-committee; but also that as the use of educational premises is a matter for the discretion of the authority there was no obligation other than a moral obligation to do so. On 7th of October the complainant was informed in writing that the let of education premises was given at the discretion of the Education Committee, and that the Committee had decided to terminate the group's/group's let of premises forthwith. No reasons were given".

Now, that reflects I think that if you are the owner of a property you have a right to refuse to allow someone to use it because you don't fancy them being there; you were not able to get away with that as a Regional Council; why is that? - Because the Ombudsman ruled against the Council.

Why, what tests was the Ombudsman applying to rule against the Council? - He took the view that there should have been substantive grounds of complaint upon which the Council were to act and, as you know, there had been no specific and certainly no written complaints against Mr. Hamilton.

If you look at paragraph 15 there the words about no single hard piece of evidence came back to haunt you? - Yes.

You see that on the fourth line? - Yes.

That was, I think, the view you had expressed and, of course, that is an important element in the Ombudsman's consideration of this case? - Yes, it was the truth.

There is then reference to intervention of the supporting parents and the letters and the petition and then if you go to paragraph 22, at the foot of page eight, could you read that? - "In the course of the investigation my officer asked the Y and C officer whether there had been any concern about lack of organisation on the part of the group over the years when they had had a lot of school premises or whether there had been any trouble over the use of school premises or equipment. The Y and C officer said that there had never been any indication or cause for concern either from parents or school janitors".

In think the enquiry also went into the incident where a boy was cut on the foot with an axe? - Yes.

And this is dealt with in the next paragraph? - Yes.

And/

And then at No. 26 we have the reflection of the argument, your Council's argument; can you tell us what that was by reading paragraph 26? - "The Authority have argued, however, that they did have material reasons for determining to discontinue the arrangement for use of the premises, examples being as follows -- (a) general concern by head teachers regarding the administrative arrangements of the group. (b) the quality of leadership of the group exemplified in paragraphs 8 and 23 of the draft report. (c) management difficulties caused in an educational establishment by the opening night at area B. (d) alleged improper circulation of notices to parents through primary schools".

These matters, the quality of leadership in paragraphs 8 and 23, part of that is also to do with the difficulty caused at area B at Bannockburn, which I mentioned.

Did/

Did the Council at the time they were considering the draft report adhere to the view that they did have a proper basis for refusing to continue with the let? - Yes, that is my recollection.

The last item mentioned there is the alleged improper circulation of notices to parents through primary schools. Was there any particular policy at that time about allowing circulation and advertising material through schools? - I don't recall that there was a policy document as such, but there was a long-standing practice, established well before the Region came into effect, that schools were not to be used as Post Boxes for organisations about whom the Council might have reservations. For example, schools were not to be used for the distribution of commercial or political material and the like, and that position was well understood by the head teachers.

Did head teachers have a discretion about allowing circulation of material he or she was happy with? - Yes, at a local level head teachers could be entrusted to take decisions.

We then have the Ombudsman's conclusions. Could you read the second sentence in paragraph 28? - Yes. "On the one hand they have a discretion whether to let the school premises, and a consequent duty to ensure that they are not let to unsuitable users; on the other hand they have a responsibility to deal fairly with all their constituents. I have borne both these factors in mind".

Did the Council accept that approach? - No, the Council felt they did have full discretion to let school premises.

Do we have here a subject which is a continuing sore point of Councils, in other words the extent of their discretion, or has this issue been resolved since 1984? - Yes, to my recollection it had not been resolved in 1994. Had the same position arisen prior to my retirement the same position would have prevailed. We would have borne the Ombudsman's ruling very much in mind.

I think the Ombudsman then goes on deal with the reasons adduced for terminating the let?/

let? - Yes.

And deals with the Council's position on this, which we have looked at? - Yes.

Then at paragraph 32 he says "On no occasion was the complainant given an opportunity to put his side of the case before the decision was taken, and even in regard to a decision which was at the discretion of the Council I consider this to be unfair, particularly as the termination of the let without reasons was bound to reflect on the group and the complainant"? - Yes.

Now, I suppose that is right, that he was never given an opportunity to put his side of the case? - Yes.

Did the Council accept however that it was unfair to proceed in that way in the particular circumstances of this case? - No. The Council as I said felt that they had discretion. They knew very well that the substance of the complaints against Mr. Hamilton were from rumours, that there was no specific, no hard evidence, apart perhaps from head teachers saying that the initial meetings they had knowledge of were somewhat disorganised: so the Council did not feel that they had acted unfairly or improperly.

Now, could you look at D60, which is a letter from Mr. Hamilton to the Director of Administration dated 14th December, 1984. Does he say in the second paragraph "Despite the secrecy of the Regional Council in their acting to terminate the lets of the Rover Groups being a decision taken by the Further Education and General Purposes Committee on the 15th August, 1983, I have been informed by a sympathetic Councillor of the exact nature and extent of the allegations made about me in my absence"? - Yes.

Did it appear to you he was able to get information that he ought not to have had? - Yes, I formed that understanding.

Did you ever discover how he got the information he should not have had? - No.

Then if we go to D78, do we have there a Minute/

Minute of a meeting of 23rd September, 1985, at which Mr. Hamilton and a delegation attended to meet the Council? - Yes.

Was one of the delegation a solicitor? - I believe so, from memory.

D78 should be the Minute; and if you go to the third page of that you will see the list of people? - Oh, yes.

I think we see the name of his solicitor there? - Yes.

I think if we go back to the front page we have the decision of the Committee that the Dunblane Boys' Club be granted the let of educational premises under the normal conditions applying in terms of the Council's scheme? - Yes.

And it was also decided that you should look into the possibility of producing an information booklet? - Yes.

Why was that? - I suppose it was intended to help the Council should there be any other groups arising of the type that were having locational difficulties, but that was unprecedented.

Did any such booklet ever get produced? - I don't recall its production.

If we look at the third page of that Minute, where we have the list of people attending, you will see there is a person called Mrs. McFarlane and there is a Mr. and Mrs. Anderson attended and a Mr. Williams along with Hamilton; is that right? - Yes.

There were a number of matters discussed and replied to in a way which must have satisfied the Committee; is that right? - Yes.

And point 5 of these answers included a statement that the club had been affiliated to the British Amateur Gymnastics Association, but they would give consideration to affiliation with the National Association of Boys' Clubs. Do you see that? - Yes.

Did/

Did that ever happen, to your knowledge? - Not to my knowledge.

And they undertook in the next paragraph that all the activities would be adequately supervised, and the Chairman himself would be assisting with gymnastics; is that right? - Yes.

Now, what was it that had changed apart from the Ombudsman and his intervention to persuade the Committee that it was now appropriate to allow Hamilton's group back on to Council premises? - Well, the Ombudsman's decision was crucial. The Council felt they had no option. It was equally anxious that there should be accountability with activities within the club, and the only way that might be suitably arranged was to require the Constitution of this club and the representatives that had been named, that they should appear before a sub-committee, which was a very high level sub-committee, containing the Convener of the Council, the Vice-Convener, the leader of the majority group, the Chairman of the Education Committee and members of the major political parties.

Can you remind me why it took the time it took to arrange that meeting? - Because of resistance from Mr. Hamilton.

Was that resistance to your proposal that he should meet the Committee and so on? - Yes.

As a result of all that did Mr. Hamilton's lets resume?
- Yes.

And did in fact his involvement with local authority premises extend into other areas? - Yes.

Could you look please at D84? - Yes.

I think we there see Hamilton writing to the Youth and Community Officer, Mr. Watson, in a letter dated 21st May, 1987, talking about obtaining the use of Falkirk High School gymnasium and Graeme High School gymnasium and games hall? - Yes.

If we look at 85a, do we there have a letter dated 20th June, 1988, from a parent concerned about the supervision at the Graeme High School Club? - Yes.

Were/

Were you aware of that complaint at that time? - I did not deal with it personally, but I think Mr. Currie, the then Assistant Director of Education, told me he was dealing with it.

It was concern over the welfare of a child because of the information a parent had received about a holiday camp to be run on an uninhabited island in Loch Lomond? - Yes.

In paragraph 3, "He is asking parents to leave their children at Balmaha with an unknown boatman 'Captain George' who is apparently to ferry the children over to Inchmoan with no other supervision present"; is that right? - Yes.

And there is reference to no names available for the other supervisors for the camp? - That is correct.

So prior to this camp taking place we have a very considerable list of items of concern, including detailed feeding arrangements and so on, being raised by a parent? - Yes.

Now, do you know what was done about that complaint? - My recollection is that Mr. Currie would have advised the parent that as the camp was not being held on Regional premises and not in fact being held within the area of the Region that it was outwith the jurisdiction of the Central Regional Council, and I assume he would also have added that the fundamental responsibility on the parent is to decide whether or not they would allow their children to attend such a camp.

Was there any system in place in those days for communicating concern like this to the authority in the area where the camp was to take place? - There was no formal system. It was not uncommon for informal contact to take place, but I couldn't say whether it did take place. If I may add, I believe Mr. Currie did ascertain that there was a possibility at least of police enquiries being made, but I don't recall the exact sequence chronologically of events.

Now, I think it was shortly after that that the let of Graeme High School came to an end? - Yes.

Do/

Do you remember the circumstances in which that happened? - Yes. Mr. Hamilton complained to me -- at least his complaint came to me -- that this let had been terminated abruptly: he had held the let previously, and he felt that the Council had acted unfairly.

Why was it terminated? - It was Council policy to accord priority to its own provision, whether youth and community service or sports development, and as I recall it, such a let was accorded priority.

So he lost out because of increased demand for the premises? - Yes.

And that would be from one of your own bodies, or would it be by the school itself? - No, it was made clear that the Council's own provision would take priority. I don't think it was the school itself. I think it was Regional provision.

If you look at D90, you see there a letter dated 18th January, 1989 from Hamilton to a man called Campbell? - Yes.

Do you know who he is? - It was Mr. Ken Campbell, who was a lawyer within the Region's Department of Administration and Legal Services.

I think Hamilton in this matter is harking back to 1985, at the foot of the page, saying he had an informal agreement that they would have the use of school facilities in the Region for their work for the youth of the community and that they would be left in peace to enjoy their use free from any future arbitrary problems from the Education Department; is that right? - Yes.

Did you have any agreement with him, or do you know of any agreement? - No.

Now, I think he managed to get letters from the Council again. If you look please at D92, do we see there that the matter was to be placed before the Education Sub-Committee? - Yes.

And that was his query about the availability of Regional Council premises for his organisation? - Yes.

Now, /

Now, did he get the let of Graeme High School restored? - I don't think they went to that extent. I think he wrote in to say that because of the passage of time he had decided to go elsewhere.

I think if you look at D95, which we see is a letter of 14th March, 1989, that he applied for Alva Academy for Monday evenings instead? - Yes.

Can I take it from that letter that he got the let of Alva Academy? - As far as I recall.

He refers in the last paragraph to the only remaining club within Central Region met at Dunblane High School on Thursday evenings? - Yes.

And if you look at D100, do we see in October, 1990 he was complaining about losing out part of his let at Dunblane High School? - Yes.

But the explanation was that he was not using the full time allocated to him? - Yes.

Now, there are just certain ancillary matters I want to cover with you.

Could/

3.30 p.m.

Could you look at D111; it wasn't an education responsibility that led to complaints to Central Region about a social worker called Keilloh and his involvement in investigating complaints in 1991 and that is the subject of this letter of January, 1992 but can you tell me whether you were aware of problems Hamilton had with camps at Loch Lomond in 1991 and 1988? - Well, I had been told about the camp of 1988 to which you referred previously; personally I am not aware of anything subsequent to it.

So when did you learn of that, apart from the letter we are looking at? - The letter to Mr. Currie.

That was the only one you knew about? - Yes.

Until you retired were you unaware of this problem with the camps in 1988 and 1991? - Unaware.

Were you also unaware of other complaints coming in about Hamilton's conduct at some of the camps under the Region? - I was not made aware of such complaints.

So, you got no complaints about his handling of his club activities from the time that the lets are reinstated in 1985? - That is correct with the sole exception of the letter to Mr. Currie.

Now, we will see evidence of the involvement of the Education Department in communicating principally with the Administration and Legal Department about problems that arise in relation to the activities of the clubs but can I take it that was something that wasn't getting up to your level for attention? - It was not.

So when you heard about the Dunblane tragedy did the name Thomas Hamilton mean something to you? - Oh yes.

And what we have heard from you so far, is that a fair reflection on your overall knowledge of that? - Yes.

And/

And really in the latter days he just didn't feature in your conduct of your work? - That is correct.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. JONES: Could you go back to D5 in the folder; this was a letter dated the 26th of April, 1983 from Mr. Gardiner to Mr. Hamilton which you looked at a little while ago; could I just ask you to look at the first paragraph of the text; you will see that in the second sentence there is reference there to insurance and the text reads in this way "The insurance outlined in your letter appears to be more than adequate", do you see that? - Yes.

And Mr. Gardiner goes on "Additional to this you now have with your own gymnastics qualifications acquired the standard requirement in respect of use of gymnastic equipment and this would appear to solve the problem which arose"? - Yes.

So that from this time in 1983 there was a record in the Council files of qualifications and also insurance arrangements being in place, is that the position? - That would appear to be the case.

Could you go on to D23? - Yes.

This is a handwritten Minute of a Sub-Committee that you looked at earlier dated the 7th of November, 1983 and if you turn to page four? - Yes.

Do you remember you were asked by my learned friend whether you were able to satisfy yourself that the claim that a teacher was helping at the boys club had ever been verified; do you see just over halfway down page four there is a record of you having made the observation that there wasn't a scrap of hard evidence, do you see that? - Yes.

And do you see that the Councillor says "I see a Mr. McIntosh, a degree in physical education and a teacher at Dunblane Primary School, is a leader"? - Yes.

And Mr. Ross who I think is a junior deputy of education says "Peripatetic on a visiting basis"? - Yes.

Does/

Does that remind you that there was some inquiry as to who this teacher was and it turned out to be this gentleman referred to here? - Whether there was actually an inquiry I am not sure but one assumes Mr. Ross was correct.

Now, I think the Sub-Committee you told us again met in March; could you look at, if it is available to you, the other document file, it may be possible to find it as DCRC AL B1 F1/14 and if you turn to the beginning of that bundle I hope you will find a document which has "Confidential" stamped on it and to the right of it there are the words "This paper relates to item 1B on the agenda", have you got it? - Which page are we on?

It is the first page in that bundle? - The 24th of February, 1984?

Yes, you will see it says on the right-hand side "This paper relates to item 1B on the agenda"? - Yes.

A letter or copy letter dated the 24th of February, 1984 addressed to Mr. Buchanan? - Yes.

Director of Administration and Legal Services, do you see that? - Yes.

It is signed, if you go to the end of the second page on the reverse, by Thomas Hamilton and Catherine Anderson? - Yes.

Does this letter set out for the Council the conditions and composition of Dunblane Boys Club Committee, do you see that? - Yes.

And there is reference on that first page to a leader and club coach Norman McIntosh, degree of physical education? - Yes.

There is a list of assistant leaders and a list of helpers? - Yes.

And over the page there there are details of parental involvement and insurance and so on? - Yes.

Was this one of the papers that was available to the Sub-Committee that had met in March?/

March? - I think almost certainly it would have been, it would have been material to the application for the let in respect of Dunblane Boys Club.

Could I ask you to turn to D52? - The original?

D52? The file which is below that one? - Yes, did you say

D52, the Ombudsman's report? - Yes.

Could you turn to page nine at paragraph 25? -
Yes.

Do you see that the Ombudsman says and this is about the Regional Council's position -- "The Regional Council have commented that in the circumstances of this case any assertions which were narrated as regarding the complainant's character were clearly qualified by the statement that there was no evidence to support them. They took the view that nonetheless such assertions may properly be of concern to an Education Authority since they related to the welfare and safety of children present in educational establishments".

So that is a justification that the Council were putting forward and which they felt was a good justification in the circumstances, is that right? - That is correct.

And the Ombudsman goes on to record "In an entirely discretionary area the Council was under no obligation, nor had it the power to make thorough investigation of such matters although the implications were intimated quite properly to the Sub-Committee in its deliberations. They acknowledge that these implications were so vague as to found no material reason in themselves to occasion termination of the use of the premises". So again this is a further record of the Regional Council's reasons for the termination of the let? - yes.

Now, /

Now, I think that you touched on another cause which the Regional Council did have concern over which was the distribution of leaflets through schools and if you turn to page 11, do you see that the Ombudsman deals with that paragraph at paragraph 31? - Yes.

Would you read that out for us? - "The final reason given by the Council is the complainant's circulation of notices to parents through primary schools. The head teachers were of course free to refuse to circulate the notices, but the complainant was as free as any other citizen to approach the schools, and it is extraordinary that he should be criticised for having done so".

Just to save some time one of the documents which isn't set out in the folder which you have got indicates that the let of Dunblane High School recommenced on the 24th October, 1985; would that be consistent with your recollection? - That would be since the meeting with Mr. Hamilton and his Committee was in August or September, 1985.

Can I take you on to D88; now, you have I think told us about Mr. Campbell to whom this letter is addressed; this is a letter dated 4th January, 1989 from Mr. Hamilton, is that right? - Yes.

To Mr. Campbell in the Legal & Admin. Department and it says in the first paragraph that this is a letter which deals with the termination of the use of Graham High School? - Yes.

Do you see in the third paragraph that Mr. Hamilton makes the threat that unless the let is now restored he will instruct his legal advisers to proceed with litigation against the Regional Council in respect of the damage caused to him as a result of their action in 1983, do you see that? - Yes.

Was this part of a pattern which had developed, that when there was a problem with Mr. Hamilton he threatened either the Ombudsman or litigation or both? - Yes, I would say it was part of a pattern.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Mr. Collie, you said that from an early stage you had official confirmation/confirmation of insurance; does the Council have a system for checking annually insurance for organisations such as Hamilton's?

- Not to my recollection, it would have to be checked.

Would an insurance policy normally simply be for a year? - I would imagine so.

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, on Friday I gave an indication that a witness who had communicated information to the Press would be invited to come here to give evidence. That information was repeated to his solicitor on Friday. I understood early today that his solicitor might not have been able to communicate with him so I arranged for police officers to ensure that he knew the invitation had been extended again. The witness indicated then that he would attend, he had not attended so I propose to follow the course of action I indicated on Friday I would follow if he didn't attend today and that is to present in the form of his statement the evidence which has been gathered from him; to do that I now propose to call my next witness, the police officer who took the statement, and that is Robert Pearson.

ROBERT/

3.50 p.m.

ROBERT PEARSON, Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: I am a Constable in the Central Scotland Police.

Are you based at Police Headquarters in Stirling?
- No, I am based in the Community Safety Department based at Grangemouth.

I think that you got instructions last week to trace and endeavour to take a statement from a person called James Ronald Shaw? - That is correct, yes.

Were you able to locate him? - Yes.

Where was that? - We started making various enquiries and eventually got a call from Mr. Shaw and arranged to meet him at his home address.

Where was that? - 8 Claycroft Place, Stirling.

And when was that? - Approximately 5 p.m. on Thursday, 13th.

Did you explain why you wanted to see him? - Yes. It was suspected that a person had given information to the Daily Record newspaper, which was relevant to evidence that had been led by Detective Constable Douglas Hamilton earlier that week.

Did he indicate whether he was that person? - Yes, sir, he did.

Did you then ask if he was prepared to give you information? - Yes, I did.

Was he? - Yes, he was.

Did you take a statement from him? - Yes.

Were you accompanied at that time? - I was accompanied at that time by Detective Sergeant Allan Moffat.

Was/

Was he present throughout the time the statement was taken? - Not all the time, but the majority of the time he was present.

Why was he not there throughout the time? - We had some other enquiries we were carrying out, and Detective Sergeant Moffat had to leave the interview to make various phone calls.

How did you note the statement? - I noted it on A4 sized paper and had Mr. Shaw sign at the foot of each of the pages and at the end of it I asked him to read it over.

Do you still have these sheets? - Yes.

Subsequently were these typewritten? - The statement was typed up. I have a typed copy in front of me.

There is a typed copy available. It records the time of the statement being taken as 6.15 p.m.? - Yes.

Why is that? - We had arrested Mr. Shaw and taken him to the police office in Stirling. There were a number of warrants in respect of Mr. Shaw. The statement was taken at the police office in Stirling at 6.15 p.m.

Now, can I ask you to tell me some of what he said? I don't want you to tell me anything in the statement about his own particular personal circumstances, but bearing in mind what we have got is typewritten copies. Can you confirm whether or not you have checked the typewritten copy against the handwritten copy? - I have checked it in so far as it appears to be an accurate reflection of the handwritten statement.

If I could ask you to go to the bottom of the first page, to the last paragraph in the typewritten copy, can you read from there, please? - "I am a native of Stirling, and since aged five I was brought up and lived at the family home at 33 Crumb Crescent, St. Ninian's, Stirling with my parents and two sisters. "I was educated at Borestone Primary School, where I then progressed to Stirling High School to complete my secondary education.
"I/

"I think I left school in the summer of 1974. However, in 1973 I joined the Venture Scouts, which operated in the Scout Hall, the First Stirlingshire Scout Hall, Queen Street, Stirling.

"Through the Venture Scouts I met Douglas Hamilton, who I learned lived in McLaren Terrace, St. Ninian's, Stirling. He was still a Scout at that time, not a Venture Scout, as he is a few years younger than me.

"The Venture Scouts helped with Scouts, and thereafter I had contact with Douglas Hamilton on a weekly basis over a period of about four years, between 1973 to 1977 approximately.

"When I joined the Venture Scouts in 1973, we used to frequent the hall on a Friday night, Saturdays and Sundays. Friday nights were the official Scout night, with Sunday night being the Venture Scout night. However, I went to the hall on a regular basis on Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays, as there was always a lot of activities ongoing that I was involved in.

"I first became aware of Tommy Hamilton as he used to come to the Scout meetings on a Friday. I learned that he was a Scout Leader in the Forth Sixth Troop, who met in their own premises in Stirling. He sometimes came in uniform and on other occasions he was in civvies.

"I formed the impression that Tommy Hamilton had nothing better to do with his time, and his attendance was actively discouraged by the Scout leaders, who did not particularly enjoy or like Hamilton attending our meetings, but nobody had the brass neck to tell him to go away in the strongest possible terms.

"Hamilton was the owner of a red coloured Opel Manta car. He also owned a red coloured Ford transit van which he used in connection with the business that he ran called 'Woodcraft' in Cowane Street in Stirling.

"Hamilton got into the habit of encouraging some of the younger Scouts to go with him in his car on a run called 'The Bunnyhunt'. My understanding was that he took three or four young Scouts in his car up to Sheriffmuir, where they caught rabbits in the glare or glaze of the car headlights and ran them over. As far as I am aware they didn't collect the dead carcasses of the rabbits, they just did it for the fun of it.

"I did not go on any of the 'Bunnyhunt' excursions, and I think that Douglas Hamilton may have went on one/one or two occasions, but I'm not sure.

"I think that Tommy Hamilton on one occasion lost control of his car in Sheriffmuir at a corner and ended up crashing the car, causing considerable damage, and as far as I am aware, nobody was injured.

"It was openly discussed that Tommy Hamilton may have been homosexual and that his interest in some of the younger Scouts was open to speculation. The younger Scouts were actively discouraged from associating with Tommy Hamilton. However, Tommy lavished money, food, Chinese meals and the like on the younger boys, who seemed to find his generosity hard to resist.

"I became less active in the Venture Scouts in 1977/78, and maintained contact until 1980, although I occasionally had contact with the Venture Scouts after that date.

"I am aware that during this period Tommy Hamilton organised camping weekends at Loch Lomond, where he had a boat. He took some of the younger Scouts from our organisation. However, I am unaware whether Douglas Hamilton ever went on any of the weekend camping trips.

"Between 1980 and March, 1996 I had very limited contact with Tommy Hamilton. I occasionally saw him in Stirling Town Centre, but I never stopped to speak with him as I didn't like the man. I was of the opinion that he was a homosexual, and was a sly, cunning individual who I just didn't like. I never knew Tommy Hamilton to have guns, and it was never discussed by him his apparent love of or interest in firearms.

"On 13th March, 1996 I learned of the tragedy at Dunblane Primary School and linked the Thomas Hamilton as the man I had known a number of years ago.

"On/

"On the 10 p.m. news coverage on Scottish Television on Monday, 10th June, 1996 I saw television coverage of Douglas Hamilton leaving the Cullen Inquiry at the Albert Hall, Stirling. The news report stated that Detective Constable Douglas Hamilton had been called to the Inquiry to give evidence to the effect of having been asked to carry out a computer check on Tommy Hamilton to see if there had been any adverse reports about Hamilton.

"Douglas Hamilton had apparently stated that at the time he had carried out the checks there was no Intelligence reports on Hamilton, although there were one or two reports which had come to light at a later date.

"I recognised Douglas Hamilton from the television coverage.

"I was incensed to see and hear this television report, as I was aware that Douglas Hamilton would be well aware of Tommy Hamilton's background, and should have made his feelings and his knowledge of Hamilton known to whoever was collating the information for the Firearms Renewal/Variation Application.

"I telephoned the Operator Services and got the telephone number of the Daily Record at Glasgow.

I telephoned the Daily Record at Glasgow and got to speak to a female reporter called Claire, whom I understood to be a member of the editorial staff.

"I asked if the Daily Record would be interested in running an anti-firearms feature in view of the Cullen Inquiry which was ongoing at Stirling. I told her that I had information that the current system for administering the firearms administration for the licensing of firearms was not effective.

"Claire told me that she would have to consult with the Editor, and that I should telephone back the following morning and ask for her by name. At this stage I hadn't mentioned Douglas Hamilton or any specifics.

"At 10 a.m. on Tuesday, 11th June, 1996 I again contacted the Daily Record by telephone. I used the coin telephone boxes from outside the Allanpark Cinema at Stirling.

"I got to speak with a reporter called Anna, who described herself as Claire's boss.

"I did not divulge any of my personal details and used the name of David whilst I spoke with Anna. She asked me for my name and address, and I only told her my name was David.

"She,/"

"She, Anna, was very inquisitive about the information that I had, and asked to meet me. She told me that she couldn't print anything unless she had my name and address or if she had met me in person. I refused to give her my details, but arranged to meet with her at Granada Service Station at 12 midday.

"About midday that day I decided not to keep the appointment, and I again telephoned the Daily Record from my work at Robertsons of Denny.

"I learned that Anna had left to keep our appointment. However, I spoke with a male person who gave me his name, which I cannot recollect. He was an Assistant Editor, and I told him my name was David and that I wasn't going to keep my appointment at 12 midday with Anna.

"I felt comfortable speaking with this man, and I reiterated my thoughts about an anti-firearms feature that they could run.

"I told this man about the situation with Douglas Hamilton, and that even without computer assistance he would have been in a position to provide personal knowledge and background information about Thomas Hamilton.

"I told this man about the 'bunny hunt' scenario, the camping and boating excursions, the car accident and the well known thoughts and opinions of Tommy Hamilton, which were openly discussed at the Scouts and Venture Scout meetings during the 1970s.

"I was of the opinion that Douglas Hamilton would have imparted his knowledge of Hamilton even although there had apparently been no record of Hamilton on computer records.

"The man at the Daily Record asked me if I thought that Douglas Hamilton had been involved in a cover-up over this situation. I told him that I could see no reason why he would want to cover up anything.

"I was left with the impression from this man that they would not run the story unless they met me personally or had my full details, which I consistently refused to give him.

"This man then asked me to telephone Anna on her mobile telephone number and tell her that I would not be keeping my appointment with her. He gave me the mobile number 0836 597056 which I wrote on a piece of paper. I telephoned her and spoke with Anna. She asked me to think it over and telephone her at 6 p.m. that night.

"I didn't telephone her back and just left it at that./

that. She, that is Anna, had previously offered me money for a story, but I had refused and stated that if any money was involved they could donate it to the Dunblane Fund. I got the impression from speaking with Anna that she wanted to sensationalise the issue of Tommy Hamilton's sexuality, but that hadn't been my reason for contacting the paper in the first place.

"I have subsequently handed over a piece of paper with the telephone number 0836 597056 which was written by me to Police Constable Pearson.

"I have not received any money from the Daily Record in connection with my dealings with them. I have never met face-to-face with a reporter from the paper, nor have I at any time given my correct details. All the contact has been done on the telephone, and I used the name David Banks, or possibly just David.

"I saw the Daily Record of today (13/6/96) and I chose only to read the front page. I felt sickened in the way that my information had been reported.

"I have been asked to clarify the point on page 4, paragraph 2 of my statement with regard to the fact that I think that Douglas Hamilton may have gone on one or two of the 'bunny hunts' in Hamilton's car. I never saw Douglas Hamilton to with Hamilton, and I have no direct evidence that Douglas Hamilton did go on any of the 'bunny hunts' in the company of Tommy Hamilton.

"In my dealings with the Daily Record I always used the name David. I did not say that this was an assumed name, but I did say that I did not wish to be named. The only contact with me was using the name David, and at one stage I gave them my work telephone number at Robertsons of Denny, 22 Winchester Avenue, Denny, telephone number 01324 824555, which was a direct dial into where I was sitting within the Telecall Room within the office premises at Robertsons of Denny."

And is that an accurate record of the statement he gave you? - It is, sir, yes.

No cross-examination.

MR. BONOMOY: Now, sir, the day this article was published Mr. Douglas Hamilton was due to leave on holiday. I took the view that it was not necessary to try to rearrange his holidays, but I did have a statement taken from him to try to clarify/clarify his position. He will return from holiday, and of course if this statement is not satisfactory in any way he can be recalled to give evidence, because I suspect this Inquiry will still be ongoing in some form at this stage. However, it may be we could simply deal with the matter through his statement.

I would propose again inviting the officer who took the statement to tell us about it. It is Chief Inspector Anderson.

LORD CULLEN: Are parties quite content to deal with the matter in this way?

There was no response.

JOHN ANDERSON, (42), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: I am a Detective Chief Inspector with Central Scotland Police, based in the Crime Managing Unit at Police Headquarters, Stirling. I have 21 years' police service.

I think on Thursday, 13th June of this year you were asked to take a statement from Douglas Hamilton, one of the Force's constables? - That is correct, sir.

Where did you go to take the statement? - I had the officer attend at my office at Police Headquarters, Stirling.

What time was this at? - 9.45 a.m.

Did you take a statement from him? - Yes.

Were you on your own when you did that? - I was.

How did you note it? - I discussed the article that was in the newspaper, I asked him to read it, I thereafter asked him his views on the matter, if it was accurate or inaccurate, and thereafter asked him to go through his story again and noted a verbatim account from him. Once I noted that I asked him to read it and thereafter asked him to sign it. It was about ten pages of A4 paper.

Was/

Was the statement then typed up? - Yes.

Have you checked the typewritten version against the handwritten version? - Yes.

Does the typewritten version accurately reflect what was in the handwritten version? - Yes.

Where is the handwritten version? - I submitted it to the Incident Room in Dunblane.

You should have in front of you now the typewritten statement: have you got that? - Yes.

For the record, this is a statement from Douglas Hamilton, from whom the Inquiry has already heard. Can you please read this statement to the Inquiry? - "Statement of Douglas Hamilton. I am a Detective Constable of Central Scotland Police, and at this time am attached to the crime Management Unit, Stirling. "I have previously provided a statement in relation to the Dunblane Incident and have given evidence at the Cullen Inquiry.

"On Thursday, 13th June, 1996 I learned of an article which appeared on page 1 of the Daily Record newspaper and which made reference to myself and Thomas Hamilton.

"About 9.45 a.m., same date -- that is 13th June, 1996 -- I was seen by Detective Chief Inspector Anderson, who obtained this statement from me.

"Between the age of seven years and 20 years I was a member of the First Stirlingshire Boy Scouts whose hall was, and still is, situated in Queen Street, Stirling.

"During the 13 years that I was a member of this Association I was a regular attender and progressed through the Cubs, Scouts and Venture Scouts. It would be fair to say that I spent a great deal of my time with the Scouts, and this included week days and sometimes weekends.

"During/

4.10 p.m.

on the hall or plan Scouting activities such as camps or canoeing. The incentive for this, for me, was that I knew that those Scouts attending on the Saturday mornings would have the opportunity of going canoeing on Saturday afternoons. Whilst it does not relate to Hamilton, I should add that for a very short period of time the father of one of my fellow Scouts organised air rifle shooting at the Scout Hall. This entailed the firing of air pellets at paper targets. This activity ceased due to insurance problems in relation to the use of the hall. Hamilton had nothing to do with this activity. In relation to my visits to Hamilton's shop, it was common practice for those Scouts working on a Saturday morning to walk down to the baker's shop in Cowane Street which was situated near to Hamilton's shop to purchase food for their lunch. Quite often the Scouts would call into Hamilton's shop and eat their lunch in the back shop whilst talking to Hamilton. I remember that I attended at Hamilton's shop with other Scouts in situations as I have just described. I would estimate that my visits to his shop were restricted to six to eight visits in all. It has been suggested that I have worked for Hamilton in the past and was paid by him. This is not true and I have never worked for Hamilton nor have I ever received monies from him. I also remember that one of my fellow Scouts did work for Hamilton on a Saturday and we sometimes called in to see Keiron. I think the Keiron still lives in the Stirling area but has shop premises in Edinburgh. About 1974, when I was 15 years of age and still in the Scouts Hamilton appeared to disappear from the Scout scene. I have no idea why this was the case. My Scout leader at that time as David Reid and myself and several of my fellow Scouts did not see eye-to-eye with David and we wanted a new leader. Keiron McKenzie who was still in the Scouts and still worked for Hamilton on a Saturday, was of the same mind and he suggested that we get Hamilton as our new leader. I remember myself, Keiron McKenzie, Colin Campbell, Scott Jefferson and Hamilton meeting in Hamilton's shop to discuss the possibility of Hamilton becoming our leader. Hamilton with hindsight was obviously manipulating Keiron to assist him in becoming a leader. Over the following two weeks Hamilton drove myself and McKenzie, Jefferson and Campbell to the homes of other Scout members where we sought the Scouts' and parents' views on Hamilton becoming our leader. The consensus/consensus at that time was that Hamilton should be our leader, however when this suggestion was put forward to the appropriate Scout Committee it was rejected. I had no idea why this was the case. About this time Keiron McKenzie left the Scout Association. Scott Jefferson either left the Scouts or went to the Venture Scouts. Myself and Colin Campbell continued in the Scouts with David Reid as our leader. Some months later I left the Scouts and joined the Venture Scouts. I do not recall having any involvement with Hamilton after his failed attempt at becoming our leader. It has been suggested in the newspaper article that I was an old friend of Hamilton's and that I took part in activities with him, including (a) cruising and water ski-ing on Hamilton's boat on Loch Earn, (b) joined in 'bunny hunts' where rabbits were startled by the lights of Hamilton's car and then killed, (c) was paid by Hamilton for working in his shop. There were several other alleged incidents described in this article which, although not directed at me, could suggest to the reader that they were. I would not describe myself as being a 'pal' or 'friend' of Hamilton. As I have stated my knowledge of Hamilton was purely through my interest in the Scout Movement. I am aware that Hamilton owned a boat and kept it on Loch Lomond. This was common knowledge throughout the Scout Movement. I have never been on Hamilton's boat, nor was I ever asked to go on the boat. I have water skied in the past on Loch Earn with Duncan King from Auchterarder but this had nothing whatsoever to do with Hamilton. Once Hamilton ceased his association with the Scout Movement I remember hearing of Hamilton taking boys in his car up to Sheriffmuir where they startled rabbits with the headlights of the car and chased them in an attempt to run them over. I have never been involved in any such activity with Hamilton or anyone else, nor am I able to identify any of the boys who were. I stated earlier in my statement that I did frequent Hamilton's shop on a few occasions with other Scouts. I was never employed by Hamilton in any capacity, nor did I receive any payment for work done. I recall when the stories of the boat trips and 'bunny hunts' were circulating, that I wanted to be part of these activities as they seemed exciting, however not only was I not invited but I know that my parents would never have allowed me to participate. I have no knowledge of Hamilton shining torches on courting couples and I certainly never/never took part in such behaviour. In relation to Hamilton's car going out of control and off the road, this too was common knowledge that such an incident had occurred. I think it occurred during one of the 'bunny hunts' but I'm not sure. My last involvement with Hamilton was when I was about 15 years of age when he was hoping to become our Scout leader. During the time I knew Hamilton he never mentioned firearms to me, nor did I see him with any firearms. To my knowledge there was no talk of Hamilton in relation to firearms. No time did Hamilton use inappropriate behaviour or language towards me, nor am I aware of him doing to so any other Scout. I have been shown a photocopy of newspaper article (Daily Record dated 13/6/96) which is the article referred to by me in this statement. I have signed the rear of this photocopy. I have been asked by Detective Chief Inspector Anderson if I have any suspicions as to the source of the information carried in the article. I suspect that a former Scout, Ronnie Shaw, may be responsible, however it is merely suspicion on my part and based on several comments in the article which draws me to this conclusion".

Is that an accurate record of his statement to you? -

Yes, it is.

No cross-examination.

MR. BONOMY: Bearing in mind the issues in this Inquiry I consider that the information available to you and the Inquiry have not been impeded by any conduct on the part of Douglas Hamilton. However, if any further information is known by anyone that is relevant to the issue in the Inquiry and sheds any different light on this statement then I invite that person to communicate with the Procurator-Fiscal. I hope that that evidence that we have just heard may be sufficient to deal with the matter but obviously if I am advised of any further relevant material then I will take the appropriate action on it.

LORD CULLEN: Thank you, Mr. Bonomy, I trust what you have said will be noted.

Adjourned until tomorrow.

TUESDAY, 18th JUNE, 1996.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

LORD CULLEN: Good morning. Can we have your first witness, Mr. Bonomy?

MR. BONOMOY: My first witness, sir, is George Robertson.

GEORGE ISLAY McNEILL ROBERTSON, Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I think you are the Member of Parliament for the Hamilton Constituency? - I am.

I think you also hold a Shadow Cabinet post. What is that post? - I am the Shadow Secretary of State for Scotland, Principal Opposition spokesman for Scotland.

I think you live in Dunblane, in fact? - I do.

How long have you lived in Dunblane? - 20 years, I think; probably more than 20 years.

So you brought your family up in Dunblane? - Yes, all three of my family.

I think you have two sons and a daughter? - Yes.

Can you tell me the ages of your family? - My older son is 23, my second son is 21 and my daughter is 15.

We are at a phase in the Inquiry now where they are looking at the past dealings Hamilton had with boys' clubs, and boys' clubs in particular on school premises. I believe, like so many other local people, you had dealings with him in that connection, and it is about that I want to ask you. When did you first encounter Thomas Hamilton? - There is some confusion about dates. This is going back quite some time. At some time in 1983 it was my older son and his friends got wind of the news that there was a club being formed at the High School/

School gymnasium called the Dunblane Rovers Group. It was offering five-a-side football, gymnastics, the sort of things young boys are interested in.

Was there any literature connected with it? - We are not sure whether at that stage there was precise literature. I think it was mainly word of mouth at that time, although there was literature later on produced by Hamilton, which was quite professional produced.

Yes? - At that time I think they simply got wind of the idea that this was going on, it was called the Dunblane Rovers Group, and there were these different activities.

I know you will tell us your son Malcolm only went or was involved for a short time, but during that short period did you encounter that literature? - The sad fact is that we threw out the file on Thomas Hamilton maybe last year or the year before because we had really got sick of the whole issue.

Yes? - We have no precise recollection of literature at the specific time he was involved in the club, although he did write on the first occasion when Malcolm failed to go one night to the club.

Did your son say he wanted to go to the club? -
Yes.

When your son said that did you have any reservations about sending him? - No. We saw it was at the High School, it was in the gymnasium at the High School and it seemed to be something that was popular and he and his friends were enthusiastic about going to it. The name "Dunblane Rovers Group" added that little bit of respectability to it, and I think that was quite deliberate.

How long did Malcolm go to the club? - I think three or four times he attended on a Thursday night, before he missed a session.

What happened then? - A letter arrived in a buff envelope from Mr. Hamilton. We always knew him as Mr. Hamilton, because the boys always/always called him Mr. Hamilton. I think that is interesting, that that was the level to which he took it. The letter says he had noticed Malcolm had not been at the group on Thursday night, saying did he realise how important regular attendance was, and that he wanted to have an explanation as to why he was not there.

Who was the letter sent to? - To Malcolm himself.

On headed notepaper? - I don't think I can answer that question precisely.

Now, Hamilton wanted to do something as a result of his absence? - He wanted an explanation for the absence, and appeared to be reprimanding the boy himself, so my wife phoned him when she opened the letter. My son was 10 at that time.

What was the outcome of her conversation with him?
- She basically stated "How dare you write to my son. He is in the Cubs, he goes to school, he goes to a swimming club. If he is absent from there they don't write to him, they write to me as the parent". He was very calm. Our recollection of Thomas Hamilton was of a man, even from other anecdote, who even when confronted could remain calm. My wife however was angry. He said he wanted to come to the house to interview Malcolm.

Hamilton wanted an explanation from Malcolm, not from you? - Yes.

Did you do anything that time, or was it before he came to see you that you had direct experience of the activities at the club? - No. That was the stimulus to us finding out a little more about this club. My wife said there was no question of him coming to the house until I was home. As an MP, I am away nearly all the way, and it was going to be at the end of the week when I would be home. I came up early on a Thursday and went to the gymnasium with a friend of mine, Stewart Hart, who lived in Braemar Avenue, whose son was also attending the club. We went to the club to see what it looked like.

What/

What was it like? - We went to the glass doors of the gymnasium, and we were both struck very quickly by the bizarre nature of what was going on.

What was going on? - There were a large number of small boys in shorts stripped to the waist being bossed around by two or three middle-aged men, swaggering around in a very military-type way. I think I have described it as looking like the Hitler Youth. It was a military-type of feeling we had.

Yes? - Our twoselves -- we were two very different parents -- had both a gut feeling that there was something very bizarre, that it was not right, and we decided on the spot that our sons were not going to stay in the club.

Were there any recognisable physical activities going on? - There was gymnasium equipment lying about, and it was quite clear they had been using it. We were watching them, however, for 15 minutes without any recognition by Hamilton that we were there, although he clearly saw we were there.

Yes? - They were at that time marching around the gymnasium, and had been engaged in recreational activities of some kind of another.

Did you interrupt? - No. We stood for 10 to 15 minutes, but there was no indication from inside the gymnasium that they wanted to see us.

So you waited till your son came home when it was finished? - I don't think he was there. I think we kept him away. We had gone up to see it because we were frankly irritated and slightly discomfited by the fact he wanted to interview a boy of 10 as to why he was not at a youth club.

Did you make any decision about whether your son should go back? - Yes, the two fathers, myself and Mr. Hart, decided on the spot that we thought the guys that we looked at were in many ways slightly sinister in the way they were conducting the.....it was a gut feeling that we had,/ had, that we decided on the spot we were not going to send our sons back. We both thought it was very odd, what was going on in Dunblane High School gymnasium.

Can you remember what your own son's reaction to the club was? - Initially they were very happy. Young boys like activity. Dunblane was not known for having a lot of things for young boys to do. I think the fact they have five-a-side football and a gymnasium, gymnastics, was initially attractive, but they ran out of enthusiasm very quickly, and were not very keen on going on a weekly basis.

Yes? - I have to say that other parents and other children were not of that view. Some stayed on long after we had expressed our concerns.

Yes? - Certainly within our immediate group there was a very uncomfortable feeling that was left behind.

Did you see any more of Hamilton? - He came to the house the following night, I think it was, as a result of the phone conversation with my wife. I was there.

Yes? - He appeared at the door and came in. He was almost always dressed -- I think this is from the time we first saw him until a few weeks before the incident, when he was seen around Dunblane, wearing the same outfit, a Parka, usually with the hood up, disguising him very effectively.

Yes? - He came into the house and stood at the entrance to our living room and asked if he could speak to Malcolm. I said no, and that Malcolm would not be going back to the Rovers Club. He said why and I said "I don't have to give you reasons why a 10 year old boy is not coming back". He then asked if Malcolm agreed, and could he speak to Malcolm to hear his view.

Yes? - I got pretty angry, and said quite frankly that was not his business, that I was the parent, and I was making the decision, and it was absolutely irrelevant what Malcolm thought in the circumstances.

Yes? - At that stage I think he was beginning to recognise who I was, and looked slightly more uncomfortable. He had not been asked to sit down, and he was standing there in the living room.

Yes? - He said, "What are you implying about my club?" and I said I was not implying anything at all, I just did not feel it was the kind of club I wanted our son to go to, and I was not willing to argue with him any further, and that basically terminated the discussion; he chose not to say any more.

How aggressive was he? - He was calm and ordered, but pretty determined as well.

Yes? - The implication he wanted to speak to the boy spoke volumes, that he was likely to get more of a response from the boy than from the parents. There was a fairly restrained hostility about him. He was more confident with children than with adults.

That was the end of it as far as your son was concerned. Was that the end of it as far as you were concerned? - Definitely not.

What happened after that? - Mr. Hart and I and some of the other parents who were bothered felt there was something not right about a situation where a man that we had this gut feeling about appeared able to run a boys' club with large numbers of boys in the respectable surroundings of a school gymnasium -- he didn't need to have any -- he had no checkable background, and there was no way we could check on his background other than that he ran a kitchen fitting shop in Stirling, he had no credentials to be in charge of an army of small boys at all. This left a feeling of unease as to what would be happening.

Yes? - We decided there should be more done about it, and that we should spread the view that this man was not a proper person to be looking after small children.

How did you go about that? - Apart from talking to people involved at that time I am not certain we were able to do very much more. We were/were concerned that other people knew about our unease and our worries and concerns, and a number of parents took their sons away from it, either from their own choice or from what they heard.

Yes? - We then heard that Central Regional Council had cancelled the let of the school following a complaint from Councillor Davidson, and that was welcome news to us. There was a feeling that that drew a line under the activities of Thomas Hamilton at that time.

Had you spoken to Councillor Davidson before the let was withdrawn? - No.

Do you know if any other parents were expressing their concerns through that councillor or any other councillor to the Regional authority? - Yes, Councillor Davidson had picked up a lot of vibrations from Dunblane as to what was going on.

Yes? - There is locally a political divide. I wouldn't normally be in communication with Councillor Davidson, who was the Conservative councillor for the area: but it was quite clear that other people had got the message over to him at that point, and the let was cancelled.

Now, you subsequently I think had a visit from a lady called Anderson. Was she a lady you knew? - Mrs. Anderson was a recognisable lady. She lives at the bottom of the hill where we live.

Did she have any young family at that time? - Not to my knowledge, no.

What was her reason for coming to see you? - She had come to the door with a petition asking us to sign a petition for Thomas Hamilton to get the let of the High School back. It appears there was a committee of some parents and individuals set up, who were aggrieved at the fact the club had been closed down and the let taken away, and this petition was being organised.

Yes? - We refused to sign the petition, and expressed the strong view that we agreed with the cancellation of the hall let.

Were you aware of any connection between her and Hamilton at that time? - The only connection we knew was -- because the Anderson's house is at the bottom of the hill where we live, and where you have to drive to and from the main road -- you could see the van Hamilton had for his business regularly parked there, and they seemed to be organising the petition to get him the let of the school back.

Were you aware there was a fair measure of support for that petition? - There was some support. There was a polarisation of opinion between some residents, between some parents who felt he had been badly treated, because there was no evidence he had done anything wrong, and parents who were pleased that their children were engaged in what looked on the surface to be pretty wholesome activities, and others like myself.

We have heard there were 70 signatures on the petition and 30 individual letters submitted to the Council, but they didn't change their mind; the Council stood firm at that stage and awaited the Ombudsman's decision. Did you make any approaches to any other people you felt should do something about Hamilton? - Mr. Forsyth had been elected in 1983. Now, because I have a sense of propriety about my own constituency, how you handle constituency affairs, I felt it was not proper for me to get engaged in a public campaign in someone else's constituency, so I made arrangements to have a word with Mr. Forsyth as the local MP, and we met informally at Westminster.

Can you date that in relation to what the state of affairs was at that stage in respect of Hamilton? You referred to the Regional Council? - It is my recollection that this was certainly before the Ombudsman's ruling came out, and was in the wake of our decision to take away my son from the club, and the worries we had about it.

Yes? - It must clearly have been between the time that the let was cancelled, because I was praying in aid Councillor Davidson to the local MP as being somebody who supported the view I had, or my personal view was strongly similar to the one Councillor Davidson had taken up.

Can/

10.20 a.m.

Can you remember when the General Election was in 1983? - Well now, I could tell you the result; no, I can't without having looked through the diaries.

No doubt somebody will tell us before you finish? - I think Mr. Forsyth will probably remember more graphically than I can.

It was after the General Election when he could be found at Westminster? - Yes.

Can you remember what you then told him about Hamilton? - I told him about my unease about this individual, I said to him that I had been to the school, I used that experience very strongly to emphasise the gut feeling that I had that this guy was not fit to be running some youth club, that Freena Davidson had come to the same point of view; she lived in Dunblane at that time and had backed up exactly my viewpoint. I have to say when confronted by Mr. Forsyth's questions to me about what precisely I was talking about, what precise evidence I had, what it was exactly I was complaining about, I found myself in the same difficulties that so many other people had, that it was difficult to put your finger on what people felt was wrong with Thomas Hamilton and therefore in terms of the exchange and I am not aware how weak it sounded but I had hoped by the personal views expressed to the Member of Parliament I would get over myself to him to take some action at that time or at least being cautious about the individual but I wasn't surprised by his reaction to it and I don't blame him for his reaction to it at that early stage; you know, the experience of a constituency MP being pestered and bombarded by people who have some obsession doesn't make it easy for people to distinguish.....in Scotland we don't have the large staff that other representatives had. I understood how plausible Hamilton must have been to him and how difficult it would be for him at that stage to accept somebody against whom nobody had any evidence that he was as untrustworthy as people were making out.

Can you say, did you form any impression of whether Mr. Forsyth had heard of Hamilton before your conversation with him? - He had certainly heard/heard of him, he had seen him and met with him and discussed him with me; he told me at that time very strongly about Mr. Hamilton's sense of grievance that he was being judged by innuendo without any evidence ever being put forward. He had told Mr. Forsyth in the initial stages which must have sounded plausible especially to a new Member of Parliament that he was a dedicated individual who had an interest in the welfare of young children and who was operating in a town where there was an absence of facilities for young people and he was being hounded by a blanket of rumour without anyone being satisfied about what he was doing wrong.

Did the fact that school premises were being used arise in the conversation? - Yes, I expressed a view that people were given a misleading impression about Hamilton's respectability and legitimacy by the fact he could advertise and that he was using the gymnasium at Dunblane High School.

Was he leafleting people by then? - I am not certain whether he was; he was a pretty consistent leafleter, he was certainly very active around Dunblane a lot at that time, he didn't let the grass grow under his feet, he believed in campaigning zealously all the time.

Was there anything else you felt in relation to Hamilton's activities? - Again I was very conscious in my position as not being the representative for the area, I was also very conscious about the fact of legal action, where there was nothing precise to accuse Thomas Hamilton of and at that time it was quite possible that litigation would follow anything so I raised it informally with Councillors in the area, Labour Councillors, who I expressed unease to and was again confronted with the question which again was expressing the opinion where you haven't got solid evidence to back it up.

Yes? - One of the local policemen, Sergeant Moir, at that time who again had boys of that age set up another youth club in order to compete with Hamilton's one and there was a lot of concern and activity going on there and I certainly made it clear to a lot of people around that we were anxious about him but I have to say that most parents who were worried had the gut instinct simply to/to take their sons away and drew the line under the affair.

Did Moir's youth club run for long? - Yes, indeed -- Bob Moir has been engaged in youth activities even up to this time and has made a huge contribution to looking after young people in Dunblane.

Was Councillor Ball one of the Councillors you spoke to? - I knew Bob Ball was involved because he was Hamilton's local Councillor and I understood at that time that was why he was taking up the position on his behalf or to Mr. Forsyth, the relationship between the elective representative and the Councillor. I don't think I spoke directly to Bob Ball but I spoke to other Regional Councillors on the matter.

You would learn of the outcome of the battle that followed his success with the Ombudsman; after that happened did you directly involve yourself in any further communication with people about Hamilton? - Well, a lot of what I have just been describing to you took place after the Ombudsman's report came out. I must say in our house we were absolutely in despair at the fact that the let had been returned and in many ways the Ombudsman had given him a boost. The club didn't run very much longer than the restoration of the let, the damage had been done to his reputation so although he got the let of the gymnasium back it didn't save the club from inevitable doom.

Although is it fair to say he still had the club at Dunblane High School even in 1996? - I think our recollection is that he went away but then came back at some point but it was a much more limited form. The one in the early 80s was well attended, there were a large number of boys going to it but the unease and concern especially about the camps.....our son didn't go to camp but other parents that we spoke to were very perturbed and some of the stories which came to light were running around in informal rumours at that time.

Did he write to you as he wrote to so many people? - No, he never wrote personally a letter to me but we have received leaflets through the door.

You/

You returned some of these or at least some have been located; could you look at a Production which will be given to you, R41, and you will see that is a number of documents together. Now, are these your documents? - Yes, these were the documents that we held in our home.

Can you tell me if these are the only ones you have received or are these remnants of what you received? - These are the remnants -- I can't answer the question sadly but the disgust of Hamilton and what he was doing and also the inability to do anything about the matter, these were the remnants of what we had.

Could you look at R40, is that yours? - That is another of the leaflets that we had.

Whose handwriting is on it? - That is my wife's handwriting.

Has that anything to do with the notice or is the handwriting something entirely different? - I can't read.....

I am struggling too? - I would need to consult my wife on what the handwriting says.

There is a date on it which is the 2nd of March 1994? - Yes.

It doesn't follow that you got the leaflet prior to that date which may help you pin it down. Can you remember when this leaflet came through the door? - No, I am not certain whether it did come through the door; the letter came through the door but I think the leaflet was one that may have been given by another parent.

The other Production has a leaflet attached to it as well? - Yes.

Both of these leaflets have a part in it that has to be signed by a parent? - Yes.

Could you read out the part that the parent has to sign? - "I wish to enrol my son.....to join the Dunblane Boys' Sports Club meeting at Dunblane High School. I understand that during the period of the meeting and activities my son/son will be in your charge and under your instruction and I agree to adhere to and abide by all your rules, conditions and discretion etc".

It starts off "Dear Mr. Hamilton"? - Yes.

I take it that this is the sort of thing in 1995 which would be put through the doors or distributed somehow in the Dunblane area? - Yes.

We see that one refers to the re-opening of a club after the summer holidays on Thursday, the 7th of September, 1995? - Yes.

Do you remember if a similar form was around in 1983? - I think certainly not.

You didn't sign anything committing your son to his care, as it were, during the period of the club? - I have no recollection of doing so; I would have been profoundly disturbed if it had been presented before me. The form, this particular form, my wife took up with other parents. We had a conversation with Hamilton and Hamilton's response to why is that down in the form was I took it from the standard conditions laid down by the Boy Scouts; he had a fascination with the Scouts most of the time. He was asked about "etc." which seemed to cover pretty well anything that might happen and he said again this was something that had been in Scout literature. It was enough to provoke at least one parent to phone him up.

That leaflet is attached to a letter dated the 18th of August 1995 addressed to "Dear Parents"? - Yes.

And you obviously got a copy of that as well? - Yes.

Do you remember whether that came through the door or someone has handed it to you? - I think that one came through the door.

You have typed something on it? - My wife typed on it "Copy sent to MF", that is Michael Forsyth.

On the 28th of August? - Yes.

There/

There are parts of this letter that gives you some anxiety, no doubt? - Indeed.

And do you remember in particular the reference to his success with the Ombudsman? - Absolutely, it is the thing that to us jumped out straight away, he was now using the Ombudsman's judgement as a legitimisation of his own activities.

Did you then send this to Michael Forsyth for his opinion? - Indeed.

I think you got a reply? - We got an acknowledgement, yes; on a number of occasions informally I had spoken to Michael Forsyth who changed his view about Hamilton fairly quickly after the Ombudsman's report.

What was the view he had then? - I think he began to recognise that this was somebody who was not what he originally made out to be, was not as straightforward as he originally made out to be and was perhaps becoming uneasy about him as the rest of us had been and when he spoke with me his opinion changed.

Yes? - I want to repeat because I think it is very important, I don't blame Michael Forsyth as the local MP from taking up the initial position he did; my wife and I were angry at the time with his approach to it, but I can see now only too well in the initial stages that there was very little evidence to put forward, it was very difficult for him to come to any other conclusion than the man was being judged on the basis of unsubstantiated rumours but certainly his view, again maybe by instinct, Mr. Forsyth changed his view and we kept him briefed because we were local and it was not necessary because he was going to be getting all that literature.

About the same time as you were getting this additional literature did you get any literature about photographic services provided by Hamilton? - Yes, he produced a leaflet again that came through the doors advertising his business as a photographer. One side of the leaflet had details of his photography and the kind of services that he offered; the other side of the leaflet which is what struck us as being most disturbing were four pictures/pictures of young boys, only young boys on the back of that leaflet, and at least two of them were recognisable to members of my family.

Now, did you pass that material to someone else to try to see if another route might be used to get firm evidence about Hamilton's activities? - I simply sent that letter to Michael Forsyth as the local MP. I think it is really not for the individual who happens to be the Member of Parliament living in another area to be taking a lot of unilateral action so my reaction was to keep him informed of what was happening and the information that came to me as the local resident that he might not be aware of.

Following that were you aware of Press interest trying to find out more substantial information about Hamilton? - Yes, sorry, I see what you are driving at. We were getting agitated and certainly concerned that he was still around, still organising. I contacted Angus McLeod who is the political editor of the Sunday Mail and said that there was perhaps a story involved here. Angus McLeod is one of the most distinguished and most reliable Scottish journalists and I know him personally.

What was the trigger for you doing that? - I think, I can't pin it down but one of the leaflets that came through, whether it was a photographic leaflet or the August 1995 leaflet, I am not sure but there was a resumption of recruitment activity for Hamilton in the area that suggested to me that perhaps the Press might be able to flush this man out where we had all failed and I privately spoke to Angus McLeod.

Do you know if he tried to do something about it? - Yes, indeed he did. The matter is now in the public documentation because the article was published after the incident itself. He came out, he interviewed Hamilton, he spoke to me afterwards and said he had come to exactly the same conclusion that I had and that this was.....his gut instinct was that this was an unreliable, unstable and slightly bizarre individual and he phoned me up the following Sunday when the article was to appear; we were astonished to see anything appearing but he apologised and said effectively it hadn't been legal, / legal, the lawyers wouldn't allow the publication of the article because there was nothing actually against Hamilton that could be printed and it would have invited legal action if it had been printed in that form.

Now, I take it that that really completes the picture as far as your direct involvement in trying to have something done about Hamilton is concerned? - I feel that is so. I think at that stage we came to the conclusion that there was not much more we could do about it. We were certainly going to keep Michael Forsyth informed that anything that was going to happen and anything that was likely to happen. We kept an interest. It wasn't the same very keen interest that we had had in the early stages where a lot of talking and discussing went on about Hamilton. I think there comes a stage in time when you don't think you can do very much more. I have to say looking back that there was nothing in his demeanour or the way in which he reacted to us that suggested that he was likely to be violent.

Yes? - Our worries were all about the over-affection for young children rather than for any huge hostility to them and even when one of the parents who, apparently having had a discussion with us, phoned him up in a very very aggressive way to cross-examine him both about the August '95 letter and about the leaflets and this unconditional release, despite great hostility to him and provocative questioning to him he at no point reacted strongly to the cross-examination so I had no indication that this was a man who was bottling up any ferocious, murderous instinct, that was not something which crossed our minds.

If we can look more widely at some of the things you said in your evidence earlier, you mentioned the lack of qualifications in an individual with responsibilities for children. He, in fact, had produced qualifications from the British Amateur Gymnastics Association, qualifications which wasn't very high qualifications but it made him a coach -- were you aware of that? - Yes.

And the Regional Council did have information produced to them and they checked up on that/that on a number of occasions, were you aware of that? - Yes.

You also used an expression "credentials"; this person has no credentials but I suppose if you are with the Scouts or the Boys' Brigade or some national boys club information one would expect as a member of the public that you have passed some sort of check. Did you see any way in which a private individual with an interest with children at heart who wants to do something on his own voluntarily might receive what I think you meant by credentials? - I hoped that would be the case, I hoped we could find some way in which that might be possible; I think children are very vulnerable, the age group which was recruited by him is perhaps the most vulnerable of all. I think parents do look for some form of reassurance whether it is the Scouts or the Boys' Brigade where appeals can be made or checks can be carried out -- some form of reassurance, and I think they require any reassurance.

I/

I think it is important here to discriminate between the generality -- the parent who takes up to 10 or 15 youngsters with his own child on some boating trip, or maybe some informal club in their own home, and an organised boys' group or children's group run from public premises. There is no doubt at all that Hamilton's respectability was gained from the fact he used school premises. I think if he had been holding them somewhere else suspicion would have been aroused and there would have been less chance of people being attracted into the net. Where I think we can make a start at finding a method to discriminate between those who have just got a passing interest in children and those who have got an obsessional interest.

You have, of course, to come at it from two angles: you can have a situation where you have got a club going and you try to stop it first of all and find that extremely difficult. The other way of doing it is to protect yourself in some way before you even started. It is only I think in the latter context you can actually have any control of the situation; would that not be right? - I think that is right. However, I think there must be mechanisms for stopping as well. I think what we have to look for are systems where there are at least some hurdles that have to be passed before anybody can come into the business of running this kind of activity. Again I think there must be some reference point for making sure investigations take place, and this can be translated into firm action.

A person like yourself who has a gut feeling which turns out to be an absolutely right gut feeling about him -- how do you then translate that into some sort of material that would justify a local authority deciding that he can no longer use their premises? - Well, the gut feeling of one person is frankly not enough, but the fact I got a gut feeling about the man, it was shared by a lot of others. What is worrying here, the reason I was interested in giving evidence is that if somebody like me, ostensibly in a position of authority and influence, finds himself up against brick walls all round about, whether they be civil liberty brick walls or brick walls created by officialdom, it says a lot for what the ordinary individual would have to be facing if they had worries and concerns about it as well. We have to create some situation to protect/protect children especially whereby there must be some form of investigation so that one's qualifications or one's credentials at the beginning can translate into running such clubs or such organisations basically afterwards.

The problem about the weight of opinion and gut feeling is it is sometimes quite difficult to turn into material that you can then justify a decision being taken against an individual? - Well, I think there has to be a balance struck between the interests of children and the interests of civil liberty. I think we have sorted it out in a whole series of other areas and I think it is not unreasonable for people who are involved in that sort of activity and who have that sort of interest to be able to pass through those tests.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: I represent the teachers at Dunblane Primary School and the Mayor family, and it was really on the aspect of vetting I wanted to take you a bit further. In the firearms field we have rights and we also refer to privileges. I suppose the same could be said about looking after children, it would be a privilege to look after them as opposed to a civil right. One of the things I wanted to canvas is the possibility if one is holding youth groups you should have insurance, public liability insurance, before they can set up a club, which would involve at least vetting by the insurer. Is that something perhaps you see as a possibility? - I think so, because, as I say, one of the things that puzzled me most was how somebody could simply set up a group and take over a school and gymnasium and use all the sporting equipment in the gymnasium apparently without any prior vetting. It may well be -- Mr. Bonomy said he had some minor qualifications in gymnastics or as a coach -- but it did seem the more we looked into it, it did seem extraordinary he could use equipment that teachers used during the day under the most controlled situation and with the highest qualifications, use it with young boys of nine apparently without anything produced in advance. I think the idea of insurance would be, however, at least one of the hurdles which should be put in the way of those who want to look after children.

But one possibility of regulation would be there are so many children per adult: in other words, / words, there has to be so many adults, if there is 18 children, rather like the Guides and the Cubs and the Scouts. Is that another possibility? - That is one other possibility. As I say, there is a myth drawn up that Thomas Hamilton ran all these clubs on his own as if he was the only individual involved in this. He wasn't. There were other people who helped him. To my mind there were at least two other adults present the night I and Mr. Hart went to the school gymnasium. Now, these people, a lot of these people have just disappeared like snow off a dyke, and you can perhaps see why; it is not something that anybody is likely to want to put in their C.V. in the future. I don't think you can simply say the numbers of people who were there, unless these people themselves have passed through some level of qualification but, as you know, he clearly had a mesmerising influence on the youngsters and it may well be he had the same effect on those who were round about him as well.

We heard yesterday about school lets and community schools. I suppose the same applies to community schools, that they have an aura of respectability so that if someone was using a community school parents might feel this is some sort of imprimatur? - I think that is right.

I think that is why we need to have some regulations about this, something to make sure they don't get an artificial entry into respectability simply because they are using school premises. Schools in Scotland especially have got a special aura about them and activities that go on in a school have got a distinctly greater degree of respectability than things that go on in church halls or in community centres or the like. I think therefore we have got to be much more careful about who is allowed to use school premises.

It may be a bit easier I suppose to regulate the question of school premises but it is difficult to regulate Inchmoan Island on Loch Lomond or other halls where clubs are held? - Yes, I think that is right. You have to try and have a variety of hurdles. I can't think of any blanket way of preventing anybody running youth clubs. You can certainly lay down a variety of regulations that will prevent people from getting engaged in it who much not be, but anybody who -- I don't believe many parents would have allowed their children to go to Inchmoan/

Inchmoan Island or to any of the camps he organised had they not believed that because he was running the thing in the school it was sort of almost quasi official what he was doing.

Lord Cullen has the widest remit obviously since that dreadful day on 13th March and you must have given a lot of thought to the ways the Hamiltons of this world can be prevented. Is there anything else in your own mind as opposed to a parent who was involved that could be likely to have not prevented totally but minimised? - Well, as a human being, and as somebody who was close to the event, of course it is very difficult not to keep thinking about it. As a politician who might, depending on the vagaries of the electorate, might actually be in the position of changing the laws and making alterations to the law I think about it a lot. My strongest feeling is this is an individual who started off perhaps with good intentions to set out on a mission to look after or to give entertainment to small boys and became obsessed by it. He then became obsessed by the fact and that presumably in the inner recesses of his mind was quite legitimate and public spirited. Had he not been allowed to get past the first base, had he not been given school premises, the respectability that went with that, then perhaps he wouldn't have gained the same level of frustrated obsession that he apparently ended up with. So we have to try and have methods by which we stop people getting that respectability unless they have earned it.

No re-examination.

BY LORD CULLEN: Just a couple of questions I would like to ask. In the course of your evidence you described Hamilton in a number of ways and I think you used the adjective "unstable". Could you enlarge on what you mean by "unstable" in that connection? - I think just uneasiness about the character who doesn't seem to fit into the normal pattern. His demeanour outside -- the parka with the hood, the very long hood with the fur round about it that largely disguised his features. I think when the photographs were published after the incident people were slightly taken aback because he was a figure -- even though people who had met him, had seen him, were able to recognise him indistinctly./

indistinctly. The way he carried himself that night at the youth club -- the swaggering way in which he seemed to be bossing around these young boys, the way the letters were written, the phone calls. We were not the only parents who were phoned up or asked why our son was not attending the club, not the only ones to be visited by him demanding to speak to the boy himself. That adds up I think to an impression of somebody who was not particularly stable and certainly somebody who seemed to be driven in some way.

The other matter is this: you expressed some views about the vetting of people who became involved in youth clubs. Do you have any views as to how far, so to speak, across the board vetting should go. I mean, adults become involved with young persons in a whole variety of ways, and I think one example mentioned earlier in this Inquiry was the giving of piano lessons or whatever it may be. Is there a need to consider in your view vetting across a much wider spectrum than just youth clubs, things to do with sports or gymnastics or something of that sort? - I think a number of these activities should be covered anyway by qualifications. That is why in a way I am concerned about trying to at this stage anyway restrict the view to the use of school premises, because if we take that particular incident it seems to me Hamilton has got off the ground, become a big operator in this field, because of the respectability that came by using the school, and he was able to build on that. I would more than recognise the huge difficulties that would be involved if you were to demand, you know, bureaucracy that was going to check every individual. If a child's birthday party is being held in a church hall and.....

Yes, things can be arranged very informally and take place in private places and so on. One is looking here for something that is workable? - I think that is the thing I was focusing on this time, the wider context of promoting boys' clubs, and he gains substantial respectability from the fact it was held in the gymnasium of the High School. There was an implicit feeling this was something that was semi-official. Even to somebody like me, who knows a little bit about the system, if it is being operated in/in the High School gymnasium that must be reasonably okay, and it is only once you suspect in your mind and think why, then it becomes very obvious to me it was very simply being in the school gymnasium, and I must say that astonished me that that may be the case.

LORD CULLEN: Thank you very much, Mr. Robertson, I am much obliged for your assistance.

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, the next witness is Michael Forsyth.

11 a.m.

MICHAEL BRUCE FORSYTH (42), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I think you are the Member of Parliament for the Stirling constituency; is that right? - Yes.

You are also a Cabinet Minister. Which post do you hold? - I am the Secretary of State for Scotland.

I think you have been in Government positions since 1987? - That is correct, although I was Parliamentary Private Secretary to Geoffrey Howe in 1986.

You were first elected I think in 1983? - Yes, to the new Stirling constituency.

You can perhaps answer a question that you will be disappointed to know Mr. Robertson couldn't give us the answer to, which was the date of the General Election in 1983? - I think it was on the 9th April.

Are you a married man? - Yes.

Do you have a family? - I have three children.

Ages? - Oh, I didn't realise I was going to be asked such questions! 17, 14 and 9.

Now, you will appreciate we have reached the stage in the Inquiry when we are looking at Thomas Hamilton's dealings with youth and with the authorities who let premises to him for his youth club activities, and it is in that connection I want to ask you a number of questions. First of all, can you tell the Inquiry how you first either heard from him or met him? - It is quite difficult for me to recollect the detail. It was shortly after I was elected. He came to my surgery and gave me a tale that is broadly set out in the Ombudsman's Report. The gist of it was that he had been a Scout leader, and he had run an organisation I think called the Dunblane Rovers for youngsters, that he had had a disagreement with the Scouting Movement, as a result of which there was some rivalry between him and the Scouts in relation to the boys' club, Dunblane/

Dunblane Rovers, which was extremely popular, but that the Scouts or some people in the Scouts resented that, and that they had made complaints to the local authority that he was presenting himself as part of the Scouts, and that the name caused some confusion, and that as a result of these complaints the let of Dunblane High School had been withdrawn without reason being given by the Education Authority.

Can you date this meeting? - I cannot.

Was it long after you were elected? - I don't know, but it must have been during 1983, certainly.

And he then comes along to your surgery and tells you about this, does he? - Yes, as people do. People either write to me or come to my surgeries. I can't remember at that time if I operated an appointment system -- probably not, I was not very organised at that time -- I had just been elected.

I think you kept a fairly full record of correspondence, but you got rid of that at some stage? - When we moved house we had to destroy quite a lot of correspondence, and all my correspondence from my first Parliament and quite a sift through my second Parliament was destroyed, although we have been able to recover quite a lot of correspondence.

I think we have a lot of the correspondence from 1988 onwards? - Yes, I have produced this to the police.

And the police have had access to these.....? - Yes. I am happy for it to be made available to the Inquiry.

Yes? - There is some of the correspondence relates to one particular piece, a letter from a parent in the 1990s, where obviously I think disclosure should be with the consent of the parent.

On that particular one you are concerned about, that has already been disclosed to the Inquiry, /

Inquiry, anonymously as far as the parent is concerned, and is therefore already in the Inquiry's domain. As a result of Hamilton consulting you at the surgery was there any particular action that you took? - I haven't got any record of what I did, but I would almost certainly have written to Central Regional Council. The complaint was that the let had been withdrawn without reason, and I would almost certainly have written to the Regional Council asking what the position was in respect of this.

Yes? - I know by virtue of looking back over the correspondence a complaint had been made to the Ombudsman by his councillor, but I don't recall whether when he came to see me he told me whether that was the position or not.

Were you aware of a petition with 70 signatures also supporting him? - I do remember receiving correspondence from parents supporting him at the time, and I think there was a petition. There was a reference in the volume of correspondence to the Ombudsman's report, which was sent to me in 1984.

Do you have any recollection of persons approaching you about his activities to complain about them rather than to support them? - Yes, Councillor Davidson expressed concern to me about Hamilton, and George Robertson, who of course lives in Dunblane and has just given evidence, also spoke to me in the House of Commons about Hamilton, and indicating that he had -- his son had been involved in Hamilton's club, that he had gone with some friends to watch one of the evening sessions for young people that Hamilton organised, that he was worried because he thought it was rather militaristic, and he was aware of rumours circulating in Dunblane about Thomas Hamilton, and he expressed his concern.

Yes? - I asked him if he had any evidence of any wrongdoing or anything like that, and he said he did not. I think he acknowledged that there were a number of parents who were very enthusiastic about this boys' club.

Yes? - I think also at that time the Ombudsman's report would have been underway, and I think/think I would have indicated to him that we should await the result of the Ombudsman's investigation.

So by that time your recollection is that you were aware of Councillor Ball's submitting Hamilton's complaint to the Ombudsman? - He was aware that a complaint had been made to the Ombudsman. Of course, at that time the complaint was about withdrawal of the let of Dunblane High School, so Hamilton's clubs were not operating, and the issue was whether they should be reinstated.

Yes? - Now, I can't remember now what I knew then and what I know now, but when I received the Ombudsman's report it set out in detail all the grounds, and I read that report.

It was Hamilton who sent the Ombudsman's report to you, was it not? - He sent it to me. I don't recall having any constituency case before for the Ombudsman had found so convincingly in favour of a constituent.

Yes? - At that time I think Members of Parliament could not refer cases directly to the Ombudsman, that had to be done by a councillor. He sent the report to me, and I wrote to him congratulating him on his success, because the Ombudsman's report indicated the Council had been wrong to withdraw the let, that the reasons for withdrawing the let were not supported by any evidence, that there had been no formal complaints made about Hamilton, that his clubs were well run, that the Council had been motivated by little more than -- I think the Ombudsman used the phrase "gossip".

Yes? - He also indicated the Education Authority were willing to reinstate the let if Hamilton changed the name of his group and if he made it clear he did not have the endorsement of the Regional Council.

Yes? - That was a fairly convincing conclusion by the Ombudsman, and had to be seen in the context of his original complaint to me, which was that malicious rumours had been circulating about him and that the withdrawal of the let at short notice, without reason, had done enormous damage to him in the community and reinforced the whispering/whispering campaign he said which was being conducted against him by the Scout Movement.

Can you remember if when the let was reinstated there were any continuing concerns or anxieties being expressed to you either by the Regional Council or by parents again such as Mr. Robertson? - I don't recall any continuing concern. I do recall there was reported pretty prominently at that time. It was a front page story in the Scotsman; I remember that because I happened to have the cutting still in the file.

Yes? - It indicated a number of councillors felt they had been badly treated, and that the whole thing had been badly handled. I think that drew a line under that.

Yes? - My recollection of when I next met or heard of Hamilton was when he wrote to me about the way the police had carried out particular investigations following on complaints.

That would mean it was probably 1988 before you heard from him again? - Yes.

Just to complete the picture in relation to the Ombudsman, could you look at one letter?

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, the reference of this letter is DCF/21.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: This is a letter, I think, dated 23rd November, 1984, which is you writing to Mr. Hamilton thanking him for sending you the Commissioner's report and congratulating him on his success, and hoping that he will take steps to ensure that it was given proper publicity? - Yes.

It was given publicity, I think? - Yes. I think this has to be seen in the context of his claim that he had been maligned, and that it had damaged his reputation, and that there was no justification for the withdrawal of the let, or that the withdrawal of the let was associated with rumours in relation to boys in his club.

The first document that has been recovered from the Inquiry is a letter from Mr. Hamilton, /

Hamilton, DCF/18, addressed to you, dated 9th November, 1988? - Yes.

That is a letter you got I think in reply to one you had sent him on the 4th November, 1988; is that right? - Yes, it certainly appears that way.

And that is in the context of the complaint you have just mentioned? - About the police?

Yes? - It certainly indicates he has had an unsatisfactory reply.

And that is consistent with your own personal recollection you have just given evidence of? - Yes.

Now, it follows I think there has been a fallow period between 1984 and 1988 when little or nothing, perhaps nothing at all, was communicated between Hamilton and you. Is it fair to say that from 1988 onwards you did have fairly regular correspondence with him? - Yes, I would say we had a great deal of correspondence. I was just going to make the point that I seem to recall there may have been some delay between the publication of the Ombudsman's report and the decision by the local authority to reinstate the let, and it is possible there may have been correspondence at that time. But that is based on my own recollection, and I don't have a record of that, and the police and other sources that have brought together correspondence have identified the correspondence, and of course the Regional Council I think have copies of the correspondence. I would be surprised if there had not been some correspondence about the response to the Ombudsman's report, because he was pretty persistent.

Yes? - Certainly my own file from 1988 onwards, there were numerous letters from Hamilton. He had a capacity to focus in on detailed points and to pursue them with a terrier-like quality.

As far as 1988 is concerned, I take it in 1988 you did not meet him again, although we have some correspondence, and that your next meeting was the/

the following year? - Yes.

So we are dealing here with a complaint that he was making about the way in which the police were investigating some incident at Loch Lomond, and there is some correspondence about that? - Yes.

Can you tell us how you as a constituency MP normally handle correspondence from constituents complaining about some authority's activities or actions? - Quite a lot of correspondence is complaining about the Government or the local authority or other agencies. What I normally do is to forward the correspondence to the relevant authority. If it is a complaint about for example the railways or rail privatisation I would forward the correspondence to the relevant Minister and ask him to look into the points which have been made and let me have a response I can forward to the constituent. If it is a local authority I would write to the Chief Executive. If it was about Benefits I would write to the officers concerned with that.

Are there in your correspondence examples of your passing stuff from Hamilton to the local authority? - Yes.

Are there also frequent examples of you passing stuff from Hamilton to the police about whom he complained? - Yes.

In fact was some of that correspondence directly through the Scottish Office, to which Hamilton also directed some of his own correspondence? - There is a rule, which can be rather tiresome -- because it takes longer to get something done -- that if you are a Minister and a constituent writes to you on a matter which relates to your Ministerial responsibility you have to reply through the relevant Government department. The reason for this is so the Ministers are not committing the Government to policy decisions the Department does not know about.

Yes? - Hamilton did write to me I think in 1991 -- no, that can't be right; he wrote to me when I was in the Scottish Office, so it must have been prior to 1990. No, it may perhaps have been 1991. Anyway, he wrote to me in respect of the/the actions of the Child Protection Unit of Central Scotland Police, and at that time I was the Minister who had responsibility for Social Work and child protection issues, and that is why the correspondence was dealt with through the Scottish Office. I sent a memo, which I have made available to the Inquiry, to my Private Secretary asking the Department to provide a suitable response to Mr. Hamilton.

Apart from passing on this correspondence as you would for any constituent, if a person such as Mr. Robertson, who is a constituent of yours, makes an oral complaint to you about an authority, what advice do you generally give to such a person about how to convey the complaint to the proper authority? - In the main I do not like oral complaints. If people say to me, ring me up or talk to me in the street, to any constituent I say "Would you send me a letter to the House of Commons?". Equally, unless there is particular urgency it is not my practice to follow up complaints over the telephone; I prefer to have things in writing so that everyone can see what has happened, and it is a matter of record.

Yes? - My practice has been that the system I operate is that when we write to local authorities we copy the reply to the constituent, and in that way we can make sure we have a clear understanding of where we have got to on any particular complaint. I don't know if your question was related to what I did when George Robertson spoke to me about this.

What did you do as far as his complaint was concerned? - His complaint was that he was concerned, but that he had no evidence of any wrongdoing; he was just anxious about him, and I basically noted that. He didn't write to me. At that time the let had already been withdrawn, and the issue was its reinstatement, which was of course a matter for the Education Authority, Central Regional Council.

Yes? - And being a new Member of Parliament -- and there was a difference of political party running the Region at that time -- George would have been able to perhaps have more influence within the Regional Council than I would have/have had at that time.

In your evidence you said to us that Councillor Davidson also expressed concerns to you, and she was a Regional councillor at that time? - Yes.

When was that? Was that near the time Mr. Robertson spoke to you? - It was certainly in 1983, and she indicated to me she was anxious about him, that she had heard rumours about him. Interestingly enough, the last letter Hamilton sent me other than the copy of the letter he sent to Her Majesty the Queen, was in February, 1996, where he makes the same claim as he made in 1983, and where he says in that letter that Councillor Davidson had been approached by the Scout Movement.

Yes? - I am not aware I was aware of that at the time. She certainly expressed concerns to me, and to both Councillor Davidson and George Robertson I advised them that if in the future they had any evidence or any knowledge of any parents who had concerns that they should encourage them to report these to the appropriate authorities.

I will ask you about this letter now rather than later. DCF/113, which is a letter of 11th February, 1996, which came to you from Hamilton? - Yes.

I am going to go through that in a moment. Can you confirm to me it had various attachments to it? - Yes, it did.

One was an earlier letter he had written to you in March, 1993 about the horrific murder of the little James Bulger? - Yes.

And again writing at some length about his own activities in Dunfermline and also Dunblane? - Yes.

And complaining about police intervention in these activities; is that right? - Yes. He rambles on about what he describes as witch hunts by Central Scotland Police.

And he also attached to it a letter that had been sent to all parents, dated 18th August, 1995. Did you actually receive a copy of this from another source at one stage? - Sorry, /

11.20 a.m.

Sorry, I haven't had a chance to look at this letter; this is the letter of the 18th of August?

Yes, the circular letter. Mr. Robertson has indicated that he forwarded stuff to you and that may have been one of the things? - I received a copy of a communication which he had circulated and he had the names of particular people as contacts which included my name and I wrote to him asking him to change that but it is not this document here. George Robertson approached me about a leaflet which was circulated in 1994, so that was prior to this.

We will come to that in a minute; this attachment is again a letter of the 18th of August 1995 and that was sent to all parents and he has written a bit on the bottom of it dated the 11th of February, the same date as the covering letter; what did he say there? - "Dear Mr. Forsyth, prior to October 1983 70 Dunblane boys attended the Dunblane Club weekly, now there are five of which only one attended the 1995 course/camp. Others are bussed in from other areas to attempt to make up the numbers".

He also encloses a copy of a letter which he sent in January 1996 to Dr. Robert Ball, is that right? - Yes.

A letter from a solicitor about being refused Legal Aid or about Legal Aid and a note at the bottom dated the 11th of February to you that Legal Aid was refused? - Yes.

A copy of another circular dated the 28th of June 1993, another dated the 24th of July, 1995 and all this came to you with a covering letter of the 11th of February, 1996? - Yes.

I think in that letter he was saying that over the years there had been serious problems "Of which the root cause is as a result of malicious gossip circulated by certain Scout officials mainly from Dunblane and a number of the names are Vass, Muirhead, Sharp, McFarlane and Dobie. You are aware that the problem with Central Regional Council in 1983 was as a result of Vass approaching Councillor Mrs./

Mrs. Davidson in confidence and the resulting speculation on her part. At that time senior officers of Central Scotland Police had made several discrete inquiries and their conclusion was that there had been an injustice and this was later confirmed by the Ombudsman", is that the first paragraph? - Yes.

Then he is complaining that police officers were not told that so things went wrong? - Yes.

Does he go on in the last paragraph to say "I understand that senior officers of Central Scotland Police were satisfied that everything is okay. However, I have been unable to recover from the very serious damage caused by Central Scotland Police which has compounded the very difficult situation which already existed. As you have already received my numerous detailed letters of complaint there is no need to repeat my comments other than to say that the long-term effect of such has been a deathblow to my already difficult work in providing sports and leisure activities to local children as well as my public standing in the community"? - Yes.

Now, what did you do with this letter? - I sent him a reply saying that I had received his letter and noted his comments. By this stage we had had a vast volume of correspondence from him and I had really got to the point where I felt there was nothing that could be added to the representations which he was making through me to Central Scotland Police and in April 1991, for example, he asked for a meeting with me and I refused the meeting. He also at some stage made an appointment to come to one of my surgeries and I wrote to him indicating we had cancelled the appointment and I saw no purpose in continuing to involve me in what I thought were his unreasonable continuing representations that the police had somehow acted unfairly towards him in carrying out their duties to respond to particular complaints.

Your letter of the 11th of February was an acknowledgement and just filed? - We sent him a reply which was to the effect "Thank you for your letter, the contents of which have been noted".

And/

And you would pass them on to anyone else? - I would pass them on to anyone else. Of course, with hindsight it is able to say that now, that it was quite a different character to any of the previous correspondence we had received. All the previous correspondence had been saying, if you have a look and if you have it from Central Scotland Police.....however, there is one particular point which we continued to argue and move the thing forward but this letter, having the benefit of hindsight and reading back through the correspondence, this letter is quite different because it appears to indicate he is giving up on the fight, it does seem to be a kind of indication that he is not departing from his view that he has been treated unfairly but that he is no longer going to continue the correspondence. There was a similar example but it is slightly different and that was he did write at some stage after the correspondence about his summer camp at Loch Lomond indicating, where he had been vehement in his criticism of the police and suddenly out of the blue he was saying he accepted the position and he was taking steps to ensure that things would be improved in the running of his camps but this letter of the 11th of February seemed to me to be saying that "I am not departing from my position and the grievance which I feel I have" but he was not pursuing the matter and the letter which he copied to me and to the Queen I think is similar in character.

He includes some of the enclosures which are that one you have just referred to and looking at these enclosures can you confirm to me that they are..... the circulars and letters, whether he is trying to justify himself? - I am not sure, I don't want to be awkward but I am not sure how many of these I have received previously and that can be checked by looking in the file.

That one there is what comes from your file? - The James Bulger one, I think that one struck a particular cord with me that he should single out the horrific murder of James Bulger in the light of what he did.

What you have there is what was said to you complete dated the 11th of February and you have a letter which you yourself have given us your description of is a change in the tone of correspondence?/

correspondence? - Yes.

You have these other letters attached? - Yes.

They are a selection of material over a period of time but they are letters of justification trying to defend himself? - I think that is generally correct but then all the correspondence that I had with him was in that kind of tone and what is striking because I don't get every year in the constituency but it would be more than several thousand; of course, letters come in and one reads the letters and you deal with them, you don't have an opportunity to read the run of correspondence which I have now done, of course, and which I did immediately after the events of the 13th of March but if you read the run of correspondence it strikes you he has moved to criticise the police because they were investigating his camp. In that correspondence he will explain how the police's anxiety was wrong and he will attack the motives of the parents and throughout the whole theme of the correspondence it is one of how he has been subjected to unjust treatment by various authorities.

I wonder if you could help me with this, you have described the letter itself, that is the one he has handwritten on the 11th of February, as a change in his tone? - Yes.

If you look at the little notes that have been written on the bottom of this they are protestation letters. At the bottom he writes about "Prior to October 1983 70 Dunblane boys attended the Dunblane Club weekly, now there are five of only which one attended the 1995 course/camp"? - Yes.

That is the same tone as the handwritten letter. If you go to the next one that is handwritten it is one from the solicitor about Legal Aid and he has written "Mr. Forsyth, Legal Aid was refused"? - Yes.

And the third one "Mr. Forsyth, only one Dunblane boy attended, the others were bussed in from other clubs"? - Yes.

Do you see in all of these notes the same resigned/resigned tone as appeared in the outer letter you received? - Yes, indeed that was the view that I took of the correspondence and you will see from the correspondence that I have had with him that he wrote to great length and he copied me with quite a lot of material. It wasn't for me to get involved in arguments about police investigations or complaints about the conduct of policemen. I simply acted as a kind of postman to the relevant authorities and I have dealt with his complaints very fully. My reaction to the 11th of February, 1996 letter was one of relief because it seemed to indicate that perhaps he was going to give up writing to me.

In this same connection of relaying concerns and complaints could I ask you just I think almost finally but not quite to look at DCD221 which is a letter recovered from Central Scotland Discipline and Complaints file and is that a letter dated the 15th of March 1994 from you to the Chief Constable? - Yes, it is.

You have mentioned this already, can you read the letter to us? - "Dear Mr. Wilson, Mr. George Robertson MP has drawn the attached copy of leaflets to my attention in connection with Mr. T.W. Hamilton. I have also had a call from one concerned parent following a discussion with the police. I promised to keep you informed".

That is in addition to complaints you have had in writing from parents? - Yes.

Do we see there a leaflet which we have already seen one copy of from Mr. Robertson's evidence which is about the Dunblane Boys' Sports Club? - Yes.

And another leaflet which is passed to you but he didn't actually have a copy of but it is about the Dunblane Boys' Sports Club and also his photographs of children with it all of whom are recognisable, is that right? - When you say recognisable.....?

If you knew these boys you would be able to identify them on the photographs? - Yes.

They are close-ups of them? - They are portrait/portrait photographs of the boys.

And this was what you were passing on to the Chief Constable at Mr. Robertson's request? - No, George Robertson had, I think.....he probably mentioned to me, I think he probably said that Hamilton seemed to be putting leaflets round Dunblane and he had sent me a copy of it; this is the 15th of March, 1994 and by that time I would have known that there would have been some police investigations. Indeed, I think I wrote a letter which again has been made available when I was in the Scottish Office to Hamilton indicating a report had been sent to the Procurator-Fiscal so I knew there was police interest in his activity and I simply sent a leaflet for that reason and also because of the complaints which I had had from a particular parent. I am not certain if the parent referred to in this letter.....you perhaps know the answer to this, whether the parent referred to in this letter is the same parent as had written to me about the other leaflet.

I think may not be but I don't actually know, I am relying on your recollection? - Yes.

There is no reason to think it is the same parent? - Well, I am not sure which.....I think it may be the same parent but I don't know that.

Was your decision to pass this on simply a decision you made yourself simply by getting your hands on the material? - Yes.

Is that something you would automatically do in situations where you knew the police had an interest in some person's activity? - Yes, I have to make sure I get the timing on this -- the previous representations that I had.....I had a letter from parents in 1993, at the end of 1993, and they had complained.....they had actually written to me saying they had received a leaflet which had my name down as a contact as well as the Chief Executive of the Regional Council and officials of the Youth Department in Stirling District Council and I was pretty angry about that.

Perhaps you could have in front of you, if it would refresh your memory, DCF106 which is the letter/letter I think you are referring to? - Yes, right -- just to finish on the previous point, this parent asked me what I could tell them about Hamilton because they had received this leaflet with my name down as a contact. I wrote to Hamilton, I think it is the only letter I actually sent to him, saying that I understood that he had circulated a letter to parents giving my name as a contact and that I was more than a little surprised to learn he had done this and I asked him to remove my name from the list of contacts. Now, the parent who had written to me expressed anxiety about Hamilton and the reaction that their son had as a result of attending one of his camps which was the one in Dunblane and I wrote.....I was sufficiently concerned about this that I wrote to the Chief Executive of the Council suggesting that the Council may wish to interview the parent in order to get to the bottom of their concern. I received in reply a letter from the Chief Executive of the Council saying that it wouldn't be appropriate for them to interview the parents because a police investigation was underway so I knew there was a police investigation underway; I think it was the first serious written complaint from a parent and although there was nothing substantial in the complaint the response from the Regional Council indicated that there was a police investigation underway and so I sent a leaflet to the Chief Constable because I knew this was happening.

Now, you may have known at the time that you were not the only point of contact mentioned in the letters that Hamilton had circulated to parents, you would realise that a number of Police Forces and Local Authorities had been mentioned. Were you aware of any action that they took similar to your own or did you act independently of them? - As far as I recall I acted independently of them and I think that it was a kind of.....the interesting thing about Hamilton is that he wrote extremely careful, controlled, analytical letters. I was furious when he put my name as a contact for obvious reasons but if you look at the letter he says "The above are our main contacts and are not given as referees or guarantors". I think that was typical.

You are referring to a letter we don't have in front of us, can you give us the date of that one? - That was a letter to parents dated the 19th/

19th of April, 1993; this is the letter which I think you were referring to which gave my name as a contact.

You have a reply to that letter which is in front of you telling him that he shouldn't be using your name and that one is dated the 23rd of October? - Yes, I didn't reply to it, it was drawn to my attention to the parents who had complained about.....they were concerned about Hamilton and asked if I could give them any information about his clubs, they wrote me a letter which I think may be available.....they wrote to me on the 26th of September.

If you look at DCF107 which should be a letter of the 11th November? - Yes.

That is a letter of the 11th of November acknowledging the complaints which you had passed on I think? - Yes, we are getting in a muddle here. The letter from the parents to me expressed concern about their son's response to having been involved with Hamilton. Their story was that he had been involved with his club and at first he was very enthusiastic and he enjoyed the club and their son had then become somewhat withdrawn.

Now,/

11.40 a.m.

Now, that letter made reference to, it stated in the letter I was a named main contact for the club. Now, this is what so far as I recall alerted me to the existence of.....

That is the letter dated September 26th, and included with it in the bundle you have got is one dated 19th May, 1993. This is the circular to parents about a Balfron Boys' Sports Club. In that you are named as one of those main contacts? - Yes.

At the House of Commons? - Yes.

And this is the letter to which the concerned parents were referring; is that the right one? - Correct.

You passed it on to the local authority who acknowledged its receipt on 20th October, 1993? - That is right. I was not aware of that letter dated 19th April, 1993 until it was drawn to my attention by those parents. I then wrote to Hamilton -- I think this is right -- I then wrote to Hamilton indicating that he should remove my name as a contact. I also wrote in response to the letter of 26th September from the parents to the Central Regional Council Chief Executive asking him if he would meet with the parents and discuss their concerns. He wrote to me saying he thought it was -- quite rightly -- saying it was inappropriate as there had been a number of complaints and that Central Scotland Police were currently investigating them. So that reassured me that the police and the Social Work authority were aware of these complaints and they were being investigated, and that's why -- I imagine -- that's why when I subsequently received a report from George Robertson to indicate another letter was being circulated in Dunblane that I would have sent it to the police so that they were aware of this material, which I am sure they would have had from other sources.

The only other letter I want to ask you about is one dated 31st August, 1991. The reference to that particular one is in a folder we already have, D103K. It is a long letter dated 31st August, 1991 from Hamilton. What you have there is an/an unsigned copy of that letter. I only want to ask you about one aspect of it which will be of interest to the Inquiry and this is on page 5. If you go to page 5 and down to the second bottom paragraph just at the end is there a statement in that letter from Hamilton about photographs, "I personally do not keep any photographs either at home or elsewhere. All of this was fully explained to visiting officers on 23rd July, 1991". Now, you may not remember that being part of the terms of this letter but is that typical, is that letter itself typical of the correspondence you got from him? - Yes, pages and pages and, secondly, can you confirm I have accurately quoted from that paragraph on page 5? - Yes.

You can part with that. The factual matter in that sentence may be of some significance to the Inquiry? - Yes.

If there is anything else of significance in the letter tell us please? - It was just the point about -- I didn't pick this up -- when he says "I personally do not keep any photographs either at home or elsewhere". I can remember him sending me photographs which we returned of boys which shows an inconsistency here. In one of the letters which he sent he sent some photographs of boys at the camp to show how they were enjoying themselves, etc., and this is obviously an inconsistency -- unless he has photographs which he has somewhere else.

There are many other inconsistencies than that. The reason that I invited you, as I explained earlier, to give evidence, was to see what the factual position was where the subject, or your involvement in the subject of Hamilton and local authority premises for his boys' clubs. It doesn't appear on the face of the correspondence or from listening to what you have said this morning that you really had any direct involvement and relationship between Hamilton and the local authority and indeed the police other than to be a post box in your role as constituency MP? - I'm afraid Members of Parliament are glorified post boxes in many respects. But I find if there is a letter from a Member of Parliament asking for a matter to be looked at this means that it is looked at and that results in the constituent obtaining satisfaction as to their grievance.

Is/

Is being the Secretary of State for Scotland an advantage or disadvantage in that regard? - Depends who you are writing to.

I suppose in some quarters it may be seen as a stronger measure of support? - What it does mean is if -- which is why I think the constituency member system works extremely well -- it does mean that people -- in Hamilton's case it certainly wasn't the case because he was articulate enough -- what it does mean is a constituent who does have a particular problem, that can be looked at by the top people in the organisation responsible, a response can come back and there is an opportunity for them to consider that response. Every Member of Parliament will have a stream of constituents who are regular correspondents whom there is no satisfying -- and I have several others in that category -- and it is our job to respond to constituents and try to deal with the complaints as well as we can. Inevitably in such a role, as happened in the 90s with Hamilton, where the ground has been gone over, it was simply trying to re-hash an argument and complaints which had been properly investigated.

I wanted to be clear, it wasn't being suggested that really was the role you were playing. The ordinary constituent MP's role is relaying correspondence to the authority that should be dealing with the complaint or concern of the constituent? - Yes, that is correct. Towards the end of this run of correspondence in the 90s there was a pattern of events and the police had been involved on a number of occasions and I was aware that a report had been sent to the Fiscal, and one was very much more anxious about Thomas Hamilton and, for example, in 1984 when the Ombudsman's report had given him such a clean bill of health.

How many times did you actually meet him? - I can think it was twice but it may have been on three occasions.

Once is the first one you have told us about. The second one was in connection with his complaint against the police? - Yes, that was September, 1989.

Apart from that do you have any recollection/recollection of actually meeting him? - No. I just have a feeling in the back of my mind that he may have come to see me after the Ombudsman's report but I don't know that. So I am saying he came on two or three occasions.

You last met him in 1989? - Yes. Although he did ask to come and see me subsequent to that and he did make an appointment at the surgery as I have already indicated. He did write asking to meet me and I declined which is not something I would normally do with a constituent. In the case when he made an appointment to come to the surgery, it was cancelled and I wrote to him informing him why: it was basically because he was trying to draw me into the argument about the way in which the police had carried out an enquiry and I did not think it was appropriate for me to do that.

Is there anything in the impression you made of him by meeting him that would be of value to the Inquiry? - Well, when I first met him he was very plausible. He seemed to have a real grievance, and that comes through his whole correspondence. He believed or he purported to believe that he had been unfairly treated. There was nothing about him that would have led me to conclude that in any way he would have been capable of what he did.

No cross-examination.

LORD CULLEN: Thank you very much, I am much obliged for your assistance.

MR. BONOMY: Sir, I regret to have to say that my administrative machine, which normally works extremely efficiently, has broken down a little this morning, largely through my fault. As a result of which I am in some difficulty about proceeding straight away with the next witness. I wonder if in the circumstances, bearing in mind we have made fairly good progress since the Inquiry started, I might have a short adjournment. I have in mind something up to half an hour. I appreciate it is not terribly well timed but I would be extremely grateful if I could have about half an hour at this stage or say to 20 minutes past 12 if that isn't of inconvenience to the Inquiry.

LORD CULLEN: Certainly, I quite understand. That will be the case, 20 past 12.

After/

12.24 p.m.

After a short adjournment.

MR. BONOMOY: I am sorry, sir, about the continued delay. The system is still creaking a little, but I do propose to proceed at least with the evidence of David William Cobb.

DAVID WILLIAM COBB, (38), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Now, you previously held a number of positions with Central Regional Council; is that correct? - That is correct.

When the authorities were joined up what was the position you held? - I was Depute Director of Administration and Legal Services, effectively the head of Legal Services.

When did your employment terminate? - I took voluntary severance on the 31st March. I am currently working as a consultant with Stirling Council, but it is my intention to begin training for the Bar in October.

It was this year you took voluntary severance? - Yes.

As a consultant with Stirling Council are you working on legal matters? - Yes, that is correct: primarily in relation to two developments in the commercial property field.

Are you a solicitor? - I am still until the end of October.

What are your professional qualifications? - LLB(Hons).

When did you first start with Central Region? - In July, 1983.

And throughout the period till 1986 were you in the Administration and Legal Services Department? - That is correct.

I know that your closer, direct involvement in the affairs of Thomas Hamilton was really/really from about 1993/1994 onwards; is that right? - As far as I can recall, primarily after becoming the Depute Director in 1995; but as is clear from my statement, I was involved on one or two other occasions.

I want to go back a little further and try to paint a picture of the state of your knowledge when you do become more directly involved. It would probably be best if you have the folder in front of you. If we could start with D: do you have that? - Yes.

Now, you will see that is a letter dated 7th March, 1990 from the head teacher of a primary school in Stirling to the Director of Education? - Yes.

And that enclosed a sample of leaflets which had been posted to the primary school? - That is correct.

It goes on to say "It is my understanding that all correspondence addressed to pupils from outside agencies should be cleared by yourself. I would appreciate advice on whether this has been cleared and should this leaflet be distributed"? - Yes.

I give you that as an example of the type of problem a head teacher might have. When you became involved in dealing with Hamilton's affairs were you aware of teachers in primary schools being concerned about his leafleting activities? - I couldn't be precise as to the years.

Were you involved in the consideration of the policy of the Council on matters such as sending out leaflets through the schools? - Yes. In 1995 I think particularly, I and a number of officers from Education were trying to find some way of devising a consistent policy which would allow us to treat like cases alike. There were problems in trying to strike a proper balance.

Yes? - For example, if you simply said uniformed organisations are suitable for distribution, on what basis would you discriminate between these and locally run organisations?

Yes? - It was not something we were ever/ever able to resolve satisfactorily, in terms of something that would save us having to distribute Tom Hamilton's leaflets.

Can I take it that up until the time in 1995 when you were considering the policy that the Council's policy was to give the head teacher a measure of discretion about voluntary organisations' documents being distributed? - I believe that is so.

Now, were you aware of the general nature of the complaints that officials of the Regional Council were receiving about Hamilton's activities? - Yes. I had seen correspondence for example relating to the defamation question which the Chief Constable had referred to us, and later on it became quite clear that Mr. Hamilton considered himself to be hard done to, shall we say, by certain sections of the Regional Council.

That is complaints being made by Hamilton? - Yes.

What was your knowledge of the complaints being made against him by parents of children, for example? - Before 1995 I can only speak to the summer camp in 1989, in which I had a brief involvement.

It is either 1988 or 1991? - I beg your pardon, 1988.

That was the very first one? - Yes.

What was your involvement in that complaint? - It really was a "Fire Brigade" call, shall we say. A problem had obviously arisen about the summer camp. Education wanted to call a meeting pretty quickly, and owing to holidays I was the most senior official around.

Yes? - I went over to a meeting, which lasted about two hours, in the offices of one of the Assistant Directors of Education, Bob Curry.

Yes? - Really we reviewed the information we had and left that to be investigated further, and I didn't have any further involvement in how that matter was dealt with.

Who/

Who did you understand was investigating it at the time?
- At that point I understood we were meeting because the police were in contact, having been contacted by their colleagues in Strathclyde.

Was it your Education Department or your Social Work Department that had direct involvement at that stage? - I think it was Education.

And as far as you were concerned was the question of investigation a matter at that stage for the police? - Yes.

Would it be right to say that when problems began to crop up again, that is from 1985 onwards, particularly from 1989 onwards, that all of the problems were dealt with at official level and never got to the Councillor level, the member level? - Certainly nothing was put into any Committee paper.

And you of course were closely involved at the end of the whole business? - Yes.

Is it right also to say that a number of the individual Departments of the Regional Council were involved, in particular the Education Department, the Social Work Department and the Administration and Legal Services Department? - That is correct.

The question of the letting of school premises was a matter for Education? - Education had the statutory responsibility. Managerially quite a lot of this was dealt with within Administration and Legal Services, and latterly in some cases by School Boards.

Do you know much of the role played by School Boards in the letting of premises? - Not particularly, no, I'm afraid.

Were you involved at all in a complaint that Hamilton made about the way the Social Work Department combined with the police to investigate the camp in 1991? - In the sense that I had the involvement where the Chief Constable sought advice regarding the possibility of instituting a defamation action against Thomas Hamilton, one became/became aware from reading the correspondence we felt various elements in the Regional Council and the police were conspiring against him.

I think you gave certain advice to the Chief Constable? -
Yes.

What was the advice? - The advice was that as far as the research indicated there was a possibility that he had made defamatory statements against the Chief Constable and his officers, but the recent authority of FRASER v. MIZRA suggested that the award that could be made was not likely to be very high -- I think it was £2,000 in that case.

Yes? - We also wondered whether it was wise to sue Mr. Hamilton in view of the danger that we might be giving him a platform to air his conspiracy theory. Ultimately the feeling was "We are not experts in this area. Perhaps we should get the advice of Counsel".

So your advice was to seek Counsel's advice? - If the Chief Constable was so minded.

It sounds as though you were tending to suggest that the matter proceed no further? - In the sense that we felt there was unlikely to be an award made that would frighten, shall we say, Mr. Hamilton into silence.

You talked about conspiracy there. What sort of things was he alleging? - In broad terms, that officers of Central Scotland Police, officers of Central Regional Council and off the top of my head I think also the Scout Association, were all involved in some major conspiracy against Thomas Hamilton personally and his involvement with children.

I think the same attitude was displayed towards the authority as was displayed towards the police? - I believe so, yes.

Can you look at D115? - I have that.

Now, is that a letter to the Chief Executive of the Region from Hamilton, dated 26th February, 1992? - That is correct.

And/

And he is complaining about defamation in the last paragraph? - Yes.

He is accusing the Social Work Department of defaming him by telling parents certain things about him? - Yes. Even in 1996 Hamilton complained that rumours were circulating about him emanating from one or other of our schools.

In the third paragraph does it say "Given my full co-operation with the Child Protection Unit" -- that is the police -- "I am outraged that I have been defamed and damaged by the pervert hunt which followed on the basis that I take photographs of the children"? - Yes. That is I am sure what Thomas Hamilton believed, but it is not something I would have seen at that time.

I/

12.40 p.m.

I think he did have a strongly felt grievance against the Social Work Department for the way in which they investigated his camps in 1991? - Indeed, and also the police because the correspondence relating to the alleged or the conduct of that investigation by Central Scotland Police eventually began the complaint about how the complaint was being run.

Did Mr. Sinclair, Chief Executive have to deal with a complaint against the Social Work Department and the social worker in particular who dealt with the investigation? - Yes, but that is not within my direct knowledge.

You were not directly involved? - No.

Were you aware when you began directly to be more involved of complaints by parents about the way in which they were being treated at the club -- for example, what they had to wear, where they were being photographed, where they were on their own with Hamilton, what their changing arrangements were and so on? - Yes, I think that was the gist of my first contact as head of Legal Services.

Were you aware that the police had received a number of complaints, perhaps as many as 10, of that sort of conduct and had encouraged parents to communicate with the Local Authority because it was not apparently possible to prosecute on the evidence available? - Yes, I can't be absolutely certain that I knew what the.....

You did know that the parents had, for some reason or another, directed their complaints to the Local Authority? - Yes, I would expect that to happen not necessarily at the police's suggestion.

Including as we have here evidence that the police did encourage that course of action in the circumstances of the case then? - Yes, but all I can say is I am not aware of anything directly passed by that route.

Were you aware of an investigation into Hamilton's gymnastic agenda and the type of activity he did in his gymnastic classes carried out by a lady/lady in the Education Department, called Chillas? - Yes, I became aware of that subsequent to the incident.

And were you aware that she had tried to establish what his qualifications amounted to and discovered that he did have gymnastic qualifications which entitled him to supervise.....on the face of it in accordance with the Regional Council's guidelines to supervise some gymnastics? - Yes, I think he annually produced an authorisation from the British Amateur Gymnastics Association, I think he was Grade 4 from memory, exactly what that entitled him to do I don't know.

It may be Grade 5? - Yes.

Can I ask you to look at the letting arrangements in the light of what you had said about the Legal Department's involvement and could you look at D107 and D171; 170 is a memo from Mr. Flett to Councillor Ball. Who was Mr. Flett? - Mr. Flett was the Assistant Director of Administration of our Legal Services.

Is that the same department as you? - Yes, I worked on the legal side, Iain Flett, although he is or was qualified as a solicitor, at that point was responsible for clerking the Education Committee.

I think he is dealing in 170 with a request which he hasn't had satisfactorily answered, a request of Mr. Hamilton to provide information? - Yes.

That was to establish the bona fides of his club in view of something raised by the School Board, is that right? - Yes, I don't know anything of the background to it. I believe though that confirmation that Hamilton was not a one man band may have been one of the assurances he had to give after the 1983 Ombudsman's investigations.

I think you can confirm to me that D171 is an actual letter from Mr. Flett addressed to Mr. Hamilton on the same subject, looking for information about his organisation? - Yes, that is correct, from memory the final Minute was eventually produced.

Do/

Do you know that certain of the letting applications he made were delayed by the Legal Department pending the receipt of information? - Not by the Legal Department to my knowledge.

You were not directly involved with that? - No, I would have expected that primarily to be a matter for simply an administration procedure.

BY LORD CULLEN: Do you know which school was involved at that stage; we see a reference to a School Board, which school was it? - I am afraid I don't know.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: You were not involved with any dealings or correspondence with the Denny School Board? - I don't think so; it may be some of the work I did in 1995 emanated from Denny but not anything I can recall specifically.

Was it into 1995 before your involvement was really fairly intense? - That is correct.

Now, could you look at D201; do you see that is a letter from a gentleman called Young, Head of Resource Services to the rector of Dunblane High School; who was Dr. Young? - Dr. Young at that point was one of the heads of service in the Education Department; he subsequently became Acting Director of Education from the middle of 1995 until reorganisation.

You will see that the subject of this is certain difficulties in taking any action through the police and the Procurator-Fiscal; is this the difficulty that leads to your more direct involvement in the matter? - As I recall it there was another complaint which I think had reached Douglas Sinclair's desk, that is the Chief Executive, and also the first thing I was involved in as Deputy Director was a meeting between Douglas Sinclair, Graeme Young and myself regarding a complaint which, from memory, was primarily requesting the clothing, photography, etc.

Who was present at that meeting? - As far as I recall the Chief Executive, Graeme Young and myself.

Could/

Could you look please at D203. You will see that is a letter from Dr. Young to Thomas Hamilton dated the 10th of January, 1995? - That is correct.

There is some handwriting on that letter? - That is mine.

So this was the original draft letter which you added parts to? - That is correct.

This is the best copy I think we have of it and it does appear to have been sent out; that has followed the meeting that you attended? - That is correct.

What was the subject of the meeting? - It was the issue.....I can't recall where the complaint came from at the moment on the use of the black swimming trunks and I think also the failure to use changing rooms at the school in question.

So changing was done somewhere else? - In the hall being used, as far as I understand; actually looking at this I think that may have arisen separately; this was a question of the black swimming trunks and the photography.

It may actually be a composition of the two; first of all would you look at D197; you will see that is from Dr. Young to Detective Sergeant Moffat and there is reference there to two complaints and the letter is dated the 2nd of December, 1994? - Yes.

I don't want you to disclose the names -- do the names mean anything to you? - Specifically no.

If I tell you that the second of these where the name and telephone number are given was a complaint in relation to wearing black swimming trunks; is that consistent with what you are..... one of the subjects you were looking at? - With a fair degree of certainty I think so.

Could you look also at D199A; you will see that is a letter from a lady and if you look at the end you will see it has been sent to the Director of Education and Legal Administration at Central/

Central Regional Council? - That is correct.

You will see from that that the complaint is that the boys had to fully strip and change into black swimming trunks which he provided and this took place in the gymnasium with no attempt to provide privacy? - Yes.

That is a composite of the two points you mentioned and you will see the date is the 13th of December, 1994? - Yes.

Does that letter look like one of the complaints at least you were considering at that time? - I am fairly sure it is.

What action did the meeting decide to take? - Initially that Graeme Young should draft a letter to essentially ask Mr. Hamilton.....well, first of all to advise Mr. Hamilton that people were concerned and secondly, to ask him what his reasons were for conducting his clubs in this fashion.

Were you aware that that type of complaint had been made by a number of people and not just by the two I have shown you or the three I have shown you at this stage? - I think by then, yes -- whether it came up in the course of the meeting or whether I knew it previously the answer is yes.

This letter asks for answers from Hamilton to a number of questions? - That is correct.

What were the questions -- before I ask you to answer that is it right to say that the letter makes a statement that "The purpose of this activity, apparently, was to enable you to photograph the boys in these trunks"? - Yes.

Can you tell me what question was posed? - First of all, did he agree that that is what happened and then why did he do it, what use did he make of the photographs, what did they have to do with running the boys club, did he make it clear to parents that he would be undertaking photography and finally did he think it was appropriate to do that without obtaining parental consent.

That/

That is the 10th of January, 1995? - As advised I think it went out a day or two later.

I think there was a reply to that letter; would you look at 204? - Yes.

And that is quite a lengthy reply? - They generally were.

It also has enclosures with it? - Yes.

What is the enclosure? - It doesn't come out too well on the copy but I think Hamilton sent in photographs of a boy, it looks as if he is going over a vaulting horse so it is presumably a "for example" and to show he had nothing to hide.

He sent something else in addition to the picture of the boy; do you remember something else being sent? - No, I would need to be prompted on that, I didn't receive the original.

Was a pair of black swimming trunks not sent as well? - Yes, I remember that.

Do you remember that? - Yes.

And do you remember him explaining why he insisted on the boys wearing this clothing? - There is in the course of the letter some explanation for this; he would generally address these issues on the basis that the boys would turn up with the wrong kind of clothing or clothing that was dirty, etc., etc. -- far better from Tom Hamilton's point of view, he would argue that he provided them because he knows then they have the right equipment and it is clean.

Were there straight answers to the questions? - In a sense they were in as far as he would generally set out lengthy justifications and rationalisations in his terms to the questions which he was asked but when you looked at them you tended to find they didn't really answer the questions and primarily tended to be on the lines that "This is how I do it, I believe it is right, who are you to tell me I am wrong".

If you look at page two and just below the middle we can see there an example of how he deals/deals with a question; if you read the paragraph that starts "In a club situation"? - "In a club situation photography is nationally accepted and for us is a very important training aid, a record of our work and is used for public relations. Indeed a head of physical education of a local high school has stated that the video camera has become an essential tool to his department and is used daily to film children performing various sports as a valuable training aid. Furthermore your own Department's Community Education Department has sent me four letters or leaflets over the years offering free classes specifically for leaders working with children in a club situation to learn to use video cameras to enable a full understanding of its technical handling. Therefore your Authority is fully encouraging leaders to use photography in a club situation".

So he is turning matters round to find support for his activity from your own Authority? - That is correct, I would say that was a fairly typical answer to that kind of question.

If you turn to the last paragraph on that page which deals with photography consent? - "Parents on enrolling their sons give a written undertaking that they agree to abide by all rules, conditions and the leaders discretion and as such specific permission is not required for photography and I am surprised that you should seek to ask such a question when your own schools and clubs etc. do not themselves seek to gain such specific permission from parents. As I have said photography in a club situation is nationally accepted as being normal".

If you go to the first page of the letter at the foot do we see that the reason that he sent in a swimming costume was to prove that a very small water retention in the particular types of trunks he was using? - That is what he said.

And that it was black because there was no problem with colour matching and fading? - Yes.

After/

1.50 p.m.

After an adjournment for lunch:

LORD CULLEN: Very well. Shall we resume?

MR. BONOMY: Thank you, sir.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMY:

Could you now have before you D205. Is that a confidential memorandum that was sent to you? - That is correct.

Is that a memo from Dr. Young to you? - That is correct.

And that enclosed the letter we were just looking at?
- Yes.

I think that included a number of other items as well?
- Yes.

Publicity for the sports club? - Yes.

Including photographs of activities, all in support of the justification we look at in the letter just before lunchtime? - That is correct.

Were you aware at that time also of some support coming Mr. Hamilton's way from one of the local councillors? - In terms of overt support, no. I think you are referring to Councillor Ball.

Yes. He was in communication with the Education Section: did you know that? - At that time, January, 1995, no. I noticed that Hamilton had copied the letter we were discussing before lunch to Councillor Ball and Douglas Sinclair.

Could you look at D209? Do we have there a compliments slip covering other material, and that includes first of all a memorandum from you to Dr. Young? - Yes. I am sorry: it is from Dr. Young to me.

Yes, of course. At that stage is he alerting/alerting you among other things to the correspondence with Councillor Ball? - Yes, he is.

And he asks a question of you in the third paragraph?

- Yes.

What is that? - "I would value your comments as to whether or not there is any merit in pursuing this matter further".

What did you understand by the words "this matter"?

- The most recent correspondence stemming from the meeting in January with Douglas Sinclair, Dr. Young and myself.

And he then suggests a further discussion with Mr. Sinclair, the Chief Executive? - Yes.

Could you confirm that amongst the stuff sent with that, being copies of the material Hamilton had sent to Dr. Young, there was an article in the newspaper about the Council changing the colour of the livery on their vehicles? - Yes. It should be recalled that Councillor Henry, who is quoted there, is one of the minority group on Stirling Council, and may have been pursuing a political point as much as anything at that time.

But Hamilton had latched on to an article about the changing of the colour scheme of the Council livery, really presumably in connection with the swimming trunks? - I suppose it was that point, but it didn't make very much impact.

There is also a letter to Mr. Sinclair, dated 13th February, protesting again about the Council's attitude and saying his interest is in the welfare and protection of children? - Yes.

And there is other correspondence that has been taking place with him; is that right? - Yes.

So you were asked to consider whether anything else was worth doing? - Yes.

Could you look at D210? Is that your reply, dated 17th February, 1995? - Yes.

Now, /

Now, you are setting out the position as you understand it to Dr. Young? - Yes.

And you are saying that the tenor of the reply from Mr. Hamilton runs fairly true to form, in so far as it does not address some of the questions which have been put twice to him? - Yes.

What do you mean "put twice"? - I am trying to recall whether there was a separate letter on this particular issue.

I think if you look at the first paragraph that must be right: there has been one on the 7th February? - As well as the one in January, yes.

You say in the fourth paragraph what your position is. Can you read that? - Yes. "I am disinclined to leave matters where they stand. It might be that we should respond to Mr. Hamilton in a fashion which makes clear that no one in the Regional Council is taking a stance on the conduct of the boys' clubs. As a responsible Education Authority, the Regional Council has to give consideration to complaints which are made regarding the conduct of any lets, and it simply will not do for Mr. Hamilton to dismiss these as the grumblings of a minority of disinterested parents", something he particularly did in the first few paragraphs of his reply to the correspondence in January.

Can you read the next part, please? - Yes. "It is perhaps also worth pointing out to Mr. Hamilton that whilst he is familiar with how he runs the clubs, it is not immediately apparent on reading the literature that the gymnastics element will involve the provision of sports clothing by him; that extensive photography (whether or not as a training aid) will take place. I suppose Mr. Hamilton at least has confirmed that such photographs are made available to parents if they wish".

In the last paragraph you deal with the question of whether the names of people who have complained should be made known to him? - Yes.

You say in the last sentence "Might one solution be to indicate to Mr. Hamilton that we will disclose/disclose the identity of the complainants, provided that he is willing to have any comments which he makes relayed to the complainants directly?"? - It was a rather tentative suggestion, that: I did say that.

Would the Council normally make known the name of a complainer to the person complained of? - I think it would depend on the circumstances. One would worry that Mr. Hamilton, particularly given the fairly dismissive way he referred in his letter in January and in other correspondence to parents whom he regarded as either disgruntled troublemakers, disinterested parents -- it certainly became clear after the incident that Mr. Hamilton was not above going out and having it out with someone he considered was his enemy. In the circumstances I think we would be reluctant to dispose names of complainers.

Could you look at D212? - Yes.

This is a memo from one of the social workers to a Child Protection Officer about a complaint which has been made, again about his, Hamilton's, activity, and it refers to you getting a phone call about this? - Yes.

Do you remember being told about this? - Yes.

And the complaint was that two sons of the lady complaining had attended a club in Dunblane, and they were both refusing to go back due to the uncomfortable feelings about what happened, describing Mr. Hamilton as "weird" and allegedly being asked to remove T-shirts and pose for photographs in their shorts, while taking deep breaths? - Yes.

Now, this is another of the same, as it were, compared to other complaints that were by then familiar to you; is that right? - Yes, that is correct.

Can you say whether any action was taken on this? -

This is the first time I have seen that particular memo. I would expect this is one where we would have expected Child Protection as the specialists to undertake any investigations.

But/

But you don't know what happened in regard to that?
- I don't recall it going any further than the phone call I received.

I asked you earlier about the police encouraging complainers to come to the local authority. Would there rather have been a point reached where the authority would actually do something about letting property in view of the number of complaints that were coming in? - That is a difficult one. It is one I kept in mind throughout.

Yes? - If one was simply going to say that if complaints reached X level one terminates, the danger is that you are simply not addressing whether these complaints have any substance in them or not.

Yes? - The difficulty with the January correspondence and the complaints that were received in March was that it was likely to draw an answer in similar terms to those we had had from Mr. Hamilton in February.

Yes? - Now, the problem with that is that you either have to say there is something in there you can point to as fundamentally unsatisfactory and do something about it, or regard it as just about good enough to explain the way he was running the clubs. So whilst yes, in broad terms there were a number of complaints coming in, at this point we were not throwing anything up which took us beyond the January position. And bear in mind we had the experience in 1983 to bear in mind, which was to my mind a very clear indication that it was no use terminating Mr. Hamilton's lets unless there was something substantial. Complaints that Mr. Hamilton could answer up to a point did not seem to be sufficient in themselves.

On the other hand, we could probably see up to 10 different complaints like the one you have just looked at coming to the Council? - Yes.

Now, that is a rather different situation from 1983, where nobody substantiated any complaint in the sense of even identifying the complainer, except I think in relation to a boy cutting himself with an axe and not getting proper medical/medical treatment when he was at one of the camps? - Yes.

And even that was of doubtful significance to Central Region, as the camp was held outwith the Region? - Precisely.

But we might have a different situation by 1995, in that there is this build up of complaints of a similar nature, where people see things happening, albeit they are not overtly indecent? - Yes.

Do/

Do we never approach the point where there is material and say "You shall not have Council premises legitimise your operation"? - If we go back to the "legitimise" point the answer is yes, you could, but the danger is that we were not going to be able to prove much more than a philosophical difference with Mr. Hamilton as to how he ran his clubs.

Yes? - You could say Mr. Hamilton was very old-fashioned and was not giving a good experience, but what was wrong with it?

Yes? - Some people found Mr. Hamilton's way of running things unsatisfactory. We did for example suggest to people that Mr. Hamilton's general disclaimer of abiding by the rules and his discretion should be questioned more searchingly, and we also told Mr. Hamilton to stop taking photographs without parental consent: but to go beyond that and say "There are people who disagree with the way in which you run your clubs, and on that basis alone we will terminate your let" seems to me to be suspect.

Was there anybody on the staff of the Regional Council who thought it was a good idea for Thomas Hamilton's clubs to be held in school premises? - I think probably not many.

Were there any, that you know of? - No. I don't know how many people think a number of other organisations are a good or a bad idea.

I appreciate that: but if you have got a number of complaints because people feel uneasy about the nature of the activity and the things done in the course of that activity you have an authority which would appear on the face of the correspondence and from what you are saying is concerned about the nature of the activities and the things done: so is there not another justification, which did not perhaps exist in 1983, for saying "That is enough for us to terminate the let"? - It was very difficult to point to anything concrete beyond the fact that a number of people were complaining. Mr. Hamilton would also have fairly vociferously protested that he was being damned by those against him, and that the Regional Council were simply articulating these views.

Yes? - It is also worth mentioning that in 1983 Mr. Hamilton did produce a petition with a number of signatures on it approving what he did. These were people who genuinely felt it was okay or even good.

Would it be fair to say from that answer that the support that Hamilton got in 1983 from members of the public plus the success he had with the Ombudsman casts a constant cloud over the freedom he might otherwise have felt to act and stop his continued use of Council premises? - It certainly had to be a factor in my consideration. Now, I think the 1983 Ombudsman threw a general line anyway, and had it been Thomas Hamilton or anyone else we would not have tried to terminate the let in the way we did in 1983.

Yes? - One concern we had -- I think it was a particularly strong reservation -- was not to get ourselves into a situation where we went before the Ombudsman again and lost.

Yes? - Now, that was done in total ignorance of lack of success with the termination of lets in Lothian and Fife; we didn't know of these.

Yes? - The biggest danger it seemed to me was of launching ourselves down the 1983 slipway again, particularly as Mr. Hamilton regarded any words of praise from an official source as a vindication of himself.

Yes? - To have gone to the Ombudsman and lost would have been a very serious difficulty for us to terminate Mr. Hamilton in the future. So yes, it was a very big part of my consideration.

Could you now look at D227? That is a letter from Mrs. Chillas to Dr. Young? - Yes.

In relation to the Dunblane summer camp, in which it is suggested that the daily training programme was in the opinion of one of the people working for Hamilton much too difficult for young boys? - Yes. I believe that was also the evidence of yesterday's witness.

Then in the third paragraph you see it says "As you know, a parent telephoned me to say she had/had removed her child from the camp. He was very unhappy throughout"? - Yes.

Now, are you aware of complaints of this type from the camps as well as the clubs? - The camps at Dunblane -- I think they were a somewhat different kettle of fish from the camps in Loch Lomond, and may have been an example of showing sense, that he had realised that going to uninhabited islands for a summer camp was bad news.

So you saw the Dunblane summer camp as an improvement? - Yes, for two reasons: one, he was near facilities, running water, electricity, plumbing, etc.; secondly, there would be an opportunity for better supervision, because he was on our premises.

Could you look at D229? Is that a letter from a Peter Farquhar to you about a meeting in relation to Hamilton? - Yes.

Present were an Alan Steele, Mrs. Chillas, and Sergeant Moffat of the police, among others? - Yes.

What was the subject matter and the outcome of that meeting? - It primarily related specifically to a letter of 9th May that Hamilton had circulated literally door to door in the Dunblane area. It raised an inference that he had approval or support from the Regional Council. That was either a misconception or a distortion about what we had done. For example, he would tend to regard successful registration of the granting of a let as some form of approval. We were no more approving him than we were approving anyone else when we took these actions.

I think you made the decision that some effort should be made through head teachers to explain the Council's position? - Yes.

The memo states ".....there should be guidance to the head teachers that they should not distribute material except from organisations operating under a national body or community-based groups"? - Yes.

Did that happen? - No, there was a difficulty/difficulty in trying to figure out a policy which could be drawn in such a way that it did not say "Don't distribute anything in connection with Thomas Hamilton's boys' club". Now, the difficulty with saying "a national body or community-based groups" was that you could perhaps differentiate the two and say you could distribute for the Scouts, the Guides, the Boys' Brigade. Community-based groups were rather more difficult. What was Thomas Hamilton's boys' club?

The next part of the Minute goes on to more general subjects. Can you read the outcome of the meeting? - "Overall, those present would like to see Hamilton tackled in relation to the conduct of his activities and lets withdrawn. However, it was acknowledged that members of the Council would need to support this course of action, and that experience with the Ombudsman required careful action. Mention was made of a code of practice being drawn up, containing recommendations for the new authorities on regulating letting activities. It was confirmed that the Procurator-Fiscal was not taking action on the reports sent to him because there was not a crime being committed. There was nothing in value in relation to Hamilton's criminal record".

Was a code of practice ever drawn up as a recommendation for the new authorities? - I am afraid I do not know that. I am afraid I had taken severance by then.

Are you aware whether Hamilton had initiated any other complaints to the Ombudsman after the one in 1983 involving Central Region? - No, not that I know of.

Were you aware of one that Mr. Sinclair had to deal with, by meeting him at one stage? - Well, maybe.

You are not aware of it? - No.

Following that meeting I think a letter was drafted which you were asked to consider; is that right? - Yes.

Could you look at D231? Do we see there a memo for the proposed letter? - That is correct.

And/

And that is about the distribution of material? - That is correct.

That was for the head teachers? - Yes.

Was that letter sent, as far as you are aware? - I think it was.

Could we look at D230? Is that another draft that was sent to you for your consideration? - Yes.

And that is one to Mr. Hamilton? - That is correct.

Do you know if that was sent? - I think it was sent after being revised by me.

What were the issues raised with Hamilton in that letter?
- Do you want me to read them?

Just tell us what the five things were? - What qualifications did he have, under what auspices were staff checked in terms of the requirements of the 1989 Children's Act, why were boys required to wear only swimming trunks, was it essential for them to do that in a games hall, and reference to the fact that a "Social Services Community Child Care Specialist" had inspected the "Qualifications of leaders in overseeing the boys' work in a wide range of coached activities, including the extensive use of apparatus", and asking for clarification on that point.

That/

That is a reference to a letter he had sent out in which he said a Social Services Community Child Care Specialist had inspected among other things the qualifications of people? - Yes.

That Child Care Specialist was someone who looked after the camp? - Yes. My recollection of the circumstances is that he felt that was not required under the legislation, because it did not have any under eights attending the camp. I believe it subsequently transpired that two boys of age 7 were attending the camp and their hours were restricted.

I think that letter did in fact elicit a reply from Hamilton? - Yes.

Could you look at D234? That is a letter to you from Mr. Steele, with the reply? - Yes.

It consists of a number of pages; is that right? - Yes, at least three pages.

Is it dated 2nd September? - Yes.

And the letter which dealt with it was dated 1st September. Is that when it would go out to Hamilton? - Yes. My recollection is that it went out as originally intended.

I think there was included with that also a circular letter to parents that Hamilton had sent out on the 18th August? - Yes, that is correct.

And copies of other correspondence, some of it of a similar nature to that; is that right? - Yes.

Now, you will see that Mr. Steele refers back to his memo of the 26th August? - Yes.

Where it was proposed that the group, presumably the people at the meeting, should re-convene once Hamilton's response was received? - Yes.

You then go on to say what? - "I am, however, of the opinion that the response, as you suspected,/" suspected, gives little in the way of any justification to move for termination of let".

Could you carry on? - Yes. "As a consequence, I have some doubts as to the benefit of holding another meeting at this stage. I would, however, appreciate your comments and opinion on this matter before taking any action".

Perhaps you could also look at D232. You will see that that is another memo that Mr. Steele sent to you, enclosing a letter received from a parent in Dunblane? - Yes.

I'm talking about the circular letter which Hamilton had sent round about the 18th August? - Yes.

And hoping that parents boycott his club: do you see that? - Yes.

And referring also to his carefully-constructed consent form; is that right? - Yes.

Now, can you read out the second last paragraph, please? - "I would like to ask Central Regional Council if Mr. Hamilton fulfils all the social and" -- I can't read the word -- --

I can't read it either. "Something criteria"? - Yes. ".....to run such a club in their premises? I for one will not be sending my son, and would strongly encourage other parents to question yourselves regarding Mr. Hamilton and his motives!".

So we have then more complaints coming along on similar lines to previous ones? - Yes.

You had had them before you got the earlier memo from Steele? - Yes.

But your view was that that did not advance matters at all with a view to terminating the let? - In the sense that Mr. Hamilton made people uneasy, that we all had our suspicions as to what precisely Mr. Hamilton's motives were. That merely added to what we already knew of the man. In terms of establishing what Mr. Hamilton was doing wrong beyond creating unease, it did not advance matters./

matters.

Could you look please at D239? That is a letter from the Department of Administration and Legal Services? - Yes.

Addressed to Mr. Hamilton, and about an application for the use of Dunblane High School for a summer camp in 1996? - That is correct.

Do you know if that application was granted? - I do not.

It says a meeting would be held on Thursday, 7th December, 1995? - Yes.

Can you think of any reason why the Council might have refused that application? Was there a basis for refusal, in your view? - In the sense that the 1995 summer camp had not given any particular problems, and certainly had not caused the alarms that the Loch Lomond camps had, I would not have thought there was any reason they would have tried to refuse it. Yes, one boy had asked to be withdrawn from the camp, being unhappy, but that I imagine is not unusual.

Could you look at D240? - Yes.

This is a letter from you dated 11th January to a lady called Thomson, a Service Manager in Social Work? - Yes.

Now, there is a memo attached to that. I think that was the memo to you, to which you are in fact replying? - Yes.

And that is raising concerns about the way in which Mr. Hamilton is publicising the thing? - That is correct.

Did that relate to the previous year's camp? - Yes, I think it probably did.

Was/

2.30 p.m.

Was the material sent to you? - Yes.

I think there is a copy back in the form? - Yes.

What was the concern about the material? - The concern, as we discussed already, that Mr. Hamilton misrepresented what the Council was actually doing when it was carrying out some of its statutory functions.

Using any intervention of the Council which didn't result in anything adverse happening as a means of supporting him? - In essence, yes.

I think you say in your memo that you can't see any way of terminating any of the lets? - On the basis of that matter, on the basis of the specific misrepresentations which have been made, no; Mr. Hamilton I think could have misrepresented the change in course and simply said he had misunderstood the situation and wouldn't repeat the mistake; in terms of what we had already on record, no, we couldn't at that point see any way of terminating his let.

So in the end was the Regional Council's position that the complaints in themselves were not enough in view of the whole history of this business and the Council would only act and certainly officials of the Council would only act if they got the complaints that they could verify as justified? - No, it wouldn't be true to say verified as justified; the simple fact of the matter is that they didn't necessarily mean that Mr. Hamilton was misconducting his club, he was conducting it in a way which didn't satisfy a lot of people; on the other hand, he conducted it in a way which a number seemed to find adequate or satisfactory; really the impression one got was that you were either very much for him or very much agin him.

Did you get support for him intimated to you? - No, but we felt despite the people who wrote to us complaining saying that they were withdrawing their children, that certainly up to the summer of 1995 he was getting a worthwhile attendance level.

So/

So what in these complaints, if you could have checked them out in some way or verify them in some way would have resulted in a different course of action? - I think if you had been looking at issues of physical abuse, severe mental abuse or anything that was overtly improperly sexually then, yes, that was clear enough; as the correspondence has shown we tended to have a fairly sterile debate with Mr. Hamilton about the clothing he made boys wear, where he made them change, etc. and although he had given justification how much do you jump from there and say "That is all very well, Mr. Hamilton, but what we think you are really doing is" and whatever the various things that existed regarding Mr. Hamilton's motivation -- how can you actually make that leap which was the problem.

Were you saying that there had to be something by way of criminal activity before you could stop the let or would something less than that suffice? - There could have been matters which were not necessarily the subject of prosecution themselves, matters which the police wouldn't have taken on board.

Could you give me an example of them? - Let's suppose he had shouted at his class on a reasonable basis, reduced them to tears, I don't think the police would have found that a means for prosecution; that may not have been subject to criminal prosecution but it may have been fair enough for us; the difficulty was we were confronted by something which made us uneasy, we wondered why he wanted to take hundreds of these photographs of boys in black swimming trunks; his argument was "I was meticulously taking photographs of the activities in the club and I challenge you to say I was doing it for another purpose".

If there had been no Ombudsman in 1983? - Yes.

And indeed if 1983 had never happened at all and you had Hamilton from, say, 1985 onwards without that history behind it --? - Yes.

Do you think your decision may have been different? - Can I perhaps answer that in the sense that had one known that Lothian and Fife had successfully terminated Hamilton's lets and not been challenged/challenged by the Ombudsman I feel in retrospect now that we may have been looking for higher evidence than we actually required.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. JONES: Again just a few questions -- could you just go back to D204; I think you looked at part of this letter, this is a letter dated the 14th January 1995 from Hamilton to Dr. Young? - Yes.

Can we just look at the opening paragraph of that letter, can you read it out? - "Dear Dr. Young, I refer to your letter of 12th January 1995 asking me to answer various allegations to determine the future course of action that the Council will take and as such in terms of the requirements of natural justice you have not notified me properly and that you do not name the complainants nor do you name the schools or give dates. I therefore cannot give the detailed information necessary to answer fully and as such my reply at this stage is of a very general nature. I am however very surprised to receive your letter at this time as my group has provided our boys with black trunks for swimming and gymnastics for almost 22 years and that such matters as raised in your letter have already been fully considered by your own Authority in recent years and I understand that the conclusion was the Region constantly photograph children at its schools and clubs etc. which have included boys wearing trunks and such photographs have been used in public displays so how can the Council criticise".

If I understand it correctly you told us that your understanding of the complaints that the Education Department had been receiving up to this point were that boys would have to change into black swimming trunks and were then photographed? - Yes.

Could you go on to D212? - Yes.

This is the Social Work Department memo that you were asked to look at dated the 24th of March, 1995? - Yes.

And you were asked what action was taken on the complaints that were made about the two boys who had felt uncomfortable and described Mr. Hamilton as weird, do you see that? - Yes.

You/

You said you didn't know what action was taken; could you go on to the last paragraph of that and could you read it? - "Ron Keilloh contacted DS Moffat, Family Unit, and joint investigation will take place next week. It is noted that there have been previous complaints about Mr. Thomas Hamilton". In my answer I was simply meaning that the Admin and Legal were not going to launch anything of this nature.

Particularly that if there was going to be a joint investigation involving the Social Work Department and the Child Protection Unit? - Absolutely.

Could you go on to D229? - Yes.

And could you have at the same time D238? - Yes.

Now, D229 is dated the 22nd of August 1995? - Yes.

And we have seen that halfway down the text we see there is a break which says this -- "Overall those present would like to see Hamilton tackled in relation to the conduct of his activities and lets withdrawn." This was the memo that we have heard from Peter Farquhar to you? - Yes.

I think what we don't yet know is who was present at the meeting; do you see just below the address block the heading was "T.W. Hamilton. Meeting 21/8/1995"? - Yes.

Present "Alan Steele, Tricia Chillas, Gerry Fitzpatrick, Alan Moffat and Ian McNeish"; can you help us by telling us who these people were? - Alan Steele had responsibility for the School Board Unit in Central Regional Council; his remit may have been changing at that time because people were beginning to leave and had been appointed by the new Council but essentially that is his background. Tricia Chillas was in charge of the Regional Council Sports Development Scheme. Gerry Fitzpatrick worked with Community Education, Alan Moffat and Ian McNeish I think are both police officers, Ian McNeish certainly is.

Do/

Do you know what was the purpose of forming this group, in bringing them together? - It was a reflection of the concern regarding Mr. Hamilton, the complaints which were being generated about and also concerns about what Mr. Hamilton was about; it wasn't a formal group but they tried to find grounds for terminating Mr. Hamilton's let, it was at least a collection of people with the necessary expertise to look at the complaints.

If you look at D238 again, this is the memo from you to Alan Steele; do you see in the last paragraph you say "For the time being, I agree that there is probably not much point in reconvening the group examining Mr. Hamilton's activities"? - Yes.

That is referring back to the group you have looked at?
- Yes.

In response to this complaint we had, first of all, as I think you know reports to the Procurator-Fiscal and they had resulted in no criminal proceedings being taken, is that right? - That is correct.

We then had the setting up of a group comprising these individuals that you have just told us about to investigate Mr. Hamilton's activities? - Yes, I can also add to that fact that my initial involvement in 1985 came by a request from the Chief Executive to myself, it was being handled at a higher level; could you look at D232? - Yes.

This is a letter dated the 28th of August 1995 and you were asked the question whether this wouldn't be sufficient just to tip the balance and indeed give you a reason to withdraw Mr. Hamilton's let; can you look a little more into what the writer of this letter really says; do you see that in the paragraph that you read she wants to ask the Regional Council if Mr. Hamilton fulfils all the social and sporting criteria to run such a club and she makes the point that she won't be sending her son "and would strongly urge other parents to question yourselves regarding Mr. Hamilton and his motives" and concludes by saying "I hope you will look into the running of this club from your premises", do you see that? - Yes.

That/

That is what you were doing at the time this letter was received? - Yes, in the aftermath of Dunblane people were concerned that alarm bells should have been ringing regarding Mr. Hamilton; alarm bells were definitely ringing but he was an extremely elusive character to actually find a thing that would tip the balance.

Were you aware of any breach by Mr. Hamilton of the conditions of any of these lets? - None that I can think of or none which in the case of other organisations might not have been dealt with short of termination; I can't recall any off-hand.

You have said that what you considered might be sufficient to terminate his lets would include physical or verbal abuse or some form of overt sexual act; did you have any evidence of any of these things during the time of your involvement in this? - None that was brought to our attention.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: That parent of the two complaints you have looked at again, was the parent told what was going on? - Was there a reply sent to that complaint?

Yes? - I believe so.

Saying we have a group looking into these matters and we take note of your concern? - We may have said we take note of their concern, I doubt we would have advertised the existence of a group; it was a sensitive matter.

Really in relation to the Minute of the meeting on the 21st of August where overall this person would like to see Hamilton tackled in relation to conduct -- at any stage was a decision mooted to refer the matter to the Council or a Committee of the Council in view of the view that officials had? - It is fair to say that every time we looked at the complaints regarding Tom Hamilton's clubs that was the question we wound up asking ourselves so in that sense it was constantly being mooted but the conclusion at the end of the day was that we didn't have enough to take forward.

Did you think you would have difficulty specifying exactly what was the basis of the presentation/presentation to the Council of the case against Hamilton? - It would be the same difficulty as we would have in presenting it to the Ombudsman or the Court -- general unease, concern, doubt about motivation -- how do you actually make that stand up in a Court of law.

JANICE HELEN RENTON (49) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: Your current occupation is Depute Commissioner for Local Administration and you work in Edinburgh? - That is correct.

As a preliminary matter in your evidence I understand that there is some limit to the information which you are able to give to the Inquiry, is that correct? - It is -- my reading of the 1975 Act, the Local Government (Scotland) Act, which set up the Commission at Local Administration is that there is a Statutory duty of non-disclosure of information other than in very limited circumstances and there is also a provision that indicates that the Commissioner and his staff may not be called upon to give evidence in any proceedings; having said that the initial difficulty which was in relation to handing over the files of the Ombudsman was, to a large extent, overcome because most of the correspondence was able to be accumulated from other sources and I was then able to confirm that this was indeed the correspondence from my office.

So/

2.50 p.m.

So in my view I was able not to breach the statutory duty and to achieve a satisfactory outcome. I may say that in relation to appearing here today I have not hesitated, I have tended to the view, rightly or wrongly, these are not proceedings for the purposes of the Act and therefore I am entirely happy to be here.

The reference in the Act is to information which is gathered by the Commissioner in the course of investigation rather than the procedures of the Commissioner? - That is correct, yes.

Is it correct to say the remit of the Commissioner within the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1975 is to investigate complaints by members of the public who claim to have sustained injustice in consequence of maladministration in connection with actions taken by or on behalf of an authority? - That is correct.

Are you able to give a brief summary, a brief statement, of what you consider to be encompassed within "maladministration"? - I can try. Maladministration in my view relates to administrative practices and procedures of a local authority. The closest definition that has ever been given was by Richard Crossman who was the Leader of the House and suggested when the Bill was going through that in fact "maladministration" might encompass such things as delay, failure to follow laid down procedures, incompetence, negligence and generally matters related to the processes, but obviously not to the merits or substance of the decision.

Without looking any further at the general powers of the Commissioner, I would like to examine with you the dealings between Thomas Hamilton and the Commissioner over a period of years and his complaints about local authorities. The first of those related to a complaint made against Central Region regarding removal of lets in 1983. Were you employed in your present post in 1983? - No, I was not.

Are you aware of the circumstances surrounding the complaint made by Mr. Hamilton at that time? - Yes, I am.

We/

We have heard some detail already what the nature of the complaint was and some of what the outcome was. Is it correct to say that after you had received the complaint from Hamilton via his Councillor the first thing you would do would be to obtain comments or submissions from the Regional Council? - In fact, on this occasion the first thing was that Mr. Hamilton was interviewed in person by a member of the Commissioner's staff with a view to establishing greater detail of his complaint than had been provided in the written submissions. So the first step was to go back to Mr. Hamilton. The second step was in fact then to refer the complaint in accordance with our normal practice to the local authority asking for their comments on Mr. Hamilton's allegations.

I think in response to that you received a submission by way of a letter from the Regional Council? - That is correct.

Can I ask you to look please, to have in front of you document D10 within folder J(v). Do you recognise that document? - I can confirm that this is the response which was placed on file from Central Regional Council on our initial enquiry.

So if you go to the first numbered paragraph do the Council set out their position they were entitled at any time without any reason to terminate the arrangement, that being the letting arrangement? - Yes.

In the second paragraph they reiterate in similar terms the authority was quite entitled and had sole discretion and brought the arrangement to an end and it is submitted that no injustice was done thereby? - Yes.

Is it correct that notwithstanding that response the Commissioner decided that it was appropriate to conduct an investigation into this event? - Ultimately that was the decision that was taken. But there were other events took place before that decision was reached. My recollection is that it appeared possible that the complaint might in fact have been resolved. As I recall, there was some possibility of the matter being reconsidered by the local authority but in the event the decision, as I remember, was taken to defer making/making such a decision until the Commissioner concluded his investigation. I may have the sequence of events out of order. My memory is not sufficiently good to recall the order in which matters happened but I can confirm certainly that ultimately the Commissioner made the decision to initiate a formal investigation into the complaint.

Are you aware that the Council attempted to argue that the matter was not one which the Commissioner could consider as it related to the conduct and management of an educational establishment? - Yes. I am aware that was the argument which was presented by the Council, and I am also aware that the then Commissioner considered that argument and took the view that he was not precluded by Schedule 5 from conducting an investigation. Again the Act indicates that whether or not a complaint is properly made and can be investigated is a matter solely for the Commissioner to determine and he so determined and proceeded on that basis.

After the initial matters the Commissioner decided that an investigation would be carried out? - That is correct.

And following that investigation a report was prepared and sent out to parties in terms of the Act? - A draft report was prepared initially. Again that is in accordance with our normal practice where a draft report containing the facts is in fact prepared. This is then issued to the complainant and the local authority so that they may have an opportunity of drawing attention to any factual inaccuracies in the body of the report. The draft is then amended, if necessary, and is then finalised by appending to the factual content the Commissioner's conclusions as to whether or not there has been maladministration and if so whether injustice has ensued. Ultimately that process was gone through. The parties commented on a draft and it was ultimately issued in its final form with the Commissioner's findings attached.

We have also heard in the Inquiry a draft of this report was also sent to the Scouts' Association? - That is correct.

Was it common to send copies of a report to/

to other parties? - It was indeed. The view has always been taken -- I think quite properly -- that if someone or some body is referred to within the body of the report they ought to have an opportunity of commenting on whether that reference is factually accurate, so Yes, in this case a copy was in fact sent to the Scout Association.

I would like to refer you to the report in its final form. I believe there is a copy in that folder but it has not been copied correctly. So if I could refer you to the original copy of the Production which is DCRC B1/F2, a copy of that was made available to parties yesterday. It is No. 38 in that file of papers. You see in the first paragraph there is a brief summary of the complaint and the second sentence says, "The let of the premises was terminated without fair warning or explanation" and goes on to say that Mr. Hamilton complained, "That the action had been taken on the basis of unsubstantiated allegations of which he was given no opportunity to reply? - Yes.

It goes under the sub-heading "Investigation" to make a number of factual conclusions following on from the investigation; you see that? - Yes, I do.

In paragraph 3, "The Commissioner was of the view that Hamilton had left the Scouts and that he had set up boys' clubs which were run by a committee and that there were up to nine leaders or assistants". You see that? - I do.

Turning to the concerns of the local authority which are expressed in paragraph 26 at the foot of page 9, you see they summarise the concerns as being "(a) General concern felt by head teachers regarding the administrative arrangements of the group; (b) The quality of leadership; (c) Management difficulties; (d) Alleged improper circulation of notices"? - Yes.

Paragraph 28, there is a summary of the Commissioner's views on the duties and responsibility of the Council; do you see that? - I do.

Would you read that paragraph please? - "Before reviewing these, I think it necessary to state/state what I would regard as the general duties and responsibilities of the Council in the matter. On the one hand they have a discretion whether to let school premises, and a consequent duty to ensure that they are not let to unsuitable users; on the other hand they have a responsibility to deal fairly with all their constituents. I have borne both these factors in mind".

Paragraph 29, considering the reasons for the termination of the let, the Commissioner has noted the suggestion of confusion with the Scouts and he says, "Another reason for action being initiated was complaints from parents about the conduct of the group. These contained implications too vague to found upon and I were given more weight than evidence of support for the group. They should in my view have been heavily discounted as they were until November 1983". You see that? - Yes.

Paragraph 30, the Commissioner in the first sentence expresses his view of the Council's actions. Would you read the first sentence? - "I find nothing in the later reasons advanced by the Council to persuade me that the decision to discontinue the letting arrangements was taken without maladministration."

Could you continue to read the remainder of that paragraph? - "Proper use of a local authority's powers, even those which are entirely discretionary, involves among other things, giving proper attention to considerations which are relevant and ignoring or discounting considerations which are of little or no relevance, particularly if evidence is not adequately substantiated. Neither of these requirements was met by the sub-committee in their decision to discontinue the let. As I said, evidence that the group was well run and was supported by parents was ignored in favour of complaints which proved to be little better than gossip. The only evidence of general concern, which the Council maintain, is felt by head teachers rests on allegations of this kind. The criticism of leadership and management difficulties rests on one accident, of which the complainant would have been able to give satisfactory account had he been given the opportunity to do so, and on the allegation of difficulties on an opening night, on which occasion the complainant and his colleagues seemed in fact to have/have coped rather well with an unexpectedly high response. It is notable that no previous history of problems with premises or equipment existed and I view the Council's actions on these grounds as arbitrary."

You see the first sentence in 33 there is a statement, reading short, "The Regional Council's decision was illfounded and unfair"? - I do, yes.

In the use of that sentence of the word "illfounded" and also the use of the words in paragraph 30 that the Commissioner considered that a satisfactory account of events was available, is it your view that the Commissioner is not really dealing with administration on this matter but is giving some views on the substance of the complaint against Hamilton? - I think I would have to refer back to the 1975 Act. I am sorry, I can't quote the section, but within the Act it says that the Commissioner for Local Administration may not question the merits of decisions taken without maladministration.

In/

3.10 p.m.

In other words he may not simply question whether or not a decision was right, it sounds it is worded in such a way that he might not question a decision taken without mal-administration. What is taken from that is if there is mal-administration then indeed he may move closer to the rightness or wrongness of the decision itself.

Did you consider that the Commissioner was giving his view on the rightness or wrongness of the decision in paragraph 30 and 33? - I don't think I can answer that; the findings that are presented here were the findings of an individual and I really can't tell you what he was doing in terms of a conclusion.

But can you draw any impression from the use of the words like "satisfactory account" and "it is very ill-founded" that there was a comment being made on the merits? - In reading it I would form the view that he was commenting on the merits and if that was what he was indeed doing then in my view he was doing so on the basis that he considered that the decision had been reached that mal-administration as distinct from no mal-administration.

At the time these complaints were made and reported on what were the Local Authority obliged to do in response to the report? - The Act requires that when a report is published it must be laid before the Authority and they must consider the Ombudsman's findings and they require to then indicate to him what action they propose to take in response to that finding.

And it was open at that time for them to indicate that they would take no response to the.... take no action in response to the finding? - Had they done so then the Ombudsman couldn't have declared himself satisfied on their response; it is also required to be borne in mind that the Ombudsman has no satisfactory powers to enforce his decision and therefore what this means in our history is that the Authority, in fact, had declined to take action.

I understand now that there is certain powers have been added to the Act in 1989 to give such/such a situation publicity? - You are quite right; it was also the case if the Authority didn't take action on the initial reports there was a power available to the Ombudsman to publish a second or further report; in other words, to give them a second opportunity to consider their position but in 1989 there was added to that that if they declined to take action following the publication of the further report the Commissioner could require the Authority to agree to the publication of a statement in local newspapers, the contents to be agreed with him narrating the circumstances of the complaint and what had, or more likely, had not happened, the cost of that to be borne by the Authority.

But it still remains the position that the Commissioner has not compulsory powers to force a Local Authority to change its mind? - That is correct.

Turning now to the next complaint which you see in relation to the letting out of Linlithgow Academy High School and was made against Lothian Region? - Yes.

Were you involved in that complaint? - Not directly but I had taken up employment in the office at that time and I was aware of the complaint and the manner in which it was dealt with.

Are you aware that the complaint was of a similar nature regarding what was seen as the arbitrary termination of the let of school premises? - Yes, I am aware of that.

Can I refer you to the document once again within the original folder you had and that is D14 in J5; I think this is actually probably stapled together with quite a few different items of correspondence; do you see this is a document headed at the top right-hand corner the 25th of January, 1990 and is your response to the Regional Council? - Yes, I do.

We have already had evidence from the Regional Council referring to that and it may suffice to say were you aware that the response of the Council was to say that it suspended it pending a police investigation regarding Hamilton in another jurisdiction? - I am aware of that.

What/

What was the outcome of that complaint? - The decision was not to initiate a formal investigation.

By not initiating a formal investigation is the Commissioner indicating there has been no mal-administration or merely there has to be no investigation? - It is merely that there has to be no investigation but on this occasion again, as I recall, the explanation was given to the complainant in intimating that there would be no formal investigation, that this Commissioner was satisfied that the duty on the Local Authority to protect the interests of young persons had been properly discharged in their decision to suspend the let of the premises.

That duty had been referred to, I think, in the summary of duties contained within the first report? - That is correct.

Is it a fair summary to say that the existence of parents' complaints was sufficient to tip the balance in this case? - That would be my view, that unlike the initial complaint there was no investigations and indeed no formal complaints lodged with the Authority in 1989, there had been, as I recall, a complaint and there was a police investigation.

You referred there to the fact that there had been a formal complaint, not one to the police but to the Local Authority; I think these are referred to in heading No. 3 on that response from the Regional Council? - Yes.

We have been avoiding referring to the names of any persons making complaints so it is perhaps sufficient to say that those paragraphs narrated complaints which had been received by the Region from parents or a parent of a child involved? - That is correct.

And this was something that the Commissioner took into account? - That is correct, yes.

Turning to the next series of complaints to the Commissioner are you aware of complaints that took place in 1992 regarding investigations into a camp/camp run by Hamilton at Milarrochy Bay? - I am sorry, could you ask that question again.

Perhaps it would be easier if I referred you to document D17 within folder J5? - Yes.

Do you see that is a letter to Mr. Hamilton from yourself? - Yes, it is.

Dated the 2nd of March, 1992? - Yes.

And I think in the first paragraph there is a reference to complaints against Central Regional Council concerning the Social Work Department and Central Scotland Police? - Yes.

There is a reference to "You complain about harassment and disruption to the running of your sports club; and defamation of your character, which you claim has resulted in you being unemployed". Do you recall that complaint being made? - I do recall the complaint, yes.

What was the response of the Commissioner to that complaint? - Having considered the terms of the complaint which, as far as I could see, were two-fold in that it contained an allegation both against the Local Authority; the first part was readily dealt with in that the police do not come within the Ombudsman's jurisdiction and accordingly any complaints about any activities involving the police was a matter which was outside the jurisdiction and therefore that was readily dealt with on jurisdictional grounds. In relation to the second part of the complaint which was framed in fairly general terms and which was, in my view, a complaint alleging defamation, if the view was taken that the complaint of defamation is more properly a matter for the Courts than the Commissioner and again the Act stipulates that it would not be normal for the Commissioner to entertain a complaint where there is an alternative remedy including in particular, through Court action and Mr. Hamilton was therefore advised that the Commissioner did not regard a complaint of defamation as one which he could properly investigate and that the remedy lay rather through the Courts.

Can I refer you back to the second paragraph of your letter dated the 2nd of March and you/

you say there "Having examined carefully all the background papers you have supplied (and also reviewed our files on your previous complaints)"? - Yes.

You would by this time be aware that within a period of time amounting to some nine years Hamilton had made a number of complaints against different Regions? - Yes, indeed -- the system in my office ensures that on receipt of the claims there is a cross-check to establish whether an individual has, in fact, been a previous complainant to any file may be linked together.

What is the relevance of a previous complaint? - Well, there are many reasons why it would be important to establish whether an individual was a previous complainant; it could be, for example, that although a complaint appeared to be a new complaint that it actually is a complaint which has already been determined; that would be one reason and another reason is in relation to the allocation of complaints to an officer within the office; if it is an entirely different matter in my view it is normally preferable that it be dealt with by a different officer from the one who dealt with the previous complaint so that a perhaps more objective and impartial view could be taken of the complaint so there are various reasons for cross-referencing.

Is it of any relevance to the Commissioner that someone is persistently complaining against the Local Authority? - We have a number of people who are persistent claimants against Local Authorities but they would fall into various categories; we would not regard someone who complained frequently as necessarily being a veracious litigant. We have one complainant that I can think of that has complained during the office's existence some 15 times but on each occasion at least on the face of it has good reason for doing so.

But without being regarded in any way as indicating that someone is a veracious litigant is it a matter of taking into account any deliberation by the Council? - The fact that you would have complained before is no reason why the Commissioner would not be willing to undertake a formal investigation; / investigation; each complaint must, in my view, and indeed has to be treated on its own individual merits.

I understand that but what I asked you is different matters that are taken into account? - In what context?

Deciding whether or not to have an investigation of a complaint does the Commissioner consider the history of a complaint on behalf of the individual? - There would be an awareness that the individual had made a number of complaints but I can't say that because he had made a number of complaints that the decision would necessarily be either to mount an investigation or not mount an investigation, that decision would be taken primarily on the basis of the complaint currently before the Commissioner.

Concerning now the next complaint which was made by Hamilton which was against Fife Regional Council and I refer you to document D25 within folder J5, do you see this is a letter again from the office of the Commissioner to Hamilton dated the 7th of September, 1992? - Yes.

And you see in the first paragraph there there is a brief summary of complaints and in the second sentence "You complain about the Regional Council's decision to suspend the letting of educational premises to your sports club which you claim is unfair"? - Yes.

And is it a fair summary of the second paragraph that at that stage the complaint was not to be progressed in view of the fact that the Council was offering to meet with Hamilton? - That would be a fair summary, yes.

Turning to the final complaint made by Hamilton in 1994, that was the one again against Central Region and can I refer you to document D31? - Yes.

You see the outcome of that was that the issues of the let had been resolved and there was to be no continued involvement of the Commissioner? - That is correct.

Are/

Are you aware of the basis on which that complaint was withdrawn? - Yes, I am.

What is it? - As I recall the complaint that was originally made related to what, I suppose, one might call the double booking of a facility; as I recall there was a period when Mr. Hamilton's club had the use of premises and it appeared that it had been let on certain dates to some other organisation. My understanding is that following his making a complaint to us and before we had made any inquiries into the complaint the double booking problem was resolved to the extent that he was informed in writing that there would be no disruption to the let of the premises for use by his group and he therefore wrote to our office indicating that the matter had been resolved entirely to his satisfaction and at that stage our file was closed.

You mentioned in regard to the Lothian Region complaint in 1989 that two relevant factors there was that there had been a complaint by parents and the police investigation? - Yes.

In a situation in which the Local Authority was concerned about the proprietary of Mr. Hamilton's club and wished to discontinue the let what sort of evidence would the Commissioner be looking for to enable the Local Authority to do that, that their decision was justified? - I think the best guidance we probably have on that would, in fact, be some of the criticisms that appeared in the original investigation; again I think what the Commissioner is primarily interested in is a process through which the Authority goes and that process would involve, in my view, an opportunity being given to the person whose let is terminated to be offered to put his side of the case and that in terminating some explanation for a decision would be provided.

I/

3.30 p.m.

I don't think I can really give you any great deal of assistance on what weight of evidence the authority must have. I think the Commissioner's primary interest would be in the procedures which the authority adopts in reaching the decision to terminate or suspend a let.

You referred to procedures and giving the complainer an opportunity to be heard. Do you consider that is always required in order that you can have termination of lets on this basis? - Clearly I can't say that it is always required but I think in general where a decision is made it is good administrative practice to give the party involved an opportunity to be heard. I think it is extremely important to give, where there is an unfavourable decision, to give an explanation of reasons why the decision is unfavourable.

But in relation to complaints against Lothian Regional Council where there was no hearing granted to Hamilton, he was merely told it was on the basis of complaints and a police investigation, that is one where the Commissioner was able to reject the complaint? - The complaint was not rejected. What was said was that the Commissioner did not propose to mount a formal investigation. I think I must encourage you not to use the expression "reject" a complaint. Local authorities do on occasions interpret a decision by the Commissioner not to conduct a formal investigation as in some way upholding or vindicating what they have done. That is not necessarily always the case.

But the effect is they are not found to have acted in a manner which constitutes maladministration? - No, the only occasion on which a finding is made is after a formal investigation.

That's what I said. They are not found to have acted in a manner that is maladministration? - Nothing is found unless a complaint goes to formal investigation.

In a situation on which there have been or had been repeated complaints by parents of concerns/concerns but the concern was not substantiated by hard evidence would the Commissioner be able to take these into account in justifying a decision to terminate lets? - I think you are presenting me with a hypothetical situation and it is very difficult to give you a Yes or No answer. It would be necessary to look at the whole of the situation before determining whether to undertake a formal investigation.

Without considering what the outcome might be, and what stage of inquiry it was, are unsubstantiated complaints from parents a matter which may be taken into account in reaching a decision? - I would expect that they are matters which would be taken into account in reaching a decision, yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Miss Renton, just to see if I understand the general procedures and the framework of the Commissioners consideration of complaints of maladministration. I think I followed correctly the basic principles -- subjects perhaps to one qualification which we will come to in a moment -- which is that the Commissioner's concern is with procedures rather than the merits of the Council's decision? - That is correct.

Do I correctly understand that the qualification is that if and when the Commissioner has decided that there is maladministration then the Commissioner may go on to express a view on the merits of the matter? - That would be my interpretation of the Act, but since the Act says he may not challenge a decision taken without maladministration, then if there has been maladministration then he may comment on the decision itself.

So far as the merits of the position are concerned, would I be correct in understanding, as you indicated a moment ago in answer to a question by my learned friend Mr. Lake, issues such as the weight to be attached to particular evidence is a matter for the Council rather than for the Commissioner in his consideration of procedures? - That would be my view. If I can draw perhaps an analogy with, for example, the processing of a planning application. The Commissioner's concern would/would be if there were objections to the application that they were properly before the Committee at the time at which the Committee reached its decision. If they were not properly before the Committee he might view them as constituting maladministration, but if they are properly before the Committee then the weight which the Committee then attach to those objections in my view would be primarily a matter for the Committee.

Would you consider it a normal situation that the running of a boys club should create unease in the minds of a number of the boys parents? - I'm sorry, could you ask me that again?

Would you consider it a normal thing for the running of a boys club to create unease in the minds of a number of the parents of the boys who are attending the club? - I think not.

This is something which plainly would require to be given very careful consideration by anyone in a position of responsibility for the let of premises? - Yes, I would share that view.

And the weight to be attached to the fact that a number of parents are complaining and are in fact uneasy would be a matter for the Council's concern? - It would indeed.

Would you agree with me in a matter of this nature the welfare of the children concerned will always be a paramount consideration? - Of course.

Therefore any potential risk to children would be a very important factor for the Council to bear in mind? - I would agree with you.

If we turn to the Commissioner's decision on the first complaint which is D52 -- do you still have that in front of you. If I follow the Commissioner's conclusions they begin at page 10. If we look at paragraph 29 the Commissioner gives the reasons adduced for terminating the let of the premises? - Yes.

He follows that with some of those reasons. Towards the foot of the page he says, "Another reason for action being initiated was a complaint/complaint by parents only one of which was made direct to the Council about the conduct of the group. This contained implications admitted to be too vague to found on and were given more weight than evidence of support for the group which should in my view have been heavily discounted as they were until November, 1983". Is this an example of the Commissioners consideration of questions of weight of evidence in deciding whether or not there is maladministration when according to your evidence he should have concentrated on procedures? - I think perhaps by way of explanation for that paragraph I should explain to you that in issuing a draft report the local authority were asked to provide something which they were unable to provide from the interview, and that was a statement of complaints from parents which they had received. The response to that was that they could not provide any such statement because the complaints had been of an informal nature and they could not therefore provide information on who the complaints were from or the substance of these complaints.

Does that mean these complaints were to be ignored?

- Ignored by whom?

Well, we are talking about this in the context of an investigation into Mr. Hamilton's complaint against the Council. Are we to understand from your evidence that because the Regional Council fail to provide the written chapter and verse your view is that these complaints were in some way to be ignored or discounted? - It is very difficult to take into account complaints if the authority were unable to provide any information on either who they were from or what they consisted of. It is difficult to take account of something which is said to exist but no information can be given about the source or substance.

BY LORD CULLEN: In any event, it is a matter of the weight to be attached; is that right? - Indeed.

Because the Commissioner says "to be heavily discounted"? - Yes.

I am still not quite clear whereabouts in this paragraph we get identification of maladministration which is, as it were, the key that opened/opened the door? - Yes. I would like to think that perhaps the conclusions are framed rather more precisely nowadays with a clear indication as to what constitutes maladministration and what constitutes an injustice.

I have an uncomfortable feeling that one is entering the subject back to front, so to speak, by a discussion of weight to be attached to evidence without being clear yet as to where the point of maladministration lies? - I think regrettably I am in no better position than you are to account for the conclusions and the manner of.....

Of course, you are not responsible at all but at least you have an inner knowledge as to the proper way in which these things should be approached? - Indeed.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: Given that the Commissioner was not provided with written chapter and verse as to the nature of these complaints, how was he able to express a view that they should have been heavily discounted? - Again I think you will appreciate that it is difficult for me to explain why someone else is taken a particular view. My interpretation is that these were unsubstantiated allegations which I think he describes elsewhere as "little better than gossip". He took the view that perhaps greater weight should have been attached to the very clear and substantial support that had been lodged on Mr. Hamilton's behalf. My recollection is that there was a substantial petition and some 30 support letters had been submitted.

But, Miss Renton, there is no dispute that a number of parents were uneasy about conduct of those in the clubs. This is a matter of fact. There is no dispute about that -- correct? - No. I am sorry, I don't say it is correct because I am not aware of the complaints that were made to the Region because the Region were unable to provide my office with details of the complaints.

So one has to wait until something occurs which could be, as you put it, substantiated like a criminal conviction or something like that? - No, that is certainly not what I said.

If/

If we turn the page to paragraph 30 the Commissioner concludes "I find nothing in the later reasons advanced by the Council to persuade me that the decision to discontinue the letting arrangement was taken without maladministration. The proper use of a local authority's powers, even those which are entirely discretionary, involves, amongst other things, giving proper attention to considerations which are relevant and ignoring or discounting considerations which are of little or no relevance, particularly if evidence is not adequately substantiated"? - Yes.

Bearing/

3.50 p.m.

Bearing that in mind and taking note of the Commissioner's decision below in paragraph 33 that the Regional Council's decision was illfounded, can you explain how the Commissioner was able to come to that decision or conclusion without a consideration of factors such as potential risk to children and the welfare of the children which I think you have told us earlier are both relevant matters? - Yes, I certainly confirm that in my view both of these are relevant matters and therefore I can't tell you how or why the Commissioner reached the conclusion that he did; I regret that I am simply am not able to explain the reasoning of someone else in reaching their individual findings.

I think the implication of your evidence is that it is your view that he ought to have considered these matters because they are both relevant to whether or not the Regional Council's decision was or was not illfounded? - You are perhaps asking me in a sense if I would have reached the same conclusion and clearly since I was not involved in the conducting of the investigation that really isn't something that I can indicate. I agree that the welfare of children is paramount but I think we must constantly remember that what the Commissioner was looking into, in fact was procedure and process of the local authority. It was drawn apparently into touching on the merits of the decision so his role was primarily to decide whether there was maladministration in the manner in which the authority dealt with this.

I probably didn't put the question very clearly; I am not asking you whether you would have come to the same decision, I am putting to you that the implication of your evidence is that you would agree that the Commissioner, before expressing a view on the merits of the decision, ought to have referred to the matters of welfare of the children and potential risk to them? - No, I don't think I do agree with you, I am afraid. I think what the Commissioner requires to have regard to in the first instance is whether or not there has been maladministration. In the Commissioner's view it is not clear that he did believe that there had been maladministration in the manner in which the authority/authority reached their decision.

I won't take up a lot more time on this but if we go back and look at the passage at the top of the page there? - Yes.

The Commissioner's own words are "The proper use of a local authority's powers, even those which are entirely discretionary, involved, among other things, giving proper attention to considerations which are relevant". Do you see that? - Yes, I do.

I think we are in agreement that the two issues of risk of children and welfare of children were the relevant consideration in the context of this decision by the Council -- correct so far? - Again my view is that the welfare of children is exceedingly important in reaching any decision and I personally agree with you, there is no dispute on that.

It follows as a matter of inevitable logic, does it not, that before the Commissioner saw fit to express a view on the merits of the Regional Council's decision acting in accordance with his own injunction at the top of the page he should have given proper attention to those relevant or, as you would put it, important considerations? - I think again I would have to take you back to his attempts to obtain further factual information about the complaints which have been received. He was not able to obtain such information from the authority and again it is difficult to say that he should have concluded that matters were relevant when, in fact, he was not in possession of any factual information relating to those matters.

Surely that would be an argument for coming to no decision because you have a lack of information? - I don't think you are allowed to come to no decision -- I am sorry. The requirement is to find if there has been maladministration or there is not and the one thing about which I am in no doubt is that the Commissioner at that time formed a view which was his view and his alone that the complaint of maladministration was well founded. He concluded that there had been maladministration in the way in which the authority dealt with this matter.

We/

We are maybe at cross-purposes here. I am asking you this question in the context of the Commissioner's view on the merits of the matter; I think you have indicated to us there is not a Statutory obligation upon him to express a view on the merits of the matter, is that correct? - Yes, there is a general prohibition, in fact, against challenging the merits of the decision in which that decision has been taken on maladministration.

It would be open to the Commissioner to say maladministration or no maladministration, he is under no obligation to go on and express a view on whether or not the decision was well founded or illfounded -- correct? - Absolutely correct, and I think perhaps you have touched on what is a very helpful point, that the role of the Commissioner is essential to determine whether or not there has been maladministration. Secondly, if there has been maladministration whether any injustice has ensued and it is traditional nowadays to indicate what action should be taken by the authority to remedy an injustice.

I will just come back to this one more time and this will perhaps be the last time I will take the point. In the context of not a maladministration but in the context of the Commissioner's conclusions in paragraph 33 that the Regional Councils decision was illfounded, given that we are agreed that the issue of welfare of children and potential risks to children are relevant and given the Commissioner's view that proper attention should be given to relevant considerations does it not follow as a matter of logic that before expressing a view on the merits of the Council's decision the Commissioner should have had regard to these two matters? - Again I don't think I can give you a yes or no answer. What the Commissioner had done from my interpretation of what his findings were, he had concluded that there had been maladministration; for reasons which I can't expand upon or explain he saw fit to move further into the merits of the decision and you are correct, it appears from reading this bit he expresses a view on the merits of the decision; that is not something that he was precluded from doing because he had found maladministration but on the other hand that is unusual to express a view on the merits of the decision because after all the decision itself was a matter for the local authority; the Commissioner's principal concern is that procedures that they use in coming to that decision are correct, proper and acceptable.

Well,/

Well, I won't question you any further for a yes or no answer to my question but, of course, the matter went just a little bit further and the conclusion at the foot of the page or rather at the conclusion on paragraph 33 because in the final paragraph over the page if you would have a look at that for a moment? - Yes, I am familiar with the paragraph.

The Commissioner went on to indicate that on the evidence available "I see no reason why the Council should not now grant a let"? - Yes, that is correct, that is what he said.

And one thing which you have emphasised on a number of occasions today is that the Commissioner had precious little in the way of direct evidence as to the reason for unease on the part of the parents? - Yes, correct.

Do you agree it may have been a good idea to find out a little bit more about that before expressing that view? - I think the expression of the view as to what the Council may now do probably goes further than one would have expected in relation to the concerns for proper procedures to be implemented; the Commissioner or the Ombudsman would normally look for a remedy which puts right the procedures that have gone wrong and the decision would normally be a matter for the Authority to take and indeed, of course, it remains open to the Authority to take whatever decision they saw fit.

Thank you for that. I just have one last matter and it relates to the passage at the top of page seven; to put this in context at the bottom of the page before I think the Commissioner here is recording certain evidence which appears to be before him; we see on the 18th of October "The complainant submitted a formal appeal on behalf of the group against the decision; Councillors and officials were invited to attend their meetings and judge for themselves the standards of supervision, organisation, safety etc."? - Yes.

"Also, because he had learned of the fact that allegations about his character may have been made, he sought to assure the Council of his good character and integrity"? - Yes.

He/

He also enclosed a copy of a letter dated April 1974 which showed that he had resigned his Scout leadership in April 1974 because of his disapproval of certain actions of other Scout officials (the Scout Association have informed me that this was not received by them)"? - Yes.

Am I right in understanding that there is no further consideration of this particular matter by the Commissioner in his report? - Sorry, which particular issue?

I am sorry, I am talking specifically about the letter of April 1974 and the evidence from the Scout Association that this letter had not been received by them? - You are correct, that there is no further reference to that within the report.

Would you have expected, particularly in the context of the view on the merits of the decision, would you have expected the Commissioner to investigate with the Scout Association why Mr. Hamilton left the Scout leadership and why they dispute the receipt of this letter? - No, I wouldn't have expected the Commissioner to pursue that; the complaint that the Commissioner is investigating is a complaint against the Local Authority, he is not investigating the individual, he is investigating a complaint from an individual against the Local Authority and I wouldn't have expected him to pursue an.....in fact, it so happened that we did involve, as you know, the Scout Association because of the reference to that to give them an opportunity to comment.

They/

They haven't indicated that the letter referred to in the draft report was not received by them. It was proper in my view to record that and their decision but I don't think it was a matter for the Commissioner to pursue in detailing the circumstances of why Mr. Hamilton was leaving the Scout Association.

You might be unaware of this but we have heard evidence in this Inquiry which appears to indicate beyond any reasonable doubt that Hamilton didn't write such a letter in April, 1974 and that he lost his warrant, his warrant for the Scout Movement was withdrawn for a number of reasons reflecting adversely on his character and suitability to look after young children; might that indicate that one lesson, no doubt amongst others, that could be learned from this whole tragic business is that in the future the Commissioner might carry out a reasonably careful investigation before expressing a view as to the merits of a Council's decision? - I can't quarrel with your suggestion that we should carry out a detailed investigation, I would subscribe totally to that, but what I would say is that you require to bear in mind that the Commissioner is conducting a formal investigation of a local authority, he is not conducting a formal investigation of an individual complainant; the investigation relates to an alleged maladministration by the authority and, in my view, one requires to exercise some caution in the extent to which one investigates the circumstances of the individual who brings the complaint; the interest of the Ombudsman is largely not maladministration by a local authority and he is not, in my view, there to institute examination into the character or past of the complainant who brings a complaint to him.

So/

4.10 p.m.

So the answer to my question is Yes, you agree with that? - I would agree that the Commissioner must always conduct a detailed investigation into the allegations of maladministration that have been made. The answer to that must certainly be Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: Just a couple of points, Miss Renton. I wonder if you would look at page 11 of the report, paragraph 32. I know it is a bit out of order, the Commissioner has been dealing with the merits and Lord Cullen asked you about the key to the door of procedures? - Yes.

Do you think that is the key to the door, namely failure to investigate properly? - You are referring to paragraph 32?

He should be given the opportunity to put his side? - Yes.

Is that a defect in procedure? - Very much so. If you were asking me what the key to the door was, it appears to me -- as I say, I have read the report in the same way that all of you have read the report and it was my view that the finding of maladministration was based on the termination having been effected without notice, no explanation having been given for the termination, and Mr. Hamilton having been denied an opportunity of putting his side of the case. I see those as procedural flaws upon which the Ombudsman had reached a finding of maladministration.

One other point: Mr. Cobb earlier made reference about concerns to disclose the identity of any complainer as Mr. Hamilton later did. Did you form any view that it is necessary for a local authority to identify complainers or do you have any guidance as to whether it is necessary to identify complainers such as parents and third parties who make complaints. Is that something you have given any guidance to local authorities on? - To the best of my knowledge we have not given guidance and I think to a considerable extent authorities would require to exercise some discretion in revealing identities. The only analogy that I can draw to that/that is the very difficult situation of anti-social tenants where I think there is occasionally some considerable difficulty in identifying who the complainants are, and I think in general authorities if they can avoid doing so do not identify who has made the complaint.

So in this case if Hamilton had made subsequent complaints about the Regional Council and the Regional Council had given you information and asked you to keep the identity of the complainers about Hamilton confidential to your office, this is something which you are perfectly used to dealing with? - Oh, indeed. There is no difficulty in fact in maintaining confidentiality. I take the view that the information that we obtain is for our benefit in order to determine whether to investigate or not. We are not a mail box in terms of simply passing information through or onwards and therefore information that was made available to us need not have gone any further.

No re-examination.

BY LORD CULLEN: Perhaps I can ask one point: this is to do with paragraph 32 of the report, assuming that is the key passage. When the Ombudsman used the word "fair" or "unfair" can you tell me what yardstick is generally understood by that. What test or standard is applied to determine whether something is fair or unfair? - Well, again I think that our primary interest is in what may best be described as good administrative practice. There are available guidance issued by many organisations of administrative practice in relation to various special fields of local government activity, and obviously there are some general principles that would apply. One of the general principles I think that would apply would be that unless there was some good reason to the contrary it is good administrative practice to give someone about whom the decision is to be taken an opportunity to have a say in answering the case. I am thinking, for example, again of planning applications. It would be unfair to invite the objectors to state their case before the Planning Committee without in my view also offering the applicant an opportunity.

Is there room for some distinction as to the/the kind of decision to which that matter is applied. I can understand that in planning you have an application and you have to take a decision and so on. But here all we are talking about is a termination of a let which may be thought to some extent if not wholly to be within the discretion of the local authority? - Yes, I agree that that may, there may be an argument to say that it is discretionary and therefore they could do so, but can I go on to say that we are increasingly guided if not indeed bound by good practice principles, and at the present time I am serving on a Working Party relating to the subject of "Openness in Local Government". One of the fundamental principles that is emerging about that is the need when a decision is unfavourable to someone to give them an explanation for that. People deserve at least an explanation.

I understand that, of course, and the investigation the Ombudsman was concerned with was whether the decision process was flawed or not. Obviously it may create a position if people are not told until after the event what happened and perhaps aren't told why. So you say it is really rooted all the time in what is good administrative practice? - Yes, unless there is good reason why it should not be applied.

MR. LAKE: Sir, there is one matter I could usefully put to the witness to assist the Inquiry in re-examination.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: Could I ask you again to have in front of you D14 within folder J(v). You have already referred to the large bundle of documents which contains amongst other things the response from Lothian Regional Council to the request for information from them in the fourteenth item with D14. Could you look at that please. This is a letter from the Commissioner to Mr. Hamilton dated 12th April, 1990. You see that is the letter addressed to Mr. Hamilton from a different Commissioner, and it relates to the decision not to carry out an investigation into the complaint relating to the Lothian Region? - It does.

If you go to the second paragraph of that you see it says that I am in no doubt your disappointment/disappointment relates to the fact the Commissioner does not propose to mount a formal investigation into your complaint? - That is right.

For reasons that are given in the next paragraph. Could you read that whole paragraph please? - The letter says "He takes the view that he cannot level any criticism against Lothian Regional Council for their actions in suspending your let of Linlithgow Academy when confronted with the allegations made in May, 1989. In making this decision he is conscious that a local authority has to demonstrate a high duty of care where children are involved".

On this occasion there is express reference to care of children that hadn't been found within the earlier report? - There is a reference in this decision.

BY LORD CULLEN: To be quite clear, obviously this came at an earlier stage before he has entered into an investigation. But what view is the Commissioner taking there as to a possible case for maladministration? - He is not in fact expressing a view on whether or not there is maladministration.

No. Isn't he required to consider whether there is at least a case for investigation on that ground? - The Act is very -- the discretion in the Act is very wide. It is left to the Commissioner to decide whether or not to initiate a formal investigation. This letter is a decision letter to the effect that he is not going to investigate formally and therefore he is not going to make a finding of maladministration or no maladministration. But the letter goes further in explaining in fact as the Act requires us to do the reasons for reaching the decision not to mount a formal investigation and on this occasion his reason given is that the Commissioner -- who I may say was a different Commissioner from the original complaint -- took the view that he was satisfied he could not level criticism against the authority for suspending the let. But, of course, I think it also goes on in the second line of the paragraph to indicate that the Council had informed him that any request for a let will be given positive consideration.

Does/

Does that part of the letter imply he had taken the view that there was no, if you like, stateable case for maladministration? -

Yes, I think he actually -- the letter indicates that the decision of the Council to act as they did was in his view acceptable given that on this occasion this was when the authority had informed him that there was an ongoing police investigation.

I can see so far as the latter part of the letter is concerned he might take the view he wasn't going to take any further action pending something else happening. It really looks as if the earlier part is the controlling passage; is that right? - Yes.

MR. BONOMOY: I think, sir, this may be an appropriate point on which to adjourn until tomorrow when I can't promise the same level of excitement as today.

LORD CULLEN: I am sure we will all be here.

WEDNESDAY, 19th JUNE 1996.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

DAVID PAUL JONES (39) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: I think you are a Local Government Officer? - Yes.

And you live in Falkirk? - I do.

And you are a married man and you have three sons? - Three boys, yes.

And they are all fairly young, is that right? - Aged between 8 and 12.

April '95, did they show an interest in an extra curricular activity at the school? - I am not sure it was the school as such the actual notification of the particular boys club was from; my children brought letters home from the school which awakened their interest in participating in these activities.

Do you know which one of your kids brought the letter home? - If I am not mistaken I think it was possibly two of the boys.

Were they then at primary or secondary school? - All at primary school.

Which primary school was it? - St. Andrew's, Falkirk.

So the communication had been distributed at the school? - I don't know whether it was physically handed out by an actual member of staff.

But it was something that was brought home from the school, as far as you were concerned? - Yes.

What was it about? - Informing the parents that a boys club would commence at Craig High School and the session was between 6 and 8 o'clock on a Friday evening.

I put the date and year to you but what is your best recollection of the time that it happened? - It was somewhere between Easter and the/

the end of term in 1995.

Did the communication say the nature of the activities at the club? - Yes, I think it specified all manner of ball games, gymnastics and general keep fit exercises.

Did it mention a fee? - Yes, it was £1 per child.

Did it mention the possibility of children being photographed? - No.

What was your position about whether the children should go to this? - All three of my boys were enthusiastic and as a parent wishing them to participate in all manner of sports I was keen they should be involved.

Did you take them along yourself? - Yes, I did.

All three of them? - Yes.

Did you meet the person who was running it? - Yes, I did.

Who was that? - Thomas Hamilton.

Was that the first time you went along? - Yes, the first evening.

Did you have a chat with him? - Very briefly, five, ten minutes maybe.

What impression did you form at that stage? - He gave me the impression that the particular night's events would be very structured and I was taken aback by the number of children that had turned up.

How many were there? - My best guess would be about 60, it was very very popular.

At that stage were you at all concerned about Hamilton as a bad influence? - Absolutely not, I knew nothing of his background other than my brief five or ten minutes introduction.

After that first occasion did your kids go/go back? - Yes, they were very keen to continue, they thoroughly enjoyed it.

Over what period of time? - It was on a weekly basis, I can't remember the exact date it started but for possibly six weeks, six sessions.

Did you ever go to the club yourself other than to deliver or collect them? - I always delivered my boys and I collected them.

On these occasions did you ever speak to Hamilton?
- Briefly in passing.

Nothing happened in these conversations that caused you any concern about him? - Absolutely not, he complimented one of.....my youngest boy, he has quite an aptitude for ball games generally and he did point out that my youngest boy was particularly keen and was an excellent student.

Did he have any assistance with these classes? - Yes, there was at least one, possibly two assistants, and they all seemed to me to be students of physical education.

Once the enthusiasm of the first night subsided was there generally a regular attendance? - Yes, again from memory it was perpetually well attended, there seemed to be a substantial number of children.

As many as probably on the first night? - I would say possibly yes.

And remind us of that number roughly? - My first guess was 60, that was the order of children that I would see regularly over that six week period.

Did you hear that there would be a camp in the summer? - I did, Mr. Hamilton had explained.....in fact, I think he issued a hand-out to parents outlining the summer activities and it was meant to be arranged at Dunblane High School where the children would be invited to take over a two week period an intensive course of physical education and have instruction on various specialities and Mr. Hamilton had indicated that my youngest boy would be particularly well suited to such/such a course.

Did any of the kids go to that? - It just happened to be we were away on leave, on holiday, that particular fortnight when it was arranged and I think it was the first two weeks of the school holiday, that would be the first two weeks in July and we were away on holiday so it was unavoidable that none of my children could have attended.

Was the information you got in writing about the summer camps quite lengthy? - Yes, I think it involved at least two pages of A4 written text, it was a handwritten text by Mr. Hamilton and the letters I have seen subsequently were very very detailed, very small prints and there was quite a lot of information on this paper.

Print rather than handwriting? - Sorry, it was handwriting.

So all the information you got was handwritten? - Yes.

Do you remember whether it disclosed or said anything about photography and the children? - That is not an aspect I can recall, I don't think it specified that.

On the face of it would it have bothered you? - At that time possibly not.

Do you know if any of your children ever were photographed by Hamilton? - I am not aware of it.

Did any of the children ever go to Dunblane High School? - Yes, two of my sons at least made possibly two or three visits and this was an extra night during the week, I think from memory it was a Thursday evening.

How did they get there? - They were collected at the normal pick-up point at Graham High Street by Mr. Hamilton in a minibus along with at least a dozen or so other children.

After the summer break was there a club established somewhere else? - When we returned from holiday/holiday possibly approaching the end of July we got a letter and I just assumed it would go to the other parents who had expressed an interest in the summer school activities outlining the details of that particular course; it was a very detailed letter specifying the references of all the assistants Mr. Hamilton had, dealing with the qualifications of the people involved, the range of activities that took place and Mr. Hamilton specified the references to these assistants in relation to the work that they had done with the children over the two week period. It was a very very detailed letter insofar as it commented on I think it was an open day towards the end of that two week summer school where parents were invited to see the final displays of what the children had been learning over that two weeks.

Was this a typewritten letter? - No, handwritten.

This was again handwritten? - Yes.

Now, I was interested to know if somewhere else was to be set up for the new winter session? - After we received that letter I think we were communicated to by Mr. Hamilton, again a handwritten note informing us it was his intention to re-commence a boys club in Falkirk; the venue had changed, this would be Falkirk High School.

Did the boys go back? - They did indeed, all three.

And did you go? - I delivered and collected my boys.

Was that as well attended? - No, it was a much reduced number, it was possibly no more than a dozen.

Did you spend some time watching what was going on? - At that stage I was aware of some comments that had been made about Mr. Hamilton and I can't recall the source of these comments; I think it was passed to me in general conversation that there may be some difficulty in terms of running these particular boys clubs.

So what did you observe of the activities that were going on? - As all three of my children were/were keen to continue I delivered the boys at the normal time, 6 o'clock on a Monday and I went to collect my boys almost 20 minutes, even half an hour before the end of the session; I usually stood outside the gym hall waiting for them to get ready and basically keep an eye on what was happening inside the actual gym hall itself; there seemed to be general games, football, five-a-side and my boys were particularly keen on some form of general chasey games, what you call pirates, swinging around using some of the gym furniture and all of the boys were very enthusiastic and they thoroughly enjoyed it.

Are your three boys quite lively? - Yes, they are normal healthy boys.

They always, as far as you could tell, participated in fairly active sporting activities such as swinging on ropes and so on? - Yes, no problem.

And did your observations of these leave you with any anxiety about the treatment of the children at these clubs? - I can say at first hand over the time I was witnessing these events my children were quite happy and were enthusiastic participants.

Was Mr. Hamilton assisted in the Falkirk High School club by anyone else? - No, at that stage it was simply Thomas Hamilton.

Was a suggestion made to you? - In what context?

About assisting? - I think Mr. Hamilton had witnessed that I was.....I had turned up regularly, sometimes before the end of the session, and he noticed that I was kind of peering in through the doorway and he invited me to take part in the five-a-side games basically; Mr. Hamilton would be in one team and I would provide the muscle for the other side and for 10 minutes before the end of the session I would happily do that.

Did you become more involved in the running of the club? - As time wore on and I am trying to put dates together now, I can't remember the exact start of the autumn session; it must have been/been through the month of October Mr. Hamilton come to me and said he had experienced some difficulty in getting assistance to continue his Falkirk club and as a result he was trying to make alternative arrangements to bring someone who would take over from him; as I said, he was telling me he was about to start a new club and I think he mentioned Bishopbriggs at that time and would I be willing to take over from Mr. Hamilton; I was extremely reluctant to do so simply because of my work commitments and I am involved in another capacity at my son's secondary school at their youth club and I felt it was too much. Nevertheless, Mr. Hamilton telephoned me and he said "I am having great difficulty in securing further assistance and if that is the case then the club would have to close", could he rely on me as being a last resort. After perhaps two or possibly more telephone calls I was finally persuaded, not least because of the interest of my own children who felt they would be denied access to a very enjoyable means to recreation.

Did you get involved with running the club? - Yes, I did ultimately.

From what date roughly? - I think it was from the second week of November 1995.

Until when? - Early March 1996.

What brought it to an end in early March? - Basically my own work commitments; I was involved with the Local Government re-organisation at that stage and I was just finding the actual start time of 6 o'clock in the evening was becoming very difficult for me to make that appointment.

From the time that you took the club over did you see Hamilton again? - Not in person -- he rang me on the telephone possibly twice; I communicated with him by telephone and it was a fairly loose arrangement whereby he would pop in from time to time to see how things were going and how the club was performing and just basically to keep a check on the number of children who were attending.

Did he ever do that? - No -- sorry, he did visit me at my home one Monday evening, it must have been the third week of December, possibly the week/week before the Christmas break; that was the Monday and for that reason I cancelled that particular night because I couldn't make it, I was elsewhere.

Could you detect in conversation with him any loss of interest? - Absolutely not, he was particularly keen to encourage me to bring in more children basically to keep the numbers up; at that stage the number of children were no more than at one time possibly 10, maybe 11, three of that number were my own children.

When do you recall your last conversation with him was? - It may have been January, possibly into February.

Did he do anything to notify people of the change, that you would be running the club? - Yes, Mr. Hamilton had produced a printed handbill with my name and address as the contact number and this would be distributed to the local network of schools.

Was there still a fee for going to the club? - Yes, each child was being charged £1 a head.

Did you collect that money? - Yes, I collected that money.

What was Hamilton's arrangements about that? - He would see me at some stage in the future to take the money from me.

Did he ever do that? - No.

At/

10.20 a.m.

At any visit that you paid to the club in either Graham High School when he was running it how were the children dressed? - The children, not just my own boys, turned up with tracksuits and gym kit, shorts, tee shirts, vests underneath, and they would peel off their top clothing and straight into the activities.

Was that bare chested or wearing some type of clothing? - From time to time the kids took their shirts off, yes.

And vests as well? - Well, vests and tee shirts perhaps.

When you were taking the class how were the children normally dressed for the activity? - Tee shirt, football shorts , very loose clothing.

Was that different from the arrangement he had with them? - No, it was just a continuation.

Were there any occasions when he had the kids with their upper clothing completely off that you remember? - Yes. My own children in particular were very keen to shed clothing when they were particularly hot and they peeled off all sorts of.....

Did your own children or others do that when you were running the club? - Yes.

Do you see anything yourself wrong with the way in which they were doing that? - No. Kids, when they are under pressure, when they are enjoying the gymnasium, they felt the best way to cool down was to take off their tops.

On any occasion did Hamilton produce any clothing for them, either shorts or swimming trunks? - That that I am aware.

Did you on any occasion see the children undertaking their activities dressed in swimming trunks? - No.

Did you ever see any photographic equipment set up by Mr. Hamilton? - No.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: Did the fact that/that Hamilton was operating in a school have any bearing on your assessment of his suitability to run a club? - Possibly it did. I am aware that many organisations do use school facilities and premises out of normal school hours. It may have done but I didn't think of that as being particularly significant.

Can you remember who the mini-bus belonged to that he used? - I just remember the colour, the typical school type. It was yellow in colour. I just assumed that was part of the fleet of buses used by the Education Department.

If an accident had happened while you were in charge and a boy had been injured where do you think liability may have lain for that? - I did raise this point with Mr. Hamilton, given that I had no specific qualifications, and Mr. Hamilton said, well, obviously use commonsense, as long as the children did not use any specific equipment within the gym, furniture, but simple ball games, general exercises, that kind of activity would be quite normal.

But you never thought about the question of insurance? - Well, obviously the fact I had raised it with Mr. Hamilton as part of the whole discussions, I felt it was particularly appropriate, and from what Mr. Hamilton said I would be covered under the normal group activities.

So far as you are aware he had some sort of group activity insurance that would cover you in the event? - Yes.

No further cross-examination.
No re-examination.

BY LORD CULLEN: You have told us that the club moved on to Falkirk High School. Can you tell me what month operations began at Falkirk High School? - To the best of my recollection, sir, it would have been September.

ROBERT BALL, (50), Affirmed,

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you a University Lecturer? - Senior Lecturer at Stirling University./

University.

I think you are a Regional Councillor or at least were a Regional Councillor until the termination of the Central Region Authority? - That is correct. I was a Central Regional Councillor to 1st May, 1996 from 1978.

Are you still a Councillor with another authority? - Now I am a member of Stirling Council.

When were you first elected to Central Region? - I was first elected to Central Regional Council in the elections of May, 1978.

And from 1978 to 1996 did you represent more or less the same Ward area? - Yes, I represented the Wallace Division.

And did that incorporate the areas in which Thomas Hamilton lived between 1978 and 1996? - That is right. I believe that Mr. Hamilton first lived in the Riverside area, which was part of my Division, and then he moved into Braehead Division, and by the time he moved to Braehead the reorganisation of boundaries had put Braehead into my Division as well.

So Kent Road is in Braehead Division? - Kent Road is in Braehead area which became part of my Division after 1982.

As a Regional Councillor do you make yourself available in particular locations to meet constituents who want to make complaints or raise issues? - Yes. I run a regular programme of surgeries both in Riverside, Braehead and Cornton.

Was it at one of these surgeries you first met Thomas Hamilton? - Yes, it was at one of these surgeries, although it may have been actually in the Council that I first met Thomas Hamilton.

What do you mean by "in the Council"? - He may have made arrangements to meet. It was either a surgery or he had arranged to meet me in the Council. I can't remember at this date.

Was your meeting with him your first knowledge/knowledge of him or did you know him before that?

- The first knowledge of him was when I met him I think on the 4th October, 1983.

In what context did you meet him? - Hamilton had complained he had got a letter sent by the Central Regional Council which informed him his let of school premises had been terminated. The letter was fairly brief and gave no explanation as to why that decision had been taken.

You as a Councillor were not aware of that because it was in a different Department or had been done by someone you had no connection with? - It had been done by a sub-committee of which I was not a member of.

What did you make of the basis on which he had been told he would not have the let of premises? - Well, I thought it was unsatisfactory in that he had had a let of premises for a number of years and I thought it was only reasonable that before the let should be terminated some reason or explanation should be given.

Did that letter in fact relate to you what let he had? - I think it was a let of Dunblane High School.

As a result of him contacting you what action did you take? - I tried to find out more about the background of this. I was concerned about the way action had been taken. I asked that Hamilton should have a chance at putting forward his point of view before the decision was confirmed.

Who did you contact? - I contacted the Clerk to the Committee about the various processes that had gone on and I also wrote a letter to Ian Collie asking him to take this point on board.

I wonder if you would have a look at a document for me. It is DCRC/AC/B2/F1 10A (D14 and J(i)).

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, J(i) has nearly all the Productions that Councillor Ball will be shown. After we have dealt with this Production the other Productions can be dealt with in the book that the Bar Officer has. I assume the one in the book will be/be just as illegible as the one I have got.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: Is that a memo dated 14th October, 1983? - It seems to be.

You have got the original one? - Not very legible anyway. I can see it is dated 14th October.

Who is it from? - It is from Hugh Hamilton to Percy Buchanan.

Who is Hugh Hamilton? - Hugh Hamilton is the Clerk to the Committee.

Can you read it? - Not very well.

It is about Hamilton getting confidential information that perhaps shouldn't have been available to him and shouldn't have been available to people outwith the Committee which had been meeting in confidence. Were you aware of that concern being expressed at the time? - I was unaware of that concern being expressed. I wasn't really in possession of any confidential information since I wasn't a member of the Committee.

My question is exactly that one but slightly differently phrased. Did you have any source of confidential information which you passed on to Hamilton? - I didn't pass on confidential information to Hamilton. Obviously I had a copy of the Minute which was the basis of my discussion with Hamilton.

Were the Minutes confidential as well? - The Minutes were part of the public record. I obviously had to know what decisions had been taken.

Did you manage to get the sub-committee to reconsider the position? - The sub-committee did reconsider the position. I am not sure of whether that was as a result of my efforts or just -- I think the decision was reconsidered on November 7th but I don't know if that had anything to do with my efforts. I think it was partly because of the amount of correspondence received in the Council from users and parents of Hamilton's clubs.

Could/

Could you look at D19. You will see there a copy of a letter dated 25th October, 1983 from you to Mr. Collie the Director of Education in which you express certain views, and it seems, looking at the second sentence, "It seems to me that when this decision was taken there may have been a breach of natural justice in that no formal complaints were brought against the operation of the Dunblane Rover Group and that Mr. Hamilton was not given any opportunity to reply to such complaints"? - Yes. That was the decision which had been discussed around the Council.

I think in the second paragraph you mention other workers, one of whom was actually a physical education teacher employed by Central Region? - That is right.

Did you know who that person was? - No, I didn't.

Have you since learned that there actually was a physical education teacher there at that time? - No, I haven't but that was one point about taking the matter further, to actually investigate these things to see whether he was operating as an individual or whether he would have the support that he claimed.

You wanted to give Hamilton an opportunity to answer any criticisms; is that right? - I thought that would be the appropriate way of doing things. If there was criticisms at least Hamilton would have an opportunity to respond to them, then the Committee would perhaps take a decision based on all the evidence available.

How did you envisage him responding? - Well, very hard to -- since I wasn't all that clear what the exact details of the complaint against him were, I really didn't have any particular view on how he might respond. But I thought he should have an opportunity to do so.

Was this letter meant to be a response in a way of putting his side of the argument? - The letter was trying to resolve the situation, perhaps trying to create an opportunity for Hamilton to put forward his side of the argument so that all relevant factors could be considered.

Would/

Would you read the last paragraph please? - "I feel that if we do not agree to at least review the situation, then Mr. Hamilton might have a very strong case to appeal to the Ombudsman on the grounds of maladministration on the part of our Education officials".

That was the view you held at the time? - I felt natural justice hadn't been carried out in this particular case at that particular time.

Did you have a number of meetings with Hamilton at that time? - I think from time to time we were in contact, yes.

Was one of the things he wanted to do to institute a complaint to the Ombudsman? - I think after the whole question was reconsidered by the sub-committee there was a vote by the sub-committee and I believe there was an amendment laid in which it was suggested that consultation take place with Hamilton's club. That was the meeting of November the 7th. Following that I think Hamilton -- the sub-committee really reconfirmed their decision and I think Hamilton suggested taking the matter to the Ombudsman.

I think at that stage the Committee hadn't reconsidered -- they simply adhered to their previous decision? - Yes, they adhered to their previous decision, that's right.

Now, /

10.40 a.m.

Now, if you look at D15, do you see there the formal complaint to the Ombudsman? - Yes.

In fact it is dated 10th October, which is prior to that meeting? - "When did you first inform the Council about it?".

I am sorry. That is when he told you about it? - That is the first time he made his original complaint. That would be the very first meeting, where he told me about that particular complaint.

If we look at the second page do we have the date on the form of 24th November? - Yes.

And you sign it as his Regional councillor on the 1st December? - That would be following further consideration of the matter by the Further Education Sub-Committee of the Regional Council.

Could you look at D30a. That is a handwritten letter of yours to the Ombudsman? - Yes.

You say in that letter in the second paragraph "I would like to make two comments about his complaint"? - Yes.

Can you read what they are? - Firstly, it is normal practice when sending the Ombudsman this form to put in your own observations and also to make reference to the fact that you have tried to settle the thing locally.

Yes? - Firstly, "The FE Sub-Committee decided to withdraw the let of Mr. Hamilton's organisation purely on the basis of informal complaints and innuendo. Nothing has been substantiated, and the Education Department failed to investigate certain complaints that could have been investigated".

And secondly? - "Mr. Hamilton has at all times been willing to answer any complaint or make any reasonable changes in the way his organisation operates to try to meet the wishes of the/

the Council. So far he has been refused a hearing".

And your final paragraph? - "My view would be that there could be concern about the way this matter has been handled. Whether this would constitute maladministration is a matter for the Commissioner".

I think Hamilton's own form said it was "possible maladministration briefly in that the Council may have acted upon malicious gossip and unfounded allegations without investigation. I may have been slandered my officials to councillors, resulting in the loss of let of Dunblane High School to boys' club"? - Yes.

These were the comments he made himself? - Yes, there were his comments, not my comments.

What was your view of his treatment at that stage by the Council? - I still felt that the Council obviously did not know very much about the complaints. I was not a member of the Committee, but from what I could gather it seemed there had been little effort to substantiate them. Secondly, I still felt he ought to have had a hearing and have had an opportunity to respond to the complaints that had been made.

When that Minute has to be finally approved -- that is the Minute of this particular Sub-Committee for Further Education -- is that done at the Education Committee or is it done -- does it have to go to the full Council? - It would have to go both to the Education Committee and then to the full Council. At that time very little was delegated, and the Regional Council could change more or less anything they felt necessary.

Do you remember if you voted on this at the full Council? - I don't think there was a division on this issue at the full Council, no.

That means your vote would be recorded as agreeing with the full Council? - I think there would probably be a discussion in the Labour Group, and there would be a Group position on this.

Even in relation to things like letting of/of premises to individuals about whom there are rumours and perhaps allegations of some substance, although you had not been able to identify them, the Labour Group would take a position, and all Labour councillors would adhere to that? - I can't remember the detail at this stage, but at that stage things were very tightly controlled. At the Education Committee there would be a Labour Group meeting, and a line would be taken on practically everything in the Labour Group Minutes. You would have to go back to the Labour Group Minutes to find out if there was a discussion.

Yes? - Certainly the matter was raised in the majority group at that time, because somebody -- not me -- had leaked the matter to the Press.

It would be no surprise to you if an issue like this would be regarded as a political issue on which the Group should stand firm? - That would not have been my view, but that was the view of the Group in 1983.

Now, while the Ombudsman was considering matters the Council did consider again whether they should vary their view. During that period did you have any meetings with Thomas Hamilton? - I don't think I did, but I know Mr. Hamilton had had meetings with Mr. Collie, and a further application for the Dunblane let went to the Sub-Committee.

At that time, the time you have referred to when there was a Press leak, this was just before you submitted the complaint to the Ombudsman? - Yes.

Did you have meetings at that time with Hamilton in connection with signing that form? - Yes, obviously I had to meet Hamilton to sign the form, and I agreed at that time I would send a letter to the Ombudsman separately giving my views on the circumstances, which would be normal practice for all Ombudsman referrals.

Were you aware of some members of the Labour Group on the Council receiving letters supporting Hamilton? - Yes, I think all councillors received letters and petitions supporting Hamilton at that time.

Did/

Did the Labour Group ultimately divide on the vote whether or not the Council should have a meeting with him? - I can't verify that absolutely without actually seeing -- it is a long time ago -- the Labour Group Minutes, but I think there was definitely a division on the Labour Group about how this should be handled. We would need to check the Minutes to be absolutely certain, but that is my recollection. I suspect that happened when the Minutes of the meeting of November 7th came back to the Education Committee and the Council.

I think in fact I may have misled you about the 7th November. The 7th November meeting is in fact the one following the representations in writing, and there was a division? - Yes, there was a division at the Sub-Committee. The Sub-Committee Minute would come back to the Group for ratification one way or another.

The councillors voting in the minority were Councillors Sneddon and Saunders. Are these Labour councillors? - Charlie Sneddon was the Vice-Convenor of the Council at that time, who was obviously a Labour councillor, but Councillor Saunders was -- he seconded the motion -- the leader of the Conservative Group.

So the Sub-Committee was not divided on party political lines? - No, I think various people had various views about the merits of Hamilton's case. It certainly was not a party political split in that sense.

Now, after the complaint to the Ombudsman was in did you hear any more from Hamilton until the result? - I can't remember hearing any more from Hamilton until the result.

Did he send you the result? - I think the Ombudsman sent me the result.

Did you meet Hamilton at that time at all? - I think I probably did meet Hamilton at the surgery to discuss the result.

But you don't remember him speaking to you on the phone and Hamilton telling you that he saw this as a vindication of his actions? - I think that he wouldn't necessarily have said it was a/a vindication, but the impression I got from Hamilton was that he regarded it as a vindication: that was the impression he gave.

Can you remember whether you met him or spoke to him on the phone? - I think I met him.

Now, what action did the Council want to take as a result of that report? - I think the Council first of all wanted to consider the report, which it did. I think there was a division again in the Council about how it would be handled. I think some members wanted to take no action, and other members wanted to set up a Sub-Committee to meet Hamilton and his Committee and discuss the way forward.

Yes? - I think on a division the proposal to set up a Sub-Committee was successful.

Now, there was some difficulty experienced in organising a meeting between Hamilton and the Sub-Committee; is that right? - Yes, that is right.

He was unwilling to do certain things; is that correct? - I think Hamilton was still also toying with the idea of taking further legal action against the Council.

Could you perhaps look at D67? Have you got that? - Yes, that is right.

That is a letter from a solicitor acting for Hamilton to the Director of Administration? - Yes.

Saying he does not feel a meeting would be any good? - Yes, that is right, because Hamilton wanted to proceed with his legal complaint.

This is dated 25th February, 1985, three months after the Ombudsman's decision? - Yes.

His solicitor indicates he has already provided details of the club constitution and would be prepared to provide any further information the Council required, but that he did not think he needed to meet the Council? - Yes.

Now,/

Now, what did you make of that attitude? - I was disappointed with that attitude, because I thought the Ombudsman's decision was enough for the Council. I was disappointed to find that Hamilton was thinking of taking further legal action, and I contacted Hamilton by telephone and told him that I would give him absolutely no support in any further legal action he would take against the Council, and I said he should meet the Sub-Committee to discuss all the issues which arose from the original problem and also from the Ombudsman's report.

Was he eventually persuaded to do that? - Yes, I think so.

Did that take some time? - Yes.

If you look at D72, I think that is a memo you sent to the Chief Assistant Director of Administration? - That is right.

And in it you say you had spoken to Hamilton, and he has at last taken your advice and agreed to meet the specific Committee which was set up for the purpose? - That is right.

And that meeting did take place? - Yes.

Was a scheme worked out whereby the lets may be restored? - Yes, I think there was a meeting with Hamilton and his Committee, who all seemed quite reasonable people.

And you met with them as well? - I was a member of the Sub-Committee as the local member.

Were you happy with the appearances that were now presented to you? - Yes, I think Hamilton's Committee all looked like reasonable people, who seemed to be involved in the club, so that did away with the worries that there was no proper management structure. On the whole I thought it was a fairly constructive discussion.

What was the next episode that you became involved in? - In the discussion I think it was also agreed that Hamilton would drop the "Rovers" name, there would be a proper management structure and that the Youth & Community organisation/organisation would monitor his organisation. The next thing involving Hamilton.....

Just before you move on, can you tell me how you envisaged the Youth & Community Department monitoring this organisation? - We did not go into details. We suggested at the meeting that we would keep a watching brief, and maybe visit his club and make sure everything was going on okay from time to time.

Do you know if anybody did that? - I don't think it was done to any great extent.

What was the next episode that you became involved in? - I did not really become involved. As far as I can remember I think the next thing was the Loch Lomond incident in 1988, which I did not get involved in, but I received large volumes of correspondence with regard to the various complaints that Hamilton raised with the police, so I was a post box during most of that process.

Were you in any practical way involved in the investigations which followed that camp? - No. I regarded this as a matter for the police complaints procedure and not really relevant for a local member. I did however get a very large volume of correspondence both from Hamilton about his case and the police.

Can we move on to October, 1990, when Mr. Hamilton raised I think more difficulties with Dunblane High School. Can you remember that? - Yes, I think so.

Can you look at D100? Do you see there a copy of a letter from one of the staff in the Department of Administration, Mr. Flett, to Mr. Hamilton dated 9th October, 1990? - Yes.

Is that indicating there is a problem there, trying to answer a complaint he has raised about losing part of his time for one of his evenings at Dunblane High School? - Yes. I don't think I have ever seen that letter before.

I think your involvement can be seen in D101, which is a letter you have sent to the Convener/

Convener of the Education Committee and the Director of Education, dated 10th October, 1990? - Yes.

Now, does this help to remind you of the situation?

- Yes. I think the reason I raised this was not so much the Hamilton situation but the community let of halls. It seemed Hamilton had lost a let to our own Youth & Community service, and that raised the whole argument about whether our own services should be able to push existing users out when they decided to raise any event of their own.

You would see in the previous memo the explanation was that Hamilton was not using part of his time, and that was the bit being taken up by your own community development organisation? - I was never sent that memo. That would have given me a reasonable explanation of what was happening.

But you did have a view about taking lets off independent people and giving them to the Youth & Community service? - Yes.

And that is set out in the memo? - Yes. At this time the Council was very concerned about community use of educational premises, and the Council wanted to encourage community use of educational premises. It seemed to me if we removed lets from organisations which currently had them to take them over for our own services we would be discouraging community groups. I had no idea that Hamilton was not using that particular time, because neither Hamilton nor Mr. Flett sent me a copy of that explanation.

I think you were concerned that Hamilton had an established let of the premises and should not be losing them? - Yes. This letter was not so much about Hamilton but about the general policy question. That is why I wrote to Godfrey as well.

11 a.m.

Were you aware that this was raised by the Ombudsman? - I was unaware that this was raised by the Ombudsman.

Were you aware that it was quite quickly resolved after your intervention? - This particular problem?

Yes? - I wasn't aware that it was resolved but since I didn't receive any more complaints I assumed it must have been.

Would you look at D104; you will see that is a letter to Hamilton telling him it is okay to resume 8 to 10 Thursday evening? - Yes.

If you look at D103? - It wasn't copied to me.

I appreciate that; you will see that is a letter from the Director of Administration to the Chief Executive explaining the position saying in the second paragraph "It is a condition of the Council's scheme of letting of premises that courses etc. run by the Regional Council take precedence over lets to third parties"? - Yes.

Then at the bottom second-last paragraph "I have to advise you that I am unaware of any deliberate policy of targeting Mr. Hamilton;s groups to be disrupted or terminated nor any abuse of the Council's policy on letting"? - I never alleged that there was any disruption intended.

I think the Chief Executive has written a note at the bottom of that memo saying "What about R. Ball's point"? - Yes, it would seem to be quite right if two organisations were applying for a let, for new lets, and one was the Regional Council organisation that the Regional Council should take preference; my worry was that it was seen to be unfair if an organisation had got a let and was operating fairly actively and then loses the let simply because the Regional Council wanted to put on some event of its own so I was arguing the matter in general about all lets rather than specifically the question of Hamilton.

Did/

Did you hear about Hamilton's 1991 camp at Milarrochy Bay? - Yes, I did.

How did you hear about it? - Hamilton sent me correspondence.

The same as in 1988? - The same as in 1988.

Did you get involved in any way? - No, I didn't get involved in any way because I thought it was purely a police matter, I didn't know anything about it, I was happy to sit on the sidelines and see what happened.

There may have been one practical way in which you were involved; there was a complaint made about a part played by one of your social workers? - Yes.

Were you involved in some way advising Hamilton about that? - Hamilton said "I want to complain against two social workers, who do I complain to?" and I said that this is a responsibility of the Chief Executive to handle that and that was my only involvement in that particular issue.

I think then in 1993 Hamilton communicated with you about various questions the Council was asking about him and his organisation? - Yes, that is correct.

How did that arise? - I seemed to be getting a series of memos where lots of questions seemed to be asked about gymnastics qualifications and AGM Minutes and to some extent some of the memos seemed to be going round in circles.

Perhaps if you have D157; is that a letter you sent to Mr. Flett, the administrative chap? - Yes, that's right, that was after we received various pieces of correspondence about this.

Is it dated the 21st of July, 1993? - Yes.

Could you read that please? - "I have had various correspondence recently from Mr. Hamilton./

Hamilton. I do not know whether you are aware of the background to this, but there was a problem with the Education Department a number of years ago which resulted in the Authority being censored by the Ombudsman. Since then Mr. Hamilton has felt that he is being victimised by the Council and I am somewhat concerned to see problems arising again. I hope we are on sound ground and that all the documentation that we seem to be asking from him is also being sought from other organisations". So my main concern was to see that Hamilton was being treated the same as everybody else.

That was as a result of the Council wanting to know about his gymnastics qualifications? - Yes, it wasn't just one letter about his gymnastics qualifications, it was a whole series of letters.

Well, we may see that but certainly that was one of the subjects he was concerned about? - I think gymnastic qualifications and the question of the AGM Minutes.

Did you have a feeling about what was happening at that stage? - I didn't feel that there was any effort to disrupt Hamilton's clubs, I just felt that the thing was getting bogged down in the bureaucratic system and perhaps matters were not being expedited in a reasonable period of time.

Did the Ombudsman spring to mind or did Hamilton introduce the Ombudsman into conversation with you? - I can't remember, I think the Ombudsman sprang to mind but I can't absolutely say one way or another; what I wanted, I wanted to avoid getting into a long exchange of correspondence going on for months and just get the matter resolved.

Now, could you look at D158 which I think is the reply from Mr. Flett, is that right? - Yes.

Could you read out that reply? - "Thank you for your letter of 21st of July 1993, the position is that I have received a number of letters of complaint from individual parents and a School Board about Mr. Hamilton. These complaints refer to Mr. Hamilton's teaching methods, his qualifications and the above committee".

What/

What is the above committee? - The Boys' Sports Clubs Group Committee, that would be Hamilton's committee.

Carry on? - "I have been in correspondence with Mr. Hamilton about these qualifications and am satisfied that these are in line with the Region's current requirements. As to his teaching methods I am still considering the position. So far as the Committee is concerned I have asked Mr. Hamilton for a copy of the Minutes of the last AGM so we can be satisfied that it is a bona fide club. I am aware of the background to Mr. Hamilton and can quite understand that he may feel he is being victimised but I think it is only correct that we address the specific issues raised by individuals and the School Board and advise them accordingly. I trust this information is of assistance but if there is anything further you wish to know do not hesitate to get in touch with me again".

Now, do you know which School Board it was? - No, I don't.

But he does refer there to a number of letters of complaints from individual parents and the School Board? - Yes, about his teaching methods.

Now, he then refers to look for the Minutes of the AGM? - Yes.

And I think eventually you saw correspondence which includes Minutes of an AGM? - Yes.

Is that right? - Yes.

Do you remember the date of these Minutes? - From memory I would say some time about the 8th of August, 1993, was it?

If you look at the date of the letter from Mr. Flett it is dated the 27th of July? - Yes.

And he is looking for a copy of the Minutes of the last AGM? - Right.

Which certainly wouldn't be the 8th of August./

August. Were you aware that subsequently Flett was concerned that what he ultimately got after asking a number of times was Minutes of a meeting which took place after the date he was asking for the Minutes? - No, I wasn't.

You can see they were the Minutes of the 8th of August, that must have been the position? - I suppose it must have been.

Over the piece of this correspondence did you form the impression that the Administration Department was putting obstacles in Hamilton's way? - No, I didn't think that; I think basically things had got perhaps into a bit of a bureaucratic hassle and problems were arising for that reason; nobody told me that there was any policy of obstructing Hamilton's lets or his activities.

Perhaps you could look at D167; you will see that is a memo issued by Mr. Flett dated the 30th of August? - Yes.

If you read that? - "I have had complaints from Tom Hamilton that his new lets have not been processed. Perhaps you could ensure that this matter is speeded up".

What caused you to write that? - I presume I had a complaint from Mr. Hamilton about that, I don't know whether there is any documentary complaint or a telephone complaint, I am not sure but it was normally the practice for the Regional Council to pass on complaints in this way.

And now if you look at D173 which is a letter dated the 21st of September 1993 from you to Mr. Flett? - Yes.

Can you read that one please? - "I have received further correspondence from Mr. Hamilton and it does seem to me that there has been a certain amount of nit-picking over the question of Minutes from the AGM. It seems to me that the Minutes of the meeting of the 8th of August seem to be perfectly satisfactory. I hope the matter of these lets is now resolved and we can try to avoid blowing this up into a long running issue. My experience is that this kind of issue usually ends up with the Regional Council having egg on its face".

We/

We cannot be too hard on Mr. Flett having concern about the Minutes that came in dated after the time he is asking for them? - I didn't realise it was the 1992 Minutes and not the 1993 Minutes he was after.

Well, he had looked for the Minutes of the last meeting back in July and then he gets Minutes which you seem to have seen dated August 1993; was your view at that stage that there was no obstacle to dealing with his lets and granting them? - I have no information that there was any obstacle or that we were putting obstacles in his way but I was just treating this as part of Regional Council business.

Can I take it that up until this time you had never had a complaint direct to you against Mr. Hamilton? - Yes, that is correct.

Did that change just shortly after these letters we have been looking at? - That's right.

Could you look at D176? - Yes.

Now, that is another letter; in fact, I may not have given you the right one? - This is a letter to Mr. Flett that I think I got the same letter myself.

In fact, if you have what I think is a separate document from the folders, DCRC RB10? - Yes.

There should be a memo dated the 11th of October, 1993 from Councillor Ball to Mr. Magee? - Yes, that's right, that's it.

Now, is that the memo you sent when you got the complaint? - That's right.

And can you read what you said to Mr. Magee? - "We need to discuss my response to the enclosed letter. It is possible that it has been sent to the people named in Central Region so therefore there may be a co-ordinated response. My view of this letter is that it is full of innuendo but little hard fact. The question of black shorts and photographic activity was exhaustively investigated by the police back in 1988. Perhaps we could/could have a brief word about this after the Policy Committee meeting tomorrow".

So you had received a complaint from a family, we don't really need to go into the names? - That's right.

About the summer camp? - Yes.

At least the sports club at one of the peripheral areas where Hamilton was running these activities and about a boy feeling uneasy? - Yes.

Apparently after being with Hamilton, is that right? - That's right.

Indeed I think he had gone to the camp but after the second day he was upset when he was collected? - That's right, yes.

And the things that was concerning the parent was the insistence on the children being topless, having to change into black shorts and photographic activity? - Yes.

The reason you got the letter was because of something in it which was circulated dated the 19th of April, 1993 with a list of names as main contacts for the group? - Yes.

You were listed along with Michael Forsyth? - Yes, Douglas Sinclair I think.

Before we get to the Regional Council Central Scotland Police Inspector Mike Mill? - Yes.

And also your Regional Council Chief Executive and someone else in the Chief Executive's Department, a Regional Council organiser and a Youth and Community officer? - Yes.

Did you do anything about the fact that you were being listed as the main contact for the organisation? - Yes, I telephoned Hamilton and told him I didn't give him permission to do that.

What happened as a result of that? - I think he changed his material in the future.

And secondly, did you not think that this letter/letter taken along with what you knew of the past because you also knew about 1991? - Yes.

And you knew about concerns in 1983? - Yes.

Did you not think that all that taken together deserved more than a description of innuendo? - Yes, maybe that was perhaps the wrong term but I did take the note very seriously because I had sent this to Bill Magee who is the Chief Legal Officer and organised a meeting with him.

What action was taken apart from telling Hamilton you were unhappy about your name being used because you didn't give permission? - I took this along to Bill Magee who was actually handling..... the Director of Legal Admin. at the time, he was handling all the correspondence with regard to Hamilton at the time and he fully investigated Hamilton's background and a number of people in the Council who had these particular complaints and he said he would deal with it on behalf of the Council as a whole; we also discussed Hamilton's situation in general and Bill said as the Chief Legal Officer that he was.....his policy was to ensure that all complaints were properly investigated but that action should only be taken if we had some firm case.

So you were getting an account by way of the Administrative and Legal Department of what was the situation at that stage? - Yes, from the Chief Legal Officer.

That was Magee? - Yes, that was Bill Magee who was the Director of Legal and Administrative Services.

He was telling you although there were a number of similar complaints to the ones you were handing over there wasn't sufficient substance? - No, these complaints were sent to a number of different people in the Region.

He didn't tell you there had been a number of similar complaints? - No, all he said was that he had sifted all the background with regard to Hamilton.

Do/

Do you know if any further investigations were carried out into the complaints by the Council? - I made sure that Mr. Magee carried out that; he did respond on behalf of the Council and when he said he would do something he would do it.

I think I wrongly suggested to you earlier in evidence that an incident relating or a change in the position in relation to a later let at Dunblane High School had been referred to the Ombudsman and that is the next item I want to ask you, about such an incident? - I have no recollection of anything in 1990.

Could you look at D191; it should be a letter from the Ombudsman to Mr. Hamilton dated the 6th of June 1994? - Yes, that's right.

Where reference is made to his complaint about the Authority's handling of the let at Dunblane High School for the summer camp.

Do/

11.40 a.m.

Do you remember being involved in that at all? - My involvement was -- I wasn't involved in that at all -- my only involvement was to arrange a meeting between Hamilton and the Chief Executive to try and resolve the complaints before it went through the Ombudsman process.

Did you arrange such a meeting? - Yes, I managed to arrange a meeting.

Did that as far as we can tell from this letter resolve the matter? - I think there were other complaints outstanding apart from this one about the let of Dunblane. But, yes, it seemed following the meeting with Douglas Sinclair everything was resolved properly and suitably.

Did you learn of this particular complaint to the Ombudsman? - No, I didn't.

Was that not necessary? - It was not necessary to have the Regional Councillor's signature on it then. I didn't know at that time -- neither did I know Hamilton had complained to the Ombudsman and this letter was the first time I learned it was going on.

When did the law change so that you didn't need to do it through a Councillor? - I honestly can't say.

The first one we looked at earlier was 1983. Was that the only one that you submitted on his behalf? - It is the only one I have counter-signed on his behalf.

Apart from the two matters of 1988 and 1991 did he send you a volume of correspondence for other matters? - The main correspondence he had was of police complaints. I got masses of correspondence with regard to that, and that seemed to go on more or less interminably. I think I was talking to the Chief Constable once and he reckoned the volume of correspondence with regard to the 1991 complaint had filled three Lever Arch files. I think from time to time we got a number of other correspondence regarding Hamilton's complaints but these were just generalities I think and he didn't ask/ask me to do anything.

Was that a series of correspondence about the problems he saw in the letting arrangements in Dunblane High School in which he also referred to the involvement of one of the serving police officers who happened to be a Committee member? - That is right. I got a series of letters about that, and it seemed to me he wanted to pursue the policeman because he had some connection with the 1988 incident, so I really kept well clear of that one. I think I just destroyed the correspondence. Once you get dragged into the complaint.....

Could you have in front of you D207. Is that a memo from you to the Director of Education dated 2nd February, 1995? - I don't seem to have anything between 206 and 208.

Missing, is it? Is it possible to get the original one? It is DCRC/AC/F1/69. That is a memo of 2nd February. It is a memo from you to Dr. Young? - That is right.

Was he the Depute or the Director of Education at that stage? - No, he was they Depute -- well, he wasn't a Depute, he was Head of Resources at that time. I think at that stage I had become Convenor of the Education Department.

When did you become Convenor? - I became Convenor in May, 1994.

What gave rise to this memo? - Well, there were complaints re-surfacing about Hamilton, and it was agreed Graeme Young should investigate all complaints. I was saying I would like to be kept informed about it, particularly to be consulted before action was taken, and in fact I realised if action was taken I would have to defend the Council's position in public.

I think you talk in the first line about a long and litigious history of this case? - That is right.

And you talk in the second paragraph about after the Ombudsman episode it was agreed that the Youth and Community Service should keep a close eye on this group and this never seems to have happened? - Yes.

You/

You were obviously particularly conscious of Hamilton resorting to, on other occasions threatening to resort to legal steps?
- Yes.

And also you were particularly conscious it would appear of the fact that the Ombudsman had found in his favour some years before? - No, it wasn't so much the Ombudsman episode, I was just concerned since we were getting complaints about Hamilton, it would be nice if there had been closer contact between them and our Youth and Community Services in that we would have more information about what was going on.

I take that point from you, but I see also that on earlier occasions when we looked at the correspondence we saw him referring to the Ombudsman as if he was somehow or other the answer to the way to conducting this business? - That was from the previous case, but not in this case. This was my reference to the way in which this agreement was undertaken.

If you go back a little in the folder to D206, is that a letter from Hamilton to you dated 21st January, 1995, a handwritten letter from Hamilton? - I don't seem to have it.

A moment ago you told us you went from 206 to 208?
- I don't have that one.

Well, it is DDH/336. That is a letter dated 21st January? - That is right, yes.

He calls you Rob; is that your first name? - Yes.

Was he on first name terms with you? - Well, after 13 years of correspondence.....

That's how it was? - I don't think there is anything sinister in that. Many constituents call me by my first name.

Were your letters addressed "Dear Tom"? - I don't remember. I very rarely wrote to him.

The Council never got to that length. But you don't remember how you addressed him? - No.

You/

You will see here that he is sending you a copy of a letter, refers to having sent a copy of a letter from Dr. Young of the Education Department and says he is appalled at how events get taken out of context and there is no sinister implication in our important work? - That is right.

He is talking here of rumour and largely false information about his activity? - That is right.

The next paragraph down at the bottom he talks about the general effect where parents hear such rumours an otherwise satisfied parent begins to read sinister implications into every day events? - Yes.

"Which I believe is the case today"? - Yes.

He goes on to say, he talks about the Bannockburn High School in 1983 on a night eight boys reported, items of clothing missing, and he goes on about changing, changing in a certain part of the school in the gymn rather than the changing room? - Yes.

He then justifies his photography; is that right? - Yes.

He says "It is the case that the use of photography has been successful and became a great training aid as well as a record of our work"? - Yes, that is right.

And he says that for the purpose of certain types of gymnasium activity the boys require to wear clothes which will allow maximum stretching and flexibility; is that right? - That is correct.

He sends you or there should be attached I think a picture of a particularly flexible person? - Yes. I don't seem to have that in the file.

You will remember having been sent a picture of someone stretching to illustrate the point he was making; is that right? - That is right, yes.

Now, /

Now, it is in the light of this that you appear to be taking the position with your own permanent staff that you should be consulted whenever anything arises about Hamilton; is that right? -

No, no, not when anything arises, but when any course of action is decided upon, particularly if events occurred, I just wanted to be kept up to date with what was going on.

Is it right that Hamilton at that stage was expressing his own concern he hadn't been informed of the details of complaints against him? - He was.

Did you have a view on whether he should be told what people were complaining about? - My view was the complaints should be investigated before Hamilton was informed because otherwise Hamilton may appear on the doorstep to complain about their complaints.

Did you think that was in his nature? - Well, I think it can be fairly said he tended to defend himself fairly vigorously.

Did the Council have a policy about revealing the identity of people who made complaints? - I am not sure of the Council policy in the whole area. I think Dr. Young perhaps allowed Hamilton to see complaints as long as the response was through him.

Sorry, I didn't follow that? - I think he allowed Hamilton to see complaints but the response had to be through Dr. Young, not directly to the complainant.

Do you know if the identities of the complainers were ever given to him? - I don't know.

If you look at D209 which I hope you have, there should be a compliment slip at the beginning of that number of items of correspondence? - Yes.

And you will see the first of these, there is reference to further letters written by Hamilton both to Dr. Young and to you? - Yes.

If you look at 1F we have a letter dated 12th February. It is this time from Hamilton to you?/

you? - Yes. There were a whole series of letters round this time.

You will see he refers to returning a phone call and discussing the matter with you on the first line? - Yes.

And he goes on to say, "No parent has ever complained to me nor has there ever been any complaint so far as I am aware from a parent who was ever sent or received photographs"? - Yes, I see that.

Were you aware of any complaints apart from that one at the use of photography? - I think I was generally aware there were a number of complaints about the amount -- not obviously the use of photography -- the amount of photography that was involved in Hamilton's clubs.

In that letter he asked for notification of any complaints to him? - Yes.

You obviously saw the difficulty of Hamilton being told of identities? - Yes, because I felt that would hinder the process of investigating the complaints so I ignored that particular request.

Were you concerned at all about the issue of photography at that time? - I was concerned about the amount of complaints it was generating about the quantity of photography. Hamilton would argue he needed photography to allow his club to be run well, he wanted it as a teaching aid, and the impression I got was perhaps the amount of photography going on was excessive, and I think Dr. Young felt the same way.

Around this time had the Legal Department before involved again through the offices of Mr. Cobb? - That is right.

Whose decision was that? - I'm not sure whose decision it was. I welcomed it because it seemed to me the addition of a legal expert would be valuable in this particular situation.

Was Mr. Magee still in post then? - In 1975, no, I think he had left by 1974. He left well/well before that.

You mean 1994? - He left well before local government reorganisation.

After that was it more administrative rather than a legal matter? - Could you repeat that?

Was that Department dealing with it more through the administrative side than the legal side? - I am not really sure. I didn't become Convener of Education until 1994.

Could you now look at D213. You will see that is a letter dated 3rd May from Dr. Young to Hamilton? - Yes.

Headed "Boys' Clubs (Various Organisations) - Parental Complaints"? - Yes.

He was referring back to the letter of February, 1995?
- Yes.

Were you aware that during that period there was ongoing concern among the staff of the Social Work, Education and Legal Departments about Hamilton and the complaints they were getting? - I wasn't aware of the Social Work and the Police.....

I said the Social Work, Education and Legal Departments? - The Legal Department -- I was certainly aware as Convener of Education. I was obviously aware of some concern in the Education Department, and I always made it clear to the officers there that every case should be fully investigated, and that job was given to Graeme Young, and that is why it appears in this correspondence.

So what we have here on 3rd May is an indication to Hamilton of what the Council's position is following their consideration of the complaints made? - That is right.

What does he say? - This is on 3rd May?

Yes? - "I refer to previous correspondence on the above topic and in particular to your letter of 10th February, 1995. I feel it is/is necessary, firstly, to reaffirm to you that in seeking to investigate the complaints made by parents, the Regional Council was not taking a stance on the conduct of the boys' clubs as such. Rather as a responsible education authority the Regional Council has to give consideration to complaints which are made regarding the conduct of any lets within its premises. Secondly, I note that throughout the organisation of your boys' clubs, the use of photography is deemed to be an integral part. In light of the complaints which we have received I feel it is essential that this fact is made known to parents and is incorporated in any publicity material/flyers which you circulate in advance of recruitment of boys into such clubs. Such publicity should make it plain that parents enrolling their children in such a boys' club are likely to find the boys being photographed by the organisers in early course. It would be appropriate for such information to be incorporated in all publicity material forthwith."

Is that as far as the Council ever went in directing Hamilton of the standards he should apply in advising his boys' parents about the way in which his club operated? - On the issue of photography that may well be the case, but I did send another memo to Mr. Young saying we ought to get hold of Hamilton's publicity material and make sure it does actually implement this but I am not sure of any further action on that particular issue.

So/

11.40 a.m.

So far as the clothing issue was concerned, is it right to say the Council never took a firm position on that? - No. I think there were some worries about the Council, but I don't think there was any firm action taken on the matter. It was after all a hall let of primary schools.

Could you look at D220? That is a letter dated 11th June to Dr. Young from Hamilton, and he is referring to a recent meeting and pointing out that it was for Dr. Young to tell teachers at Bannockburn Primary that they should not make comments that they could not substantiate, and I think he asks Dr. Young to send a letter of apology to all parents of Bannockburn Primary pupils involved in this? - I did have a discussion about that with Dr. Young. We agreed we would not be sending any letter of apology, but make clear that if teachers were making these remarks they were doing it off their own bat and not on behalf of the Education Authority, and we left it to stick to the wall at that stage.

If you look at D222, Dr. Young wrote to Hamilton saying he did not think it appropriate for him to issue an apology, and he had written to the head teacher to see if she could advise him exactly what was said, and to whom? - That is right.

Would you look at D228, which is a circular letter dated 18th August, 1995? Have you got that? - Yes.

I think this one came from your own possession? - Yes, it did. I have them from 1993 onwards.

Was this delivered through the door? - Yes, it was. It was just part of his correspondence.

At the bottom of the first page there is a reference to 1985, or at least to the business between 1993 and 1995, and it says "At that time, a prominent Regional councillor made uncomplimentary remarks about the Scout official involved, and concluded 'we have previously viewed senior officials of the Scout Movement to be honourable, upright/upright people who would be above this sort of malicious act, and this business has been a real eye-opener to all of us"? - Yes.

Were you that Regional councillor? - I definitely was not the Regional councillor. At no time during this correspondence have I made any statement either for or against Hamilton's clubs, and I have certainly said nothing about the Scouts. I don't know whether any Regional councillor said that or whether he has just made it up, but it certainly was not me. I don't go out to cause gratuitous offence by making that sort of statement.

Would you look at D233? Is that a letter of 1st September from the Education Department to Mr. Hamilton? - That is correct.

I think indeed the Council is raising a question with him? - That is right.

What governing body qualifications are held by him; is that right? - Yes.

Under what auspices were his staff checked? - Yes.

Why do the boys wear only swimming trunks; is that right? - Yes.

Why are they not asked to provide their own? - Yes.

And who is the Social Services Community Child Care Specialist? - Yes.

Now, some of this is old grounds being gone over again? - Yes, some of the issues were covered in Dr. Young's letter.

Why was it necessary to ask Hamilton yet again these questions? - I'm not sure about that. Local Government re-organisation had taken place, and Dr. Young had become Director of the new Falkirk authority. He was also twin tracking as Acting Director of Central Regional Council.

Yes? - Mr. Steele I think was perhaps given that individual responsibility. I was never consulted nor informed as to why the letter was/was sent. It would seem to me if Mr. Steele had worries about this it was fair enough for him to send the letter.

Is it possible because Hamilton never really gave straight answers to simple questions? - It is possible. You would have to ask Mr. Steele.

You will see if you look at what might be attached to that there is another letter immediately after that, dated 2nd September, from Hamilton to Steele? - Yes, there was a letter. There was a response from Hamilton to Steele on the 2nd.

It starts off by saying "You refer to continued parental concerns, but you do not give proper details of names or numbers, places or dates. Indeed it would be a requirement of natural justice to provide such information to enable me to provide a proper answer after proper evaluation of such complaints"? - Yes.

That is his starting point? - Yes.

Could I ask you to move on to a letter dated 26th January, 1996, which I think we will find as DDH361, which is also part of R30, one of the originals? - This is the January letter?

Yes? - I have got it.

Which D number is it? - D241.

Now, did you receive this letter just after the 26th January? - Yes, about that. It is marked "Private and Confidential", but I think a large number of people have received it.

Did it come to you on its own or was there anything else attached to it? - I think it came to me on its own.

Did you get another copy of it just before the incident at Dunblane Primary School? - No.

So you didn't get a copy of the letter sent to the Queen? - Yes, I got a copy of the letter sent to the Queen, but that came on its own.

After/

After you had read this letter did you have any instant reaction to it? - Well, I read the letter. There was first of all a sense of deja vu that we were now going right back to 1983 again. This was one feature of Hamilton, that he never seemed to be able to put the past behind him.

Yes? - Secondly, I was slightly worried, because it seemed to me his mental state in this letter was slightly deteriorating. Thirdly, I looked at it to see whether he was asking me to do anything, and he wasn't, so I interpreted it as a general complaint about life and took no action on the matter.

Is it right the first paragraph talks about the matter being touched on at Bannockburn? - Yes.

And also it deals with Dunblane Primary School? - Yes.

We have not looked in detail at this letter yet. Would you read to us please the first paragraph? - "Over six months ago I wrote to you to report that following a discussion among teachers in the staffroom in Bannockburn Primary School, teachers were informing pupils and parents that I am a pervert and as a result all of the 26 pupils who were members of my Bannockburn boys sports club left immediately, and local gossip followed. The response of the Education Department to me was that teachers may have been expressing their own personal views or opinions is unacceptable in that they were acting within school time and on school premises. For the Education Department to say to the school that teachers should not make any statements that they could not substantiate is, quite frankly too little too late and has done nothing to correct the situation. Indeed this situation is not confined to Bannockburn Primary School and is widespread in primary schools across the Region, where many head teachers and teachers have shown great vigour and enthusiasm to warn as many people as possible. At Dunblane Primary School where teachers have contaminated all of the older boys with this poison even former cleaners and dinner ladies have been told by teachers at school that I am a pervert. There have been reports at many schools of our boys being rounded up by staff and/and even warnings given to entire schools by head teachers during assembly".

Yes? - "All of this has been extremely damaging over the years not only to my clubs but to my public standing and has resulted in a complete loss of my ability to earn a living".

Yes? - That was a theme of a number of his other letters, where he claimed the 1983 rumours caused his business to collapse. I had made the point to him and told him it was really market forces, and the arrival of B & Q and strong competition that had done this.

He also says "Any attempt to enlighten people is very time-consuming and expensive and has largely proved to be impossible"? - Yes.

"Where previously happy people are poisoned in this way they become hostile and unapproachable and will see in their own mind sinister slants to normal everyday events through now suspicious and tainted eyes"? - Yes.

"As this snowballs, there is a boomerang effect in that new parents who have heard vague gossip locally may seek to warn the school or Education Department without realising that they have been and are the main source and that such is seen by the school as being confirmation of their own mistaken belief"? - Yes.

What does it say in the next paragraph? - "I have no criminal record nor have I ever been accused of sexual child abuse by any child, and I am not a pervert. I have always run my clubs in a fair, proper and competent manner and ensured that no child or parent has any proper or legitimate complaint. Nevertheless, this defamation coming from the respected source of local primary school staff has caused untold problems everywhere within the Region and beyond".

He then says "The origin of this matter when schools became involved, dates back to 1983 when Mr. W. Ross, an official of the Education Department at that time, telephoned numerous schools to warn head teachers that I am a pervert, was currently interfering with the boys, had been put out/out of the Scouts for this and had a long criminal record for this type of offence. This was prior to Mr. Ross further misleading councillors on Committee in August, 1983, which led to the termination of our lets at that time"? - Yes.

That is a reference to the original meeting at which the lets were terminated? - Yes.

He goes on "As you know, the matter was fully investigated, and Mr. Ross and his reported source, David Vass, being a member of a rival group, were fully discredited, and our use of schools was returned". Was that a recurring theme? - Yes. I think Hamilton always believed there was a conspiracy by local Scouts against him. To what extent that was true I never had any information.

And he believed at that time he had shown the case against him to have been discredited? - Yes.

In the next sentence he says "Your own comment at the time was that his ill health had affected his judgment and competence" -- that is in relation to Mr. Ross. Now, did you make that statement to Hamilton? - No, I don't think so. I did say that Mr. Ross was not in the best of health, but I don't recall making that particular statement.

Was there any basis for stating that Mr. Ross' work and his actions were in any way affected at that time by ill health? - No, I don't think there is any information for that.

So it would be wrong to accuse Mr. Ross, who is now deceased, I think -- is that right? - That is right, yes.

-- -- of acting in a way in which his judgment was affected and his competence adversely affected by ill health? - Yes.

Do you think you have perhaps said it and shouldn't have said it? - I don't remember saying that. I think we all knew Mr. Ross' state of health was not that great. I have simply no recollection of making that statement to Hamilton.

And/

And certainly if Mr. Ross' intervention, which was actually to advise the Committee to decide to withdraw lets, if you look at his intervention with the benefit of hindsight then it was proved tragically to be absolutely right; is that a fair comment? - That may be a fair comment, yes.

Does the letter go on "However, despite repeated requests from me over the years the information passed by Mr. Ross to head teachers has never been corrected and has over the years reached epidemic proportions"? - Yes.

"Such allegations spread in confidence have never been put to me directly or indirectly by the Scouts or any part of your Authority nor by any such children, and I have therefore never been afforded the proper opportunity to respond before any action was taken"; is that right? - Yes.

He then talks again about malicious work and David Vass, and says "Indeed during my time in the Scouts my own Scout Commissioner, Mr. R. Deuchars, 5 Kent Road, Stirling, claims to be at a complete loss to know what the Dunblane Scout official David Vass is talking about"? - Yes. This is the first time I have ever seen these names in Hamilton's correspondence.

So although you had had correspondence before, these names never appeared? - In 13 years there was a vast amount of correspondence, but I can't recall these names ever appearing in correspondence before.

He says "All of this serious damage has resulted from the maladministration of your Authority in the first instance, and secondly in its failure to attempt to correct the false information given to head teachers at an early stage"? - Yes.

He sends a letter to you for your information only, and says there is not any criticism of you personally? - Yes. And he says he has sent copies to head teachers.

He says "Dear Bob". May I have misread it, but earlier I thought he said "Dear Rob"? - Yes. My name is "Rob", not "Bob". It could hardly be private and confidential if he had circulated/circulated it to 128 head teachers.

I don't know in fact if that happened. When did you last meet Hamilton? - I think the last time I met Hamilton was during the summer of 1995. He was often in the university to carry out photocopying. I had a telephone call from Hamilton at that time -- I was moving divisions -- enquiring who the knew councillor was.

Did you notice any change in him? - No, on the face of it he sounded fine. This letter of the 26th January, however, was still a bit worrying.

What do you take from this letter that indicates a change or a difference in his mental state? - He seems to be reverting very much to the past, and he is dragging up things that happened a long time ago.

Was that not a recurring theme of his correspondence? - Yes. It was a bit more detailed and specific here. But I mean, there were possibly similar letters perhaps earlier on.

A remark he made to an earlier witness in the case could be said to give the impression that he viewed you as a person who could facilitate a continuation of his lets from the Regional Council. Did you see yourself in that role? - No, not at all. I saw myself in the role of his Regional councillor, his elected member. I don't really have the power to do that or I didn't, even if I had wanted to.

It is coincidental that you became rather more powerful on the Council as the Convener of the Education Committee? - Yes. Up to 1994 my only role was as local member. I wasn't more powerful in the Council; I was just perhaps more powerful regarding educational matters.

Coincidentally his MP became the Secretary of State for Scotland: so he seemed to be lucky in the selection of those with whom he tended to correspond, but he was corresponding with you and the Secretary of State because he was a constituent? - That is correct. He was perfectly within his rights to correspond.

Did/

Did you not get the impression, though, from the correspondence and from his dealings with other people that you heard about that he tended to drop your name in as someone whom he knew might be viewed because of that reference as a sort of supporter? -

I/

12 noon

I wasn't, no.

You were not conscious of that? - No, I wasn't conscious of that; I tried to be fair -- neither a supporter nor an opponent in that sense.

I just want to know what your impression was of his use of his relationship with you as a constituent who came to know you on first name terms; did you not get the impression that he was bringing you into matters and writing to you and getting you to communicate with the Council that he was to some extent using you to achieve his own ends? - All constituents who complain are doing that to an extent, aren't they?

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. JONES: Could you look again at D72, this takes us back to 1985? - Yes.

Your memo to the Chief Assistant Direction of Administration and Legal Services dated the 12th of August, 1985? - Yes.

You do explain that at that stage it had been suggested that the committee, and we have heard a powerful committee, from the Council should meet Mr. Hamilton's sub-committee and see if the matter could be taken forward? - Yes.

You tried to persuade Mr. Hamilton's committee to participate in such a meeting? - Yes.

Can I ask you to go to the second sentence, do you say there, you've explained that the meeting has to be set up, "I think this is a useful development as it may" and the word there is provide but I think it is "avoid a litigation"? - Yes "avoid a litigation".

"Which even if successful, could have been embarrassing for the Council"? - Yes.

Did you have concern at that time that Mr. Hamilton would carry out his threat to go to litigation? - Yes, that was a reason a couple of meetings were postponed until Hamilton was taking consultation with his lawyers; I think we got a lawyer's/lawyer's letter saying that a meeting wouldn't be useful at that time; I felt basically the Ombudsman's procedure was sufficient and I felt it was not right to continue this matter by going to further litigation; as I have said previously I had telephoned Hamilton to say there was absolutely no support from me if he took this matter to law.

Did you see this as a positive move by your Council around that time? - Yes, because the Council would require to consider the Ombudsman's report, they set up a sub-committee to meet and therefore the next thing to do was for the sub-committee to meet Hamilton's committee and try to take the matters forward.

Look at D101? - Yes.

That is your memo to the Chair of Education? - Yes, Godfrey McIvor.

Dated the 10th of October, 1990 and we have looked at the terms of it; what I would like to do is perhaps to put it in context. You were aware, I think, that the let at Dunblane High School was reinstated in October, 1985? - That is correct.

And we are now five years on, is that right? - That's right.

With the club having run for these five years were you aware of any suggestion of a complaint in these five years about the way that the club had been run? - No, not with regard to the club; obviously I was aware of disruption of the summer camp.

I am talking about Dunblane High School? - No, I had no indication of any complaint, nor had Godfrey talked to me about any complaint; as we were working closely together he probably would have done.

Finally turn to D233, it is in the other ring binder? - Yes, I have got that.

This is a letter dated the 1st of September, 1995 from Alan Steele to Mr. Hamilton and the question you were asked is why were these questions/questions being asked again? - Yes.

Could you look at D232, have you got that? - Yes.

Is this a memo dated the 30th of August, 1995 from Alan Steele to David Cobb? - Yes, it is.

In Administration and Legal and does he say under the sub-heading "TW Hamilton -- parental inquiry"? - Yes.

"Please find enclosed a copy of a letter I have received from" and a lady is named, a parent. "Before replying I would welcome your comments" -- do you see that? - Yes.

If you turn over the page is that the letter referred to to Mr. Steele dated the 28th of August, 1995? - Yes.

And does the writer say "Dear Mr. Steele, I recently received a letter from a Mr. Hamilton concerning the Dunblane Boys Sports Club. This has been distributed to all households in my area. I am deeply concerned regarding the" -- whatever that word is -- "of his letter, as I feel he 'protesteth too much!'. What is this man all about?", do you see that? - Yes, I do, this is presumably about the circular we talked about earlier.

Keep that letter in front of you and could you look also at D228? - Yes.

This is the letter you are talking about, it is dated the 18th of August to parents and it puts forward Hamilton's response to what he describes as myths and gossip in the first paragraph? - That's right.

So does that appear to be that lady writing to Mr. Steele enclosing that letter and then if you read through just over halfway down her letter of 28th of August "I would like to ask Central Regional Council if Mr. Hamilton fulfils all the social and sporting criteria to run such a club in their premises" and there is in the penultimate paragraph "I hope you will look into the running of this club from your premises", do you see that? - Yes.

And/

And do we see that Mr. Steele then in 233 writes to Mr. Hamilton on the 1st September? - That's right.

And does he say "As a result of continued expressions of concern relayed to the Council from a number of parents I would ask for your comments in response to the following points"? - Yes.

"A number of which refer to your letter to parents dated the 9th of May"? - Yes.

And then he is asking five specific questions? - Yes.

Could I ask you to look finally at 225? - Yes.

Is that a 12 page letter dated the 9th of May, 1995 from Mr. Hamilton addressed to "Dear Parents"? - That's right, yes, I think about the camera was this?

I think it is, yes? - Yes.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: So I can understand exactly what you are saying, the letter of 1st September which is D233? - Yes.

Asks about his governing body and qualifications and it asks about the reason for wearing swimming trunks and why they were not asked to provide their own; were these not all questions that had been asked a number of times by the Council before? - Most of these questions did seem to have been asked before by Dr. Young but Alan Steele didn't consult with me when he sent this memo; I didn't know about this memo until I got a copy of it.

GEORGE VALENTINE (56) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you a head teacher at St. Francis Primary School? - Yes, I am.

Is that in Falkirk? - Yes.

How long have you been head teacher with St./

St. Francis? - 11 years.

Your first encounter with Thomas Hamilton was to receive communication delivered to the school? - That is correct, yes.

When was that? - It is difficult for me to be precise because I have no records kept but I would assume though around 1988 but I am not absolutely sure about the year.

Were these hand delivered? - Again I can't recall how they arrived in the school, I would suspect they were hand delivered.

What did they relate to? - They related to he was trying to promote or, I think, set up a club in the Falkirk area and the reason I remember it was because included in the literature was the provision for a summer camp as part of the club set-up.

Now, did you learn about this because you had a decision to make or did you learn about it after something had been done with the document? - The order or events are vague after all this time; around that time I was alerted about Mr. Hamilton by a phone call from someone in Central Region alerting me to the fact that the Region was concerned about this person; I also had been alerted by my community policeman, constable, who visited the school regularly; now, the thing is I don't recall the order of events, which came first, the point was I was aware that there was some concern about Mr. Hamilton.

Now, could we put that in the context of how you first realised that there were leaflets; was it before they were distributed or after they were distributed? - I find it difficult to answer that one way or another; this is one of the confusions I have, the order in which these events happened.

Let me go back one stage, were the leaflets which were delivered to your school distributed to pupils? - The leaflets went out to two classes.

How did that happen? - It happened because/because the secretary in the school at that time assumed that they were official and that they had some kind of official approval; when I discovered the following day they had gone out I sent out a letter to the parents who had received this literature indicating that it was not school policy for the school to promote or to recommend clubs run by private individuals; I did indicate in my letter I was not necessarily saying that this particular club was unsuitable but I did want to stress that the school were not recommending the children attend this club and that the letter shouldn't have gone out to them.

What was your own practice at that time about distributing leaflets about independent organisations? - No school policy.....my own policy was clear and that was we didn't distribute leaflets on behalf of private individuals.

That was a matter for your discretion? - Yes, there was no written school policy on it.

Can I take it from what you have said that the reason you sent the letter was because you knew that the Regional Council were concerned about Hamilton? - Yes, I was aware that there had been some kind of concern.

Can you tell me what was the kind of concern relayed to you? - I remember distinctly asking the person who alerted me what was the nature of the concern and the reply was "I can't tell you that because we have no proof", that was the reply I got so I was never told what the nature of the complaint was but the Region were obviously concerned about the running of the club.

That particular club at Graham High School? - I can't recall, I wasn't looking to see they were talking about a particular club but I seem to remember the concern was about the way in which Mr. Hamilton ran his clubs.

Was that club ongoing or was it about to start up? - I can't remember.

Who was the community policeman? - Constable Kiely -- Constable Kiely was also a parent in the school; it may be he wasn't a community policeman/policeman at that time but he is now but he was a parent in the school and someone came in and so it is just possible that he was informing me as a parent.

What did he tell you? - Again he said to me that to be wary of Mr. Hamilton because the police were concerned about his activities but that was the extent of it.

Did you ever meet the man who was behind the leaflets? - Yes, very briefly.

When was that? - Around the same time and very close to the events I am talking about but again I can't recall the order in which they happened but certainly within a very short time, around the same time that the leaflets went out.

Where did you meet him? - In my school.

Was it after the leaflets had gone out, do you reckon? - Yes, also I am certain he came to the school I think to follow up the hand-out of the leaflet, to check the kind of response I had received.

Did you meet with him in your office? - I spoke to him only very briefly in the corridor.

And what was the sum and substance of the conversation? - I said to him that it was not policy for us to promote a private individual and that there was nothing personal and that I would say this to anyone wishing to promote a club through the school.

And was that the end of it? - It was, it was all over in the space of a couple of minutes; as I recall he said something like "I am not finding it easy to do what I am trying to do" but there was no sense of irritation personally, he didn't express any personal dissent to me.

Did he make any impression upon you? - No, it was very brief, I can't recall if there was anything unusual about him at all, he seemed reasonable enough at the time I dealt with him, certainly.

Did/

Did any of the children from your school go to his club? - To my knowledge there was one child went to the club, possibly two, but I am certain of one and the parent withdrew him from the club.

Do you know why? - No, I didn't discuss it at any length with them except that the parent was not happy obviously with the way that the club was run.

What was the next you heard about Hamilton? - I heard no more of Hamilton until I received a copy of a letter he had sent to Councillor Ball in January this year.

I should have asked you just to confirm it was Thomas Hamilton you met? - Well, I have to say I can only assume it was Thomas Hamilton I met; I am talking about eight to nine years back.

Was there a name on the leaflets, can you remember that? - No, I can't.

Anyway you got a letter in January of 1996; did you link that to the events of 1988? - Yes, when I got the letter my immediate reaction was, when I got the letter, I remember thinking "Gosh, is this man still on the go" but I didn't think any more about it except that I did file the letter.

Would/

12.20 p.m.

Would you look at D241 in J(i). Is that a copy of the letter? - That is correct.

Do you still have your copy or did the police take it from you? - The police took the letter but I still had a copy of the letter.

I was going to ask you if you did something with it. You said you filed it? - Yes.

Did you discuss it with anyone? - No, except to say on the day of the terrible events in Dunblane I told my staff I had received a letter. Up until that point I had not mentioned the letter at all to anyone.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: You told us that you were alerted by the community police constable. We didn't quite catch his name here? - Constable Kiely.

If I followed your evidence correctly, he was a parent as well as a constable? - Yes.

He told you to be wary of something. What were you to be wary of? - The only thing he told me was that the police were concerned about the activities, the way he ran his clubs. The only specific mention was that he was known, Mr. Hamilton was known to have taken photographs of boys during school camps, and that was all. There was nothing else said, no other detail.

You must have had some impression as to why he was telling you Hamilton took photographs of boys. What was your impression of the reason why he was telling you that? - Well, it was fairly clear I think that there was a suggestion that something improper may be happening, but the fact that there was no proof, there was no mention this had been proven, or that there was no substance to it beyond what I had been told. I didn't feel there was any point in me considering it further other than being alert in relation to my own school.

Anyway, it was enough to persuade you to have nothing to do with it? - Certainly. But again I would not have had anything to do with a private individual promoting a club at all anyway.

No further cross-examination.
No re-examination.

PATRICIA/

PATRICIA MARGARET ANNE CARTER, (48), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: I think you are head teacher at Bannockburn Primary School? - Yes.

How long have you held that post? - Since January, 1994.

Prior to that where were you? - Doune Primary.

Were you head teacher there? - Yes.

While you were head teacher at Doune Primary School did you come across the name Thomas Hamilton? - Yes, I did.

In what connection? - In connection with leaflets that arrived in the school periodically about his club in Dunblane.

What action was taken about these leaflets? - It depended -- I think initially they were issued to pupils but I have to say I was there for ten years so as time when on I gradually stopped issuing them to pupils.

Was there any particular reason for that? - The reason was twofold; one was we gradually got more and more business of that type which I really didn't have time or the facilities to distribute. There were many groups who sent these type of leaflets, for competitions, different things, and I gradually stopped issuing them. The other reason was that I had heard I think from a parent that they weren't too sure of Mr. Hamilton. I had no way of checking or knowing and I decided it really wasn't my function to issue leaflets as they came to the school.

Did you get any more specification than one parent wasn't too sure of Mr. Hamilton? - No.

Did you draw any inference from that, make anything from that statement? - No, just that I felt I didn't need to issue leaflets so I didn't issue them.

And to get on to Bannockburn: did you have the experience with leaflets? - Yes, I did.

When/

When did you first encounter leaflets from Mr. Hamilton? - Being a much larger school, I wasn't aware how they entered the school. Some leaflets had been issued to pupils. I didn't really, because Mr. Hamilton's name didn't mean much to me, I hadn't had any recent experience of him, I didn't actually -- I'm not sure how they were issued. I didn't make much of the connection between Bannockburn and his boys club at Dunblane.

You are clear that when you were at Doune you had actually got the name Hamilton? - Yes.

And you didn't particularly make the connection when this first arose at Bannockburn? - That is right.

Had you any policy at Bannockburn about not issuing leaflets for independent organisations? - It wasn't a policy, it is something that I have done less and less over the years. If they come in to me in the first instance, it is quite likely I would not have issued individual leaflets to pupils.

However, they did get issued, however they came into the school. Was there any reaction from any parents? - Yes. There was a phone call from a parent -- it was referred to the Deputy Head but I happened to be in the office at the time.

What was that about? - It was just again -- it is quite difficult to recall because I didn't consider particularly the relevance of this asking what we thought of the leaflet or the club.

It wasn't a complaint, it was an enquiry? - It would be as a recall -- I'm not sure if it was an enquiry or a complaint. I don't actually -- I do not recall who it was.

Did you take any action on its receipt? - Only to say that really -- the Depute Head said that really it would be up to the parent to look into it and because we issued something we are not recommending that the child actually attends the class, and it would be up to the parent to make that decision.

Can you give us your best recollection as to what it was that was concerning the parent on the phone?/

phone? - No. I really couldn't say whether it was concern over the leaflet being issued or whether it was an enquiry. I would think if it were a complaint it would have been perhaps more forcibly made. I think it was taken as an inquiry.

Anyway, the end result was the parent was told that the school wasn't endorsing this and it was a matter for the parent whether the pupil went to the club? - Yes.

Now, did you receive any correspondence from Thomas Hamilton? - I received several items but I really am not sure -- I don't think I actually received correspondence from him at that time.

What about June, 1995? - Yes. I had a visit from Mr. Hamilton.

Was that the first time you had met him? - Yes.

Why did he come to see you? - He came to ask me for an apology.

What for? - For rumours that were circulating from our staffroom.

Had you heard them? - No.

How did you react to this request? - I asked him if he -- why he thought that this was being said in our staffroom because I had no knowledge of it.

What were the rumours according to him? - According to him we were maligning his good name; I think that was his verbal.....

Did he say specifically how you were doing that? - People in our staffroom were saying things about him.

Did he say what? - I actually at that time, I asked him who in the staffroom was saying this.

And did he tell you? - No.

What was the upshot of your conversation with/with him? - I then asked him who had said this of him, and then I asked him -- I said if he wasn't prepared to substantiate it I couldn't listen to him any further.

Did this happen in the office? - In my office.

How long did that last? - I would say under five minutes.

How did it end? - I asked him to leave.

And did he? - Yes.

Now, following that you had some communication with the Regional Council? - Yes. I should have said he said he was reporting me to the Regional Council.

So did you contact them or did they contact you? - I think I made a phone call in at that point so I certainly was on the phone -- I think I made a phone call in but I couldn't be certain if I received a phone call from the Viewforth.

Could you perhaps look at a Production and it may be easier, D223 in J(i). When it comes in front of you you will see this is a letter from Dr. Young of the Regional Council to yourself. Do you recognise that letter to you sent on 13th June, 1995? - That is the letter that I did receive.

It is addressed to Mrs. Carter, Head Teacher? - Yes.

Do you recognise that letter you received from Dr. Young? - Yes.

And it enclosed the letter from Mr. Hamilton; do you remember that? You will see it refers to, "I am now in receipt of a letter from Mr. T.W. Hamilton (copy enclosed) on this issue"? - Yes. I can't recall Mr. Hamilton's letter unless I saw it then.

Is it the next item or is it not there? - It is not there.

In/

In any event, you will see that he says, "You will note that Mr. Hamilton wishes me on behalf of the authority to send out a letter of apology to all parents of Bannockburn Primary School"? - Yes.

Do you remember having a conversation with Mr. Young about this before you got the letter? - Yes.

A little earlier in that volume would you look at D220 and you will see Mr. Hamilton's letter? - Yes, I recognise it.

So you recognise that letter now? - Yes.

Now, you will see Dr. Young wanted to know -- he said that he couldn't apologise on behalf of the authority to all the parents because he was uncertain of what was said by and to whom, and he then goes on, "I would appreciate any further advice which you can give as to the level of conversation such as this described in the letter which you feel may have gone on between staff and parents". What did you do as a result of getting this letter? - I sent a letter back about the telephone call from the parent.

Would you look at D224. Tell me if that is the letter? - That is the letter, yes.

Is that the result of your enquiry into it? - Yes.

Could you read out what you said to Dr. Young? - The whole letter?

Yes, please? - "With reference to your letter dated 13th June, 1995, I would advise that one parent some time ago telephoned us regarding our distribution of the boys' club leaflets. Mrs. Horsburgh (Assistant Head Teacher) informed her that we generally distribute leaflets regarding sports etc. and that we had no information about anyone connected with the club. Further she stated that she could not comment on any individual. As I happened to enter Mrs. Horsburgh's office at that time I can verify this."

That tends to suggest that leaflets were generally distributed, and perhaps that was really a throwback/throwback to before your time as head teacher? - Yes. In fact, I am unclear about how the leaflets entered the school and how they were distributed.

Somehow or other they got through the system. Could you read the last part of the letter please? - "To my knowledge there has been no other conversation between other parents and members of staff".

And the next paragraph? - "Mr. Hamilton visited the school briefly last week to express his anger. I asked him to substantiate his allegation. As he declined to do this I felt reluctant to continue the meeting. I may add that this conversation took place in my office with another member of staff present."

You mentioned "to express his anger". Was he outwardly angry? - Yes.

How did he demonstrate his anger? - I had actually not met -- before entering the office he was being quite loud in the corridor outside the office, and from my recall there were children around because there was a teacher, and to keep him away from that situation I asked him to come in. He was wanting to speak to me anyway.

Did/

12.40 p.m.

Did Hamilton ever come back to the school? - To my knowledge, no.

On that occasion would you say he was in control of himself, or at any stage would you say he lost his temper? - No, he didn't lose his temper in the office.

What impression did you have of just how angry he was? - I find it difficult to read anger in a person.

So it was just the noise, the raised voice? - The other teacher felt he was angry. My mind was on getting him out of the office and out of the school. I wasn't really thinking; I just wanted him out of the building.

Are you relating to us an impression of anger that someone else formed? - No. I would say he was angry.

Now, can you tell me how he was dressed? - Yes.

Did that leave an impression on you? - Yes.

How was he dressed? - He was wearing a brown raincoat.

What was significant about that? - It was a summer's day.

Was it warm? - I think it was.

Did he have his head covered? - No.

Did you form any impression of whether he sounded sensible to you? - Yes, he sounded sensible to me.

His conversation didn't sound mixed up or rambling? - No.

Did you ever find out any more about the communication of information about Hamilton than we see recorded in the letter to Dr. Young? - No.

Did/

Did you find a source of rumour that was spread among parents and children at your school? - No.

And that is still the position, is it? - That is still the position.

Could you look just a little ahead in that volume at D241? Do you recognise that? - Yes.

Is that a letter dated 26th January, 1996? - Yes.

Did you get a letter like that? - Yes.

And that is the letter to Robert Ball? - Yes.

It refers to Bannockburn Primary School, teachers informing pupils and parents that Hamilton was a pervert: do you see that? - Yes.

And also that as a result of that the 26 pupils who were members of the Bannockburn Boys' Sport Club left immediately, and local gossip followed? - Yes.

Do you live locally? - I live in Bridge of Allan.

Did anyone from the area who attended the school tell you anything about pupils giving up the sports club? - No.

Or tell you about local gossip springing up about Hamilton? - No.

Where did the sports club take place? - I didn't know at that time, but I believe since I have heard it was at Bannockburn High School.

What did you make of this letter when you got it? - I was anxious about it.

Did you do anything with it? - Yes.

What did you do? - I contacted Viewforth.

That/

That is headquarters? - Yes.

What happened? - I asked to speak to the gentleman I would say one up from me, David McKenzie, but he was not available, and I left word with his secretary about it.

Did you speak to him? - No.

What did you do with the letter? - I filed it.

What was it that concerned you about the letter? - I was surprised that it was still ongoing. I was surprised to see another school named.

That is Dunblane Primary? - Yes.

When you say it was still ongoing, do you mean that he seemed to be continuing to express sentiments about your school? - Yes.

You were a subject for his correspondence? - Yes.

You got another letter addressed to the Queen, did you not? - Yes.

When did you get that? - I think about two days before, Monday, the 11th.

Did it have any other letters or documents attached to it? - No.

It doesn't actually mention Bannockburn Primary School: do you recollect that? - The letter on Monday, the 11th?

Yes? - No, it did not.

It tells us a tale about the history of his involvement with the Scouts, and then talks about rumours reaching epidemic proportions across Central Region. It also mentions certain damaging things about the police and the Council, but largely concentrates on the Scouts: do you recollect that? - Yes.

What did you do with that letter? - I initially/initially binned it, then I took it out of the bin to keep it and to deal with it in due course.

And is that what you did with it? - Events overtook me, as I handed it in on Monday, 13th.

After the events in Dunblane? - Yes.

What was your reaction on getting the letter? - At first I thought "He is not focussing on Bannockburn", then I felt quite angry that he was continuing to dwell on Bannockburn.

I am sorry? - I was concerned about this ongoing thing, but I felt that that one did not -- it was the Scouts; that is what -- you know, it didn't make such an immediate impact on me.

I think you were the only other school apart from Dunblane actually to receive that letter. When that is related to the one of 26th January you can see at least some connection with Hamilton's attitude to Bannockburn Primary School? - Yes.

I take it you have given some thought to that since the incident on 13th March? - Yes.

Do you know whether any other members of staff have had any direct experience of Thomas Hamilton? - Since Dunblane I spoke to the staff. It has not been voiced to me, but I think certain other members of staff have. But it has not been voiced directly to me.

So you have not been able to pinpoint any source of rumour or established that there were rumours being circulated from your school? - No, I have not been able to establish that.

Perhaps I could break that question down. You have not established a particular source of rumour from your school; is that right? - No.

Do you think from what you have learned that there may have been rumours spread from your school to the minds of parents -- quite justified rumours? - I don't think so. I don't really know. It is a very large staffroom, a very large school.

How/

How many of a staff do you have? - 23.

And number of pupils? - 540.

We have heard that Dunblane is one of the biggest primary schools in Scotland. Yours must be well up the league as well? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: You have told us about your meeting with Thomas Hamilton in the middle of 1995. Is that the only time when you met him? - Yes.

In the course of your evidence you have said that your mind was on getting him out of the school, getting him out of the building? - Yes.

Why was that? - I didn't like his attitude before he came into the office. I didn't really think he had the right to question me without giving me some indication of what were his views.

Was there anything else that caused you to be anxious to get him out of the building? - I felt I was not reading the situation. I was finding it difficult to read the situation, and also most people who come into the school -- although not always -- are parents, although sometimes things like this do happen.

Once the meeting was over what was your overall impression of the man? - I knew he was going to report me, but I wasn't too worried about that. He had mentioned lawyers to me. I suppose I was thinking rather than receiving impressions.

You looked at the letter from Graeme Young of 13th June, 1995, No. 223 in the bundle before you? - Yes.

We see from the first sentence in that letter that Dr. Young makes reference to a recent telephone conversation with you about the subject matter in the letter? - Yes.

I think you did speak to Dr. Young on the telephone after Hamilton visited you? - Yes.

Did you receive any advice? - Yes.

What/

What was that? - Just to watch how I handled the situation.

Did Dr. Young elaborate upon why he was telling you that? - Yes.

What did he say? - I don't really recall.

In general terms? - Generally he said this could be a complex and difficult character. I think the Region had been having problems with him.

Did you receive any warning or anything of that nature? - A warning? When?

In the course of this telephone conversation? - That really was the warning, just to watch what I said and did with regard to him, because he was quite a difficult character.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: On the question of school letting, do you have a School Board at Bannockburn? - Yes.

Do you let out your own school premises from time to time? - Yes, we do.

Do you have any policy or is any guidance given to you from either Central Region or from the new unitary authority about letting? - It varies. The letting at Doune -- it depends how much is delegated to the head teacher and the Board. At Doune the Board handled the lets; it was not really my responsibility. At Bannockburn the Area Officer handles the lets, but they tend to be more traditional lets. If I have any difficulty with a let I would take it to the School Board. It is a difficult situation.

I am concerned about with the devolved management whether it is going to provide an additional complication for letting policy if it is a School Board decision? - Yes.

Is that something on which guidance requires perhaps to be given by the new unitary authority? - Yes.

But/

But there is no guidance as of yet in relation to the administration of School Boards in relation to lets? - School Boards often do not administer the lets; that is often left to the head teacher. Some schools do not have School Boards.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you saying that if there is an Area Officer responsibility, if there is a difficulty you would take it to the School Board? - It is not really an Area Officer responsibility; I think it is a head teacher responsibility, unless the School Board takes it on.

If you had a problem or difficulty with a let would you take it to the Board? - Yes.

You said you were concerned about the way in which Hamilton behaved before he got into your office? - Yes.

In that he was noisy in the corridor? - Yes.

What was that about? - He wanted to see me. I didn't really -- I could hear voices, and I think he was saying to anyone who would listen.

Who was there to listen? - A teacher and children, and the school secretary came forward at that point.

How many entrances are there into the school? - Five.

Had he come in what is an obvious main entrance? - I don't know how he came in, but I know he left by the main entrance.

Is the main entrance near your office? - Yes.

Have arrangements for visitors changed at all since March? - Yes.

What are the arrangements now that are different? - The signs are more imposing, asking visitors to call to the main office.

Do/

Do you accredit visitors in some way before they are allowed to go through the school? - Yes, we have a visitors' book and badges.

Any other changes in the arrangements for coming in? - We have closed some of our exists.

But the main entrance is open? - Yes.

And a sign clearly saying that visitors should go to the secretary? - To reception, yes, although we have two visitors' books, one being in the janitor's office.

Is it obvious where a person should go when he arrives at the main entrance? - Yes.

Where should he go? - If he is not intercepted by the janitor he should go to the reception.

And is reception manned all the time the school operates? - No.

So how does he attract attention at reception? - The design of the building is that the reception is really the corridor outside my office.

Does it say "Reception"? - Yes.

After/

1.50 p.m.

After an adjournment for lunch.

WILLIAM BURNS MacFARLANE (59) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: You work as a gatehouse operator? - That is correct.

You live in Bannockburn? - That is correct.

You were formerly a police officer with Central Scotland Police? - Yes.

During what period? - From 1960 to 1993.

And what rank were you when you retired? - I retired as constable.

Where was most of your service? - Mainly in the Stirling area but it was over Denny, Kilsyth, St. Ninian's, Traffic, I was all over the place; I had two terms in Community Involvement Branch as well with Central Scotland Police.

You knew Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

When did you first come across him? - I would be very vague about dates but I would say about probably 20 years ago.

In what context? - He rented a small room down in Cowane Street from which he cut and supplied timber, it was just a room with a saw and it was just when I got married and I called at the room just to get some wood cut.

When did you get married? - 1971.

So that we.....? - No, I am saying 1971 I got married, it would probably be two or three years after that.

He cut wood for you? - Yes.

And delivered it? - Yes, and delivered it, he had a van.

Did/

Did his business move to other premises in Cowane Street? - That is correct, I can't remember how long he was in that but he did buy a better shop further down that sold tools and Do-It-Yourself items.

Was it just for Do-It-Yourself or round the house or did you do other things? - No, it was mostly Do-It-Yourself -- your first house, you are always trying to improve it; I did different types of fixing around the house.

You knew him as a customer? - Yes.

When you first knew him did he have another job? - He worked, I believe, as a trainee architect in the Municipal Buildings in Stirling just up the hill.

Did you understand that he worked in the office in some capacity? - Yes.

Did he still keep on that job when he had the wood cutting business in Cowane Street? - I would hesitate to confirm that because I simply don't know.

When he delivered the stuff to the house did he come in at all? - He did, he would come in; he was a lonely type of person and I really felt quite sorry for him; he did come to the house and I would ask him in for a cup of tea.

What stuff interested him in these days? - At that time chess, I think he was also a member of a gun club at that time.

Do you remember which? - Callendar or Dunblane but again I would hesitate to be sure about that.

Did you have any interests in guns? - None whatsoever.

Did you ever see his guns? - You are talking about.....

In these days? - In these days, no.

If, indeed, he had any? - That is correct./

correct.

Do you remember the time when his interests in boys clubs started? - I do -- again I can't remember the specific dates but I do remember that he did say that he was going to start up a youth club.

How long do you reckon you knew him by that time? - If I knew when he started I would be able to give you a date but I am sorry, I can't honestly tell you.

I just wondered if you had known him two or three years through the wood cutting business? - Probably about two or three years.

Do you know where the first youth club was? - I think it may have been Dunblane, either primary or high school.

Well, did he also have other premises in Dunblane? - I think some time after he had started his boys clubs in one of the schools he went to the rifle club in Dunblane, he operated from there.

Do you remember him also running other clubs in Stirling? - Yes, he ran one in Borston Primary School, I can't think of any other place.

Were you still a customer? - Yes, I bought quite a lot of stuff out of the shop.

Did you ever get involved with any of his clubs? - If you mean involved -- I did visit, I was invited by Hamilton along with my wife to go and see how he ran the clubs.

Where was that? - The one at the rifle club in Dunblane.

How often did you go there? - I was there once with my wife and my daughter; he was operating a gun club that night and I went back with a colleague when I was in the Community Involvement Department just to see how he was getting on; I also showed the kids a film on how to co-operate with the police.

Was that at Dunblane? - Yes that was at Dunblane,/

Dunblane, that was at the rifle club.

When was that roughly? - Maybe 1982, 1983.

Through the 1980s did Hamilton continue to call on you from time to time? - Yes, he did.

Was it always because he was delivering? - No, he called at the house on occasions just to discuss the operation of his youth club, it was his only topic of conversation, he would never ever discuss anything else, you couldn't carry on a conversation with him, it was always on his terms, he was a difficult man to carry on a conversation with.

Were the visits always welcome? - No.

What about the length of them? - Well, they would sometimes go on for about three or four hours in which time he consumed about half a dozen cups of tea and I think every chocolate biscuit you had in the house.

Did he ever build anything for your daughter? - He built a Wendy house at the back of our old house for my daughter.

Did he ever go beyond the boys clubs and discuss anything about his own private life? - He did mention the fact that he had been.....he didn't use the words "thrown out" but he had not been allowed to participate in the Scouts for some reason; he didn't go into the whys and wherefors but from his conversation I think that his views on the running of the Scouts didn't conform to the views of the Scouting establishment.

Were you still in touch with him when he started going with boys for camps at Loch Lomond? - Yes.

What is your best recollection of when that started? - Again probably the middle 1980s.

Did you ever go? - I did, I was invited along with my wife and my daughter and I went to one of the islands; he picked us up at Balmaha and took us over; he was cooking a barbecue and there was 12 to/

to 15 boys there and another helper there and he took us out in his boat for a sail round the islands.

What kind of boat was it? - It was a small dinghy type boat at that time.

What island was it? - It was either Inchmoan or Inchmurrin, I am not sure which.

Did the camps seem okay to you? - I saw nothing untoward during the running of these camps.

They were tended camps? - Yes.

Were you on Loch Lomond at any other occasion? - I went with my wife and my daughter and my brother and his wife and he took us for a sail on his larger boat; it was the one that was subsequently destroyed by fire.

Do you know when you went to Loch Lomond that time roughly? - Again I am only hazarding a guess, it is probably the middle 1980s; I would be telling lies if I said dates.

Did you learn about the boat being destroyed? - I did because it was in the local.....the national paper and then I was asked by one of my superintendents if I knew Hamilton which I said I did and he asked me certain questions at that time to establish how the fire might have been caused but I couldn't help him there.

This was your own Superintendent at Central Scotland? - Yes.

What was the implication in his question? - Can I answer that?

Yes? - I think it would probably be was it thought to be an insurance job.

That at least was being considered? - That as the inference that was made -- can I give my answer?

Well, did you have an impression of your own? - I honestly thought that that boat was his pride and joy, he used to wear a captain's cap and he/

he was master of this craft; it was my opinion that that wasn't the case.

When he went off to these camps in the summer did your wife actually run the shop? - My wife went to the shop on two or three occasions in possibly a week, maybe six or seven days whilst he was at the camp.

How often did that happen? - Maybe for three or four weeks but not altogether, separate weeks, but she couldn't simply cope because we had a young daughter at that time and she found it too much and she had to tell him no.

Now, your regular contact with Hamilton came to an end some years ago, is that right? - Yes, I have had virtually no dealings with Thomas Hamilton for about, I would think, seven years, maybe slightly longer; we discouraged him coming to the house, we used to send my father-in-law to the door if the bell went at night and if it was Mr. Hamilton we used to say we were not in, we got my father-in-law to say that; I didn't entirely like just to tell Mr. Hamilton not to come back but I think he eventually got the message.

Were you aware of problems he had with the letting of premises to him when he was running a group called the Dunblane Rovers Group? - Yes, I was aware of that.

Were you involved in any subsequent arrangements to try to help re-establish the group under a different name? - No, I do remember he still came about the house at that time and he probably asked advice but I didn't become involved, that was not my involvement.

A document will be put in front of you just now, it is D53HV and if that can't be found under that number it is DCRC AL B2 F190; now, you have probably never seen this but you will see it is a letter dated the 24th of February, 1984 to a man called Buchanan who was the Director of Administration and Local Services of Central Region? - Yes.

If you go two pages on you will see it is signed by Thomas Hamilton and Catherine Anderson? - Yes./

Yes.

Did you know Catherine Anderson? - No, but I believe my wife did.

You will see on the front page it is all about a committee that has been set up for Dunblane Boys Club? - Yes.

And it may be news to you, you tell me, but your name appears there? - I had no involvement as an assistant leader in any capacity with Mr. Hamilton at all, I can only take it he is using this to give his group some legitimacy.

I see the name Mrs. Evelyn MacFarlane as well, is that your wife? - Yes.

Was she on the committee? - Well, she was on the committee but didn't really take much doings with the club; she went to Borston Primary School several times but again she had other commitments so she couldn't continue.

Would that be around 1984? - Yes, that is probably about right, I would have said the middle 1980s.

So your understanding was she had some involvement in the group that was behind setting up the new Dunblane Boys Club and would take some part in the overseeing of its activities? - Yes, that's correct.

But you didn't have any involvement? - No, that is news to me.

This Inquiry has heard a great deal about rumours and stories spread about Thomas Hamilton; you were the local policeman or one of the local policemen; did you pick up these stories? - Yes, I did.

From when? - Probably just before his let at the Dunblane High School was terminated.

As a policeman on the street, on the beat, what was your understanding of the sum and substance of these stories? - Well, I take people as I find them and some of the stories that were circulating/circulating I found very hard to believe.

You obviously didn't give credence to some of the stories, is that fair? - That is correct, I think there was a question about his sexuality which I didn't give credence to; certainly if somebody had said the running of his club was a wee bit hard I would have accepted that.

So stories were there that you didn't really think had any substance? - Well, I heard at some of his camps there was no food but again when I visited the camp with my wife who will confirm this there was plenty of food at the camp, that particular camp that we visited; there was other questions about the boys running about with just shorts on; I have never been a member of the Scouting Group or the Cub Group or the Boys' Brigade so I don't know what the normal practice is but I think if it is bucketing with rain I would assume that if you have got a pair of shorts on it is a lot less to dry but I didn't see anything at all untoward at the camp that I visited.

Were you aware of his interest in photography? - He always had a camera, he was always taking pictures, he was always taking pictures of boys that he may photograph and my wife and my daughter and I as well but I believe latterly he went into photography as a business.

In/

In the seven or eight years did you occasionally meet him in the street? - Unfortunately, yes.

On these occasions did he try to talk to you? - Yes, he did.

Did you form any impression that he, as an individual, was changing in his personality or his mental state during that period? - I can't speak about his mental state but I can certainly speak about his conversations which were all one-way -- he was anti-police, he was anti-establishment, he was anti-the education authority, he seemed to be anti anybody who opposed his views on how the clubs should be run or whether they should be run. He was always a person who had a lot of police contacts and I found latterly his attitude towards the police I couldn't accept and didn't accept it and terminated my -- I use the word loosely -- association with Mr. Hamilton.

Apart from the occasions when you visited his club and were engaged with the shooting activity did you ever see any of his guns? - No.

Did he ever discuss shooting with you? - He was always discussing it, he offered me an invitation to go to..... I believe he shot at Hamilton and he offered an opportunity to shot at Hamilton and I refused; when I was up at his gun club myself, my wife and my daughter, I did shoot at a target but it wasn't my cup of tea, I didn't get anything from it.

When you say he was always talking about gun clubs you gave me the impression that really the sole topic of conversation was boys' clubs? - Yes, but guns did come up but not as often as the clubs and latterly his conversation was all about taking his case to the Ombudsman, it was about the education authority doing this, the community doing this, innuendos being spread throughout the community about him which he totally refuted.

He blamed the authority, particularly the Regional Council and the Scouts and to a certain extent the police for destroying his business? - No.

What/

What do you.....? - Well, this is only my opinion. I believe his business got destroyed by his obsession with running the boys' clubs at whatever expense.

Did he have any competition in his business? - Do-It-Yourself?

Yes? - Well, there was the Kenmore Store in Baker Street, he latterly went into kitchen displays and he opened up his shop in kitchen displays and there was a kitchen display shop next door.

Which one was there first? - Well, it was Kitchen Today was there first and Hamilton started up in opposition to that.

Did he correspond with you? - I was forever getting letters he had sent to parents; I can't remember seeing that one, I honestly don't think I got a copy of that letter but both my wife and I got copies of his camp forms that he would have where he would draft out a letter absolving himself from anything that happened at a camp and the parents had to sign it; we were always getting bits and pieces through the post or hand-delivered but I am afraid latterly the majority were all torn up and put in the bucket.

Was he a methodical person? - I would say he was very methodical, he was nobody's fool.

Would he do things on a whim? - No, I honestly believe.....he was a great chess player as well which I probably haven't mentioned, but he played chess for Stirling Chess Club; I think his life and everything he did was well thought out in advance before he actually did it.

A man who planned everything? - I would say so.

You have indicated that some of the regime in his boys' club was a bit strict? - I would say so; I wouldn't say he had power over the kids but he did get them to do what he wanted and he felt one of the things that he did in life was that he felt discipline was lacking in the schools, the parents and he was trying to instill a little discipline into/into their lives.

Did you see him getting them to do things that were beyond them? - I can't remember seeing him being at any of the clubs where they were doing anything at all.....any of the times I was there..... I was at one club where they were just doing exercises; again my wife would probably be able to remember; I think I would maybe be collecting my wife on that occasion.

Was he a foul-mouthed person? - I never heard him swear in my life.

Was he a man with a smutty.....? - Never heard him telling a joke which had any connotation at all of indecency or whatever.

Did you experience anything that might have suggested an unnatural interest in young boys? - Nothing whatsoever, I think the only thing he did for boys and again this is only my opinion is the power he had over the boys to do what he wanted.

Did you find something strange about what you observed him doing in relation to boys and controlling boys? - Nothing other than I think he was maybe a bit strict; not all boys are able to do the same things, you can't treat them all the same. Some can do more than others.

Would I be wrong to form the impression that you probably thought he was getting something out of dominating boys? - It is beyond me but that is my opinion.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: In the course of your evidence you told us that Thomas Hamilton was a man who had a lot of police contacts; what did you mean by that? - Well, he knew a lot of policemen, he was always..... When he met a policeman in Stirling he would stop and talk whether he knew him or not, he would make himself known to the police and I just wonder if he was doing it for whatever reason but he always seemed to.....he could name a lot of policemen through either just coming into the shop to buy stuff like myself and getting to know them that way.

And what was he saying to the policemen when/when he stopped to speak to them? - As I said his conversation was mainly about clubs; I mean, you couldn't carry out a conversation about what I was going to do next week or last night. If it had nothing to do with his clubs he seemed to shut off.

He would stop policemen specifically to talk to them?
- Well, that's right -- I was the Town Centre patrol in Stirling during my service and it was always a Saturday and if you saw him coming and he stopped you if you didn't manage to get away from him it was always about his clubs and about the problems he was experiencing with the clubs, about the running of the clubs and people trying to put obstacles in his path as to his running of the clubs.

But he would be attempting to defend himself? - Yes, always -- I mean to me latterly he was becoming a pain in the neck.

You said that you found latterly that you couldn't accept the views which he held about the police? - That's right, his whole tone changed when he was talking about the police, it was as though.....he wasn't like I would talk to a colleague about the police, he seemed to be crying down the police just by one or two derogatory remarks, he called them cops which he had never done before. His general manner indicated to me that he found the police were more against him than for him. I only met him twice in the last three years, one was in May last year and why I remember it was I had a first aid exam and I met him in Stirling in the Thistle Centre and he stopped me and immediately got on about his clubs. I told him I had an appointment and I left him and the last time I saw him was about the Friday night before Christmas where I met him outside the Miner's Welfare where I parked my car and again I told him I had an appointment and I think the last words he ever said to me was "You will have to come down to my house", that was his last words.

You told us about an occasion when you went shooting? - Yes.

With Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

And you said that the shooting didn't do anything/anything for you? - I didn't say that..... I didn't get any pleasure out of it.

What, if anything, did the shooting appear to do for Thomas Hamilton? - I think he got a lot of enjoyment out of it, shooting at targets and if he could hit the targets but I am afraid I didn't, neither did my wife as well who was there. It was obvious to us -- it was the one and only time I have ever held a gun in my hand and I certainly have no intention of ever taking it up as a sport.

You expressed the view that he had a power over the boys in his clubs, a power which enabled him to get them to do what he wanted them to do? - That was just my opinion.

How did he achieve that power over them?

- Well, can I give you one instance where he probably.....the boys would be maybe doing something and he always had a whistle and he would use the whistle for them to stop doing what they were doing and stand to attention, things like this. That is just my opinion; I am not competent to tell you how he got this or why he did that but that is my own opinion, he seemed to have more power over children than he had over adults. I would say he had very few friends as adults.

So if you had to sum him up in his latter period when he was running the boys' clubs how would you do that if you had to sum him up? - How would I sum up Thomas Hamilton? I can't speak to his manner over the last seven years because I have only met him in the Town Centre so in the last years again as I have mentioned I can't form an opinion on him on these two occasions.

During the time in the 1980s after he was trying to organise his boys' clubs how would you sum him up over that period of time? - I think I did -- a pain in the neck as far as I am concerned.

In the statements which have just been taken from you you said he came across as a bit of a loner? - Yes, I actually felt quite sorry for him, he was a young chap maybe in his early 20s who was wanting to start up a business and I felt that should be encouraged; he supplied materials, he was good, he could give you advice on how to do certain jobs/jobs in the house, what adhesives to use, I found him quite helpful but I think his whole attitude changed once he started running the boys' club, I think it changed to the detriment of his business.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: When you attended at the gun clubs.....? - Gun club, one club.

I beg your pardon? - Thank you.

Were you able to form any view on how he handled the weapon? - Well, not being a member of a gun club I would have said he was competent; the safety aspect was very much in prominence at the club; I don't know whether he was adhering strictly to the rules as they laid down at the gun club but they certainly appeared to me to be beyond question.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Did you ever visit his home? - I visited his home at Kent Road once. It was on the occasion he flitted and took up the occupancy of Kent Road with his mother and father who I believe were later to be determined as his grandparents. He phoned me at home and asked me if I could come down as someone who was going to give him a hand to carry his mum downstairs hadn't turned up. I went down and between the two of us we managed to carry her in a wheelchair down into a van and take her down to Kent Road, deposited her there and that was the only occasion I visited him there.

The only other question is this -- you said something about him speaking to police officers and you then added the words "for whatever reason"; what did you mean by that? - Well, I suppose if.....what I did mean by that was that if he was seen to be.....if he could name police officers and seemed to know police officers it would give him an air of respectability which I would say is the same as perhaps putting my own name down as an assistant leader.

DUNCAN/

2.30 p.m.

DUNCAN GRAHAM MCGREGOR (41), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I think you are a Safety Adviser with a university in Glasgow? - Yes.

How long have you been employed there? - Just over three years.

You knew Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

When did you first get to know him? - About 1980.

What job were you doing then? - Assistant Safety Officer with the Regional Council.

That is Central Region? - Yes.

In what circumstances did you meet him first? - Tom Hamilton came up to Viewforth, came into the Personnel Department to see the Safety Officer as he was looking for advice on what qualifications the Central Region were looking for for people who ran gymnastic clubs in their premises.

And were you able to help him? - Yes, to a certain extent. I was the Assistant Safety Officer and he really wanted to see the Safety Officer who wasn't there. He returned on two or three occasions and phoned up.

Were there any qualifications really required for anyone in those days doing gymnastic classes? - Not really. The advice I gave him was that if he had accepted qualifications for gymnastics that would seem to be sufficient. He wasn't really satisfied with that, and I think at the end of the day we looked for advice from other local authorities to see what sort of stipulations they had. I believe we photocopied material and then gave it to him.

Did you know whether at that stage he had any qualifications? - Well, he said he had certain qualifications in gymnastics.

Did/

Did you have any contact with the shop he ran in Cowane Street? - I think I visited it twice.

When would that be roughly? - A long time ago -- about 15 years ago.

As a customer? - Yes -- just basically to drop some stuff off to him.

Would that be information such as you have just been describing? - Yes.

Did he give you any indication at that stage of why he wanted to go in for classes or clubs, what he had in mind? - No. He was running clubs which were essentially sports training clubs and he had to tolerate a lot of football playing by the boys to keep them interested.

Did he discuss camping at all with you? - Yes. He basically ran camps in the summer time.

Did he indicate that he saw any link between the clubs in the winter and camps in the summer? - Absolutely.

What was the link? - The link was his main interest was in running -- he was interested in running camps during the summer months, but in order to get the boys to come along to the camps and get recruits you might say along to the camps he felt it necessary he would have to run clubs during the winter.

Did you become friendly with him? - Well, it was more of an acquaintance really.

Did he get to the point of suggesting your involvement in the clubs at all? - He did several times try to get me to be involved in his clubs.

And did you? - I always declined.

Did he discuss an interest in shooting with you? - Yes.

Did he try to get you involved in that? - Yes, he did.

To/

To what extent? - Well, he took me shooting on two or three occasions. I was interested in that to see what it was like.

Where did he go? - We went to somewhere away past Motherwell; I think it was the Clyde Valley Pistol Club.

Did you get interested enough to take it up? - No.

How long did your interest last, such as it was? - Well, basically it was something that was outwith my means.

Did he communicate with you either by phone or by writing? - Well, he never actually wrote to me as such but he used to send me copies of the correspondence he was sending all over the place. He used to phone me regularly to keep me abreast of his latest developments.

Did he ever come to your house? - Yes, he came to the house on a number of occasions.

That is fairly vague. Was it regularly or just.....?
- No, not regularly.

How many times did he come to your house? - About half a dozen probably.

Do you have children? - Yes.

Any boys? - Yes, two boys.

Either of them involved in any of his clubs? - My elder son went to his short-lived club in Denny.

How did he get on in the club? - My son was mostly interested in the football aspect of it and he enjoyed that aspect of it but he didn't really enjoy the strictness of the club.

Why was that club so short lived? - Just didn't have the numbers.

How long did it last? - Oh about two or three months I think.

Were/

Were you aware of any expression of concern about Mr. Hamilton's activities with the club at that time? - I knew there had been -- subsequently found out there had been an argument with a parent about whether or not her child should wear a T-shirt.

When roughly was this club operating? - About three years ago I think.

Was that after you had taken up your present job?
- Yes. I think it was after I had taken up my present job.

When you changed your job did Hamilton still maintain contact with you? - What job was that?

Well, when you moved to Glasgow? - Well, I never moved to Glasgow. Basically I was in Stirling and Denny. I have never moved to Glasgow or anything like that. I just travel in every day.

Do you not work in Glasgow? - Yes, I work in Glasgow.

Did Hamilton not make contact with you at this work in Glasgow? - Yes.

That's really what I was meaning? - Sorry.....

Did he continue after you moved to work in Glasgow, did he continue to keep in touch? - Yes, he did.

How frequently did he keep in touch while you were in Glasgow working? - As far as personal visits to me in Glasgow he made about two or three I would say. He was on shopping trips into Glasgow. He visited a number of camera shops and came in to see me at lunch time.

Did he enlist your help with some of the printing he was distributing? - Well, yes.

In what way did you help him? - Well, basically I gave him a letter -- he had a typed letter and it was a kind of standard letter, and he asked me if I could type something out, change/change the dates, that sort of thing.

Do you remember what the letters were about? - I think they were to do with recruiting students to assist him in the summer camps and his clubs.

Were you aware of his interest in starting up a club at Bishopbriggs? - Yes.

Did he speak to you about that? - Well, when he started the club in Bishopbriggs as far as I know it was just last autumn, and he visited me. I knew he was running a club in Bishopbriggs because he visited me a couple of times in Glasgow at my workplace just more or less at the close of business, and his reason for this was that he couldn't get a train from Stirling to Bishopbriggs at a time that was suitable for the running of the club. He had to get the train from Stirling to Glasgow, have a look round the shops or whatever, and then get a train from Glasgow back to Bishopbriggs. A couple of times he merely nipped in to see me just as I was tidying up.

During 1995 did he visit you quite often? - No, I wouldn't say that.

How many times in the course of the year? - About four or something like that.

Did he have any correspondence typed or copied in relation to running this club at Bishopbriggs? - I don't think so.

When was the last time you saw him? - The last time I saw him -- my mind has gone a bit blank -- the last time I spoke to him was on the Friday beforehand.

But when was the last time you saw him, the last time he came into your office? - I think that was the Monday before.

That would be the 4th March? - Yes, it would be.

Did he stay for long? - No.

Did you have any conversation with him? - Yes, /

- Yes, briefly.

Do you remember what he was talking about? -
Not really, just the usual.

What was the usual? - Well, anything to do with his boys clubs or his correspondence he was sending out here and there.

Did he say anything about shopping the previous Saturday? - Well, he did say to me -- this gives you some measure of his conversation which was a bit tedious -- in a kind of break in the conversation when I was more or less getting my jacket on and going down to the bus station to go home he told me -- I said to him, "Did you do anything special over the weekend?" and he told me he had been into Debenhams and bought two shirts.

Did he say how he had paid for them? - Yes. I asked him if Debenhams had a sale and he said No, but the beauty of it was he had got the shirts on his credit account with the shop and this meant that he would never have to pay for them.

Can you remember his exact words? - He said, "The beauty is I will never have to pay for them ever".

Did he do anything when he said "ever"? - Just emphasised.

Just the way he said it; he didn't make any motion with his hands or anything? - No.

Emphasised "ever"? - Yes.

Did that strike you as odd? - It did indeed, because I felt that if you have a credit account you can run up all sorts of purchases and, I mean, you are paying, you can pay off small amounts albeit per month, but you not only have to pay for the goods but you have to pay quite a steep amount of interest, so it just didn't make sense to me.

Prior to the 4th March when was the last time you had ever spoken to him or seen him? - I think probably a week or a fortnight beforehand.

During/

During 1996 were you seeing him maybe once a fortnight? - Well, perhaps not seeing him but he used to phone the house.

Was there any particular reason why he would phone the house? - Just more or less to keep me up to date with his campaign to clear his name, sort of style.

How long were these phone calls? - Very long.

Could they be an hour? - They could be, yes.

You said the last time you spoke to him was on Friday 8th March? - Yes.

Was that at home? - That was at work.

What was the purpose of his call. This was a telephone call? - That is right.

What was the purpose of the call? - He phoned me to ask me for some help and safety advice concerning someone he knew who was considering making a claim for a hearing loss against their employer.

Were you able to give him that? - Yes.

Did he also say there was a change in his movements on the following Monday? - Well, he mentioned that he wouldn't be in to see me on the Monday because he had found another more suitable train.

And he didn't come to see you on the Monday? - No.

When did you learn about the Dunblane shooting?
- At lunchtime on the day.

Did you have any idea at that stage that it might be him? - Certainly not.

In the course of that day did you phone Hamilton?
- Yes, I did indeed.

Why/

Why was that? - Well, first of all about lunchtime I heard a kind of rumour that there had been schoolchildren shot in Dunblane Primary, and it was kind of hard to believe really and I didn't pay much attention to it. However, it so happened in the afternoon I had an appointment with someone from the Scottish Ambulance Service who had come in at a pre-arranged meeting to discuss arrangements for ambulances visiting the university to ensure the ambulance when called out was going to come to the correct entrance to minimise delay in getting the casualty. The person who was representing the Ambulance Service had been involved in Dunblane and obviously was giving information about this. The information he gave was there was certainly a lot of people killed in the primary school in Dunblane, and that there was someone who was known to the police and was a member of Dunblane Rifle Club.

Did he give you a name? - No.

Well, you are going to tell us why you phoned Hamilton? - I then phoned -- when this gentleman left I then phoned Hamilton to see if he knew anything about it because, to see who had been involved, because I knew he had been a member of the shooting club at Dunblane and he would certainly be aware of the news because he would watch the bulletins.

I assume you got no answer? - I got the answering machine.

Did you leave a message? - Yes, I just said that this was Graham calling if he wanted to call me back.

In the three months immediately before this happened could you detect any change in his personality and mental state? - No.

You have told us about one statement that he would not have to pay for the shirts 'ever'? - Yes.

Apart from that, was there anything out of the ordinary about him and his conversations during that period? - No, not at all.

No cross-examination.

MR./

2.50 p.m.

MR. BONOMOY: The next witness, sir, is William Thomson.

WILLIAM McGREGOR THOMSON (25) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I think you live in Burntisland? - Yes.

I think you are a school teacher? - Yes.

What do you teach? - Physical education.

How long have you been a qualified teacher? - Two years.

I think you actually hold a degree in Sport in the Community? - Yes.

And also a Post-Graduate Certificate in Physical Education and Media Education? - Yes.

In May of 1995 were you working as a teacher for Fife Region? - Yes.

In what particular school? - Buckhaven High.

Were you on a permanent post or a temporary post? - A temporary post, as a supply teacher.

Does that mean you didn't get paid during the summer holidays? - Yes.

Were you interested in finding work during the summer holidays? - Yes.

Did anything come up? - I was working with sports clubs, and I had an interview regarding that, and also in England as well, where I was working in a job down in Somerset.

Did you still have free time left? - Yes.

Did you learn of someone wanting assistance for the period you were free? - Yes. When/

When I was at Jordanhill in Glasgow there were always advertisement for sports coaches, which obviously were for sports clubs.

For which sports clubs? - For Dunblane sports club.

Were these past advertisements you were aware of?

- It was from about a year before.

Did you keep a note of how to get in touch? - Yes, I kept a note of all of these jobs for the summer in case I would have to apply for them.

Was one of them Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

Did you contact him? - Yes.

How did you do that? - I phoned him up. There was a phone number on the advertisement.

Was this for employment in evening club activities or for a summer camp activity? - For a summer camp activity.

To last how long? - About 12 days.

During the summer of 1995, July? - I think it was either June or July.

After you spoke to him what arrangement was made?

- He asked me to come along to a club in Falkirk to do a small coaching session, then he offered me a job at the summer camp.

What did you do about the coaching session? - I took a coaching session in gymnastics along with another coach with a group of about six children each.

Did you do that for the whole session? - No, for about an hour, then he asked me to take a football session for about 20 minutes.

Did he interview you? - He talked to me for only a couple of minutes during that time.

What size was the group? - Between the two of us there were I think 12. We split them into two/two groups of six.

That was for the two of you? - Yes, me and a young girl, who was a student from Moray House.

Did she also come to be checked out? - Yes.

You reckon there was only 12 people there? - There were only 12 in the small session I took, but there were other people in the games hall at the time.

What school was this? - I'm not sure. It was one of the schools in Falkirk. I was going to say Gryffe High School, but I am not sure.

Was Mr. Hamilton the only one in charge? - There was Mr. Hamilton and also a sports student from Jordanhill.

How many kids were there altogether? - I would say about 30, but I would be guessing.

Did anything strike you as odd about the activity the children were engaged in? - Nothing at all. The two of us were taking a small gymnastic session, and there was five-a-side football in the games hall.

How about how the children were dressed? - A T-shirt and shorts. There was nothing odd at all.

Was anyone taking photographs? - No.

Was this the same night you telephoned or a later night? - It was a different night. He had asked me to come along to see what my coaching abilities were like.

Did you get the job? - I did, yes.

Do you get paid for a job like that? - Yes.

Did you get properly paid at the end of it? - Yes.

So/

So when you left that night was there anything, thinking back about what went on, which seemed out of the way? - Nothing at all.

Now, you spent 12 days at the camp. Who did the catering? - Thomas Hamilton made the food.

What were the sleeping arrangements? - The children brought along sleeping bags and they slept either on the floor or on seats.

Where did you sleep? - In a room next door.

Where did Hamilton sleep? - He slept in the room with the children.

Was there any other assistance at the camp? - There were two other coaches, a male and a female. They slept in the other room next door as well.

What did you make of the activity at the camp? - To start with from the first day Thomas Hamilton had given me a list of activities he wanted to get the children to take part in. I felt it was too strenuous, so I told him, and we reduced them.

Were these activities morning, afternoon and evening? - Most of the time, although they were mostly taken part in in morning and afternoon, and at night there was a mixture of events if they wanted to take part in five-a-side football, etc.

Did Hamilton regard this as a holiday? - No, he felt it was more a sports training camp than a holiday camp.

Was it a sports training camp? - Yes I would say very much so. The person who took the gymnastics was very good, so she improved the gymnastic ability of the children.

Was she a female coach? - Yes.

Was she a student? - Yes, I think so.

Was the other one a male? - Yes. He was also a student.

Was/

Was there anything strange about the way the children dressed about the period of the camp? - To start with he gave them each a pair of trunks, which at that time I felt was a bit odd, but the children asked if they could cover up with T-shirts and shorts. I spoke to him and said the children wanted to emulate their childhood heroes, and he said "Fine. You know better": so they put T-shirts and shorts on for most of the activities.

For some of them did they not wear T-shirt and shorts? - Sometimes during the gymnastics they didn't wear them, but for five-a-side football, etc., they wore T-shirts and shorts.

Were they wearing swimming trunks when they weren't wearing T-shirt and shorts? - Yes.

Is that appropriate gear for gymnastics? - I wouldn't have thought it was appropriate gear, but I wouldn't say it was inappropriate, because the camps had been run along that way for years (sic), and I never thought anything about it.

Were any of the children upset during that fortnight?
- Some of the children got homesick.

Did any of them get to the point of trying to get away from the camp? - Apparently two children had gone away from the camp, and Thomas Hamilton and a janitor went looking for them and found them down at a phone box. One of the parents arrived after that.

Did the children stay? - Yes.

Did he take photographs during the camp? - Yes, he took quite a lot to start with, but didn't take as many towards the end.

Did he take video films? - Not that I know of.

Were you surprised at the amount of photography? - Yes and no. When I asked him about the photography he said he was looking to take the pictures to give to the parents on a marketable basis. He had photographs of the children taken at the high jump that he wanted to give to the parents.

Did/

Did he ever mention he had been complained of in the past? - The only thing he mentioned was that a camp on Loch Lomond someone had complained, but there was nothing found wrong with it.

Did he say what the complaint had been? - I am not sure if he said he had spanked someone, but it was something along those lines.

He didn't say whether he had been charged with anything? - No, he didn't mention anything like that.

Did you find anything odd about the way in which he had treated the children during the fortnight? - No.

He wasn't strict with them? - He was strict to a degree. Maybe a wee bit more domineering -- that is maybe not the right word. He would ask the children to stand in a line and maybe raise his voice, but he never shouted at the children.

Any signs of favouritism? - Yes, very much so, towards some children.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: You mentioned homesickness, and a boy leaving camp and going down to the phone box? - Yes.

Did Thomas Hamilton permit boys access to a telephone during the camp? - There was only one telephone I know of, which was used by the janitor at the school. Some of the children were allowed to use it, but I am not sure about the others. I would say no, but certain ones. Some of the children said they were going to be allowed to phone home, but which ones I am not sure.

Did you gain any understanding as to why some boys were prohibited from phoning home and others were not? - No.

Did he ever show any affection or comfort towards upset children? - Not that I can remember, no.

BY LORD CULLEN: How did he show favouritism, / favouritism, as far as you could see? - He kept on saying "Well done!" to certain children rather than, as we are taught in teaching, trying to encourage everyone. He would say "Well done, Willie, you did well today", but not to everybody.

Was that the only way in which he showed favouritism? - I would say if someone did particularly well he would give them an extra sweet, but that is the only thing I can think of.

No further cross-examination.
No re-examination.

MR. BONOMY: The next witness is Douglas Ralph.

DOUGLAS RALPH (41) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: I am an Inspector in the Central Scotland Police, based in Falkirk. I have 22 years' police service.

The Inquiry has had some information about an encounter you may have had with Thomas Hamilton some years ago. Was that the only occasion on which you ever met him? - No. I first met him when I joined the police at first, and I had a motor scooter, and I joined a scooter club. It was not a recognised club, it was just scooter owners in Whins of Milton. I think it may have been in a hall used for other facilities as well. That was the first time I had met Mr. Hamilton.

Roughly when was that? - 1971. Again I was a member of the club for that time. He would come occasionally, but not every week.

Was he also a member? - No, he didn't have a scooter. He came by car. It was not a registered club where we had a list of members: just a bunch of scooterists who got together.

What do you do at a scooter club if you don't have a scooter? - He would come for the meeting starting, but not wait till the whole of the meeting was over until he left.

Did the club have scooters? - No. The persons/persons who were members had their own scooters.

Was he just a friend? - He appeared to be. He was obviously visiting there before I joined. I was a newcomer to the club. When I went he would be there.

He never had a scooter while you were there? - No.

Now, you are quite clear that is the same Thomas Hamilton as this whole Inquiry is about? - Yes.

Did you know anything else about him, what he did at that time and where he stayed? - I think he lived in Stirling.

Where was the scooter club? - Whins of Milton, which is up towards Bannockburn.

Do you know what he did for a living? - No, not at that time.

Are you sure it was the same person? - Yes.

What I am concerned about is his speaking to you and complaining about the actions of other police officers. When was that? - Again it is difficult to say exactly. Certainly 7 to 10 years ago.

Where were you serving then? - At that time I was either in Traffic patrol or in the Road Safety Section.

Where did he speak to you? - I think it was in the Town Centre area of Stirling.

What did he want to see you about? - He said he had been spoken to by two officers. He had informed me he had been up the Back Walk in Stirling, which is the area which leads from the back of the hall round towards the Raploch, and he had been spoken to by two officers. He had an air gun, and he said they told him he could be charged with recklessly discharging it. He said an officer had taken the gun and discharged it into the ground and had also waved it about, and he was considering writing/writing in to complain, because how could he be charged with recklessly discharging a gun when the officer was waving it about.

He was complaining about police activity? - He was saying if he was going to be charged with recklessly discharging a gun, he was complaining that the officer had been waving it about, which is very dangerous, far more dangerous than what he would have been doing.

From what he said to you was there any basis on which he could possibly be charged with recklessly discharging a firearm? - No. He said he had been in the wooded area, but he had not been recklessly discharging it.

So he was complaining of the police conduct towards him? - Yes. He didn't name the officers, and he didn't seem particularly annoyed about it.

Yes? - You would meet Mr. Hamilton in the town and he would always have a story to tell, and he would ask specifically about the police. In one instance he said one day he saw police cars going by with their horns blaring and lights flashing; had there been anything happening. Now, I knew that day that there had been nothing happening at all. He would usually tell you a story, ramble on and then say "Bye bye" and walk away.

Yes? - On that occasion he said this about the two policemen, then he said "How is the police? Are things busy?", then said "Bye bye" and walked away.

Did he say he would make a formal complaint? - No, he said if he had been charged he would complain: but had the incident happened he would have been charged there and then by the officers.

So we don't hear of any suggestion that he was actually charged? - No.

Nor that he was even warned. He was threatened, really? - He said he had been spoken to.

Well/

Well, he has been threatened. That is not something you would expect to find recorded in the police records? - No. At the same time, I wouldn't give a lot of credence to what he was saying. It was one of his stories.

However, what action did you take once you had got this complaint from him? - I took no action.

Why? - It was the pattern that he would come and tell you a story. He didn't make any formal complaint to me or ask me to do anything. He was simply telling the story as a matter of interest, which is how he normally acted.

CROSS/

3.10 p.m.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Probably my fault; I am not entirely following the sequence of events. How did the subject of reckless discharge of an airgun come up? - He would just approach -- that was Mr. Hamilton's way -- and say "Are you busy and that". He would come along and ask you how you were, ask you about police matters and tell you his stories. On occasions he would say he had been over at Whins of Milton in the car but he wouldn't give you any information about what the car was. It was as if he wanted to stay for a chat, and once he had his chat he would be away.

How did the subject of reckless discharge of an airgun come up? - I obviously can't remember exactly -- just the fact this term -- he was told he could have been charged with recklessly discharging, and his view was he had done nothing, he hadn't been reckless at all, and in fact the officers had been reckless by waving it about in his presence.

Did he say to you that he had been told by two police officers that he could be charged with recklessly discharging an airgun? - Yes. He did not in fact say he had recklessly discharged it.

You knew nothing about what happened because you weren't there? - No.

Obviously you were told that Hamilton had been told by two police officers that he could be charged with recklessly discharging an airgun in a public place? - Yes.

If I understand correctly, Hamilton's main concern then was to indicate to you that if that did happen he would have some complaint to make about the conduct of the two police officers -- get his attack in first in a sense? - Yes. He saw that as -- how could they charge me if they were waving it around.

Did you know that Hamilton held a Firearm Certificate?
- I had no knowledge of that whatever.

Did you take any steps to find out whether he had or not? - No.

Did/

Did you take any steps at all in the light of what Hamilton said to you? - No. I have known him and when he came to speak to you with these stories, it was his normal way of chatting away. At the time he usually spoke to most police officers, he would stop you in the street and speak to you, and he didn't say their names. If he did know who they were he would have said who the police officers were at that time.

You didn't try to find out who it was who had spoken to them? - No.

Did you just dismiss it all completely? - Not dismiss it completely. My opinion was this was his normal method of coming for a chat, giving you a story, going away. He didn't appear particularly as if someone wishing to make a complaint, they are agitated or annoyed. He was like -- he would change to some other subject altogether and he would say "Bye bye" and wander off. Following that time he would often do the same thing, ask me, "How are you doing, are you busy", and it wasn't an isolated incident.

Did Hamilton tell you why he had been at this wooded area with an airgun? - No. He just said he had been round the Back Walk. He didn't specify which part of it. It was quite an expanse of woodland.

Did you ask him what he was doing up in a wooded area with an airgun? - No. I knew he was going up, that he was going to complain.

This was a matter of no interest to you whatsoever, he was telling you he had been in a wooded area with an airgun? - He didn't give me any details of what happened. He was more or less complaining about the officers themselves, and this was the reason for him if he was charged getting off.

No further cross-examination.
No re-examination.

ALLAN MOFFAT, (Recalled),

LORD CULLEN: You are still on oath of course.

EXAMINED/

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Detective Sergeant Moffat, you previously gave evidence really in your capacity as an officer in the Child Protection Unit in relation to the enquiries that you made? - That is correct.

In the investigations into the Dunblane tragedy one of your roles has been to assist in investigating Hamilton's finances? - That is correct.

The Inquiry heard from Detective Chief Inspector Hughes about that already but I think the Inquiry has been hearing evidence and you have been continuing with your investigations? - Yes.

I just want to ask you about a couple of matters which advance our knowledge slightly about Hamilton's finances. I think you conducted an enquiry with the Royal Bank particularly in relation to any large sums of money that Hamilton may have had in the mid-80s? - That is correct.

Did you discover that he had received an insurance payment for the loss of a boat on Loch Lomond? - I believe so.

Were you able to say when the payment was made to him? - It was in December, 1983.

The amount? - £24,686.

Paid into the Royal Bank? - A business account there.

Already on overdraft? - The amount overdrawn I believe was some £16,500.

So that would kill the overdraft and leave a fair bit? - It did.

Did Hamilton draw on that account? - Yes, very quickly within a period of two months the account was down to £2,000.

Was there any significant withdrawal in that period? - One for £3,500.

Were you establish when that withdrawal was made? - Unfortunately not.
That/

That was the only big one? - It is the only one the bank was able to advise us on.

Were you able to establish anything about money for the disposal of the business we have heard called Woodcraft? - We learned again a cheque was paid into the same business account.

When was that? - I believe that was October, 1985.

What amount? - From recollection it was some £16,000.

I have a note here of £14,394? - Yes, that would be correct. I submitted a memo on that.

Do you have any information on the state of the account at that stage? - Again the account was overdrawn I believe.

Did that bring it back into credit or not? - I believe it did, but again it was very quickly taken back down.

Was one large withdrawal made? - Yes, there was one of some £2,000 I believe.

We have heard some evidence earlier of the possible use I think of a sum of £7,500 to buy another boat. Do you know anything about that? - I think I have confused the figures. The second large amount which was paid in for the sale of the business was in fact leading to £7,500 being withdrawn. Again we have not been able to easily ascertain the reason for that withdrawal.

I think there has been a suggestion in evidence -- or possibly -- well, it may be my memory is at fault -- but there has been a suggestion somewhere that £7,500 was payment for another boat. You haven't tracked that? - Again this has been the suggestion. I have never been able positively to state he paid that amount of money to any particular person for the purchase of a boat.

Have you somewhere, apart from me, heard suggested that £7,500 was used for the purchase of another boat, or are you only hearing that here? - I am hearing that -- I have heard he purchased another/another boat but I have not heard he paid £7,500 for it.

Was the £7,500 the only substantial withdrawal around the time the payment was received for the sale of the business? - That is correct.

In the period between these large deposits were there a number of small withdrawals? - I believe so. Again the bank was only able to provide us with information relative to the large withdrawals.

No cross-examination.

RONALD ISLES, (30), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: Are you presently an officer in the Police Force of Central Scotland Police? - Yes.

What is your rank? - Detective Constable.

How many years police service do you have? - Eight years.

I understand as part of your investigation into the events of Dunblane on 13th March you were passed by another officer a large bag of photographs? - That is correct.

Which officer gave you these photographs? - It was Detective Constable Simpson.

I wonder if you could have the photographs put before you. Can you tell me the number on the label? - DHE36.

Are these the photographs that were passed to you? - That is correct.

What did you do with the photographs you were given? - They were lodged through the Production Book and they were stored in the Production Room.

Is that all the photographs within that bundle? - No, that is not correct.

Where/

Where are the others? - I did on instructions from the Fiscal's Service make up a sample of photographs and they are in a separate booklet.

I wonder if we can have the booklet containing the photographs put before you? - That's it.

Can you identify the number on that? - DHE56.

And that is the bundle prepared by you? - That is correct.

On what basis did you extract the photographs from the book of photographs to form the album? - I extracted them on a random basis. However, I feel it is a representative sample of the type of photographs which were within the larger bundle.

Could you describe what is depicted in the majority of photographs within the album? - All the photographs depict young boys carrying out various aspects of gymnastics or athletic events.

What are they wearing? - They are all generally wearing either a shirt, tee shirt, or some wearing black swimming trunks -- certainly swimming trunks.

Are all the photographs taken of the boys, are they all taking part in athletic activities? - No sir, there are a number which I would describe as portrait photographs.

Which part of the body is generally shown in these portrait photographs? - Generally from the breast area upwards.

How are the boys dressed in these photographs? - Some are dressed with tops on, but I would say the majority of them, they were naked from the breast up.

Do the boys in the photographs appear to be happy or unhappy? - Some happy, some you could say are happy; others it is hard to say.

No cross-examination.

After/

3.30 p.m.

After a short adjournment:

MR. BONOMOY: Thank you for your forbearance, sir. The next witness is Paul Richard Smith.

PAUL RICHARD SMITH (21), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Where do you stay? - Until recently I stayed at Braco. I have now moved to Bishopbriggs, near Glasgow.

Do you also work in Bishopbriggs? - Yes, at the Leisuredrome.

Are you a leisure assistant? - Yes.

When you were at college did you assist a person called Thomas Hamilton with Dunblane Boys Club? - Yes.

How long did you assist him there? - About a year. When I left college I had to set about getting a job, and I had to leave because of other commitments; I couldn't just stay on.

What year was that, roughly? - 1992.

Do you mean when you started? - Yes.

How did you first hear from him? - It was in a newsagents. He had advertised a boys' club, and I was wondering if he needed helpers. I thought it would look good on my CV if I showed I was working as a helper with the public.

How did you contact him? - I phoned the number given on the advert. It was his house number.

Did he arrange to see you? - He said he had to induct helpers and new members. Myself and my father went round to his house.

Was/

Was there anything odd about the house? - No, just that he had pictures of boys up.

Anything striking about these pictures? - Not out of the way. At first it was because of the way they were all queued up: it was like a class photo. He seemed to have hundreds of them, and lots of videos of boys' activities.

On the wall were there photographs of boys? - Yes.

Were these of individual boys or groups of boys? - Mainly groups of boys.

No individuals? - I can't remember.

Were there other photographs? - Yes, he had photo albums.

Did he show you them? - Yes.

Did he have videos as well? - Yes.

How did the boys appear when you saw them in the photographs? - Most of them had their tops off. They were all at a camp at Loch Lomond. I joined the year after that.

Were any of them wearing swimming trunks? - I can't remember.

Was this in his living room? - Yes.

Anyway, you say that it seemed odd at first, or words to that effect? - Yes.

Did the feeling it was odd wear off? - Yes.

When was that? - As we went on he came to explain the boys preferred it like that, and then when I went to the club itself the boys used to come up to me and say "It is too hot. Is it okay if I take my T-shirt off?" and I thought it must be the norm, so I would just let them.

Did he show you any videos? - Yes, one of a boat trip to Loch Lomond, and all the boys were there too.

Did/

Did that look odd? - No, not really. They all had life jackets on.

At the club itself did the boys wear shorts, or swimming trunks? - I can remember during our usual evening sessions on a Thursday night they used to wear their normal attire, but when I helped out at the summer camp Mr. Hamilton had bought them all black trunks: he said it was just for photo shooting.

Yes? - Given the weather conditions I questioned whether it was advisable -- because it was pretty cold. He said "It is just to get the boys some sun". As soon as Mr. Hamilton left, however, and I got back in charge I made them put their T-shirts back on, because it was too cold.

Where was that summer camp held? - Dunblane High School.

In which year was that? - 1992, 1993.

Was that when you started? - Yes, round about that.

Over the next year after that did you help out with the club? - Say a few months after that. I was just coming up to leave college then.

For how long did you assist him with his club? - For about 20 months in total.

Always at Dunblane High School? - Yes.

Does that cover the period before and after the camp you have told us about? - That was about two months after the camp and the rest just before.

What were the activities the High School club? - On a normal day we would do gymnastics, football, they would play a game called Pirates. That involves taking all the equipment off the walls, the climbing frames and things, and then certain boys are chosen, and all the rest have to be "tig" as it were, and once you are caught you get your T-shirt on and catch the rest of the boys.

Does/

Does that mean you are swinging about between pieces of apparatus? - Yes. A few months after starting working for him I found out this game had been banned, and I said to him "You shouldn't be doing this because of Health and Safety". I was studying Health and Safety at college, and I said "Can we just stick to the gymnastics?".

That game is banned? - I am sure it is. It should have been.

Were there any accidents at any of his activities?
- Just the usual rough and tumble, but I wouldn't say anything where anybody had to be hospitalised.

Any obvious breaches of safety or good safety practice? - Not putting the blame on him, but I would say the school. They had five-a-side goals and these should be chained to the wall, and at that time they were on wheels. They could fall down.

Did he take many photographs at the camp? - Yes, numerous, including photographs of myself as well. That is why I came forward.

Why is that? - Because he was taking photographs of me with the boys and himself.

BY LORD CULLEN: I think at this point we should introduce the photographs. Just have a look at that and see if that is you? - Yes.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:
What is going on there? - That is me standing up at a game of football.

If you just flick through this book, do they show activities at the camp? - Yes, indeed. That is what most of these were, actually.

The one we began with: where was that taken? - That was outside. At the back of Dunblane High School there is a playing field. I don't know if it belongs to the school, but I think it does. There is an athletics track all chalked out and a five-a-side football pitch.

How/

How long were you out there for, each day? - Almost every day, unless it rained.

Do these show just the games or do they cover some of the club activities? - I would say that the boys wearing trunks, this will be the camp.

Is there a date on any of these? - No. Probably we would best be able to tell from the video.

Bearing in mind this is 1996, do you think it was the camp of 1992 or 1993? - Definitely, yes; the one I attended.

Do you know which one? Do you know whether it was three years ago or four years ago? - I probably best say four. This is the one. I remember some of the boys being there.

Were you concerned at all about the volume of photographs that were being taken? - Not really. When I went to his house in the very first place he had a tallboy, and within the drawers in it he had different lenses and different cameras. He showed me videos of weddings he had been to and taken video footage of that and I thought he must have had a natural interest in photography.

During the camp that you ran did the boys stay overnight? - Yes. Some of the boys would have special permission to go home; they just didn't want to stay overnight. Some of the boys did stay with him overnight.

What happened at the weekend? - I was actually off at weekends, because I just went home; I didn't want to stay there.

Did you stay overnight during the week? - No, because what with just living in Braco.

In your statement to the police you said it was in the summer of 1993, but I take it you are in doubt about that? - Yes. I am just trying to remember the year.

Were you paid for what you did? - No. He had offered, but, you know, there was no point, because I enjoyed helping out as well, and it was to put/put it on my CV that I had helped out at a training camp.

Did he give you anything? - Yes. He was taking pictures with his camera, and he gave me a Minolta camera and a lens.

Did you offer to pay for these? - Yes, because it is expensive equipment. He said "No. If you want, the next time you come round to the house I will give you a few more lenses".

When was that? - At the actual camp. I have still got the camera in question.

How generally did you get on with him? - I would say on the whole okay. He did seem a strange man, but nothing I would say that was very questionable, you know. During some of the activities he did with the boys, I used to say to him -- there was one for instance when we all played football, and Mr. Hamilton would come in and he would say to a boy "Do you want to come through?", and he took them for gymnastics. He was doing that one at a time. When they came back I would say "What did you do?", and the boys gave us the whole routine as to what they did with gymnastics. Then he called all the boys back into the gym, and then we watched the special few he had chosen that were good at gymnastics.

When he was with the boys on his own did you get the impression he was giving them proper tuition? - Well, he said to me he was qualified. I remember he used to teach me on the vault, and he seemed to know most of the support positions, because my mother used to teach gymnastics, and I asked her about this, and she said yes, it is the old way, but it is correct.

Was your impression that he was at least trying to give proper tuition? - Yes.

So while you were initially concerned about them going through to the gym on their own with him they appeared to be involved in gymnastic activities, as far as you could tell? - Yes.

So/

So far as you could tell? - As far as I could tell. It seems strange to me they were going through one by one, because I said to my father it seemed strange, it wasn't a regular basis, and he said "Just ask the boys". He seemed to have a different rapport with the boys than I had. I think with me being younger than him he was a bit more disciplined. He would line the boys up and say "Right you are Captain, you are Captain," whereas I would just say "Right who wants to be Captain", and they would choose two and let them get on with it. Whereas he used to pick the teams individually. I seemed to be a bit more playful with the boys, let them get on with it, and he would say, "Right, you are doing this, you are doing that, you are going here, you are going here".

Do you think you got a fairly accurate account from the boys when you asked them what was going on next door? - Yes, I would say so.

Thinking back about it, was there anything you could put your finger on that was out of the way that may suggest he was behaving improperly? - Just that, just that he put the boys in trunks. He always used to say well, he was taking their photos, he wanted them to look nice and smart.

Was that at the club as well as the camp? - No, just at the camp.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: You told us you think we are talking of the summer of 1992 rather than '93. Do you have a recollection of an incident when three boys one evening effectively ran away from the camp? - No, I was never actually told they had, no.

You have no recollection of that? - No, that is news to me.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: Were the boys who were singled out for tuition in gymnastics those boys who had a special aptitude for gymnastics? - Yes, because like a football skill, he used to just choose different boys for football as well.

So was that the basis of selection so far as you could tell? - As far as I could tell, yes.

RE/

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: You said that your involvement finished when you stopped college. When did you finish college? - The beginning of 1993, about May.

May 1993? - Round about that.

Was it shortly after that you went to the camp rather than the year before? - No, definitely the year before. So probably 1992 would be the camp.

BY LORD CULLEN: Would I be right in understanding from your evidence you never saw any sign of what may be called favouritism? - Yes.

You did. You were talking to Mr. Taylor just now of people who appeared to have merit being singled out. Did you look upon that as being favouritism? - He seemed to pick favourites. He used always to choose the same boys for Captains.

Was there anything to account for that, any particular reason -- because they were particularly good at something? - Well, yes, I assumed -- I just said they are good at gymnastics and thought well, they are playing football now. He was running the club so I didn't want to sort of question -- I was there to help, not to take over.

DEREK ROBERT PENMAN, (30), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: I think you are presently an officer in Central Scotland Police? - Yes, I am a Detective Sergeant stationed at Stirling CID.

How many years police service do you have? - 12 years police service.

Could you have in front of you please two folders HV (Volumes 1 and 2). Before looking at the Productions within that folder is it correct that you have been involved in the investigation into the incident which occurred at Dunblane Primary School on 13th March? - That is correct. I was part of a team that followed the incident at Dunblane and we were tasked with researching the background of Hamilton and the boys' clubs and looking/looking at the correspondence that was recovered from his home and also the correspondence that was recovered from his dealings with various local authorities.

I think you said earlier you considered his involvement with boys' clubs? - I did, yes.

The boys' clubs information was recovered from an amalgam of researches, mainly dealings with the local authority concerning boys' clubs and also documentation by him concerning boys' clubs, so what in effect we had is from the information from the local authorities and also correspondence recovered from his own records, we were able to form an over-view picture of the boys' clubs in general.

Could I ask you please to look within the folder at the first item, the first major item within Volume 1? - The summary?

It is headed "Chapter 85, Hamilton's Involvement with Boys' Clubs". Is that the report you assisted in the preparation of? - That is correct.

In the next divider from that you show a number of charts and diagrams? - That is correct.

Were these prepared by you? - They were prepared by members of the team I was involved with. I didn't prepare them personally but I was involved in the team in a supervisory role.

What I would like to do is refer to various aspects of the report using the diagrams when necessary and to consider the general aspect of Hamilton's involvement with boys' clubs, and this is only with a specific club. We have heard already the manner in which Hamilton obtained lots of clubs from local authorities. Did you become aware of how these clubs were publicised? - It would appear that it followed the same pattern in as much as he would produce flyers, advertising material, and he would then distribute them unsolicited to local primary schools in the area.

Was that the only way he circulated the flyers? - There was also evidence he circulated flyers actually round the doors of houses in the locality of the area where he was opening the boys' club.

Have/

Have you been able to make any estimate of the popularity of the boys' clubs? - It would appear from research that initially they were extremely popular, the interest that was attracted from the flyers meant there would be a large number of boys attending on the first night perhaps, and they were popular initially, but I think it was interest that however waned and eventually dropped to a small number, sometimes a core group who attended.

There was some evidence on opening nights there would be as many as 70 children, and although I know this coming from the source of Hamilton's records, it would appear the attendance sometimes dropped down to perhaps ten.

Was there any particular reason for the reduction in the numbers attending the club? - Again, in my opinion I would say Hamilton himself suggested children didn't have the patience to stay at the club, or whether they just lost interest, and the regime that Hamilton operated, the particular activity, sometimes they lost interest. It would appear from one of the boys' clubs there was a period that complaints were received from parents to local authorities, and whether that had a knock-on effect, certainly the numbers did diminish.

Were you able to investigate the income and expenditure of the boys' clubs? - We were able to recover letters from 7 Kent Road and carried out an analysis of the letters to give us some idea of income and expenditure from these records, but again I would have to say these were records that all appeared to have been recorded by Hamilton.

Can I refer you to one of the charts, that is C3 in H(v).
Were you involved in the preparation of this? - Yes.

What does it show? - What we did in this case was to examine the record of a six month period to see the per week income and expenditure that was being recorded against the clubs, to give us some idea of the money that was being generated. What it shows is that you have the actual date of the entry, the club, the expenditure, the number of children who were recorded as attending the club, the income that was received from them, and also the expenditure that was said to have gone for the club for that night. We balanced it, the balanced figure/

Where did you get the balanced figure from? - It showed profit and loss. It was a notional figure. The balance shown is a notional figure. It shows basically the income less expenditure for that particular night, therefore a balance of £10.60 which is shown is the first entry is in effect the figure of income and expenditure, and that figure, that was taken as an opening balance for the analyses and it then works from there.

BY LORD CULLEN: Can you tell me, was the income and expenditure period we are looking at here the figure for a particular organisation or was it in Hamilton's own name or what. How is that shown? - From memory of the books I was shown, it was a simple double entry account book. It would perhaps be a week -- they were done on a weekly basis -- and what you would have is it would be shown as Falkirk High School -- that's just a name -- and all the information would be in one book. It was one set of ledgers.

At some point was there not some organisation allegedly set up called Boys' Clubs Committee? - Yes. It would appear these accounts related to Hamilton's activities with boys' clubs. It was a boys' club account, if you like. From our research the Boys' Clubs Sports Group Committee emerged as being the organisation, an umbrella organisation he would appear to have created, and therefore this meant ostensibly it related to the Boys' Clubs Sports Group Committee.

Can you tell us when that came about, what date it came into existence? - If I can refer to this.....

MR. LAKE: I think page 26 of the report may be of some assistance in this.

BY LORD CULLEN: Yes, page 26. You said it was early 1989; is that right? - How we arrived at that information was from basically correspondence that would appear -- he had prepared a letterhead made up which demonstrated this organisation.

Was/

Was that ostensibly the body that was making this money; is that right? - Yes. I think in reality it was perhaps Hamilton on his own who created this.

No doubt.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: Without looking at the individual entries for any income and expenditure, is it correct to say in general the income is either one or two times the number of children attending? - That is correct.

The expenditure figure varies throughout the various clubs? - It does.

Was there any information about a separate expenditure figure or was it merely taken from the ledger? - Again from memory it was actually itemised. He itemised the expenditure in various ways, travelling expenses, chips. He actually detailed the expenditure.

Looking at the totals at the foot of the second page you see over the period which is stated as six months there was a small net loss in running the clubs? - Yes. The average figures show an average loss of £30.84.

I wonder about that because if you see the total figure, it shows a total loss of £25.19 for the entire period of six months. You see the total figure? - Yes, I do.

And you see the average figure and the average income is £12.44? - Yes.

The average expenditure of £12.76? - Yes.

Really it is just a matter of a few pence that has been lost on each one? - Yes.

How did the figure of £30.84 come about? - It was calculated using a computer spreadsheet. If you take the figure of £30.84, if you like, the lower figure in that column, you will see there is some locations when as much as £113 has been lost, but I think you have to show the average on that column.

BY/

BY LORD CULLEN: I take it there were other clubs at other locations which were in operation during that period? - Yes. Looking at this from memory there was a club operating at Bishopbriggs.

I wondered about that. I don't see that? - It clearly didn't feature in the records.

It simply wasn't there? - Yes.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: Was it clear from the ledger how much Hamilton was charging the boys to attend his club? - I think we can take that from approximately the income, the number of boys attending, and sometimes the numbers were double the amount. On some occasions 12 boys would appear to have attended where the income is £12 which would suggest there was a fee of £1.

On other occasions did Hamilton charge the boys other amounts? - Again purely going by this information -- I think it is at Dunblane -- there are some where on the night of 22nd February where 23 boys apparently are entered as attending, yet the income is only £7. This figure is not what was being charged from the records.

Not merely from the ledger but from other information are you aware of other sums being charged? - From memory, yes. So far as I can make out it was a nominal value, some 20/30 pence, and again from memory I think £1/£1.50 was another rate which is charged.

Were there any entries in respect of photographic equipment or items in the ledger? - Yes, from the ledgers they showed transactions, both purchases and sales of photographic equipment, and also I think there was photographic developing.

They hadn't been included in the summary? - I understand they are in a separate financial profile which was completed in respect of these entries. This was only ostensibly to show the income and expenditure from the boys' clubs, whereas the photographic equipment sales were prior to the six months, and I also understand a separate summary was produced which detailed the income and expenditure over the years which would include the photographic/photographic equipment.

What activities did the boys attending the club undertake? - I think in the main they were sort of games, football and the like, and also there was an element of gymnastics.

What did the boys wear whilst undertaking these activities? - It would appear that the children wore swimming trunks that were issued by Hamilton although I don't think that has always been the case. It would appear on occasions that the children wore their PE kit. One of the things coming from the statements, we have a complaint they were made, there were certainly numerous occasions where the children were required to wear black swimming trunks.

Were parents aware of that? - To be certain, on some occasions I am not entirely certain, but he did advertise the fact that they were to bring PE kit. I think latterly there were certainly complaints which involved Hamilton having given the children black swimming trunks without their consent, so whether or not the parents were aware of this I don't really know. Certainly parental complaints were received to suggest some parents at least did not know the children were required to wear swimming trunks.

In the course of your enquiries did you ascertain whether or not it was common practice at that time to have children carrying out these activities to wear only swimming trunks? - Certainly it would appear here he preferred children to be either bare from the chest up or only wear swimming trunks which suggested.....

Were you able to speak to other witnesses who indicated whether this was common practice or whether it was uncommon? - I understand in some instances Hamilton -- in some of these exercises there were occasions where Hamilton made the children bare chested.

Did/

4.10 p.m.

Did any witnesses indicate whether it was common to have boys dressed in this way? - I seem to recollect the issue was raised possibly in Fife. From memory, one of the ladies in the Centre there provided us with information that it was not uncommon perhaps round about 1985 for male children undertaking that activity to be bare chested.

We have heard evidence of photographs being taken of the boys, and complaints arose in respect of that. Did you recover photographs of the boys? - Yes; following the incident at Dunblane a search of his house was undertaken, and I understand that a substantial number both of signed photographs, printed photographs and negatives were recovered, as well as videos.

Can I refer you to page nine of your report? You will see there in the paragraph starting halfway down it says that 445 sides, 548 photographs and 4,260 negatives were taken from the house. Were you aware of these having been recovered? - Yes.

It says at the end of that paragraph "None of these photographs contained anything of an overtly indecent nature"? - That is correct.

There is reference there to video tapes which were recovered, and we have already had evidence regarding those? - Yes.

BY LORD CULLEN: Were you able to establish in general terms the age range at which these clubs were targeted? - Yes, it was the 7-year-old to the 11-year-old; these groups.

Is that by reference to the primary class? - Yes: Primary 3, Primary 4 to Primary 6.

I think we have some material with some classes as shown on the forms advertising for people who wanted to go along? - Yes.

The advertising was not always for 4 classes, but generally for 4, 5 and 6; you say 3 as well? - It is aged 7 to 11. I am uncertain what classes that would fall into. The minimum age is 7. There/

There was an occasion in Fife where a child was too tall, and that caused some concern.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE:

Turning now to the question of Hamilton's qualifications, were you able to investigate whether he held any qualification as a PE instructor? - He did not hold any qualifications as a PE instructor. I understand he held a Grade 5 coaching certificate from the British Amateur Gymnastics Association.

What did that entitle him to teach? - I think when the witness Chillas looked into it was gymnastics, but that was with the caveat that he had to be supervised by someone of a higher standard.

You have mentioned there the witness Mrs. Chillas. I think she had reported on Hamilton's activities? - Yes.

If I refer you to page 12 of your report, in the third paragraph you refer to Mrs. Chillas and her having seen a video tape of Hamilton running a Boys' Club? - That is correct.

Over the page you set out some of her concerns? - Yes.

Was that the form on which she set out her concern or was that a summary of her concerns? - That is a summary of her concerns.

In relation to gymnastics exercises, can you read out what is stated here? - The first one was that the exercises were too strenuous for the age groups and the body build; secondly, that they were too repetitive; thirdly, that they were potentially damaging; fourthly, that there was no support for many exercises; that there was no chalk used on hands; that there was the use of an elastic device, which was considered dangerous; that there were occasions where children supported each other; and she noted that there was pain showing on the faces of some of the children who were participating.

Under the heading of "trampolining" what were her concerns? - One concern was that there were no spotters; that there were two children on the trampoline with no adults present; that Mr. Hamilton/

Hamilton had no trampoline qualification; and that there was insufficient matting surrounding the trampoline.

And finally there is some general observations? -
Yes.

Can you read these? - It was considered that everything was very regimental; it was noticed that children did not smile very often, and almost looked afraid.

Yes? - She noted again that children were participating without shirts on, and occasionally participating in swimming trunks.

Yes? - It was considered to be almost a physical training regime, with few coaching tips offered, and the children were constantly being lined up military fashion.

You referred to that being fully detailed in memorandum D/7: that is the source of that information? - Yes.

I would like to turn now to consider the boys' clubs in detail. You set them out in alphabetical order. When we are considering boys' clubs could I refer you to the chart which you prepared, No. C2? Can you explain what this is intended to indicate? - Again it was gathered from information we had got to show the currency of the clubs, which clubs were operating at which time, to try and give an over-view as to how many clubs would have been operating at the one time.

The first one you have referred to in alphabetical order is Alloa Boys' Club. What was the venue for that? - From memory it was Alloa Academy.

Can I refer you to page 16 of your report? - Yes. It was held at Alloa Academy.

The cost per boy is shown as what? - The cost shown on the let was 20p. per boy.

When did it commence? - From our information, it started on the 2nd November, 1992 and ran till June, 1993.

BY/

BY LORD CULLEN: You say 1993? - I am reading from the paragraph where the initial let was taken from. If I could refer to chart C1, which summarises the dates when each started and finished -- the report is done in a narrative style. It is difficult to establish a start date and an end date.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: I think on page 17 of your report you summarise a number of let applications, which run throughout that period, leading up to 1994? - Yes. It would appear from the summary that Alloa started in October, 1992 and continued till June, 1994.

I think you also note that this boys' club was linked with Lornshill Boys' Club, at page 17? - Yes, that is correct.

What was the average attendance at the Alloa Boys' Club? - Initially it was 12 to 18 boys, but dropped quickly to around seven boys.

Are you aware of the reason why that club terminated? - No.

LORD CULLEN: Would this be a suitable time to adjourn?

MR. LAKE: Yes, sir.

LORD CULLEN: We will adjourn now and resume at 10 o'clock tomorrow.

Adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

DEREK ROBERT PENMAN,

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: Mr. Penman, we were considering yesterday the first of the clubs and taking them in alphabetical order, and first was the Alloa Club. Perhaps it would be easier to give an over-view if we were to deal with things in chronological order referring to the charts which you will see as C(ii) in H(v). Do you have that in front of you? - Yes, sir.

Do you see on that chart the first club run in time order is described as Rover in 1981. Which club does that refer to? - That refers to the Dunblane Rover Club that Hamilton operated at the time. That was the first club that he started.

Were there any details of clubs held prior to 1981? - There was reference in documentation recovered from the Scout Association which refers to a Rover Group, I believe that was in 1978, but the first mention, the 1981 mention, was from documentation recovered from Central Region. That was the date when that club started.

Is there a Scout Association reference to Stirling Rovers prior to that date? - Yes. It would appear he also ran a club in 1978 by the same name that met in the Territorial Army premises in the industrial estate in Dunblane, and the date was 1981 reference and the let was Dunblane High School.

While a club may have existed prior to that date that is when it started having lets? - That is correct.

BY LORD CULLEN: I think what one witness referred to, he called Forth Valley Rover Scouts. Does that ring a bell with you? - It hasn't featured. I understand there was confusion or concern expressed in the late 70s and early 80s by the Scout Association, allegedly by the Scout Association, over confusion with the name "Rover Group".

I/

I understand that. The club I am thinking about was supposed to be a club held at the High School in Stirling in the late 1970s. Is that in fact the same thing as the one that is on your list?

- I don't recall any mention of that particular club. Certainly the Dunblane Rover Club, as it was termed then, and there was mention of the name of Bannockburn in documents which also had reference to Dunblane Rover Group. He was obviously using the term "Rover Group". He did have a group that he took at various schools.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: Where did you first come across mention of Dunblane Rover Group in Council records? - The earliest recollection was 1981 under reference to a memorandum which was sent by Community Education to the Director of Education which was a report on Hamilton following concern that had been raised.

Are you aware of how that club was publicised by Hamilton? - From our researches, we actually recovered two newspaper articles in respect of that club. He had been obviously using the Club Section of the Stirling Observer at the time to advertise or publicise the events he was holding.

If I could just refer you to documents in the second folder, D45 and D46. Do you have D45? - Yes.

Which newspaper is that taken from? - Taken from the Stirling Observer dated 21st April, 1982.

Is there reference to a Rover Group within the right-hand column? - Yes. It has been circled in pen. It is giving information about a meeting to take place on April 22nd at Dunblane High School, gave some information about activities, and in this case asked the parents who may be interested in sending their children to contact Hamilton, and it offered phone numbers and also the address of the shop.

Was mention of various activities included there, and did it also say that the children should bring shorts and gym shoes?

- Yes.

Looking at document 46, can you say which newspaper/newspaper this is taken from? - Again that was taken from the Stirling Observer.

Which date have you given for that? - Yes, it is 19th May, 1982.

Again it is under the heading "Rover Group"? - Yes. A small part of the Club Column of the newspaper, this gives information about a boating trip that had taken place using Hamilton's boat. He had obviously taken some boys out on an outing at Loch Lomond.

While you have the document in front of you can you refer to D42. What is that please? - It would appear to be a flyer or a note printed by Hamilton sent to parents. There has been a note appended to the top of it.

That is the one that begins, "Hamilton is a suspected"? - Yes. The document itself would appear to be the copy of a note that has been appended. I am looking at the document backing sheet, and the Production reference tells me this came from the Crime Intelligence source.

The date of that flyer is what? - The date of the flyer is 15th November, 1981.

You mentioned a memorandum in 1981 by the Regional Council expressing concern regarding the lets by Hamilton. You will be aware of what the Regional Council did about the let? - Yes. Initial concern was raised in 1981. From recollection I think they wrote at that time to take no action although in 1983 the lets were suspended in relation to Hamilton.

And what was the response to the lets being suspended? - It resulted in a complaint by Hamilton against the Council for suspension of the lets and a complaint to the Commissioner for Local Administration in Scotland which subsequently transpired found in favour of Hamilton and the authority reinstated the lets.

Did parents of children attending the club play any part? - At the initial time of the suspension letters and a petition were sent in support of Hamilton to the local authority.

In/

In that flyer, reference D42, you see it is headed "Dunblane Rover Club" with T.W. Hamilton designated as the principal leader? - Yes.

Did you obtain any information regarding other people involved in the Dunblane Rover Group? - Around that time, 1983, there was concern raised that the Dunblane Rover Group did not have a committee, and a condition by the local authority saying that they wanted to meet with the committee to reassure themselves a committee existed. As I understand it, a meeting took place around 1983 with the Education Sub-Committee where certain members were present -- I think the witness Anderson at that time was involved as Secretary of the club.

Can I refer you to D53 amongst the folder of Productions. What is that? - That is a letter sent by Hamilton to the Director of Legal and Administration Services for Central Regional Council dated 24th February.

This gives details of the committee members halfway down the first page? - It does.

Were you able to verify whether in fact those peoples were members of the committee? - People were spoken to, and although some of them admitted some slight involvement with him some people said they were in fact not members of the committee.

Did any of them confirm that they had sat on the committee? - Yes. Initially the witness Anderson said that she had for a short time been involved as the Secretary, and from recollection I think the witness MacFarlane also said that she for a short time was involved with the boys' clubs.

What is the name of the club given on the heading of that letter? - The type on the letter is "Dunblane Boys' Club".

The final one which I referred you to is headed "Dunblane Rover Group"? - Yes.

Are you able to tell if that is a new club or in any way related to the previous one? - It is difficult to tell when clubs were operating. There is suggestion Dunblane Boys' Club came about as a result/result of Hamilton agreeing to drop the name "Rover" from the title. I think in view of the concerns that had been expressed by the local authority earlier that there was some confusion with the Scout Group, I think the name "Rover" was dropped from the title.

Did you find any reference to Dunblane Rover Group after reference commenced to Dunblane Boys' Club? - I can't recall from memory.

Can I refer you back to your chart, C2. The first item there is a Rover Group which is shown as running from 1981 to 1982 and then nothing thereafter. In the third line there is reference to Dunblane which picks up in 1983 and runs until 1996. Are these the two clubs you have just been referring to? - Yes. I would say it is one and the same club, and where the Rover Club would be changed to Dunblane Boys' Club it would continue and I would imagine it would be the same club. It would be the same club meeting in the same premises and the name was changed.

BY LORD CULLEN: Can I ask you one question in connection with that: would you look at the fact sheet. You have shown the Rover Group as ending in October, 1983 but you show the boys' club as beginning in October, 1985 and there was a two year gap. Now, is that for a particular reason? - Looking at this and looking at the chart I suspect what happened, there has been mention of Dunblane Boys' Club in correspondence probably around 1983, and again from memory, the lets were terminated and the correspondence continued. Although the clubs were not actually in operation he still corresponded back and forward with the Region, and I think what from memory has happened there is he changed the name of the club, he appeared still to have the club although the club was not meeting because the lets were suspended, and when these lets were eventually reinstated.....

So the dates you have shown in this C1H, they are really meant to denote periods of non-activity? - Yes, sir.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: So when did the Dunblane Boys' Club resume? - From the chart it is shown as October, 1985 until March, 1986.

Are/

Are you aware why it resumed in 1985 after the gap?
- I understand that it resumed as a result of the lets being reinstated by Central Regional Council to Hamilton after the finding of maladministration by the Commissioner of Local Administration in Scotland.

Were/

10.20 a.m.

Were you able to uncover whether further lets were granted by the Council to permit the Dunblane Boys Club to conduct its activities? - I understand that other lets are through research, were recovered which showed activity at the club.

What premiss was this club held at? - It was held at Dunblane High School.

Was it ever transferred to any other premises? - Not to my knowledge.

Were you able to uncover any details of insurance for the club? - I was aware there were insurance policies held with the General Accident Group at some period during these boys clubs.

I refer you to document D55 in the folder? - Yes. This is in fact an insurance document from General Accident in relation to the insurance policy that was held by the Dunblane Boys Club per Thomas Hamilton. It expired in December, 1988, being effective from December, 1987.

Do you see what the premium payable in respect of that policy was? - The premium payable would seem to be £185.50.

Returning to the second page of that policy, which detailed the cover, do you see at the foot of the typewritten text a heading "Special Endorsement 1"? - Yes. That is a clause which states that "The indemnity granted by this policy does not apply in respect of injury to participants in ball games".

You have said that was one of the activities which it was anticipated Hamilton would be carrying out in his boys club? - Indeed, that is correct.

Turning through the pages, on the fifth page of that do you see what is described as a Certificate of Employers Liability Insurance? - Yes, sir.

What period is that in respect of? - It runs from the 5th December, 1985 until the 4th December, /

December, 1986.

Again looking a further two pages forward from that, is there again a special condition tagged on to that? - Yes. Again this is an exclusion from the insurance. It states "The indemnity granted by this Policy does not apply in respect of injury to participants in ball games and/or gymnastics". Again these were activities undertaken by Hamilton at the club.

Were you able to find any details of insurance for boys clubs held by Hamilton for years other than those I have mentioned? - Again from the correspondence recovered this to my knowledge is the only insurance details recovered.

You referred earlier to the initial publicity for the Rover Group being by way of newspaper articles. By what other means did Hamilton publicise these clubs? - He tended to produce "flyers" which were distributed round the local primary schools, given to head teachers and asking them to distribute them. It is also known that he on occasion posted "flyers" through the doors of dwellinghouses in the local area.

Could I refer you to document D56, please? - Yes.

I think that is a letter dated 14th October, 1991 from Hamilton, designated Group Chairman, to the Chief Executive of Central Regional Council? - That is correct.

Looking at the first paragraph, what is Hamilton requesting? - He is making a request for the Committee to grant permission for leaflets and posters for children to be distributed within the schools, advertising his clubs.

What is the response to that request? - I seem to recollect we recovered a draft response that declined this request.

Did Hamilton have any assistance running Dunblane Boys Club? - It is shown that the witness Boal had given him some assistance in running the club, and it also says here that for a period the witness Smith was also an assistant.

Without/

Without mentioning the names of any person, were any complaints received in respect of the activities of the Dunblane Boys Club? - Yes; in 1994 a letter of complaint was received by the Rector of Dunblane High School concerning a parent who had complained about Hamilton instructing their children to change into swimming briefs during the club, and also to photograph these children.

If I could refer you to document D57A, do you see that is a memorandum from Detective Sergeant Moffat to Detective Superintendent Ogg regarding that complaint? - Yes, that is correct.

Was the club closed down following that complaint?
- No, it appears the club was allowed to continue.

Was the club still continuing in March of this year?
- Yes, it was.

BY LORD CULLEN: Which club are we talking about in 1994? - This was the Dunblane Boys Club that ran from Dunblane High School.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE:
Returning to your chart C2, between the Rover Club specified there in Dunblane you have made reference to the Bannockburn Club, which I think you have said started in 1983? - Yes, this is shown on chart C1 as commencing around May, 1983, and shown still to be in existence at March, 1996.

I think that is dealt with at page 19 of the report we are referring to? - Yes.

When did you say that club commenced? - It is an estimated date of 27th May, 1983. This relates to the first mention of the club in documentation we recovered as a result of our inquiry.

Was that documentation which the club is mentioned? - It was in the form of a letter from Hamilton to parents, albeit written on Dunblane Rover Group headed paper.

If I could refer you to that letter, which I think is D15 -- have you got that? - Yes. This/

This is a letter dated 27th May, 1983. It is a letter on Dunblane Rover Group headed paper, with printed above it and slightly obliterated "Bannockburn Rover Group", and it shows Hamilton as the principal leader.

Yes? - It is a letter to parents, stating that Mr. Adamson has been giving classroom talks in an effort to discourage pupils from attending the group.

Who was Mr. Adamson? - He was the headmaster of St. Ninians Primary School at that time.

Are you aware what sort of comments Mr. Adamson had been making? - I think it was alleged Hamilton was not a responsible leader, and he was concerned about the organisation of the club and also about the number of accidents at the club.

Was the Bannockburn Rovers Group affected by the action of the Regional Council in 1983? - Yes; effectively the Regional Council terminated all lets held by Hamilton, which I understand were the ones in Dunblane High School and in Bannockburn High School.

Did the Bannockburn Rover Group resume at all after the ban had been lifted on the lets? - We were unable to find any mention of the club from the period of the termination of the let up until or round about 1992.

What did you find in 1992? - There was a let form which showed that Hamilton had applied for and had been granted a let of Bannockburn High School from the 8th September, 1992.

If I could refer you to document D18 within the folder.....? - Yes.

Is that the application you are referring to? - It is, yes.

You see there heading 4 is details of the approximate number of persons who will attend per night? - Yes. It is shown as 20 primary school boys and two leaders.

And/

And that was the first mention you could find of the Bannockburn Group after the lets had been cancelled? - That is correct.

So that on chart C2 there was little evidence of any Bannockburn Club between the periods 1983 and 1992, for nine years? - Yes.

Were any complaints -- without mentioning any names -- made regarding the Bannockburn Group? - Yes; in December of 1994 a parental complaint was received, again in respect of Hamilton taking photographs of the boys.

Are you aware of any action being taken in respect of the group following that complaint? - The complaint had been referred to the Family Unit, and had been investigated by Detective Sergeant Moffat, as far as I am aware. From memory, the lets were not terminated.

Was that club still running in March of this year? - Yes, it was.

Did Hamilton have any assistance in running that club? - I understand he was sometimes assisted by the witness Boal.

The next clubs referred to on your chart are Lynburn and Dunfermline. We can see from the chart that the Dunfermline club takes up exactly when the Lynburn Club left off. Is there any link between the clubs? - This is an example where he started off using one name for the club. He started with the Lynburn Gymnastics Club. That club was held at the Woodmill Centre. He also operated a club in Dunfermline, which shared the same name. There is some confusion between the Lynburn Gymnastics Club, the Lynburn Sports Club and the Dunfermline Sports Club: it appears they are all exactly the same.

These are different names for the one club? - Yes. The names vary considerably.

If I could refer you to the section of your report dealing with the Lynburn Gymnastics Club, which is at page 52, when did the Lynburn Club start? - From our records it was the 22nd February, 1985.

On/

On what basis is it said that the class started on that date? - I understand we received information from a letter we recovered in which Hamilton states the club was officially formed on that date for a trial period of 20 weeks.

If I could refer you to a letter, D88, which is written in response to a matter to which we will return, do you see that is a letter dated 11th September, 1985 addressed to the Scottish Amateur Gymnastics Association, and is written by Hamilton? - Yes.

In the first paragraph of that he gives the start-up date for the club? - Yes, that is correct: that is the 22nd February.

What is the title of the club at that time? - He refers to it as the Lynburn Gymnastics Club.

Were you aware of any complaints being made regarding that club? - Yes. Our earliest recollection shows that on the 3rd September, 1985 a letter was sent from the Social, Legal & Welfare Rights Services, which is a Legal Advice Centre in Dunfermline, where a parent had made a complaint in respect of Hamilton alleging negligence and cruelty at one of the camps that had been operated by him.

Do you recall the nature of the complaint? - Yes; it was alleged the children had been attending the 1985 summer camp and had been left unsupervised for long periods of time, had only been given a very small amount of food to eat and had been denied warm clothing by Hamilton.

If I could ask you to look at D89.....? - Yes, that is a letter we had recovered, dated 3rd September, from the Rights Office in Dunfermline.

Is that the complaint you were just referred to? - Yes.

What action was taken in respect of the club following that complaint? - I understand in this instance it was referred to Fife Regional Council and was investigated by the witness Baxter, who was employed in the Community Education Department: /

Department: but the matter does not appear to have been reported to the police.

You see in that letter of complaint it is addressed to Mr. Baxter, and that is at Woodmill High Schyool? - Yes.

Was that the venue from which the club was conducted? - Yes.

Was it the only venue from which the club was conducted? - No, I understand they also met at the Dunfermline Centre. There were two venues in Dunfermline. I am sorry, it was Queen Anne High School was the other venue.

Was that two different clubs or the same club meeting at two different places? - It is the same club. With Hamilton, he tended to form them in the same name, and they met in different venues.

The use of the Queen Anne High School comes about at the same time as the use of the Woodmill Centre? - I am trying to find out from the notes I have.

Can/

10.40 a.m.

Can I refer you to a document, just to be clear about the venues used, to document D90 in HV. I think the first part of that is a compliments slip. What is attached to the compliments slip? - It is a letter from Thomas Hamilton.

What date is that? - Dated the 16th September, 1985.

Who is it addressed to? - Addressed to the Dunfermline Centre.

I think in the first paragraph we see some reference to Lynburn Gymnastics Club being informally formed on the 22nd of February 1985 for a trial period of 20 weeks, do you have that? - Yes, I do.

It says that the club catered for a total of 107 boys between the Woodmill Centre on Fridays and the Dunfermline Centre on Mondays? - Yes, that is correct.

It seems at that time that the club was split between the Woodmill and Dunfermline Centre without any reference to Queen Anne High School? - That is correct, from my recollection a let was held by Hamilton at Queen Anne High School but whether Queen Anne High School and Dunfermline Centre are one and the same I am not entirely certain.

I would refer you to document D64, what is that? - It is an application for a school let that had been made in the name of Dunfermline Boys Sports Club and signed by Thomas Hamilton.

What is the name of the premises which is sought to be let? - It is seeking to let Queen Anne High School.

That is a distinct reference to Queen Anne High School as opposed to the Dunfermline Centre? - Yes.

What was the period he was seeking the let? - Every Monday from August 1991 to June 1992.

Did you find any evidence that the club had/had been held in Queen Anne High School prior to that date? - No, I could only go on again the documentation that had been recovered from various sources and from Hamilton's own records.

Turning to consider that part of the club that was being held at the Dunfermline Centre can I refer you to document D92 in the folder? - Yes.

Do you see that is a letter from Mr. Baxter to Mr. Somerville, the Senior Assistant of Recreational Education at Fife Regional Council and the letter is dated the 20th of January, 1986? - That is correct.

Do you see in the middle of the paragraph of that letter it states "It appears that the numbers taking part have dropped substantially, the maximum is now 25 and the class at Dunfermline Centre appears to have folded"? - Yes, I see that.

So if the club originally started at two venues, the Woodmill Centre and the Dunfermline Centre, it seems that the Dunfermline Centre dropped out for a while and a let was taken in Queen Anne High School? - Yes, that would appear to be the case.

Did Hamilton have any assistance running these two clubs, the Lynburn and Dunfermline? - I understand for a period of time he employed a witness Armstrong who was a physical education teacher.

And when was that person engaged to assist the club? - From the letters it would appear to be from 1988; she left after a year when she became uncomfortable with the manner in which Hamilton conducted his club.

Were there any further complaints received in respect of the Lynburn Gymnastics Club or the Dunfermline Boys' Club? - If you bear with me I think.....

Page 39 of your report is the section for Dunfermline? - Thank you -- at the Dunfermline Club there were various items of correspondence recovered which relates to it; there was correspondence in 1990 which concerned, in this case, it was a letter sent/sent by a parent who had mentioned the financial costs incurred in sending the child to the club.

Were the complaints in respect of how Hamilton treated some of the children? - In 1990 there was an instance where Hamilton had failed to allow a boy access to the club on the basis of him being physically too big which had resulted in a letter of complaint being sent to Fife Regional Council.

Was any action taken following upon this complaint?
- The complaint was investigated by the witness Somerville and I think correspondence was exchanged between Hamilton and Fife Regional Council concerning the Equal Opportunities Policy of the Council and asking him to review his own policies in the light of this.

Was the club stopped at that time? - No, the club was still permitted to continue.

Was the club still continuing in March of this year? - No, in June 1992 following an incident at the Dunblane High School a residential camp was being held by Hamilton on that occasion and officers from Central Scotland Police came across three young boys who had apparently walked out of the residential camp dressed in pyjamas and had phoned their parents asking to be returned home. When the information was conveyed to Fife Regional Council involving Fife Constabulary and also the Reporter to the Children's Panel at Fife as a consequence the lets held by Hamilton which, I understand at that time, were Woodmill and Queen Anne were terminated.

BY LORD CULLEN: Can I ask you to look at your report page 52, the top of that page you have got certain dates for commencement and ending in the case of the Lynburn Gymnastics Club; is that ending date correct? - No, that is clearly an error.

It looks as if it might be 1986 rather than 1996? - That is correct, it will be effectively the same date as the termination of the Dunfermline club.

Well, did one stop and the other followed? - Again this is difficult to say -- the last mention perhaps is February 1986, that would be the/

the last mention.

So that really means 1986 rather than 1996? - Yes.

Armstrong, was that a lady? - Yes.

She was helping, in fact, the Dunfermline Boys' Club rather than Lynburn? - Yes.

Because she is in 1988? - Yes.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: Moving on in date order the next club is held in Falkirk and I think reference to that starts on page 42 of your report? - Yes.

At what venues were the Falkirk club held? - It shows here that it was held at both Graham High School and for a period of time Falkirk High School.

If I refer you to document D58? - Yes.

Can you say what this is? - That is a letter that has been typed sent by Hamilton and headed "Falkirk Boys' Sports Club"; it is dated the 21st of May, 1987 and it has been sent to Mr. Mike Watson who was a Youth and Community Officer at Central Regional Council.

Do you see in the first paragraph there he refers to having the use of both Falkirk High School gymnasium on Wednesday evenings and Graham High School gymnasium and games hall on Monday evenings? - Yes.

"Both up to the 1987 summer holidays for a trial period"? - Yes.

Was the club conducted at both these premises? - It would appear from the contents of this letter that he did use both.

I think in your report at page 42 you indicate that these clubs were rather intermittent rather than continuous? - Yes, it is shown here as a period of 1986 to 1988 for the Graham High School and then again the Graham High School from 1991 to 1994 and Falkirk High School there is shown as September/

September 1995 to March, 1996.

So on the chart where it says no information in respect of Falkirk in fact there was no club being held there at all? - There was no evidence of any club being held.

Why was no club held during that period, are you aware? - I understand that the let held by Hamilton was terminated in respect of this in favour of an activity held by Central Regional Council.

Had there been a complaint prior to that let being cancelled? - There was a letter of complaint received on the 20th of June in respect of a child who had suffered a broken wrist while being at the boys' club where it was alleged that Hamilton had offered no first-aid and considered the wrist to be badly bruised and on the 29th of August 1988 the Council contacted Hamilton to advise him that the let had been cancelled in favour of the Education Department.

What is the next reference to the club being conducted in 1992? - In July 1992 it would appear that Hamilton distributed literature to a primary school in the Falkirk area with a view to promoting his club at Graham High School.

Is there any evidence at all of the club being run at Falkirk for the period 1988 to 1992? - No, again I am relying on various sources to try and piece together but there would be no mention made of the clubs at that time.

Did Hamilton have any assistance with the running of the Falkirk clubs? - I understand that the witness Jones who was actually a parent who had taken his children along to the club helped Hamilton out and I understand latterly he took over the operation of the club which I think continued up until March, 1996.

I think the next club you refer to on your chart is that held at Linlithgow and from the chart it appears to have had quite a sort duration? - That is correct, it appears to have operated from April, 1988 until June, 1989 and was held at Linlithgow Academy.

I/

I think there is reference to that at page 47 of your report? - Yes.

What evidence did you have that the club started in 1988? - I understand that we recovered an application for the use of the premises which had been made by Hamilton to Lothian Regional Council.

If I could refer you to D75? - Yes.

Is that the application you refer to? - Yes, it is and attached to the application is a registration for the youth group which was made by Hamilton in respect of Linlithgow Boys' Sports Club.

I think we have heard evidence in respect of this club that there was or there were complaints made in May 1989 and that subsequently the let was cancelled following an event in which Hamilton had various substances poured over him, were you aware of that? - Yes, it involved a witness Haggart regarding a complaint that had been made regarding Hamilton and the previous summer camp which had come to the attention of Lothian Regional Council and had been publicised, as a result the let held by Hamilton had been terminated.

BY LORD CULLEN: There were complaints about the club itself? - Yes, there was also a complaint which had been received from a parent via the local MP.

I think I am only concerned with the nature of the complaint? - It was reported that Hamilton took children to do exercises without their tops on and to keep it a secret from their parents.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: I think that the next club referred to in your chart is simply under the name of Alva; is that a reference to a club known as Menstrie, Alva and Tillicoultry Boys' Club? - Yes.

I think that is referred to in page 56 of your report? - Yes.

What was the venue for that club? - It was Alva Academy.

When did Hamilton first apply for a let at/at these premises? - The let appeared to be from the 15th of March, 1989, that was the first application.

If I could refer to D95? - Yes, it is a copy of the let application to Alva Academy, this time the application had been made in the name of the Boys' Sports Group Committee seeking a let which was granted on the 15th of March, 1989.

You referred there to a committee; did you discover any evidence there was, in fact, an entity such as the Boys' Sports Club Group Committee? - No, again this was an example where Mr. Hamilton had over-stated the entity of the Boys' Sports Group Club Committee; from research it would appear that this was done at a time when Local Authorities were looking for evidence of a committee and it would appear that there was no committee but I think it was an attempt by him to bring the various groups under the one umbrella of the Boys' Sports Club Group Committee.

Before/

11.00 a.m.

Before continuing on with the Alva file, can I refer you to documents starting at D30. What is that? - That is a letter dated 19th January, 1989. It appears to be a standard letter entitled "Parents Supporters" and it is a letter from Hamilton advertising his Boys' Sports Club Group Committee. It would appear that he is seeking assistance on his committee.

If you look at D31 that appears to be a statement of account for the committee in respect of the period from 1st August, 1990 to 31st July, 1991? - That is correct.

D32, a statement of account from 1st August, 1991 to 31st July, 1992? - Yes.

D33, a statement of account again in the name of the committee for the year following on from that? - That is correct.

Let us look at D34 please. You see the first page of that is a memorandum to the Director of Education. Could you look at the document attached to that? - Yes.

What does that appear to be? - It appears to be a Minute of an Annual General Meeting that had been held by Hamilton for his Boys' Sports Club Group Committee and the Minute also details persons who were present.

When does it say the meeting was supposed to have taken place? - The meeting was alleged to have taken place on Sunday 8th August, 1991.

The persons Minuted as having attended were Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Brown, Mrs. Watt, Mr. McDonald, Mr. McDonald again, Mr. Gillespie, Mr. Robertson and Mr. Smith? - That is correct.

Have you spoken to any of these people? - I understand the enquiry was that Mr. Hamilton obviously is himself, Mrs. A. Watt is Hamilton's natural mother and denied any involvement with the boys' club. I understand that people were traced and denied having ever been to a meeting. Some people couldn't be traced and I understand one person is deceased.

Have/

Have you spoken to anybody who said they were at the committee? - From recollection I understand the Minutes would appear to be a fabrication -- no person had been at the meeting.

Was that committee entirely different from the one referred to in 1983 where in fact persons did recall having formed a committee in respect of the Dunblane Club? - The one in August, 1983, persons actually attended at the Regional Council premises and had a meeting with Councillors and were Minuted as having been present.

Turn to the application for premises at Alva in D94. You see that Hamilton makes reference to his qualifications? - Yes. He said he holds a BAGA Grade 5, which is the British Amateur Gymnastic Association qualification.

How much does he state he is going to be charging persons who attend this club? - He states he will be charging 30p.

I think when we considered the finances of the club yesterday it was apparent Hamilton had been charging on the whole either £1 or £2 per person to attend? - It had been fairly typical -- in the application it says a nominal charge but in reality the money was more likely to be £1.

Any idea why that.....? - I understand the Region have guidelines which relate to the cost involved for participants and when they reach a certain level that makes it a commercial venture rather than voluntary which would affect the payments he would have to make for the premises.

The date for the commencement of the let again, what is that? - 15th March, 1989.

How did Hamilton publicise that club? - In March, 1989 Hamilton wrote to the Director of Education seeking permission to distribute information round the primary schools in the area.

Was he granted permission? - No, he wasn't.

I refer you to document D97? - This is a letter which has been sent to Hamilton by an Assistant/

Assistant Director of Education dated 21st March, 1989. He states it is not the policy of the Council to allow head teachers to distribute publicity material on behalf of private individuals.

Were any complaints made or received in respect of the Menstrie, Alva and Tillicoultry clubs? - Yes. We learned in March, 1995 a member of the Alva Primary School Parent/Teacher Association was informed by two or three unidentified parents they had concerns about Hamilton's boys' club. These concerns related to lack of supervision at the club by Hamilton.

What action was taken in respect of those complaints?
- This witness states that she informed the police at Tillicoultry regarding her concerns. However, from our own researches after the incident we were unable to establish any record of this complaint having been made and the identify of any officer whom she had spoken to.

Presumably there is no reference to any action having been taken by the police? - That is correct.

When did the club cease? - The club would appear to have ceased in March, 1995.

Is there any evidence why the club ceased? - No. I don't appear to have any further information on that boys' club.

Would that time coincide with the date you have given for the complaints that were investigated regarding the club? - Yes. It is probably the last reference that we had.

I think in your report you refer to assistance having been given to this club by Ian Boal? - That is correct. That is shown in the report.

I think in fact we heard from him yesterday he had assisted at certain other clubs but not this particular one. Is it possible this is an error in including him in relation to this club? - It is possible. The methodology adopted was to look at the correspondence we had and also the statements that had been obtained, and I am not certain/certain but it is possible Mr. Boal may have made reference to this club in his statement and that was taken as being an involvement in this club, but it is likely there has been a mistake.

I think in Mr. Boal's statement he said he was informed by Hamilton that he ran a club at Alva High School? - If that is the case there has perhaps been a misinterpretation in the report.

The next club we have reference to is Stirling Boys' Club. On the chart you show it starting in April, 1989? - That is correct.

When did it start? - Shown as having started in May, 1989 at Wallace High School.

Has that any connection with the Stirling Club? - There is also reference to the same club having met at Stirling High School, which commenced in June, 1991.

Dealing with the one held at the Wallace High School, how was that club publicised? - It would seem to be advertised by Hamilton by means of flyers which he distributed locally.

I refer you to D98? - Yes. That is the flyer that was distributed, and there is an enrollment form.

How long was the club held at Wallace High School last? - It would appear to have run until he applied to renew the lease which was on 14th September, 1992, and on that occasion the Regional Council declined the renewal on the basis that the premises had become fully booked.

In relation to the club held at Stirling High School, when did it start? - Again from our research it would appear to have commenced on 16th June, 1991 when Hamilton applied for and was granted a let.

Have you any indication of when that club ceased to run? - It has been shown as an estimated date, June, 1993.

Why was that estimated on that date? - I am just checking the summary to see if there is any reference/reference to it. I don't see it in the summary. It may be because the last reference we have to the club is a let or lets from the summer of 1992 to summer of 1993. That date may just be the last record we have of lets which is why the club was considered not to have met after that time.

You have no evidence to indicate it existed rather than evidence to indicate it terminated? - Again we were relying on documentation we recovered, yes.

The next two are Alloa and Lornshill. I think those clubs were run attached to one another? - Yes, it would appear they were.

We heard some details about the Alloa club yesterday. the details regardig the Lornshill Club were given at page 50 of your report. Again the date from the club started is? - It is shown as having commenced on 28th October, 1992.

Although not exactly the same the Alloa Boys' Club also commenced in October, 1992? - Yes.

I think there is reference within document D87 to the club. Could you refer to that? - Yes, this is a letter dated 13th October, 1993 again headed on Boys' Sports Club Group Committee letter-heading. It would appear to be a letter that was sent, distributed to parents in the Fishcross area, which was an area of Alva, and it is advertising clubs which were formed recently according to the letter meeting at Lornshill and also at Alloa.

In fact it refers to them being one new club meeting in Lornshill on a Monday evening and Alloa Academy on a Saturday morning? - That is correct.

The tone within the second paragraph of that letter seems to be referring to complaints or comments that had been made by a mother of a child living in the Fishcross area? - That is correct.

Seeking to refute these complaints? - Yes.

In your chart this is shown as a club which terminated in May, 1994. In the summary it is indicated/indicated probably as having been an estimate? - Again I think this is the phase where the last information we were able to recover would have been from the lease which was terminated around that time.

There is nothing definite to indicate it did terminate on that date and there is no evidence to indicate it continued? - That is correct.

On the chart you show another club being held in the same period as Alloa and Lornshill and this is one held at Denny. When did that club start? - Again the date recorded as having commenced was 28th September, 1992.

Where was that held? - This was held at Denny High School.

If I refer you to D37 amongst your Productions? - Yes, this is a copy of a let application which was made by Hamilton in the name of the Boys' Sports Club Group Committee for the premises at Denny High School, and the date on the lease was 2nd October, 1992 until the end of June, 1993.

There is reference there to persons attending being 20 children and two adults? - Yes.

The charge per week as being 20p? - Correct.

Were there complaints made in respect of this club? - Yes. In November, 1992, not long after the club had commenced, a number of parents had cause to write to Hamilton, to Denny High School Board, and also Central Regional Council, complaining about the conduct and the running of the boys' clubs.

I think we have already heard some evidence regarding these complaints. Did these result in the lets being terminated? - Not that I can recollect. I think the let was allowed to continue. Enquiries were made within the Regional Council.

In fact, if you refer to document D38? - Yes, /

Yes, this is a further application for the let of educational premises made by Hamilton for Denny High School which on this occasion was lodged from 9/1/93 until the end of June, 1993.

I refer you to a document which is D39. What is that?

- It is again a letter that has been typed on Boys' Sports Club Group Committee notepaper by Hamilton dated 8th February, 1983, headed "Interim Progress Report for Boys' Sports Club".

Who is it addressed to? - Addressed just to "Dear Parent". It would appear to be a sort of standard letter that had been introduced.

You see under the heading "Membership" it gives the total attendance for the club? - Yes. it says the total number enrolled according to this record is 74 boys.

Is there an average attendance on a Friday? - It shows over 20 boys.

Is there an average attendance for the Saturday morning? - It shows only eight boys.

Is there under the heading "Complaints" on page 2, what does Hamilton say under that heading? - He says "In respect of the management of the club there were no complaints".

Was that borne out by the evidence? - Again looking at the dates of this, complaints had been received in November, 1992 from parents addressed to the School Board.

Is there under the next heading "Discipline", he gives a list of actions taken in respect of boys attending the club? - Yes, that is correct, he lists certain actions taken and the particular boys who received these actions.

On/

11.20 a.m.

On the final page of that do you see a heading halfway down "Problems with Parents"? - Yes.

Which seems to give certain views justifying his position in relation to certain complaints? - Yes. There were two problems he recorded. On one occasion there was a different of opinion with a parent who was opposed in principle to competitive sports and games. The second reason was that the parent couldn't accept or did not want to accept that their son was capable of misbehaving.

Could I refer you to document D40? - Yes.

What is that? - That is a letter on Boys Sports Club headed paper, dated 16th February, 1993.

That is just eight days after the previous document we have been referring to? - Yes. He appears to be making some adjustment in respect of the Denny Boys' Sports Club, which he claims were made in favour of the parents.

In paragraph 1 he talks about the weekly fee now being up to £1.50? - That is correct.

That would accord with what you said in respect of the charges to the boys being increased considerably above the amount stated in the application forms? - That is correct.

Were further complaints received regarding the club after this particular date? - Yes. In May of 1993 a parental complaint was received by the Central Scotland Police Family Unit which again concerned Hamilton taking photographs of a boy in a locked gymnasium when he was wearing swimming trunks.

What action was taken following that complaint? - That complaint was investigated by Detective Constable Taylor. Certainly it was reported to the Procurator Fiscal.

When did that club cease its operation? - The/

The date we have is the 17th January, 1994.

On what basis did you come to that date? - That was from a letter which Hamilton had written to Detective Chief Constable McMurdo, in which he was outlining complaints against the police and members of the community, which he said had resulted in withdrawal of support for the Denny Boys Club, and stated that he was closing the boys club from effect from 15th January, 1994.

LORD CULLEN: We will now take a short break for 10 minutes.

After a short adjournment:

LORD CULLEN: Mr. Lake, can we now resume our quest?

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: I think we were about to move on to Balfron, which on your chart is given as being a club of very short duration. This was referred to in your report at page 17. I see it states the venue was Balfron High School and that the club commenced on 6th April, 1993 and ended shortly afterwards, on 30th June, 1993; is that correct? - That is correct.

And the basis for the determination of that period has been taken from the document D12 within the bundle? - Yes, that is correct. That is an application for let submitted by Hamilton.

And those dates are the dates for which the let is sought, in the table in the centre? - Yes. 20th April to 30th June, 1993.

On the form do we see some of the familiar details, qualifications, number of people attending and the charge to be made? - Yes, that is correct.

Could I refer you to document D14? What is that?
- This is a letter from the Chief Executive of Central Regional Council addressed to Thomas Hamilton.

Yes? - Hamilton had posted "flyers" advertising/advertising this new club and had named certain individuals as being a contact for him. These included the Chief Executive of the Region, and he was asking him to withdraw this reference.

Is D13 the "flyer" you are referring to? - That is correct. It also quotes Mr. Michael Forsyth, MP, and Inspector Mike Mill at Dunblane Police Office and other members of the Regional Council.

Is that form dated 19th April, 1993? - That is correct.

Did both the Chief Executive and Mr. Michael Forsyth object to the use of their name on this flyer? - Yes, that is correct; as did Central Scotland Police.

I think you note on pages 18 and 19 that the headmaster of Balforn High School, Mr. Fleming, became aware of concerns regarding Hamilton? - Yes, that is correct. He was made aware of concerns about Hamilton that were circulating, and he effectively ensured that the premises were fully booked thereafter, which precluded Thomas Hamilton and his boys club.

So by that method he was able to stop the club continuing any further in Balforn? - Yes.

The next one, which is also one of short duration, I think, is Callander Boys Club. You report on that starts at page 27? - That is correct. It shows the club as having met at McLaren High School in Callander, commencing 31st March, 1995 and ending 21st April, 1995. Those dates were obtained from a let application that had been submitted by Hamilton. That was the only documentary evidence we had, although we received evidence from the janitor that showed the club only ran for three weeks, and was suspended after the third week when only one boy turned up.

The final club is the one held at Bishopbriggs? - Yes.

That is referred to at page 23? - That is correct.

I/

I see there that the venue there was Thomas Muir High School? - Yes.

And over the page you note that subsequently there were applications made for premises other than merely Thomas Muir High School; is that correct? - Yes, we recovered documentation which showed an application for Kirkintilloch High School.

This is another example of the same club being held at two different venues? - Yes.

When did the Bishopbriggs Boys Club commence?
- The club was first advertised by leaflets in September, 1995: the date we have here is of it having commenced on the 26th July, 1995.

If I could refer you to D21 in the folder? - Yes. This is effectively an application for the let of Kirkintilloch High School, which was for the boys sports club group committee.

And that has got a date in July, 1995? - Yes; 26th July, 1995, signed by Hamilton.

And it gives the commencing date as being the end of August, 1995 on that form? - Yes, and ending in June, 1996.

In/

11.50 a.m.

In the summary contained on page 23 of your report you actually state that the commencement date is the end of August, 1995? - Yes.

I think you note at the foot of page 23 and here you will see is the usual pattern of attendance, it starts with 70 children being in attendance and fell back to 16 boys? - Yes, that would be fairly typical.

Above that you note that Ian Boal assisted Hamilton in running this particular club? - Yes.

At the foot of page 25 of your report you refer to complaints having been made and you see that records a mother of a boy who had attended the club saying that her son had been shown a gun and had been offered a certificate 18 video? - Yes, that is correct, a complaint had been made by a parent at Bishopbriggs Primary School and the headmistress there.

I think we have heard while proceedings were started in respect of this complaint nothing had been concluded by March of this year? - Yes.

Were these all the clubs you were able to ascertain in respect of Hamilton's operations? - Yes, but again we were relying on documentation that we had recovered from various sources and also witness statements.

Is it correct to say over and above the boys' clubs there were various summer camps and training courses run by Hamilton? - Yes, he appeared to have a series of residential camps held in the Loch Lomond area where the boys at his boys' clubs attended and latterly residential training courses held at Dunblane High School.

Look at page 59 of your report; I think you note a camp in the summer of 1985; were you able to discover any details of the camps prior to that date? - No, not from the records recovered.

BY LORD CULLEN: We have heard some evidence suggesting that they were highly numerous for/for that year but can you confirm that at all? - I think there is witness statements making reference to outings, Press coverage going back to the early 80s, 1978 making reference to taking children to Loch Lomond and boating outings which would be the first formal mention of summer camps we have recovered.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: You were able to find that summer camp had taken place in 1985? - Yes, there was a letter that a complaint had been made by the Rights Office in Dunfermline, a complaint had been made by a parent protesting about the treatment that Hamilton had given to a child at the camp there.

Is it possible that camps had been taking place in earlier years but there was no record of them because there was no complaint? - Yes.

That would fit with the newspaper article in regard to the Dunblane Rover Group regarding outings and boating outings to Loch Lomond? - Yes.

I think we have heard already about a complaint made in respect of the 1985 camp; did you have any details of a summer camp being held in 1986? - No, again we recovered no correspondence about an 1986 camp.

You don't know whether or not a camp took place in that year? - Apparently one did but no correspondence was recovered.

Were you able to discover whether there had been anything in 1987? - Yes, we recovered documentation which was a circular to head teachers from Hamilton advertising the 1988 summer camp and makes reference to the success of the 1987 summer camp.

Have you been able to discover whether there were any complaints in respect of the 1987 camp? - It would appear from the information we have in the references from these advertisements for the 1988 camp there was no reference to any complaints.

We have heard quite a bit of evidence about the 1988 camp and complaints that existed in respect/respect of that; do you see on page 61 of your report you note that this was held at Inchmoan Island in Loch Lomond, do you see that?

- Yes.

In the third paragraph, information to parents about the camp, it would be restricted to 12 boys supervised by three adults, do you see that? - Yes.

The cost of the camp is given there in the fifth paragraph as being £40 deposit and a further £85 payment? - Yes.

That was for a two week camp? - Yes.

What was the cost for a one week camp? - £70.

The next paragraph refers to the safety equipment, do you see that? - "Hamilton stated that transport to the island would be by boat and there was a British Standard lifejacket provided for each boy for the said boat journey".

We have heard in some detail about complaints that were made by parents about that camp and investigations that were carried out by Constables Gunn and Duncan and the follow on from that in terms of police investigations and complaints regarding the police made by Hamilton. Were you able to recover any information regarding the 1989 camp? - Yes, we recovered correspondence from Hamilton to the witness Scott who, I understand, is the owner of Inchmoan Island seeking permission for his camp.

Was he granted permission? - No, it would appear that the witness Scott had received information, he received a complaint that people objected to Hamilton holding the camp and he decided there wouldn't be any camp.

Did Hamilton hold a camp in 1989? - Yes, it would appear that the camp moved to Milarrochy Bay in Loch Lomond.

I think you note at the end of that section of the report there were no incidents reported regarding the 1989 camp? - That is correct.

I/

I think under the heading "1990 summer camp" you note that very little is known about that camp other than one complaint regarding a boy who developed a chest infection while he was at the camp? - That is correct.

On page 64 of your report you refer to the 1991 summer camp which again was held at Milarrochy Bay in Loch Lomond; how many boys attended that camp? - Hamilton made reference that he would be supervising 15 to 20 boys.

Were you aware of how many actually attended? - Sorry, I can't find it in the body of the report.

On page 64 about two-thirds of the way down you refer to 20 summer camp contracts were filled in by parents? - Yes.

Again I think you go on to refer to complaints made in respect of Hamilton's behaviour at that camp and follow up action that was taken by the police? - That is correct.

Were you aware or have you been able to discover whether or not a summer camp was held away from the Dunblane/Stirling area after 1991? - No -- sorry, there is no camp in the Loch Lomond area after the 1991 camp and it would appear subsequently that Hamilton changed the format of this to a residential sports training course and this was held at Dunblane High School.

On page 66 of your report you refer to the 1992 course that was held at Dunblane High School? - Yes.

In the second paragraph you note that 21 parents had completed application forms in respect of that? - Yes.

And in the third paragraph you note that there was certain correspondence by Hamilton which took a harsh line indicating that he was to stand in "loco parentis" to the boys? - Yes.

At the end of this page and going on to the next page you summarise the incident in which three boys ran away from the camp one evening and were/were picked up by parents in Dunblane? - Yes, that is correct, this effectively terminated the lets by Fife Regional Council.

Notwithstanding the fact it terminated the lets within Fife you have noted there is thereafter a subsequent camp held in 1993 also held at Dunblane High School? - That is correct.

Were there any complaints regarding this camp? - No information of any complaints received.

Page 68, you note there is a 1994 course held again at Dunblane High School? - Yes, that is correct.

You note there that there is some difficulty regarding the operation of a let which initially had excluded Sunday morning? - Yes, there was difficulty with the let in that part of the premises which was going to be used by another group that Hamilton had objected but I understand that the camp still took place with some 18 boys attending.

What did Hamilton do when he was told he wouldn't be able to have the whole school on a Sunday morning? - From my recollection he protested to the Authorities, in particular to the Chief Executive and he wrote to the Commissioner for Local Administration for Scotland and Michael Forsyth, MP.

How did the Regional Council respond to that complaint? - From memory the Chief Executive resolved the matter of the let and the Commissioner for Local Administration for Scotland took no action.

Are you aware of any complaint having been made in respect of the 1994 camp? - No, there was no evidence of any complaints.

At the foot of page 68 you refer to a summer camp being held in 1995 again at Dunblane High School? - Yes, that is correct.

It says he had arranged for a Mr. Thomson to help in carrying out that camp? - That's correct.

Was there any complaint regarding that camp?/

camp? - No, it didn't appear there were any complaints made at that time although certainly the Regional Council wrote to him seeking information from him about the number of helpers who would be attending his course.

What reply did he make to that? - Hamilton replied in an ambiguous tone giving details of the help that would be available.

I think in the second-last paragraph it says Mr. Thomson noted the camp was reasonably well run? - Yes.

Although "He did maintain though that Hamilton could change from praising the boys one minute to treating them in a military fashion the next"? - Yes.

Although you don't note that in the report I think you have had a chance to consider certain other documents regarding the camps run by Hamilton? - Yes.

Could you refer to DDH359, I think a copy of that has been made available to parties; what is that? - It is the original application for the let of Educational premises by Hamilton dated the 18th of December, 1995.

Now/

12 noon

Now what premises is it in respect of?

- In respect of Dunblane High School for the purpose of a residential sports training course which was to run from 7th April to 13th April, 1996.

That would be during the Easter school holiday? - That would appear to be the case.

The time it is expressed to run from is 1.00 p.m. on Sunday, 7th April, 1996 to 6.00 p.m. on Saturday 13 April? - That is correct.

You noted that has been signed by Hamilton on the 18th December, 1995. The part relating to the decision on that has been left blank? - Yes. From the code above "DDH359" it would indicate this document was in fact recovered from Hamilton's premises, and that would tend to suggest it had been completed by him and had never been sent.

The second document I would like to refer you to is DCF113. I believe this was referred to yesterday in relation to the evidence of Mr. Forsyth. You see in the first page that is a letter dated 11th February, 1996 from Hamilton to Michael Forsyth at the House of Commons? - That is correct.

And attached to that there are a number of other letters? - Yes.

I refer in particular to the letter dated 18th August, 1995 attached to that. Do you see that is a letter addressed simply to "Dear Parents"? - Yes.

And it is signed by Thomas Hamilton? - Yes, it is.

On the second page of that letter at the end of the larger paragraph you see Hamilton notes "In relation to the 1995 course it was the 74th camp. It was attended by 25 boys" and he says, "It is possibly the best and most productive event in the history of my group"? - Yes, I see that.

Looking on through these letters, can you find the one dated 24th July, 1995. It is headed "Boys' Sports Club Group Committee"? - Yes.

You/

You see dated 24th July, 1995? - Yes.

Signed by Hamilton and addressed "Dear Parents"? - Yes.

Do you see at the foot really he says, "Thank you for your support in this event. The dates for the next course are 28th June, 1996 to 11th July, 1996"? - That is correct.

So we might presume from that that Hamilton had anticipated running a summer camp in the summer of this year? - Indeed.

In respect of the various complaints that were made to the police I think you stated there were a number of them involving photographs having been taken? - Yes.

Did you recover any of the photographs that had been taken? - Yes. I understand that a search of Hamilton's home following the incident at Dunblane recovered a large number of photographs.

Did these photographs depict anything indecent? - I haven't personally examined the photographs, although I understand there was nothing of an indecent nature in them.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. JONES: Could you look at the J(i) bundle please. If you turn to two documents, D1 and D52. D1 is a Central Regional Council memo dated 27th October, 1981 from the Youth and Community Organiser to the Director of Education; have you got that? - That is correct.

You see in the first paragraph the Youth and Community Organiser there says, "I refer to the above and your recent enquiry seeking further information. I can confirm that Mr. Hamilton has an official let of Dunblane High School gymnasium processed through normal channels, i.e. Jim Gardiner and the school Council Clerk. He has also previously had a similar let at Borestone Primary School". You see that? - Yes.

If you turn to D52, that is the Ombudsman's report. If you look at paragraph 3 on page 2 of that, the Ombudsman refers there to, "The complainant was formerly a leader in the Scout Movement./

Movement. He left them in 1974 and soon after formed a locally organised boys' group which catered for boys ages about 9/16. By 1983 there were about 70 boys in regular attendance". And in the final sentence, "The group had the use of Regional Council school and recreational premises from 1980". You see that? - Yes.

Have you found any information firstly that showed the use of Regional Council premises at any time before 1980? - No. Again I am relying again for information on the documentation we had recovered and in the main that was lets and reference to witness statements.

We did hear that some time in the 70s Mr. Hamilton ran a club from the Duckbarn Centre in Dunblane which I understand is a TA Hall? - I understand it is. That information came from witness statements.

Going on, I think the position is that to all intents and purposes Dunblane Rovers' Group ceased its activities when the lease was terminated in 1983; is that right? - That would appear to be the case.

And it never re-emerged? - Not under the same name, no.

Could you look at your own bundle which is D53 in H(v). We have seen this earlier as an attachment to the Regional Council Sub-Committee Appendix of an agenda of a meeting, and this appears to be a letter from Hamilton and Mrs. Anderson to the Director of Administration and Legal Services at the Regional Council dated 24th February, 1984; is that right? - That is correct.

If we go to the second page of that, do we see that under the heading of "Membership" is a sub-heading -- perhaps it is a different heading altogether -- "Differences Between Dunblane Rover Group and Dunblane Boys' Club"? - Yes. These differences are then listed.

I think it says "(1) The committee has agreed to disband Dunblane Rovers' Group; (2) The committee has agreed to form Dunblane Boys' Club and (3) The committee has agreed a new Constitution as requested."?/

requested."? - Yes, that is correct.

As you said earlier in evidence, Dunblane Boys' Club started up after the meeting in 1983 with the Regional Council. Did you mean to say 1985; is that right? - That is possible, because there was some confusion about the period when the lease terminated and there was correspondence on the basis of the boys' club. There were meeting back and forward -- 1985, that will be correct, it changed to Dunblane Boys' Club. There was a period of activity with correspondence but clearly the clubs didn't operate.

That's right, Hamilton was writing, but there was no activity actually taking place in the schools? - That is correct. He was writing under the auspices of the boys' clubs.

If we go back to J again, turn to D78. This is a report on the second page, a report of a meeting of a special sub-committee of the Education Committee held on 4th September, 1985? - Yes.

And we can see on the next page just reading below the list of attendees from Dunblane Boys' Club a list of specific points that were raised at the sub-committee; you see that? - Yes.

And you see that the third is, "During the period since the let for Dunblane Rover Group was terminated had the committee made any attempt to find alternative accommodation in Stirling, Dunblane or any other area". Do you see that? - Yes.

Then if you go over the page do you see there is the response to (3), "The club had been given the use of Dunblane Rifle Club premises which they had used previously but they had discontinued the use of the premises as they were not suitable for their purpose and also too expensive. The club's main activities were concerned with physical fitness, indoor football for which the games hall and gymnasium of Dunblane High School were very suitable". You see that? - Yes.

Now, keeping that with you and going back to the letter of February, 1984, you will see there is a list of names of members of the committee. I am not sure I caught your evidence on this earlier but I/

I want to be quite clear what we know about the committee. Are you able to say that any of the names given there were not on the management committee in February, 1984? - Again going from recollection and statements that were obtained I seem to recollect that Catherine Anderson admitted to having an involvement as Secretary and Evelyn MacFarlane certainly admitted having some involvement in assisting with the boys' club.

I am really interested to know whether you found any evidence of anybody who was not a member of that club whose name is put here? - From memory I honestly can't recollect, although I do recall some members said they were not committee members. In fact some of the witnesses I recollect said they couldn't recollect having attended even the meeting at the Regional Council.

That's a slightly different point. I am just wanting to be clear that what we have in the Minute of the meeting as the list of attendees -- Hamilton, Mrs. MacFarlane, Mrs. Anderson, Mr. Anderson, Mr. Williams and a solicitor, whether you found anybody who was named as being on the committee in February, 1984 who said as a matter of fact they were not on the committee? - Sorry, I can't recollect offhand.

You were asked some questions when camps were run. If you look at your own bundle and turn to D4. This is a letter which is undated but it is headed "Dunblane Rover Group". You see that? - Yes.

And this appears to be signed by Hamilton and it is addressed "Dear Parents"? - Sorry, I may have the wrong reference.

D4/H(v)?/

12.20 p.m.

D4/H(v)? - I have got it now, sir.

This is signed by Hamilton and addressed "Dear Parents", and it is addressed "Woodcraft, 49 Cowane Street"; is that right? - Yes.

So that would date it some time prior to October, 1985? - Yes.

It is headed "Dunblane Rovers Group", so this indicates it would come some time before 1984? - Yes.

This is giving parents the opportunity to enrol their sons into the Rovers, which it says is "A club for boys 10 to 16 years. However, boys can only be enrolled between the ages of 10 to 13 years. At present we are 12 boys under strength, and we must fill these places this Thursday"? - Yes.

"We meet on Thursday evenings, 6.30 to 9.30, at Dunblane High School for physical training, games and training in mapping and compass, first aid, camping, cooking, boating, hillwalking, etc."? - Yes.

That would seem to place it pre-the termination of the let in the summer of 1983; is that right? - Yes.

Do we see there is a reference to meetings at Dunblane Rifle Range on Fridays? - Yes.

And he goes on "The Rovers have been active for six years, and have perfected a system of training for boys", and then there is a reference to the activities? - Yes.

And the next sentence says "Running a disciplined club as we do it's sometimes as popular as school and homework, and it takes forward-looking parents to encourage their boys to attend. On the other hand, boys become very excited about their training and are often lost because their parents decide to use the club as a punishment, i.e. a bad school report means you're not getting to summer camp"?

camp"? - Yes.

So here is a reference to summer camp, presumably some time prior to the summer of 1983? - Yes.

And in the second last paragraph "We have no membership fee, only camp fees, which are very reasonable"? - Yes.

Then "Our equipment is first class. Camping is usually at Loch Lomond, and is combined with water activities, hillwalking etc. All members must be good swimmers, well behaved and of good temperament". Do you see that? - Yes.

Can I ask you to look back at the file J(i) and turn to D21? Have you got that? - Yes.

Now, these are 22 letters from parents dated around or about October, 1983 to the Regional Council; is that right? - Yes.

If we look at the first of those -- I don't want you to name her, but this is a lady who has written a typed letter. Do you see that? - Yes.

At the beginning she says "Dear Sir, It saddens me to find out that this very worthwhile job Mr. W. Hamilton, Principal Leader of the Dunblane Rover Group, has for the time being been terminated due to some complaints. My son, who is a member and has been a member for the past four months, really does enjoy his Thursday meetings. He has been on day trips and an eight day holiday with Mr. Hamilton and a group of boys from the Rover Group": do you see that? - Yes.

So here there appears to be a reference to a camp or some residential course in October, 1983? - Yes.

Finally can I ask you to look at your report again, at page 76, please? Have you got that? - Yes.

You will see that in the second paragraph you refer to your chart C, which we looked at/at yesterday, I think; is that right? - Yes.

And you say "With each boys' club, Hamilton would normally state on the let application form that the boys were being charged 20p or 30p to attend. This would be followed later by Hamilton advertising on circulars that the cost was £1 for each boy to attend"? - Yes.

"The reason for this may have been that normally a charge is waived for lets to educational establishments, but if the Education Department were aware of the charges and profits made they could make a charge to Hamilton"? - Yes.

I would like to understand a little more about the source of this passage. Can you help us by showing us the let applications that you have in mind that were then followed by circulars showing a different cost? - Offhand it is difficult. I seem to recollect early this morning there was identified the Denny Boys Club, where a let application showed a nominal figure and a "flyer" advertised £1.50.

I'm interested in the dates that one sees on the let applications: the early applications I think give figures of 20p, 30p or 50p, but the later let applications mention fees of £1 or thereabouts. I want to be clear whether there is a consistency in dates between the let applications and the "flyers"? - It is part of the report. This part is an overview of all the lets among all the local authorities. I think we found there we had lets showing nominal charges, letting forms, but he was charging more than that, £1 or whatever.

But you can't help us with any examples of that? - Short of going through the let applications and the "flyers". Off the top of my head I couldn't pinpoint them specifically. Denny seems to figure in mind, which was referred to this morning.

If you could find that, perhaps that would be a good example. I think you will find Denny starting at D38? - If I could refer to page 30 of the summary, the second last paragraph on that page makes reference to a weekly fee according to the/the let application form D37 of 20p, and it had risen within five months to £1.50 each.

You are referring now to D37, which is a let application in which he shows that the charge to be made is 20p; is that right? - That is correct.

And what you are referring to at page 30 is a letter dated February, 1993, D40? - Yes. D40 is the letter making mention of a number of adjustments, which shows that the weekly fee was £1.50 and not the 20p which had been shown in the let application.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: When you were talking about the member of the Committee of the Dunblane Group, are you saying that you were aware that everybody that was listed was a member of the Committee, or is it simply that you cannot recollect whether or not some of these people were members of the Committee? - I cannot recollect off the top of my head without referring to the specific part of the summary. I do recollect that some witnesses could not recollect being Committee members or being involved with the Committee. Even those who attended the meeting in 1985 had a recollection of attending the meeting -- sometimes not -- but were unable to recollect their involvement as Committee members.

You said at least one person confirmed being a Committee member? - Yes, the witness Anderson stated for some time she was the secretary: indeed there is correspondence showing that she was. I also recollect a witness Evelyn McFarlane made some mention of being involved in the Committee in some capacity.

Did anyone ever deny it? - Off the top of my head I cannot think of anyone.

GORDON DAVID JEYES (45), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: I am presently Director of Education with Stirling Council.

Stirling/

Stirling Council has been in existing only since 1st April of this year? - For operational responsibility yes, that is correct; but obviously it had its shadow year.

When did you commence your responsibilities regarding to being the Director of Education? - Late August, 1995.

Prior to that what was your employment? - I was employed by Strathclyde Region, the post being Divisional Assistant Director of Education, with operational responsibility for the Argyll & Bute Division.

Before I consider questions of school security and the vetting of persons I would like to look at measures that have been carried out at Dunblane Primary School since the 13th March, 1996. I think I am right that measures have been taken to increase the level of security at the school? - That is correct.

What measures have been taken? - Obviously in Central Region in the immediate aftermath of events certain measures were taken to offer reassurance, such as the placing into all of the classrooms a telephone, increased janitorage, the installation of a CCTV camera. In addition, since Stirling assumed responsibility we have reviewed security, introduced a signing-in system for all visitors for visitor identification, and there has also been discussed with parents most concerned, with technical and emergency services and also with the police, and we are currently installing an integrated security system for the main building at Dunblane, with ancillary locks for the other buildings.

You referred to closed circuit television. What areas will actually or are actually covered by the closed circuit television? - The school grounds are monitored. That would be primarily the responsibility of Central Scotland Police, because it is one of their cameras; it has not been specifically put in by the Education Service. It would be operating to review the school grounds, and would be monitored at Randolphfield.

Was that installed after March of this year?/

year? - Yes.

You refer to increase in the janitorial staff. How many people were employed in that capacity prior to March of this year? - One.

How many are employed now? - Two.

What is the benefit to the school of having the second person employed? - Clearly there are advantages in terms of increase surveillance, not least in terms of the health and security of the youngsters, to make sure those potentially vulnerable are given immediate support.

Yes? - There is also a number of occasions when there has been increased interest in the school and the individuals around the school, and the janitor himself was at the school and was directly involved that day.

Yes? - It was felt therefore appropriate to provide additional assistance. This is mainly in the sense of an extra presence in terms of playground supervision and the additional duties to assist the janitor.

Have any additional duties been formally allocated to the janitor since March? - I don't think it is necessary to do this in a formal way. There are more duties arising from the situation Dunblane Primary School finds itself in since the 13th March, so these duties are carried out now by the janitor and by a temporary assistant.

What are the additional duties? - Increased pupil surveillance, and the fact that there is an opportunity to discourage visitors and to make sure that reception arrangements are discreetly and effectively carried out in terms of ensuring the prime health and safety consideration that a head teacher or someone delegated by him should always know who is in the building at any one time.

You mentioned reception there. What were the arrangements at the school for reception of persons prior to March?
- Prior to March I couldn't comment, because it was not a school for which I had operational responsibility. This would only/only be reflecting from general knowledge and a knowledge of practice in terms of reception arrangements and signage, which can vary much from school to school.

What are the various things you might find in reception in a primary school? - To a certain extent it will be a function of the design of the school, and an increase in the numbers of visitors, adults and parents, in a school will have increased much over the years.

Yes? - In some of the Victorian buildings we have, finding your way to the office might not be the most straightforward activity, so clear signs as to what a visitor should do, depending on the size of the school and how often parents and others visit the school. That may also be determined by whether or not there is a pre-five facility, because clearly where there are nursery facilities there is the likelihood of more parents being in and out of the building during the day.

Yes? - Some schools do certainly have signing procedures and badges, but I am not aware that Dunblane prior to March 13th had such a system.

We will return to the issue of reception later. In considering the janitorial assistance you referred to, you said a second janitor has been brought in as a temporary assistant? - That is correct.

For how long is it envisaged he will be at the school? - It is necessary for me to provide a service which as best as possible meets the needs of parents and pupils in Dunblane, and taking account of the situation there. But of course as of yet I have no budget provision for this additional expenditure in terms of supervisory assistance, school helpers, additional teachers and janitors. It is incumbent on me to keep it under regular review. I think we could be in for a long haul, and that the school will need support for a particular period.

Yes? - Clearly, since we are in an area of unforeseen expenditure, it would not be possible for me to declare an idea for a fixed period. We are keeping it constantly under review.

You/

12.40 p.m.

You referred there to assistance being provided to meet the needs. Is it fair to say that this is just to meet the particular needs of Dunblane Primary School and its particular circumstances and that in your view that that need will not be provided long-term? - That would be correct.

You referred to a phone having been installed in each class room? - That is correct.

Does that mean therefore that the phone lines into the school have been increased or is it just more phones leading into the one line? - The number of lines into the school was increased.

How many are there there into the school? - I am not aware exactly how many, I know it has been increased by several.

You referred to a signing in procedure; how did that operate? - Reception desk at the main entrance to the school which is manned and all visitors are asked to sign in and give the time and are given a visitors badge and obviously on exit their departure is noted.

What arrangements are in position for the school being aware that a visit is likely prior to their arrival? - Well, clearly in terms of reception there is still the potential up to the point of arrival at the reception desk for it being a parent visiting the school, a member of staff visiting the school so in that sense I can't say that notice is necessarily going to happen and therefore it is important that the reception desk is manned.

So the reception desk is to deal with effectively unannounced visitors? - That is correct.

How do they deal with someone arriving at the school unannounced? - Well, all visitors to the school are asked if they can be assisted and asked to enter their names and their business in the school in the book for that purpose and this will be.....it may well be that somebody is known and hasn't/hasn't got on the visitors' badge and asked where they are going to in the school and then that would be confirmed in terms of their business.

And after a person has checked in at reception and indicated their business they would be directed where to go to speak to a person or carry out whatever is required? - If it is appropriate but clearly in terms of daily life of a school it would be a matter for the head teacher to judge so unless it was something that had already been agreed because it wasn't going to interfere with the teaching and learning it would be referred to a member of senior management of the school, the head teacher or his other senior colleagues; you wouldn't be operating a school in terms of unannounced visitors, whatever their purpose, directing them to a class room, that wouldn't be normally the case.

Who mans the reception desk? - The reception desk is manned by the janitor although I believe in recent weeks there has also been a community policeman on the premises working with the children; it is not so much a security measure as it is just work in the general terms of reassurance.

Is that seen as being a long-term measure or something that would be required to be adjusted? - It would be adjusted; I am sure there will be long-term measures in the way that we will work with community complaints in Dunblane but his presence in the school is short-term but once the integrated school system is completed there is an ability to focus accesses to the people more readily and in a more controlled way.

Before referring to the integrated security system and the management of access, still dealing with the reception desk, during what hours is that manned? - During school hours.

Is any use made of the school after hours? - Yes.

Is the reception desk provided during that period? - Not always although the janitor is on duty at all times.

I think at the outset of the Inquiry you saw/saw aerial photographs of Dunblane Primary School which indicated as well as the main buildings there were a number of outlying huts?

- Yes, that's right.

This reception desk applies only to the main entrance to the main building? - That is correct.

By what means are you able to channel persons towards the main entrance away from other entrances to class rooms? - At the moment that is by signage and by direction but clearly the existence of huts is an example of the complication of the security system and action has been taken on that in temporary measures but as the new primary school in Dunblane opens in the autumn it will site the redevelopment and it is hoped that with part of that refurbishment of Dunblane Primary School that the needs of the people and the number of classes will be accommodated within a single detail.

How have the huts been taken account of within the present arrangement? - I do have to point out that although there has been considerable discussion with regard to these increased security measures by locks that are not fully in place it is envisaged that as part of the integrated system that key pad locks would be used within the hutted accommodation were such to remain.

How would access be obtained once the key pads were fitted? - By the appropriate code.

Who would have that code? - The code would be readily available so in terms of the security measures it is far from ideal but in the circumstances of a spread site there is no other option immediately available but it is important to look at it in terms of its temporary nature because it is not envisaged that these particular steps will be needed in the long-term; it is my understanding that the main reason for the former Council deciding to build a second school was because of the pressures in the building and the unsatisfactory nature of having a school ringed by temporary accommodation.

BY LORD CULLEN: Are these separate buildings equipped with a phone now? - Yes.

Does/

Does the phone enable communication to be made between them and other parts of the school or is it only for an external purpose? - No, it can be used internally and also if people wish to phone in.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: Is it envisaged that the children will be aware of the codes for this building or is it staff members only? - For the hutt accommodation I am sure it will be necessary for the children to be aware of the code which is why I pointed out from a security point of view it is far from ideal.

I think you also said that outside there were a large number of potential access points to even the main school building; what measures have been taken to ensure the security of these entrances to the building? - That has been done by trying to create a single access point which can be the set pattern of the school and can be accessed by members of staff with electronic keys and that the capacity to do that can be set for the rhythm of the day so by being operational people are being supervised in the playground or intervals and at lunch time and there are security measures built in and it is computer monitored so that people are aware of which key has been used and so on and so forth and the time of access to the building.....it is a straightforward manner to programme it within the system.

So just to be clear about that, what is envisaged is that there is only one main access to the school? - That is correct, and other doors are being reinforced in terms of fire doors which will have a panic bar egress that will be alarmed and the janitor will be able to monitor the comings and goings both through a computer monitor in his room and with a gadget which will operate at a mile radius so he can go about his duties.

If a person was to gain access to the school by means of any doors other than the main entrance then one would require an electronic key? - Yes, the main entrance would require an electronic key during school hours; for visitors to the school like myself access would be by means of a buzzer.

How would the children have access to the school? - The children would have access to the school/school at the beginning of the day because the children would be received at the door; if there was children attending the doctor or the dentist and the children were coming later the children would have to buzz.

Is it envisaged that the children arriving at the start of the day would be able to gain access through all the doors or merely the main entrance? - The main entrance.

Even at the start of the day? - That could be primarily a matter for the head teacher to determine the way in which the school should operate; it can be programmed separately in the light of my experience it is envisaged that Mr. Taylor and his staff.....what we have to remember is it is a new system which offers security and reassurance to people but it does not inhibit the school from being a warm and welcome place that parents are part of.

These are the means for controlling the ways for getting into the school; I think you said there is going to be a fire access bar if people wish to get out? - Yes, in terms of an electronic door, it is simply a button beside or inside and would be simply operated by pupils. Similarly if there is any flaw in the electricity supply at any point the system is automatically shut off and it will be linked to the fire alarm and when the fire alarm goes off the system automatically opens.

Within this system are there any measures in place to prevent a person being accessed through a window on the ground floor? - I can't think of any.

Is this a system which you just described as the integrated security system? - In the sense it has been monitored and we are gaining information about the benefits of it.

What is the proposed timescale for implementation of the security system? - It is being introduced at present; it has been found necessary to strengthen some of the doors; it began in late May and is taking place at present.

At what time do you envisage that it will be/be complete? - It will be complete at the end of term.

What is the cost of installing this integrated security system? - £24,000.

Is it proposed that this integrated security system be extended to other primary schools managed by Stirling Council? - I do feel it may be for Stirling Council to evaluate the effectiveness of the system and its effect on the life of the school but certainly it has been put in with a view to learning lessons but whether or not it would form part of the way forward for school security elsewhere. Clearly in any consultations with staff and School Board about this these issues will be determined at the end by the sums available by the Scottish Office; it is my understanding that the Secretary of State is considering some specific action in this area and it seems a sensible way forward because there are discussions with the School Board, school security.....

Is what you are saying that there are no present plans to install the same system throughout your control of Stirling Council? - There are no funds to extend the system. Clearly in choosing to gain further information about school security will at some time recognise a need, a particular need, for reassurance in Dunblane is what it has come to.

We heard in evidence that the primary school in Dunblane is one of the largest primary schools in the Region or even Scotland; does that require that the cost is more extensive than for other schools? - I think that is right; Dunblane would have been a junior secondary building originally so it is commensurate with a secondary school. The issues which you talked about earlier in terms of additional accommodation will be one that it will be difficult for schools to address; there are very few secondary schools which are absolutely one site, one building.

Has an estimate been made of the cost of installing a set integrated security system in all primary schools operated by Stirling Council? - That has not been carried out at this stage.

How many primary schools are managed by Stirling/

Stirling Council? - When Newton Primary School is opened in the autumn there will be 46.

Presumably some of them are much smaller than at Dunblane? - Yes, given that Stirling has a vast rural area Dunblane has 650 primary pupils and Inversnade has four.

As part of this integrated security system are there any measures other than the key pad proposed for the external building? - Not at this stage.

I would like to turn to the construction of the new school which you have referred to; what is that school called? - For the time being the school is called Newton.

Where is it being built? - It is being built in the north of the town above the river in a development as you exit Dunblane on the old A9 it will be into your right, just having left the Stakis Hotel.

At what stage is the construction of the school at present? - We are due to take it from the developer on the 4th of July.

How many pupils will attend the new school? - 200 in the first instance but the projection will be that it will grow and it is capable of taking in excess of 400.

Is it capable of accommodating that number within the present or is it anticipated it will require to expand by ancillary huts? - The present building has a capacity of 434.

Has modification been made to the design of that school following the events of the 13th of March? - Yes, given that the school was still under construction on the immediate activity after the 13th of March one thing was to review the security system there and considerable changes have been made.

What changes have been made to the school following these events? - During the school hours there will be a single point of access to the main school building. There is a conservatory there which/which will be open during school hours but you will be able to proceed no further, it will be glass fronted and visible from the janitor's office and the glass is specifically provided for this in security terms. All the other doors will be panic bar exit doors and that the appropriate safety measures will be swing doors and because all the accommodation is separate a buzzer will be straight to the class room.

Does this school have this integrated security system that you have previously described? - No, it involves these measures which have been built into the design of the school in terms of the glass fronted approach and the fact that a buzzer system can be sounded in the staff room office or the janitor area and so in terms of the reception arrangements the design has been to build a built-in feature more specifically.

In respect of doors other than the main doors how is access controlled through these? - Access during school hours is through main door access but all other doors are swing shut. If somebody uses them through the panic door access to get out as youngsters will at the interval the doors will shut and it will be necessary for staff to receive them.

It is not a question that it will be, as at Dunblane, that teachers can get access by an electronic key? - No, it is not necessary because the design has been built in.

Does the main entrance and glass conservatory that is in the form of a reception provide for visitors? - Well, clearly it can be developed as a reception area but in terms of the reception in glass we spoke of in Dunblane that would be the first point that the staff side would see visitors arriving and it wouldn't be possible in the way that the school is presently constructed for people in the office to see people coming in as in Dunblane Primary.

Did the measures that were proposed in respect of Newton School have an impact on the cost of the school? - Yes.

How was that additional cost accommodated?/

accommodated? - By seeking additional borrowing consent as part of the legally committed project inherited by Stirling Council.

I would like to turn to the question of the issue of security generally and identification of the concerns. It is my understanding that there are no national guidelines available in relation to school security or design of school buildings? - That is my understanding.

Have there ever been such guidelines available? - Not to my knowledge.

You have mentioned consultation which has taken place with various bodies; is that consultation which had taken place since March of this year? - Well, obviously we have only been operational since the 1st of April, the consultation would have to be after that date.

Nothing during the shadow period? - No.

Are you aware of consultation having taken place during the period when the Local Authority was Central Regional Council? - I am certainly aware that Central Region were looking into safety and the risk assessment was being considered.

Who was it being considered with? - Central Police and the relevant Services Department.

I think you mentioned earlier a School Board; did they play a part in that? - They would in terms of my understanding of past practices, in terms of what Stirling Council has done. We have written to them asking them to review their practices with regard to existing best practices and to consider visitor identification; signage and a visitor book in line with a Health & Safety requirement of knowing who is in the building at any one time is also specified.

BY LORD CULLEN: So far as you understand the position was there in existence before the 13th of March some procedure for carrying out risk assessment within schools covered by Central Region? - No, I think that would be to exaggerate the point; I am aware in terms of current interest in risk/risk assessments there has been some initial discussion but I think that was as far as it went from my knowledge.

At the moment is it intended there should be a procedure for risk assessment? - Yes, absolutely, we have established a Working Group with the Education Services and Central Police and we would wish to consider within the context of risk assessment.

That would be on a school by school position? - Yes, absolutely.

Is some form of guidance given about the exercise? - Yes, in terms of establishing the framework clearly in terms of our consideration once we have got the framework we will wish to involve the school, Board Members and Staff Association.

Can you tell me what you envisage risk assessment in this context as meaning? - Risk assessment will have to take into account the situation of a school; I think it is important to say that in conjunction with Central Police we took account of the whole opinion of the community and we looked into CCTV for this building and I can say again that the risk assessment may usually be in terms of the evaluation of the risk.

What is the system, if any, that is used to carry out this risk assessment; no doubt it is basically a concern for identifying what are risks, asking a question and then trying to see what is best that can be advised for controlling the risk? - That is correct.

Is that going to be the system from now on for schools at large? - I think that in terms of our consideration of matters there is a need to get people to think about what the issues are here in terms of theft, vandalism or issues which may be more serious than that.

What about the position under the Health & Safety at Work Act? - The Health & Safety at Work Act as such doesn't apply directly to schools but we do have Health & Safety Officers who are aware of these issues and will be working with us on it.

What/

What about the responsibility of the School Board to the teachers; is there a Health & Safety at Work aspect there? - Schools do have an opportunity for recognising their needs to nominate the Health & Safety representative.

I am talking about the Act. Does the Act apply, can you guide me on that as between the school authority and individual teachers? - I am sure there would be others here who will be more able to.....

This could be quite important but perhaps it doesn't arise and we may come to that in due course; as far as you are concerned the Act doesn't apply? - I think there are differences.

You are not sure? - Absolutely.

After/

2.00 p.m.

After an adjournment for lunch.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: Mr. Jeyes, just before lunch you were considering the consultations which had taken place in relation to the issue of school security? - Yes. I had referred to the fact a Working Group had been established including officers from the Education Service, Technical and Commercial Services and the Central Police. It is my intention in due course representatives from School Boards and from Staff Associations should be invited to join that group. I have written to all head teachers and all School Boards seeking their comments on the recently published report "The Review of School Security" in England and Wales, and I circulated that to them along with the Scottish Commentary.

That was a report prepared after the murder of a headmaster outside a school? - That is correct.

You refer there to the input from School Boards or the potential input from School Boards to this committee. Is that a means by which you are able to obtain the views of parents on the issue of school security? - It is one of the means.

What other means are there? - We have already had a number of meetings with parents and a series of forums and it is the intention of the Council to try and build up a Parents' Consultative Group. It could be in due course School Boards will be an effective mechanism within Stirling Council but unfortunately just under 50 per cent of schools do not have a School Board at present, so I would not wish to rely on that as the sole mechanism, important as they are.

As a result of the consultation progress have you been able to identify what the concerns are? - Given that the review report has only recently been produced and I have asked for returns by 21st June, no, I would not be able to adduce anything at this stage.

Can you say at the moment as far as you are concerned from what are schools to be protected? What/

What are the aims of the policy of school security? - I think the starting point is one to which I referred earlier: at all times the head teachers or the person nominated by the head teacher should know who is in the building, should know each child and each adult that is in the building. Therefore that immediately leads you to the notion of a single entry point, a reception arrangement and so on and so forth. I think that is the starting point. Such discussions as have taken place with parents, they are as concerned as the others about getting the balance right between the school as a warm and welcome place, the heart of the community, and an increase in general measures of security and reassurance. I think provided there can be careful consideration of this we can get the balance right and those elements need not inhibit any other.

If I can take you back a little beyond that starting point you referred to, you referred to headmasters knowing who was in the school. What is the purpose of all of these measures. What degree of protection are they intended to confer? - I am not exactly clear in terms of -- the question is particularly open, but clearly my interest as Director of Education is to ensure that there is the best possible environment wherein learning and teaching can take place, so one can see that happening in a way in which it would not be disturbed. The more common occurrences in terms of disruption, rather than the unique and heinous events of 13th March, would be occasional intrusions by the youth of the area, vandals, recent school leavers. Whatever the circumstances we would be looking to create a secure environment wherein there is an appropriate atmosphere for the life of the school to go on independently other than in an organised way.

You mentioned there vandalism. Is that one of the things that concerns you? - Absolutely. I am not sure it necessarily concerns me in terms of consideration of the issue as Director for Stirling. I am conscious of my knowledge of other areas that it is an issue that can arise.

What I am trying to get at is whether the measures which you are proposing are intended to deal primarily with the safety of the persons or whether they have a broader ambit than that? - Clearly/

Clearly they have features relating to the safety of persons, but it is also in the context of enabling school life to go on undisturbed other than by intentional work of teachers and the pupils.

But as well as that goal, the protection of the person, is it also intended to deal with various forms of criminal damage and theft? - Clearly if you are introducing security systems that is introducing additional features of security at points where theft is more likely to occur -- and that is during hours when pupils and teachers are not present -- and that is an additional benefit. In terms of a scheme that has been introduced in Dunblane it's primary feature is one of security in terms of persons and it will be drawn up -- I hesitate about the words "risk assessment", to bring that up again, but clearly the security system that is introduced would be a feature of the analysis done of the circumstances and risks faced by a particular school. Whether or not any part of the building was thought to be particularly vulnerable to theft and vandalism does have a bearing on that.

But it is a matter which may be taken under the heading "Risks" that you are concerned with? - Absolutely.

You have defined in there in general terms it is providing a secure and safe environment for teaching? - Yes, to be carried out.

The starting point has been the headmaster should know who is in the building? - Yes. That is an essential element, the head teacher is aware of that.

What sources are available to you for information regarding the means by which a school may be secure? - On a daily basis?

Yes? - The responsibilities delegated to head teachers is clearly in terms of their managerial function and these matters are primarily through their educational responsibility on a day-to-day basis. It would be my function and the colleagues working with me to review that and make sure they are getting the best guidance and support so far as each point is concerned, and that is what I have been seeking to do in terms of the risk issue all/all along.

BY LORD CULLEN: Does the Education Authority itself have a safety policy? - Not that could be described as such at present.

Do you think it should? - I think that may well be one of the features that will emerge from this in terms of guidance, yes.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: In formulating a policy such as mentioned there presumably it would be necessary to take account of a variety of circumstances that may obtain for each particular school? - That is correct. That is why we are carrying out the review at present.

You mentioned earlier difference in size of schools in that you may have some as small as having four pupils and others run into many hundreds. What are the other principal differences between schools which would have an impact on the means by which the goal you seek is achieved? - The extend of pupil movement around schools does have an impact, because you would not wish to have, if you provided a security system, one that was so cumbersome it was inhibiting the daily life of the school. That particularly will apply to secondary schools -- you wander round any secondary school and you will see a considerable number of access and exit points, and it really is quite difficult on many occasions to think how this may be rationalised to only one. In addition in secondary schools the likelihood is they may have a separate block for technical or physical education or whatever or an additional annexe because the school will have expanded at some point in the past, and that is a probability, so clearly the issues of security are far more complicated for a secondary school because of pupil movement and because there will be several buildings involved.

At present what you said was your security system was concentrating on providing security requirements for the buildings rather than within the context of the school as a whole? - The same consideration has been taken of hitted accommodation.

I was thinking of during any break time, a large number of children are concentrated outwith in the/the playground? - Subject to playground supervision.

As well as those you have told us about, are there other factors which will have a bearing on the ability or manner in which security is achieved? - I think it relates to the configuration of the buildings and the site. When a site is drawn up in terms of how compact it may be clearly in terms of reception arrangements they are determined by the site and may be more or less expensive and that would need to be put in.

You/

You said at the outset you had older schools which are laid out in a manner which makes that more difficult? - That is correct.

Why is that? - Well, if you were to go to some of the Victorian schools in the eastern villages, for example, they have by no means -- the creation of a school office was perhaps not foremost in their consideration and it is not altogether obvious when you call where the office is sited, and therefore clear signage is important, and issues of addressing security and access, even if the budget were clearly available, will be more problematic in these schemes than ones of a more modern design.

I appreciate you said it is early days, but has there been any policy formulated to deal with the situation regarding older schools? - Other than considerations, as I have said earlier, of best practice. We have caused there to be increased signage and have courteous requests for all visitors to make their presence known to the school secretary or in the smaller schools direct to the head teacher. It should always be obvious where such a person is based and how the visitor should make their presence known. It is part of the function of changes for visitors so that they know this is what is expected of them, whether it is by officials of the Council, parents or others who are going in and out to work or do other duties in the school, and clearly all of us as we go about our work supporting schools have a role to play. They are the more difficult area of cultural and attitudinal change.

Turning now to the issue of making school premises available to groups outwith school hours: is it correct to say Stirling Council have a policy that their school premises should be made available for the use of the community? - Yes.

And they are made available by means of applications for lets? - That is correct.

Within Stirling Council who would such an application be submitted to? - The establishment system under Community Services in the form of letting but who organises it is in terms of the size -- the actual person who may have local responsibility in theory is dependent on practice. It/

It may be the area officer reporting to Civic Services, or it could be power which has been assumed by a School Board and therefore a person with local responsibility would be the Clerk to the School Board.

But there is no uniform policy throughout the Council's area as to how this would be dealt with? - There is a uniform policy. What I was illustrating was that the person who would be dealing with the matter may have a different province. I think it is important to say in terms of School Board legislation School Boards do have the capacity and power to be involved in community use of schools subject to the direction of the Council. In many Council areas in Scotland School Boards have decided it is more appropriate to be consulted on letting schemes and let the local authority run it: in others, subject to the direction of the scheme by the Council, they have become more involved. As I have already indicated, there aren't School Boards in every school who prefer the Council to arrange this as a consequence of the School Board legislation, and we have a mixed package of administration, but that doesn't mean they are not all operating the scheme.

If the matter is being dealt with by the School Board or the Clerk to the School Board what degree of support would they have from the central offices of the Council? - Clearly they would be working within the letting scheme as laid down, and Stirling Council is at present implementing increased measures including a vetting scheme and that vetting scheme will be centrally run. It is intended that additional information will be made to the Clerk of the School Board, and it is hoped there will be more power being given to one organisation, being best practice, so that both interests may be kept together. Certainly the District Council had good practice in terms of computerised facilities, they were able to monitor the letting and use of buildings.

BY LORD CULLEN: Would vetting include insistence on certain conditions being applied? - Absolutely. I think there would be changes from the previous practice. I think it does go to the key of some of it. I accept if activity is taking place in Council premises that to some extent authenticates/authenticates it, but it is not just the Council -- Council letting has happened in the past as a landlord, and it could operate in a supportive and enabling way for the activity, accepting a certain level of activity, so vetting will look at the standard of activity and will use its discretionary power with the Scottish Criminal Record Office to check the name of a person and so on and so forth.

I was thinking, for instance, of a constitution or insurance matters that we have been thinking of during the course of this Inquiry and possibly parent representation of some form on a committee, things of that sort? - I think these are extremely important. I was thinking in terms of users committees, parental involvement, and people working with the youth or children's activities being accredited in some way, the standard of training. These are all matters we would take into account. I think it is important to be seen vetting is done as a way of quality assurance and we are not just doing this to be obstructive. I have been insisting that the quality concerned on offer is improved. I think it has to be noted that if one does go beyond just having mechanistic answers to this, if we are going to work with people, how they relate to their community, that has significant resource implications.

In terms of the amount of supervision you put into the vetting? - Supervision, yes, on a regular basis. I am not thinking of a registration scheme but one which has the features that would apply for under eights, the under eight groups in chapter 10 of the 1989 Act. It is developmental work, and we have got to do this in a way which still gives the opportunity for people to be included that would not put volunteers off doing it, and it would be a developmental approach which is going to be expected.

I/

I think the danger is if the answers are lets expand the capacity to have criminal record checks, I think it is a necessary condition but it is far from sufficient on its own. This I feel could inhibit the level of activity within the community and there would be less for youth, and I think the Council would be seen, probably quite rightly, as bureaucratic and mechanistic because this is what it would be resourced for. I say that in full knowledge of the present system in the terms of use of checks both from the police side and on our own.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: As regards to vetting, am I correct in understanding you would be vetting not only the individuals involved but also the activities which are proposed to carry out? - Yes, that is right. I do think it is appropriate that there should be a standard. I think it is important we give, as it were, guide marks through a system of accreditation and I think that may be part of the way forward.

Do you see vetting and accreditation as being two different things. Do you see accreditation as another means of vetting? - I think they are potentially complimentary, because I think while it one way it is possible to introduce some vetting, as I have already indicated, on its own that may be insufficient, and I think the more appropriate way forward is to look at a way of reassurance when working with children. Many people are doing so at the moment as part of a team and not as individuals, and they have an association with the community, perhaps with the Council, or perhaps with another nationally affiliated recognised youth body, so that parents are aware of the standards that implies.

Before a system of accreditation or vetting could work there would presumably have to be a healthy level of activity carried out by parents or adults for children throughout the Stirling Council area? - That is correct.

There are other matters such as music or sports education? - Yes.

Which would be carried out on a one-to-one basis? -
Yes.

Often/

Often in Council premises? - Yes.

How would these fit within the scheme if required? - I think in terms of sport or even music itself it will be important the Council will be assured with regard to the qualifications of the person and that the service they are offering within Council premises is what they maintain it to be. Also with regard to -- I accept in music or in athletics individual training or support can come into it, but I don't see that should necessarily be dealt with in isolation nor should that isolation be of itself a good thing. At present we would be looking to groups using our premises have to have two adults present.

BY LORD CULLEN: When we talk about accreditation and vetting I take it we are talking about that being done of the person who is the provider or the organiser as opposed to every single person who is working with that organisation? - Absolutely. Within the Code of Practice clearly you would wish to see the way in which the others were.....

You may do that under the appropriate conditions, referring to some Code of Practice? - Yes.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: How would you propose to vet persons and organisations? - We would intend using the discretionary capacity to have a criminal records check. We would have the resources of the SCRO, interviews with Council officers or Community Services, and there would be an assurance that they were going to abide by the Code of Practice which gives the capacity in resource terms for monitoring all features of the work with them in terms of inspection.

What would you be looking to detect in the course of that vetting. Who would you hope to weed out? - The Code of Practice will set out certain approaches in terms of the way we would expect that activity to be run along with the normal safeguards, and there will be other advice in regard to the Code of Practice in terms of equality of opportunity and respect and esteem for children. We mentioned earlier the paramount importance of parents having opportunity to make their views known, / known, and we need to do everything in practice in regard to allowing children's voices to be heard, taking children's points seriously. We would wish to do this with regard to best practice for us. It is one way in which children should be treated with respect.

How would you propose taking into account the views of parents and the views of children in such a vetting procedure? - I don't think in the initial vetting and these matters of attitude and developmental issues you will be able to take them into account. I think vetting covers the necessary conditions of general support or further inspection or work with different groups as part of the community support and ensures a sufficient condition to make sure that we can still be exclusive and are not increasing the capacity to have further people alienated or people who may wish to volunteer their support being put off by the measures being introduced.

What degree of manpower do you consider would be necessary to institute such a system in respect of activities carried out in Stirling? - I think at this early stage I really wouldn't want -- I hesitate to guess at that, because I think it is -- it would be much more important the activity is properly balanced and whether or not there is a need for an additional framework that our Council can operate. I think it is interesting in terms of the way Chapter 10 of the '89 Act is operated, child minders will sometimes be denied that status because of developments such as the -- on the developmental side, whatever the criteria of a fit person in terms of how they approach children and so forth, challenges in that area are much more difficult. There was one famous case I think south of the border of a child minder who was de-registered for smacking children, and she took the Council on and challenged the Council and won. So I think it is important to get a framework laid before we would be in a position to assess what the implications would be. Nevertheless I think if we are going to do it properly in terms of serving the community we should do it -- lessons learned, and it will have to be provided with resources and so on and we will have to set certain codes which do not lead to a significant diminution in activity.

Do/

Do you think an accreditation scheme would work apart from there being the vetting scheme you have just described? - I think it would be possible for it to work. I think it is an issue which should be fully explored. Clearly any Council officer wanting accreditation works through the Council but others may have different views, and there is nothing about accreditation of itself that means that duty need to be given to Local Authorities; there are other national areas where it can be done. I think what is clear is it would be of assistance to parents if they were clear what standards would apply for children's work if they were to accept that description.

How would you see an accreditation scheme working? - Again I think it would come back to the notion of a clear Code of Practice in terms of what was available for affiliated organisations, national boys' clubs, uniform organisation and others to make information available which the local organisations can tie into.

Would/

2.30 p.m.

Would the effect of what you have described not be to shut people out who were not part of a national affiliation or registered with a training body? - I am indicating that merely in terms of a code of practice it would seem appropriate that people should be encouraged to take training and that training should be available.

Yes? - In terms of best practice, in the community training service throughout Scotland youth leaders would be attracting people and giving them training, but they wouldn't leave them as part of a team to take unsupervised activities until they felt that they were ready so to do. It is not a case of using that system to close people out; it is using the system to involve people and give them an opportunity to follow their volunteer impulse.

Once people have been accredited or approved what steps do you envisage would be required to maintain the standard provided by that person? - I think ideally there should be the resources in the activity for an inspection, as well as the case of a user committee, parental involvement and children's complaint procedures should be ongoing procedures that the thing is subject to, consumer pressures, as it were.

This is something you envisage applying to premises let from the Council only, or do the Council have a general responsibility within this area? - Clearly this relates to Council buildings. I think it is important to point out that that would not cover all buildings used for these purposes, because there will be village halls and similar buildings that will have been granted and funded and run by local committees, and there will be Scout halls and others where when they are not used for the Scouts they would also be let to different classes. What I have been describing would apply in the first instance only to premises run by the Council, and it is then inherited from region to district.

Do you consider it would be possible with resources for the Council to provide the same quality assurance in relation to non-Council premises? - I think in terms of the schools and the/the issue which has come up it is important for there to be reassurance about any activity, but whether it is appropriate that that be for the Council, I think it would be more important to work that through.

You have referred to a code of practice. Does such a code exist at present? - A code of practice has been introduced and adopted by Stirling Council, yes.

When was that? - The first consideration was by the Community Services Committee on the 12th March, and the code of practice was first looked at on the 8th May, and there was a further briefing report at the most recent meeting of the committee.

Perhaps I could refer you to a document which was handed out immediately before lunch. It is headed "STIRLING COUNCIL COMMUNITY SERVICES. COSLA: CULLEN INQUIRY": do you have that? - Yes.

Have you seen this document previously? - Yes.

Would you turn to the third page of it? It has actually got the number 13 at the top, so it has been extracted from something else. Do you see that as a Minute of the Stirling Council Community Committee? - No, it is not a Minute, it is the report that would have been placed to the Committee for their consideration.

In paragraph 1.1 there is reference to the fact that the Committee Paper was presented on the 12th March. Is that the one you have referred to? - Yes.

In No. 2 there were certain recommendations. Could you read these recommendations out? - "It is recommended that: The Working Group continues to review and research Community Use of Schools and presents a revised letting policy to the next meeting of the Community Committee. The existing letting scheme remains in operation until 31st July, 1966. The implementation date for the revised letting scheme/scheme is 1st August, 1996.

Vetting procedures as outlined in Appendix 2 should be implemented immediately for all halls, centres and schools. The Working Group continues to research centralised letting procedures and makes recommendations to the next Community Committee on the possible implementation of a pilot scheme".

If I could refer you to the section headed "Appendix 2, which is four pages on from that, is that the vetting scheme which has been referred to? - Yes.

Can you read out the recommendations? - "It is recommended that the following vetting procedures to be incorporated into the letting scheme:

Anyone working with young people under the age of 16 should satisfy the following procedures:

- (1) Complete SCRO check.
- (2) Provide two references.
- (3) In the case of a sports group, instructor/coach must have the relevant governing body qualification.
- (4) Go through an interview procedure with nominated Council representative(s).
- (5) A code of practice should be issued to individuals taking out lets. This code of practice would recommend that it would be desirable for all activities organised for young people under the age of 16 there should be at least two adult representatives in attendance".

Is that a scheme which is to be introduced in Stirling Council fairly shortly? - Yes, as described in the recommendations.

BY LORD CULLEN: Is the code of practice you referred to already the code referred to in paragraph 5? - Yes.

So it is in existence already, is it? - It is in existence and has been introduced, yes.

Is there a text one can read? - Yes. At the stage when this submission was made it was still being revised.

But/

But it has been finalised since that time? - That is correct.

Is this document, Appendix 2, referring to the vetting of everybody who works? - We are talking here about volunteers.

There was a distinction drawn earlier between the organiser and those working with the organiser. Is this to cover the organiser or is it to cover everybody working as part of the team of the organiser? - Ideally it will be to vet all those who are working.

Is there some doubt about this? - No, but I am sure in terms of making sure there is a balance -- we would be vetting the providers and....

You would be vetting the providers? - Yes.

You say, however, this is intended to go on to deal with everybody working to the provider, as it were? - Yes.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: It refers to here young people under the age of 16. Do these guidelines apply whenever there is to be a child under 16 in any group, irrespective of how many adults are to be present? - I think it would be difficult to be exact on that. In terms of the speed with which these matters were thought about -- I am quite sure we could come up with examples in terms of church groups and others where there was a predominance of adults, where it would be simply bureaucratic to implement the procedures. The intention behind them is where the activity is for under 16's rather than an activity where an under 16 may happen to be present.

You have previous made reference to chapter 10 of the Children's Act, 1989 and the registration requirements which exist. To which situation do these requirements apply? - They apply to children under 8, and in certain categories, although the provision will divide the powers between mandatory and discretionary. It includes less than two hours per week, or at present less than six, then checks will not take place, although the Government has been recommending a proposal/proposal that the six should be extended to 60.

That would mean that anyone who was supervising children for fewer than 60 hours per year would not have to be registered? - If the Government's recommendations were accepted. At present it is six.

Part of the scheme proposed is that you should have access to a complete SCRO check, from the SCRO computer?
- Yes.

To what extent are the Council able to carry out such searches at present? - The capacity for such a search to be carried out for purposes of chapter 10 of the Children's Act, that is within the scheme of delegation to the Director of Education, as I have responsibility for children's services. As well as that, in terms of scrutiny of those who have substantial access to children, Education and Social Services can access it.

Yes? - There is a flaw, however, in that previously Leisure and Recreation Services of the District Councils could not access it, so it will be a matter of serendipity that if Leisure and Recreation happen to have merged with Education they can access quite easily, but if, as in Stirling, a separate Community Service is set up they would have to route their inquiries through the Education Service rather than being dealt with by the Director of Community Services, which seems inflexible.

Do you have any other proposal whereby you may obtain information from the police not contained in SCRO files? - Clearly there is the opportunity for normal good liaison, but not officially.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: I wonder if I could ask you a few fairly general questions? Am I right in understanding that an appropriate safety or security regime is likely to vary from school to school, at least in detail? - I think that is the case.

So do you favour what I think is a common theme of many of the submissions which have been made to this Inquiry on this subject, the policy/policy of safety audits or risk assessments being carried out for every school? - I think there is benefit in that, but I think it is important that it should happen within a framework of guidance from Government and best advice, not least on matters of design and sharing of risk factors.

Yes? - Perhaps in terms of the Scottish commentary on the publication of school security, it is disappointing that a role in that area is not necessarily envisaged.

So the idea might be that in due course every school, whatever it might be called, would have its own security plan? - Yes, absolutely.

Derived from a process of risk assessment or safety audit, whatever you might want to call it? - Yes.

That plan would then require to be implemented, I take it? - Yes.

And would you see merit in the plan being reviewed, perhaps on an annual basis? - Of course. All schools have policies. I think it is appropriate a school has a policy for matters of security. In the circumstances we find ourselves in, the idea is that there should be a heightened awareness with regard to these matters. So yes, the review of a policy would be part of a normal best practice issue in school.

At the moment we are not talking about that, we are talking about a security plan, a written-down document setting out what should be done to provide adequate security for a particular school, a plan derived from the process of risk assessment, a safety audit. Do I take it you are in agreement that if and when such a plan was in place for each school the plan itself should be subjected to periodical review? - I think what you describe I would be happy to consider as a policy. I think we are into a semantic difference. Yes, I do.

In terms of the process of risk assessment in the first place, plainly there would be value in an input into that process from those with expertise in education? - Yes, I have already/already stated I think there are a number of people may have expertise, and that is why that has happened within a framework of guidance.

Would it also be in your view appropriate that persons with expertise in security are involved in the safety audit or risk assessment of a school? - Yes.

Anything else? - I think that these matters should be taken forward by those with the technical expertise, by those in education, because they know how they wish a building and the activities therein to function, and some of these matters should be considered within general community considerations of safety.

So presumably the national guidance you mentioned a moment or two ago amongst other things would identify those organisations who should be involved in the process of risk assessment for each school? - I think that would be of assistance, yes.

So far as implementation of the identified recommendations for any individual school is concerned, you have mentioned resources a number of times in the course of your evidence? - Yes.

Would it be important that provision was made to deal with the resource implications involved in what we are talking about? -

I/

2.50 p.m.

I think that is absolutely important. I mean, I think that there is a need to keep in balance the public expectation and need for reassurance in this area with the resources that can be made available. It has got to be seen in context; as an example, Stirling Council is facing a 20 per cent reduction in its capital capacity and capital minor practices as well and this is a reduction of £100,000 of a budget which was already looked at as already under-resourced so I would be more comfortable taking this issue forward with monies made available, specifically made available by Central Government.

Monies made available by Central Government? - I am not aware of any other source it would come from; that is where most of the funding for local government comes from.

So the broad scheme which you would endorse, am I right, would be that in due course, hopefully sooner rather than later, identified security recommendations would exist for, and let's just take your area, for schools in Stirling Council? - Yes.

The Stirling Council area? - Yes.

You were asked as to whether Stirling Council presently have a policy for school security, and the answer to that question is no, is that right? - Right, as previously stated at the beginning of April I asked schools to review their practises and gave them a number of questions to consider that I thought would be considered in calling for a policy.

You have previously worked with Strathclyde Regional Council? - That is correct.

Do Strathclyde Region have a policy for school security? - As things commenced with other authorities they were considering these matters, again with the context of risk assessment and I am aware of certain initiatives they took, I am aware of discussions that we were asking them to consult with teachers, no less following the events in Cleveland but no, not as such, I am not aware of any policy specifically of security as you have described.

What/

What about security more generally; going back to Stirling Council does Stirling Council have a security policy in relation to its property -- libraries, leisure and recreation facilities, etc.,? - Clearly there will be security measures in terms of the building, I am not aware of any document that would be covering advice in the way that this security should apply to all the buildings that happen to be owned and run by Stirling Council.

Does an authority such as Stirling Council or did an authority such as Strathclyde Regional Council employ its own staff to implement security in buildings and property? - I am aware that in parts of Glasgow where security personnel were employed because of the extent of damage and theft within the community.

So this would be on a somewhat ad hoc, as a need arises, basis? - Presumably initially it was felt it was not an ad hoc basis but it was based on the assessment of risk as they perceived it and felt it money well spent because of the significant reduction in vandalism that was achieved.

So is it fair to say that the whole issue of school security, despite the fact that schools have been around for such a long period of time, still is in its infancy so far as policy-making is concerned? - I think that is correct but I think it is the case that schools require to..... it is unfortunately the case that schools are having to address with some alacrity the matters that we are discussing.

You have mentioned matters which are now being viewed in relation to Dunblane Primary School and you have talked a little about the new Newton Primary School; can I ask you for your view, if you have any, on outer perimeter fencing? - There will be outer perimeter fencing 5 feet high at Newton Primary School, we are still considering the issue of site development at Dunblane and that matter will come on the agenda at a later stage. Again it takes us back to what we were discussing earlier and that this is an issue that can be considered on a school-by-school basis.

Plainly security doesn't begin at the door to the building itself, security must cover the whole/whole of the school property so the area within the boundary of the school must be considered from the point of view of security of children and those at the school, am I right? - Clearly intrusions in schools are more likely to have happened in the grounds and that is one of the reasons why the authority has introduced playground supervision.

Leaving aside the capital and revenue expenditure and the like would you envisage Stirling Council's policy in this area, once it is in place, covering matters such as staff security awareness and property management procedures and the like? - Absolutely.

And training in these matters? - Yes, certainly there will be training and further awareness received and discussed with head teachers in the autumn time.

Again, sorry to mention what is a point of detail, but am I right in understanding that consideration can be given to doors which at least in general open only from the inside? - Yes, that is correct -- the number of such doors alarmed have been increased in Dunblane and there will be a number of those doors in Newton and they will swing shut again after use.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: I wonder if I could try and canvass with you two separate aspects -- community schools, how are they different from ordinary schools? - I am not best placed to comment on that because although I have some knowledge of that I have no practice of working with them but it is my understanding that community schools have additional resources in terms of staff in order that the facilities can be made available for educational and recreational purposes for longer periods, so they will operate a different regime but I have no particular background on that.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: There are a number of measures which can be taken to improve security in schools, is that a fair comment to make? - Yes, absolutely, yes.

Some of them will be fairly expensive and others will be less so? - Yes.

One/

One reaches a stage where society has to decide how much it is prepared to pay in order to achieve the security desired in any given school?

- Yes.

And that would be something which a risk assessment could address? - It is something in which a risk assessment could be made in time to determine what steps can usefully be taken to handle the risks that are available, but you are right.

In an exercise one would be balancing the cost of the particular piece of equipment with the benefits which might accrue from it? - I can't see any other way to do it.

In the consideration which was given to the security system at Dunblane following the incident was any thought given to a system whereby the entry to the school was obtained by the use of a fingerprint? - Not that I am aware of, I wasn't involved in all of the discussions.

Do you see any merit in such a system whereby all attending at the door of a school, a person seeking entry simply puts their fingerprint, a pre-determined finger, against a detector which would already have on the database an imprint of that fingerprint? - I can see merit in a number of systems but given that the system put in is individual electronic keys and if any of these keys are missing can immediately be programmed out, I am interested in learning from that but there is nothing to suggest that your proposal would not have merit.

You see, such a system would also have the advantage that in the event of there being another disaster the authorities would be able to identify those who were the victims very much more readily because they would have the fingerprints already on the database; do you see that as a potential advantage? - I am struggling with this because clearly many of the victims here would not necessarily have been fingerprinted to give them access to the building premises but I certainly accept the point you are making, that we need to look at management information to how we can deal with issues of identification better than the way we did on the 13th of March.

Were there to be a problem with either a teacher or children at the school the fingerprint is stored on the database which would not only give them access to the school but further assist in identification? - It is not an issue I have been asked to consider before; I think it would have some ramifications and difficulties. I am not as yet from your point convinced of its advantages.

What do you see as its disadvantages? - In terms of having a simpler system, why you would wish to enable children within the school to be able to access the premises other than under the supervision of the teacher, even if that were the system that was operating during school hours; I don't see that as being necessary for the efficient running of the school; no, I am not necessarily convinced that the distribution of fingerprints would be necessary to take forward the matters which need to be made in terms of identification.

LORD CULLEN: Before you leave there is one point I would like to raise which I did raise when I asked questions earlier and that is the matter of existing legislation of the Health and Safety at Work Act. I am not clear, does it apply in the case of schools and if so how is it implemented.

MR. JONES: We had a very busy lunch time, sir, and unfortunately it wasn't long enough to find the answers to the questions I think you had in mind.

LORD CULLEN: Perhaps I could list what the questions are; first of all, does the Health and Safety at Work Act apply to a school such as the type we have been dealing with here. Secondly, does it have any relationship to the hazard represented by the present type of case where some intruder has caused greivous injury to people in the building, and thirdly, by what means is the Health and Safety at Work Act and the regulations implemented because if it does apply there should be a policy and there should be a risk assessment already in existence. That is why I asked that question, to find out what was already in place.

MR. JONES: I understand that and we are looking at it and as soon as we have the answers you will be informed.

JAMES/

JAMES GARDINER, Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: What is your occupation? - Retired.

What was your former occupation? - Local Government Officer, Youth and Community Officer, maybe is the title.

Did you have experience as a Youth and Community Officer dealing with the letting of premises, school premises, outwith school hours? - Yes.

Just to be clear, when did you retire as a Youth and Community Officer? - 1993.

We have heard some evidence this afternoon about proposed changes in letting premises by Stirling Council and the question I would like to ask you is in relation to that policy that existed previously. Could you have in front of you a number of documents which will be found under the reference DDH322 and I think these are to be found in folder J(Other). Perhaps it would be easier if I could refer you to document D6 within folder J(i). I understand that there is some convenient reference in J(i), if reference can be made to D139 within J(i).

Looking/

3.10 p.m.

Looking first at that bundle, that is a bundle of applications for the use firstly of educational premises and also for the Educational Service minibus? - Yes.

Are these typical examples of such applications for use? - Yes, they are.

I think you see in respect of each of them that they are all prepared by Thomas Hamilton, and seek the various things to which they refer? - Yes.

On the back of the various documents do you see printed terms and conditions? - Yes.

In respect of the applications being made, it is headed on the reverse of that document "Conditions of Let"? - Yes.

Are these the only conditions of let that would have applied to persons seeking the use of educational premises? - I am not sure what you mean by that. These were applied to each person who made the application.

By signing the application form on one side they were accepting the conditions on the other? - Yes.

But there was no other condition to which the person was subject? - Not really.

LORD CULLEN: Are these conditions printed in the file we have?

MR. LAKE: I think there has been a one-sided copy printed.

LORD CULLEN: It looks like it, yes.

MR. JONES: I think in D6 in Volume 1 there is an example of such an application.

BY LORD CULLEN: Yes. I notice that form is a 1983 form. I don't know if these are the current conditions. Did they change over the years? - Yes, they have changed two or three times over the/

the years. This is probably the current one, because it is dated 1994.

MR. LAKE: I will make available a full set of reverse side copies for the full Production 139.

LORD CULLEN: Presumably they are all the same?

MR. LAKE: Yes, as long as everybody agrees they are the same.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: Would it be fair to say these are aimed predominantly at preserving the premises from harm from persons using it? - That is correct.

There are some details there regarding two questions under the Licensing (Scotland) Act, if anyone is wanting to hold an event at which alcohol is to be consumed; is that correct? - Yes.

Anywhere within the conditions of let is there any attempt to impose a vetting requirement on the person who is organising the event to take place? - No. On the other side of the form there is a space for the responsible person, so we assume that would be the person who filled it in.

That refers to paragraph 5 of the conditions of let? - Yes.

That reads "The lesees will nominate a person who will be deemed to be the 'responsible person' in respect of any let. The lesees shall be obliged to advise the Council of any change in the responsible person, as may occur from time to time throughout the currency of the let"? - Yes.

Is that merely intended to make a person who must answer to the Council, or is it intended to denote some quality to be applied to that person? - The person responsible would be the contact person for the janitor of the school, the caretaker or officer who would have contact with that person, and who would be responsible for the general wellbeing of the organisation within the premises.

It is not intended to suggest there will be/be any categories of person who are not suitable to take on the let of the premises? - No.

If you look through there to one of the applications for use of the school minibus, the same is largely true, in that there is no particular requirement as to the bona fides or suitability of the person using the minibus? - No, other than they must be the holder of a current driving licence.

The same in relation to safety. There is also a requirement about not consuming alcohol prior to driving the Council's vehicle? - Yes.

Were these the forms still in use at the time you retired? - Yes, they were.

Could I refer you now to Production D6 within Volume J(1)? Do you see that is an application for the let of educational premises in respect of Dunblane High? - Yes.

What date is that application? - The date of the application is the 27th May, 1983.

Just beneath the box in the centre there is typed "Confirmed 6.7.83. p.p. J.G.S.K."? - Yes.

Who do those initials refer to? - The "JG" is probably myself and "SK" is the clerical assistant at the time.

On the reverse of that, which has been photocopied as the next page in the folder, that is headed again "Conditions of Let"? - Yes.

Referring back to D6, do you see also beneath the table there is reference to applications being sent to the "Clerk to the School Council/ Manager of Centre/Principal of the College"? - Yes.

Are these all means by which an application might be made for the let of school premises? - Yes.

Was there any means of centralising applications for lets to the Council? - No. It was a local issue. The diaries were kept locally.

Was/

Was that the same up till the time you retired? -
Yes.

What sort of checks were carried out of a person seeking to apply for the let of educational premises while you were employed with the Council? - There were no lets as such, the application came in, and if the space and the premises were available then the lets were confirmed.

Were there ever any checks made on the applicant?
- None at all.

Did you ever have any dealings with the Council for Dunblane High School? - Yes.

Were you aware that Thomas Hamilton sat on that Council? - Not when I was employed, no.

No cross-examination.

MR. LAKE: Dealing with the issue of the scrutiny of applicants for various posts, this may be an appropriate time to remind you, sir, that during the evidence of the Chief Executive of the Scouts, Mr. Shelmerdine, he was asked questions regarding the success rate in determining persons who might not be suitable to act as leaders of the Scout Association, and he indicated he was unable to provide that information, but would seek to do so. We have now had a letter from Mr. Shelmerdine, and rather than recalling him as a witness to the Inquiry I will just read out his letter. It starts: "I have been in touch with our UK Records Office based in Lancing, West Sussex, to seek the information requested.

"The Association does not keep exact statistics on the number of confidential inquiries (requests for vetting) it receives. Neither does it record the exact total number of checks that result in a report that an individual is unsuitable.

"However, the Records Secretary, Mrs. Win Trott, has provided me with the following information based on many years' experience as head of the department.

"The Association current checks (vets) about one thousand individuals per week. These are checks/checks on individuals who may have substantial access to young people. It includes parents, helpers and instructors.

"The Records Department also receives 400 plus warrant applications per week. These are for specific appointments such as Scout Leader, Cub Scout Leader, etc. A check is also made before these warrants are issued. This is done even though a check must have been made by the local District Scout Council before a warrant is applied for.

"However, this original check may have been made two weeks, two months, or even two years previously.

"Adults often help out for a period of time before they apply for a warrant for a specific warranty appointment.

"Of the total number of individuals checked weekly, the Records Department usually identified approximately 15-20 individuals that require some follow-up action.

"We should emphasise that these individuals do not necessarily refer to someone who is totally unsuitable to work with young people.

"The report may refer to an individual whose previous service was not entirely satisfactory in a particular role. Some queries may appear to refer to someone named in a recorded Press cutting of offences against children. Further investigation may show that this is not the same individual.

"There is a fluctuating number of individuals that has to be further investigated through the year.

"On average, Mrs. Trott believes that the Association probably identifies 5-6 individuals per month as being totally unsuitable for working with children.

"Please let me know if you require any further information or clarification of the above".

My next witness, sir, is William Cole.

WILLIAM/

WILLIAM REGINALD COLE (59) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: I live in Tullibody.

I think you are presently retired? - Yes.

What was your previous occupation? - Mechanical Engineer with the National Coal Board.

I understand you are a member of Stirling Rifle and Pistol Club? - Aye.

What premises are used for that club and its shooting activities? - The premises used are within two ranges, one at Whitestone and one at Blair Adam, I think it is called, up in Kinross.

Who whose those ranges? - The Ministry of Defence, I believe.

What arrangements does the club have for using them for its own purposes? - We rent them out.

How long have you been a member of the Stirling Rifle and Pistol Club? - I think about 23 years.

Have you had any involvement with the Committee of that club? - Yes.

What is that involvement? - I was the armourer for the club for approximately 12, 13 years.

When did you start being the armourer, roughly? - I gave up approximately a year and a half ago. 12, 13 years ago.

What duties would fall to an armourer? - I was in charge of the club weapons and ammunition.

What do you mean "in charge of"? - I kept them in my premises at home.

Does the club have any premises of its own? - No.

What/

What were the club weapons? - A .22 revolver, a .357/38 Special, a .22 rifle and a 303 rifle.

The .357: what kind of weapon was that? - A revolver.

Was the club able to acquire any further firearms? - Yes, with police permission.

Did it hold permission to enable it to acquire more any time it liked? - I think there was a .308 rifle and a 9mm, but I am not sure about that.

Was the club entitled to hold ammunition? - Yes.

How much ammunition was it entitled to hold? - Offhand I couldn't tell you exactly.

Perhaps I could read out from your statement, and you can confirm if this is correct. For .22 calibre they were entitled to purchase 10,000 rounds and possess 10,000 rounds? - That would be approximately right.

In respect of 9mm calibre, to purchase 5,000 and to possess up to 5,000? - I think that was 500. It could be 5,000, but I think it was 500.

In respect of 38/357 calibre, to purchase 5,000 and possess 5,000? - Right.

In respect of .303 calibre, to purchase 1,000 and possess 1,000? - Right.

And in respect of .308(762) calibre, to purchase 1,000 and to possess 1,000? - Yes.

You said the 9mm calibre might only be 500? - Yes.

Why would it be lower than all the others? - I didn't have a weapon. There was not a lot of people in the club wanted that calibre.

So/

3.30 p.m.

So persons coming to the club would use 9 mm ammunition? - Correct.

In respect of the ammunition where was that stored?
- In my ammunition safe at home.

Did you just take it to the club whenever it was required on club night? - Yes, correct.

How often did the club meet? - Once a month I believe at Whitestone and whenever they could I think at Blairadam.

That would be over and above Whitestone?
- Yes, we also shoot at barracks down at Forthside. I believe that was every second Wednesday, which was another range we had.

There was a club meeting every fortnight? - Yes, roughly.

How many members would turn up for these meetings? - It varied from 20 to 40, something in that range.

Did everybody turn up to shoot or did some come to meet people? - Most came to shoot.

Was everyone who turned up to shoot a member of the club or were some visitors? - Some visitors, some guests.

How many visitors could you get at an average meeting? - Sometimes none, sometimes two.

And would these be people who had just visited the club or would they already know someone who was a member? - They would be people who would be coming to join, you know; they were classed as a visitor before they were allowed to have an application form to join.

Were they entitled to shoot at the club without being a member? - Yes, under supervision.

The supervision of whom? - Myself.

Was that in your capacity as club armourer? - Yes.

For/

For how long were they entitled to shoot as a visitor?
- Three shoots.

And then what would happen? - They would be asked to join.

What was involved in joining the club? - An application form.

Who would they apply to? - The Secretary, I believe.

What requirement was there in filling out the application form? - Name, address and two members of the club to countersign it.

After the form was submitted with the two referees in that way would the person become a member at once? - I think there was a six months probationary period before you would become a full member.

What was the purpose of the probationary period? - To make sure they were safe to handle a gun, a suitable person to be handling a gun.

You were talking both of your supervision of a visitor as an armourer and the proposed period of safety; what sort of things were you looking out for in a person which would indicate that they were not suitable? - Whenever I told anybody what to do from the very start I expected them to carry it out and not to walk off the firing point without a weapon, without it first being checked, without pointing the firearm up the range all the time.

If someone was waving a firearm about what would that signify? - I would immediately take it off them and send them home.

Is that what you would do in that situation? - If they were a visitor, yes. If they were a member of the club I would put it to the committee for their discussion.

What might happen after the discussion? - They would be asked to leave.

If they were asked to leave would that be notified/notified anywhere else? - Not that I know of.

There would be no information to the police that they had been ejected from the club for unsafe practices? - Not that I know of.

Were/

Were you involved in this committee discussion regarding anyone engaged in unsafe practices? - Yes.

Where people were ejected from the club on that basis? - Yes.

How often might someone be ejected from the club on that basis? - As far as I know in my time once.

That is in the whole of your time at the club? - Yes.

What had that person done which required him to be ejected from the club? - He discharged a weapon in the ante-room and laughed about it and said "It's okay, it is blank" and I immediately asked him to go, not in these words I might add.

We have heard a person attending the club might purchase ammunition from it; if someone wanted to purchase ammunition from the Stirling Club who would they approach? - Me.

What formalities do you take before selling a person ammunition? - I had to make sure they had a firearms certificate and enter the amount into the firearms certificate.

Did everyone shooting at the club require to have a firearms certificate? - No.

What would someone do if they were to buy ammunition and didn't possess a firearms certificate? - If they didn't use all the ammunition they would write their name on the box and give it back to me.

Someone who didn't have a firearms certificate could buy it but give it back to you? - Yes.

Was there any way of monitoring whether a person had used all their ammunition? - I would usually stand next to them and I knew what they had fired.

Are you aware that Thomas Hamilton attended the Stirling club? - Yes.

When/

When did he first attend? - Approximately 10 years ago.

Did he attend at a visitor at first? - Yes.

Did he attend with anyone? - I don't know, I can't remember if he was brought up by any member or not; I know I was asked by the then President to go and make sure that he was a safe gun.

Did you? - Yes.

Was he? - Yes.

Did you form an impression as to whether or not he had used a firearm before? - Yes.

Did you think he had or he hadn't? - He had.

What led you to think that? - The way he was talking about it.

What sort of things did he say? - "I know about double action, I know about single action, this is a handgun".

You were satisfied as to his safety? - At that time, yes.

You say at that time, do you have.....? - Now I am not.

Leaving aside what happened in March did you have any reason to doubt Hamilton's safety with a gun? - No.

Did he attend the club regularly? - As far as I know, yes.

Has that been throughout the time you were at the club? - Yes.

In particular between the years of about 1988 to 1995 did he attend? - I wouldn't say he was at every shoot, no, but he did attend.

Did he purchase ammunition from you during/during that period? - I wouldn't swear to it, I can't tell you aye, I can't tell you no.

If he did purchase ammunition from you a record would be available of that? - It would be on his firearms certificate.

Just to be clear about this, if someone who has a firearms certificate buys ammunition from you and uses it on the range that day would that require to be entered into his certificate? - I don't think so in law, no, but if he came and purchased an amount from me I would put it in, I always put it in as course.

Is that always the practice? - Yes. All the ammunition, I would put it in the certificate and write on it.

Are you aware whether or not that same practice is carried out at other clubs, that it is always written on it? - It should be.

Do you think it is a matter of good practice rather than legally advised? - Yes.

We have heard earlier that some persons choose to use their own ammunition, reconstituted ammunition rather than purchased ammunition; can you remember what sort of ammunition Hamilton used? - No, when he was shooting with a .22 it was bought ammunition, it wasn't tailored, manufactured.

Is it common or uncommon for persons to use ammunition which they reconstituted themselves? - Very common.

Is it a common for a person to use purely purchased ammunition? - If he doesn't have the means to reload his own, yes, he has no option.

What is required to reload ammunition? - A press, a set of scales and obviously the requirement to make the bullet.

BY LORD CULLEN: Could you give me some idea as to the cost of this equipment leaving aside the raw materials? - The press, I believe it was £84 for my one, £40 something for my scales to measure the powder.

Are/

Are these up to date prices? - No, quite some time ago.

You don't know the current prices? - No.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: Is the equipment bulky? - The press sits about 18 inches tall, you bolt it to a bench, the scales are about a foot long, very accurate.

Apart from the machinery or the equipment to remake it what is required as of raw materials to reconstitute ammunition? - A primer cap, powder, the bullet head and the reconstituted case.

The reconstituted case, is that what is left over after the ammunition has been used previously? - Yes.

Where would you obtain supplies of these things?
- From a gun dealer.

Would you require a firearms certificate to purchase these? - No.

Did you form an impression of Hamilton during the time he attended the club? - He was pretty much a loner, he would stand to one side, he wouldn't come and join in the talk, you know at ceasefire and things like that, he would stand to one side.

Were there other people who did that in the club?
- Not very many.

But are there others? - Yes, I suppose so.

You have mentioned that, I think, when Hamilton shot the .22 he didn't use.....he wouldn't have been able to use reconstituted ammunition; why is that? - You can't reconstitute a rim fired bullet.

Why can't you reconstitute a rim fired bullet? - It can't be done, there is no primer cap on a .22 bullet, it is struck on the rim; after it has been used it can't be used again.

What/

What is the difference between that and another bullet? - The primer cap of another bullet is right in the centre and can be removed and a new one inserted in its place.

When Hamilton first attended the club what sort of weapon was he shooting? - To my knowledge, none.

When Hamilton first attended the club I think you said that was 10 or 11 years ago what calibre of gun did he use? - It was the club's .22.

He used the club's .22? - Yes.

Did he always use the club's .22? - No, other people would loan him weapons.

Did he switch from using the .22 to using other calibres? - Yes.

What other calibres would he switch to? - .9 millimetres as far as I know.

Any others? - Not that I know of.

Are all the ranges used by the club able to accommodate all calibre of weapons? - Yes.

In the early days of Stirling Rifle Club was it possible to shoot all calibres of weapons? - As far as I know, yes.

During that period has there been any move from using small bore, a general move from using small bore weapons to using full bore weapons? - No.

No more common today than say 11 years ago; have there been any new sporting events arisen within that period? - Sporting events?

Pistol events? - I believe practical pistol is a new one.

If someone first attended 15 years ago what sort of event would they be engaged in? - Target shooting with a revolver or automatic pistol.

What/

What exactly do you mean by target shooting? -
A target facing you and you point and fire.

What sort of distance would the target be away? -
From 10 feet back to 100 metres, 100 yards.

The distance would depend on the weapon? -
Not necessarily.

Might you use a pistol at 100 yards? - Yes.

What size is the target? - A figure 11 I believe.

BY LORD CULLEN: What does that mean? -
That is the type of target.

What does it look like? - A human being.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: 15 years ago that was the sort of target that was used, was it? - Yes.

Was the target static or moving? - Static.

BY LORD CULLEN: Is it just an outline or is it more than the outline of a figure? - It is a figure in battledress that the Army use.

You can make out some sort of features? - Yes, a helmet and what have you.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: Do people ever shoot at circular targets or rings? - Yes, we take them ourselves.

What is more common say 15 years ago, simple circles or.....? - I would say both, they were just as common.

Is that still true today? - Yes, as far as I am concerned that is what I shoot at, both.

You said that the target shooting was what you may do 15 years ago; what other disciplines/disciplines are available now? - We have got what is called practical pistol; I don't particularly like it.

What is the difference between that and target shooting? - You have to be more quick with your shooting.

Why? - Because that is the discipline that they have, you have two seconds to fire two rounds and things like that; I don't like it, I don't know a lot about it.

BY LORD CULLEN: Why don't you like it? - I don't have a weapon for a start, I only have a revolver; I don't particularly like automatic weapons.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: Is it necessary to have an automatic weapon to engage in practical pistol? - Yes.

Are the targets in practical pistol static or moving?
- It faces you and then it turns away from you.

What is depicted on the target in practical pistol?
- I think it is figure 11 again, an Army target.

Are any other targets used at the club at the moment? - We have got some deer targets and some wild boar targets, you can buy them yourself at different shops.

Are there any other three dimensional targets used? - No, not that I know of.

Do you use dummies or anything like that? - No.

Are you aware of them being used in any other clubs? - No.

BY LORD CULLEN: Do you shoot a police pistol?
- Yes.

Do you take part in that discipline? - Yes.

What/

What do you use for that? - A .38 special.

A revolver? - Yes, a Smith & Wesson model 10, a police model 10.

Is that used on a turned target? - Yes.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE:

When did you last see Hamilton at the Stirling Club? - I think it was about 18 months, maybe two years, something like that I last seen him.

In/

3.50 p.m.

In the six months prior to that how often had he attended? - I couldn't tell you exactly. Two, three, maybe even four or five times a year: I couldn't tell you.

Could it be he was not attending at all in that period, and that for about five years he didn't attend? - Possibly. I don't know. I was going through a traumatic time: my brother-in-law was dying from cancer, so I wasn't attending.

Then you recall meeting Hamilton either 18 months or two years ago? - Yes.

Can you remember where that was? - I think it was at Whitestone Range.

What sort of event was being carried out at that time? - Just the standard. Pistol shooting on standard targets.

Was Hamilton there with anybody? - I couldn't tell you. I don't know.

Can you remember what sort of weapon he was using? - I believe it was a 9mm Browning, but I am not sure.

What sort of targets was he doing on that? - Figure 11 and round hole targets

Can you remember what sort of targets Hamilton was using? - No.

Were you able to see Hamilton shooting that day? - Yes.

Did anything strike you as odd about Hamilton shooting on that occasion? - No.

Prior to that date had anything ever struck you as odd about Hamilton's shooting? - No.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: You tell us that the Stirling Rifle and Pistol Club owned some firearms? - Yes.

You told us about them. Am I correct in understanding/understanding that some people would come along to the club who did not possess their own firearms? - Yes.

So would such persons use firearms belonging to the club? - Yes.

Would those members of the club who did possess their own firearms sometimes use club firearms as well? - Yes.

And I dare say there would be others who only used their own firearms? - Yes.

You have told us that the club themselves owned four weapons? - Yes.

Can I take it therefore that that was a sufficient number of weapons to provide those who were attending and requiring to use someone else's weapon? - Yes, that is right.

So it was only necessary for the club to have for example one .22 Smith and Wesson revolver? - Yes.

How many people would use the range at the same time? - There is 12 firing points. If there were 12 people there 12 would use it, and if there were four people there four would use it. The maximum was 12 at the one time.

Let's suppose you have half a dozen people using the range at the same time. Would they all be using the same type of weapon or would they be using different calibres of weapon? - Do you mean a rifle and a shotgun at the same time?

Perhaps you could help me a little, because I am speaking from a position of some ignorance about these matters? - We shot rifle so long and then we shot pistol for so long. At one point everyone was using rifles, and the next time everybody was using pistols.

Is that because people were competing against each other? - No. You can't have people wanting to shoot rifle at 100 yards and people wanting to shoot a pistol at 50 yards.

Is/

Is it essentially a different thing, that they are testing their own ability, rather than competing against the man next to them on the range? - On the range it is just shooting for yourself. If you are in a competition you are shooting against the man next to you, to get a better score than him.

Let's assume everyone was using pistols: would they all be using pistols of the same calibre? - No.

I want to put a hypothesis to you. Let's assume nobody who attended the club owned their own weapons. How many weapons would the club need to possess in those circumstances to allow those who attended the club to use the facility? - I have no idea. How can I answer that?

How many people who attended the club did not own any weapons, in general terms? - Most people who are members of the club owned their own weapons.

Would most people own all the types of weapons they would need to fire? - No, that is why the club had other weapons.

But four was enough? - Yes.

So if for example you quadrupled the numbers and you had 16 weapons owned by the club, would that be enough to allow the club to operate, assuming there was no private possession of firearms? - I don't understand your question. I couldn't have kept that amount of weapons in my house, my own home.

I am not putting the questions very well. Forgive me. I will try again. I know this is an assumption, and it is a difficult matter, and if you cannot help me please just say. If we assume that nobody who was attending the club had their own weapons, do you think somewhere in the region of a dozen to 20 weapons owned by the club would be enough to allow the club to operate? - I suppose so. I don't see how that comes about, how you are getting that question, to be quite honest with you. It is like say a battalion of soldiers, how many rifles do they need.

Let's/

Let's just leave the reason for the question to one side. You are indicating that somewhere between 12 to 20 might well be sufficient? - No, I am not saying that at all: I wouldn't say that.

You can't help us with that? - No.

Now, you were the armourer of the club for a period?
- Yes.

And you kept the club's weapons at home? - Yes.

What arrangements did you have at home for the storage of the weapons? - A lockfast gun cupboard with steel doors, steel lined.

For those of us who are not familiar with these arrangements, can you elaborate? - The rifles were kept in a gun cupboard with a chain through the trigger guard, padlocked, and the rifles had the bolts removed: the handguns were held in a steel pistol case, which was locked and bolted to the floor.

So if someone were burgling your house and they came across the gun cupboard would there be any way at all in which they would be able to steal those guns? - If they had an acetylene torch you could burn your way into it, I suppose.

So you were more than satisfied with these arrangements, that they were sufficiently secure? - Yes, and so were the police.

The police would come to inspect? - Yes.

Presumably it would be important that as the armourer you had satisfactory arrangements for the security of the weapons? - Yes.

And while you have said a moment or two ago that you would not be happy with having a substantial number of guns in the house, in principle would there be any reason why the gun cupboard facility could not have held more than four weapons? - You would just buy a bigger box.

Do/

Do you have guns of your own as well as the club guns? - Yes.

And do you use the same facilities for storing those weapons? - Yes.

How many weapons of your own do you have? - Five rifles and five handguns.

So when you were armourer of the club you held in the region of 14 or so weapons at home? - Yes.

You told us that to your knowledge one member of the club was expelled for discharging a gun in an ante room? - Yes.

Were you directly involved in that expulsion? - Yes.

Were you the person who expelled him? - Immediately.

Did you or any member of the club take any other action in the light of that expulsion? - I have already answered that question to that gentleman (indicates Mr. Lake). I said no.

I do apologise. You didn't inform the police? - No.

Did that man have a firearms certificate? - Yes.

The disciplines you talked about in relation to a police pistol and a practical pistol: do those disciplines require the use of a pistol, or could you use a revolver? - A police pistol 1 is a revolver competition; a practical pistol is for an automatic weapon.

Why is an automatic weapon required for that discipline? - That is the type of discipline it is. You use that type of weapon. I believe you have to drop the magazine out and insert another magazine and continue firing.

So rapid fire would be necessary? - Correct.

CROSS/

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: When the club is holding a meeting does it keep any attendance record of those attending? - I think the Secretary does keep a record, yes.

And if there is a competition do you keep a record of those who enter the competition? - Yes.

When you sold ammunition to your members did you keep a record of their names? - No.

You have told us that you were unable on occasions to attend at club meetings due to personal circumstances? - That is correct.

When you were so incapacitated was it possible for members to acquire ammunition through the club? - No.

When you expelled the member from the club did it occur to you that perhaps you might draw the circumstances to the attention of the police? - No.

When was the expulsion? - Seven or eight years ago, at Forthside.

Did you not think at that time the police might be interested in somebody who was reckless with a firearm? - No, because it was a blank he fired; it was not a live round.

But it was sufficiently serious for you to immediately seek to expell him from the club, was it not? - Yes.

And although it was sufficiently serious for you to take those steps you did not think it was sufficiently serious to inform the police? - That was the decision of the committee.

That was not your decision alone; it was that of the committee? - Yes, to take no further action.

Do you think that was a responsible course of action?
- If it had been a live round I would have immediately informed the police, but as it was not a live round, no.

BY/

BY LORD CULLEN: Can you tell me broadly speaking how many firearms would a typical member of your club have? - Anything from two to eight.

And within that range of two to eight would there be cases in which there was more than one gun of the same calibre? - Yes. I own two guns of the same calibre.

Well, let's take your case as an example. Are they precise duplicates, or is there a difference between them? - There is a difference between them. One is a complete target pistol, a .22 target pistol, and the other one is just a standard .22 pistol.

Can you speak for others? If they have got more than one gun of the same calibre are there likely to be differences, or will they be straight duplicates? - I would say most of them are different.

You have been asked certain questions about what it would involve for the club to replace the guns which are used. To what extent do the members of your club have particular modifications between one gun and the next? Are there differences? If you take for example all the guns which were 9 mm, are they all likely to be the same, or would there be differences in feature? - Different features will just be in relation to the manufacturer. It could be a Browning, a Smith and Wesson, a Luger, whatever manufacturer it is.

Does your club have any competitions where features are of particular importance, in other words where you couldn't go in for a particular competition unless you had a particular feature? - No.

When you keep handguns at home are they dismantled to any extent? - No.

Would it be practicable to dismantle them to any extent? - Very impracticable.

Why is that? - You would keep losing screws if you dismantled a revolver.

You have a pistol, don't you? - I have a/

a .22 pistol, yes. In fact I remove the slide and the magazine from that.

Do you store them separately? - No.

But you could obviously keep them somewhere else?
- Yes.

And do you have any pistol apart from that? - I have a .357.

And that is a revolver? - Yes.

And I suppose that might be fiddly, would it? - Yes.

You were asked some questions from Mr. Taylor about keeping an attendance record. What categories of information would you put in that record? The date, presumably, the name and what else? - Yes. The date and the range is on the top of it, then you print your name, sign your name, and if you have a visitor they print and sign their name beside yours.

Would it be practicable if you wanted to do this to record the calibre of gun that is shot? - I believe you have to record the calibre of gun that is shot within the range log.

In terms of what is and what is not practicable, you could do that? - Yes. I believe you have to put in the range log for the Army's purposes. They want to know what calibres have been shot that day.

If the club wanted to know that you could obviously keep a record? - Yes.

RE-/

4.10 p.m.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: You said in your earlier evidence that you removed bolts from rifles? - Yes.

Were they your rifles or the club's? - Both my rifle and the club's.

Why did you remove the bolts? - Because they can't fire the rifle without the bolts, it is an extra safety precaution.

Where did you keep the bolts? - In a steel box.

Is that a separate steel box from the one in which the rifle was kept? - Yes.

Is that the same reason for removing the side magazine from a pistol? - Yes.

You said you had two .22 pistols? - Yes, correct.

I think you said that one of them was a pure target pistol? - Yes, correct.

What is the other one? - It is an automatic pistol.

What do you use the other one for? - Target shooting obviously.

That is precisely my point, what is the difference between the two of them if they are both going to be used for target shooting? - One is very accurate, the other one isn't so accurate.

Why is one so accurate? - Because it is designed that way.

BY LORD CULLEN: What is it about it that makes it more accurate? - You would have to ask the designer of that, I don't know.

When you bought it were there features advertised about it? - Your hand was actually moulded to the grip, it didn't slip around in your hand when you held it.

Is/

Is the barrel length the same in each case? - Four and a half inches against three and three-eighths inches.

Are the sights similar or different? - The sights are completely different.

RE-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE:
And is this a speciality target pistol? - Yes.

It is a more accurate one? - Yes.

Why do you have the other one if it is less accurate?
- I bought it first.

Do you still use it? - Yes.

Why do you use it if it is less accurate? - It is for the joy of shooting it.

Now, in relation to the purpose for having any pistol, it is for target shooting; do you understand that to be the only good reason for having a pistol? - That is the only legal way to have a pistol in Britain.

And that target shooting is going to have to be carried out at a pistol and rifle club? - Yes.

So if the person is to be expelled from the club he is left in a position effectively where he no longer has good reason for holding that weapon? - Yes, correct.

GORDON TAYLOR (35) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: You are presently a detective sergeant stationed at Tulliallan Police College? - Yes.

How many years police service do you have? - 11 years.

Although you are currently at Tulliallan Police College am I right in saying that between March 1991 and May 1994 you were a detective constable within the Family Unit of Central Scotland Police? - Yes.

Did/

Did you carry out an investigation into the activities of Thomas Hamilton? - I did.

Could I ask you to have before you Folder I of the Productions? - I also referred to a copy of the report.

I think there will be a copy of that in the Productions. I'm going to ask you about certain of these investigations you carried out and in respect to what they were carried out and can I ask you not to identify the names of any persons in respect of whom an investigation took place? - Yes.

Could you look at document D3 in the folder? - Yes.

What is that? - It is a memorandum report from me to a Detective Superintendent, an internal police report.

We see it is headed "Thomas Watt Hamilton (39)" and it has his date of birth and his employment or his unemployment and his address? - Yes.

Under the heading "Antecedent history" you have a number of background facts about Hamilton? - Yes.

Do you see at the bottom of that paragraph, the last sentence, it is stated "Mr. Hamilton is the holder of a firearms certificate which is recorded, as per procedure, on the Scottish Criminal Records Office computer files"? - Yes.

Was that known at that time as the SCRO? - Yes, at that time.

Was it a routine matter to obtain that information in the course of the inquiry by the Family Unit? - Yes, it would be to check out the possible aspects of his background.

Was that with a particular view to the firearms or.....? - Mainly for a criminal record.

Looking over to the next page do you have a detail of complaints which had arisen in respect of clubs held by Hamilton at Denny High School? - Yes./

Yes.

In the second paragraph on page two you actually have a complaint by a parent who said her son had been attending this High School and that Hamilton had required him to change into ill-fitting trunks to perform gymnastic exercises? - Yes.

Do you see the next paragraph refers to that parent carrying out further investigations and attending at the school where she discovered Hamilton only with another boy, not her son, and that he was taking photographs of that boy? - Yes, that is correct.

How did you come to hear about that complaint? - The matter was referred or reported initially to the Deputy Chief Constable and, I believe, Dunblane Police Office; it was subsequently passed to the Family Unit for inquiry.

Was that reported by the parent? - The parent reported it to the local Councillor who passed on that information.

Did you speak to the parent? - Yes, I did.

When did you speak to the parent? - I have a copy of the statement that the parent made in my folder if I could refer to that, I have the date I took the statement from him, can I refer to that?

Yes? - I am sorry but I am actually a bit confused about the two, there was actually two complaints; the second complaint referred to a complaint through a Councillor, not this one.

Right, the first one on page two which is the 26th of May? - Yes.

Was that complaint made by a parent to the Family Unit? - Yes, that complaint was made to the Family Unit by the parent.

And did you speak to that parent? - Yes, I did, I obtained a statement from that person.

Is that really narrating the facts that you set out here on page two? - Yes.

As/

As well as the parent that actually made the complaint there did you speak to both parents of the boys concerned -- sorry, a parent of both boys concerned? - Yes, I believe from memory the first parent who found this child in the gymnasium with Thomas Hamilton reported the matter to the mother of the child who was in the gymnasium and she then..... I think she may have had some connection with the Social Work Department and it filtered through to the Family Unit in that matter and I then interviewed everyone.

Could I ask you to look at page three of that memorandum; you see there in the second paragraph starting about an inch down reference to a further complaint being received from the second parent regarding Mr. Hamilton's club which was held at Dunblane High School and the second parent's "Nine year old son attended this club and recently told his parents that Mr. Hamilton had called him away from the other boys at the club and took him into another hall. There Mr. Hamilton had caused the child to change into ill-fitting trunks, perform exercises which were photographed and at which time no other person was present. This complaint is completely unconnected to the matters at Denny and quite independent". It says the parent "Initially contacted her local Councillor, Mrs. Davidson, who passed the matter on to the Deputy Chief Constable, Central Scotland Police and Dunblane Police Office"? - Yes, that is the one I was becoming confused with here, that was the second complaint.

That was passed to you? - That is correct, yes.

And you note there in the paragraph that there has been particular concern in relation to the second complaint arising out of the sort of exercises that were going on without a need to go into what exercise it was? - Yes.

Adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m.

FRIDAY, 21st JUNE, 1996.

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

LORD CULLEN: Can we begin, Mr. Lake?

MR. LAKE: Thank you, sir.

GORDON TAYLOR, (Recalled),

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: As we closed last night you mentioned the second complaint that came in, and I had finished the part of the report that detailed the subject matter of that complaint? - Yes.

What did you do to investigate that second complaint? - I approached the people concerned and interviewed them.

Who did you interview? - The child concerned, and the child's parent.

Once you had gathered information from both complaints what did you do with it? - I prepared this report.

Did you discuss that with anyone prior to preparing this report? - With my line manager at the Family Unit, Detective Sergeant Moffat.

What was your purpose in preparing this report? - To progress the matter further. The reason for the report was to submit it through my supervisors to the Procurator Fiscal to obtain a search warrant.

Could I refer you to the fourth page of the report, and can I ask you to read out the last three paragraphs of that? - "The investigation is now becoming problematic due to the numbers of individuals learning of the ongoing enquiry. It is only a matter of time before Hamilton learns of the investigation".

Yes? - "Bearing in mind the photographs/photographs may be of a lewd nature, which are still thought to be in Hamilton's possession, it is of great importance to secure this material as soon as possible to prevent its disposal, bearing in mind Hamilton has previously withheld photographs from the police as highlighted in Detective Sergeant Hughes' report", which is attached to this report.

Yes? - "To this end I respectfully request this report be forwarded to the Procurator Fiscal, Stirling, for consideration to be given to the issue of a warrant for search of Hamilton's home address to secure these photographs, photographic equipment, documentation and other items which may be of relevance to this enquiry".

Thank you. I would like to ask you about some of the points raised in these three paragraphs. Firstly, why were you concerned about individuals learning of this enquiry? - The main concern was that Mr. Hamilton himself may find out about the ongoing enquiry.

Why did that worry you? - I had previous knowledge that where investigations had been ongoing before Mr. Hamilton had created a smokescreen situation for the police and had obstructed the police.

How had he obstructed the police? - He withheld photographs from a previous investigation.

What smokescreen situation or tactic had he engaged in? - I had knowledge that he had made numerous complaints against the police on previous occasions, and I wanted to ensure before we went any further that I wasn't giving him that opportunity.

Looking at the second paragraph, you state "Bearing in mind the photographs may be of a lewd nature.....". Why did you think the photographs might be of a lewd nature? - Because of a statement from one of the children whom I had interviewed, who had described the particular situation, the particular situation which we referred to yesterday, with the exercise. My interpretation of that was that that may well be lewd, and I had to have the photographs to back up what the child had said, and to have a proper interpretation/interpretation of that photograph myself.

You say "It is of great importance to secure this material as soon as possible to prevent its disposal"? - Yes.

What was your concern in writing that? - Mr. Hamilton when he found out about the enquiry and that we had an interest in the material he had, that he may well dispose of it.

At the end of the second last paragraph you refer to a report by Detective Sergeant Hughes. Is that the report which is attached to that production? - Yes, that is correct: with a number of charges on the front page.

I think we see two pages, numbering 10 different charges? - Yes.

And they all relate to events in 1991, two years prior to the events you are concerned with? - Yes.

And beyond those charges there is a summary report and then a statement of the facts which gave rise to those charges being drafted? - Yes, sir.

Is that report by Detective Sergeant Hughes attached to this memorandum? - Yes, that is a copy of the summary report.

Did you attach anything else to this memorandum?
- No, apart from the statement at the back from a gentleman.

That is the statement on the last three pages of that, is it? - That is correct, yes, sir.

That is from someone who works in a camera shop called Jessops? - Yes, sir, that is correct.

Can I ask you to look at Production D5 in that folder? Do you recognise that? - Yes, sir, I do.

Do you see that is again a memorandum from/from this time Detective Sergeant Hughes to Detective Superintendent at CID Headquarters? - That is correct.

Were you aware of that at the time you wrote the memorandum you have previously referred to? - I was aware of its existence, sir, yes.

But you did not send that with your report to the Procurator Fiscal? - No. When I say I sent the report to the Procurator Fiscal, I took it personally.

But that was not part of the documents you put to the Procurator Fiscal on this occasion? - No.

I think there may have been some evidence earlier from Detective Sergeant Moffat which gave the impression that that had gone to the Fiscal: but is that just a mistake? - Yes. I certainly never took it to the Procurator Fiscal with my report, although it was discussed.

You said you took this personally to the Procurator Fiscal. Why did you do that? - Because I felt that there was a matter of urgency, obtaining the warrant to secure the items I have referred to in my report, and I was hoping that should the Fiscal issue the warrant I could go and pursue the enquiry shortly thereafter.

Your principal concern was for a warrant to recover these photographs? - And other things relevant to the enquiry.

What other things? - As well as the complaints regarding the children that we have referred to there were also concerns raised by other parents about the running and operation of the club from a financial aspect, and the fact that there was money changing hands.

Yes? - There was a statement suggesting that Mr. Hamilton had purchased £10,000 worth of camera equipment, and I knew he had been unemployed since 1985, and there was a suspicion I had that there may be some sort of embezzlement of funds, and the warrant was for the purpose of obtaining evidence or information if it was going to be/be there in relation to all these enquiries or complaints.

Is that the embezzlement you referred to in the second paragraph on the fourth page of your memorandum? - Yes, sir, that is correct.

And that was purely based on the suspicions of parents? - It was based on information from parents, yes, but also the fact that it appeared from a statement which had already been submitted that Mr. Hamilton had quite a flow of cash if he was able to brag about purchasing £10,000 of camera equipment, and obviously the suspicion arose in my mind where was the money coming from, and the obvious answer may have been the funds from the sports club.

Did you have any evidence regarding the purchase of £10,000 of camera equipment at that time? - I had the statement attached to this report from the gentleman from Jessops.

LORD CULLEN: Mr. Lake, is that in the file? I have some difficulty in finding it.

MR. LAKE: In the copy I have it is in D3/1.

LORD CULLEN: I have got D3/1, but I don't have anything attached to it; I simply have Mr. Taylor's report.

MR. LAKE: I have a four page report from Mr. Taylor, and following that is the summary of charges.

LORD CULLEN: Thank you. I have been handed a copy of that statement.

MR. LAKE: If the other parties do not have that I will arrange for copies to be made available.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: In the fourth page of your memo, although you refer to the embezzlement you state that the purpose of seeking the warrant is that you want to recover the photographs, because you are concerned that is what is going to be disposed of; is that correct? - I am/am sorry; can you repeat that?

On the fourth page of your statement there your principal concern appears to be the recovery of the photographs which might have depicted lewd conduct? - Yes, I would agree that was my principal concern.

You said you took the statement with your memorandum to the Procurator Fiscal? - Yes.

Who was the Procurator Fiscal you spoke to? - Do you want me to name him, sir?

Yes? - Mr. Gallagher.

Where did you go and see him? - At his office.

When did you go to see him? - The memorandum is dated 9th June. It would be either on that day or several days after that: within a few days of the memorandum.

For how long did you speak to Mr. Gallagher? - A considerable period of time. Perhaps half an hour or maybe more; I can't remember really. I certainly did have a lengthy discussion with him.

What was the outcome of that discussion? - The warrant was not issued.

That was the warrant to seek the photographs which might have had the lewd content? - As I have already said, the warrant was for the whole enquiry, and the evidence I had hoped to find should a warrant be issued. It was not just in relation to the photographer, but obviously that was our primary concern.

Did Mr. Gallagher discuss with you why the warrant was not issued? - Yes.

What did he say? - He told me that the content of the report did not amount to any acts of criminality.

Was he referring to any particular parts of the report when he said that? - He was referring/referring to the whole report.

Is that referring also the question of embezzlement?

- Yes.

Are you suggesting from that he was suggesting to you that embezzlement was not a crime? - No. What he was saying was that the information contained in the report and the information we discussed, there was nothing that amounted to an act of criminality involving any of the offences I had suggested in the closing paragraphs of my report.

The request to seek a search warrant not being progressed, what did you do? - I am sorry?

What did you do following the refusal of Mr. Gallagher to seek a search warrant? - I returned to my office and discussed it with Detective Sergeant Moffat.

And what conclusion did you come to? - That as agents of the Procurator Fiscal, if he was telling us there was no act of criminality obviously we could not pursue that from that angle.

What was your understanding of what was meant by "no act of criminality"? - That no crime had been committed.

Did you discuss with him the circumstances in which there might be sufficient information to say that a crime had been committed? - Yes, I did.

And what did he say? - He just said that in his opinion that was the case, and that was the end of it.

Did you make any further enquiries regarding these matters? - At the time there were still some parents to be seen, and I followed up enquiries and spoke to parents. He also told me -- I did explain to Mr. Gallagher that there were still some parents to be seen, and I intended going to see them. I was also told that should the information forthcoming from these interviews be of the same nature contained in this report then there would not be any point referring that to the Procurator/

Procurator Fiscal. I did go, however, and interview other parents in relation to this enquiry, but there was nothing further forthcoming.

To be clear, you told Mr. Gallagher you were going to obtain further statements from parents? - Yes.

Was that in respect of these two complaints? - It was in general terms. There were a number of complaints about the running of the boys club and the funding, and there were one or two parents who still had to be seen.

Yes? - The overall picture had to be finished off. There were two or three people I still had to see.

Of the people you were going to see, was that relating to concerns regarding the running of the club? - Yes.

And it was in relation to that he said that if it was just more of the same there was no need to come back? - That is correct.

Did you uncover anything else in your further enquiries? - No, nothing of a substantive nature.

Did you make a request of the Scout Association?
- I did, yes.

When did you make this? - On or about the 20th October, 1993.

That is some months after the original request for a warrant? - Yes.

Why were you speaking to the Scout Association?
- I had information that Mr. Hamilton had been previously involved in the Scout Association, and that there had been concerns many years previous. My intention was to go to the Scout Association to see if there was anything on file regarding identities of children on these dates, with a view to the fact these children would now be adults and may be able to say something about the activities of Mr. Hamilton in a clearer fashion than they would have been able to in their childhood./ childhood.

Who did you speak to in the Scout Association? -
I think it was a gentleman by the name of Proctor.

What information was he able to give you? - Initially the Scout Association were reluctant to impart any information, and it was by agreement that I had a look at the file.

Did the file give you information? - Yes.

What/

10.20 a.m.

What was the information? - Just that there had been concerns some 20 years previously regarding Mr. Hamilton's activities and unhealthy interest in children and general issues like that.

Did you give any specific instances? - There is a document which I took the notes from and the particular instances that he was displaying irresponsible behaviour because of outdoor activities by taking young favourite Scouts for weekends during the winter and sleeping in his van.

That was information contained within the Scout file?
- That was within the Scout file.

Was that all you were able to get from the Scout file?
- No, I had a whole list of things.

Can you tell us what they are? - "His personality displays evidence of a persecution complex coupled with rather grandiose delusions of his own abilities".

Did it say in the file whose information that was? - It was a letter from Brian Fairgrieve.

Did you speak to Mr. Fairgrieve? - Yes.

Did he confirm that was his information? - Yes.

Was he able to say on what he had based it? - No, it was some gut feeling.

What else were you able to take from the Scout file?
- That he had been.....that Hamilton had been blacklisted, that there was a suspicion of inappropriate behaviour with the boys and a mental imbalance. These comments were made in 1974 and in his records a letter rambles on about having done nothing wrong, he spoke to a gentleman who was the Deputy Commissioner at the time, a summer camp at Oban, alcohol having been involved and older Scouts being intoxicated and Scouts were often being stripped and I understand that the Scouts were tying up one Scout in a canoe and floating him on the water.

I/

I think we have heard some evidence about the fact that there has been complaints made by Hamilton about that Scout Master? - Yes.

Is that correct? - I am not sure, I just have my own notes.

Might it be that these were the complaints that Hamilton had made? - There was a lot of correspondence in the file both from Hamilton.....it was like keeping a run of daily correspondence between themselves and Mr. Hamilton, there were some clips from newspapers, newspaper cuttings, adverts regarding the Rovers I think which was Mr. Hamilton's group that had started out being called Stirling Rovers and a number of letters to and from.....a cutting from the Scotsman, parents backing Hamilton after they stopped and references to the Ombudsman's report and the last correspondence in the file from Hamilton was on the 12th of November, 1986 and he was complaining about not being allowed to answer allegations put against him.

There is no information regarding Hamilton's behaviour between 1986 and 1993 when you made your enquiry? - Not in the file, no.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: If you go back to your original investigations in relation to complaints concerning Hamilton's conduct in Denny High School and in Dunblane High School, so far as the Denny incident is concerned am I right in understanding that Hamilton gave a reason for asking a boy to change into trunks based upon going swimming or something to that effect? - Yes, that is correct.

Did you investigate whether swimming facilities were available at the school? - I think so, yes.

What was the outcome of your investigations? - I attended at the school and took possession of a let form; the gymnasium was booked by Mr. Hamilton and also my enquiry was as to whether Mr. Hamilton would be entitled to use the swimming pool and the staff said no, under no circumstances would he be entitled to use the swimming pool; it was purely the gymnasium.

So/

So Hamilton lied to you when he gave you that explanation? - I never actually spoke to Mr. Hamilton.

Who did Hamilton give the explanation to? - That information came from a child who I spoke to, a statement from the child stated that Mr. Hamilton had said he wished them to dress in trunks or short brief trunks in view of the fact that they may have time for swimming later, and I felt that was the reason the boy had the swimming trunks on.

There was no suggestion from the boy that he did go swimming? - No, he did not go swimming.

And, in fact, there were no facilities available to Hamilton to take the boy swimming? - No.

Did Hamilton claim in the literature that other qualified instructors would be present when he was dealing with the boys at Denny and Stirling? - Yes, that is correct.

Did your investigations reveal whether or not that claim was true? - The children that I spoke to who attended at the youth clubs without exception spoke to no other person being there apart from one occasion in Dunblane where I think there had been a female present at some point.

So in general terms again it would appear that that claim in the literature, so far as your investigations are concerned, were shown to be untrue? - That is correct.

In addition to a complaint from parents relating to swimming trunks and photographs and the like were there also complaints relating to Hamilton over-working the boys? - Yes, there was.

Can you elaborate? - The example that was given to me was having a wee boy hanging from wallbars for a considerable period of time while Mr. Hamilton took photographs of this.

Is it fair to say that as a result of your investigations you had some concern about Hamilton? - I did, yes.

Can/

Can you tell us how concerned you were? - It is a difficult question to quantify concern; I was concerned as a Child Protection Officer and as a parent myself regarding the information that was coming from people I spoke to so my concerns were very high.

And can you elaborate upon the nature of your concerns? - My concerns were that young children were being exploited, they were being used for whatever purpose, it may be whatever initially that Hamilton was to take these types of photographs but I felt there was something more but I just didn't know what.

Were you concerned that there was something improper or unhealthy going on? - Yes.

Did your investigations reveal whether or not the parents concerned were alarmed or distressed by what was happening? - Yes, the parents were alarmed and distressed.

I take it you agree that was a natural reaction for a parent in this situation? - Yes.

So far as the report to the Procurator-Fiscal at Stirling is concerned you have explained to us that you requested authorisation for searching Hamilton's premises? - Yes.

And amongst other things would that be with a view to searching for other evidence relating to the possibility of criminal proceedings? - That is correct, yes, that is exactly correct.

Did you find the Fiscal's reason for refusing that authorisation persuasive? - All I would say to that is as a police officer I am an agent of the Procurator-Fiscal and if the Fiscal decides.....makes a decision regarding anything I tell him I have to accept that.

Do you agree with his view? - No.

Why not? - My interpretation of the information I had was such that Hamilton may well have committed the offences that were detailed in my report and as you have already said I wanted to secure other evidence if that was available.

You/

You are obviously involved in this kind of thing on a regular basis but did you consider that, just as a matter of generality perhaps, not the details of this case, that evidence of a criminal conduct is always required before a search warrant can be authorised? - Sorry, could you repeat that for me?

I will take the question out and put it another way, it wasn't a very good question. In the generality before a search warrant can be authorised is it necessary to have hard and fast evidence that a crime has been committed? - No.

Would I be right in thinking that so long as there is some reasonable basis for suspicion the purpose of a search warrant is to discover whether or not evidence exists? - Yes.

And were you concerned that Hamilton might become aware of your investigations? - Yes, I detailed that in my report.

So you would be concerned that he might dispose of incriminating material? - Yes.

For example, photographs? - Yes.

We heard some evidence to the effect that no photographs of an obvious link of an indecent or lewd nature was recovered; am I right in thinking that one of your purposes of seeking a search warrant was to find out whether such material existed before Hamilton had an opportunity to dispose of it, assuming it did exist? - Yes.

The explanation that was given to you by Mr. Gallagher, if I understand it correctly, was that the material which you had put before him didn't amount to criminal conduct? - That is correct.

Was there some discussion between you as to whether or not the children involved were distressed? - Yes, there was.

Could you elaborate? - Mr. Gallagher asked me if the children had been distressed or shown any signs of distress or alarm, and in my opinion they didn't during the interviews, and there was/was no obvious signs of alarm from the children.

Was there then some discussion as to whether or not the parents were alarmed or distressed? - Yes, there was. And what was the nature of that discussion? - Just similar -- I suggested that the parents were obviously alarmed because they had articulated such and would that possibly then amount to a breach of the peace.

What was the reply to that question? - No.

Was there any explanation given by Mr. Gallagher as to why he took the view that that didn't amount to a breach of the peace? - No.

Did you query that decision? - Not as such, no. I put forward the view as to what I thought, that was the discussion that took place.

You put forward your view that this did amount to a breach of the peace? - Yes, that it could amount to a breach of the peace.

Did Mr. Gallagher appear to suggest that in the absence of any suggestion of alarm by the boys then this would not amount to a breach of the peace? - Could you repeat that?

Did Mr. Gallagher suggest that alarm on the part of the boys or distress on the part of the boys would be required? - Yes.

Before conduct would amount to a breach of the peace? - That is correct.

You pointed out to him that, in fact, the parents were alarmed and distressed? - Yes.

Let us just assume for the moment that your view of the law is correct and the view put forward by Mr. Gallagher was wrong. Would you agree that in that situation there are really only two explanations that would happen: that Mr. Gallagher misunderstood or didn't know the law or he was giving you a pretext for a decision which was based on other reasons?

MR. BONOMOY: Please don't answer that question./

question. The Inquiry in my submission is perfectly entitled to explore what was actually said between these two persons, that is the present witness and Mr. Gallagher. It would, in my submission, be quite wrong in principle to ask this witness to speculate about what may have been behind the comments made by Mr. Gallagher.

LORD CULLEN: I take your point; do you accept that, Mr. Campbell?

MR. CAMPBELL: I think I am prepared to take that point. Perhaps I could explore the matter in another way.

LORD CULLEN: If it is not objectionable carry on.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. CAMPBELL: You must have been concerned about the response which you received to what you regarded was an urgent matter about which you were concerned? - Yes, I was concerned about it.

Were you satisfied with the explanation which you were receiving from Mr. Gallagher as to the basis for his decision?

MR. BONOMOY: Again please don't answer that question. In my submission it is inappropriate to explore with any witness in this Inquiry the soundness of any decision that may have been taken by the Procurator-Fiscal. I have no objection at all to exploring what actually was decided and indeed in this case the reasons given for this decision, albeit this would also be an issue normally outwith the scope of proper examination, but in my submission it would be quite wrong to try and explore with any witness in the Inquiry the rightness or wrongness of the decision. In my submission the question just asked invites the witness again to express a view about that.

LORD CULLEN: Could you elaborate that a little? What is the basis for that objection?

MR. BONOMOY: I wasn't quite anticipating this arising at this stage in the Inquiry, but as you will be aware it has always been the case as a matter of principle and established law that any decisions/decisions made by the Procurators-Fiscal are not subject to scrutiny by either a Court or any other Tribunal in Scotland; there are a number of reasons and different circumstances behind that principle; the principle has been enunciated in the Court of the High Court of Justiciary. It has also been recognised in the Parliamentary Statements on a number of occasions and in particular in connection with the Tribunal of an Inquiry proceeding on exactly the same Statutory basis as the present Inquiry as a result of resolution of Parliament.

Now, /

10.40 a.m.

Now, I can give your lordship authority for that if I have two minutes to get it, but I suspect, sir, you are already very familiar with it.

LORD CULLEN: I am. I simply wanted you to state the position.

MR. BONOMY: I have so far allowed the questioning to proceed without intervention to a point beyond a point where objection would normally be taken, but I considered that was right in the interests of the Inquiry. However, it is my submission, even though we are over that boundary in this particular case, there are certain limits which it is also proper to recognise, and the limits in my submission that are proper in this case are where the question extends beyond the factual content of what was said between the witness and the Procurator-Fiscal and an endeavour to explore the reasoning and justification behind the decision which was taken with regard to.....

LORD CULLEN: Of course, this witness is not, so to speak, the Procurator-Fiscal. Your position effectively the querying of this or debating of this in evidence is fully objectionable?

MR. BONOMY: I appreciate the distinction, sir. The court has already recognised that any scrutiny of the decision itself would be wrong and that may extend to asking the witness if he himself was satisfied as a police officer with the decision made by the Procurator-Fiscal. I think that was the question asked in this instance.

LORD CULLEN: Now, Mr. Campbell, what is your position in relation to that?

MR. CAMPBELL: Sir, I don't challenge the broad position as set out by my learned friend. I would observe, however, that this matter did arise out of evidence-in-chief when the witnesses asked to explain the reasons given by the Procurator-Fiscal, and it does seem on the basis of that it does seem a little.....

LORD CULLEN: Perhaps, I don't know, correct me if I am wrong -- but the objection is to the evidence, not I suspect in regard to matters of submission.

MR./

MR. BONOMOY: Well, sir, yes, the principle being the court or the Tribunal ought not to scrutinise the reasons. There may be objection to any criticism of the reasons that were given and I don't take any exception to any exploring of the stated reasons as a matter of fact in this case, or indeed exploring of the communication of those reasons between the Fiscal and the witness. I have no objection to further exploration of what was actually said between them as a matter of fact but, in my submission, it undermines the whole principle by which the Fiscal Service take decisions in Scotland on behalf of the Lord Advocate if any explanation is allowed of the rational or justification for these.

LORD CULLEN: I appreciate your position on that. I simply wanted to know whether the kind of point that Mr. Campbell wants to develop could be as far as you are concerned developed in closing submissions or whether you would equally take objection to it.

MR. BONOMOY: I would equally take objection to that, firstly on the basis of principle and secondly on the basis it really would be inconsistent with not permitting the evidence on the matter but allow submissions to be made when the issue hasn't been fully explored in evidence.

MR. CAMPBELL: Well, perhaps if my learned friend's position goes as far as that I would withdraw the concession in what I last said, and perhaps it is a matter that will require to be debated and argued upon at some stage in the course of this Inquiry. I still don't quite fully understand the Crown's position in introducing the matter in evidence-in-chief in the first place.

LORD CULLEN: I think what the Crown was doing here, as I understand it, is not objecting to evidence of fact as to what was transmitted with regard to the decision and the stated reasons for it, but it takes the position as a matter of principle that the merits of the decision the soundness of the decision and the sufficiency of reasons given are not matters either for evidence or for debate upon evidence. That is the position as I understand it.

MR./

MR. BONOMOY: I should also make it clear, sir, if for any reason the position were to change as a result of any submissions that are made that Mr. Campbell has in mind, obviously there can be no objection taken to this witness returning to deal with that point.

LORD CULLEN: Would it be convenient, Mr. Campbell, if we were to allow you to reserve your position meantime and you can address me in due course and Mr. Taylor would be recalled if necessary at that further stage. Would that be the most convenient course?

MR. CAMPBELL: That will be wholly appropriate, sir.

LORD CULLEN: I take it the question you want to explore will not take very long; it will be quite a short passage?

MR. CAMPBELL: That is correct.

LORD CULLEN: So will you do that, you can address me and draw my attention to any arguments you think are pertinent and I can make a decision on that, and in the light of that this witness may or may not be asked to return.

MR. CAMPBELL: Thank you, sir. Perhaps I can just deal with two or three other matters with this witness which hopefully will be less controversial.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. CAMPBELL: The result of the meeting between you and Mr. Gallagher was that you were told in quite clear terms that the Fiscal did not want any further reports of this nature? - That is correct.

Effectively he would regard it as a waste of his time?
- Basically, yes.

I think you do indicate -- I forget whether it is in your evidence or whether it is in your statement -- that the Fiscal indicated that the material was concerning? - Yes.

Did he elaborate on what he meant by that? - In our conversation he accepted that the conduct of/of Hamilton was concerning, that it approached the line but did not cross it, the line being that of criminality. It approached the line but did not cross it.

Did he elaborate upon which aspects of the conduct approached the line of criminality? - Particularly the behaviour of Hamilton whereby he caused children to dress in trunks and performing exercise and taking photographs.

Was the Fiscal aware of the fact that Hamilton possessed a Firearms Certificate? - Yes.

Was there any discussion about that? - Yes, there was.

What was the nature of that discussion? - I explained to the Procurator-Fiscal that, as it says in my report, he is indeed a firearms holder, the police did have concerns regarding him having possession of a firearm, and that was the substance of the conversation.

What was the nature of the police concern about him having a firearm? - I would refer to the previous report of Detective Sergeant Hughes -- he was a Detective Sergeant at the time -- regarding Hamilton's behaviour, and obviously Detective Sergeant Hughes had the advantage over me in that he had actually met Hamilton.

In that regard, in your evidence-in-chief you were referred to production D5 in the folder. In my folder there is no D5.

Could you help me with what D5 is? - It is a memorandum report from Detective Sergeant Hughes.

Dated 11th November, 1991? - Yes.

So that memorandum, which we have looked at many times in this Inquiry, was appended to your report to the Fiscal? - No, it wasn't.

But you knew of it? - I knew of its existence, yes.

But all that the Fiscal knew was that Hamilton had a Firearms Certificate and the police had concerns about him? - That is correct.

Did/

Did you elaborate upon those concerns to the Fiscal?

- I honestly can't remember.

So by that stage did you share Detective Sergeant Hughes' concern about the fact that Hamilton held a Firearms Certificate? - Yes, obviously I did, but although I am repeating, I never actually met Thomas Hamilton and I was going on the opinion of Detective Sergeant Hughes at the time.

If we look at the conclusion of your report D311 it begins with the statement, "Hamilton has undoubtedly sailed very close to the wind for many years as regards the inappropriateness of his methods of alleged tuition of very young, immature and unsuspecting boys of primary school age"? - Yes.

And it was your opinion in view of the evidence available to date that Hamilton may have committed offences of lewd, indecent and libidinous practices and behaviour, particularly giving consideration to the statement of one child we needn't name, contraventions of Section 12 of the Children and Young Persons (Scotland) Act, 1937, breach of the peace and fraud, and perhaps embezzlement, bearing in mind that he boasted in the past of having spent £10,000 on camera equipment. You go on to indicate that Hamilton has been registered unemployed since 1985 and has refused to identify other committee members when requested by parents to do so. Now, did that paragraph summarise the view which you had taken as to the potential criminality of the conduct as revealed by your investigation? - Yes, that is correct.

You go on, "It is worthy of note that Mr. Hamilton has provided parents with photographs of their children fully clothed, in groups and individually. However, none of the photographs taken of the boys wearing only trunks, of which there would appear to be many, have ever been provided. To this end the question remains unanswered as to why they were taken or where they are now"? - That is correct.

At that stage, having received the views of the Fiscal, did you take any action in the light of the concerns which you at that time had about the fact/fact that Hamilton held a Firearms Certificate? - No sir.

Why not? - Obviously it was discussed with my line manager when I went back regarding the reaction of the Procurator-Fiscal, and we had already had concerns raised regarding Mr. Hamilton having possession of firearms, and there was nothing new basically in the information we had at that time.

Who was the line manager you spoke to? - Detective Sergeant Moffat.

What was the purpose in speaking to Detective Sergeant Moffat? - Just to report back on the discussion I had had with the Procurator-Fiscal and the case in general as would be normal practice for any case.

And also to convey to him your concern about Hamilton having firearms? - Not particularly that, no; it was more about the case itself.

But if you had concern about Hamilton having lawful possession of firearms that is a very serious matter, is it not? - Yes. As I said, it was a concern. These things were already known both to myself and Detective Sergeant Moffat. We were both well aware of the concern regarding firearms.

Could you remind me, Detective Sergeant Moffat, was he also in the Child Protection Unit?

- That is correct.

The same unit whose views had been rebuffed in 1991? - How do you mean, sir?

Detective Sergeant Hughes was in the unit in 1991 when he wrote the memo? - Yes, he was.

Was there a feeling that having expressed views clearly, and Detective Sergeant Hughes' memo in 1991, there was really no point in repeating the exercise? - At that stage, yes.

Because it was thought that the Deputy Chief Constable would simply take the same view? - As I said, there was nothing new from the information/information we had available, it had already been expressed. As I said, I wasn't in a position to comment on Mr. Hamilton never having met him.

Did it occur to you that concern had been expressed in 1991 about Hamilton's conduct and the implications of his behaviour over his suitability as a person to have a Firearms Licence. You were aware in 1993 of further conduct, further complaints, giving police officers that concern. Did it occur to you that there is a cumulative aspect of this, incidents beginning to pile up, and that in itself is a relevant consideration as to whether or not a person was suitable to have a Firearms Licence? - Yes, sir, I believe that.

So it is not entirely accurate, is it, to say there was nothing new. This was something new in that there were more complaints and more concerning conduct in 1993? - Yes, but none of these complaints were substantiated.

Well, I am not quite sure what you mean by "substantiated"? - My enquiry at that stage -- there was no evidence which I had that corroborated the information provided by the witnesses at that stage. There was no act of criminality, as I said, as was explained to me.

Did you have any reason to disbelieve the children? -
No.

It was your view that there was criminal conduct involved? - Yes.

And the responsibility for the grant or revocation of a Firearms Certificate lies with the Chief Constable? - Yes, sir.

Not with the Fiscal? - Yes, I know that.

Do/

11 a.m.

Do you know whether Detective Sergeant Moffat took any steps in the light of your report to him? - Just about that time I transferred from the Unit temporarily to Grangemouth CID, and as I understand, Detective Sergeant Moffat carried on the investigation from another angle.

Was it after your conversation with the Detective Sergeant Moffat that you investigated the information held by the Scout Movement? - Yes, it was after that.

Could you have please in front of you file H(iv)? If you go to the yellow insert about quarter of the way through we then have a series of "D" documents? - Yes.

I think in the main these are copies of the Scout Association file on Hamilton? - Yes.

The first document I want to refer you to is D2/H(iv). This is a letter of 24th May, 1974 from the Executive Commissioner, Mr. Jefferies, to the Warrants Department at Scout Headquarters; is that right? - Yes.

It states "The County Commissioner for Stirlingshire has advised that he has requested the return of Hamilton's Warrant as he is suspected of improper behaviour with boys. In addition the County Commissioner, who is a medical man, thinks that Hamilton is mentally unbalanced"; do you see that? - Yes.

"After being asked to leave the Stirlingshire Troop he had approached another Troop in the neighbouring Scout County of Clackmannanshire, but the County Commissioner and District Commissioners of that County had been warned, and refused his offer of services"? - Yes.

Now, I think you told us in the course of your reading out of the notes you had taken on looking through the file that one of the notes you had taken referred to a query over the mental imbalance of Hamilton: so this would at least be one letter within the file which would have flagged that up for you? - Yes, sir.

If you look on a little to D6, this is a letter/letter from the County Commissioner, Mr. Fairgrieve, dated 29th June, 1974, to Mr. Jefferies; is that right? - Yes.

We can all read this for ourselves, but in the second last paragraph of that letter it states "His personality displays evidence of a persecution complex coupled with rather grandiose delusions of his own abilities. As a doctor, and with my clinical acumen only, I am suspicious of his moral intentions towards boys": do you see that? - Yes.

I think again you took notes regarding some of this letter? - That is correct, yes.

We were told earlier in the Inquiry that you had access to the whole file. Was that your understanding? - Certainly the whole file that was handed to me at the Scout Association, I was left to browse through the file.

Could you look at D29? This is a note which Mr. Fairgrieve made much later, in August of 1986, after Thomas Hamilton had appeared at his door one Sunday afternoon; is that right? - Yes.

About two-thirds of the way down, in the fifth last paragraph we read "From the purely professional point of view I would think that Tom has become even more obsessional than I had previously remembered him and, from the look in his eyes, I would not be too surprised if he was currently on some psychiatric drugs": do you see that? - Yes.

Now, having had the opportunity to read through the file and having taken the notes which you did from it what action if any did you then take? - I then went and spoke to Mr. Fairgrieve.

And anything else? Did you take any other action after that? - In what respect?

Is that it? You spoke to Mr. Fairgrieve, and that was an end of this? - No; then I reported back to Detective Sergeant Moffat.

What did you say to Detective Sergeant Moffat? - I explained to him the content of the file/file and handed over the notes I had taken and said that Mr. Fairgrieve said he was not in a position to substantiate these comments.

So was that an end of the matter as far as you were concerned? - At that time, yes.

So here we have a man who a doctor has expressed the view which we read in the file about; he is a man who holds a firearms certificate, about whom the police have concerns regarding his holding of a firearms certificate; queries about his mental stability and mental state are recorded, leading to him being withdrawn from the Scout Movement, and so on: yet all this is just filed, and no action is taken? - In relation to the comment about mental imbalance, I specifically spoke to Mr. Fairgrieve about that, and he said he could not substantiate that comment, that it was not in fact a medical thing, it was more a personal opinion, and that he had never medically examined him, that it was only a matter of his personal opinion as opposed to a medical opinion.

So before any action would have been taken am I correct there would require to be uncovered a psychiatric report certifying that Hamilton was mentally ill? - In relation to that point, if we were going to say Mr. Hamilton was mentally imbalanced I couldn't see anyone other than a professional being able to say that, a psychiatrist.

So the next time that Hamilton comes up for renewal of his firearms certificate none of this is of any relevance? - I wouldn't say it was not of any relevance, no.

Well, what is its relevance? - I think it is important that the information is available.

So were you aware of any steps being taken to make sure this information was available to whoever would be responsible for the renewal of Hamilton's certificate? - No, I was not aware of that. The information was given to Detective Sergeant Moffat and placed on file, and was an ongoing enquiry of the Child Protection Unit, or the Family Unit as it was at that time.

Were/

Were you aware of any Standing Orders or instructions that material relevant to firearms certificate holders' suitability should be conveyed to the appropriate department of the police? - There are Standing Orders in relation to firearms certificates, but I am not sure of the exact contents of them.

So if there is a Standing Order which required relevant information to be conveyed to the Firearms Department relating to a firearms holder, you were not aware of that? - No, sir.

Forgive me, but it may be that this is really just a matter of commonsense, that material of this nature should be brought to the attention of the department with responsibility for firearms licences? - Yes, I agree with that, sir.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: You obviously felt very strongly about your wish to get a warrant? - Yes.

When Mr. Gallagher indicated he would not support the application did you ask him to refer it to the Fiscal himself, whether he might refer it to the Fiscal for further consideration, as a matter of fact? - No, certainly I did not think that was my place.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: When you went to see Mr. Fairgrieve was it solely because of the concerns which you felt upon seeing two of the documents which are new and which have been put to you, having gone into the Scout file? - Yes.

Could you have a look at D29 of H(iv)? - Yes.

If you look at the back of it you will see "Where Found. 19 Lyall Crescent, Polmont"; is that correct? - Yes.

It goes on "In possession of witness Fairgrieve"? - Yes, sir.

I think we heard evidence from Mr. Fairgrieve this was recovered from his house and not from the Scout file, so this probably was not the document you saw? - That is correct.

So/

So the two documents you would have sight of from the file are D2/H(iv) and D6/H(iv)? - Yes, sir, that is correct.

And on reading those you felt it necessary to speak to Mr. Fairgrieve personally? - Yes.

Earlier in your evidence you referred to some notes which you made at the time. Were those notes made at the time when you were looking at the documents or notes made at the time you visited Mr. Fairgrieve? - These were notes I made when I looked through the file at Scout Headquarters.

You then went to speak to Mr. Fairgrieve? - Yes, I did.

When you spoke to him what view was he able to express in relation to Mr. Hamilton's character? - He used the term "grandiose".

Now, that is a word which we find in the second last paragraph of D6; is that correct? - Yes, sir, that is correct.

Was he prepared to attribute any other description to Mr. Hamilton's character? - As I recall, sir, he described him as a bully.

And that would be in the context of young boys? - That is correct. But he also did assert to me when I interviewed him that these comments were made some 20 years previously.

Did you put to him that a view had been attributed to him that he considered Hamilton to be mentally unbalanced? - I am sorry; can you repeat that, sir?

Did you put it to him that a view had been attributed to him that Hamilton was mentally unbalanced? - Yes, sir, I did.

Did he confirm that that was his view? - Well, he said that was not his view: he couldn't make that comment.

Did he in fact go on to say anything about requiring a medical examination before he was in/

in a position to form that view? - Yes, he did.

And he disavowed that view at the time you went to him? - Can you explain "disavowed"?

Yes. He disavowed that view at the time you spoke to him, the view that Mr. Hamilton was mentally unbalanced? - Yes, he said that was not his view.

Did you therefore consider that somebody who was described as having grandiose delusions, or words to that effect, in your view would that cast any doubt on a holder's ability to have a firearms certificate?

MR. CAMPBELL: I object to that question, sir. If it is going to be put in these terms it would be more helpful to the Inquiry if it were put in the correct terms, which can be easily found in D6/H(iv).

MR. TAYLOR: Sir, the terms I was seeking to put to the witness were the terms I had understood Mr. Fairgrieve to have made them at the time this witness had made a visit upon him.

LORD CULLEN: I thought you were going to put to the witness the views this witness had elicited in 1993, and so far you are doing that, Mr. Taylor.

MR. TAYLOR: Yes, sir.

LORD CULLEN: Mr. Campbell, is there any problem with that?

MR. CAMPBELL: If the questions are limited to what the witness understood Mr. Fairgrieve to be saying in 1993, that is one thing. I had understood this was mainly what was said around 1972.

LORD CULLEN: Perhaps you could put it to the witness the particular time you are talking about, Mr. Taylor.

MR. TAYLOR: I will, sir.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.
TAYLOR: /

TAYLOR: You had a visit to Mr. Fairgrieve in 1993? - I did, yes.

And in the course of that visit he was prepared to discuss with you the two documents we have been looking at for the past few minutes? -

That/

11.20 a.m.

That is correct.

And some of the views that are contained in this document he was not prepared to go along with and some doubts were expressed by him of his views on Mr. Hamilton? - That is correct.

If I have understood you correctly and please interrupt if I have got it wrong, he indicated that Mr. Hamilton was a person who had grandiose ideas or delusions -- did the use the word delusions? - Grandiose delusions of his own ability I think it was.

He was a bully towards young boys? - Yes, that is correct.

Did these two aspects in 1993 cause you to have any concern about Mr. Hamilton having firearms? - No.

I think if I have understood your evidence correctly your view in regard to firearms was based entirely upon what Sergeant Hughes had stated in his memorandum in 1991? - That is correct.

Your view was not formed of anything which you came across in the course of your investigations?

MR. CAMPBELL: Sir, I object to that, these are a series of grossly leading questions to the witness who is effectively Mr. Taylor's own witness.

LORD CULLEN: I know it is cross-examination but he is supposed to be on your side, Mr. Taylor.

MR. TAYLOR: I accept that. Perhaps the evidence would have more weight if I approached it another way.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. TAYLOR: You have told us that the contents of this Scout file caused you to have no concern in relation to Mr. Hamilton holding a firearm certificate; was there/there any conduct which you were made privy to in the course of your investigations of Mr. Hamilton which caused you to have concern in relation to his ability to hold a firearms certificate? - Not during my investigations, no.

BY LORD CULLEN: Can I just ask another question at this point; you told us about your reading Detective Sergeant Hughes' memorandum and the concern he expressed two years before but did you learn anything in 1993 which was in any way relevant to the kind of concerns that he had expressed, was there any cumulative significance to what you were finding out? - At the time I didn't set eyes on the report itself although I did know of its contents through discussion.

You did read it at some point? - Yes, since the incident.

When did you read it? - Just recently.

I thought you read it at the time? - I never saw the report at the time. That certainly was my understanding up to this point.

Just tell me if you would what it is you understood back in 1993 Detective Sergeant Hughes had reported on that and on what basis he was raising the question as to revocation? - I was aware that Detective Sergeant Hughes had investigated an incident at Loch Lomond and put a report to the Procurator-Fiscal; as a result of having met Mr. Hamilton he had interpreted his nature and had put this into the memorandum report, the memorandum being to the Deputy Chief Constable stating that Mr. Hamilton was a firearm certificate holder and he felt in his opinion it was inappropriate that he should be entitled to hold a certificate because, I assume, the type of character he was.

No more than that? - It is difficult to draw on what I knew before and what I found out since but suffice to say I did know there was concern about the character of Hamilton.

You can't elaborate on what you knew at that time more than simply character? - No.

Was/

Was there anything you discovered in 1993 that in any sense at that time reinforced any concern that this officer had expressed about his character relevant to firearms? - When I attended at the Scout Association Headquarters and read the file the comment about mental imbalance did concern me, and that was the main reason I went to speak to Mr. Brian Fairgrieve to see if there was any substance in this, bearing in mind that that was the second thing in the letter I checked, and the outcome of that was that Mr. Fairgrieve couldn't say he made that comment; it was made that Hamilton's character, he was a grandiose type individual.

So having completed that investigation at the Headquarters and having seen Mr. Fairgrieve did any of that add in any way or not to any concern that this officer had expressed relevant to the man's character, suitability? - To my mind, no.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. TAYLOR: Earlier in your evidence in cross-examination you agreed with Mr. Campbell that in your view there was criminal conduct on the part of Mr. Hamilton? - Yes.

Do you recall that? - Yes.

I wonder if I could just look at a number of forms of complaint which you thought may be relevant; you referred in your report on page four to embezzlement of £10,000 or thereby, and do you see that? - Yes.

In the second paragraph on page four? - Yes.

What was the factual basis upon which that concern was based? - There was information from a parent that Mr. Hamilton collected money from the children who attended his boys' clubs; Mr. Hamilton, from background checks I did leading up to the investigation, I discovered that Mr. Hamilton was unemployed from 1985, I think it was. There was a statement already been submitted from an individual from a camera shop in which the witness speaks to Mr. Hamilton having boasted of spending £10,000 on camera equipment and I found that very strange that Mr. Hamilton could spend £10,000 on camera equipment having been unemployed since 1985 and/and presumably if the club was being held there should be documentary records and my suspicion was that the money was being embezzled from the umbrella of the boys' club committee; the possibility was that the money was being embezzled from the committee in order to fund his interest in cameras.

That was no more than a possibility in your view? - Yes, that is correct.

And in relation to the breach of the peace was that a concern being expressed by a parent? - Yes, it was.

You make reference to fraud -- fraud and perhaps embezzlement, that is just one and the same thing perhaps? - No.

What is the fraud you are referring to? - Mr. Hamilton had taken children from Denny and one child in particular from Denny to Stirling on the pretext to the child's parents of playing five-a-side football; in fact, the gymnasium was not booked for five-a-side football, it was booked for gymnastic exercises and on arrival there Mr. Hamilton then took photographs which I interpreted as being in some way to his advantage.

That was the nature of the fraud which you say there? - Yes.

But again what you had available to you by way of evidence was the statement of one child? - Yes, and the parent.

And the parent? - And the parent who had come across the exercises ongoing in the gym.

Let us deal with it in stages; what was the evidence you had in regard to there having been a statement by Hamilton that there was going to be swimming carried out in the course of the evening? - It was actually five-a-side football.

Sorry, five-a-side football? - That the parents who believed their children were going to play five-a-side football and the children themselves.

And the lewd and indecent and libidinous practices/practices was in relation to the photographs of one of the children, is that right? - That is correct.

That is the one child where he was hanging from bars? - No, this was the incident in Dunblane High School in which one child spoke about a particular exercise which was very very questionable.

And the contravention of the Section 12, was that the one in relation to hanging from the bars? - Yes.

You also told us that none of the children had expressed any concern, it was the parents who had expressed concern? - One child did express concern that when he was hanging from the wall bars it was particularly sore but he didn't like to say.

He didn't like to say? - He didn't say anything, it was painful.

He said to you that he hadn't said to Mr. Hamilton, is that what you are saying? - That is correct.

Apart from the enquiries which were made to the Scout Association did you make any further inquiries as to Mr. Hamilton's activities or character or record? - Not personally, no.

Did you make any contact with anybody in London, with the Metropolitan Police in London? - Yes, I did.

Can you tell us the nature of such enquiries? - The National Criminal Intelligence Service, as I understand it.....you appreciate it is three years ago and I can't remember who I spoke to but it was to do with paedophilia and my enquiries were whether or not there would be a market for this type of photograph and indeed whether Mr. Hamilton was known to them, and the result of that was negative.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: Just one or two things I want to clarify; the first is in respect of Mr. Fairgrieve's opinion. You have said that in the Scout file there is a record of Mr. Fairgrieve's/

Fairgrieve's opinion that Hamilton was mentally unbalanced? - Yes.

When you spoke to Mr. Fairgrieve did he say he could substantiate that or he hadn't said that? - He hadn't said it -- the comment was made in a letter from another person and he said that no, he wouldn't.....his words were not that he had a mental imbalance, it was more he had a grandiose type nature and he was a bully.

If I refer you back to your memorandum dated the 9th of June which is D3, the fourth page of that, there is reference in the third paragraph saying "That Hamilton had provided parents with photographs of their children fully clothed, in groups and individually, however none of the photographs taken with the boys wearing only trunks, of which there would appear to be many, have ever been provided". Do you see that? - Yes.

Do you mean by that that the photographs had not been provided to the parents? - That is correct, photographs of the children wearing trunks were never provided to the parents that I spoke to.

Are you aware that the police had already, as a result of the 1991 investigation, viewed photographs taken by Hamilton of the children wearing only trunks? - Yes.

And also as a result of the 1991 investigations these photographs would have been reported to the Fiscal? - I would assume so.

You make the reference within that memorandum of concern being expressed by the parents in relation to the matters you were investigating; is it fair to say that concern of the parents arose from matters which they speculated may have happened rather than activities that were known to have happened? - Could you ask me that again?

You stated in your memo certain matters which one parent observed and in respect of the second complaint that a child said had happened, is that correct; I think you also note that there was some/some parental concern; is that correct? - Yes.

Was that parental concern entirely due to the events which you reported or were the parents also concerned because they imagined that other things may have happened that they didn't know about? - I think it was probably both.

When you mentioned your discussion with Mr. Gallagher and all that was discussed was that on the one occasion you spoke to him after preparing the memorandum? - Yes.

And this was the discussion which you said took half an hour? - I don't know how long, that was purely a guess, I don't know how long I was there, I didn't time it.

But the discussions took place some three years ago? - Yes.

Is it not the case that your recollection of what Mr. Gallagher said may be dimmed by the passage of time? - Not on this occasion, no.

Might you not have misunderstood what Mr. Gallagher said to you? - No, I was quite clear what was said to me.

BY LORD CULLEN: Just one question. If you look at D27 in the file before you -- you haven't been referred to that document yet, just turn it over. It is in H(iv) and it is quite close to D29 which you looked earlier; that is a manuscript letter? - What was the document -- 29?

29 was the notes? - Yes.

Apparently taken from Mr. Fairgrieve; it is a few sheets before that? - Could you give me the document number?

That is No. 29 and it is a few sheets before, No. 27? - Yes.

That is a manuscript letter which purports to be dated the 28th of April and appears to be signed by Mr. Hamilton; there was some comments you made earlier in your evidence about reading various things when you were going through the/

the Scout file; do you see there there is a reference in there to an alleged favouritism on the part of somebody else by Mr. Hamilton; is that at all familiar to you? - Yes, it is.

That fits with what you said earlier? - Yes.

ROBERT/

11.40 a.m.

ROBERT MARK URE, (57), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: You stay at 12 Kent Road, Stirling? - Yes -- until the 10th of June, I exchanged houses.

You have moved now? - Yes.

You still stay in Stirling? - Yes.

When did you first move to 12 Kent Road?
- December, 1992.

And stayed there until June of this year? - Yes.

Where is 12 Kent Road in relation to Hamilton's house at 7 Kent Road? - It is approximately 10 yards down the road and across.

The other side of the road? - Yes.

And 10 yards down the road? - Yes.

Upstairs or downstairs? - Downstairs.

Were you aware of his existence from the time you moved there? - Yes.

In what connection? - When we moved in I had been in the Indoor Bowling and I won a trophy, and I was in my own garden and he approached us to take a photograph of the trophy and myself. I told him to get lost.

Any particular reason why you told him to get lost? - Well, the old ladies in the street had told me he was an unsavoury character. I was just in the street, I had more to do than talk to the likes of himself.

Can you be more specific about the statement you made about the unsavoury nature of his character? - Yes. One of the old ladies, Mrs. Reilly, had told me while I was cutting her hedge that she had reason to call the ambulance for her husband. The ambulance drew up at Thomas Hamilton's door, he flew into a rage, stuck his face close/close up to old Mrs. Reilly's face, told her in no uncertain terms "Don't you ever send an ambulance to my door again". I took exception to that and I said -- Mrs. Reilly is 85, and I said, "If he ever done that again, let me know".

Anything else in general terms about the unsavoury nature of his character? - He was a person you could pick out in a crowd. He was a devious -- the sly way of going about this life.

How did you work that out? - Well, it was quite easy for a man, having been in the Forces, you know.

What about him, any other impression? - He was soft spoken, piercing eyes, and he was very -- well, nobody would really want to know him, quite frankly.

Did you ever see through the window, see what there was on the walls of his house? - Yes.

What did you see? - I seen two rows of photographs.

Showing what? - Photographs of boys, one going along, and there was a further number of photographs on the other side further down.

Were these of individual boys or groups of boys? - What I seen was individual boys.

Which part of the boys did you see in the photographs? - From the waist up.

Wearing anything? - I don't remember for certain.

On any occasion did you see boys around the house? - There were one or two occasions he had them down to do his grass or cut his hedge out the front.

What age were these boys? - Approximately 14 -- 12/14.

Now, after your encounter with him over the hedge did you have any dealings with him? - No, I had no dealings with him personally but.....

Did/

Did you ever speak to him? - Yes, as a neighbour, in the small street Kent Road is, I passed him on the corner and said "Aye", and that was about all I was prepared to.

So you acknowledged him as you passed? - Yes.

Before the incident at Dunblane when was the last time you saw him? - That would be approximately 2nd or 3rd March. My girlfriend Helen Peters and I were walking the pup and.....

We will come on to tell us about this, but just before you do can you confirm that is actually the last time you had seen him? - Prior to Dunblane?

Yes -- the last time you saw him at all? - No, it was after that again.

There were other occasions when you just saw him in passing; is that right? - I don't quite get your meaning.

We will go back to what you were telling us about Mr. Hamilton. Tell us about that? - He came out of the ground more or less. Me and my girlfriend Helen Peters were walking the pup we had just acquired that Christmas, and we were passing along adjacent to Braehead Primary School and he suddenly came out the ground more or less. The path runs along the primary school there and.....

Quite close to the path? - Yes. There is the road from the back of the Braehead Primary School comes down to the gates, and we were going along to these gates to get out, and he appeared at the gates. I turned round -- I was going to get the pup -- and there was Thomas Hamilton standing.

Where do the gates lead to? - In and out the school. They are the main gates of the school.

Were you about to walk in the school grounds or were you going past the gates? - We were passing the gates going home having gone round from the road.

Do you know where he came from? - He just/just came out the blue, unexpected as I say.

Can you say whether he was in the school grounds or not? - Yes, he was definitely, because had he been any other way, that is to say coming from the back -- there is a road that comes in the back of the school, and we would have seen him coming down that road when we were coming to the gates. He was in the annexe, one of the annexes to the school.

As you walked along the path was the school to your right or your left? - Left.

The gates you are talking about, were they to your right or your left? - Well, they were a'fore us.

In front of you? - Yes.

These gates lead to where? - The gates lead out to Springfield Road, the gates of the school. They come off Springfield Road past the church and into the school playground.

How are you able to tell where Hamilton had actually come from? - Well, I would have seen him had he been in that part of the road from the back of the school.

Because you didn't see him where you would expect to see him if he was walking in the ordinary course like yourself, is the only place he could have come from.....? - The annexe to the school.

Did you speak to him? - Yes.

What did you say to him? - I turned round and said, "Where did you come from?" and he said "I was away to organise another boys' club". I just went to ask a question and -- he seemed agitated as if he had been caught out.

Did you address him by name? - Yes.

What name did you call him? - John.

Why did you call him John? - Well, I wasn't thinking properly at the time. It is actually a little -- I thought his name was John and he/he brought us up on that and he says, "My name is not John, it is Tom".

This fairly unsavoury character whom you have told us lives across the road from you -- you didn't know his name for sure?
- I knew his name, it was just a misinterpretation at the moment.

Are you sure about it now that it was him? -
Certainly, definitely. There is no other one in Scotland like him.

I think you were asking him where he had been. Did you ask him anything else in that conversation? - Yes. I asked him what he meant by starting a boys' club at a quarter past 11 at night in the dead of winter, and he suddenly went on -- what I wanted to ask him, I asked him for the name of the Stirling Rifle and Pistol Club's address or the telephone number of it.

Why did you ask him that? - My estranged wife had told us previous to that she had been to the rifle range with him at Dunblane Victoria School and she had been embezzling money which was not to my knowledge, and I was wanting to rectify that with the gun club, I had nothing whatsoever to do with it, and I was wanting to contact them either by phone or by writing to the Secretary to point that out.

So you took this opportunity to ask him for what information? - The Stirling Rifle and Pistol Club's phone number, or the address of that place. He told us it wasn't a static building they had. He informed us that might have been in his mail, that is to say the telephone number or the address.

Now, you told me earlier you had seen him on some other occasion before the 13th March. When was that? - That was the 3rd of March we were talking about.

When was the next time you saw him? -
Approximately the 10th of March. We were going down, Helen Peters and I, my girlfriend, were going down to Cecil Street Garage at night to get the morning paper that comes in early, and he stopped me, he wanted to talk about the request I had made of/of him.

How long after the evening you have told us about was that? - After the 2nd or 3rd March, it would be approximately seven or eight days.

Did you speak to Hamilton on that occasion? - Yes, in Cecil Street.

On the week of the Dunblane incident did you see him? - No. My girlfriend was looking out of the window and she said, "There's Thomas Hamilton away by".

What day was that? - The Monday.

Two days before? - She brought it to my attention it was a different colour of briefcase than he normally had. It was normally black, as if we would get the assumption he was into photography, but I knew otherwise through the estranged wife, he was in the gun club along with her.

This is the Monday -- what time? - Approximately 9 o'clock, half past 9.

What was he carrying? - It was a tan briefcase with insertions for guns.

Where was he going? - Going out the street.

From his house? - Yes.

Did he have any transport there? - No, he was walking.

Describe to me please the briefcase? - It was a tan briefcase, one that I had seen about in the military that officers had shaped for taking the contents of guns.

This is something for transporting guns, is it? - Yes. It is a briefcase.

But specifically for guns? - Yes.

Is that the last time you ever saw him? - Yes.

No cross-examination.

MR./

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, the next witness will be Mr. Paton but it may be we could adjourn briefly so that all the necessary arrangements may be made to facilitate his evidence.

LORD CULLEN: How long will that take?

MR. BONOMOY: That will be five minutes. I hope we can resume by 12 o'clock or 5 past to be safe.

MR. CAMPBELL: Sir, before we adjourn I wonder if I can try and get some clarification from Mr. Bonomy in relation to the matter which arose during my cross-examination of the witness before last, since plainly this is something that some of us may wish to apply our minds to in a little more detail than we have done to date. Are we in the realms here of public interest indemnity or is there some other basis for the Crown's position?

LORD CULLEN: I wonder, would it be more helpful if I gave the two of you an opportunity to discuss the matter?

MR. BONOMOY: Yes. That certainly is satisfactory. I have here the material which explains the position and I will give it to Mr. Campbell just now.

LORD CULLEN: That's the best plan. We will adjourn until 5 past 12 or earlier if possible.

After/

12.05 p.m.

After a short adjournment:

ALISTAIR BUCHANAN PATON (53), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: I think you live in Renfrewshire? - I do.

Can I ask you about your history? I think for a number of years you served as a police officer? - Yes, I served 30 years as a police officer, firstly with the City of Glasgow Police and then with Strathclyde Police.

When did you retire? - In December, 1991.

What rank did you hold when you retired? - An inspector.

Was the bulk of that service with the police in one particular area of police work? - Yes, I served 22 years in the Identification Bureau of both Forces.

Was that specialising in any particular area? - Yes, specialising in the examination of firearms, ammunition and their various subjects.

Was that throughout the 22 years? - Yes.

How much of your time over that period was taken up with the study of firearms and ammunition? - It was in conjunction with other duties. You are looking at 55% or more, especially towards the latter end of my career.

Did that percentage increase latterly? -- Yes.

Was that because it was more specialised or because there were more guns and ammunition to investigate? - Both.

I take it in that capacity you would be the most senior officer in Strathclyde dealing with these matters? - When I was promoted inspector I was.

Were/

Were you at that stage the most senior officer throughout Scotland dealing with that expertise? - Yes.

After 1980 were certain formalities applied to experts in any forensic area, and one could become an authorised forensic scientist, and did you fall into that category? - Yes, with the inception of the 1980 Act I became an authorised firearms examiner.

Since retiring from the police have you continued to use that expertise? - Yes, I am now an independent examiner. I have set up my own business, and I work on behalf of defence agents, insurance companies and anybody else who asks me.

Are you also a registered firearms dealer? - I am.

Why is that? - It is a legal requirement. I don't deal in firearms at all, but by becoming a registered firearms dealer I can legally handle any firearms and ammunition, so I can conduct ballistics examinations without having to get a permit from the local police force.

In this case you have been invited to consider a number of issues. Initially did you prepare a report, which I think you have in front of you? - Yes.

That will be R44. Do you also have your supplementary report with you? - Yes, I do.

We will call that R45. Now, do we find in these two documents the results of your investigation and consideration of the various issues that were posed for the purpose of the Inquiry? - Yes.

In addition to these you were asked to have a look at the firearms which were used in the incident at Dunblane Primary School? - Yes, sir.

Have you also seen a report by Mr. Chisholm, who was the Tayside forensic scientist who was at the scene? - Yes, I read that this morning.

I/

I wonder if you could also have that before you.
That is R7? - It is, yes.

Now, that is actually quite a lengthy document, but the bit that matters for present purposes is towards the end. If you could go to the actual report, at page 7 of that -- do you have that?

It is away towards the end of the book you have given? - Yes, I have it.

You will see at the bottom of that page and on to the next page -- in fact the next two pages -- there is a description of the four weapons that Hamilton had with him? - That is correct, yes.

Have you seen each of these four weapons? - I have.

Two of them were Smith & Wesson revolvers? - Yes.

How identical were these two weapons? - Mechanically they are identical, really. There are some minor differences to the hammer, the shape of the hammer, and the butts are different. One has a polished wood butt grip and the other has a rubberised butt grip.

In Chisholm's report on the face of it they appear to be identical apart from the hand grips? - Yes, more or less. The normal person would not be able to differentiate the two apart from the grips.

You can see some differences in the mechanisms of the two? - Yes, in small parts.

You are not an expert in target shooting as a sport? - No. I used to shoot a small bore rifle as a sport, but other than that, no.

We will hear in due course from other witnesses the significance of any difference so far as the various sports are concerned. I don't want to ask you about that. In practical terms, however, when it comes to operating these two guns are they more or less identical? - Yes, they are.

They/

They would use the same ammunition? - Yes, they would.

There are also two Browning pistols, and you saw that? - Yes, sir, I did.

Are there significant differences between the two Browning pistols? - Not significant differences. Both operate the same way, and they both started as the same model, but one of them has been modified.

The same manufacturer? - Yes.

The same model? - Yes.

And then one of them has been modified? - Yes.

To achieve what objective? - Externally, it has an extended barrel, with a muzzle weight attached to it.

Why is that? - The longer the barrel of a firearm the more accurate it is likely to be, and the muzzle weight at the end of the barrel would obviously help to stop muzzle flip; in other words, when you fire the weapon the recoil flips the muzzle up, and if you have a weight at the end of the muzzle this counteracts that.

What is a recoil? - It is the reverse action of a cartridge on the weapon itself.

I see? - When a cartridge is fired within a gun the gas propellant forces the bullet out, but by Newton's Third Law of Physics the action is equal and opposite, therefore you get the same amount of force acting on the gun.

Yes? - The recoil is felt according to the weight of the gun. If you have a light gun you will feel the recoil more than you would if you have a heavy gun.

So by adding weight to the barrel it will reduce the recoil? - Yes; and it will also reduce the weight distribution of the weapon and put weight on to the muzzle and avoid muzzle flip.

And/

And you should be able to fire more accurately? -
Yes.

Chisholm also identifies a difference in the one with the longer barrel, in that the hammer spur had been removed and the area ground down to a smooth finish? - Yes.

Can you tell us the significance of that? -
Obviously the removal of the spur is to allow the firer to pull the hammer back using his thumb. It allows you to pull the hammer back. The end had been ground off in this weapon.

What is the significance of that, and what is the reason for it? - The only reason that I could think of really is if the weapon was being used with a holster.

Why is that? - One of the problems with the holster is that the hammer spur sticks out and can snag on a holster, and removing the hammer spur would prevent that. The reason for doing it in this case I do not know.

Again, it was also noted that the magazine certainly was not engaged within the weapon with the result that the gun could be fired without the magazine being in place? - Yes. This particular model had that built-in safety feature, in that if you removed the magazine and tried to fire the weapon the gun could not be fired: it has to have a magazine in the pistol before you could fire it. However, this causes additional pressure on the trigger mechanism, and it means the trigger mechanism requires more effort for it to be operated. By removing this safety feature you cut down the trigger pressure and make the trigger much more easily used.

Yes? - This is a standard feature for many competition shooters with this particular model weapon.

Is that really done so that the weapon has a lighter trigger? - It is a combination of a lighter trigger and a more positive action. You do not have to overcome the additional safety mechanism.

And/

And the effect of that is that you require less pressure on the trigger? - Yes; and the trigger pull is smoother.

Chisholm also makes the remark that as a result of that the gun could be fired without the magazine being in place? - Yes, it could.

Which meant that if a bullet was inserted into that gun on its own it could be fired? - It could, yes.

Is it only in a situation where the magazine safety device has been removed that you can use a magazine plus an additional cartridge in the breech, or can you get that situation on either of these two Brownings, the one with the modification and the one without? - You can get it on both.

Now, are there any other differences between the two Brownings? - Not that I can remember.

No difference in sights? - No.

Was there something about the grips? - I can't remember a difference in grips from yesterday. They are both rubberised grips.

Now,

12.25 p.m.

Now, we have heard evidence in the Inquiry that Hamilton had a number of magazines with the Browning, which had a capacity of 20 cartridges, is that unusual? - No, the standard Browning Hi-Power has a magazine which contains 13 rounds; however, you can purchase additional magazines which contain either 15 or 20 rounds.

We have also heard evidence that the magazine was loaded with a variety of different types of ammunition? - Yes.

I will ask you about ammunition later. If you go to page 10 of the Chisholm report you will see that it was loaded with a mixture of round nose semi-wadcutter and hollow point cartridges or bullets but cartridges with bullets in them? - Yes.

Now, you will see also on page 10 they were loaded in a particular sequence? - Yes.

The sentence in the second line of the typewritten part, "The magazines were loaded in two different sequences of loading with the first four cartridges in the bottom of the magazine always being the hollow point type, followed by either 11 or 15 semi-wadcutter types and topped by either five or one round nosed type. This was further emphasised by the partially full magazines". Is this something that is perfectly normal or is it an unusual feature or is it something that you can't say much about? - I have never come across this before, but I can't think of any particular reason why he should have these.

One reason that has arisen is to do with preventing jamming; does that make any sense to you? - Yes, one of the problems is that a semi-automatic weapon is fitted with a magazine into the chamber; there is a well, a shaped well or a ramp on the topmost cartridge so the magazine is pushed up and into the chamber; where you have a round nosed cartridge that fits directly up the well into the chamber; it is well known with hollow point ammunition for it to stick and jam because there is an edge at the front of the cartridge.

What about semi-wadcutter ammunition? - It/

It varies. It depends on the type of semi-wadcutter; the particular type in here is basically what is known as a truncating bullet: the nose has been flattened but it has a rounded part on it and that would fit.

The indication here was it was loaded with semi-wadcutter and had a variety of 14 hollow nosed bullets at the end?
- Yes.

The ones that are most likely to jam are last? - I don't know.

I take it in the course of your police service, in particular, you would come across magazines? - Yes, I have.

And these would be loaded magazines? - Yes, I have.

Have you come across examples of magazines loaded with a mixture of bullets like this? - No, certainly different mixtures of manufacturers, different ammunition in one magazine.

But normally the same type? - Usually the same sort of type.

Now, the only other thing I want to ask you about the report at this stage is in relation to the speed of fire; I will look at that perhaps a little more in due course in relation to other individual types of weapons, but if you go to page 13 of the report you will see that in the third last paragraph Chisholm is recording there that "A full magazine of 20 shots was fired off as quickly as possible. The time taken to accomplish this was 5.46 seconds"? - Yes.

I doubt if the Inquiry has an interest in the precise parts of a second that might be taken for this but I take it you haven't had an opportunity to carry out the same exercise with this weapon? - No, I haven't.

But in general terms is it consistent with your experience for a magazine with 20 shots can be fired off in five or six seconds? - Yes.

BY LORD CULLEN: I take it this is assuming/assuming one is trying to aim at a target rather than just simply firing off? - That is correct, it also depends on how accurate you want to be; if you are trying to hit a quarter inch circle then you would take longer than if you wanted to hit a man-sized target.

But broadly speaking if you are talking about 5.46 seconds one could achieve some degree of accuracy, is that right? - Yes.

Within what, could you give some kind of parameter on it? - The difficulty depends on the expertise of the person that is firing and on his physical make-up. If you are well used to that weapon then you will possibly accept the recoil and possibly mentally re-adjust yourself to the next shot; if you were someone unused to firing a firearm the shot of each individual firearm would put you off and it would take much longer but yes, to a reasonably competent user of a self-loading pistol then that is what I would expect; it is unusual because you don't really need to fire that number of shots at any one time.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:

Can I take it that if you were trying to fire off as many shots as possible as quickly as possible at one target that would be the quickest way of discharging the magazine? - Yes, it would.

And if you were to repeat that exercise you would be able to achieve more or less the same result each time? - Yes, possibly.

If the gun was working adequately? - Yes.

But there may be some variation when we are talking about points of a second? - Yes.

But can I take it also that if you have to move to aim at some different target that will obviously slow down the speed at which you discharge the whole magazine? - Yes, that will depend on how far the targets are ahead.

Even allowing for that we are talking about a weapon which can discharge 20 cartridges very quickly, in a matter of seconds? - Yes, absolutely.

If/

If I could turn to your own report and ask you first of all about handguns in general; if you could tell me first of all whether this is..... well, I think perhaps the first question is, is there a legally recognised definition of a handgun? - No.

So there is no Statutory provision that tells us what is and what is not a handgun? - That is correct.

Is there a general understanding by an expert such as you, a definition that may assist us? - Basically a handgun is designed to be held and fired with one hand; there may be occasions when you use a second hand to steady it, but it is designed to be fired with the use of one hand only.

Designed to be fired; presumably there are many things you can fire with one hand, particularly if you are strong? - Yes.

I take it it was part of your job in the police in particular to say when something was not a handgun and should be classified as a rifle rather than a handgun? - That was one of the difficulties we had, yes, and came across occasionally because there was no actual definition.

Proceed then now on the basis that a handgun is what we would normally recognise as such, could you categorise a handgun for us? - Yes, there are three basic types of handguns; there are the single shot weapon, a self-loading pistol or a semi-automatic revolver.

Tell us what a single shot weapon is first of all? - A single shot weapon is a handgun, it is normally intended for highly accurate or long range target shooting, into which one cartridge had to be manually loaded each time the weapon is fired. The fired cartridge case similarly requires to be extracted by manual means.

Do you have with you an example of such a weapon?
- Yes, I have.

Could you now show us that? - This is a single shot pistol, it consists of a fairly long barrel and the cartridge is loaded into the chamber here/here and when the barrel is closed the hammer is cocked and the bullet fired and then you break the weapon open and manually extract the cartridge.

Now, is a longer barrel a particular feature of a single shot weapon? - It is a feature of this one; a single shot weapon tends to be for target use, highly accurate target shooting nowadays and the longer the barrel the more accurate the weapon will be but there is a vast number of weapons manufactured in the early part of the 1900s which are short barrel vest or pocket pistols, they were designed for individual protection, self-protection.

They are single shot weapons? - They are single shot weapons.

Do persons such as vets who may have a handgun for their work have a single shot gun in your experience? - Yes, they could.

Do they also use other types? - Vets can use a variety of weapons; the slaughter instrument is one of the main items they use but they also use dart guns to inject tranquillisers.

By a slaughter instrument do you mean a gun or something other? - Both a gun and a cartridge bolt, something that will kill the animals but not actually fire a bullet; if you are talking in terms of, let's say, a vet dealing with a dangerous animal he may have a true firearm.

Your report divides these single shot weapons into two mechanical types; you say that there is a "Break (or hinged) action" type? - Yes.

And there is another type? - It is a bolt action which is similar to a rifle and again it works simply by a bolt, loading a cartridge into a chamber, the bolt pushes it forwards and locks it in place and by returning the bolt you extract the cartridge.

After you have fired it? - Yes, after you have fired it.

So you get handguns that work that way? - Yes, you get handguns that work that way.

Now, /

Now, excuse me for asking a question to which the answer is obvious but I think we ought to highlight the point; it may take far longer to discharge 20 shots using one of these weapons than it does using a semi-automatic Browning that we saw earlier? - Yes, absolutely.

And the exercise you are showing of loading, firing and then extracting the cartridge would take perhaps close to the five or six seconds we are talking about discharging 20 rounds from a semi-automatic weapon? - It would probably take longer, because not only would you have to fire your first shot, you would then come down from the aim, break the weapon open by using the bolt and open the weapon, extract the cartridge case, fish for another round because there is no magazine; you would have to go into your pocket or some other place where you have the ammunition, pick that up, put it in the chamber, close the weapon and make it ready to go back to your aim again and to do that would take longer than five or six seconds.

BY LORD CULLEN: Could you put some value factor on it? - I am sorry; 10, probably 15 seconds. It depends on where your spare ammunition is kept and the possible position.....if you are sitting down here at a table and firing forwards and the ammunition is beside you it would obviously be quicker than standing up with the ammunition in your pocket.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: You could do it fairly quickly if you were sitting? - Yes, because you would be able to do it quicker sitting at a table with your reserve ammunition beside you.

Obviously you take the initial aim and then you regain that position after you have re-loaded? - Yes.

Apart from these two methods of operation are there any other mechanical means of operating a single shot weapon which are of any significance? - Not really, there are one or two other ways of breaking the weapon open so that you gain access to the loaded cartridge but that tends to be in the minority; there is one particular one which looks like a revolver but, in fact, instead of having five or/or six chambers it has only one chamber so you basically fire the revolver, turn it round a quarter turn to extract the cartridge case, put a cartridge back in and back into the firing position; that is one particular weapon I can think of; there are others that break differently but the back of the chamber is what actually prevents the cartridge from falling back out again.

Do single shot weapons allow for a use of a whole series of types of ammunition? - Yes, this is probably the most extensive range of ammunition that you can find for any weapon; the main one is .22 calibre and it goes upwards to very high powered rifle cartridges; you can actually find .308 cartridges which is for a 7.68mm Nato cartridge.

The report says 7.62? - Sorry, my apologies, 7.62.

7.62mm and that is for a high power rifle? - Yes.

We have heard evidence in this case of such cartridges being held by Thomas Hamilton and they would only be capable of use in a high powered pistol or rifle? - Yes.

Now, can these cartridges be used in any form of semi-automatic pistol that you know of? - No.

So/

12.40 p.m.

So would that have to be either a high-powered rifle or a single-shot handgun? - Yes.

I think you were asked to investigate -- I know it is a bit out of your expertise but you know where to go and what to ask -- you were asked to investigate cost? - Yes, I was.

Can you help us at all with the cost of the purchase of a handgun which is a single-shot weapon? - That's actually quite a difficult question because it is a very limited market.

Why is it a limited market? - Not many people use them. Modern single-shot pistols, particularly those using the higher powered cartridges, are expensive. However, the very cheap pistols, the sort of self-defence pocket pistol that I mentioned, they are very cheap, usually between £25 and £50.

Is that second-hand or new? - Second-hand. These weapons were probably manufactured in the late 1800s or early 1900s.

They are not classed as antiques however? - No.

That is because there is readily available ammunition that can be used? - Basically, yes. There is no such definition of an antique pistol. There are recognised guidelines, and the majority of these weapons will be outwith the guidelines therefore they will require a Firearms Licence.

What are the guidelines in general terms? - The Firearms Consultative Board have issued a list of cartridges, and a firearm capable of using those cartridges will normally be considered as antiques if they are kept as curios or as ornaments. The ones that use the old black powder cartridges are basically difficult to obtain.

Is it the non-ready availability of cartridges rather than the age of the weapon which determines whether it would fall into the category known as "antique"? - Very much so. You could have weapons which were built in the 1870s which are not antiques because they can still chamber and fire currently/currently manufactured ammunition.

Remaining with the question of cost: if a person wanted to buy a new target shooting model which was a single-shot weapon would that be expensive? - It would probably start from £500 upwards. I don't think you would be able to get one for under £500. Some of the much more custom-built ones can go up to £2,000 and more.

Your experience as a police officer would be largely concerned with the use of firearms in criminal activities? - Yes.

Was this kind of weapon currently found in the hands of criminals? - No, it wasn't.

We may just at this stage complete the picture by looking at the question of the immobilisation of weapons such as this. I want to know if you can help us again, and could you tell us whether there is any way of separating the parts of that weapon? - Yes, there are. The actual barrel hinges around this axis pin here, and it would be theoretically possible to unscrew that. I haven't actually tried it with this particular pistol, but it looks as if you unscrew this therefore the two parts will come apart.

You haven't got a screwdriver there? - I do actually (demonstrates). It is as simple as that.

Can it work without the barrel? - No. You need the two parts together. The barrel only contains the ammunition and this part actually fires the ammunition.

BY LORD CULLEN: Is that kind of arrangement you have just demonstrated to us, is that typical or not typical of the type of gun we are looking at here? - It is fairly typical, the difference being here you have an axis pin, and sometimes it is a screw pin and other times it is a press pin and it is held in by friction, and to take it you you need a hammer and a drift.

Does that require a specialist, a gunsmith or not? - Basically you take that out, and the more often you do that the looser it tends to become.

Putting/

Putting it back together again may become more difficult I suppose? - Yes. It also tends to get looser, therefore it would eventually tend to become less safe.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:

Would regularly separating the one you have there in that way do anything to harm its safety? - It shouldn't really. You might wear the axis pin but I don't think it would be a significant problem because it is screwed down.

Could you put it together just now before we lose any bits? - Yes. If you know what you are doing it is a very simple operation.

Do most people who own and use guns know what they are doing when it comes to taking them apart? - Probably Yes, but I would think a minority wouldn't.

Do you not have to clean it properly? - No, in this particular weapon you don't. You can clean it as this conditions.

Would it be any more difficult to take a simple action which would render a bolt action style single-shot weapon inoperable? - No. You remove the bolt.

Is that just as easy as what you have done with that gun? - More or less.

Could you do it with a rifle? - (Demonstrates). In this particular weapon that's how you do it, but there are other variations of this which require more movement, but not much more than that.

That was two or three seconds? - Literally all you do is that (demonstrates). You unlock it and as you unlock it you pull the trigger and it falls out.

Can the gun be fired without the bolt? - No, it cannot.

What are the main differences between single-shot handguns and self-loading pistols? - Well, the main difference is the fact with the single/single-shot weapon you have to load it after each time you fire it. With the semi-automatic weapon you have a reserve of magazine of ammunition which is automatically reloaded every time you fire the weapon.

Do you have a self-loading pistol with you? - Yes.

Do you have a magazine for it? - I do.

Could you show us how it operates please? - This is a Browning handgun similar to the one which Hamilton had. Basically the magazine is just a casing in which there is a spring and the cartridges are fitted one at a time into the top of the magazine and held in place by the curved lips of the magazine. When you load the magazine you have to put it in and press it home. The weapon still cannot fire in this condition, it has to be manually charged, you have to pull the slide back. By doing that, i.e., the slide going forward again, it strips the top cartridge out of the magazine and pushes it forward into the chamber and that is the weapon ready to fire.

Hamilton's magazine has got a cartridge in the chamber and you could still have 20 in the magazine? - Yes, you can do that in either of two ways: you could physically pull it back and hold it, load one cartridge into the chamber, or, alternatively, the easiest way to do it is to operate the system and load one cartridge into the chamber, drop the magazine, load another cartridge into the magazine.

Now, would he have been able to do that with one which had no safety mechanism when the magazine was removed? - Yes, that probably would be the safer way of doing it actually.

Do all self-loading pistols work in the same way? - No. There are three different ways in which pistols will work. There is the simple blow-back system; in other words, the recoil of the cartridge just blows the whole top of the slide, that part of the pistol, backwards. You then have a delayed blow-back system where the slide is locked on to the main body of the frame for a few milliseconds until the bullet has left the muzzle. Gases within/within the barrel itself reduce in pressure and it then unlocks and goes back itself. The third is gas-operated, where when the bullet has reached the muzzle of the weapon the gases, the pressure gases are led into a piston arrangement underneath the barrel and that piston arrangement unlocks the slide and allows the top of the slide to go backwards.

Where does the gas come from? - There is a hole on the other side of the barrel, just behind the muzzle.

Where does the gas come from? How is it created? - When a cartridge is fired the bullet travels up the barrel, there is intense gas pressure in the cartridge behind the bullet, and when the bullet passes the hole some of that gas pressure is leaked through the hole and acts on the cylinder.

You have just told us about the effect of the slide going back. What happens then? - Well, when you fire a weapon the slide recoils to this position here. As it does so an extractor claw grips the rim of the cartridge and pulls the fired cartridge backwards and it hits the ejector post at the back of the gun and that flips the fired cartridge out. In this position the slide has cleared the top of the magazine and as it returns it strips the next cartridge out of the magazine and feeds it into the chamber.

You need to pull the trigger each time you fire it? - Yes, you require to pull the trigger once every time you want to fire the weapon.

Can you adapt a weapon so that you just have to more or less fumble with the trigger and it keeps firing? - It depends on the weapon, but there are some which you can alter and it will do that.

On that type of one there? - I have never had any occasion. I have never come across this particular model having been altered to work that way.

Are there large numbers of different manufacturers of similar guns? - Yes. This particular model, the Browning Hi-Power, was designed by John Moses Browning in 1926 and was introduced/introduced by Fabrique Internationale Belgium from about 1935 onwards throughout the world. This was the standard side-arm of the British Services during the Second World War, the weapon which our Forces carried, which was manufactured by a company called Inglis in Canada. Browning also have somewhere in America and they have a manufacturing plant in Japan, although I can't honestly say whether they manufacture this particular model in Japan.

Has Browning become a type rather the name of a manufacturer? - Because the man Browning actually designed it, the originator. Browning is the name of the type. It is based on a system designed by Browning and it is quite common although, I should say in America, in the States, they have a separate company.

Can a wide range of ammunition also related to single-shot be fired in this? - No.

What is the limit? - It would normally start at .22 rim fire calibre and go up to 50 Magnum calibre.

What is the most common use? - 9 mm parabelum ammunition or 9 mm Luger ammunition.

Luger sounds more like a manufacturer's name as well. Has it become a standard name for that type of ammunition? - Yes. Luger was a person who designed a pistol in 1902, the famous German Luger pistol, and ammunition for that was designed at the same time, designed for that pistol, and it has become accepted practice to call it 9 mm Luger in certain parts of the world. It is more correctly called 9 mm parabelum. It is also even more correctly called 9 mm x 19, the difference being in the length of the cartridge. You can get 9 mm x 17, 9 mm x 19, 9 mm x 22, they are all different.

Could any of that be fired in this weapon? - No, you have got to have 9 mm x 19 only.

Where would this fire? - Any pistol designed for that type of ammunition.

Any similar type? - Similar type of pistol, yes.

It/

It has got a shorter barrel than the single-shot weapon also? - Yes.

Is that a common feature of this weapon?

- In self-loading pistols the barrels range normally 4/5 inches, but you can get them longer than that. You can get extended barrels.

The extended barrel that Hamilton had was how much longer than that one? - Can I refer to some notes?

If you go back to Chisholm, either your own notes or Chisholm's report. If you did it yourself it would be better to go to your own notes? - It is a 6-inch barrel.

Can you get longer than 6 inches by adaptation? - Yes, you can. You can in fact buy manufactured self-loading pistols with barrels up to 14 inches long.

Would the magazines for these weapons be detachable? - Certainly. In some pistols, no, there are a few models in which the magazine is an integral part of the pistol.

How do you load it? - From the top. Basically there is a guide channel at the top of the pistol, and you take the slide back to this position there (demonstrates). You have this clip holding a certain number of cartridges and you have a guide and you simply press the whole load into the integral magazine.

Is there a maximum size of magazine for one of that sort? - Yes, 8-10 is the maximum it takes.

Are these weapons any more expensive or less expensive than the single-shot weapon we saw earlier? - The top price is about the same, a bit over £200. The price can go from £200 to £2,000 and second-hand weapons run from £150 to £250.

Is there an average price for a new single-shot weapon? - The most common price is £300-£600. In fact, if it helps, when I knew I was coming to give evidence at this Inquiry I took two of the latest gun magazines and listed 100 samples of second-hand/hand self-loading pistols and the average price of 100 pistols was £412.

Now, are these self-loading pistols common? - Yes, it terms of handguns they are probably the most common.

The method you demonstrated by using the magazine -- does that require a magazine for this particular weapon or can you simply buy a magazine at random for each weapon? - No, you can have a magazine designed for that specific weapon. There are a few interchangeable magazines in between makes of models but it is not common.

And taking the particular gun you have there, is there only one magazine that will fit that or will any Browning Hi-Power magazine fit that gun? - Any Browning Hi-Power magazine will fit that gun.

So any owner of that gun can have umpteen magazines for it? - Yes. Again for the purposes of this Inquiry I purchased two 20-round magazines by phoning down to an English company on a Tuesday afternoon and it came through the post on a Thursday morning.

What information did you give them? - My credit card number, how many magazines I wanted. In fact, how many magazines I wanted was the only question they really asked me.

They would be disappointed at the answer? - And I also chose the cheapest models.

After/

After an adjournment for lunch:

Just at this stage one final point on semi-automatic weapons. At the foot of page 3 of your report you mention a point relating to magazines of the de-activated weapons. Can you tell us something about that? - Under Section 8 of the Firearms Amendment Act, 1988 it is allowed for a weapon to be de-activated to specified standards. If it has been de-activated and certified as such it is no longer deemed a firearm.

Yes? - Magazines on pistols which have been de-activated to this standard are not altered in any way at all, and therefore the magazine from a de-activated Browning would be capable of use in a genuine Browning.

This is largely a fairly academic point, if you could use your credit card and a phone and acquire any number of magazines in any event? - Yes.

Can I ask you about the third general type of hand gun, which is the revolver? Can you tell us the significant or distinguishing features of the revolver? - This is a weapon which a series of chambers contained in a cylinder revolve as the hammer is cocked and fired. It requires to be manually loaded and fired cartridge cases similarly need to be extracted by hand, albeit simultaneously in most modern crane and hinged action revolvers.

Do you have any revolvers with you? - Yes, I have.

More than one? - Yes.

Can you tell us about them? - The first one I have is what is known as a solid frame revolver, i.e. a weapon which is not able to readily come apart. It is opened by flipping open a gate on the back of the cylinder, and one cartridge needs to be manually loaded into the cylinder: you put one in, then you put another in.

Yes? - When they are all fired, the extraction is the same. You have to line up the chamber/chamber with an extractor rod and physically push each cartridge case out the back. This takes some time.

In general terms can you fire six shots from a revolver as quickly as six shots from a semi-automatic pistol? - Possibly even faster.

We will come back to that. Obviously the unloading of that one would cause delay in the process of re-loading? - Yes.

In the hinged action the weapon breaks open and pivots on a centre point. You load five or six cartridges into the chamber. Closing the weapon makes it ready to fire.

Do you have to revolve the chamber as you load? - No, in this one the chamber is fully open: you have access to all the chambers.

Yes? - When you have all the rounds fired, by breaking it open, there is a star mechanism in the chamber which extracts the fired cartridges, and you flip them out, do it slowly and take them out manually; so you can unload all the fire cartridges in one movement. This makes unloading much faster.

Yes? - There is then a centre cylinder, where the cylinder swings out from the side of the revolver, allowing you to load the chambers.

Yes? - When the cartridges have been fired they can be unloaded simultaneously by pressing the pin in the chamber and extracting the cartridges together.

Is there a quicker way of loading than putting the cartridges in one by one? - There is in the hinged frame, particularly the crane cylinders. You have a device called a speed loader, which holds six unfired cartridges. If you allow me an inert cartridge.....

You have got some cartridges, but they are all inert?
- Yes.

Well, I don't think there's any objection to you doing that? - The cartridge is inserted/inserted in the speed loader in this manner, and then it is turned and locked in place.

Yes? - You obviously put in six cartridges.

Yes? - When you come to reload you literally feed them all in at the one time, and by turning the centre pivot you free the cartridges, and you take the speed loader away, and that is your cartridges loaded.

So it is a sort of magazine for a revolver? - No, it is a feed device for a revolver.

Can you buy that with your credit card and a telephone? - Yes, you can.

Is any of these three revolvers a Smith & Wesson? - Yes, the last one is.

And is that like the Smith & Wessons Hamilton had? - Yes, it is a model 19, basically the same weapon he had.

Are there different mechanisms again whereby these guns fire? - Yes, there are.

What are the various mechanisms? - They can be fired in single action, double action or both.

Yes? - Single action is where you cock the hammer manually with your thumb, and that makes the weapon ready to fire. You then only require light pressure on the trigger to cause the hammer to run forward and fire the cartridge.

Yes? - Alternatively you can do it in double action, where by pulling the trigger you pull the hammer back, and then it fires automatically.

Yes? - This is a gun which is single and double action; this is double action only.

BY LORD CULLEN: For the notes, which one is that?
- The hinged frame itself. The model is in fact single only. You can pull the trigger, / trigger, and nothing happens to it: you have to cock the hammer manually before it will fire, and then pull the trigger.

Every time? - Yes.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: We might have thought of that as double action, but that is called single action? - Yes.

And the easier it is to do it is called double action? - Well.....

It is double action of the mechanism and not of the hand? - Yes.

Do revolvers have a limit as to the number of cartridges they can hold? - Yes. That limit is determined by the size of the cylinder.

How big do they go? - 5 or 6 is common, and you can get 7. There is one model brought out by Smith & Wesson which has a 7 shot capacity.

Yes? - In a .22 calibre, a much smaller bullet, you can have more chambers in a cylinder, and up to 12 is not uncommon, or can be found. That is about the largest capacity I have ever heard of in a revolver.

Are they as common as semi-automatic pistols? - I think not. I don't have any figures to establish that, but from the weapons I have seen being used, semi-automatic weapons seem to be the more common.

In terms of price? - Again, price new ranges from £200 to £1000 or more. The secondhand price is £100 to £500. I did a similar exercise by taking the main magazines for 100 secondhand revolvers, and the average price was £248.

That is the same exercise as you did for the semi-automatic ones? - Yes.

To be clear about the various accessory parts that we have looked at, we have looked at magazines? - Yes.

We/

We have looked at a quick loading device? - A speed loader, yes.

We have looked at an extending or a weight that might be put on the end of a barrel? - Yes.

Have we looked at all the other accessories so far? - Other than the extended magazines, the large capacity magazines.

To acquire any of these magazines do you need to hold a firearms certificate? - For an extended barrel, yes, but the weight that fits on the end of the barrel no, or any of the other accessories you don't require any certification whatever.

The Firearms Act of 1968 in Section 57, which defines a firearm, includes with that definition any component part and any accessory to any such weapon designed or adapted to diminish the noise or flash caused by firing a weapon? - Yes.

So talking about accessories, it is only one particular accessory which actually requires a firearms certificate; is that right? - It is actually two: one is a sound moderator, i.e. a silencer, and the second is a flash eliminator: they are different things.

You then go on in your report to compare hand guns with other types of firearm? - Yes.

What I want to ask you about in connection with the Inquiry is the comparison with rifles and the facility with which you can carry these respective weapons around. Can you tell me what views you have expressed on that? - Yes. Hand guns tend on the whole to be comparatively small, and are easily carried. There is a large range of holsters and accessories which allow hand guns to be carried attached to a belt, i.e. the sort of thing you see in cowboy movies, under a jacket -- a shoulder holster -- and even strapped to a leg.

Yes? - This naturally has the added factor of making such carrying much more concealable.

Yes?/

Yes? - Other accessories also allow additional magazines, speed loaders and/or extra cartridges to be carried, but these are usually on a belt.

What about rifles? - Rifles are normally much larger weapons, and do not lend themselves to easy carriage. Even where there is a provision for a detachable magazine it is unusual for additional magazines to be carried.

Yes? - The normal method of carrying, when not in actual use, is in a fastened guncase slung over the shoulder. Occasionally shortened -- that is sawn-off -- easily concealed rifles are encountered in crime, but they are not common.

Are sawn-off shotguns more common than sawn-off rifles? - Yes.

You have said something like shotguns, which makes the point. So far as crime is concerned, taking hand guns, rifles and shotguns, in your experience which weapon was used in crime most commonly? - Inevitably the sawn-off shotgun was the most common one, but there is an increasing use of hand guns.

Now, you mentioned the difficulty at the outset in determining or identifying a pistol in certain circumstances. Are there types of weapon which could almost be said to fall somewhere between what we would easily understand to be a pistol and what we would easily recognise as a rifle? - Yes, there are certain sub-machine guns which have a shoulder stock, i.e. they are designed to be fired from the shoulder, but can be fired without the shoulder stock, i.e. they are a one hand-held weapon, albeit they were originally designed as a shoulder gun.

Are these semi-automatic? - To be legal in this country, yes.

You can get them semi-automatic? - Yes.

They can never be held as automatic weapons by a private individual? - No.

Does/

Does the description of a weapon as a carbine cause any difficulty? - Yes. A carbine is a small rifle. Other than the fact it must have a butt stock -- i.e. it must be a shoulder-held weapon -- the difference between a carbine and a rifle is only in the size.

Can you tell us what a carbine is? - It is a small rifle.

Any small rifle falls within that definition, does it? -
Yes.

Now, /

Now, can I turn to the question of ammunition. It would appear from what you have said already that you have brought some inert ammunition with you? - Yes, I have.

Would that be the easiest way of explaining the features of the ammunition, simply to allow you to assemble it there and then tell us about it? - The rounds are all assembled. They are all inert.

I think you start by saying there are two types of cartridge in normal use today? - Yes.

What is the nature of those two types? Just take a moment to assemble them as you wish to refer to them, then we will take it from there? - There is a rim fire cartridge, which is nowadays normally a .22 cartridge, a very small one. The primer compound, which is the initiating compound, is contained within the rim of the base.

Yes? - To fire the cartridge the firing pin or trigger has to hit the rim.

I should have asked you this before. Can you tell us as to what the component parts of a round of ammunition are? - There are in fact four parts to a cartridge. There is the cartridge case, which is a brass casing. In this one, which is centrefire, there is a primer cap in the centre, which is the initiating compound.

Yes? - Within the cartridge case is the main propellant. When the primer cap is struck by the firing pin the flame from that primer ignites the main propellant charge.

What is the propellant, normally? - It is normally a double base smokeless compound, normally nitro-celullose or nitro-glycerine. You can get black powered or gunpowder which has the same effect, but a different chemical compound.

Yes? - Sealing the front of the cartridge case is the bullet itself.

Could I without a firearm certificate purchase any of these individual parts of a round of ammunition? - You could purchase them all.

Including/

Including the primer? - Including the primer.

Could I without a firearm certificate acquire a completed round of ammunition? - No, you could not.

Could you tell us the difference between a rimfire cartridge and a centrefire cartridge? - A rimfire is where the primer compound is held within the rim of the cartridge which then has to be struck by the firing pin. This then ignites the main charge contained within the body and fires out the bullet.

Yes? - This is normally a .22. The only other calibre readily available in rimfire is 9mm shot ammunition.

What do you mean by "shot ammunition"? - Shotgun cartridge. Other calibres in rimfire are available, but they tend to be much older and usually come into the "antique" category. The ammunition itself is not antique, but the weapons designed to use it are antique.

Yes? - The construction of rimfire cartridges means that they cannot be re-loaded, either commercially or at home.

Once it is fired it is done? - Yes.

None of it can be recovered and readily re-used? - You can use it for scrap metal, but the bullet is lead and the cartridge case is brass.

But you cannot readily re-constitute the ammunition?
- No.

What are the features of centrefire? - With centrefire the primer compound is held in a separate cap which fits in to the centre of the base of the cartridge.

The firing pin must strike this cap in the centre to initiate discharge of the cartridge.

Yes? - After it has been fired it is a simple task to punch out this firing primer cap, then a new primer cap can be put into its place, additional/additional propellant loaded into the cartridge and a new bullet put on top of that.

Yes? - This is done either commercially -- several firms in fact do this on a commercial basis -- or you can do it at home. To do it you would need to buy new primer, powder and bullets? - Yes.

And would you re-use the cartridge case? - Yes; although you cannot re-use it indefinitely. 10 to 12 times is the accepted average.

What is the most expensive of these four components? - It depends what you are buying. Probably the brass cartridge case.

Is the cartridge case always brass? - Normally yes: but no, you can get aluminium ones, but aluminium cartridges are not re-loadable.

On page seven of your report you speak of the method by which the ammunition works. Can I take you to paragraph (b), where you refer to the role of the cartridge case in ensuring that gas is projected forward? Can you explain that? - When the cartridge case is in the chamber and the cartridge is fired, the build-up of gas pressure expands the cartridge tightly into the chamber and immediately seals the outside of the cartridge case against the inner wall of the chamber and stops any gases escaping backwards through the rear of the firearm, and allows the rest of the propellant to discharge the bullet.

Can I take it that if we were to look at one particular calibre of ammunition, say 9mm, we would find that the cartridge cases are uniform? - Yes.

But do we find the same in relation to the other three components? - No. The primer would be identical, but the difference would be in the propellant, the amount and type of propellant, and also the difference in the bullet shape and weight.

Can/

Can you tell me the variables for the propellant? - There are two main types of powder propellant, slow burning and fast burning.

Yes? - This usually revolves around the size of the grains of the powder. If you have a short barrelled weapon you require the propellant to burn very fast so that it has all burned by the time the bullet leaves the barrel; whereas if you have a long barrel you want the powder to burn more slowly, so that the gases are still being manufactured and the pressure is still rising until the moment the bullet leaves the barrel.

BY LORD CULLEN: For a given handgun is it possible to experiment with different grain size? - Yes, that is common for your target shooters. By using different powders you can fine tune the weapon. It is like tuning your car; you can make small adjustments to it that may make it slightly better.

Does that mean that guns which appear to do exactly the same may have slightly different characteristics? - Yes.

Does experimenting with different grains help you to find the combination which fits best? - Yes. It is a combination of both propellant and bullet weight.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: Lord Cullen asked you about the difference in weapons. Has this feature, emphasizing the different constituencies of a propellant or a bullet, got anything to do with the difference between individual's firing a gun quite apart from the difference in the weapon? - Yes.

So we have a number of variable features here, all coming together? - Yes. The lower the amount of propellant you have the less recoil you have from the gun, therefore it is easier to handle.

Yes? - Similarly, the lower level of powder you may have the lower the bullet velocity.

Your report indicates that the use of a fast or slow burning powder and the quantity thereof can have something to do with the velocity of the bullet?/

bullet? - Yes.

Can you tell us about that? - If you have a faster burning powder and maybe the cartridge case will take four grains, and that would give you a standard velocity for a particular bullet, there is still plenty of room for you to put in five grains of powder, and that will give you greater velocity, but it also increases the pressure within the barrel when the cartridge is fired.

Yes? - If you put in too much powder you will blow the firearm up.

If you have a particularly strong hand and recoil doesn't matter very much -- is that a sensible statement? - Yes, it is.

-- -- could there be an advantage in getting a greater velocity for your round emerging from the gun? Would it possibly improve your accuracy? - This is in the realms of target shooting, which is somewhat outwith my sphere. Theoretically you can, because you would have a higher velocity, and the time it takes for the bullet to travel from leaving the weapon to arriving at the target is less, therefore it is less affected by wind and atmospheric conditions.

You go on to deal with bullet weight and shape. Can you tell us the significance of this? - Although within a particular calibre you have an exact size or diameter of bullet you can have a variety of different shapes or constructions within that.

Yes? - You have the round nosed solid bullet, which is like this, which is a general purpose bullet.

Yes? - Over and above that you have a hollow or soft point nose cartridge, which is primarily used for hunting purposes, which is designed to mushroom or expand on impact, and therefore increasing the "shocking" power on a live target.

Yes? - This is a standard revolver cartridge, a .44 Magnum. It has a soft nose and an exposed lead point to it, but in the centre of the lead/lead nose is a hollow point; the idea being that when it hits something the front of it expands until you have a mushroom shape travelling forward.

And there was a third type, I think? - Yes, a semi-wadcutter, primarily used for target shooting.

Yes? - You can either have it as a complete flattened nose and then a shoulder further down the cartridge, or a full wadcutter, which has a flat front to the bullet. If you fire it at a target it cuts a clear hole in the target.

It is particularly for target shooting? - Yes.

You have jumped ahead of me a little bit. If you go back to page 7, you were talking about bullet weight and shape? - Yes. Bullet weight and shape are also significant factors in velocity and range: lighter weight bullets will have a higher velocity when compared with a heavy bullet, both being fired by the same make/quantity of propellant. Bullet shape also affects performance, especially over long distances, and in general the flatter the nose shape the more air resistance will slow its progress.

Do you know whether the solid rather than the hollow point bullet you have just described to us is better for certain target shooting purposes, or is that outwith your range of expertise? - Theoretically I cannot think of any difference, but again it is not something I have any experience of.

So the hollow nose you would not expect to have any particular effect on performance? - No.

I take it there may be others who have experience in target shooting who may be able to express a more informed opinion than yourself? - Yes.

Moving on, I think you deal in general terms before we get to the particular types of ammunition with the various types of construction?

- Yes. Bullet construction can range from simple solid lead, through partially copper/nickel-jacketed with lead core, hollow point with and without/without jacketing, soft point jacketed, to full metal jacket with various core centres.

Yes? - Soft point jacketed bullets tend to be more for rifles, and again it has a metal jacket, but with a soft lead nose to it, and a full metal jacket is this type of ammunition here, where the bullet is contained within a copper jacket.

That is fully coated? - Yes.

If we look perhaps at the ammunition which Hamilton had, we know he had some of the rounded solid nosed type, and it was all full metal jacket. Have you an example of it? - Yes.

I think in particular he used full metal jacket round nosed Norma, and he also had Jarko and Winchester? - These are different makes of ammunition. There would not be much difference other than bullet weight.

He could be experimenting with different types of 9 mm in the way you have indicated a person who makes his own might experiment with different weights of powder and so on? - Yes. It is definitely possible for a person who does not want to reload to experiment with different makes of ammunition which he thinks is best for him.

Could the powder as well as the bullet be different makes? - Yes.

Have you got there a round nosed 9 mm? - Yes.

And that is full metal jacket? - Yes.

He also had full metal jacket semi-wadcutters? - There is a range of semi-wadcutter types within the 9 mm, which has a flattened nose cone and a more distinct aperture in the muzzle of the cartridge.

Is that full metal jacket? - Yes.

Does that cover the top as well? - Yes.

And he also had metal jacket soft nosed hollow band in a number of makes, Federal, Norma and Winchester?/

Winchester? - I don't have an example of that, a 9 mm.

Normally Winchesters were .357? - The nearest thing I have to that is this, a .44 Magnum revolver cartridge, which is exactly the same, although bigger. In this case you have the copper jacket extending most of the way up the bullet, allowing the exposed lead nose cone -- in the centre of that nose cone there is the hollow point.

Now, /

2.30 p.m.

Now, it was described by Mr. Chisholm as a soft nose hollow point; is that the same thing? - That is the saying the same thing.....no, a hollow point means it has an actual cavity in the centre of the point, a soft point means that it has a soft lead exposure on the front so if you have a soft nose hollow point you have both which is what I had here.

Now, if we look at the purpose that each of these is best for or designed for can you help us first of all with the round solid nose, that is the first you defined? - It is a general purpose bullet for any purpose whatsoever, it will adequately take care of any situation.

Would it be appropriate to use for target shooting?
- Yes, you could use it for target shooting.

Do you know if it is normally used for target shooting or is that outwith your knowledge? - I think it is outwith my experience.

The second one is hollow or soft point; what is that designed for? - This is primarily for hunting purposes and the idea is to increase the nose cone on impact, therefore to increase the shocking power on live targets.

Shocking power might mean a number of things; what do you mean by increase the shocking power? - The felt impact of the bullet; one of the problems that is encountered within ammunition, particularly against the likes of a human target, is over-penetration; in other words, the bullet hits the body and goes right through and exits the other side and if you are intent on shooting a person any energy, once the bullet is clear of the target it is wasted; you can also cause further damage to somebody else further down the line so the idea of a hollow point soft nose ammunition is to expend all the energy of the bullet within the body and thus prevent it exiting.

Does that mean as the bullet expands in the body the person has a greater resistance to it? - Yes.

It/

It actually perhaps is causing movements of the tissue which is accumulating and resisting the bullet? - Yes.

Is there also a shocking effect on the nervous system quite apart from the physical feeling of shock? - Yes.

Is it right to say that this is not factually understood exactly how this works or do you know? - I have read medical books on gunshot wounds and the shocking effect varies intensely on a person being shot and what their attitude is at that particular time.

Now, there has been some reference in the Inquiry to suggest a comparison between that type of bullet and a bullet known as a dum dum bullet; is there any relationship? - You used dum dum bullets or lead bullets designed for rifles; the manufacturer of the dum dum is in India and what they used to do is cut a cross in the nose cone of the bullet and when the bullet hit a person the cross causes the bullet to fragment more easily and instead of having one bullet hole in you you had one entry hole and several fragments dispersed through your body which made medical help much more difficult. This was banned in 1989 by the NATO convention for military use.

But does that mean that you can't use a hollow or soft point bullet such as you have described for military use? - That is correct.

But you can use it for other use? - Yes, you can.

For example, do the police use them? - They do.

Why do the police use these bullets? - There are three reasons for this -- because they increase the shocking power you have more likelihood of causing an injury which will incapacitate you.

You stop your target as quickly as you can? - Yes, secondly, as I mentioned earlier there is less likelihood of over-penetration, probably more common in America where police would shoot a criminal and it might be in the streets and you/

you don't want the bullet to penetrate and go into somebody further down the road and lastly there is less likelihood that a hollow point ammunition would ricochet, it is more likely to hit a hard surface and break up.

Is it also specifically used for hunting purposes; I think you have already said that? - Yes.

Now, would it be appropriate to describe that as a bullet designed to cause the greatest injury? - Yes, in terms of bullet design that is the one that is probably designed to cause the greatest injury.

Thirdly, you mentioned a semi-wadcutter and you had explained to us already what that is for; that allows a clean mark to be cut on the target? - That is correct, yes.

The last point you make in this section is bullet weights vary substantially, even within the same calibre and you give us an example of the variation; can you explain that to us? - Basically this depends on the bullet construction and also the bullet length; it boils down to the fine tuning, if you want a specific weapon.

Could the variation be as much as almost 100%? - Yes, it can.

BY LORD CULLEN: Are grains always the same size? - Grains?

The bullet weights you are describing are between such and such number of grains? - Yes.

Are grains always the same size? - It is a standard weight.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: I think the other way in which to talk about grains is powder? - Yes.

They can be all different? - You have different sizes of grains and powder, that is like fragments of powder whereas I am talking about grains weight.

In/

In relation to powders are we talking about grains which are always the same size and weight or is there a difference?

- There is differences -- within particular powders there are differences.

Now, can I take you to the next step which is the re-loading of which we have heard a bit in the Inquiry; can you tell me what you need to re-load your own? - This probably depends how safe you want to be but you need a cartridge case, a primer cap, a propellant of some description and a bullet, that is all you need and you can manufacture your own ammunition.

Do you not need any tools? - No, if it is a fired cartridge case you need a small nail to punch out the fired primer cap at the centre, the rest can be done manually using guesswork and crossed fingers.

If you want to be safe how do you do that? - There is re-loading equipment which you can get and it takes out your primer cap, it will insert a new primer cap, it will weigh out the appropriate amount of powder, the exact amount of powder, load it into the cartridge and seek the bullet on top of that; it is a sort of manual operation.

But do you have to put something in to do something with the machine? - It depends on the class of machine; you can get some that are semi-automatic, you pull handles.

It is a self-loading reloader? - Yes, basically.

Is it expensive to do this or to acquire the equipment for that? - Not really, we are looking at probably £200 or thereabouts.

A significant reduction in cost if you shoot a lot? - Yes, exactly; not only do you have a reduction in the cost but you could even tune your cartridge to the exact specification you want and you can guarantee the accuracy and similarity of each cartridge.

Does this capacity for re-using cartridges cases have any significance in relation to/

to criminal activities? - Yes, I have come across a number of occasions where criminals have re-loaded ammunition, not using necessarily the correct component parts; for instance, there have been a number of occasions that I can think of where they have used shotgun powder to load into a pistol cartridge and it works, not efficiently but it does work.

Have you in your police experience come across much in the way of re-loaded ammunition? - In crime not really; in circumstances where there is maybe technical offences and somebody has been charged with possession of a particular item which he hasn't legal authority for and the police take possession of other firearm items which he has I have come across a number of rounds which have been re-loaded in these circumstances.

On page 9 you give us an indication of the cost price of various pieces to make up a round; can you give us some information on that? - The cost obviously varies depending on what you are actually buying but an unfired bullet will cost between £5 to £10 per 100, the brass cases are £10 to £15 per 100 but if they are previously fired cartridge cases if they are bought in bulk they can be much cheaper; the primers can be bought for £2 per 100 and smokeless powder is £15 to £20 per 16 ozs. and that is enough to load 1000 to 1500 pistol cartridges, depending what the calibre is.

And I think you give us some information on the cost of commercially manufactured ammunition? - It differs according to the grade but between £10 to £30 per 100; it can be more for less common calibres and less for calibres of standard ammunition; if you wanted top grade ammunition it would be a lot more expensive than manufactured commercially.

What is a blank cartridge? - A blank cartridge is one in which you have all the components except the bullet; there are certain blank cartridges which are designed to be more noisy than others but basically it is just a cartridge case, a primer cap and a compound which ignites and gives a bang.

And a spray of powder? - A spray of powder?/

powder?

Smoke? - Yes, smoke -- there is sometimes a sealing cap which might be a bit of plastic or possibly a round card and sometimes the cartridge case is crimped over and it contains an explosive mixture within the cartridge.

The card pops out? - Yes.

It could give somebody a sore.....? - Not really, the card is usually very thin and it is probably burnt or destroyed as it comes up the barrel.

What is the difference between that and what you have done there to make the cartridges inert? - What I have done is I have a synthetic bullet and I have taken a live cartridge and extracted the bullet, taken out the powder and burnt it; I have then that fired primer cap which is in the centre of the cartridge so it is now inert.

So there is no primer? - There is no primer, there is no propellant.

The next section deals with magazines and variations in capacity; we have really dealt with that as we were going along except with the exception of cost; what did you find there? - "The costs of additional large capacity magazines are in the rough area of £10 to £25".

Just to emphasise, no matter how many magazines you acquire you don't need a firearms certificate? - That is correct, the magazine which I bought, I think it is £15.60 that it cost me but I could get it also in stainless steel for slightly more than that.

On page 10 you deal with power and penetration of ammunition; if you look at the second paragraph you say "Factors which affect this are" and if you go down to the second last line you say "The targets expand all their energy" -- should that be "expend"? - Yes, that should be expend.

Subject to that can I take it that this is an accurate reflection over the next two and a half, nearly three pages of your experience and findings/findings in relation to the power and penetration of various types of ammunition? - That is correct.

Now, you have said that there were various theories in calculation and you have shown the calculations which you have used and you have indicated these on page 11, the various findings you made for types of ammunition; what is it you are telling us there? - The assessments that I have made for power is kinetic energy, that is the moving energy of the projectile; it is not an ideal way of assessing the factors of stopping power because a lot depends on the bullet shape and velocity but it is the only one which is easily calculable and not readily open to question.

Can we draw any conclusions from this about the sort of scale or hierarchy of the power and penetration of certain types of ammunition? - Yes, the higher the kinetic energy the more impact it will have on you, the more energy it will expend on you when it hits you.

So, for example, we find by far the lightest in terms of impact as in relation to .22 ammunition? - That is correct.

And it is far and away lighter in impact than any other type of ammunition you mention there? - Yes, but there are scales within that, there are other calibres, it is for grading upwards.

What do you mean by that? - .22 is the smallest normal calibre you will find, that is the smallest kinetic energy you find but you go up to .22 calibre and then .32 calibre and as you go up in calibre you go up in bullet weight and bullet velocity and each of these affects the kinetic energy left.

So it is almost commonsense in spite of the degrees of scientific calculations, is that right? - It is very simplistic but yes, it is the easiest way of dealing with the subject.

I didn't mean you were using commonsense, what I meant to say was by just exercising commonsense you can expect to come to more or less the conclusions you have reached? - Yes.

You/

You can understand why I am exploring that a bit between the kinetic energy relating to .22 ammunition and the rest?
- Yes, that is possibly a fault on my part in that I haven't established a big enough table for you to examine.

It is important that we don't try to strike a conclusion other than what is here so you are saying that the next one up so far as kinetic energy is concerned is .9 millimetres? - That is correct.

Now, in between the 340 foot pounds you find in the 9 millimetre and the 90 foot pounds you find in the .22 are there a number of others? - Yes.

That we should really be paying attention to? - Yes, there are a number of others which are available but not necessarily commonly used.

But/

2.50 p.m.

But there are others which are available but not necessarily commonly used. As I say, above the .22 you have the .25 and then you get the .32 above that. These are the most common calibres between the .22 and the 9mm. But you can also get a 8mm French ammunition which is comparatively weak.

Now, do I take it there would be stages between 90 and 340 relating to ammunition which is not in as common use as .22 and 9mm? - That is correct.

The other one you highlighted which is important for investigation in this Inquiry is the .357 for revolver which has a significantly greater kinetic energy than the 9mm? - That is correct.

Are these again of similar size? - Yes.

Why is the kinetic energy so much greater for the revolver ammunition? - Because of velocity. The calculation of this figure depends heavily on the velocity. The higher the velocity the much greater the kinetic energy.

Is that because of the nature of the round used with the revolver or simply to do with the fact it has come from a revolver? - No, it is due to the size of the cartridge itself. This is a 9mm round which I spoke about earlier and this is a .357 Magnum round. Clearly the cartridge case will hold more powder, and that additional powder will fire the bullet out at a much higher velocity.

I perhaps put the question wrongly earlier. I suggested to you that the 9mm and the .357 were of similar dimension? - That's the bullet.

The bullets are of similar dimension? - Yes.

But you are showing us the .357 is propelled from a larger cartridge because it has a greater volume of powder? - That is correct.

I think the highest one you recorded was the kinetic energy associated with a .303 rifle cartridge?/

cartridge? - Yes.

2,400 ft/lbs? - Yes. I just took that as an example probably because it is the round the majority of people know about.

Is that one related to the 2.67? - It is very similar. The 303 was the British Army rifle up until the 50s, the First and Second World War rifle. The 308 is the successor to that round and it has a comparable kinetic energy level.

You go on to deal with penetration at another point. In addition to the power of the bullet there will be other factors to be taken account of in relation to penetration. Now, what are these? - Basically the target, the bullet profile and its construction, one problem being if you are firing at the human body is what part it actually hits. If it hits a large bone it will tend more often to deform and be deflected and remain within the body. If it doesn't hit bone and only penetrates tissue there is the greater likelihood of it transversing the body and coming out of the other side. Again on the bullet profile, as I mentioned earlier, you have the hollow point which mushrooms, and this is more likely to stop within the body than the solid metal jacketed round.

Are you in a position to tell us anything about the likelihood of more serious injury or death resulting from the use of larger ammunition or again is that simply a matter of commonsense? - There is a lot of argument regarding this as to whether or not the larger heavier bullet is in fact more potent, shall we say, than a smaller bullet. During the 1980s the US Army forces had a large exercise and debate on whether or not the .45 calibre ammunition which they used up to then was in fact the optimum or whether they should reduce that in size to 9mm which is what the rest of the world basically used. In 1988 they decided to reduce the calibre to the 9mm cartridge yet all American gun magazines still complain, you get people taking both sides, and there are a lot of opinions still consider that the larger the bullet the better the impact. It is arguable. To my way of thinking it has more to do with velocity rather than bullet size.

Why/

Why did the Americans reduce the calibre to 9mm? -
A it falls into line with the rest of the world. It means you carry a smaller bullet instead of the larger bullet, and this is because in Army service they are looking for somebody having to carry 200 rounds of ammunition or more and therefore it is easier to transport, to carry a smaller cartridge than it is to carry a larger cartridge.

But the suggestion wasn't it would cause more damage to use the smaller kind of ammunition? - No. There is a big argument.

Can you show us the difference between a 9mm round and a .22 round that you have? - (Demonstrates). This is the 9mm round. The .22 is the small fiddly one.

It strikes me as obvious the one in your right hand is going to cause a lot more damage than the one in your left hand, or at least has the potential for much more damage. Is that far too simple and naive? - It is more or less correct, but both will cause fatal injury.

Oh, I appreciate they are equally capable of causing fatality. I am just looking at the likelihood of causing serious injury or death. Isn't the likelihood far greater the bigger the ammunition used? - Not directly.

Assuming you are firing at the same velocity? - If you are firing at the same velocity, yes, the bigger the bullet, yes.

You have given us an example I think of the .22 calibre soft lead bullet passing through the chest without striking anything, killing somebody, and becoming embedded in a door? - Yes.

And a much larger cartridge being shot at somebody and getting trapped in the clothing? - That is correct.

These are extreme examples? - They are, yes.

But they are examples? - They are practical examples, yes.

I/

I think I have asked you enough already about speed of firing which is in fact the next subject and therefore I will take you on to the following subject, accuracy and effective distances. What again are the main component parts of accuracy? - Well, accuracy in firing weapons is more dependent on the user than the actual firing itself. Accuracy is governed by barrel length within limitations and the better shooting position which you have, i.e., with a hand held revolver aimed at a target you have tremours in the hand, variations that can happen with someone; whereas if you have a long barrellled rifle and you are lying down in a shooting position you are in a much better and much more stable base on which to base your accuracy.

Is there a significant difference between the Smith and Wesson revolver and the Browning pistol in weight? In other words, is one easier to hold and fire than the other? - I would say the revolver is slightly heavier than the pistol.

But presumably you can get that the other way round depending on size? - Yes, you can.

We have had it suggested in the Inquiry so far that if you are doing target shooting with a pistol you can shoot at distances up to 100 yards. I think you mentioned the regular or effective distance as being 50 yards with a handgun? - That is a range which I would be happier to accept as the effective range for a handgun, unless you are a proficient target shooter, and if you are proficit at it you can shoot a lot further than that, even a lot further than 100 yards.

We have heard evidence about regular distances at which shooting is done which is less than 100 yards but up to 100 yards has been suggested for handgun target shooting. Can you tell us.....? - That's not within my experience.

What you have told us is the average theoretical maximum length you can fire these various types of ammunition? - That is correct.

And they are very significant distances? - That is a feature of a handgun particularly that most people just don't realise, how far the bullet will actually travel. The .22 rifle cartridge, the small/small cartridge, will travel 1500 yards. The .357 Magnum cartridge, the bigger heavier cartridge, will travel up to 2,000 yards. The same with the 9mm, it will travel up to 1900 yards.

And with rifles they would travel even further? - The likes of the cartridge for the American one certainly will travel something like well over two miles.

What is that? - The 30/06. I would say to reach these maximum ranges the weapon has to be cocked at an angle upwards. You don't just hold the weapon straight and fire the bullet out horizontally and it will travel that distance; it has to be at roughly a 30 degree angle and upwards to reach that range.

Can I move on. I asked you earlier on to show us how you immobilise the gun that we had at the very beginning? - The single shot pistol.

The single shot pistol. I think you better look at the issue in relation to the self-loading pistol and the revolver, in whichever order you think appropriate. Could you demonstrate again for me with these weapons? - There is a variety of ways in which you can strip a pistol. They are all more or less designed they can actually field strip for cleaning purposes and they can be stripped without the use of specialists.

What does "field strip" mean? - Taking down so that the major parts are available for cleaning. This particular weapon, the Browning, you slide the lock back in this position here and take down the latch and pull it out the side of the weapon (demonstrates), and then you can bring down the latch itself.

Can any part be used on its own? - No. In this condition the weapon is totally safe.

That just took two or three seconds again? - That is with that particular weapon which is comparatively easy. But the majority of them will not take much longer than that.

Put that one back together again.....

BY/

BY LORD CULLEN: Before we go further with the revolver, you say others will take more effort, so to speak. How complicated an exercise does it become if you are trying to dismantle the same types of pistol? - The majority would be comparatively easy. I can't tell you exactly. There are so many different ways. I actually have a booklet on the dismantling of firearms and it lists 400 different ways of doing it. There are other specific methods to do it.

This can be done by the user who knows what he is doing? - By the user who knows what he is doing. He would be able to do this.

Is there any risk some of the parts might be -- some of them are quite small. Could they be lost? - Many of these particular parts are quite small and therefore may be lost. Along the top of the slide section there is a recoil spring and if that comes out it will twang up to the roof, so I am not taking it out just now. You have to take it out very carefully. The same, there is a firing pin in this particular model at the back here, and in this one it comes out comparatively easily, but some firing pins require specialised tools to agitate the pin out of the slide itself.

One other point: is there any risk of degradation if the operation has been repeated? - There shouldn't really be, no.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:
Would constant removal of the firing pin cause degradation? - It shouldn't, no.

Can we move on to the revolver now? - There are three features of a revolver. To start with the solid frame revolver, the cylinder can be broken in this way (demonstrates). The spring latch is pressing up the axis pin and the cylinder then slides out the side of the weapon. In these circumstances the two parts cannot be fired; the weapon is totally safe. This is a simple way of doing it with this particular weapon? - (Demonstrates).

Just for the notes, you have done it again in a matter of a second? - Yes, that is correct. Re-assembly is equally easy. The hinged frame/frame revolver is slightly more complicated and requires the use of a screwdriver. You have to take out or you have to loosen one screw, press a little lever, and the cylinder is released (demonstrates).

That took a bit longer? - It does, yes.

But not even half a minute? - That is correct.

Can either part be used on its own? - No, they cannot.

Could you put it back again please. Is that going to affect the safety of the weapon or the accuracy of it if you do it regularly? - No, it will not. The frame or swing-out cylinder once again is done with a screwdriver (demonstrates). The cylinder slides out from the front quite simply. It is only one screw that you have to loosen to do that.

Can either part operate independently of the other? - No, it cannot.

That took almost the time of the previous one? - Exactly, yes. In this one you do have a fairly small screw and you obviously have to put it back in again.

But you have still got it? - I have still got it, yes.

You mentioned the firing pin. That was in relation to the pistol. Is there such a thing in a revolver? - Yes, there is. There is a firing pin here on the forward nose of the hammer. There is a small index pin holding that short hammer (demonstrates).

Is that a realistic way to deactivate the weapon? - Practically, no.

Why? - You would require a specialist. You would require a hammer and a drift -- plus the fact you would not necessarily go back in the same way all the time. The removal of the cylinder is a much simpler and easier way of doing it.

On/

3.10 p.m.

On page 15 you mention a concept called barrel blocks? - Yes.

What is a barrel block? - You can get barrel blocks just now for shotguns, particularly 12 bore shotguns and if I use a self-loading pistol what it is actually doing it is like a cartridge that fits into a chamber, it is just locked in place and once it is in place you can't take it out, similarly you can't chamber the ammunition; I couldn't trace anybody who makes that sort of thing for a pistol or for a revolver but I am in no doubt it should be quite simple to manufacture like one part of the rod which fits into the chamber, the chamber closes, the second part of the long rod into the front of the barrel locking the two parts together, that seals the uppermost chamber, it seals the barrel if there is a locking device at the muzzle end, it can't be taken out; to me it is a logical concept but I haven't as yet actually come across somebody actually manufacturing something like that.

This is a form of security which would enable a person to ensure that someone else wouldn't have access to his weapon? - Yes, totally.

It is really not designed to prevent someone who has his weapon or who wants to make use of his own weapon from using it without going to the particular lengths to get the two parts which might be being kept in separate places? - That is correct.

So it is for security and to prevent third party intervention? - Correct.

There are a lot of pistols and revolvers as you have explained to us; if single fire shooting or a single shot weapon was a matter to be considered by the Inquiry would there be any way of converting, if we take first of all the pistol, so that it could only be firing a single shot? - Yes, there are ways of doing this; it would not be able to be done permanently or to be so permanent it couldn't be undone; what I think here is that there are three methods by which I could see that somebody would be able to convert a.....a gunsmith particularly/particularly would be able to convert a semi-automatic weapon into a single shot weapon; if I use this.

A, B and C? - Yes.

If you just explain that with reference to the weapon? - Well, in this type A the magazine would, in fact, be basically welded in place and this would be that you couldn't remove the magazine; the top of the magazine would also be fixed so it would act purely as a loading plate; you would, in fact, be able to pull the slide back, physically put one cartridge into the chamber or on to the loading platform and then allow it to be chambered and fired, the fired cartridge case will be ejected but since there is no magazine it would be a single shot pistol.

You have worked to some extent in consultation with a gunsmith on how this may be done? - Yes, Mr. Alex Dagleish of Eaglesham.

He will be able to tell us how it could be done exactly? - Yes, I could tell you theoretically on how it is done but it is his business to adapt or repair firearms.

From your discussions with him did you mean that this is as a means of ensuring that the gun can only for the future ever be used to fire in a single shot? - It will not be permanent because of the features.....the measures I proposed here wouldn't be permanent, they could be overcome comparatively simply particularly because the magazine itself would be destroyed; at present what I am suggesting that this magazine will be welded so the pins are in place; it would be comparatively simple because the magazine has this seal to literally cut it out and file it out and if you have already closed off the magazine you put a clean new magazine back in place.

Would the same apply to Hamilton's gun that had the safety mechanism removed when the magazine was out of place; would you still need to weld the magazine into position? - Yes, you would.

There is no other way of doing it by just/just making the butt of that gun solid and somehow or other converting the top so you could still have to put in individual bullets?

- Well, by doing that all I am doing is actually replacing the magazine with a solid substitute.

Is that any more difficult to take out? - No, not really, you are going to have to weld it in place and the welder would be readily experienced anyway no matter where you are and the pin would be through the hand grip and this is going to be accessible.

You can't envisage some other sort of substance poured or somehow or other put into that where that will adhere it to the inside of the butt so it can't be removed? - I can't see that to be the case because again what you are talking about here is a pistol where the magazine was fixed in place; there are a large number of weapons of which you have to take the magazine out of the weapon to repair them; there are component parts within the butt itself so this is underneath the top of the butt and you would require to have the magazine removed to actually repair the weapon.

I will come to that in a second but if we just remain with this, is it clear that it is not necessary to have the magazine inside the butt as long as something else is inside the butt? - Yes.

Something in the event that prevents a magazine loaded being put into the butt? - Yes.

Now, on the subject then of a weapon which requires the removal of the magazine for certain purposes how would you de-activate.....? - This could be done by literally cutting the magazine into three sections; if you cut out the middle section you leave the loading platform at the top and this could be pinned in place, it must be pinned in place or it be removed by a gunsmith but the basic magazine, this section down here, would be welded and pinned into the position of the plate.

It would have to be removable? - No, the case wouldn't be removable -- there would be cut-outs in the butt grip itself.

Would that be as easily overcome as securing/securing the whole magazine in place? - I wouldn't say easy but knowing the ingenuity by which criminals exercise their minds there would be no problem.

There is a third one considered? - It is a self-loading pistol which has an integral magazine loaded at the top, you would have to have a blanking plate fitted within that to restrict the magazine case.

Would that be easily overcome like the others? - Probably slightly more difficult but yes, I still think it could be done.

You have said something on page 17 about weapons becoming more dangerous or as a result of doing this to them? - Yes, in this particular weapon here you have what is known as a holding open device; this slide is held back allowing you access to the chamber so you can do this, holding the weapon with one hand and loading the cartridge with your free hand and that would allow you to do it safely but there is a large number of semi-automatic weapons which don't have this device; if you had a weapon without that you would have to hold the slide back which, as I am taking this catch off and holding it back with the fingers of my right hand and I try to load it with my free hand -- there is a lot of sharp edges on this particular weapon and on others and I can well envisage a situation where if you are in the process of loading it your fingers slip off the top and the slide runs forward and it will chamber that round and you are not holding the weapon properly and it would be instinctive to grab whatever you could reach with your free fingers and that may well be the trigger.

There is a device to enable you to do that without your elaborate position of your hand? - It is the holding pin device.

Now, in 1988 when there were restrictions imposed on rifles and shotguns a similar problem arose and means were devised I think at that time to reduce the capacity of weapons? - That is correct.

Were these means different from the type of means that we are looking at in relation to the pistol?/

pistol? - Yes, there were two.....the magazines you find in these weapons are slightly different from that which you find in pistols and it is easier in some ways to actually pin them in place, more so than you can with a pistol but the availability of the magazine part is just not there so you can't destroy the magazine in taking it out or converting a shotgun or converting a rifle.

What do you mean "the availability is not there"? - You can't get the magazine out as easily as you could with the likes of a pistol so you have to retain the magazine in a possibly useful form.

Is it simply because they are no longer made because of the results of what happened in 1988? - Possibly, yes.

Let us assume for the moment that this magazine was outlawed in some way and was not manufactured any more, let's take that out the frame as an issue? - Yes.

And assume that we are in the same position, that it is equally difficult to get a replacement magazine for a pistol as it is for a converted rifle? - Then yes, you would be able to pin or weld the magazine in a self-loading pistol with as much security and permanency as you would with a shotgun or rifle under the 1988 regulations.

Are you saying that to some extent the availability of magazines means that what we are looking at here for converting this to a single shot would make a gun as secure from re-conversion as rifles and shotguns are which have been converted since 1988? - Basically, yes.

Which/

Which means you are being critical as a means to converting a weapon, rifles, shotguns after 1988 in a sense? - Yes.

Can we look at the revolver and can you tell me how one might convert a revolver to a single shot? - Again under the 1988 Regulations there are two ways in which they recommend deactivation which can be amended to restrict revolvers to one shot and that is to weld five rods within five of the chambers and pin these welded rods in place; that would leave you one blank chamber; the other method suggested is that the walls between each chamber be milled out so you have no chamber at all but if you convert this to a single shot you mill out all the walls leaving one chamber, you can additionally put a steel pin into the open space where the chambers used to be; of the two this is the one which I think is the more secure and the less likely to be reconverted but I have some severe reservations regarding this method because of the additional stress that that might put on the single remaining chamber when that is being fired; you would destroy the integral strength of the whole cylinder by milling out some of the wall and whether this is a problem that might occur with repeated firings on that one remaining chamber I am not sure; that would have to be looked at very carefully.

Would reactivation be more difficult with a revolver than a pistol or are we talking about the same degree of difficulty as with a pistol? - I would have a thought a revolver perhaps would be more difficult to reconvert than a pistol.

Mr. Dalgleish would perhaps help us more on that? - Yes.

You said that in relation to revolvers that was following specification for deactivation of rifles following the firearms amendment in 1988? - Yes.

In what circumstances did the rules come in for deactivation of revolvers? - When the 1988 Act was introduced the Home Office produced specifications or guidelines as to what has to be done with a revolver so it would meet the criteria laid down to become within the deactivated scope in Section 8.

Why/

Why did deactivation become statutory in 1988, do you know? - No, that is a policy question.

And was there also provision about deactivating pistols? - Yes.

Have you been following the guidance in relation to deactivation when you gave us the examples you described for deactivation in the sense of making them a single shot? - Yes, I would say that the original specifications which came out in 1989 have not been found to be comprehensive enough and new specifications were issued in October 1995 but these new specifications do not attempt any deactivation of the magazine of a self-loading pistol.

But an additional feature when you are actually deactivating a weapon completely is that it can't fire at all? - Yes.

So all the chambers of the revolver are blocked or cut through? - Yes.

In relation to a pistol something is done so it can't fire at all; now, did that make a difference when it comes to the ease with which it might be reactivated; in other words, reactivated in the sense of converting it back from a single shot to multi shot? - Deactivation procedures take in a lot more than the major component parts of a firearm; for instance, the butt is solid, blocked and welded in place, the firing pins are taken out or ground off, various other parts have to be immobilised or not totally destroyed to ensure that it can't be readily used.

So it is a lot more difficult to get it to fire at all than it is to convert it back from single shot to multi shot? - Yes.

3.30 p.m.

I don't want to spend any material time on rifles but I do want just to ask you about one matter. Self-loading rifles were largely outlawed by the Act of 1988? - The '88 Act, yes.

With the exception perhaps of one type? - With the exception of the .22 rim fire calibre.

And indeed one action type that you have described in your report? - The lever action rifle.

Do you have a lever action rifle there? - Yes, I do.

Can you tell us what lever action means? - Lever action is one in which you have a tubular magazine underneath the barrel and you load the cartridges into that magazine and there is a mechanical operation by flicking a lever, this allows the last cartridge, the loaded cartridge, to be put in position to be chambered by the lever moving forward. It pushes the cartridge into the chamber and at the same time it cocks the hammer and makes the rifle ready to fire.

So it is not the process of firing the trigger that makes that reload it is the operation of the lever? - That is correct. If I pulled the trigger just now and let the hammer run forward of that it would fire that cartridge. (Demonstrates). This is still safe in that condition, it will not fire out. If there is some rounds in the magazine I would then have to move the lever forward and that would eject the fired round and bring the next live round up ready to be thrust forward into the chamber.

That is different from the mechanism of a self-loading pistol? - Yes.

In the sense it is the pulling of the trigger that operates the self-loading pistol whereas here you have actually to engage each round by moving a lever? - That is correct.

I want to move on to your supplementary report. In this connection I am interested in the question of identifying firearms and magazines. Now, /

Now, does every firearm have a unique registration number, like a motor car? - On the weapon itself, no. No serial number can be considered unique. Individual manufacturers have their own sequence of coding when stamping their serial number on their firearms. It usually takes the form of a series of numbers with or without a letter involved. They generally aren't considered unique to that manufacturer; other manufacturers might use the same sequence if it is only numbers.

By chance? - Just by chance, yes. Unfortunately there is also, there are certain firearms manufacturing businesses in Eastern countries where they will copy a current firearm and they will use the same serial numbers on them all.

And they might come into this country? - Yes, it is feasible. I am not saying it does happen but I don't see any reason, there is nothing to stop it.

At the moment we are relying on a number a manufacturer puts on the gun? - Yes.

And are you aware of any examples where, apart from countries you mentioned, there have been guns found carrying identical numbers? - Yes. This is particularly relatively old firearms, those in the early 1990s, especially in Spain and Belgium. In fact, I can remember examining two Spanish guns, self-loading pistols, identical externally, and there is no manufacturer's make or name on the weapon at all, and they both bore the same serial number.

So, for example, there are weapons like that surfacing in this country? - Yes.

Is there any reason why guns shouldn't be registered in the same way and some mark put on them that makes them uniquely identifiable? - That could be done within the United Kingdom. Each firearm could be stamped with its own number and any imported firearm thereafter would require to be uniquely stamped. There is no reason why it shouldn't be done rather than cost and time.

It is done with all the foreign cars we import -- in fact they are probably all nearly foreign/foreign -- but they have all got a unique registration number, haven't they? - Yes, they have.

And uniquely identifiable engine numbers and chassis numbers; is that right? - Yes.

Is there anything about the structure and mechanism of a gun that means you can't actually mark anything on it and give it a unique identification? - None whatsoever. I would say in criminal use serial numbers are removed regularly. The current serial numbers have been filed and ground off of them.

I appreciate every little may not take us very far but it may make some progress? - Yes. The other difficulty you may find with unique serial numbers on imported weapons, particularly those from the Eastern Block countries, they may be using the Cyrillic alphabet as well as ordinary numbers, and I am not good at Russian languages.

I take it quite apart from that question of how unique the number is, from what you have said guns usually have numbers? - Yes, the majority of modern weapons have a number. If you go back to the early 1900s you might find cheap ones don't have numbers.

As an example you can have two identical weapons surfacing that had identical numbers but no different manufacturer's name? - They had no name on them at all.

But identical numbers? - Yes, identical numbers and identical features.

Is it likely they were made by the same company? - I would say so, yes.

Is there any other way, apart from giving guns numbers, that one might think of identifying them? Is there any other accumulation of features you might regard which would be unique because of a combination of those is an effective way of retaining a record of the identity of a gun? - I would have to say Yes, there is a possibility of that. Although you might have more than one weapon with the same number it is unlikely that they will all/all have identical features. If you were to classify first of all by serial number and then sub-divide that serial number by the type of weapon, you might find that if you have a pistol with the serial number 123, you also have a shotgun with the number 123, so there you have a pistol and a shotgun and they are obviously different. You could do that further by country of manufacture -- not necessarily the country of manufacture, but the country which has proofed the weapon since all weapons coming into this country has to be proofed by one of the recognised Proof Houses. You can take it further than the manufacturer's name and model. There are many features. You could actually incorporate that in a system for further sub-classifying the serial number which means you would then be able to identify one particular firearm.

Do magazines have numbers? - No, they do not. There is one exception which is the Luger pistol which again affects the value of the weapon: if that serial number doesn't match the rest of the weapon its value drops considerably.

If we can concentrate on handguns. Do magazines come in different forms or are they all like the ones we have looked at already? - They come in different forms. This is the standard box magazine. You also have what is known as a snail drum magazine. It is a sort of circular magazine that clips over the magazine feed and the contents are arranged round, and you can get up to 50 rounds in some of these magazines.

Do you also get magazines that fit somewhere else like the rifle you showed us, or is that just in the case of the rifle? - The cheaper magazines -- in this rifle here, the ones that fit under the barrel, are as far as I am aware exclusive to shotguns or rifles. You occasionally get a .22 calibre tubular magazine fits up the butt stock here rather than slung underneath the barrel. It is the same idea, it is just a different direction.

Can you imagine having a handgun with a unique magazine since that magazine would only fit that handgun, or is that an unrealistic proposition? - It is unrealistic.

Is there any reason why numbers can't somehow/somehow or other, can't be put on magazines? - No, that is perfectly acceptable.

I suppose if you do have a Firearms Certificate and have a magazine that could provide effective control on the number of magazines you were allowed to hold? - If the magazine was classed as a component part of the firearm that could then be exhibited within the Firearm Certificate, and you will require when you get magazines, buy more, whatever good reason you have.....

Why is it not regarded as a component part of the firearm? - Because the 1968 Act didn't define what a component part was.

So it is a matter of opinion? - Up until 1988 it was a generally held opinion in Glasgow and Strathclyde that we would go to court for a prosecution on a magazine because we considered it was a component part of the firearm because without the magazine the firearm would not work in the manner it was designed. That was the usable definition which we applied in these days, it was a component part without which the weapon would not operate in the manner it was designed, and it was a component part in terms of Section 57. With the 1988 Act coming in, particularly Section 8 about de-activated weapons, where the magazine has not been altered in any form at all, there is no way we can actually tell that magazine is a component part of a genuine firearm or a de-activated firearm and we can therefore not in all confidence go to court and say it is a component part.

BY LORD CULLEN: The number of magazines in present circulation is presumably very large compared to the number of firearms? - I honestly couldn't quantify that. I would suspect that the majority of target shooters, which is the majority of pistol holders, would have more than one magazine, would have probably several. I think my colleague Mr. Dalglish will be able to give more information, it is more in his line to have that information.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: It is no doubt my fault -- perhaps due to a Friday -- but what you were saying to us there about difficulties/difficulties with the position after 1988.....? - Up to 1988 it was our considered opinion in the police that a magazine was a component part. I cannot think actually of any reported cases or Appeal cases on this subject. But with the introduction of the 1988 Act you are then allowed de-activated weapons in terms of Section 8 of that Act, and the de-activation guidelines specifically do not alter magazines in any firearm whatever. If a magazine was then brought to the police they would be hard pushed to know what it is -- so this is the legal position -- we cannot tell whether that magazine was a component part of a genuine firearm or a de-activated firearm and we then just said right, okay, we cannot -- since we cannot distinguish between the two we will not jump either way.

So you never went to court on it? - I understand that the Lothians and Borders Police in 1975 had a case involving a Sten gun magazine which they got a conviction on, but I haven't been able to trace it yet. I don't think it was ever challenged on Appeal.

What was the whole point of introducing this category of de-activated weapons? - That was a policy decision by the Government. I don't know.

Did it mean that a person could have a weapon without a Firearms Certificate? - Yes. Once a weapon has been de-activated to a certain standard it is then subject to a Proof House or one of the Proof Houses where they certify it and issue a written certificate identifying it by model and number that that weapon has been de-activated to Government standards and it is no longer classed as a firearm after that.

People hold things like Kalashnikov rifles with a de-activation certificate? - Oh, yes, sub-machineguns, machineguns, anything at all, as long as it has been de-activated to standard.

I suppose one problem about serial numbers on magazines might be seen to be guns with integral magazines. Presumably the integral magazines couldn't be removed from the guns? - Yes. The question there will be is it a weapon and therefore is the magazine a firearm.

Although/

Although you mentioned that is a problem when you have unique numbers for guns is it really seen as one? - If you are considering starting unique numbers on all existing weapons then it is not a problem.

You mentioned the other problem is weapons deactivated since 1988 will still have their magazines? - Yes, they have.

So if there was any thought given to numbers for the magazines thought would have to be given to how to deal with them? - Yes.

MONDAY, 24th JUNE, 1996.

NINETEENTH DAY.

LORD CULLEN: Well, let's begin again. Now, Mr. Campbell, I think you were about to cross-examine?

MR. CAMPBELL: Thank you, sir. Good morning, Mr. Paton.

MR. PATON: Good morning.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Just a few fairly general questions, if I may? I think we know that legislation falls into at least two parts, one dealing with firearms and the other dealing with shotguns. Am I right in understanding that a shotgun is a deadly weapon? - Yes, it is.

So far as the ammunition for shotguns is concerned, namely shotgun cartridges, I take it they can be lethal as well? - Yes, they can; well, they are.

More generally, so far as blank rounds are concerned, which I take it could be used in either a shotgun or a firearm, can blank rounds cause physical injury? - The actual blank round itself could if the muzzle of the weapon firing it was held close to the skin or against somebody's head or face or into the eye, yes, it could cause injury. If you were firing let's say a blank round in a rifle, then that would be much more potent than a blank round in a pistol.

What does a blank round consist of? I know you went through this a little bit the other day, and it will be easier to follow if we see one? - Right -- I have here in my left hand -- this is a blank round, an 8 mm blank designed to be used in replica pistols, blank firing pistols, and basically it's the same as a standard round except it does not have a bullet in it. The amount of propellant in the blank round is considerably less than that in the live ammunition, and it will be slightly different in that the blank ammunition is designed for noise rather than propelling force.

This/

This may be outwith your expertise, but you mentioned the potential for harm if a blank round is used in a rifle? - Yes.

Could a blank round cause a fatal injury? - In a rifle, yes.

But not in any other form of weapon? - All I can say is I think it would be unlikely. I couldn't totally exclude it. It depends on the target, if you want, and where you are aiming at. If you put -- if you fire a blank round into somebody's eye, then you may do sufficient damage and the shot may kill, but I think it unlikely, but that is obviously more a medical question than I can directly answer.

Just so we understand a little bit more about how these things work, why is the use of a blank round in a rifle more harmful? - It will contain more propellant. In addition, it is unusual for civilians to fire blank ammunition in rifles. That is more a military use, and the military use blank rounds to simulate conditions of firing, in which case if it was a fully automatic weapon, blank ammunition will be sufficiently powerful to cause the weapon to recoil and cycle, so it will continually fire blank ammunition. You don't get that with pistols or revolvers.

Turning to another matter altogether, we know that the 1988 legislation did not include handguns in its prohibition of semi-automatic weapons? - That is correct.

Can I explore with you just for a moment some of the characteristics of a semi-automatic handgun, and perhaps more generally, so far as short-barrelled weapons are concerned, are they more easily concealed than longer-barrelled weapons? - Oh yes, yes.

And the shorter the barrel of the weapon, perhaps the less awareness the user might have as to the precise direction in which the barrel is pointing? Would that be fair? - In general terms, the shorter the barrel, the less accurate the weapon will be. Minor movements of the hand with a short barrel will cause greater deviation at a target range, but in very loose terms, yes, what you suggested/suggested would be accurate.

And in terms of changing the direction in which the barrel is pointing, the shorter the barrel, the less movement would be required to do that? - No; you would still have to move it exactly the same number of degrees. If you were moving from left to right, the aim under the barrel would move the same number of degrees. The muzzle of the barrel would move further if you had a longer barrel, but the actual movement of your hand and the weapon would be the same.

It may not matter terribly much for all practical purposes, but in terms of operating at close quarters, is a handgun, a semi-automatic handgun, a more potent weapon or a more deadly weapon than a semi-automatic rifle? - That has to depend on the user, but theoretically, the pistol would be the better weapon to have in a close encounter situation.

BY LORD CULLEN: In what sense? - It would be easier to use single-handed, therefore easier to move from target to target, whereas with a rifle you would be using it with two hands. You would probably have to use it held more securely to absorb the recoil of the rifle firing, and in all probability you would have to move your body as well as your hand when moving from target to target.

Very broadly, how do they compare in weight? - A pistol would normally be about 2 lbs and a rifle could weigh about 8 lbs.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. CAMPBELL: You were asked some questions last week about the definition of a handgun? - Yes.

And still in the context of semi-automatic weapons, we have the prohibition in the 1988 Act of automatic and semi-automatic rifles. Does it follow from that that there must be some method of establishing when a weapon is or is not a semi-automatic rifle? - Basically, yes. If a weapon has a shoulder stock or is designed to be used with a shoulder stock, i.e. be held against the shoulder when being fired, it would be a rifle or a carbine, and if it does not have that facility, it would/would be a pistol.

BY LORD CULLEN: Does that apply even though the stock had been removed? - If the facility for a stock was there, it would be a carbine or a rifle.

You mentioned an example of that on Friday? - That is correct, yes.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: I take it it would follow that if there was a prohibition on all automatic and semi-automatic firearms, then these questions of definition would cease to arise? - That is correct.

You gave some evidence last week concerning the separation of working parts from the main body of a firearm, and I think we followed very clearly what you were saying in that connection. Would you see any method in consideration of providing that all working parts -- rather the possession of all working parts should be subject to a Firearms Certificate? - Personally speaking, I would say yes. Providing something is unique to firearms, then it should be a component part of a firearm, irrespective of what part is to be used.

Putting it into context, one of the suggestions which has been put to the Inquiry is that there may be some merit in separate storage of the working parts of a weapon from the main body of the weapon itself, possibly even in different buildings. Now, one concern, or one comment which has been made in that regard is that the unscrupulous owner may possess illicit spare parts? - Under the present situation, he could have a number of spare parts which would not easily be termed component parts. The way that I would differentiate -- there are obviously certain parts which are not unique to firearms like screws or pins or springs, and I would not class them as component parts of a firearm, but other parts such as a trigger or hammer or firing pin or various parts of the mechanism of a semi-automatic pistol, I would consider that to be component parts, and I see no reason why they could not come within the Section 57 definition of a component part, and therefore subject to the Firearms Certificate regulations and conditions./

conditions.

Might there be another additional possibility, not necessarily an alternative possibility, but perhaps an additional possibility, namely that if buying a new part for a weapon, one required to hand in the old part? - I hadn't thought of that question. It may be a possibility, but on the other hand the part may be broken, and if it has fallen out of the weapon, the person may not have it. I'm not sure.

In general terms, would you expect the owner of a firearm to be able to strip his weapon, assuming it is capable of being stripped down? - That is a difficult question to answer. Personally speaking, I would say yes, but I have no doubt there are people who are less mechanically minded than I am who may not be able to do that.

If/

10.20 a.m.

If a person is not able to strip his weapon is he someone who should be entrusted with that weapon? - I don't know. I can't answer that question.

We understand that there are some weapons which may not be capable of being stripped down; is that correct? - All weapons are capable of being stripped down. There might be one or two that would require a gunsmith to do that, or require some technical knowledge of the equipment or skills which might be beyond the normal firearms holder.

Again I take it another possibility would be to render any weapon which could not be stripped down a prohibited weapon? - That is a possibility, yes.

So far as the possibility of a national database of weapons is concerned, do all manufacturers of weapons provide individual serial numbers upon them? - The answer to that is no. The major ones or the more reputable ones do, but I have no doubt there are others which do not.

Presumably however it would be possible to make provision if every weapon required to be stamped? - Yes, that would be possible.

You were asked certain questions relating to the home loading of ammunition? - Yes.

Again please tell me if this is not something of which you have knowledge or experience: but is there any good reason for permitting the home loading of ammunition? - For a firearms owner who is using a lot of ammunition it would be probably cheaper in the long run. Plus he could experiment with different ammunition combinations to produce the most acceptable ammunition for one particular firearm.

Yes? - He could also guarantee the consistency of his particular ammunition. When you are buying commercial-grade ammunition there will be minimal variances in the ammunition. Manufacturers actually produce a batch grade ammunition for use in very/very high powered or high level target shooting. If you are loading your own you are in a better position to maintain the same consistency, at a cheaper price than with a commercial grade of ammunition.

What it means is that an individual is able to create ammunition without that being known to the police? - That is correct.

You gave evidence concerning various types of ammunition and the different characteristics, and you explained to us the effect on a human body of certain types of ammunition, hollow nosed ammunition and the like? - Yes.

So far as the type of ammunition which does cause maximum damage to the human body is concerned, is such ammunition necessary for the purposes of target shooting? - I do not target shoot, but I cannot think of a viable reason for it, although there may be something technical known to those conversant with this discipline that I am unaware of.

At the outset of your evidence-in-chief you were discussing the four weapons which Hamilton had in his possession on the 13th March? - Yes.

You told us that one of them had a muzzle weight on the weapon? - Yes.

Am I right in understanding that that is a piece of metal on the top of the end of the barrel of the weapon? - It fits round the end of the barrel.

All the way round? - Yes.

Now, obviously if his lordship wishes to look at the weapon he can readily see which weapon possesses that characteristic? - Yes. It is the longer of the two pistols.

You discussed the oddity of one of the magazines which was recovered in that different types of bullets were loaded in the magazine? - Yes.

The bullets which were towards the top of the/the magazine, in other words the ones which would be fired first: were they more harmful or powerful than the ones below? - These were the round nosed full metal jacket, such as this one here, and these were the ones with the most penetrative power. The middle ones, the semi-wadcutter, were the ones which would penetrate to a medium extent; and the hollow ones would penetrate to the least, but would cause the most damage.

So the most damaging were the last? - Yes.

You described to us some of the differences between a single shot pistol and a semi-automatic handgun, and in particular the need to reload the single shot pistol after each shot? - Yes.

We understand that both single shot and self-loaders are used for target shooting? - Yes, they are.

For the purposes of target shooting would I be correct therefore in understanding that the main difference relates to what might be described as a matter of convenience, in that if you want to fire a number of rounds of ammunition at a target it is more convenient to do so with a self-loader rather than a single shot pistol, to avoid having to reload between each shot? - No, I don't think that is the reason. They are designed for different competitions, or rather different competitions are designed for these particular weapons.

Yes? - To take an analogy in relation to motor racing, you can go motor racing in a normal production car, or you can go up through the Formulae to Formula 1, and each one determines its own type of car.

Yes? - It is the same with a pistol. The competition determines what kind of pistol you use in it.

There are some forms of competition which proceed on the understanding that participants will be using a semi-automatic weapon? - Yes.

Because it is of the essence of the competition/competition that a number of bullets are able to be fired rapidly? - Once you are into the rules of competition you are outwith my sphere; but that is my understanding.

Presumably there are certain types of competition where a single shot is a perfectly satisfactory weapon? - Yes.

Forgive me if you covered this in your evidence-in-chief, but are there a variety of calibres of single shot pistols? - Yes. This is the range which is most extensive, and you go up from an 0.2 to an 0.308 Winchester.

Is it possible to convert a single shot weapon to a multiple shot weapon? - No, not without some very extensive engineering. You would really have to manufacture a new pistol.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: You were earlier talking about types of bullet. There is no requirement in the firearms certificate to specify the shape of the bullet, is there? You can buy round nosed, hollow nosed or semi-wadcutter as long as you have permission to hold that type of bullet? - The 1992 Regulations do have a slight restriction on the availability of the hollow nosed type, which they term as expanding ammunition. If you have a firearm certificate to allow you to possess ammunition of that type you are exempt from the terms of that Section.

You are saying the round nosed is most lethal in that it goes through the body? - No, I wouldn't say it is the most lethal. It will penetrate the furthest, which is not the same thing.

Is the hollow nosed most lethal of the three? Does it cause more damage than the other two? - In general terms yes, it would, because the nose cone would mushroom, and you would have a larger diameter nose to the hollow point, therefore you are more liable to get more damage within the body.

Yes? - At the same time, that bullet would expend all its energy within the body and would not penetrate right through, whereas with the full metal jacket round nose it is more likely it will/will go right through the body, and it will still have energy left, and that energy is wasted, if you like; it is not expended within the body.

You talked about the hollow nosed being used for the likes of deer shooting. I think there is specific provision in the Deer Order, 1984 for that? - The actual wording is "Expanding ammunition".

Is there any reason in your view why hollow nosed bullets should be permitted to be held at all for those who only target shoot? - As I have said, no, I cannot think of a valid reason for that point.

BY LORD CULLEN: On that point, can you distinguish hollow nosed from expanding? - Hollow nosed bullets in this country, where there is not a cavity in the centre of the nose of the bullet -- soft point is one where the nose cone is complete, but the copper jacket does not completely cover the nose cone. You have a soft lead front to the bullet. The content is the same, but the hollow point still tends to mushroom more quickly and easily than the soft nose. Soft nose usually has to travel faster, at a higher velocity, to mushroom as well as this.

Would the use of a rifle have that effect? - Yes.

Presumably that is why it is used in a deer context? - Because it has not a cavity in the centre of it it is more aerodynamically efficient at longer distances, shooting from 400 or 500 yards; it will be better.

You get the best combination of characteristics? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. GIBB: I think we have had evidence of the bullet striking parts of the human body, that there will be a significant difference in relation to the part it strikes: but in your view would a hollow nosed bullet inevitably result in a fatality? - No, it depends where it hits. If you are shot in the foot, unless you bled to death it would not kill you.

You/

You have no logical explanation as to why in 1988 semi-automatic rifles were outlawed but not semi-automatic pistols? - No.

Do they have the same characteristics? - They have the same characteristics, but their efficiency over longer ranges is different. Whereas a pistol is limited to within a 50 to 100 range maximum, really, for the normal person it would be less than that, whereas a rifle will have a usable range of 400 to 600 yards, and much longer by competitive shooters.

It may be Lord Cullen has investigated this, but it may be Hungerford was a situation in which semi-automatic rifles were used as opposed to semi-automatic pistols? - From vague memory, I understand he used both, although the semi-automatic rifle was the most common weapon used.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Can you explain more fully how you envisage a fatality resulting from the use of a blank round? - The only way I could really see a blank round causing a fatality is if it was fired into the eye or possibly directly into the ear, where you got a jet of high powered gases going straight into a sensitive part.

How would you envisage gases causing death? - Either by penetrating through the ear into the brain cavity or through the eye possibly the same way, or just the shock of such a thing happening.

You were asked some questions about the requirements of a person who wants another spare part for his weapon to hand in the old part, and you mentioned the possibility of the old one breaking or being lost? - Yes.

In relation to firearms, is that a usual occurrence? - I am sorry, I just can't answer that question. I don't know how common it would be. What I am envisaging here is the likes of a semi-automatic pistol, if the hammer broke in the course of being fired the recoil would still take place, and with the gun slamming back at high speed it may take the hammer right off and throw it yards behind the shooter, where it may not ever be found. There would still be part of it there; there would still be/be parts of the broken item of the weapon, but the main body of it would be gone.

We are talking of a broken, unusable piece of metal, are we? - Yes.

So we are not in that situation envisaging someone who has removed the working part and gone and bought another one? - No.

You were asked also some questions about the longer barrelled Browning. Can I take it that that is a weapon which has been custom-built with a longer barrel? - Yes, it is.

And not one that Hamilton would have tacked a wee bit on to the end of the barrel? - No.

Would it be custom-built with the muzzle weight, or could that have been added by anyone later? - It could have been added by anyone later.

What is the most likely? - I would say it has been custom-built with that part on it.

We have heard of that weapon already having been sold to Hamilton in that condition, and that would make sense, from what you are saying? - Yes.

You were asked about the relationship of single shot weapons. Do you get large calibre single shot handguns? - Yes, you do.

Up to a .308? - In fact it may even be more than that; that was just an example I was using. Those weapons have a similar range to a rifle, a maximum range.

You were asked a question about the distinction between understanding hollow point ammunition and you described hollow nosed and soft point. I take it you were describing two forms of expanding ammunition when you did that? - Yes.

ALEXANDER WILLIAM DALGLEISH (40) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I am a registered/registered firearms dealer.

And that is part of your business; is that right? - Yes.

And you conduct business in Eaglesham? - Yes.

What is the overall nature of your business? - We have a retail shop where we sell new and second-hand firearms, rifles, shotguns, pistols. We also have a workshop where we make and repair and renovate guns.

Do you also deal in other sporting equipment, or are you just a gun dealer, basically? - Yes, I'm just a gun dealer.

How long have you been doing this? - 20 odd years. I have served an apprenticeship first, then I worked as a gunsmith with Mr. Brown, and I have been on my own for just over 10 years.

You actually do the repairs and maintenance work yourself, do you? - Yes.

I know this is not why you are here; but there is one thing I might ask you beyond the subject of your report, and that is the extent to which you stock handguns. Do you stock them regularly? - Yes, we have always got mainly second-hand ones for sale. At the moment we have approximately 20 handguns, 20 pistols, for sale.

Is that the sort of average? - For me, yes.

Is there much of a turnover in handguns.....? - No.

.....as contrasted with longer barrelled weapons? - No, it is a very small proportion. The sale of pistols is a very small part of our business.

Now, you have prepared a report, partly in conjunction with work done by the witness Mr. Paton? - Yes.

Could you have your report in front of you, /

you, please? I think it will be given the number R46. Now, you were specifically asked to look at the question of how difficult it might be to convert self-loading or semi-automatic pistols so that they can fire only one shot before being reloaded? - Yes.

Your report sets that out in the first two pages? - Yes.

Then you were asked to look at the same question in relation to revolvers, and you also deal with that on page two; is that right? - Yes.

Could you also have Mr. Paton's first report, which must be R44, before you? - Yes.

If you go to page 16 of that, on pages 16, 17 and 18 you will see comments he has made about old pistols and revolvers being converted in this way? - Yes.

Now, he mentions in relation to pistols three separate matters, because he sees in general terms three separate types of pistol requiring particular action? - Yes.

I/

10.40 a.m.

I think you have concentrated largely on the first of these? - Yes.

So can I ask you now that you have just had a glance at the report to tell us in general terms first of all how a commonly held automatic pistol might be converted so that it would only fire one shot at a time? - The magazine, which is the housing that the bullets go into, would obviously normally hold about ten rounds, up to 15 rounds. There would have to be a spacer or a blockage put into the magazine so that it only has the capacity to accept one round. This spacer would have to be fixed in the magazine and then the magazine would have to be secured into the pistol so that it could not be removed, to avoid using the magazine without the restriction. That operation is very straight-forward. The magazine could be restricted and secured to the gun with these. The only problem arises on the subsequent loading of the magazine which is normally done outwith the pistol and then added to the pistol. If the magazine was secured into the pistol it would have to be loaded in from the top when the slide is in the back position. Many pistols have a hold-open device and the slide would be kept clear and the bullet could then be placed down on top of the magazine, the slide released and the gun would be fired, one shot. A lot of pistols don't have the facility to hold the slide open so that would have to be done manually and that is where I would envisage problems coming where you are holding the pistol and physically holding the slide back and dropping a round to engage it into the top of the magazine. It is not just a case of dropping it into the area. It has to be engaged into the magazine or it will not feed properly.

So accidents might happen in that situation? - I can envisage that happening, yes.

Now, you have set out in the report details of the method for conversion that you have just described in general layman's terms? - Yes.

We don't need to go into that in any more detail, but can you now identify for us how difficult or easy it might be to undo it again? - Well, a replacement magazine would certainly undo any/any work. The magazine that was altered could be thrown away and a replacement magazine fitted in which which would undo any work.

The question is how securely could you fit to the magazine so that it cannot be removed and replaced by another? - Well, it could be pinned and screwed and/or welded. The magazines themselves are very fine gauge steel and are prone to mal-function if bent, twisted or even dropped so if there was much effort put on to removing the screws or the welding, the chances are it would be distorted and not fit back into the pistol but a bolt or pin could be redrilled out and the base of the magazine removed and removing the blockage.

Does welding not ensure that it is more difficult to do that? - You are very restricted to the amount of welding you can do because the tolerance fit of the magazine back into the pistol is that fine that you would not have the luxury of having a lot of welding. You would have to dress it and trim it. So it is secure but it would not be excessively strong.

Is there any other way of doing that, such as rearranging the area where the round is inserted by manufacturing something that will take it on its own and perhaps then filling the stock and the barrel with something that definitely could not be removed from it? Filling the stock, rather? - Yes, filling the magazine hole.

Yes? - Yes, you could feed a single round straight into the chamber on most semi-automatic pistols which would eliminate feeding. It would eliminate the round having to be placed on the top of the magazine for correct feeding. You could feed it straight into the chamber and then slam forward or release the slide so that would be possible. A total block.

Let's assume you do that. Can you then fill up the handle or the stock of the gun with something that could not be removed? - Yes, the magazine would be altered in such a way that it would just fill up the space or weld it in place. The top of the magazine would have to be relieved because it has to be removed to disassemble the gun but if the magazine is not going to be required to fill or load the gun, the top of the magazine can be removed./

removed. In other words, if you are then loading it by putting a bullet straight into the chamber, the facility for the magazine can be taken away altogether and it is blocked at the bottom of the butt.

Could that be done in a way that could not be undone easily? - You could be much more liberal with your welding as you do not need your magazine to come in and out. So, yes.

Do you know a replica firearm is a firearm if it can be readily reconverted to use? - Yes.

I am talking of a situation where it cannot be readily reconverted. Have we reached that situation in what you are describing at the moment? - Yes.

Now, are there any increased risks or dangers from having to load a round straight into the breach of the weapon? - The immediate one comes if the gun uncocks as the slide goes forward. The firing pin would be in the forward position and therefore would detonate the cartridge the instant the slide came forward.

So is that a significantly increased risk overloading into the magazine? - Yes.

Now, Nos. B and C in Mr. Paton's report are slightly different, is that right? - Yes.

What are the significant differences there? - He is referring to be able to take the gun to bits, disassembly of the weapon. On many guns the magazine needs to be removed.

Now, you have dealt with that part. That is the part you have just dealt with? - Yes, in the previous statement. If we remove the top of the magazine that would eliminate that problem.

That is No. B? - Yes.

And No. C is the situation where it is an integral magazine rather than one you drop into the handle? - Yes.

What differences are there there? - Well, that would actually be simple to block and the magazine/magazine would never need to come off anyway. A block could be fixed in there and secured so that would be an easier one to restrict.

In a way that could not readily be undone? - Yes.

Now, if we go to page 2 of your report. You have talked about one disadvantage on page 1 which is the ability to undo your work where it is not a fixed magazine and then you talk about a second and more significant disadvantage which would be the operation of the pistol converted in this way and that is the hold open device problem you have mentioned, is that right? - Yes.

Have we now covered all conceivable situations in relation to pistols or is there such a variety of these weapons that you can't really cover all eventualities? - There are many, many hundreds of different types of semi-automatic pistols so for me to say that to take it as read, that is impossible because there are so many variations.

Now, does the method that you are describing of welding an alternative or a magazine in place or something else in place cause any difficulty in the stripping and cleaning or repairing of guns? - Certainly for repairing and extensive stripping. Yes. The main springs are housed in the channel, they are behind the channel in the magazine and also the sear springs so again it will vary from manufacture or type of pistol to type of pistol.

Could it be cleaned without having to undo the whole business? - The term field stripping, which is just rough stripping, perhaps removal of the slides to get in about the striker or the extractor but you would not be able to go right into some of the springs or the trigger mechanism so it would hinder the complete stripping of the gun.

So what would have to be done to get into these parts? - Well, some parts, if you weld a blocker into the magazine capacity you would not be able to get into these parts.

Would that mean the gun would eventually not function as well? - Well, if the springs got tired/tired and needed to be replaced you would not be able to get to these parts.

Unless you undid what you had already done? - Yes.

And by doing that you could get to them?

- Yes, that is correct.

Now, if for any reason it was decided that this should happen to guns, semi-automatic guns, I take it you would need to have a method of verifying that that had been done properly? - Yes.

Which has happened in the past in relation to rifles? - Yes.

How is that verified? - It was shotguns as well when they were converted from five shot to three shot. The work was done to restrict in the case of the shotgun down to two shots in the magazine. It was then sent to the Proof House which is a Government run body. There is one in London and one in Birmingham. They check the work, stamp the gun with their proof stamp and also issue a certificate to say that the particular gun with a gun number had been converted.

And in the ordinary situation, just to be clear about this, how many shots can you fire from a shotgun? - In a shotgun, a total of three. This is a semi-automatic or pump action shotgun. The alteration left only room for two cartridges in the magazine and one also in the chamber which makes a total of three.

If these conversions had to be made in semi-automatic or self-loading pistols in the way you have described, what sort of cost is involved? - Again, it will vary but initially, as I read out in my report, welding and restricting of the magazines and the proof charge and postage and carriage, we would not foresee that to be more than £100 per pistol.

You say slightly more for stainless steel guns. Are we now talking about over £100? - Marginally. It is just that the welding has to be different and not every gun shop would have the facility so that would have to be put out to the correct/correct welding facilities.

If we can turn now to revolvers. Can you tell us how you would envisage restricting the capacity of revolvers so that they could only fire one shot? - Yes, much simpler. The revolver has a cylinder which houses, well normally six shots and there are revolvers with five, some up to even 12 chambers in their cylinder but a standard revolver today with six chambers in the cylinder and it is a relatively easy job to weld in carbon rods into the cylinder with the exception of that chamber so easily eliminating the use of the other five chambers, or whatever number, to leave one free.

To fill in five of the six holes? - Yes.

Now, do you also have to stop the revolver revolving? - No, you would just have five blank chambers and when you open the gun to load it you can index the cylinder to close where you want or would have one prefix before the striker because as you cock the gun it would then index correctly. If you indexed it wrongly you would just fire nothing.

So the gun would still turn as you pulled the trigger, is that right? - Yes, it has to.

And fire that one shot and you would have to open it and reload it and put it back to the place you started it from and do the same again? - Exactly. You would have to index it correctly, yes.

Now, one other method of converting being suggested is to cut out the other five holes? - That is possible but you are going to weaken severely the whole cylinder. There is very severe pressures in there. You could be talking, depending on the calibre, of 18 tonnes per square inch and if you have a five cylinder gun you would blow it. It needs a spring and I believe I made the comment on the welding that tests would have to be done and it would certainly have to be Argon welding because if you weld you would be changing the molecular structure and you could make it very brittle and with the explosion you would blow off the cylinder.

So should we dismiss that as unrealistic? - To cut away the remaining chambers, most certainly, yes.

To/

To go back to the one viable method, that is filling the various parts, the five chambers. If you do that, could you do it in a way which is difficult to undo? - Certainly an engineer with the right facilities could redrill it out. If you had angled high-carbon rods welded into place, a normal hand drill or a Black and Decker drill would go off the harder steel placed in there and tend to follow the softer steel of the cylinder so it would be very difficult for the handyman to take it out but a professional engineer with the right equipment could redrill it out.

Is that a major exercise? - Yes.

Are we talking then about something which is more secure than we were talking of in relation to pistols? - Yes.

Would the cost be significantly different from dealing with pistols? - Very similar.

As a gunsmith, and looking at this from the purely technical and practical point of view and forgetting any views you may have for or against the whole idea? - Certainly.

As a gunsmith, would you be happy that a secure situation had been reached if pistols, self-loading pistols, were converted in the way you have described in your report and to us this morning? - I would be very concerned about the safe loading of the weapons and also the restrictions that there might be in dismantling the guns from a servicing point of view or a renovating point of view but the main worry for me would be the safety of loading a semi-automatic pistol with a single shot without accidentally discharging the gun before you were ready.

What about the question of the facility of reconversion? Would you be satisfied that what you would be expected to do would be secure and would prevent general reconversion of such weapons, bearing in mind that they can get into criminal hands? - Yes, I think that would be very difficult just to say at the moment. Any welding could be ground off. You know, in the criminal element if you wish, not caring about the wellbeing of the gun, just removing the restriction with grinders etc. and undoing/undoing the welding or files, drilling it out, albeit at the expense of the magazine but at the moment they are very readily available.

Are you talking about something which is fairly easily done then? - It is not easy, no. It would not be easy but it would still be possible.

It would not be a readily convertible weapon in your opinion, is that right? - That is correct.

It would not be readily convertible? - It would not.

Turning then to the revolver. Do you have any anxieties on the safety front about the conversion you have suggested of the revolver? - Only that checks would have to be done. You would have to do it and then check the make-up of the cylinder itself, that the welding did not anneal the cylinder too much but I think with Argon welding etc. the heat is minimal so I would be quite happy with that method.

So far as the prevention of reconversion is concerned, would you be happy that the method you have discussed would prevent reconversion? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: If I could just ask you something about the buy-back position that I think occurred after the 1988 Act, is that correct.

And I think what happened was that weapons which were outlawed by the 1988 Act were bought back? - Yes.

I think we have also heard that Hamilton tried to get ammunition bought back but that was not part of the scheme? - Yes.

What sort of volume would be involved perhaps in buying back semi-automatic pistols as opposed to revolvers compared to the buy-back of semi-automatic rifles in 1988? - I am sorry.

Just in terms of your customers presumably semi-automatic pistols are a lot more common nowadays than semi-automatic rifles were in 1988? - Yes, /

Yes, I know of thousands of pistols with my customers but some customers have five or six and some of the pistols are only £50 or £100, but I have customers who have pistols that are several thousand pounds.

So perhaps it is unrealistic to have a buy-back position for semi-automatic pistols given the difficulties you have advanced? -
Yes.

JAMES RICHARDSON (53), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: Are you James Richardson? - I am.

And are you the Deputy Chief Constable of Strathclyde Police? - I am.

What age are you, Mr. Richardson? - I beg your pardon?

What age are you? - I am 53 years of age.

How long have you been a serving police officer? - Over 30 years.

And how long have you held the rank of Deputy Chief in Strathclyde? - Almost two years.

As a Deputy Chief Constable, you will be a member of the Association of Chief Police Officers in Scotland? - That is correct.

And you are therefore one of a group who have made submissions to the Inquiry? - That is correct.

You are not here to deal with the submissions, but to deal with a matter of fact that you yourself investigated; you appreciate that? - I understand that, yes.

Could you have before you Production R47, and can you confirm to me that that is a report you prepared? - It is. It was prepared on my behalf and under my direction.

And you have signed it as the officer responsible for its final form? - I have.

And that was prepared following instructions you received from the Deputy Crown Agent to look at the procedures and actions followed under these procedures in the Central Police Force, dealing with firearms applications by Thomas Hamilton? - That is correct.

I/

I think the best way to deal with this will be to go through parts of your report with you, and if you feel that I omit something of significance as I ask you questions, please feel free to make comment and to butt in, but what I am trying to do is give a fair representation in your oral evidence of any points of difficulty or criticism you encountered as you went through the papers that were provided to you? - I would appreciate his Lordship's permission to refer to my own report which I have in my case with me?

Is that something different from the report.....? - It is the same report, but I have highlighted parts of it.

MR. BONOMY: There is no objection to you doing that.

LORD CULLEN: Please proceed. That is quite acceptable.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMY: The first thing I want to ask you about is your consideration of the Force Standing Orders which you deal with on Page 3 of the report, and you report there of a difference between Standing Orders in 1977 and Standing Orders as revised in 1990, and there are significant differences; is that right? - There are, yes.

And these are undoubtedly greatly improved by 1990? - That is correct.

And can I take it that that is something you would have expected to find? - Yes. Following 1988 and the issue of the new Act, I would have expected that the Force's orders would have reflected the Act and guidance given.

I think if you look at the foot of Page 3, you set out there what the guidance was to officers in the Standing Orders in relation to a firearms application enquiry as at 1977, and you are referring there to Paragraph 2.2 of the Standing Orders, and can you just read that paragraph please? - Yes, beginning Paragraph 2.2 -- "In dealing with such an application (firearm certificate application) the enquiry officer will examine the application form thoroughly and ensure that the information/information provided is accurate. All necessary enquiries will be carried out and form RL3a (annex 6) completed and submitted through the chain of command to the Firearms Department, Headquarters".

You can take it that the Inquiry has heard direct evidence about how this system worked, and indeed works up to the present time. What I am more concerned about at the moment is what you saw as perhaps the short-comings of that particular direction, and you make comments on Page 4, and can I take it that essentially you are saying there that that is a fairly skeletal direction on how to carry out such an enquiry? - I took the view that all parts of the system must be in place and be equally supportive of the overall purpose of the system, and in respect of the Order and the form which was required to be completed by the officers, I felt that they were not adequate in their form.

Now, the form, the guidance given there is put into effect by an enquiry officer by using the document RL3a? - Yes.

And if you go to your annex 6, is it, we have the RL3a that was then in use; is that right? - That is correct.

Now, you have a number of comments to make about that because obviously the guidance in the Standing Orders has to be viewed in the light of the fact that this additional guidance is clearly given to officers in the form of six questions? - That's right.

What concerned you about the format of the RL3a at that stage? - Principally that it was a yes/no format. It didn't encourage the attachment of any documentary evidence that was adduced from the enquiry made the police officer. It wasn't specific in terms of regulating particulars of a Club where an individual was to be shooting, and overall, from the examination I made of the documents, I felt that it didn't support the police officer in making enquiry, since such enquiries demand some additional knowledge.

When you talk about documents, can you tell me what documents you envisage a form encouraging an officer to attach to it? - There may/may be documents confirming membership of a Gun Club for example.

There may be other documents concerning whether or not there was information in the Scottish Criminal Record Office concerning convictions for example. Another issue with the RL3a is that it doesn't speak of ammunition which, within the Act, permission has to be gained for the firearms and the ammunition.

Can you give us any assistance of what the position was in 1977 about checking on criminal records? - I wouldn't be certain. To be helpful, I would expect an enquiry officer, an enquiry officer who is a police officer, to check criminal convictions when making an enquiry into an individual, but I would expect him to receive the guidance to do that.

Now, I think you do mention towards the foot of Page 4 that, just before the various points that are marked, "In particular, information is not elicited to satisfactorily explain", and one of the items you mentioned there is "Why an applicant has or continues to have 'good reason' for possession or wishing to possess or acquire the firearm or ammunition"? - Yes.

And can I take it that that is because, although no reason is mentioned clearly on the form, it is the yes/no provision for the answer that caused you concern? - That is correct. The answer isn't assisted by the form in defining good reason in terms of for example legitimate and regular opportunity to use the weapons at a Gun Club.

In 1990's Standing Orders dealt with on Page 5, you identify a number of significant additions to what was in 1977? - That is correct.

And can I take it that the most significant ones are the ones that you have identified and set out in the Pages 5 to 7 of your report? - That is correct.

And one of the points that is now specifically mentioned is that a summary of Section 27/1 of the Firearms Act is recorded in the Standing Orders? - That is correct, yes.

And/

And that covers a number of the issues that an officer is supposed to be looking into; is that right? - Yes, that is correct.

And also, you mentioned specifically that there is a direction that an officer is responsible for carrying out a check on the police national computer and Scottish Criminal Record Office computer? - Yes.

And/

11.20 a.m.

And then specifically if we go to the foot of the following page, page six, you mention that there is guidance given where information comes to light in between renewals about a person who holds a firearms certificate? - Yes.

What was that guidance? - Principally at the foot of page six, are you referring to?

Yes, sir? - This is where a Scottish Criminal Records Office check in respect of the person who holds the certificate indicates a new conviction or a pending case which may be serious enough to warrant revocation of a firearms or shotgun certificate, the Division where the person resides will be sent an RL3A, a Central Scotland Police Enquiry form, asking for enquiry to be made into the matter, and whether or not the certificate should be revoked.

So if this renewal has come up and something has happened between the renewal, and that specific matter has shown up, the enquiring officer will be instructed to deal with it when he carries out his RL3A enquiry? - Yes.

On page seven is there a further direction which applies even where there is no application being dealt with by the Force at all? - The last paragraph?

The last marked one? - This is the comment in the Force Standing Order which requires all police officers to bring to the attention of the Chief Constable any information in respect of a firearms or shotgun certificate holder which would suggest that revocation of the certificate would be warranted.

In other words, any officer who is alerted to something that might affect the suitability of an individual who holds a firearms certificate to hold a firearms certificate has a duty to tell the Chief Constable? - Yes.

You do make a note of the material kept in Hamilton's file in that record. What was the note you made? - The note I made, based on paper evidence/evidence only, was that the firearms file only contained information concerning the firearms applications.

You then refer to one additional Force Memorandum which is of particular significance in relation to these applications, and that is the direction to carry out a Criminal Intelligence check. You can take it we have heard evidence on that already. You then make the point that that firearm form should be amended? - Yes.

Was it amended? - No.

Not to take account of that point, which was the check for Criminal Intelligence, but if we look at Annexe 7 there we have there an MR3a significantly amended from the one which appears in the 1977 Standing Orders? - Yes.

Do you know when the new one came into operation? - I am not certain. I think it was 1990.

Did you discover there was an interim period when there were two forms used? - One was a supplement to the basic RL3a. I understand it was a holding situation which was put in place until the amended RL3a which is referred to in that regard was brought into place.

Now, the amended one is still in operation at Central Scotland Police? - Yes.

Have you looked at similar forms in your own Force? - We have had a look at the form which police officers in Strathclyde are asked to complete when making enquiries into firearms certificate applications, operations and renewals.

Is there any significant difference? - I believe the form used in Strathclyde is more comprehensive, and encourages more enquiry.

Yes? - However, can I just say that I do not believe that the form in a Force should be looked at in isolation. As I said at the start, I do believe that the whole system must work properly, and there must be support for the police officer doing enquiry on firearms certificate holders in local/local areas.

Yes, I take the point, but what I would like to know from you is the way in which you feel the form we are looking at in this case does not give the support you feel the officer should have in the course of the enquiry? - There is more direction in attaching documentary evidence, there is more direction and encouragement to check gun clubs to confirm membership; there is direction to check the Criminal Intelligence file to determine if anything is known of the applicant.

Yes. The form is obviously quite different from the previous one? - It is quite different. I have a copy here that I would like to glance at, if there is no objection.

That is.....? - The Strathclyde Police form.

Oh, were you speaking just now of the differences you can identify in the one you have there from the Central Scotland one, or were you telling us what the ideal style of form should be? - I was comparing it with the Central Scotland form and pointing out the additions in the Strathclyde form.

Can you tell me these again, please? I had misunderstood what you were doing? - Within the Strathclyde Police enquiry form there is an encouragement to officers to attach documentary productions. Additionally, there is a comment that Divisional Intelligence offices must be checked to determine if the individual is known there: and there is encouragement within the form to check with gun clubs.

Now, if you look at Annexe 7 you will see that certainly with the computer and SCRO checks there is encouragement to attach a print-out? - Yes.

We do know that Intelligence checks are supposed to be made by Central Scotland police officers because of the Force memorandum; is that right? - Yes.

And the third one you mention is attaching/attaching documentary evidence of club membership? - Any documentary evidence is encouraged to be attached to the report form when it is submitted.

All right? - It may be helpful if I say to you that in relation to the possession of firearms the Strathclyde form does ask the officer to ensure that each firearm has been shown to be needed for good reason, and for example it specifically mentions if the firearm is required for target shooting then membership of a club should be confirmed.

Did you find in your consideration of the papers in this case, though, that the Central Scotland police officers did in fact do something to check on the membership of a club? - I could not confirm that that was done.

Not on every occasion? - Not on every occasion; or that it was not done.

That is because the form does not provide the necessary direction to make the appropriate entries? - That is one reason, yes.

Again we can take it the Inquiry has heard from a number of officers about whether or not they did make checks. I take it part of the difficulty you had was the same one we had, that officers are being asked to speak about events a long time ago, where no specific record was made on the form? - Yes. There was no information we had which could clearly show whether or not checks were made as a matter of course. Some enquiry officers do not recollect making checks, but clearly say in their statement that they thought they probably would have made the necessary checks. I think there is an occasion where an officer remembers making the checks.

Now, I suppose the form becomes important because when we look at page 12 of your report and you refer to the six questions in the form you discovered that they were the process for the investigating process, and there was little deviation from the line of questioning set out on the form? - That is what I am assuming from the paperwork that was examined.

What/

What was discovered of course is that it was an officer in a particular Division who was on duty on the day and available for the purpose who got the enquiry to make? - Yes.

And you would expect such an officer to follow the guidance in the form; is that fair? - I would expect the officer to make the necessary enquiry to be able to answer yes or no. Having said that, the police officer has training and experience to allow them to expand enquiries if they feel it is necessary, and also to bring some assessment to the individual that they are making enquiry of.

Yes? - So although the form is limited insofar as what it asks the police officer to do, I would imagine, depending on the answer, there would have been further enquiry made, for example at gun clubs.

I have taken you slightly out of order there, and I don't want to lose the thread of the report. Could you go back to page 10? You are talking in that section about the actual operation of the Central Scotland Firearms Department, again something about which we have heard direct evidence? - Yes.

You make the comment in the second last paragraph that there is no evidence to suggest that Hamilton's firearms file had been consulted by investigating officers or Divisional Commanders prior to making a recommendation for approval. Did that concern you? - I have to preface this remark by saying this was from written evidence produced to me in terms of statements and so on.

I think you can take it your understanding is accurate? - There is nothing to suggest that anyone did consult the firearms file. Having said that, I would have expected that the whole system would be thorough, that the Firearms Department would be pro-active in that when information came to them by virtue of a police officers enquiry form, application form as a result of the enquiry, they would then pro-actively look at the firearms file, check previous information, history of ammunition purchased and so on, in a pro-active way which supported the system of enquiry.

I/

I think I should also make it clear to you at this stage that the evidence so far before the Inquiry suggests that the man who had to make the decision on these applications is Mr. McMurdo generally, or someone standing in for him on one occasion more recently, and that he was well aware of all the information that you have identified in the report that might have been in the firearms file. Now, that may be something that you did not appreciate, was it? - I was aware Mr. McMurdo in his precognition had said he was aware of all the information relating to Hamilton.

But your concern here was about the system and the place that perhaps material should be noted within the system? - Yes.

And your concern was that the firearms file should have more than simply the applications and the certificates in it? - Yes.

One of the things you observe on page 12 at the foot is that the investigating officer will have possession of or at least viewed the certificate. Was your finding that the old certificate which had been held and was about to be renewed or otherwise was actually passed to the investigating officer? - My understanding of the system is that the investigating officer would take to the individual whose certificate had to be renewed for example an application form for renewal, and the guidance to the police suggests that that should be done by prior appointment; and that at the same time it would be useful if the visit could also incorporate an enquiry.

Yes? - So when the officer went to the house he would be able to hand over the application form, perhaps make enquiry into the security of the guns, and thereafter my understanding is that the individual who was requiring the renewal would hand the form and certificate into the local police office. Could I say that the procedure is just a little confused, when I read the paperwork.

The/

11.45 a.m.

The evidence already has suggested that in some instances the old certificate is handed in either with the application or to the enquiry officer but that is not the universal practice because there is no obligation on a person to hand over his existing certificate.

Now, do you see anything that is wrong with that statement? - My understanding is that individual may keep their certificate to allow them for example, as well as the renewal being pursued which may be for four weeks ahead, they may keep their certificate to buy ammunition so that it can be recorded or whatever.

Yes, there is no obligation to hand over the old one and therefore there must be some means of ingathering that information and that can only be done by the enquiry officer? - That is my understanding, yes.

And the enquiry officer, if he has no experience of firearms, would he know from the form, the RL3a Form, to perhaps look at the question of ammunition purchased, just to take an example? - I think that would depend on the experience of the officer and his inquisitiveness but the certificate, when it belongs to someone who has been involved in purchasing ammunition and guns, can be quite complicated, albeit a police officer could go through it and glean information. I took the view that it would be more appropriate if the Firearms Department at Headquarters made sure that that part of the enquiry had been thoroughly done. For example, to check the certificate for ammunition usage, considering that they already had the previous certificate on file which would contain a previous history of ammunition purchased.

It is obviously your opinion that ammunition usage is something that should be checked in the course of one of these enquiries? - Yes, absolutely.

I think it is fair to say it has not previously been identified as a matter that should be clearly investigated but that is your opinion, is it? - It is, yes.

If I can ask you now just to look briefly at page 13. You comment there on the question, in the first full paragraph there, of enquiry to confirm/confirm membership of an organisation or a club and the making of regular and legitimate use of the weapon? - Yes.

And you comment that the form has no space for recording people who could confirm these factors, is that right? - That is correct, yes.

Is it your view there should be some guidance on the form for the officers to point them to these particular factors? - it would be helpful to the officer to be given guidance either on the form or separately so that he or she understood there was a necessity to make enquiries at gun clubs.

You referred a number of times in your report to that phrase, "regular and legitimate use of weapons in his possession" and your source of that is the Home Office Guidance but when we read the Home Office Guidance carefully we see it refers to "regular and legitimate opportunity for the use of the weapons". Do you see a difference there between these two expressions? - My interpretation is that the opportunity must be taken. Having read that part of the Act which says that an individual must have good reason to possess firearms and ammunition, part of that good reason I believe would be the use of firearms or ammunition else they should not possess it.

I think it also concerns you when you went through the whole system that there may have been an expectation by some of the investigating officers that all the factors that should be taken into account should be looked at by someone further up the tree. Can you tell us what you discovered on that? - I haven't discovered anything concrete but I believe from the reading of the statements that there perhaps has been an impression in the Firearms Department that enquiry was being made at gun clubs to determine for example membership and regular opportunity for use and the possibility is if that has not been done, which I have not been able to confirm as definite, that the enquiry officer may have considered that that work was being done at headquarters, perhaps expecting it to be more proactive than it perhaps was.

I think you can take it from the evidence we/we have heard that that part of the checking was done by the enquiry officer, whether it be Mr. Lynch in relation to certain renewals or a constable in one of the divisional areas but I was more concerned at the moment at the way in which the system operated. When information was gathered in, were you not concerned about the stages at which officers were looking at it and looking at it in a limited way and I think you deal with that actually on page 14 in the first full paragraph there? - Yes. From the statements that have been read in relation to the police officers, there is no indication that the file was referred to as a means of assessing the applicant. In other words, there was no historical enquiry done in relation to the individual. The enquiry pertained to that application for renewal at that time.

I think in the end of that paragraph you refer to the function following between two stools. Now, what is the function you have referred to? - I am referring to the function of assessing whether he was a suitable person and had good reason and using his membership at gun clubs and so on.

And what would be the two stools that the function was falling between? - I believe that it was falling between the operational officers and the Firearms Department at Headquarters.

I think you say there that each one was assuming the other was doing certain things? - That is my understanding from enquiry that has been done in Strathclyde, yes.

Now, I appreciate the comment you make in the next paragraph that all this centres on the failure to consult the firearms file as a matter of routine if you are an investigating officer. However, you did discover the firearms file did not contain anything that would have impinged on anyone's consideration of Hamilton's application anyway, is that right? - That is correct.

And as I explained to you already, the evidence suggests the man who made the decision was well enough informed, albeit he never had the file in front of him? - My understanding is that, yes.

Now, are you suggesting that nevertheless good/good practice ought to be to have all the information in the file and the file with each officer who is to either make the enquiry or a recommendation right up the tree? - I am suggesting that the whole system must be sound. For example, that the enquiry officers make good enquiry under guidance and that the Firearms Department are proactive in checking the firearms files so that they can play their part in providing good information as the certificate progresses up the tree as you say. Everyone has to play their proper part in the system.

Is there a need for all the information to be considered by more than one person? - I believe that the Firearms Department or someone in administration should have the skills and the experience to check everything in the firearms file, to check the incoming application, to identify any problems that there may be apparent, for example non-usage of ammunition, so that that can be brought to the attention of the senior officers and especially in this case to the attention of the Deputy Chief Constable.

That suggests that the way the department and system at Central is evolving is the right direction. In other words, using a civilianised Firearms Department to make the investigation and carry out the administration and then refer the matter to one officer at a senior grade to make the decision? - So long as there is a system in place and my understanding is with the system that was in place people worked within that system, albeit the system I believe was not adequate.

Do you consider that the engagement of civilian firearms enquiry officers with a knowledge of firearms and practice in relation to firearms is a good move? - I have no experience of that. If I could give you a gut reaction. I haven't thought about it but if I could give you a gut reaction. There is a soundness about having a police officer making enquiry if he or she is given sound direction because they have a lot of training in assessing individuals, assessing people, in the light of all the other enquiries they do. Nevertheless, set against that, if there are civilian enquiry officers who are well trained and who have a system in place that they have to satisfy which ensures that all things/things are done properly then there is nothing to say that that would not be a very good system and it would certainly allow certain individuals to build up expertise. There is a hint of that in Strathclyde just now in each Division. There are administration units where there are police officers located and in the urban areas it would generally be the case that that unit would take a close interest in firearms applications for renewal etc. and would make enquiries so they would build up the expertise but, nevertheless, if you then move to rural areas you then have to have another system in place where local officers make enquiries.

I am certainly hesitant to ask you very much about Strathclyde for various reasons, one of which is of course the different size of Force that we are talking about from Central? - Yes.

And I have tried to confine the questioning to things like form for example where you might more easily see some sort of comparison. What you say is very helpful but in Central the development has been towards a civilian enquiry officer and perhaps the addition of another one in due course on the basis that his knowledge of firearms is an important element in securing the type of information you are talking about and paying attention to, things like types of weapons involved and the use of ammunition. Now, are you saying that even in those more technical areas you are better to rely on a policeman? - I am saying that I have not given it a lot of thought. What I am saying is that there are advantages in both.

The real secret is to combine the advantages of both into the one creature? - The real secret I believe is having an efficient system in place.

I take it, though, you would really go beyond that and agree that good training is required also for officers who are investigating matters like that so that they have the necessary knowledge? - There either has to be training specifically directed at those enquiries if the system has to be improved or else the information that they are given to help them make a thorough enquiry is much more comprehensive.

Now, /

12.00 p.m.

Now, you then, from Page 14 onwards, deal with the various applications of which the Inquiry has heard evidence so far, and you do identify certain things that -- at least, you point up certain things we have heard evidence about. I take it that what you were trying to do there was focus the Inquiry's attention on any points of significance that you could derive from a consideration of the various applications themselves and how they appear to have been dealt with?

- That is correct. That was one of the requirements placed on me by the letter from the Depute Crown Agent, to look at Hamilton's Firearms Certificate throughout its term.

Could I then take you on to just a few particular issues I want to raise with you in that connection, if I can take you to Page 22, and you are dealing there with an application to vary in October 1984?

- Yes.

And at the foot, towards the end of the page, you have highlighted the words "There appears to be no questioning of Hamilton's possession of duplicate calibre weapons". Which duplicate calibres were you referring to there? - Sorry, could you direct me to the paragraph you are referring to again?

Do you have Page 22? - I have, yes.

And if you go to the bottom section, "Observations"? - Yes.

And if you go halfway through the thick black writing, "There appears to be no questioning of Hamilton's possession of duplicate calibre weapons". Now, do you know which duplicate calibres that refers to? - I'm sorry I can't be certain there. I was just checking the annex, which is helpful, but I believe it was a .22 rifle, but.....

You have got an annex which summarises these various applications? - Yes.

And on Page 6 of that annex, you have got the reference to the one of the 27th October 1984?/

1984? - Yes, that is correct.

And it seems to have been an application where he held a .22 rifle and a .357 Smith and Wesson, and was wanting a .223 rifle and a 9 mm pistol. That is when Hamilton begins to move further -- 1994 generally is when he moves into 9 mm or larger calibre revolver? - Uh-huh.

Are you referring there though to the possible similarity between the .22 Anschutz rifle and the .223 rifle? - Yes; that is the reference, yes.

It is simply to be clear what the particular point is in the Report? - Reading in the annex at Page 6, if it is helpful, it shows that he holds a .22 Anschutz rifle, a .357 Smith and Wesson revolver, and was requesting permission to purchase or acquire a .223 rifle.

If you just give a moment, there is one thing I want to check to make sure of the facts of this. Yes, I think that is the factual position -- I think a number of times going through the individual applications, you had expressed concern about the extent to which his good reason for continuing to hold weapons was considered by the enquiring officers? - That is correct.

And that is a theme of the Report. However, you do, if you go to Page 24, you do there identify one occasion where a particular query was raised about Hamilton's request for a duplicate calibre weapon, and you refer to that in the middle of the page? - That is correct.

And a specific further enquiry was instructed and carried out by the officer enquiring into the application; is that right? - That is correct.

And further justification was provided? - That is correct. It says that I understand from the paperwork that Hamilton gave the explanation that it was an advanced design incorporating a weighted handle for greater accuracy.

I think it may also have provided that he was active in target shooting and competitions. Is/

Is that the one that said he was active all over the country in competitions? - There is a reference. I don't think it is particularly that one which says that he was active all over the country, and that was his explanation for requiring another gun, but there was no confirmation of that found. That remark is in fact at the top of Page 25, and I should say that there is no evidence that he was engaged in competition shooting throughout the country.

At least, you haven't seen it? - That's right.

Nothing has been provided to you? - There is nothing been provided to me.

You also mention on Page 26 something which has again emerged in the course of the other evidence, that for a number of years, he had authority to have a 7.62 rifle which he never bought, and he also held ammunition without ever having a weapon that would fire that ammunition? - That is correct, yes.

Again, just to clear the factual position as best I can, if you go to Page 27, you refer there to an incident in August 1988 where Doreen Haggar claimed Hamilton had been at her home making veiled threats and was alleged to have adopted a body stance with one hand in his jacket pocket as if he had a weapon, and you go on to say the matter was allegedly reported to Lothian & Borders Police. In fact, there is no evidence before the Inquiry or indeed, I think, in the statements, that it actually was reported. There is no claim even. I think Mrs. Haggar was unsure whether she had reported it or not; is that right? - That is correct.

And indeed, nothing was said in her evidence to indicate she had reported that particular one, but that was a different one where she claimed Hamilton actually had a gun which had been pointed in her direction; is that correct? - Yes; I think that is the one where he arrived in a vehicle.

Can I now take you to Page 31 where you have identified something which may, you may wish to say/say something else about -- right in the middle of that page, one of the observations you make is that "There is no notification as to whether Crime Intelligence staff were aware that Hamilton was indeed the holder of a firearms certificate". If you have Criminal Intelligence Officers, should they know who have firearms certificates? - If they raise a file in respect of an individual, from a check of the SCRO computer, you would be able to determine whether or not that individual was a firearms certificate holder, yes.

And are you saying that that information was missing from Criminal Intelligence records at Central? - I could find no evidence that it was available in Criminal Intelligence. I would have been happy to have made further enquiry in Central Scotland, had time allowed, but I had to restrict myself to the papers that were delivered to me.

You are looking at this matter really from the point of view of an officer investigating who is carrying out a police investigation without a particular expertise himself in firearms? - That is correct, yes.

Did you make use of Strathclyde Police Firearms Officers to assist you at all in your enquiry? - No, I didn't. I chose not to do that deliberately other than at the end of the enquiry.

And for what purpose did you do that at the end of the enquiry? - Because I was asked on Friday to make some enquiry into Strathclyde Police procedure so that I could be helpful in this Inquiry.

Now, one of the matters you have mentioned already, but you highlight on Page 37 at the foot, is that a check of Gun Club would have verified membership and may also have provided evidence that Hamilton was not a regular shooter -- may have provided evidence.

As/

12.20 p.m.

As an enquiring officer with the task you were given in this case, does it strike you as something that could be done in relation to each application for the grant, renewal or variation of a firearms certificate that the club at which the handgun holder claims to be a member should be asked to confirm his membership and the regularity of his shooting? - Absolutely. If my interpretation of "Regular and legitimate opportunity to use" is correct, to satisfy good reason that must be part of the enquiry.

That would no doubt be a lot of work? - Well, it seems to me that if gun clubs set themselves up to provide facilities for recreation with firearms then the responsibility must fall on them to properly run their clubs and ensure that the people who use the clubs satisfy the law, and the law does require good reason.

Did you establish whether or not there was a recognised maximum amount of ammunition that a person should be permitted to hold at home? - I have read the guidance which was issued in 1969, and.....

That was from the Home Office? - That was the Home Office guidance to the police. You will see that there are maximum amounts recommended of 1500 rounds to be possessed at any one time and 1,000 rounds to be purchased at any one time.

Yes? - When the guidance was issued in 1989 these maximum amounts were not transported to the 1989 guidance.

What is the 1989 guidance? - The new guidance that was issued?

What guidance was given about quantity? - My recollection is that it says that no arbitrary limit should be set in relation to the amount of ammunition that a certificate holder should have.

Can I take it the 1969 guidance was talking about maxima applicable to each calibre? - That is my understanding. There was a qualification that people who shoot internationally may require those/those amounts. But it didn't appear to be a guidance that anyone should have that amount of ammunition in their possession.

We have heard evidence of people in the Central area who hold certificates allowing 1500 of individual calibres to be held at any given time. Is that the only guidance you have discovered which refers to that quantity? - This is the only guidance I have found referring to 1500 rounds and 1,000 rounds of ammunition, yes.

Can I ask you to look at your concluding remarks on page 39? Again I do not intend to go through any of this with you, but to clarify certain points. In the second paragraph you say "Chief Constables have an unfettered discretion in deciding to authorise the grant or renewal of a firearms certificate"? - Yes.

What do you mean by "unfettered"? - I believe the Chief Constable is the person and the only person who can apply the requirements of the law in determining whether or not an individual should have a firearm certificate. Perhaps it is unfettered, but yet if an individual does fulfil the requirements of the law of being of sound mind and of temperate habits, not prohibited by the Act, having good reason, then the Chief Constable shall issue a certificate. So it is his responsibility to take the decision as to whether or not the certificate should be issued.

Obviously a decision against an applicant is subject to appeal? - Yes.

And to that extent the Chief Constables are fettered by the intervention of the Court if necessary? - In exercising his discretion I am sure he would be required to show if he appeared before the Sheriff to justify an appeal against revocation, refusal to renew or refusal to grant: I would imagine he would have to show he had acted in a reasonable way.

In the next paragraph you say "Public safety is therefore a factor of paramount importance in any decision to grant a firearms certificate", and to emphasise in furtherance of that point that that places a duty on Chief Constables/

Constables to put in place administrative procedures which will ensure that precise and accurate records are held, as the keeping of such records facilitates the collection of information and provide ready access to enquiry officers on the history of the certification process insofar as each applicant is concerned? - Yes.

Now, this is part of what you have been saying to us about the system today, that is precise and accurate records? - Yes.

You then go on to deal with the other part of what you have been saying about the system. Could you read the next point? - Perhaps, Mr. Bonomy, you should allow me to say that I say on page 39 is that there must be efficient procedures.

Yes. Could you read the sentence saying "Moreover....."? - "Moreover, the keeping of records will apply to each firearm, allied to the concomitant amount of ammunition the applicant may possess or purchase at any one time".

And then the next page? - "A number of main issues have emerged from the review of procedures in place within Central Scotland police. Insofar as instruction and in guidance or administrative procedures is provided to officers, the source is found in Force Standing Orders, and a related pro forma report (form RL3a)".

You then give details of the Standing Orders, and you have told us something about that? - Yes.

And the things that were missing in 1977; is that right? - Yes.

And you summarised the position in 1990, and you relate both of these to the terms of the pro forma RL3a? - Yes.

If you look at page 42, you make various points about the changes between the 1977 and the 1990 forms; is that right? - Yes, that is correct.

Now, could you just summarise these improvements for us? - In relation to the RL3a form?

Yes?/

Yes? - The RL3a form which is in one of the annexes, the new one, did give instructions to check SCRO and PNC, if I recollect correctly. It did ask the officer to list the firearms held. There was a place provided for comments, as was the case previously.

I think you also mention there that any trace brought out on one of these searches had to be attached? - That is correct.

And that there was a specific question added dealing with the details of the reason given by the applicant as to why he held or sought to hold a duplicate calibre firearm; is that right? - Yes.

So these are all changes obviously for the good; is that correct? - Yes.

You then mention certain shortcomings? - Yes.

Can you deal with these? - "It is of significance, however, that apart from requiring the enquiry officer to attach a computer print-out in circumstances where the applicant was traced on the PNC/SCRO computer, the administrative procedures do not require or encourage the enquiry officer to attach with the report any written confirmation he may have obtained in respect of the good reason the applicant had for requiring the firearm or ammunition."

Allied to that you make a point about ammunition levels? - Yes. The form does not require information about ammunition levels.

Or indeed any reason the applicant has to seek to increase the number of rounds held; is that right? - That is part of it.

Now, on page 43 you deal with the Headquarters Firearms Department? - Yes.

I think your position is best summed up in the third paragraph of that section. Could you read that out? - Yes. "It is essential that Divisional Enquiry Officers are in possession of sufficient information to enable them to carry out a proper and thorough enquiry into all the circumstances/circumstances surrounding the application. In Central Scotland police, it would appear that the information held at the Firearms Department on such matters as ammunition purchase, ammunition usage, the date permission was sought to purchase/acquire additional firearms was not routinely transmitted for the benefit of Divisional officers in conducting their enquiries. There are a number of specific examples where no record is maintained in the firearms file in respect of issues that required to be the subject of enquiry. It may be that such enquiry was carried out by Divisional officers, but nonetheless there is no record maintained on the file".

Then you give examples? - Yes.

I think it is fair to say that in some instances we have heard a little more about the application than you have gleaned from reading the paperwork. You are dealing with it on the basis of what you can read? - Yes.

BY LORD CULLEN: When you talk about Divisional officers conducting enquiries are you talking about the officer who goes round making the enquiries or someone else? - I am speaking about those officers who go round making enquiries.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: That means officers in a Division rather than the officer in charge of the Division? - That is correct.

I think after thee various examples you deal at the foot of page 46 with the processing of certificate applications? - Yes.

I'm sorry, I think I have missed one section. You deal with a number of examples, then you deal at the foot of page 46 with the processing of certificate applications? - Yes.

And you make the point that the form RL3a does not require a Divisional officer to carry out a Criminal Intelligence check, although the memorandum does? - Yes.

And again you are summarising various matters we have been over in evidence; is that right?/

right? - Yes.

So can I take it that that report in your understanding of 48 pages, with the various annexes, is an accurate account of the independent enquiry into the operation of the firearms licensing procedures in respect of Thomas Hamilton carried out by Central Scotland police? - That is correct. I have to say in response to that that thorough and professional enquiry would also have entailed interviews, valuations, visits and so on. However, as you are aware, the time did not allow for that. This is the best report I could produce in the time available from the information made available to me.

I am sure the Inquiry is grateful to you for carrying it out at such short notice. You are also aware that the Inquiry has heard direct evidence from many witnesses, and your report will be taken along with the direct material that we have heard? - Yes, sir.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: You talked about the ability of police officers to carry out the enquiries, and you stated that you had not formed any view as to whether it should be civilianised or not. In this case while it is true Mr. McMurdo was aware of all the facts, Anne Anderson, the enquiry officer, was not aware, but had a gut feeling, and if she had known all the facts she might have qualified her report upwards. Is there not something to be said for some degree of specialisation of police officers carrying out these enquiries, so that some of them know how to open a gun and check guns properly? - I think if a police officer is properly supported by good guidance then there is no reason why a police officer should not carry out a thorough and satisfactory enquiry.

Yes? - As I said also there is this great benefit to be gained by having the same people doing it continually, so that they build up a greater level of expertise.

Yes? - I think if you provided the police officer when he makes the enquiry with some memorandum of guidance, each time you give him the information to allow him to check guns you produce serial numbers and so on, and he can do the enquiry equally well, provided the individual who is requiring/requiring the certificate is able to point out to him the serial number on the gun.

We have heard evidence that in relation to gun clubs there is a Range officer when shooting takes place, and presumably members of a gun club can simply keep a personal record of their use of ammunition. That would not be very difficult? - I believe if an individual gets ammunition and purchases it, whether at a gun club or a shop, an ammunition record should be maintained, because it does help to show whether or not regular and legitimate opportunity is being taken, and it allows us to find out about the ammunition being used by an individual who was using it regularly.

But of course home made ammunition would create a problem, and that appears to be quite common? - That is correct. That would have to be dealt with within any new procedures if it was not acceptable.

BY LORD CULLEN: On that last point, as I understand it what you are saying is that an officer who goes round should be supported in the first instance by general guidance; is that right? - That is correct.

And you have also indicated he or she should be supported by information of the particular case? - Yes. I believe that if there is any difficulty at all with that particular case then the Firearms Department should be able to support him or her. Nevertheless, in addition to that I do believe that an officer should have -- it may only be a sheet of paper or two sheets of paper printed out every time an enquiry is being undertaken regarding the grant, renewal or variation of a firearms certificate, on that form to allow the officer the fullest of information or direction, so that further enquiry is made at gun clubs and so on to satisfy that.

I suppose up to a point a certain amount of direct guidance about the particular case might be given if there was something in the firearms file which merited enquiries; is that right? - That is correct.

But when the officer sets out he won't yet/yet have seen the current certificate? - Yes, that is correct.

And I suppose that when he sees that, looking at it might provoke him to further questions? - It may do, but it may also be very difficult to interpret, because they can become complex documents.

Yes? - I think what I was trying to convey earlier was the real need for a Firearms Department which pays particular attention to an examination of all the information previous and current in relation to a certificate being held, and carried out each time.

How is the officer who carries out the enquiry going round to be assisted by reading the existing certificate? Is he going to be given enough instructions to enable him to ask questions, or should he in some way have referred back to the Firearms Department for further consideration? - I think both are equally relevant. I think the Firearms Department should be instigating further enquiry if the officer does have particular difficulty.

That might mean he might have to go out a second time for a follow-up visit? - Yes; or alternatively the Firearms Department could start to undertake the enquiries centrally, for example there was nothing to hinder the Firearms Department at Headquarters telephoning the secretary of a gun club and asking specific questions, or writing for specific answers to questions.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: I wonder if you could clear up one point. You have made your criticisms of the procedures adopted by Central Scotland police as you perceive them to be very clear. But what I would like to know is the standard against which the judgements are being made? - As I have said earlier, I did not use an officer from our Licensing Department as part of the team assisting me in making the report, and that was deliberate. I set up a team which comprised a Chief Superintendent who was a Divisional Commander, a Chief Superintendent who was a member of Complaints and Discipline, a Detective Superintendent and an officer who had a law degree and who had had some experience/experience in our Legal Services Department. What I tried to achieve, combining all of that, was satisfying the law and satisfying good police procedures and the need for public safety to be paramount.

So could these be thought to be the ideal procedures against which the judgement has been made, as opposed to any current set of procedures? - I don't think within my report I laid down procedures that should be put in place. What I took the opportunity to do was, as required by the Lord Advocate's instruction, to identify whether procedures have perhaps been inadequate.

Yes? - If the report was to be extended by making a recommendation, on new procedures in relation to the administration, enquiry and guidance in relation to firearms, I think that is a much more onerous task, and I have not been able to do that, unfortunately.

I understand exactly what you say there, and the difficulties in relation to the timescale: but if one is going to say that something is inadequate it follows one must first of all have a definition of what is adequate, and what I want to get from you is whether or not the adequate standard which you have set is a standard which is adhered to in Strathclyde or if it is a standard you have come up with in the course of the past two weeks. If I have understood your evidence correctly, it is the latter, although please tell me if that is so? - No, the comments I have made are based solely on the evidence that has been produced over the last two weeks when we were making our enquiries.

12.40 p.m.

Yes, I understand you have judged Central Scotland Police according to what you have seen on the documentation and we will look at that in a minute but the adequacy of what is done or otherwise has to be tested against something, doesn't it? - I think it has to be tested against the requirements of the Act and it has to be tested against the requirement for an efficient procedure which satisfies the requirements of the Act.

Well, may be we should return to that one in a minute. Mr. Bonomy touched upon one aspect in his examination-in-chief in relation to the difference in size between Strathclyde and Central Scotland Police Force. I wonder if we could just put a little bit of flesh on to these bones. As I understand it, the population of Central Scotland Police Force area is in the order of 273,000. Does that ring true to you as roughly what you would expect Central Scotland to be? - I would accept your assessment.

Do you know how many people come within the Strathclyde Police area? - Approximately 2.3 million.

My understanding is that Central Scotland Police Force have some 658 officers in total. Again is that the order of magnitude you would expect? - Yes.

Do you know how many officers there are in Strathclyde Police Force? - We have an authorised establishment of 7,212 and an authorised civilian establishment of 1,800 or thereby, support officers.

So there is really quite a dramatic difference between the Forces? - Yes, very much so.

Am I right in thinking that Strathclyde is the largest Force in Scotland on these figures? - It is, yes.

And would it follow that the culture which there would require to be in one Force would differ quite significantly perhaps from the culture which there might be in another Force? - What do you mean by culture?

The/

The environment in which the officers have to operate. The general environment in which they work? - Okay. Thank you. I think that Strathclyde contains all environments that are apparent anywhere else in Scotland because it polices the rural areas of Argyll, Ayrshire and Lanarkshire as well as having to police the urban mass in the West of Scotland of Glasgow, Motherwell, Wishaw, Paisley and so on and throughout the spectrum of population and so on in Strathclyde, probably we mirror more or less every other culture in some way or another that is in Scotland.

Yes, that is using culture in the sense of geographical spread. I was meaning culture within the Force itself which impinges upon how an officer goes about his function. It might be different in smaller Forces than in larger Forces? - No, I think the same observation applies. If you look at for example officers in Argyll, they police places like Oban, Lochgilphead, Campbeltown and so on, Rothesay and Dunoon and perhaps a parallel could be drawn there with smaller Force areas and the type of rural aspects that have to be policed in smaller Force areas so the officers would develop perhaps, depending on the training they received and how that would be compared, a similar type of policing skills to be able to work with the local community in the best way to ensure that a high quality of service is delivered to them.

As I understand it, Strathclyde has a centralised Licensing Department, is that correct? - That is correct, yes.

And they look after both liquor licences and firearms licences? - Yes, that is correct.

And am I correct in thinking that all of the firearms files for Strathclyde are contained in that one Department? - Yes, that is correct.

Now, when a police constable goes out to make enquiry upon an application for a grant or an application for a renewal, he might be in an area quite distant from where the files are kept which I assume is in Pitt Street, is it? - Yes, that is correct.

What is it that that constable will have with/with him or her when the enquiry is being made? - He will have with him or her the application form submitted by the individual and he would have his notebook. I don't know whether or not he would, but he may, take a copy of the report form that he is required to submit and he should have.....

That would be the Strathclyde equivalent of the RL3a? - Yes, that is correct.

Sorry, I interrupted you? - Yes, and if the individual who was applying for the renewal of a certificate had also handed in the certificate that would be with him but that would be unlikely. You would probably find that at the home of the person in the application.

And he would be able to check the certificate upon making the visit? - Yes.

And you would expect him normally to do so? - Yes, I would.

But he would not have the firearms file as such, would he? - No.

And would the constable require to make a visit on renewal or has Strathclyde gone over to the system of postal renewal? - Strathclyde has not and won't go on to the system of postal renewal.

You made some comment in relation to criminal intelligence? - Yes.

I wonder if you would be able to tell us a little bit about the criminal intelligence system which operates within Strathclyde Police Force? - I will try to be helpful. There is a Central Criminal Intelligence Unit at Headquarters and in every Division there is also a Criminal Intelligence Unit. It is staffed normally and run by a detective sergeant who is also assisted probably it will be by a constable and they are field intelligence officers as well as office intelligence officers. They will be assisted by a crime intelligence analyst and there is a system in place where by the officers in the Force are encouraged to continually submit information which may be useful in helping the Force to solve crime and to prevent crime. The information is graded when it goes into the/

the criminal intelligence system to show that intelligence which can be based on evidence or full information as against information which appears in the system which is not backed up in any way. So that intelligence is graded dependent upon its quality.

Is there any attempt made in Strathclyde to concentrate their intelligence gathering efforts in relation to particular individuals?
- Yes.

And is that something which has come into being in recent times or has it always been such that you know of? - It has always been the case that police officers have gathered intelligence on the individuals who are most likely to harm society by criminal acts, violence or whatever.

Following the events of the 13th of March, did Strathclyde do anything in relation to reviewing its own procedures? - I am not aware if the Assistant Chief Constable, who has the function of dealing with licensing, has instigated a review. I have certainly found information in the Central Scotland enquiry which will be helpful to apply to all procedures in Strathclyde to ensure we meet the standard. I think, though, what will happen is that Forces will generally look to see if there are any short-term changes that had to be made in the light of the events of the 13th of March but I would expect them to wait until such times as Lord Cullen has reported to help them to form a system which meets all the evidence and investigation that is carried on at this Inquiry.

You made reference to the form which was used by Strathclyde as being equivalent to the RL3a? - Yes.

Do you know if that is the same form as has been used prior to the 13th of March? - It is, yes. As far as I am aware it is.

You were asked to look at the terms of Section 27 in relation to the issuing of Firearms Certificates and the need for good reason. I think it is fair to say that good reason is also required in respect of a shotgun, is that correct? - As far as I am aware, yes, it is.

Can you indicate what constitutes good reason/reason for requiring a Firearms Certificate? - Without an in-depth knowledge, my assessment would be for clay pigeon shooting, for husbandry of land and for the control of vermin as examples.

Perhaps sporting purposes on land? - I'm not aware other than clay pigeon shooting of sporting purposes on land.

When I was referring to sporting purposes I was meaning grouse shooting and suchlike? - Yes, game shooting.

Yes, game shooting? - Yes, that of course would be a sport.

If I was a farmer and wished to acquire a shotgun for controlling vermin for example, that would constitute good reason, would it not, to have a shotgun? - No, not solely that. Your character, your habits would all have to be conducive to you being able to have a shotgun without danger to public safety or the peace. You would not have to be a prohibited person by virtue of convictions. You would not have to be of unsound mind or intemperate habits and the shotgun would have to be able to be used on that land without danger to the public. For example, if it was a parcel of land which bordered a road and it was so small that there would be a danger to the public then you would not have good reason.

Well, does it not come down to two things; the good reason established by the intended use to which I seek to put the weapon? - Yes.

And after that there has to be some assessment as to the individual's stability but the good reason is really just in relation to the use to which the gun is to be put, is that not so? - Yes.

And so the good reason would be constituted or could be constituted by shooting vermin or similar? - Yes, in fact I think I am correct in saying that the guidance in the Act when it speaks about smooth bore guns, which are shotguns, refers to the fact that no one should require to have a gun, a smooth bore gun, other than one which only has a maximum of two shot capacity. The guidance then goes on to say of course there are instances/instances where you could have more than two shot capacity and the reasons given are for vermin control and pest control. So, yes, obviously.

And if I did acquire such a certificate and subsequently acquired an appropriate shotgun, I would not normally keep a record of the occasions on which I have shot, would I? - No, not at all.

And I would not keep a record of the number of rats or rabbits which I had managed to kill in a particular period, would that be correct? - That is correct.

And when my certificate came up for renewal, what sort of enquiry would you expect to be made? Would I have a visit as for a Firearms Certificate? - I have to say I have not made enquiry into the procedures for shotguns so, therefore, I can't be helpful. I'm sorry.

Now, would it be fair to say that the inspection which you have carried out has focused on the main procedures which were adopted by Central Scotland Police in relation to the granting and the renewal of Firearms Certificates? - That is correct.

If a Police Force in Scotland was to ascertain what was good practice in a particular area of policing, where would you expect them to go to ascertain good practice. If they wanted guidance? - I would probably expect them to make enquiries with other forces to see where they were with their development in any area of policing. I would expect them to be reading publications, perhaps from the Research and Development Branch. I would expect them to look internally within their own Force for good practice to try and help it be mirrored throughout the Force and I would expect that if the Inspectorate of Constabulary carried out a thematic inspection in relation to any issue that a Police Force has to deal with then that too would provide some information concerning recommended good practice.

Would it be fair to say that the report which you have provided has been reasonably critical of Central Scotland Police in a number of areas to do with their procedures? - I have to say that I believe/believe the report is as accurate as I could make it as a professional police officer and in that there are criticisms of the adequacy of procedure and the systems in place in the Force.

Now, I don't know if you have had a chance to look at the transcripts of any of the evidence. Have you had a chance to look at any of the transcripts? - I haven't read the transcripts other than Mr. McMurdo's transcript.

And apart from Mr. McMurdo's transcript, am I right in thinking you have based your opinion on the statements which were circulated in advance of the Inquiry? - Yes, the report is based on the statements and it is also based on the team that was working with me reading the transcripts, relevant transcripts, to determine whether or not those transcripts would mean that the report would have to be altered but having read the transcripts we decided there was no need to alter the report.

So whilst you have only read Mr. McMurdo's transcript, other members of the team who were assisting you have read transcripts from other witnesses? - Yes, that is correct.

In having read Mr. McMurdo's transcript, I think you would have ascertained that he was quite open in indicating that certain information ought to have been in the firearms file which was not there. Is that fair to say? - Yes, I read it very briefly yesterday when it was made available to me.

But save for that I don't think he admitted to too many other deficiencies in the procedures? Would that be so? - Well, I think he answered the questions as best he could. I cannot recollect all that is in the transcript but he had views in relation to certain procedures.

MR. TAYLOR: Sir, this may be an opportune time to break.

LORD CULLEN: Yes, very well. We will resume at 2 o'clock.

After an adjournment for lunch.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

TAYLOR: Mr. Richardson, I wonder if you could have Chapter L in Volume 7 before you? At the beginning of that file which you have before you, Mr. Richardson, you should see a letter addressed to Mr. Wilson from Mr. Boyd, Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary; is that right? - Yes.

And if you move in to the document, we see that there is the thematic inspection and the administration of the firearms licensing system. Is that what you have? - Yes; I have the letter from Mr. Boyd to Mr. Wilson.

And if you turn over a few pages, I think you then get to the actual thematic inspection which I referred you to a minute ago? - Yes.

If we look first of all please at Paragraph 1.9, that is under the heading "Methodology", do you see that? - Yes, I do.

And we see in the final sentence that the inspection focused on the main procedures in relation to the granting and renewal of firearm and shotgun certificates, and it then goes on to deal with matters which are not of such primary concern to us. Now, it would appear therefore, would it not, that the inspection which you carried out mirrored to some extent the inspection carried out by Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary? - I don't know the criteria of the terms of reference under which their enquiry was conducted. Their enquiry, I would imagine, would look at the practices across Forces, and from those practices and other knowledge that they had, make an assessment of what was good practice of the Forces in the Scottish Police Service. My enquiry specifically was based on paper information that was provided in respect of the Central Scotland Police Licensing system, and statements of individual police officers.

I appreciate that, but the same forms would have been used, or would have been seen by both yourself and the Inspectorate carrying out the report? - I would assume that the Inspectorate would see the forms that have been available to me.

And/

And the same procedures would have been followed, assuming that the procedures adopted in relation to Mr. Hamilton were fairly typical of the procedures adopted in other files? - I would imagine they would examine procedures, but I can't speak directly to that.

If we then turn and look at the letter which we referred to a few moments ago, that is the letter of the 22nd November, we see in the first paragraph and the final sentence there that the purpose of the letter is to briefly highlight some of the main issues raised by the scrutiny of your own Force? - Yes.

I take it you won't have had an opportunity to see this letter until just a few minutes ago; is that right? - That is correct.

The principal points which the Inspectorate make in relation to this scrutiny of the Central Scotland Police Force files and procedures centres principally upon the lack of permanent clerical support, which we see in the second paragraph. Do you see that in the second paragraph in the final sentence of the letter? - Yes, I do.

If we go on to the third paragraph, there is comment made about the role of the firearms examiner, and it being unfortunate that his role is restricted to renewals and not to initial grants, and they go on at the end of the third paragraph to indicate that there hasn't been a suitable means of communication available for the firearms examiner. Is that roughly what is said there? - Yes, it is.

In the next paragraph, the author of the letter talks about the level of technology which has to be made available, and then in the next paragraph there is discussion about a national package being prepared to assist applicants in the certification procedure; is that right? - That is correct, yes.

The next paragraph deals with the practice in Central Scotland Police whereby, if there be a refusal to renew or to grant, the statutory fee is not returned; that is so -- yes? - Yes.

And then in the next paragraph, which is the/

the fourth complete paragraph in the page, the comment is made that an examination of a random sample of files revealed that the recorded details of security arrangements were excellent overall. The next paragraph relates to target times for completion of application for grant and renewal -- yes? - Yes, it is.

The final paragraph on the page then deals with postal renewals, and then encouragement to adopt that; is that so? - That is correct.

And the final paragraph in the third page concludes by commending the Force on its development towards a fully civilianised unit, and an assurance is given that the Inspectorate will support the provision of a further firearms examiner and appropriate clerical support, and then it is signed by Mr. John Boyd, who is Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary; is that right? - Yes, that is correct.

And we saw there that there was a sample of files taken that, if they had been at all like the files that you saw, would have contained RL3a -- yes? - Probably.

But yet the Inspectorate doesn't seem to make any comment upon the use of the form or its format. Do you find that at all surprising? - I had to make comment after examining the procedures in relation to Thomas Hamilton's certificate, and my conclusions are based on examining those procedures.

But if those procedures were the same as the procedures which had been adopted in the other files, and if the Inspectorate had seen these other files, as it would appear he did, do you not think that if he found the RL3a to be deficient, he would have made reference to it in his report? - I would have expected him to have made reference to it in the letter to Mr. Wilson at least, if he found it deficient.

Would it be a reasonable conclusion to draw that the didn't find it deficient? - That is a reasonable conclusion, yes. Also the Inspector could have discussed one or two issues of some detail with a Chief Officer in the Force following an inspection.

There/

There is of course one difference in that the Inspector's report was prepared before the 13th March whilst yours has been prepared after the 13th March. Do you think that there is any possibility that in the preparation of your report, you have been to some extent influenced by the events of the 13th March? - My mind has been greatly influenced by the events of the 13th March because now there is hindsight available. However, I must say that I would have been greatly disappointed if my professional judgment hadn't drawn similar conclusions if I had examined the situation pre the 13th March.

You told us of the manner in which you interpreted Section 27 of the Act in relation to the definition of "good reason", and did you have occasion to address that issue prior to having done so on this occasion for the preparation of this report? - Do you mean in my professional capacity as a police officer previously?

Yes? - I did, yes.

How long ago would that have been? - In 1981.

And did the interpretation which you have given to "good reason" today conform with the interpretation which you gave then, or can you not remember? - I can't remember well the circumstances of 1980/81. I can clearly remember that the good reason was insufficient, and that the other problem was in relation to public safety at that time.

So that is a particular situation? - It is a particular case, yes.

I wonder if at that stage you could have a look at the Guidance which was issued to Chief Officers of Police, and that, I think, is contained in L2, and the particular passage which I would wish to look at with you is Paragraph 6.8E. It is on Page 69. Do you have it there? - Yes. I am just wondering if I am looking at the correct document?

It should be the very first document in that folder? - Okay; thank you.

And/

And this is what it is said should be borne in mind when considering applications, and it is said in 6.8E that "A certificate for a handgun with ammunition should not be granted (except in very rare cases) unless the applicant has regular and legitimate opportunity of using the weapon e.g. for target practice as a member of a pistol shooting Club". Now, you have taken that passage and interpreted it as being that he must establish that he is a regular user of the Club; is that correct? - That is correct, yes.

And we see that in your report, because we find at Page 4 in your report at the first bullet point on the report, it says "For example, whether the applicant has regular and legitimate opportunity to use firearms", so you have mirrored the wording contained in the Guidance note there; is that correct? - That is correct, yes.

But if we move on in the report to Page 44, and in the second whole paragraph on that page, "Thus, giving rise to question his 'regular and legitimate use' and 'good reason'". You have used the words 'regular and legitimate use' and put them in parenthesis. Is there any source from which that phrase has been taken? - There is no particular source. It is the interpretation of regular and legitimate opportunity.

You see, opportunity to me connotes a chance to do something. It goes beyond that for you, does it? - It does in this instance, because without that interpretation and with the limited information I have just now, in my mind it would probably mean that someone could have many guns for many years and much ammunition for many years without ever using it, so long as they were a member of a Gun Club, and I'm not sure that the spirit of the Act would wish that to happen when the circumstances surround public safety and security of firearms, and it is based on that scenario that my interpretation finds.

I wonder if you could have a document which has been submitted to Lord Cullen on behalf of the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Home Secretary, before you, and the particular page which I want to look at is Page 11, and I think copies are being made available? - Yes.

Page/

2.20 p.m.

Page 11 should contain a passage under the heading "Good Reason for Possessing a Firearm or Ammunition"; is that correct? - Yes.

In paragraph 54 we find the terms of the guidance set out, which we looked at earlier? - Yes.

Can you read paragraph 55 to us? - "This makes it clear to the police that membership of a target shooting club at which the applicant can use a particular pistol or revolver, can be regarded as a good reason for the issue of a firearm certificate to possess it, and the ammunition for it. We understand all police Forces in Great Britain adhere to this advice, and will issue firearm certificates to members of clubs in these circumstances, provided they are otherwise thought to be suitable".

In the first sentence you find again the used of the word "issue" is used. Would you disagree with that? - Not at all. This is directed I think at the granting of a certificate, from my reading of it. There may not be regular and legitimate use of before the grant, but once the certificate is in place and he is a member of a club I would expect him to have regular and legitimate opportunity to use it and take advantage of that opportunity to justify his possession of both firearms and ammunition.

I am not sure that the interpretation that you seek to put on it is necessarily correct, because the Statute refers to the possession of a firearm? - Yes, I see that.

But the possessing of a firearm would be dependent on a grant and a subsequent renewal? - I understand, but it says in paragraph 58 that it can be regarded as a good reason for the issue of a firearm certificate to possess it, and it is perhaps on the word "issue" that I make my remarks.

You do not consider renewal could also be encompassed by the "issuing" description? - Perhaps re-issuing, but not "issuing".

In/

In your view, if we take it for the moment that your interpretation of "opportunity" is correct, that would constitute sufficient use to entitle a user to renewal of the certificate? - The guidance is not clear in relation to "regular and legitimate opportunity to use", and that is perhaps why you are asking me these questions.

Yes? - The guidance is not helpful in defining "regular and legitimate opportunity to use", the number of times you have to use per year or whatever.

Does the guidance say anything at all about requiring to use the firearm? - I don't know the guidance in any great depth, but I would expect someone to use the firearm and ammunition at a range reasonably frequently. To put a figure on it I am not sure I would be able to do that, but if I was pushed I would be expecting them to be using a firearm regularly, perhaps at the very least once a month, once every two months.

Yes? - If I was involved in sport regularly, that would suggest more than once or twice a year.

In your analysis of events, what steps is the enquiry officer supposed to take upon learning of the use of the applicant, what he will be doing with the gun? - I would expect the enquiry officer to ask the question "What use is being made of the weapons?"

I apologise for interrupting you. That is dependent on "opportunity" being interpreted in the manner in which you seek to interpret it; is that correct? - I would expect that the form that the applicant would provide to the police officer could help him with him with his enquiries, would help drive him towards making such enquiries.

Yes? - I think too the form should require the officer to make enquiry at a gun club.

Yes? - I think added to that there is the possibility that if the previous certificate was examined and the current certificate at the Firearms Department or for that matter by the officer, if there was no purchase of ammunition recorded, I think/think it gives a reason for asking the question "Have you been using the firearm?" Thereafter, further enquiry would be dependent on the answer as to whether or not opportunity was taken to make ammunition or whether the contention was that ammunition was regularly purchased at a gun club which did not record the purchase for the certificate. Both of these answers would allow further enquiry.

You mentioned that the form would direct the enquiring officer to make enquiry at the gun club. Is that what you have in mind? - That would be an option for a form if it was to be re-drafted, so that the officer would be able to determine if the individual's practice at that club was acceptable, if he regularly used the firearm at the club.

Are you suggesting that that is what should be done just now in accordance with standard practice just now? - Yes, I am suggesting that Forces should require to put in place efficient systems and procedures to meet the requirements of the Act. Part of those procedures surrounds regular and legitimate use, surrounds membership in a gun club, which means that enquiry has to be conducted to confirm matters in relation to those issues.

You mentioned before lunch time that you had one of the Strathclyde forms with you, which is the equivalent of the RL3a? - Yes.

Can you say if in that form there is any suggestion made to enquiring officers that they should make enquiries of the applicant's club as to whether he is using his firearm? - There is no direct instruction in the form to require the officer to do that, but he has to identify the club at which the firearm was used, and the form requires that. It also asks "Has membership of the club been confirmed?": so firstly he has to confirm membership, and secondly name the club on the form.

Yes? - Thereafter I would expect either the Administration Unit at Division or the Firearms Section, or both, if there was a difficulty or if there was evidence of non-purchase of ammunition, would cause further enquiry to be made or to make that enquiry ourselves. All parts of the system must/must operate together for efficient procedures to be in place.

In your view one should go beyond simply identifying with the club that the applicant is a member of that club? - I have to say that post-13th March my mind is clear: enquiry must be made to ensure that regular and legitimate opportunity is being made and the firearm is being used.

Yes? - As I said earlier, I would hope that would be the view I would have taken prior to that date.

You see, we have heard from Mr. Norman Lynch: perhaps that name has cropped up in your investigations? - Yes.

Would it surprise you to learn that Mr. Lynch is a firearms holder and lives in the Strathclyde area? - It would surprise me to know he lives in the Strathclyde area. It doesn't surprise me to know that he is a firearms certificate holder or that he has some expertise in firearms. I have read his statement.

Would it surprise you to learn, if it was the case, that when Mr. Lynch made application for his renewal the only check which was made by the enquiring officer was to telephone his gun club in which he is a member asking if he was a paid-up member of the club? - It doesn't surprise me, no.

Why wouldn't it surprise you if your view of "opportunity" involves making use of the weapon as well? - The fact of the matter is if it was at a renewal he would be re-establishing the information that the individual was a member of a gun club. Thereafter to complement that information there would be examination of purchase of firearms which have been authorised by the certificate, and usage of ammunition.

Yes? - If that is not done locally, because the enquiry officer is not directed to do it or does not do it, other parts of the system have got to combine with that part of the enquiry to ensure that the system is effective and thorough.

Yes? - Therefore I would expect if there/

there is a note that would be carried out at Headquarters and the Firearms Section, where the file would be drawn for each renewal of the firearms certificate.

Would it not be a lot simpler if usage was an essential element to retaining the entitlement to possess a firearm that there be as part of the certificate some form which could be stamped every time the holder of that certificate shot at a gun club? - I agree with you, yes. I think the ammunition should certainly be marked on the certificate, but it would be helpful if gun clubs kept records of when their membership took opportunity to shoot, which would satisfy the "good reason".

And the fact that no such record is put on the certificate might suggest that the interpretation which you are putting on "opportunity" is in fact not the correct interpretation, would it not? - I have to say that I am not of a mind to change my mind in relation to "opportunity" no matter what was in a certificate. I would not want to seem intransigent, but to specify "good reason" someone has to use the guns that they have, that they have applied for, otherwise they have no good reason to have them, other than to look at them.

BY LORD CULLEN: So if stamping was to be used it would have to be stamping such as to show up that particular guns were used, other than simply attendance at a club; otherwise stamping would have to apply to all weapons? - Yes: but if ammunition purchase could be purchased, because the certificate had to be completed in respect of all ammunition purchased at the club or other commercial premises, this would mean that all purchases of ammunition would be known from the certificate: so there would be no excuse able to be levied that someone bought ammunition at a club, therefore there is nothing on the certificate to suggest he has purchased ammunition.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. TAYLOR: That would also mean one would have to put some prohibition on the making of one's own ammunition? - Yes.

At/

At the present moment it may be thought that the record of ammunition which is retained on the certificate does not really tell very much about the whole picture, does it, as things presently stand? - It doesn't, because an individual could purchase thousands of rounds of ammunition at a gun club without the certificate being stamped, and you could make thousands and thousands of rounds of ammunition without the number of rounds he made being known.

Yes? - But still within the certificate he could purchase ammunition beyond that which he is authorised to possess at any one time. There is no check made on the quantity of ammunition processed.

Yes? - There has to be some expectation that the individual is going to be truthful about his completion of the enquiry form and the information he provides.

Yes? - There are many loopholes in this system in respect of ammunition, purchase and retention.

You gave some evidence on your view of the RL3a form, and you were fairly critical of it in its unamended state: but if I have understood your evidence correctly, the criticisms carry forward to it even in its state of now being adopted? - There was an improvement in the RL3a in its issue probably in 1989 and 1990, the amended RL3a.

What I would like to know at this stage is whether the view which you are expressing in relation to the RL3a is one which you have formulated yourself and set your own standard by or whether the standard you have adopted is the Strathclyde form? - I have deliberately not adopted the Strathclyde approach. I did not make any enquiries about Strathclyde until after the report was written.

Yes? - My enquiries about the form were whether the form was sufficient to assist the officer making further enquiry, sufficient to allow the officer to ask the questions and make the enquiries that provided without the "good reason" test and the "regular and legitimate opportunity" test and also the character test, assisted by SCRO, DVLA/

DVLA and of course Criminal Intelligence.

It could of course be the case that proper enquiry is carried out notwithstanding the comments you made about the RL3a; is that correct? - I accept that, yes.

At one stage if I have understood your evidence so far correctly you want the RL3a to actually record the names of the persons who can speak to certain facts within the document. I think page 13 of your report is what I had in mind for that? - Which part of that?

The first complete paragraph, where you have a comment "Form RL3a does not accommodate the recording of persons who can speak to these facts", the facts referred to being the use of the weapons and the certificate? - Yes.

You envisage a form going even beyond recording the fact that a particular club is one which the applicant is a member of and going beyond the fact that the officer is enquiring as to the level of usage: you would have the form saying who the witnesses to these facts would be? - I think that would be helpful in doing the overall checks, yes. If the RL3a is going to provide for example information to allow Headquarters Department, which would be taking the overview, helpful information to help them make further enquiry the yes, absolutely: because in the memorandum that guidance does say it will be good practice to provide documentary evidence as part of the procedure, and I suppose providing that information would also be helpful.

Does the Strathclyde form require such enquiry to be made at clubs? - As I said earlier, it requires enquiry which is limited to ensuring that he is a member of a club and also providing the name of the club.

But that is as far as it goes? - Yes.

It doesn't go on to suggest that the membership of the club should be attached to the document or that there should be a letter obtained from the club secretary, or there is no space on the form for recording the usage which there might be at the club; is that correct? - That is correct. But as/

as I said at the start, this form is only part of an integrated procedure, and all parts of the system have to work: so to support the operational officer there is a Firearms Department, who from my limited enquiries withdraws the file when the renewal application comes in, takes the form, looks at the previous certificate for ammunition usage against the current certificate. So it is part of an overall procedure which does not stand on its own. Nevertheless, I am sure there will be improvements which will be able to be incorporated in another revised form.

You/

2.40 p.m.

You talked a few moments ago about ammunition and the difficulties which there were for a number of factors which you gave. Would I be right in thinking that one of the principal concerns in relation to the entitlement to hold ammunition has been the security arrangements in place by the applicant? - My recollection is that the security arrangements relate to the firearms. Whether they relate to ammunition or not in terms of the guidance, I don't know, but it would seem to me that both have to be kept securely and, on reflection, if good practice was to be adopted both would be kept separately.

I can follow that, yes. I wonder if we could look at the guidance again if you still have it before you. That is D1L and this time if we look at page 71 at 6.8(j) and we find there the guidance saying "It is not possible to give firm guidance on the amount of ammunition which may be authorised by a certificate. Each case should be dealt with on its merits. While account should be taken of the fact that it is normal practice to purchase ammunition by batches for consistency of performance and that reloading or buying ammunition in bulk is cheaper, Chief Officers will wish to pay regard to the risks attendant upon unnecessarily large quantities of ammunition being held on private premises. Where large quantities are authorised, particular attention must also be given to the security arrangements". Is that not suggesting that the risk which has been addressed in the guidance is the risk of inadequate security when large volumes of ammunition are held in any one hand? - Yes, there are two elements I see from having heard you read that. One is that the Chief Officers are not discouraged from allowing any large amounts of ammunition. In other words, there are reasons in there why they should allow large amounts of ammunition. So the guidance is taking into account the interests of the people who have firearms but then the guidance, from reading it, is covering an issue where there are large amounts of ammunition, unnecessarily large amounts which is undefined because as I said earlier, the limits which were defined in the guidance, in the 1969 guidance, of 1500 rounds and a thousand rounds are not transported to this guidance and yes, they are saying that there should be special consideration taken/taken concerning security of the ammunition.

Would it therefore be important that the security provisions are properly recorded on the RL3a Form? - Yes, if public safety is the concern and the fact that no one would wish firearms or ammunition to fall into criminal hands, then it would be an additional check to record the method of security if that was thought appropriate, yes.

Presumably that would be of considerable assistance to those who had to take decisions further up the chain of command? - It would. It may be helpful if you know that in Strathclyde in circumstances like that, where there are large amounts of ammunition or a large number of guns, that the security enquiry is directed to Crime Prevention Officers who have special knowledge of security arrangements.

And just taking up that point, how is a decision made as to whether or not the particular circumstances warrant the specialist knowledge of the Crime Prevention team? - There is no definition in our Force procedures to determine what unusually large amounts are or the numbers of guns, but as I said, there is a Firearms Department at Headquarters where an over-view would be taken and to ensure a consistency across enquiries they would be able to determine whether or not professional advice of the Crime Prevention Officer should be brought into play and whether he or she should in fact undertake the enquiry. I am sorry I am unable to be more helpful.

So that would be a decision made not by the enquiry officer but by the Firearms Department? - They would provide a consistency in interpretation across the Force.

Would it be fair to say that if the interpretation of the good reason aspect was other than that which you are suggesting and more the one which I am urging upon you, that many of the criticisms which are contained within your report would actually fly off? - Is that in respect of regular and legitimate opportunity?

Yes? - No. My report has been based on professional judgment which incorporates the requirements/requirements for public safety to be addressed. Therefore I, especially with hindsight, would continue to advocate those criticisms. Having said that I understand that the Force acted within a climate where the guidance was very much in place.

I understand what you are saying but if for the moment you accept the interpretation which I seek to put upon the guidance as opposed to the interpretation which you give to the guidance, and I appreciate you don't accept my analysis of it but for this hypothesis accept I am correct. Would it then be fair to say that many of the criticisms which are made of Central Scotland Police in your report actually fly off? - I suppose then police officers would not require to make investigation into whether or not a gun is regularly used. Therefore there would be no criticism about regular and legitimate opportunity. It is fair to say that.

And when one takes that out, am I right in thinking that what one is left with is a criticism of the Form RL3a and a criticism of what one finds on the firearms file and upon which one finds in criminal intelligence? - What would be defined is an inadequacy in the overall system which still failed to satisfy the requirements of the law in terms of good reason.

Yes, but that is again going back to good reason as being judged or being taken as your analysis as opposed to the analysis I am urging? - Yes.

Now, for this little passage of the evidence, if you might indulge me by accepting my interpretation of it, it being good reason, would I be right in thinking that what one is left with is a criticism of the form and a criticism of what is contained in the firearms file and a criticism of what does not find its way on to criminal intelligence? - More or less, yes.

Well, is there anything else left? - There is the sufficiency of the form as you have said. There is the support for enquiry officers so that they can do a thorough job.

Is that not the same thing, the form as well? - Well, they also would have support from their/their supervisors and they would have support from an over-view being taken by the Firearms Department.

Now, we have heard in evidence that the Firearms Department scrutinises each of the files. Is that not your understanding of the evidence? - I understand that was the point they were making. However, my evidence is that in relation to Hamilton the file was not scrutinised. There is no evidence to suggest it was scrutinised. That was the point I was making.

And how would that evidence have manifested itself? - By the officer, the civilian Mr. Lynch or Miss Johnston outlining any statements that were to be scrutinised with the file because if the file had been scrutinised along with the certificate and with the element of the whole system operating properly the non-use or non-purchase of ammunition for at least six years would have been spotted. The non-purchase of two guns over a period of nine years and eight years would have been spotted because these combine to question good reason and show a demand for further enquiry.

But again that is dependent entirely upon your interpretation of good reason, isn't it? - It is, yes.

So you draw your conclusion on that basis and if the interpretation of good reason is other than what you are suggesting and more what I am suggesting then scrutiny of the file may have been carried out and these items might not have warranted any special mention? - It is difficult to determine what I would have done if my interpretation had been different or the law had suggested to me something different but certainly regular and legitimate use would not have been a factor in the individual's possession of firearms or ammunition. The requirement would solely have been to have been a member of a gun club and so long then if the enquiry satisfied that aspect and confirmed Hamilton's membership and continuing membership of a gun club, that would have been the law satisfied. My report would have commented on that. It may also have said that there was a need and that I didn't agree with it, I hope.

One final point. A relatively minor point./

point. We have discussed what ought to be on the firearms file and I think you have seen from Mr. McMurdo's evidence that he acknowledges certain things ought to have been on the file. Do you consider that it is necessary for there to be duplication of what is contained on the file and also on criminal intelligence or would it be fair if everything was on criminal intelligence and a check made on criminal intelligence at each renewal or variation? - Each item would have to be looked at individually. Any item which referred to possession, use or whatever of a firearm, I would expect that at least to be in the firearms file because at the end of the day that is the source document for any individual thereafter to base decisions on.

And so far as the enquiry is concerned, does it not at the end of the day come down to having a degree of trust in the officer who is carrying out that enquiry and confidence in that officer to do his or her job properly? - That is part of it but that officer deserves and should have a system which helps him with an enquiry which he won't undertake regularly. In addition, it's not only about trust. It is about, as I have said and continually say, it is about the whole system being sound so that thorough enquiry is made and albeit we trust the officer to make enquiry, there are certain aspects of the law which have to be satisfied by that enquiry, hence the reason for pro forma and hence the reason I believe that the officer should receive good guidance.

No re-examination.

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, in such an Inquiry where it is becoming increasingly difficult to forecast exactly when it will be appropriate to call witnesses with professional commitments, as a result of that there is no further oral evidence to be led today.

There is one matter I hope to perhaps deal with at this stage and that does involve giving certain further information to the Inquiry. However, before doing that I would be grateful if you, sir, would allow me another short adjournment. I undertake this one will not extend in the way the one in the morning did and will not be any more than 10 minutes.

LORD CULLEN: Very well.

MR. BONOMOY: I am obliged.

After/

3.00 p.m.

After a short adjournment.

MR. BONOMOY: Thank you, sir. Crown Counsel have now considered the report prepared by the Regional Procurator Fiscal at Aberdeen, Mr. Vannet. That report has now been circulated to parties in order that they can consider it. I wish to now make the Lord Advocate's position in relation to that evidence and to the question of enquiring into decisions taken by Procurators Fiscal clear to the Inquiry.

It is a fundamental principle that prosecution decisions are taken independently of Government and that prosecutors, who act in a quasi-judicial capacity, are accountable for the decisions only to the Lord Advocate. The principle applies throughout the United Kingdom. It is recognised in the establishment of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, or Ombudsman, and of House of Commons Select Committees.

Accordingly, the prosecuting departments and matters relating to the commencement of conduct of criminal proceedings are not subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, in terms of Sections 4 and 5 and Schedules 2 and 3, Paragraph 6 to the Parliamentary Commissioner Act, 1967.

Similarly, the scrutiny of the Lord Advocate's Departments by the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Scottish Affairs it specifically excludes "Consideration of individual cases", in terms of a House of Commons Standing Order.

The rationale for the principle is the importance of finality and fairness to a potential accused, to victims and to witnesses.

The principle was clearly stated by Lord Justice General Clyde in McBain v. Crichton 1961 JC 25, 29: "The basic principle of our system of criminal administration in Scotland is to submit the question of whether there is to be a public prosecution to the impartial and skilled investigation of the Lord Advocate and his Department,/"

Department, and the decision whether or not to prosecute is exclusively within his discretion". His lordship went on "It is utterly inconsistent with such a system that the Courts should examine, as it was suggested that it would be proper or competent for us to do so, the reasons which have affected the Lord Advocate in deciding how to exercise his discretion, and it would be still more absurd for this Court to proceed to review that soundness".

The principle does not prevent an examination of the conduct of prosecutors. In the "Meehan" Inquiry Lord Hunter was able to examine the actions of prosecutors, although his remit excluded both firstly "The guilt or innocence of Mr. Patrick Meehan or Mr. Ian Waddle of the charges contained in the respective Indictments against them", and secondly "The reasons for and justification of any decision taken by the Lord Advocate whether or not to institute, or concur in, any criminal proceedings".

Equally, the Report of the Inquiry into an Allegation of a Conspiracy to Pervert the Course of Justice in Scotland by Messrs. W.A. Nimmo Smith, Q.C., and J.D. Friel made it clear that, although they had been instructed to investigate whether decisions were taken by prosecutors for improper reasons, "There can be no question of our reporting on prosecution decisions in such a way as would facilitate public debate about their correctness".

The principle was reflected in the establishment and operation of the Waters Tribunal of Inquiry, the last Tribunal of Inquiry to be held in Scotland, in 1959. In that case there was a motion before the House of Commons that a Select Committee should inquire into the case of John Waters and advise, inter alia, in what circumstances it was decided that no prosecution should be instituted.

The Government of the day brought forward a motion for appointment of a Tribunal of Inquiry into, inter alia, the action taken by Caithness Police. In explaining why it was inappropriate to examine the decisions of the prosecutor, the then Prime Minister, Mr. Harold McMillan, stated:

"It is an established principle of Government/

Government in this country, and a tradition long supported by all political parties, that the decision as to whether any citizen should be prosecuted, or whether any prosecution should be discontinued, should be a matter where a public as opposed to a private prosecution is concerned, for the prosecuting authorities to decide on the merits of the case without political or other pressure.

"It would be a most dangerous deviation from this sound principle if a prosecution were to be instituted or abandoned as a result of political pressure or popular clamour. In this case, my right honourable and learned Friend the Lord Advocate decided, after considering the evidence before him, that criminal proceedings would not be justified.

"In reaching his decisions the Lord Advocate's duty in Scotland, like the Attorney-General's in England, is to act in a quasi-judicial capacity, whether the person involved is a public functionary or a private citizen": that is a quotation from Hansard.

Finally, in the North Wales Child Abuse Inquiry, which was announced in Parliament on 17th June, 1996, the terms of reference, which are very specific, include examination of "The response of the relevant authorities and agencies to allegations and complaints of abuse made either by children in care, children formerly in care or any other persons, excluding scrutiny of decisions whether to prosecute named individuals", and that is a quotation from the Hansard report of the debate.

Although the considerations underlying the principle against subjecting to critical scrutiny prosecution decisions apply most obviously to the interests of potential accused persons, they also affect victims and witnesses. Prosecutors are required to make judgments on their credibility and on the weight to attach to individual pieces of their evidence. Prosecutors are also entitled to take account of other information placed before them, which may be confidential. There are also related considerations applying to the integrity of the decision-making process itself. If decisions on criminal cases are not taken privately, without the pressure of public scrutiny and on the basis of an/an independent assessment of the quality of evidence and credibility of witnesses, prosecutors could be inhibited from taking difficult decisions, which they must take in the exercise of an independent discretion.

The Lord Advocate has considered the exceptional circumstances of this case, including the death of Thomas Hamilton, who was the principal subject of reports to the Procurator Fiscal. He has also borne in mind the fact that other persons named in these reports, as suspects, victims and witnesses, are still alive.

In the exceptional circumstances which apply, the Lord Advocate has concluded that it is entirely appropriate that evidence should be put before the Inquiry as to the investigation of the individual cases and that it was appropriate that the actual police reports -- which would normally be wholly confidential to the Crown -- should be made available to the Tribunal. He has also concluded that it is appropriate that the Tribunal should have a detailed account of the inquiries made by the relevant Procurators Fiscal.

He has considered that, in the exceptional circumstances of this case, it is also appropriate that the reasons for the decisions taken by Procurators Fiscal should be placed before the Tribunal, so that it is as fully informed as possible as to the facts surrounding Hamilton.

After Lord Cullen had been appointed to conduct the Inquiry, the Lord Advocate arranged for an independent senior member of the Procurator Fiscal Service -- Mr. Alfred Vannet, the Regional Procurator Fiscal for Grampian, Highlands and Islands -- to examine all the relevant case papers and to interview the members of the Procurator Fiscal Service who were responsible for taking decisions in the cases. Mr. Vannet has never worked in the Procurator Fiscal's Offices at Dumbarton and Stirling. Mr. Vannet had no prior involvement in any of the cases. He has produced a full review, which he had completed under the direction of Crown Counsel, setting out in detail the history of the dealings of members of the Procurator Fiscal Service with these cases and including the reasons for the decisions which were taken./ taken.

The Lord Advocate considers that presentation of this report to the Tribunal should enable the Tribunal to have a full account of the history of these cases and the reasons why decisions were taken.

The Lord Advocate trusts that Mr. Vannet's account will be sufficiently complete for the Tribunal's purposes. If the Tribunal so wishes, the individual members or former members of the Procurator Fiscal Service who dealt with enquiries concerning Hamilton are available as witnesses as to the facts set out in Mr. Vannet's review. It would, however, be incompatible with principle and the practice to which detailed reference has been made for the Tribunal to subject the soundness of the decisions made in relation to Hamilton to detailed examination in evidence or submissions at the Inquiry. For that reason the Lord Advocate's position is that evidence should not extend, so far as decisions are concerned, beyond informing the Tribunal what decisions were taken and what the stated reasons for these decisions were.

The Lord Advocate trusts that the Tribunal and parties appearing before it will understand and respect the position which he has adopted in the exceptional circumstances to enable the Inquiry to have a detailed account of the involvement of members of the Procurator-Fiscal Service with Thomas Hamilton.

Now, sir, that completes the statement of the Lord Advocate's position. It is accompanied by an 18 page report prepared by Mr. Vannet, which I do not propose to read at this stage, since in view of its length parties ought to have some time to consider its contents.

Now, sir, subject to what is said to you by other parties what I have in mind is to read this tomorrow morning, and then parties can make any comment on it they wish.

LORD CULLEN: Thank you for that statement, Mr. Bonomy. That certainly makes clear what the position of the Lord Advocate is.

Now, /

Now, I would not propose to pass any observations on what you have just said, nor would I expect any of the parties at this point to make any response to it. I think the correct course would be to reserve any discussion on this matter till tomorrow morning, and to allow parties to read the statement, look over Mr. Vannet's report, and they can then decide on what their future course of action should be.

MR. BONOMOY: In the light of that ruling, sir, I regret that I have no further evidence to put before the Inquiry today.

LORD CULLEN: That is not altogether surprising, in view of what you said earlier. In these circumstances we will have to adjourn till 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The Inquiry was adjourned until 10.00 a.m. tomorrow morning.

TUESDAY, 25th JUNE, 1996.
TWENTIETH DAY.

BRIAN WILLIAM PILL, (55), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: I understand you live in Greenloaning? - That is correct.

What is your present employment? - Stirling Council Health and Safety Adviser.

Prior to working for Stirling Health Board, what was your employment? - I was a Central Regional Council Health and Safety Officer.

I understand in connection with the field of health and safety you hold a number of qualifications and affiliations? - Yes.

What are they? - It is a Member of the Institution of Occupational Safety and Health and I am a Registered Safety Person with those.

In your post as Health and Safety Adviser with Stirling Council are you involved in considering compliance by the Council with various Health and Safety Statutes? - That is correct.

And on that basis do you consider the application of such Statutes to schools within the Stirling Council area? - That is correct.

Which Statutes do you take into account as being applicable to schools? - The Health and Safety at Work Act, 1974 initially and then we would do now the Management of Health and Safety that came out in 1992.

And in broad terms, what steps are taken by the Council to comply with their obligations under the Health and Safety at Work Act, 1974? - The Region at that time had their own health and safety policy. The Council had their own statement and then the policy went on and explained what should be done in places of work. It was then left to the heads of service or department or they were in those days to get on, with our assistance, in carrying/carrying out health and safety in the workplace.

Can I ask you to have in front of you a bundle of Productions numbering I think R48 to R56. Do you recognise those?

- Yes, I do.

Dealing with the first item which is R48, is that a statement by you or is that a health and safety policy? - No, that is a statement by myself taken on Friday morning of last week.

Well, look at the second item within that bundle which is R49. What is that? - That is the health and safety policy that was for Central Regional Council. The part you have here is the section at the front of the education health and safety policy.

When was that introduced? - That was introduced prior to my starting with the Council. It would be 1978. Round about 1978.

Without going into the details of what is contained in that policy, I understand it contains a general part at the front and then a number of annexes dealing with specific parts of the health and safety policy? - That is correct.

As part of that health and safety policy was consideration given to the dangers that might arise to employees as a result of persons entering school premises with a view to criminal assaults?

- I have to say that that is something which has never ever crossed our minds.

So it does not form part of this particular policy? - No.

I understand that that policy might be supplemented by a number of safety guidance notes?

- Yes.

How are they prepared? - When regulations actually come out we look at the regulations and we come up with guidelines and put it to the Council.

And how are these issued? - They are issued.....they used to be issued through the Personnel Department to all other Departments.

And/

And in so far as the safety guidance notes might relate to schools, to whom are they issued? - They are issued out to all head teachers.

So there would be a copy in every school? - There should be a copy in every school, yes.

And again without going into any detail, I would like to refer you to some of the documents which provide some safety guidance notes. Firstly, R50. Is that regarding general safety in classrooms? - Yes.

And R51 is a safety guidance note relating to janitorial staff? - That is correct.

R54 provides safety guidance in relation to physical education? - That is correct.

R53 provides details of safety guidance relating to the youth and community service? - That is correct.

And is it fair to say also that none of these safety guidance notes are intended to take account of the situation of deliberate assault upon a member of the Council staff? - That is correct.

Did the Council require to consider the dangers of assault in their staff in any other context? - Yes, they did.

Which context is that? - Once where there was the collection of money, it was looked at some years ago where janitors were taking finance to the bank.

Are there any other contexts? - Not that comes to mind.

Does the Council require to consider the issue of the security of schools with a view to health and safety? - Yes, there is a security aspect but we also have to consider access and egress and the safety of our personnel from that point of view.

What do you mean the safety of the.....? - That is actually from the gates, actually getting into the building, whatever we are doing in the/

the building until we actually leave the grounds.

And what dangers are concerned there? - That is from the structure of the building or car parking or whatever it may be or access to it.

Does the Council require to consider dealing with in any context unauthorised access in schools? - As far as I am aware it has not in the past because we have not had a situation like that other than people bringing their cars or vehicles into our properties when they should not have done so.

Does any difficulty arise with unauthorised access to school resulting in property damage rather than personal injury? - Only vandalism at night times or weekends as far as I'm aware.

Does the Council take any measures to deal with that?
- The property maintenance section certainly do have some systems but I'm afraid I can't help you with that.

I think you say in your statement that consideration has been given at some points to providing a ring fence around certain schools, is that correct? - It was certainly considered and the way that it was done at the time was in discussions with the police. The police were asked to go in and help us secure certain schools but there is no way with such large areas that we have that they could be fenced.

What would the difficulties be in fencing schools in that way? - Finance and then continued vandalism of that fencing.

You made reference also to the fact that the Management of Health and Safety at Work Regulations now apply to schools. What does that require of the Council? - The biggest section is Section 3 which is risk assessment.

And what do the Council have to carry out to comply with that? - To risk assess the actual risks or hazards within the place and what risks there are to our employees and that would come on to the children within that school.

And/

And has the Council carried out risk assessments of school premises? - Over the past few years we have been carrying out training and periods of risk assessment and we have been giving advice on risk assessment. I moved into education just over a year ago in my final year with Central Region whereby I made up risk assessment guidelines to actually put out to educational establishments.

Can I refer you to document R55 please. Is that a copy of the risk assessment guidelines which you have formulated?
- That is the ones which went out, yes.

I think you say there in the second paragraph "The purpose of the risk assessment as defined by Regulation 3 of MHSWR is to identify the measures that employers or self-employed persons must take in order to comply with their duties under all applicable health and safety legislation"? - That is correct.

And then in the fourth paragraph you identify two components of the risk assessment as identifying the hazards present and then evaluating the extent of the risks involved? - That is correct.

I think on the second page of that you indicate that the risk assessment should enable the employer to prioritise remedial measures by considering what are the most necessary measures to avoid in the Department? - Yes.

What particular risks are present priorities for the Council in relation to school premises? - If we go back prior to the incident, the biggest problem that I found in the first four months of going into education and looking at it was in the field of care to our children and by that I mean the issue of medication in schools and the control of asthma. There was the epi-pen, that is for allergy, and the other one was first-aid. That was the four we found to start with that we were really lacking a policy on and that is when we started that.

So is that a risk assessment that was not strictly within the terms of the health and safety requirements and which applied to the children? - That/

That was one that I felt there was a great need for when I started to go out to visit schools. I found the biggest need in schools was in this area for our pupils.

Do you consider that the health and safety legislation applies to protect the children in the schools or purely the employees? - It is for the employees but we have to cascade it down to our pupils within our properties because in other words if it is not safe for the children it is not going to be safe for the employees with that school.

Since the events of March of this year has consideration been given to the issue of intruders within school premises and the dangers which follow from that? - No, it has not. I have thought long and deep about it but I am going to wait until this Inquiry is over although it is discussed in the properties I drop into now and it is discussed how people feel they need to discuss it in the workplace but we are waiting to hear from this Inquiry.

Just some final matters. I understand there was a revision to the general policy for health and safety at the end of last year, is that correct? - That is correct. There was a legal requirement to do so because of the changeover of our Director so I updated the leading page to the Depute Director at the time to cover us from the legal point of view.

And if I can refer you to document R54. Is that the updated policy for health and safety? - That was the one I brought out just before Christmas to see us through until the end of Central Regional Council, yes.

And you will see that is dated December, 1995 and signed by Dr. Young? - That is correct.

I think the final matter within the documents produced is R56. What is that? - I felt we had to go to all our employees in the workplace within education so this is a leaflet that we designed within our own section to flood properties, educational properties and schools, with to try and give some advice to entice people to take more of an interest in health and safety and it was just to start the system rolling.

A/

A number of these documents, including that last one, were issued by Central Regional Council. Have any health and safety policies been formulated by the new Stirling Council? - Yes, prior to the new Council coming together, because there were more than five staff I made up an interim health and safety policy for them to work to. On the 1st of April we came in with a new health and safety policy. It is interim because in fact it has now been to the Management Team and Resources and we are going to start doing presentations to the unions and employees on our new policy.

You say there that was interim. Is that policy still in interim form? - It is still interim until it has been discussed with the employees and the new unions but we are working to it.

If/

10.20 a.m.

If I could refer you to R57, what is that? - That is Stirling Council's new Health, interim Health & Safety policy.

Is that a record of a meeting of the Resources Committee approving this? - Yes.

I think you see attached to that the interim policy itself? - Yes.

Within that policy in the general statements on the first page at item c(v) there is reference to the provision and maintenance of a working environment for employees that is, so far as is reasonably practicable, safe? - Yes.

Is that broad enough in your view to cover all considerations? - This is a straight take-off from the Health & Safety at Work Act, 1974, and we felt at times like this we should not change a good Act, as the Health & Safety at Work Act is, so we have copied that in, so our managers know of it.

Do you consider that is broad enough to consider dangers arising from intruders to the premises? - No. That would come out under risk assessment, if we considered there to be such a risk.

Am I correct in understanding that the danger of intruders is one that would be evaluated in the form of a risk assessment to schools? - Yes.

Is that risk assessment to be carried out on a broad basis whereby there would be one assessment that would cover all Council schools, or is on a school by school basis? - I firmly believe it would need to be done school by school, with someone like myself doing it, or advising the head teacher or any other staff available to do that.

In the course of this Inquiry we have heard some evidence relating to increases in security measures being carried out at certain schools. Is that risk assessment in any way linked to the increase in security measures? - The two will have to go hand in hand, because of the Fire Regulations/

Regulations as well.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: Are you aware that in 1990 the Health & Safety Commission produced a guidance form relating to violence to staff in the education sector? - Yes.

I am concerned to note there is no reference to that in the draft document for Stirling Council? - That is correct.

Can I ask you to confirm that that particular guidance will be considered as part of the final draft to be prepared? - I don't know if it should go in in the initial policy, because the policy will need to be short and sharp: but certainly there will need to be a section on that topic.

Will this be considered? - Yes.

LORD CULLEN: Perhaps you would be good enough to let me see that document.

MR. GIBB: I cannot let you see the document, sir, but I can certainly give more detail of this in my submissions.

LORD CULLEN: Thank you.

BY LORD CULLEN: With regard to school security you appreciate I will be considering whether and to what extent I should recommend any changes in the law, therefore I need to know what is the existing situation under the present law. As I understand your evidence, you accept the school security and the normal and personal safety of staff lies within the conditions covered by the 1974 Act and the 1992 Regulations; is that right? - Yes.

Therefore whatever may be the position after the 13th March requires to be covered by risk assessment; is that right? - Yes.

From the point of view of achieving that result as rapidly and as efficiently as possible do you think it sufficient simply to let matters take their course, with the various Authorities preparing their risk assessments, giving them an amount of priority they think is appropriate, or do you think that/that some further measures may be required? - I think we have now got to start looking at risk assessments. I know our Property Section are looking at particular properties, and they will include the hazards which you are discussing here: but I don't know that they will put anything in place until they have heard from yourself.

I dare say; but I want to know whether I can simply draw attention to the law or whether there is something further that is desirable for me to say. That is why I am giving you an opportunity, if there is something you think ought to be considered by me; in that event I would be happy to deal with it? - In an ideal world our properties would be suitably fenced with gates which can close. That is something which is very difficult.

That is the nuts and bolts end of it. It is really a question whether the system is satisfactory for the moment to give sufficient impetus to any moves towards risk assessment which may be required in the area of school security? - It would all go back to design of our schools for security and safety. At the moment some schools are well spread out, and for security there is some difficulty.

There are two aspects: there will be the design of new schools and there will be looking at existing ones. I take the point that in relation to physical or organisational dangers you should take all reasonably practical steps, but there is no such measure in the sense of regulations or change in the law you have in mind for this purpose? - No, not really. The Health & Safety at Work Act and the management of Health & Safety is very clear, and there is very good guidance in law. It is actually getting it in place: finance is the difficult part.

If you look at the first page of your statement, in the first part of the text there is some bits obscured off the page. In the second line of the second paragraph it says "Whilst section", and then there is a blank, and something is missing there, I think. Can you give me the number? - Section 4 of the Health & Safety at Work Act imposes further duties in relation to all premises.

So "4" should appear at the end of the third/third line; is that right? - Yes.

Then your statement says about Section 4 "So far as the latter is concerned I understand the ambit of the Section as governing non-employees working or using plant or substances on the premises. Consequently school children as such are not encompassed, but when in the course of schooling they use plant or substances, thus for example woodworking equipment, I would consider the Act has application"? - That is correct.

Is that a complete statement of the protection which the Act gives to people like school children? - We have always treated and the Act always treats them -- we have to treat them basically as an employee to give them the safety within our property.

Section 3 of the Act extends protection, does it not, to anybody who may be affected by the activity in question? - Yes.

Were you thinking of Section 3 in writing this? - Yes.

As far as I know, these sections do not limit protection to school children, to what happens when they are using plant and substances? - That is a general statement. Whatever they do on our property we have a responsibility for them.

It says "Consequently school children as such are not encompassed"; they just happen to be on the premises? - If they are on the premises they are covered by whatever.

You have been shown this morning a copy of the Regional policy, and it refers to visitors, so it could be anybody, a parent, a child, or someone coming in to do a job of work; is that right? - Yes.

Is the protection limited to those who are physically on the premises? - No. We have to protect those who are off our premises if we are going to put anything, emissions, into the air or whatever.

So whatever comes out your chimney....? - That/

That is our responsibility.

So as far as that is concerned, if there is any risk associated with the activity, people are protected whether they are on the premises or not or whether they are working on the premises or not? - Yes.

So that would have to be taken into account in any form of risk assessment? - Yes.

Is it right that under the 1992 Regulations this risk assessment is done in relation to not only the safety of employees but also any person who is affected by the provisions of the Act? - Yes; anyone who walks into our property at any time.

Can you make a statement about what the intentions of your Council are in relation to risk assessments insofar as they affect schools? - We are going to be carrying out training sessions for risk management, and head teachers hopefully will be attending these courses.

Can you tell me how long it might be until we reach the point where the risk assessment has been carried out with regard to school security? - It is certainly going to be between now and Christmas.

So you expect the process to be completed this year? - I would say within the next financial year would be safer to say.

When does your financial year run to? - April: by next April.

No re-examination.

ALLAN DICKSON (40) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: I work in Community Education.

What Authority do you now work for? - I work for East Dunbartonshire.

I think until the winding up of Strathclyde/

Strathclyde Region you worked as an area Community Education Officer with Strathclyde? - Yes.

Where was your office? - Kirkintilloch.

I think you dealt with an application by Thomas Hamilton to use premises in your area? - That is correct.

Which were the premises he was interested in? - He was interested in Thomas Muir High School and Kirkintilloch High School.

Could you look at a Production BSRC ES18? Can you confirm to me that that is a letter from Hamilton to the Community Education Service dated 27th July, 1995? - Yes.

You can see he has already been in touch with you, and this is him formally applying for permission to use your premises; is that right? - That is correct, yes.

Now, what was your response to that enquiry? - As I recall, I wrote back to him saying there was no accommodation available at that time.

At one stage Mr. Hamilton also applied for recognition as a youth organisation; is that right? - That is correct, yes.

Could you also look at the form ES2? Is that the application he submitted? - Yes, that is correct.

Do you know when you actually received that? - I think it was some time in July, late July.

It is not referred to in the letter, the letter I just asked you to look at, which is the 27th July? - No. The first original letter was an enquiry, and because we didn't have accommodation for him we didn't invite him to apply for the accommodation.

On this day, 24th, opposite his signature at the foot and on the top it is described as an application for recognition as an approved Community Education Services organisation? - Yes.

What/

What is involved in such recognition? - This is not the actual let application, that is the ES4 form. That is the form that would give him recognition as an approved organisation. It means he would be eligible to get a subsidised rate rather than paying the full rate for paying the accommodation.

What does he need to satisfy you about before you approve him? - Basically that he has a constitution, there is some form of qualification, and most importantly that he can provide two references in support of his application, who know him and who support his organisation.

Is that the most important element? - Yes, most important is the referees.

You then refer to "A copy of the constitution must be enclosed"? - Yes.

I think you then confirm you did get a copy of the constitution? - Yes.

He described his committee as 12 adults who are predominantly parents of members; is that right? - Yes.

I think he gave you the name of his secretary, Ian Boal; is that correct? - Ian Boal was the second leader.

Did he not also name him in this application as the secretary? - Possibly.

Well, could you look at the form to see if he is named as secretary, more or less in the middle of the page? - Yes.

He also has named various people whom he claims are committee members; is that right? - Yes.

D. McDonald, Mr. and Mrs. Woods, Mr. and Mrs. Hogan, Mr. Munro, Mr. K. Barker, Mr. and Mrs. Hill, Mr. T.W. Hamilton, that is himself, and Mrs. A Watt, who was his mother. You may not know that, but these are the names; is that correct? - That is correct.

I/

I think he also gave details of a bank account by saying "We do not operate a bank account. We did have a bank account with TSB, which is closed"? - Yes.

And the treasurer is named as Mrs. Watt? - Yes.

And his accountant's name is Mr. W. Freer, CA? - Yes.

You say the most important part in this is the bit on the next page? - Yes.

Why is that the most important part? - There are some organisations that we are not aware of within our area, and so we generally ask for references from people who know them. These people should be fairly prominent members of the local community who have some contact with and can support the application.

In the letter we looked at a moment ago Mr. Hamilton said he was not from your area, but there was a demand for his services coming from your area, and that is why he wanted to put his clubs into local schools? - Yes.

In a situation like that, who are you looking for references from? - I think we would be looking for references from his own area, in terms of support.

Yes? - We certainly knew there was a need within the area he was asking for, but because we did not know him it would be helpful for references to be given from his own area, from people who knew him.

There are two signatures you are looking for, people who can certify that "The leaders are known to be and worthy of support"? - Yes.

You are asking that the form in that part should be signed by two prominent persons from within the community, for example Regional and/or District Councillor, Minister of Religion, headmaster, JP, bank manager? - Yes.

On this form there is only one signature?/

signature? - Yes.

That is from Robert Campbell, JP? - Yes.

In Stirling? - Yes.

Because of that what did you do? - I sent the form back to him and asked him to complete it properly.

Was there some delay in getting a second signature?
- Yes. The second signatory he said was on holiday, and he couldn't contact him, but he would contact him when he returned from holiday.

Could you look at ES9? Is that a letter of the 26th July to Mrs. Carr in your office from Hamilton? - That is correct, yes.

And he is actually sending a completed let application form; is that right? - Yes.

Does he say "Tried to contact my Regional Councillor, Rob Ball, Chairman of Education Committee, Central Regional Council, to sign for me. He seems to be on holiday all week"? - That is correct.

"If you return the form I will get his signature after holiday period"? - Yes.

Now, did you then return the form? - Yes.

Did he get the signature? - Yes.

And he returned the form to you? - Yes.

Could you look at ES3 now, please? Is that the same form as ES2, which was probably a copy of it, and now completed in full? - Yes.

What is the additional signature? - That is Dr. Robert Ball, the Education Convener of Central Regional Council.

On what date has he signed that? - August 5th, 1995.

And that is certifying "The leaders are known/known to me and worthy of support"? - Yes.

Now, when you got that form back in what did you do with it? - We basically would have approved the organisation, and Thomas Hamilton would become eligible for the reduced rate. We held it on file.

How did you go about approving the organisation? - I think a week or two after we got the form a games hall became available in Thomas Muir High School, and we phoned Thomas Hamilton to say it was available, was he still interested, and he said he was interested.

Yes? - Subsequent to that I then discovered that publicity had gone out via the local schools in the Bishopbriggs area without my authorisation, and at that point I became slightly perturbed that such a quick response had gone out, as a group should not publicise activities until they got confirmation in writing.

Yes? - At that point I thought I would look into this slightly further to see basically how valid the organisation was, and I contacted Central Regional Council and I spoke to William Houston, the Divisional Community Education Manager there, and he confirmed -- he basically advised me that Central Regional Council had had some difficulties with this organisation, and although there was nothing preventing him having lets he advised me that he needed to be monitored.

Yes? - At that point I discussed with Mr. Houston -- I asked if he could check the signatures for me to ensure they were valid before I processed the let in writing to Mr. Hamilton.

Yes? - Mr. Houston did do that. I faxed the signatures to him, and he confirmed that both of the signatures seemed valid, but he followed up Dr. Robert Ball's signature and in discussion, William Houston in discussion with Robert Ball, he approached him and asked him did he sign the application form. He said Dr. Ball said yes, he was in support of the organisation.

Yes? - William Houston phoned me back to say the signatures were valid, and Dr. Ball had confirmed his support of the organisation. On that basis I then approved the let of Thomas Muir in writing.

Did/

10.40 a.m.

Did Houston actually say to you that Dr. Ball was approving the Organisation? - Yes.

Were these the words he used? - Mr. Houston approached Dr. Ball and said -- this was all done by telephone, and my telephone call to Mr. Houston -- I don't know if Mr. Houston -- well, I believe Mr. Houston saw Dr. Ball in person, but again I can't substantiate that, but basically Dr. Ball said yes, he was supporting this Organisation, and I think Mr. Houston said "After all we've been through", and Dr. Ball said "Well, he's one of our constituents, isn't he", and that's the way it was.

What then was the attitude of you and your Authority to allowing him then to take the let of premises? - Well, there was nothing actually to prevent him taking the let of premises.

He met all the requirements of our letting procedures, so in that sense, at that stage I didn't know -- as far as I was concerned, it was an approved Organisation, although there was a question mark. The main advice I was given was not to allow Thomas Hamilton more or less exclusive access to the games hall, so prior to confirming the let in writing to him, I actually made a decision not to give him the games hall in Thomas Muir, because if he had access to the games hall, he would have more or less access to the games complex. I then offered the large gym in Thomas Muir, and offered the games hall to another Organisation called Rosevale Boys' Club, which is a local Boys' Club in Bishopbriggs which attracts quite a significant number of boys. I felt by doing that that if there was any doubt about safety of local children, then that would ensure there would be a minimal risk attached to that. However, having contacted Thomas Hamilton to say he wasn't going to get the games hall, but the large gym, he took exception to that and actually wrote to the local Regional Council for that area complaining in terms of our administration.

Could you look at ES4 now please? Is that a letter from a Councillor Tom Rae, who would be a Strathclyde Regional Councillor, to Mrs. Carr, letting officer? - That is correct, yes.

Dated 2nd October 1995? - Yes.

Was/

Was Mrs. Carr working in the same office as you? -
Yes, she's my senior clerical assistant who acts on my behalf.

And that letter enclosed a letter from Thomas Hamilton to Mr. Rae dated 27th September 1995? - Yes, that is correct.

And what was the nature of the complaint? -
Basically that Thomas Hamilton felt that he should be allocated the games hall because that was promised to him, and he basically felt it was unfair and he couldn't understand why this other Organisation were being given it when he was first in line for the hall as he saw it.

Did that problem become more difficult or less difficult to resolve after that? - It placed slightly more pressure on our local office, the fact that there was now a Councillor involved with the situation.

Did Hamilton actually take up the let? - Yes, eventually he accepted the large games hall.

In the intervening period, was there any problem about someone cancelling part of the let? - Yes.

What was the problem? - One of the remaining -- there was one remaining group within Thomas Muir. The Thomas Muir complex, there is a games hall, a large gym and a small gym, and one of the small gyms was being used for a keep-fit group, and they cancelled, which effectively meant there were no Organisations using the Thomas Muir games complex at that time, and it wasn't the policy of the Regional Council to let accommodation where there was only one group because it wasn't good use of Council money to open up premises for one group, so we tried to get basically two or three groups in the building, so this other group cancelled, so effectively we were unable to let the halls, so that further delayed the process, and that's when Rosevale Boys' Club, who were on the waiting list and were looking for more accommodation, we approached them and they were happy to take the games hall, therefore allowing Thomas Hamilton the large gym.

Now, /

Now, thereafter, I think you had a number of other dealings with Hamilton. First of all, did you resolve the problem that had been raised by the Councillor and give him the games hall at any stage? - No.

So he just accepted the gym eventually, did he? - Yes, eventually, yes.

Did you have occasion to deal with damage? - Yes.

And did Hamilton accept responsibility for some damage caused by some of the activity? - Yes, he accepted full liability for it.

Were there any other problems after that? - The only complaint which I received was to do with the issue of medals. Basically six boys within the Club did not receive medals whereas the rest of the boys in the Club received medals, so effectively six boys as far as I could see were being discriminated against, and I raised that issue with him and said that that wasn't -- I didn't expect Organisations to operate in that fashion where it could be perceived as individuals being discriminated against, and he put that right and he basically sent medals to the six boys.

Did one other parent raise an issue over the safety of transporting the children? - Yes. That was another question in terms of the insurance regarding the mini-bus trips which was actually taking place outwith the terms of the let. This was something he was organising really off his own back.

So the boys were being transported somewhere else? - Yes, on a Thursday evening.

Now, a parent asked about that, did she? - Yes.

And were you able to check up on the position? - I checked with Mr. Houston in Central Regional Council regarding the insurance because I discovered that the bus he was using was a bus from Central Region garaged at Bridge of Allan, and it was confirmed by Mr. Houston that the bus was covered third party, fire and theft, and that Hamilton/

Hamilton was a registered driver.

Did you get the chance to inspect the bus? - Yes.

And what was it like? - It was first class. It met all our regulations. It had seatbelts and it had a proper log, a log-book.

How many times did you actually meet Hamilton? - Twice.

Did either of these meetings cause you to be concerned about him? - I think when I first -- the first contact I had was on the phone, and I felt -- his tone of voice was really a monotone and I thought that was slightly strange. However, when I did meet him, I thought he was a bit shy and maybe a bit repressed in some way, but he didn't lead me to believe that what was to transpire, that he had that within him, but he was quite a plausible character, I would say. He was believable to some degree.

I think at one stage you sought some evidence of his membership of the British Amateur Dramatics Association? - Yes, I asked him to present that at the office, which he did, and we photocopied. He was a current member.

I think you sought a CV for his assistant, who was Mr. Boal? - Yes, I asked him for that to ensure there was proper training going on, and he produced that also.

So each time you asked him to vouch something, he was able to do so? - Yes, he cooperated at all times.

No cross-examination.

WILLIAM/

WILLIAM ALEXANDER HOUSTON (43), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you William Alexander Houston? - That is correct.

What age are you, Mr. Houston? - I am 43.

And I think you are a staff development officer with Stirling Council? - That is correct.

Or staff development training officer; is that more accurate? - That is correct.

In July, August, September and October 1995, did you work for Central Regional Council? - That is correct.

Which post did you hold? - I was the Divisional Manager with the Stirling and Clackmannan area community education.

And/

11.00 a.m.

And was part of your responsibility the letting of community education property? - Yes.

Now, we have had some evidence in the Inquiry about various different arrangements for the letting of property depending on the premises in question. It might be a School Board or it might be a head teacher acting through an Area Officer and so on. There were different arrangements? - Yes, there were.

Where did you fit into these schemes for letting property? - Historically..... initially the task of school letting was the responsibility of the Area Officer and Legal and Admin. Services. In the early 1970s community education began to establish Councils which were representatives of the local community. Local community groups and local music groups and the community sections and latterly the community wings in secondary schools became involved in decision-making locally and they were technically a sub-committee of the Education Committee formed under the same Education Act which formed the college councils and they would decide on letting matters. The duty of community education was (a) to form such councils and (b) to support such councils. That ran up until the formation of the School Boards in 1989 and thereafter you had really three separate people who could grant lets of educational premises.

Who were they? - You had the Area Officers from Legal and Admin. You had the School Boards who dealt with the school parts and you had the centre councils. In the case of Dunblane it was the centre council and the wing council in Dunblane High School.

If it was the Area Officer, was he actually doing the work that was the responsibility of the head teacher of the school? - I don't quite understand the question. The Area Officer would be from the Legal and Admin. Department who had the responsibility for administering lets.

Yes, but we have seen Area Officers' signatures on lets. We have been given the impression by at least one witness that that was simply giving effect to what was in theory at least the/the decision of the head teacher to let the premises. Is that wrong?

- I don't think that is correct, no.

So the Area Officer had the responsibility of dealing with the let itself? - The Area Officer had responsibility to deal with the let in the absence of a School Board or in the absence of a centre council.

Now, is it possible in some instances there might have been a School Board but they simply left it to the Area Officer to deal with? - Yes, that is certainly possible. Yes, that happened on a number of occasions.

Did you know much about the operation of the Dunblane High School wing council? - Yes.

Can you confirm whether Thomas Hamilton was on it?
- Latterly he joined the wing council following difficulties over an application for let in 1993. He attended I think three meetings because the Council was open to any group within the area to join.

And what were the difficulties about the let in 1993? Very briefly? - The difficulties briefly? After the event I looked over the papers and I spent about three days trying to figure that one out. It would appear that previously Mr. Hamilton had applied to the Area Officer for let to hold a summer camp. On the occasion in 1993, we are not sure who he applied to because the School Board didn't sanction it. The community wing didn't sanction it. It would appear the signature to sanction on the let form was the janitor's and we don't know on what authority that let was sanctioned. The let itself was conflicting because the wing council or the centre council if we could call it that had already agreed a let for the Quakers at the same time as Mr. Hamilton had requested a let for his summer camp.

And did that mean that they would be in part of the premises at least during part of the time he was supposed to have or at least thought he had the whole let? - That is correct.

And that was eventually resolved after a lot/

lot of correspondence and meetings, is that right?

- Yes.

Apart from that, did your Department receive any communications from Hamilton? - Yes.

Were they always letters directly to you? - No.

What were they? - What I received were copies of letters to everybody else from him.

For what purpose? - I suspect to enlighten me to his views. He certainly sent me copies of letters to the Ombudsman, copies of letters to Michael Forsyth and copies of letters to whoever he happened to be writing to.

Now, I think that during the period I asked you about, that is July to October, 1995, you had some communication with Mr. Dickson from Strathclyde Region? - That is correct.

And he was the one to contact you? - Yes.

Did you know each other before then? - We didn't know each other but I previously held the position he was in. I worked as Area Officer in the Strathkelvin area before coming to Central Region and when Mr. Hamilton approached Strathkelvin for a let, they were unsure of him and telephoned me because they knew me and I was in the Stirling Council or Central Regional Council area.

Now, when he contacted you, what was the state of play between the Community Education Department in Central and Hamilton? - The community education staff were under an instruction and the instruction was that any dealings with Mr. Hamilton had to be directed through Legal and Admin., through Mr. Flett in Legal and Admin. We were not permitted, unusually, to approach Mr. Hamilton for any purpose and we were to refer all conversations and all correspondence to Legal and Admin. That was unusual.

Was it actually exceptional, so that he was the only one? - He was the only person that this kind of arrangement happened for.

And/

And by that period in 1995, had that direction applied to every application for let that Hamilton made? - No, that is separate from let applications. When he applied for a let application, my staff were instructed to contact Legal and Admin. and advise them of the fact that Mr. Hamilton had applied for a let and to proceed with the let in the normal way but other correspondence and all other meetings with Hamilton was to be noted and reported to Legal and Admin.

So what was it you were initially telling me had to be referred to the Legal and Admin. through Mr. Flett? - Any correspondence from Mr. Hamilton and leaflets he was putting out into the community. Any interface with Mr. Hamilton at all.

Was there any policy, and I use that in the broadest sense, to either encourage or discourage Hamilton from making use of Central Region's premises? - There was a practice of discouraging Mr. Hamilton, a widespread practice.

One way of course is by making it difficult for him by re-routing applications and so on but that didn't happen? - No, we didn't re-route applications as such. What we encouraged staff to do and Alva would be an example of that, where Mr. Hamilton applied for a let we couldn't prevent the let because of the way in which we operated so we allowed the let to run for a period of six weeks to the summer holidays and then I instructed members of staff to ensure that we had a more deserving group utilising that let after the summer holidays.

And did that actually happen? - That actually happened, yes.

And it happened where in particular? - It happened in Alva.

And was that within your area? - That was within my area, yes.

Were you only dealing with part of the Central Region area? - I was dealing with Stirling and Clackmannan.

And I take it that throughout the Education/

Education Department it would be known that Hamilton was to be discouraged if possible? - Yes.

And obstacles were to be put in his way, albeit this could not be done officially? - Yes. obstacles in the sense that if Mr. Hamilton applied for a let we encouraged our staff to ensure that somebody else was utilising that let but any other kind of discouragement we couldn't do.

Do you remember when it was Mr. Dickson phoned you? - I would have to look at my notes.

Roughly? - 1994 but I can't.....

Well perhaps you could check your notes just to be clear if you have got them with you? - Yes. It would be August of 1995.

And what did he want to know? - In the first instance it was his secretary, Cath, who I knew who had previously worked for me.

What is her second name? - Cath Carr. She phoned and said "I've just had Mr. Hamilton in the office and I feel uncomfortable about it. He has applied for a let here. Do you know anything about the man?" and I explained what I knew of him and she just said "You'll need to speak to Mr. Dickson" so I spoke to Mr. Dickson at length.

And what did you tell him about Hamilton? - I told him what the working practices in Stirling Regional Council were and that we would attempt to prevent him from gaining access to school premises and to young people. I told him that a number of officers within the Council had been looking at various photographs that I hadn't seen but I had heard of. I told him that a meeting of senior officers had taken place and my understanding of the situation was that they were making a decision about whether or not they would attempt to exclude Hamilton completely from Central Region and we were awaiting the result from that. I told him that I would not let my kids go to a club that Hamilton was responsible for and I would advise him to try and put obstacles in his course to prevent him from gaining access. A few days later he phoned me again and then told me that he had received a form back, a sponsorship form, and told me/me who the signatures were on the form and asked me if I could authenticate the signatures, did I know who they were.

And did you authenticate them? - Well, I only contacted one person. I contacted Councillor Robert Ball.

Now, authenticating a signature might mean just saying that it looks like his signature? - No.

It sounds as if you were going to do more than that? - I telephoned Robert Ball. I got him at his office in the University. I explained why I was phoning and I explained the background and Robert Ball advised me yes, that he had signed the form.

Was there any more to your discussion than that? - Well, Councillor Ball explained to me why.....I mean, I had said to him that my understanding of the practice within the Council was that we were trying to prevent Hamilton getting access but Councillor Ball advised me that he had seen photographs and that there was nothing illegal about taking photographs of young people and until there was hard evidence against him he felt he had a duty to sign it. He was one of his.....I think the word he used was one of his "punters". I think what he meant by that was that he was one of his constituents.

At that stage was Councillor Ball one of the meeting you have just told us about among Legal and Admin. and other Departments discussing the question of Hamilton? - I don't know. I didn't discuss that with Councillor Ball. Councillor Ball told me why he had signed it and I just left it at that.

In your statement which you gave to the police you indicated that he had actually attended a meeting with Legal and Admin. and other Departments to discuss the question of Hamilton having access to community education property. Is that not right? - I had been told that by my own line managers, that he was involved or had attended. I am really not sure whether he attended or not because I didn't attend.

Did/

Did you phone Mr. Dickson again after you spoke to Mr. Ball? - Yes.

And what did you tell Mr. Dickson? - I telephoned Mr. Dickson and advised him that the signature was authentic and that he had the Chair of the Education Committee of Central Region's signature on the form and it was very difficult for us to say any more.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. JONES: Can you look please at a document D3H(v). You were asked some questions about the scheme for letting and I wonder if you could explain to us what this is. It is headed "Central Regional Council: Education Services. Scheme for the Letting of Educational Premises". Is that something you have seen before? - It is something I have seen before, yes.

And it was a Central Regional Council policy document I think, is that right? - It is a Central Regional Council policy document.

Can you describe to us what it is and what its purpose was? - I mean, it is just an outline of what you must do when you take a let of educational premises.

I think it sets out the general principles firstly, is that right? - Yes.

And within that set of general principles it establishes priorities for letting of Council premises, is that right? - That is correct.

And there are priorities allocated according to the type of premises and the timing, is that correct? - That is correct, yes.

And if we go on to the second page, the conditions of let are then set out, is that right? - That is correct.

And they continue through I think to the end of the document? - Yes.

Now, was that the only policy document that existed in relation to lets up until the time when Central Regional Council ceased to exist? - There was another document which I remember seeing. I/

I certainly don't have it with me but there was another document which laid out the priorities that these lets will be free and these lets will cost so much and it was lists and lists and lists of various types of group. There was that kind of document and that was a kind of working document that we used for everyday letting because it allowed us to say that youth groups were a priority and as Mr. Hamilton was working with children's groups, not youth groups, because children were defined as under 12 and youths were defined as broadly secondary school and over, we were able to utilise that part of it to prevent him getting access because we could put a youth group into a gap in the programme.

An essential feature of the document you have in front of you is an encouragement for use of Council premises by the community, is that right? - Yes, that is correct.

No re-examination.

MR. BONOMOY: In the light of that evidence, sir, I would propose to recall Robert Ball who has already given evidence.

LORD CULLEN: Yes.

ROBERT BALL, (Recalled),

LORD CULLEN: You are still on oath.

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: There is one matter I should have asked you about when you were here before which I would like to ask you about now. Can you please have in front of you a document which is DSRC-ES3 and if you could go to the second page of that. Can you confirm your signature there dated the 5th of August, 1995? - Yes, that is correct.

And you will see that that is a signature to the effect inter alia "Leaders are known to me and worthy of support"? - Yes.

Now, you gave us some information the last time about the state of play between Hamilton and the Regional Council early in 1995 when you yourself were anxious to be told about any matters of concern affecting/affecting Hamilton? - Yes.

Can you clarify for me whether at the time you signed this document you did consider that he was still worthy of support?
- I think the questions that were looked into in 1995 had perhaps been resolved and no further action taken. This was basically an application for a hall let and I found it was difficult to refuse to sign it given the number of hall lets he has had for the period of time he had with Central Region although I did have misgivings about signing it at the time. I did not feel happy about it.

If you look at the front page you will see this one is not actually for a let. It is for recommendation as an approved Community Education Service organisation which one might think is a bit more formal than a let? - Yes.

Well,

11.20 a.m.

Well, I thought it was a late application.

Did you not give much attention to the form? - I perhaps didn't give it as much attention as I should have done.

Do you think if you had read this carefully you would have signed it? - It is very difficult to say what you would have done in other situations. If it had been a bit more formal I might have had further reservations.

Do you mean if you had looked at it more formally you might have had further reservations? - Possibly.

We have also had evidence that one of your staff, Mr. Houston, raised with you the question whether it was appropriate for you to sign this form; is that possible? Do you remember that conversation? - No, I don't, but I am sure he said he rang me up about it.....

No, he indicated you told him you had looked at the photographs yourself, and there was nothing overtly indecent and nothing you could say was improper. Do you remember that conversation? - I don't remember any of that conversation, but I am sure if he said that, that conversation took place. We were in a busy time, remember, with Local Government reorganisation.

Do you remember signing the form? - Yes. I can remember very well Mr. Hamilton arrived on the doorstep asking me to sign the form.

Was it just done on the doorstep? - Yes. He arrived and knocked on the door just as I was about to leave to go to a meeting.

So that means you didn't actually read this form? - I briefly looked through it. Perhaps I didn't read it as carefully as I might have done.

No cross-examination.

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, that completes the oral evidence available this morning. You did indicate/indicate yesterday evening that further consideration should be given to the matters arising out of the statement I made and it may be this is the appropriate time to deal with it.

LORD CULLEN: Earlier this morning I granted Mr. Campbell an opportunity to prepare some remarks. Perhaps he is ready now?

MR. BONOMOY: I would welcome five minutes on another separate matter, which is linked to this, which I propose to deal with at the same time after you have resolved the issues arising from yesterday's statement, sir.

LORD CULLEN: Would five minutes suffice, Miss Dunlop?

MISS DUNLOP: Yes, sir, five minutes would suffice.

LORD CULLEN: Very well.

After a short adjournment.

LORD CULLEN: Yesterday I deferred consideration of the statement made on behalf of the Lord Advocate to give parties an opportunity to consider the position. I of course have taken the opportunity of looking at what was put before me yesterday and studying the statement made. Now, Mr. Campbell, do you wish to address me?

MR. CAMPBELL: Thank you, sir, yes. Can I say at the outset that what I have to say in this regard is said purely with a view to assisting you, sir, on a matter which has arisen, though I am confident that those whom I represent would wish the fullest scrutiny of the whole background to the Dunblane tragedy as can properly take place.

Sir, you are well aware that you are a Tribunal set up by both Houses of Parliament under the 1921 Act, with the function of reporting to Parliament on the issues arising from the events on the 13th March. So far as the submissions made yesterday are concerned, the Lord Advocate is a Minister of the Crown, and accountable to Parliament for the conduct of the Public Prosecution Service in Scotland, including the Procurator-Fiscal Service.

Sir,/

Sir, in this context I would refer you to an article written in the Law Quarterly Review for 1938 by the then Lord Justice General, Lord Normand, set out at page 345, particularly the passage at the foot of page 353. This article is entitled "The Public Prosecutor in Scotland", and at the foot of page 353 his lordship says "Since at least the middle of the sixteenth century the Lord Advocate has held an important position in the political hierarchy of Scotland. He is not only the public prosecutor; he is also the chief law officer or legal adviser of the Government in Scotland. Before the union of the English and Scottish Parliaments in 1707 he was an important member of the Scottish Government, and since the Union he has always been a member of the British Government, almost invariably with a seat in the House of Commons. It is essential that the conduct of so important an official as the public prosecutor should be subject to the criticism of Parliament, and it is manifestly advantageous that the public prosecutor should himself be in Parliament and able to answer in person any attack made upon him there. The vital importance of the responsibility of the Lord Advocate to Parliament for his official conduct is obvious, for there is now no other effective check upon his powers. But it is equally important, if the administration of justice is not to be corrupted by political and party considerations, that the public prosecutor should exercise his powers judicially and that he should not be interfered with in his duties by the executive government for political reasons", and the learned author goes on to discuss matters in that general context.

My lord, I note the passage where the view is expressed that the conduct of so important an official should be subject to the criticism of Parliament and to the manifest advantage of the accountability of the Minister to Parliament: so in that context this is in a sense a Parliamentary Tribunal.

Sir, there is therefore an identifiable tension or potential conflict between on the one hand the public prosecutor's independent, impartial role and on the other hand the accountability of the law officer to Parliament.

Reference was made by my learned friend yesterday/

yesterday to the statement to the House of Commons by the then Prime Minister Harold McMillan in relation to the WATERS case; and it is plain in my submission from what was said there that the emphasis is upon the need to avoid pressure or influence on the independent decisions of the public prosecutor.

In my submission it is plainly right that the Courts and Parliament and indeed everyone else should be careful not to interfere with or influence the independent and impartial exercise of the public prosecutor's quasi-judicial discretion as to whether or not to institute a prosecution or to abandon a prosecution once commenced. Most if not all of what might be regarded as restrictive comments made in either Court proceedings by judges or in Parliament arise in this particular context, and in my submission should be so understood.

However, my lord, it is one thing to leave it to the Lord Advocate or to the Procurator-Fiscal to decide whether or not a prosecution should take place in particular circumstances: it is however another matter altogether whether in appropriate circumstances and in the public interest it is proper to examine decisions already taken. Thus, to elaborate for a moment, it does not follow in my submission from the Lord Advocate's role as an independent public prosecutor that he has an absolute veto on all scrutiny or comment on the acts or omissions of public prosecutors in Scotland. Indeed, it may be considered that the essence of Parliamentary accountability is not only that full explanations can be required but also that conclusions can be drawn and lessons learned for the future.

As I understood it, underlying the statement read out yesterday is a submission that there exists a rule of law which inhibits your lordship and others from scrutinising the merits of decisions taken. As I will elaborate it in a moment, with your lordship's permission, it is in my submission notable that the case law referring to for example, the scope for a private prosecution does not provide support for any such absolute rule of law.

The case law does not indicate that the Court/

Court can never call upon the Lord Advocate to explain his reasons, nor in my submission does it indicate that the Court should never scrutinise the merits of decisions made either by or on behalf of the Lord Advocate or by members of the Procurator-Fiscal's Service. What however is quite clear is that the Court will not act with a view to influencing the public prosecutor's conduct, but rather in limited circumstances it will permit a private prosecution in the absence of the Lord Advocate's concurrence. In other words, my lord, the Courts along with other organs of our constitution are jealous to guard the independence of the public prosecutor, and it is no part of what I have to say that that independence should be threatened by outside influence or interference.

However, as I indicated at the outset, this Inquiry is in the context of a Tribunal constituted by resolution of both Houses of Parliament under the 1921 Act, set up to examine as a matter of urgent and public importance the issues arising from the Dunblane tragedy.

LORD CULLEN: That is a separate consideration from what you say are the limitations of the rule. In other words, what I think you are saying is that there is a limit to what the Court would feel itself inhibited from doing, but you are also I think referring to the origins of this particular Inquiry?

MR. CAMPBELL: Indeed.

LORD CULLEN: Now, is that not a separate argument?

MR. CAMPBELL: I am not sure it is a separate argument.

LORD CULLEN: If you can satisfy me that the rule had limits of the sort you are indicating would it matter whether it was set up in the way it has been set up or not? The fact that it is set up in this way might provide you with an additional argument, even if the first argument is not valid; I don't know. I want to know where you are seeking to go.

MR. CAMPBELL: The relevance as I understand/understand it of the origin of this Inquiry is that it is rooted in Parliament, in that there has been a decision of both Houses of Parliament that this Tribunal should carry out the investigation and report back to Parliament: so there is a clear link in my submission between what is happening here and accountability of the public prosecutor to Parliament to answer for the conduct of the public prosecution system. Whether that is a separate or additional point I confess I am uncertain about.

What I am anxious to establish, my lord, or to submit is that there is nothing in the Minister's Parliamentary accountability which infringes his undoubted privilege to independent and impartial decision-making.

LORD CULLEN: And of course, as you stated earlier, quite correctly, there is a tension there.

MR. CAMPBELL: Yes.

LORD CULLEN: And that tension might emerge if the Lord Advocate was taken to task before Parliament in regard to what decisions he made. I am not sure how that would be resolved before the House of Parliament, or even the House of Lords. That is where the two points come into collision with each other.

MR. CAMPBELL: It would be resolved in this way, as I understand it: that if what Parliament is seeking to do in criticising or questioning the Lord Advocate's decision was to interfere or influence his independent, impartial decision-making process then that would be improper conduct by Parliament or by any other body.

LORD CULLEN: I see that. That rather suggests, therefore, that we come back to the first point, which is that the position of the Courts may essentially be the same as the position of Parliament ought to be.

MR. CAMPBELL: Yes.

LORD CULLEN: I wondered whether there was any magic in the fact this happened to be set up consequent on a decision of Parliament.

MR./

MR. CAMPBELL: No. I do not see any magic. I can now understand my lord's point.

My lord, on that same face, this Tribunal's purpose is not to influence a public prosecutor's decision or decisions in this or any other cases, but rather to assist Parliament in considering the full circumstances of what has happened, and more importantly than that, to assist Parliament in learning any necessary lessons and making any necessary reformation, all in the public interest.

One can note the obvious fact that there will never now be a prosecution of Thomas Hamilton.

Sir, before turning to the cases, dealing for a moment with the statement which was read out yesterday, if I may, certain reasons are given in the statement, particularly at pages three and four, for the position which has been adopted. If I may deal with one or two of those at this stage.

At the foot of page three it is said "Although the considerations underlying the principle against subjecting to critical scrutiny prosecution decisions apply most obviously to the interests of potential accused persons, they also affect victims and witnesses". I take it that emphasis is placed there on victims and witnesses for the reason that there can be no prejudice to the interests of the potential accused person, who is now deceased.

Sir, in my submission it is not easy to see how in the present circumstances the interests of victims and witnesses arises as a practical problem or issue, and no explanation has been provided as to why this is a difficulty.

LORD CULLEN: That illustrates a point that is of some concern to me, and it is this. We are discussing on the one hand this scopeable role and what its limits are, but we are also at some point concerned with the ability of freedom of the Lord Advocate to waive his insistence on some sort of privilege that he has. If you touch on a point that there is no indication of how the interests of potential victims or witnesses are involved, we may be in an area where we are not talking about the role,/ role, we are talking about whether or not it may be waived.

It is one thing to say -- I can follow your submissions as far as the rule is concerned, but that is a different thing from saying I should embark on some sort of examination of the Lord Advocate's discretion, over which I have no control. Do you understand what I mean? If the rule applies to a certain matter, the waiving of it is for him and not for me; is that right?

MR. CAMPBELL: If the rule applies.

LORD CULLEN: So we come back to the scope of the rule.

MR. CAMPBELL: Yes, I accept that. There may be circumstances -- I will come on to this later -- where even if the rule does apply the Lord Advocate may nonetheless have discretion whether or not to waive it, and your lordship may or may not invite the Lord Advocate to reconsider his position.

LORD/

12.00 p.m.

LORD CULLEN: But of course, that will be as far as it goes.

MR. CAMPBELL: That could be as far as it goes. On the other hand, if your lordship is with me on the limitations of the rule, it does not necessarily follow that your lordship would then ignore the Lord Advocate's position, because if one assumes that "Your lordship has freedom if he so wishes to listen to submissions as to the soundness or otherwise of decisions, and if indeed your lordship has freedom in his report to pass comment upon those decisions rather than simply record the facts of what they were, your lordship may nonetheless in the exercise of his discretion as the master of these proceedings, decide not to do so for whatever reason, and therefore considerations such as this may again be relevant.

It is no part of my submission that your lordship is bound to act contrary to the position which has been taken by the Lord Advocate because your lordship will always be in charge of the procedure in this Inquiry in the same way as your lordship would be on other perhaps less controversial matters, so on the assumption that this issue may arise in either or both of those contexts, as well as the absence of any explanation for the relevance and the reference to victims and witnesses, in any event in my submission, any consideration of the interests of victims and witnesses would at first sight in any event appear to provide a justification for providing no information upon the matter at all rather than an embargo upon scrutiny of the information once all the other details in relation to information etc. has been produced.

Secondly, my lord, at the top of Page 4, perhaps a slightly different point is taken -- "If decisions on criminal cases are not taken privately, without the pressure of public scrutiny and on the basis of an independent assessment of the quality of evidence and credibility of witnesses, prosecutors could be inhibited from taking difficult decisions, which they must take in the exercise of an independent discretion". It is not difficult to see the potential force in that remark, but it is a very/very extreme opposition. It would mean that there could never be any scrutiny of decisions taken by public prosecutors, and the logical result there would be that the Lord Advocate is accountable to no one, so it may be that there is a matter of balance to be exercised, assuming of course that the matter is not tramelled by a binding rule of law, and if it is helpful in this context, it may be thought that the public interest in the independence and impartiality of the public prosecutor in this context is satisfied both by what I have said so far and the immunity from civil suit which is given to the Lord Advocate and all acting in his name. That would include Crown Counsel and Procurators Fiscal in a solemn procedure. I needn't go to it, but the relevant authority on that is the case of Hester v. McDonald 1961 Session Cases at 370, decision of the first Division, and so far as the decision of Procurators Fiscal raising proceedings in their own name in the Sheriff Court in Summary Procedure, this particular matter is governed by Section 456 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975, and I can provide my lord in due course with a copy of the relevant Section in Renton and Brown dealing with that, but in summary, the Section provides that "No judge, clerk of court or prosecutor in the public interest shall be found liable by any court in damages for or in respect of any proceedings taken, act done, or judgment, decree or sentence pronounced under this Part of this Act", unless certain criteria are satisfied, firstly, there has been imprisonment, that the judgment or whatever has been quashed, and most important in this context, that "the person suing shall specifically aver and prove that such proceeding, act, judgment, decree or sentence was taken, done or pronounced maliciously and without probable cause". I note the reference there to the probable cause, so that is a distinction between the immunity given to the Lord Advocate and those acting in his name on the one hand, an absolute uninhibited immunity, and on the other hand a more limited, but nonetheless extensive immunity given to judges and Procurators Fiscal acting in their own name rather than in the name of the Lord Advocate, and one notes that the Statutory Provision expressly recognises that in any civil suit, one issue which may be ventilated is whether or not a decision was taken with or without probable cause, which one might imagine necessarily involves consideration of similar issues to those which we have/have been discussing in this Inquiry in this context.

Sir, it does occur to me that although time has not permitted a concluded view on the matter, that in this whole area, there may be relevant differences between the Lord Advocate on the one hand and the Procurators Fiscal Service, which is now, as I understand it, seen as a branch of the Civil Service, but I don't make any specific submission based upon any such distinction.

LORD CULLEN: Are you drawing a distinction here between summary and solemn procedure?

MR. CAMPBELL: There is a clear distinction drawn in the context of immunity from civil suit.

LORD CULLEN: Quite so, but as far as the present problem is concerned, are you drawing a distinction?

MR. CAMPBELL: No, my lord. More generally, sir, in the context of the Lord Advocate's statement, in my submission it is not easy to understand the rationale or purpose of providing a full explanation, or a full account perhaps more accurately, a full account of what happened, giving full disclosure of all relevant documentation, and indeed evidence, albeit to a limited extent, from the Fiscals themselves, as to the facts of what happened, but then to deny the Tribunal and Parliament the opportunity to consider the merits of what was done.

Reference is made to Mr. Vannet's review, but as the Tribunal will have seen if it has looked at that, the document is strictly speaking not a review as such. It is the nature of an account or a summarised compilation of what I might term Precognitions, and again just generally speaking, it is not easy to understand why Mr. Vannet was asked to do this if the intention was not to provide a review in a proper sense of the conduct of the Fiscals involved.

Sir, I am about to turn to the cases, but before I do so, for the avoidance of doubt, I should/should make it clear that while in my submission serious questions do arise as to the soundness of the decisions taken by the various Fiscals involved, I am not in a position to assert that there is not or can be no justification for the decisions which were taken, or no good justification for the decisions which were taken, and it may be thought unfortunate that the Crown should lead evidence which raises these serious questions, but then refuse to explain them or to permit these decisions to be the subject of comment or scrutiny. This situation creates a risk that persons will draw quite reasonable and natural conclusions from the evidence presented without the benefit of a satisfactory explanation, always assuming that such a satisfactory explanation does in fact exist, so we seem to be in the realms of a half-way house which on the one hand might be regarded from one point of view as the best of all worlds for the Crown, but on the other hand may in fact be the worst of all worlds for everybody involved, so turning to a consideration of the rules of law as it has been presented by and on behalf of the Crown, my lord has my submission that the law, putting it at its lowest, as to the scope for comment by this Tribunal on the extent of the actions and the omissions of the Procurator Fiscal Service is not as clear-cut as my learned friend might suggest.

LORD CULLEN: Your position is that the rule applies only to those cases there there is a risk of a decision yet to be taken being influenced by some improper consideration.

MR. CAMPBELL: Or perhaps more generally, that on-going proceedings might be influenced.

LORD CULLEN: And I suppose one might include other cases where the decision had been taken, but it wasn't too late to extract from that, in other words no commitment had been given which would mean that the matter was completely foreclosed.

MR. CAMPBELL: Indeed; whereas in my submission, my lord, any submission by Parties at this Inquiry, and more importantly, any comments by the Tribunal in its report to Parliament as to the conduct of the Procurators Fiscal involved, would not/not amount to a challenge upon the independence of the Lord Advocate or others acting as public prosecutors in Scotland. Such would not amount to an attempt to bring about a prosecution which the public prosecutor had decided should not take place. Such would not amount to an attempt to over-turn or reverse a decision already taken. In summary, it would not prejudice the impartial and exclusive jurisdiction of the Lord Advocate or other public prosecutor in this or in other cases. Similarly, it would not be an invitation to Parliament to influence any decisions in this particular case or to put pressure upon the future conduct of the public prosecution system in Scotland.

My lord, the first case that I want to refer to is the case of J & P Coats Ltd. v. David Brown, a decision of the full bench of the High Court, reported at 1909 Justiciary Cases at Page 29.

My/

12.15 p.m.

My lord will see from the rubric that the case involves circumstances in which a full Bench, with Lord McLaren dissenting, to authorised a private party to institute prosecution by way of Criminal Letters in the High Court of Justiciary without the concurrence of the Lord Advocate which had been refused. It is perhaps unnecessary to deal with the details of the specific case which involved an alleged fraud.

Turning to the opinion of the Lord Justice Clerk, Lord MacDonald, at page 33 he says "The prosecution of crime in Scotland has for so long a period been practically in the hands of the King's Advocate, and of subordinate public prosecutors acting under his control, and this procedure has been attended with such satisfactory results to the administration of the criminal law, that private prosecutions for serious crime is practically unknown, the public being well satisfied that as a general rule the interests of justice are well guarded by the Lord Advocate's Department. The question now arises for the first time for very many years whether a private prosecution shall be allowed to proceed, seeing that the Lord Advocate declines to take up the case or to give his concurrence to a prosecution at the instance of the party who alleges that a criminal wrong has been done to his injury.

A citizen desiring to institute a prosecution at common law for crime requires by law to be in the position - (1) that he as applied to the Lord Advocate to obtain his concurrence to the prosecution and (2) that the crime alleged be a wrong towards himself. By these rules the accused citizen is safeguarded from malicious or vindictive prosecution by private individuals, the Lord Advocate, or those who represent the public interests under him in the inferior Courts, being responsible for the proper exercise of their office in any question relating to the granting of concurrence to a private prosecutor's action.

But there is not vested in the public prosecutor an absolute right of veto. It is the right of the citizen to complain to the High Court of Justiciary against a refusal by the public prosecutor to grant his concurrence to a private prosecutor where he has declined to take up the prosecution on behalf of the Crown. The Lord Advocate/Advocate frankly conceded this at discussion. He must, if called on, shew cause for his declination, and the Court can consider the question whether the withholding of the concurrence in the circumstances may involve a wrong to the citizen complaining, and a failure of public justice. For the citizen desiring to prosecute is seeking to invoke the law not for reparation to himself, but ad vindictam publicam, and this is clearly expressed in the Criminal Letters granted to him. If he desires personal reparation he must seek that in a Civil Court. It is only for the purpose of preventing the right to prosecute being used for vindictive or malicious ends that he must ask for the Lord Advocate's concurrence.

It is in that state of the law that in the present case the complainer presents to this court a complaint and form of charge by Criminal Letters, and asks that a private prosecution shall be sanctioned by the court, either without the concurrence of the Lord Advocate, or by the Court ordaining the Lord Advocate to grant his concurrence. At the debate the Lord Advocate said that if in the end either of these courses commended itself to the court, he would act as the court might order.

It seems to me not to be a question of serious importance which of these courses is to be adopted, if the ultimate decision of this case should be that a prosecution is to be allowed. In either case the prosecution would proceed in exactly the same manner".

His lordship goes on to deal with this question of procedure and the result is that if the court is so minded it would not require the Lord Advocate to concur contrary to his will. It would rather simply sanction a private prosecution.

At the foot of page 34, "Upon the question whether, on the papers and the arguments which are before the court, the complainers should be allowed to obtain the Criminal Letters they asked for, I have come to be decidedly of opinion that the case is one in which the Court ought to allow the case to proceed."

His lordship then goes on to deal with specific/specific circumstances of the case.

"I can have no doubt that the charge so made is a relevant charge" and then there is a discussion about the case of Alexander Bannatyne about fraud and then in the middle of page 35, "No doubt it may be said that there may be many cases in which a thing is done where the criminality would be small and perhaps such that the public prosecutor might in his discretion not think it necessary that the act done should be followed by a criminal prosecution. Further, it might be said that explanations might be given which would give a complexion to the case that might justify holding back from public prosecution. But in this case I do not think that there is ground for giving weight to such considerations".

His lordship goes on to explain why he comes to that view but it is plain, in my submission, that the Court is embarking upon a consideration of the merits of the case or at least the merits of whether or not there should be a prosecution.

At the foot of the page, "The Lord Advocate told the court that if the complainers would proceed to endeavour to obtain reparation by a civil action, he would consider the proceedings in such a case, and if he saw ground for a criminal prosecution in them, would reconsider his determination. I confess I was not able to follow the line of thought indicated by such statements".

His lordship explains why he is unimpressed by that proposal. "It is quite contrary to the order of procedure in criminal law administration that the whole circumstances of a case should first be thrashed out in a Civil Court, with possibly a succession of proceedings of review, ending, it may be, in the House of Lords after a litigation extending over years, and that then the question of criminal prosecution should be finally determined".

My lord, the judgment of the Lord Justice Clerk was that subject to the concurrence, my lord can see at page 39, Lord Kinnear, Lord Low and Lord Pearson, the only dissenting judgment is that of Lord McLaren.

I/

I dwell on this case just for a moment because it is a most authoritative decision in this area of the law, being a decision of the full Bench and it may be interesting to note the basis upon which Lord McLaren dissented. It was not on a matter of principle but was rather on the particular facts of the case.

At the foot of page 37, "No case was cited by the Complainers' counsel, and I know of no case, in which the Court has granted the prayer of a Bill for Criminal Letters without the concurrence of His Majesty's Advocate. But the absence of direct authority does not in any way militate against the power of the court, which is undoubted. It only proves that this is an extraordinary remedy for an extraordinary and unprecedented occurrence, viz the undue and arbitrary exercise by an Officer of the Crown of a power entrusted to him for public purposes."

LORD CULLEN: Is that the test?

MR. CAMPBELL: I would not accept that is the test, my lord, no.

LORD CULLEN: He does rather come out with it as if it is the test.

MR. CAMPBELL: Yes, he does. At the top of page 38, "That I may not be supposed to suggest a doubt as to the powers of the court, I note that the power has been very distinctly recognised in two modern cases, in one of which I was present as a Judge, but in neither case was the party complainer successful in challenging the Lord Advocate's decision to refuse his concurrence to the desired prosecution.

I will make one other general observation. Hume is a very high authority, but personally I should be disposed to go further than the dictum of Hume. If the Lord Advocate should state as his reason for not giving his concurrence to a Bill that the statements contained in the Bill did not in his judgment disclose a crime according to the law of Scotland, and if we were of opinion that the Bill did disclose a prima facie relevant charge of crime, I think we might sustain the Bill, leaving the relevancy of the charge to be further considered at the/

the trial, I say this, because I think that in the case of a pure question of law the Supreme Court of Criminal Jurisdiction may act on its own judgment, and is not bound by the Lord Advocate's opinion. In such a case I do not doubt that the Lord Advocate would give his concurrence, if desired by the court". And that is a theme which emerges again in some of the later cases, the potential distinction between on the one hand the issue of law pure and simple and on the other hand the question of whether or not the courts will review or repeat an examination of the evidence or witnesses carried out by the public prosecutor and I will elaborate, if I may, upon my submission on the distinction when I come to the relevant cases.

Then the dissenting judgment. At the foot of page 38, "In such circumstances I am confronted with the question, how am I to form an independent opinion on the fact as to whether there are or are not grounds for a criminal prosecution? It is one thing to say that we may give redress against an arbitrary refusal of the Lord Advocate's concurrence or a refusal on legal grounds which are disclosed to us; and it is quite a different proposition that we are to review the Lord Advocate's decision that the facts do not warrant a prosecution. If it were intended by the Constitution of the country that this court should undertake such a review, we should either have the power of calling for the Crown precognition, or of employing an agent to institute an independent enquiry and to report to us. Nothing of the kind has ever been done, and your lordships are not proposing to make such an enquiry.

It was argued for the complainers that the charge of fraud depended on documentary evidence, which he says discloses a prima facie case.

In my opinion the documents prove nothing." And that is essentially where his lordship dissented. "I do not doubt that the Defender made use of a colliery certificate that was untrue in fact, but we have only the complainers' statement in the Bill for the all-important point that the document was uttered knowing it to be false, and with intent to defraud. Now, I may be altogether wrong, but I must frankly say that on the question whether there is a prima facie case for prosecution,/" prosecution, I prefer the dispassionate meaning of the Lord Advocate who has studied the case, to the unsupported statements of Messrs. Coats, who no doubt honestly believed that they have been defrauded, but who are not the best judges in their own case."

Towards the very end of his opinion, his lordship says "I may add with utmost deference to the opinions of other members of the court, that personally I should deprecate very strongly the notion that this Court is to be a Court of review of the work of the Lord Advocate's Department, a task for which, by its constitution and means of informing itself, the Court is alike unfitted; and my opinion is that the Bill should be refused."

Now, if my lord will allow me, the final judgment in the case is the opinion of the then Lord Justice General, Lord Dunedin.

It is plain that this was a very strong Court and your lordship may gain some assistance from this relatively short opinion. "Your lordships have already decided this case by a majority, and as, according to the Constitution of this Court, I have no deliberative vote, no opinion of mine can have an operative effect upon the fate of the case. But it is in accordance with precedent that I should state my opinion, and I therefore do state my opinion that I concur with the result at which the majority of your lordships have arrived.

The gravamen of the case seems to me entirely to turn upon this use of the certificate. Lord McLaren has said, quoting from the speech of the Lord Advocate, that the line was a difficult and narrow one which separated the province of civil and criminal responsibility, and that he had come to the conclusion that this case was one where criminal responsibility was not involved. Seeing that there can be no doubt whatsoever as to the relevancy of the statements as to there being a crime -- for I think it would be a very unfortunate thing if it should go out in a commercial country that there was any doubt whatsoever entertained here that the issuing of a certificate known to be false, to be used for the purpose of getting a payment which otherwise would not have been got, was anything less than a crime -- seeing that is so, I must say that I think what the Lord Advocate said then was not altogether/altogether consistent with what he said immediately or soon afterwards, namely that if this case was tried civilly he would then reconsider the position. But the chief reason which has influenced my brother Lord McLaren in his dissent from the majority of your lordships has been his extreme repugnance of the idea that this Court should sit as a Court of review of the discretion of the Lord Advocate. I do not think there is any difference of opinion upon this matter. It is no light matter to interfere with the discretion of the Lord Advocate, and I can conceive very few cases in which we would so interfere.

But we are bound, nonetheless, to direct our minds to the particular case that has been brought before us, and I agree with the Lord Justice Clerk in thinking that the actual written documents that are here brought before us go very far to establish the case. Of course I do not wish to say too much on that matter, because I am not going to prejudice the defence which may be finally brought forward. But when my brother Lord McLaren went on to say that he thought that the whole matter would turn upon whether it was shewn that the party charged here really knew or did not know that this certificate was false, I am compelled to observe, first of all, that the complainer says so most distinctly, and that, if the Lord Advocate in the exercise of his discretion chooses to maintain a more than usual reticence, I am afraid he must take the consequence of that reticence. It seems to me nothing would have been easier than for the Lord Advocate to have said -- if he could say it -- that upon a consideration of the whole circumstance, he had come to the conclusion that the party charged here was under the belief that the certificate was true. If the Lord Advocate had said he was satisfied of that, or even if he had gone so far as this, that he had not brought before him any evidence which would lead to the conclusion that the party charged knew that the certificate was false, I imagine -- at least speaking for myself -- that I would not have interfered with the discretion of the Lord Advocate. The Lord Advocate says none of those things, and he leaves us -- and that is a matter for him to judge -- completely in the dark as to what the form of defence is to be. Under these circumstances the disagreeable necessity -- as I think I must call it -- is laid upon us of affirming that/that this is a case where a subject has seemingly been wronged and no real reason has been laid before us why a prosecution should not be allowed".

So, my lord, one sees a line of approach there which first of all recognises the competence or the scope of the court to review a decision by the Lord Advocate or if review is perhaps not the correct word, at least to consider the merits of what happened but also a recognition that their Court will be reluctant to alter or to do anything which interferes with..... again, that is not the right word, which produces a different result than the decision of the Lord Advocate but there is no absolute veto on the sanctity of the Lord Advocate's decision-making process which elevates it above the jurisdiction of the court.

LORD CULLEN: How does that assist us in looking at the present problem?

MR. CAMPBELL: Well, it assists us, my lord, in this way; in that as I understood at least the main basis for the Lord Advocate's position, it is by reference to a rule of law propounded it is said in the case of McBain v. Crichton which I am coming to next and the fact that the court cannot review the merits or soundness of the Lord Advocate's discretionary decisions and as I understand it it is submitted that by parity of reason this Tribunal cannot do likewise.

LORD CULLEN: But in the case we have just been looking at what you have got is the court looking at certain material and expressing a view in regard to that material and as against that the knowledge that the Lord Advocate has not elected to prosecute and as the Lord Justice General said, it was not a light matter to interfere in the sense of insisting that there should be a prosecution despite the Lord Advocate's decision but this case does not show us the feelings of the court, so to speak, looking behind the door to find out in detail what was the process of reasoning or even indeed in demanding to know what the process of reasoning was that led to the actual result. Do you see what I mean? It is exercising its own judgment, knowing of course that it won't lightly interfere with the decision reached but I am looking to see whether the court looked as it were and demanded an explanation to/to know what the inner thinking was and then looked at that.

MR. CAMPBELL: Well, I take my lord's observation. What the court seems to be saying is that it is a matter for the Lord Advocate as to how much information he is prepared to disclose and the Lord Advocate may take the risk if he feels fit to fully explain what has happened but that he may take the consequences.

LORD/

12.35 p.m.

LORD CULLEN: It might lead to the fact the Court might reach a decision it might not otherwise have done.

MR. CAMPBELL: Absolutely. On the other hand, I do not understand the Court to be saying that the mere provision of an explanation will itself necessarily prevent the Court coming to a different view.

In a broad sense, we may be in a similar situation in the present case, where the Lord Advocate has chosen to present a considerable body of evidence as to what happened, and factual evidence as to the decisions which were taken, but is apparently not proposing to explain or justify those decisions. So we might be in a similar situation here, where the Lord Advocate takes the consequence of that policy. That is a possibility, depending on the view of the Tribunal.

LORD CULLEN: You might be asking this Tribunal not to enquire into what the Procurator-Fiscal thought about to reach his own judgement as to whether or not Mr. Hamilton should have been prosecuted, assuming of course I impose on myself the very high test THE Court applied, that it was a quasi situation. Does that advance your argument about wanting to know exactly what went on in the minds of the Procurators-Fiscal?

MR. CAMPBELL: I for my part am not proposing to make any application, but if the Crown choose not to lead the Procurators-Fiscal I invite the Court to call them to give evidence.

LORD CULLEN: What do you want to achieve?

MR. CAMPBELL: My principal concern -- although I am bound to say it is a matter for the Crown whether or to lead the Fiscals; I am essentially neutral on that. My principal concern is not so much that but that there should be no inhibition in my submissions to the Tribunal, and the Tribunal should not be inhibited in its report to Parliament from commenting on the evidence it has heard.

LORD/

LORD CULLEN: So you want to be free to make submissions, and likewise you want me to be free to comment on the decisions reached in the light of the evidence, whatever it might be, we have heard?

MR. CAMPBELL: That is correct. I am bound to say -- although it is not a matter for me -- that it is a pity I feel that if the Fiscals do have good justification or explanations that the Tribunal should not hear it.

LORD CULLEN: I simply want to know whether you are appealing past me to the Lord Advocate or whether you are asking me to make any ruling on the matter. As I understand it, what your position is is you are saying you want freedom to submit on the basis of the evidence already adduced?

MR. CAMPBELL: That is the essence of my position. There may be a distinction between on the one hand freedom to make submissions on the evidence and on the other hand the idea of putting a Fiscal in the witness box and cross-examining him on his line of thinking.

LORD CULLEN: Take this case we are looking at as an example. There does not seem to have been any question of the Court having the right to know or thinking they had the right to know what went on in the inner councils of the Crown Office or the Procurator-Fiscal's Office. There is no evidence on that. On the other hand, it felt free in the context of that particular case to express the view that there should be a private prosecution, which involves passing some form of judgement on the information available to the Court. It is that aspect of the case you are interested in?

MR. CAMPBELL: Indeed. Turning to the case of McBAIN V. CRICHTON 1961 JC25, my lord will see from the rubric that this was a case involving the DH Lawrence's book "Lady Chatterly's Lover" and an attempt was made by a private individual to obtain the sanction of the Court for a private prosecution, based upon the alleged indecency and obscenity of that book. From the rubric my lord will see it was held that it was not the function of the Court to view the Lord Advocate's exercise of his discretion in refusing to concur in a private prosecution, / prosecution, nor to examine the reasons which had affected that exercise; and that the only wrong alleged by the complainer was of a general and public nature, and that he had failed to show that peculiar and special personal interest in the alleged wrong which was necessary to sustain a private prosecution. That is the case which is particularly founded upon by the Lord Advocate in his statement to the Tribunal.

If one turns to the judgement of the Lord Justice General, Lord Clyde, at page 28, "This Bill for criminal letters has been presented to the High Court of Justiciary by Mr. A.G. McBain, chartered accountant, Glasgow, asking for criminal letters to enable him to initiate a prosecution against a certain bookseller in Glasgow for exposing for sale and selling in his place of business a book called Lady Chatterly's Lover, by D.H. Lawrence, which he alleges is lewd, impure, gross and obscene, and contains passages contrived and intended to corrupt the morals of the lieges, and particularly of the youth of both sexes.

"Since the Lord Advocate has refused his concurrence to the proposed prosecution, this Court ordered intimation of the Bill to be made to the Lord Advocate, as is the custom, and appointed a day for the Hearing of the Bill. The Lord Advocate has appeared in person at this Hearing and has informed the Court that he has fully investigated the matter more than once and, in the exercise of that wide discretion which is invested in the Lord Advocate, he has come to the conclusion that a prosecution would not be justified in connection with this matter. He has therefore decided not to prosecute at his own instance and not to give his concurrence to the private prosecution which the present complainer desires to raise.

"The Lord Advocate is quite entitled to take up this position. In this country he is the recognised prosecutor in the public interest. It is for him, in the exercise of his responsible office, to decide whether he will prosecute in the public interest and at the public expense, and under our constitutional practice this decision is a matter for him, and for him alone. No one can compel him to give his reasons, nor order him to concur in a private prosecution. The basic principle of our system of criminal administration in Scotland is to submit/submit the question of whether there is to be a public prosecution to the impartial and skilled investigation of the Lord Advocate and his Department, and the decision whether or not to prosecute is exclusively within his discretion. This system has operated in Scotland for centuries, and -- see Alison on Criminal Law, Volume ii page 88 -- the result has completely proved the justice of these principles, for such has become the public confidence in the decision of the Lord Advocate and his Deputes on the grounds of prosecution, that private prosecutions have almost gone into disuse. It is utterly inconsistent with such a system that the Courts should examine, as it was suggested it would be proper or competent for us to do, the reasons which have affected the Lord Advocate in deciding how to exercise his discretion, and it would be still more absurd for this Court to proceed to review their soundness. Any dicta indicating that such a course is open to any Court are, in my view, quite unsound".

Now, the decision of the Court is explained not so much in that passage but in what follows, based upon the lack of title of the complainer to raise the matter in the criminal Courts, it being a purely public matter. That decision relates to the argument presented by the Lord Advocate, which is to be found at page 27. I won't take up the Tribunal's time by reading through the decision of the Lord Justice General on that matter; but what it does mean is that the comments at the top of page 29, however they are to be interpreted or in what context they are to be placed, are obiter dicta rather than part of the ratio of the decision.

LORD CULLEN: But in any event, take the second passage that you referred to, the second passage it is founded upon. That seems to be directed to an internal examination of how the Lord Advocate reached his decision, or those acting on his behalf reached their decisions, and secondly it is concerned with the absurdity of a Court reviewing their soundness. Now, as you have pointed out, it is well established that the Court does not review, in the sense of being the next Court one goes to after the Lord Advocate has finished with the case, but there may be certain circumstances where the Court will step in.

MR./

MR. CAMPBELL: Yes.

LORD CULLEN: So there are certain circumstances where the Court will pronounce on the matter whether or not there should be a prosecution, without going into the internals of what went on in the Lord Advocate's Office or in his name.

MR. CAMPBELL: Indeed. In other words, this passage should be seen in the context of the reluctance of the Court to interfere with the impartiality and independence of the prosecution decision itself. It does not mean that there may be no comment upon the decision itself, as opposed to a review of, as my lord has put it, the internal workings.

LORD CULLEN: That brings me to a point of some concern to me, and I think I will know how you will answer it, and it is this. If we have comment from you and comment from me, which may reflect on the individuals who took the decisions, and if they are not giving evidence, at least not giving evidence in regard to the justification of the decision they have reached, could that be said to be illogical or unfair? What is your position?

MR. CAMPBELL: There could be many occasions where unfairness in that general sense can arise from particular decisions taken.

LORD CULLEN: You see the point concerning me, that we have if you like something happening for our purposes we will assume behind closed doors. You say we know enough about the decision and we know enough about the statement of the particular reasons you say to comment on that. Now, that is supposed to be a one-sided comment, because the person who is involved has not given evidence, or if he does give evidence won't be asked about that. What do you say to that?

MR. CAMPBELL: If there is unfairness, the unfairness may be more than outweighed by the public benefit which may be derived from the comment.

As my lord has observed, if I am right in indicating there is no absolute veto on these matters being explored, then the remedy for the unfairness/unfairness or potential unfairness lies in the hands of the Crown.

LORD CULLEN: This is rather an odd case, because as you have pointed out already, we have already received, heard evidence as to the stated reasons, and there appears to be no problem as far as the evidence relating to the stated reasons is concerned: that is made clear in the statements.

LORD CULLEN: Yes. So, my lord, any discretion which may on the face of it appear to arise from what is said by the Lord Justice General in McBAIN may disappear.

If this passage is considered in what I would submit is its proper context, as set out at the beginning of the passage, mainly that the Court will not interfere with the impartial and skilled investigation of the Lord Advocate and his Department in matters which are exclusively within his discretion, again one has an emphasis on "Don't interfere with the independent and impartial discretionary powers of the Lord Advocate". But it doesn't follow that there can never be any comment upon the outcome of that discretionary power.

I must say that the bald statement that the Lord Advocate can never be called upon to provide reasons for his decision is not supported by subsequent authority. It may not matter a great deal.

The only other member of the Court to express a view was Lord Guthrie: Lord Carmont simply concurred in the judgement of the Lord Justice Clerk. I don't think Lord Guthrie's judgement provides any direct support for what might be said to be a more extreme interpretation of the dicta of the Lord Justice General.

Sir, the next case is MEEHAN V. INGLES AND OTHERS 1975 JC page 9. The facts of this whole matter are somewhat difficult to summarise, and indeed obviously they are complicated, and it is perhaps not necessary for me to go into them. The case however involved an attempt by a complainer to obtain the exercise of the Court's discretion to grant a Bill of criminal letters where the Lord Advocate/Advocate had refused to provide the necessary concurrence.

Perhaps just to summarise the position, my lord, I could go through the rubric. "One, serving a term of life imprisonment in respect of his conviction upon a charge of murder in October, 1969, presented on his own behalf two identical Bills for criminal letters, by which each in turn, he sought the Court's authority to raise a private prosecution against three police officers, alleged by him to have committed perjury as Crown witnesses at his trial, and in relation thereto to have conspired to pervert the course of justice. The Lord Advocate had refused to prosecute the officers for the offences alleged, and had further refused to concur in a private prosecution directed to that same end. On the first Bill the complainer contended (1) that he as a private individual had a right to initiate a criminal prosecution, since the Lord Advocate had not the exclusive right to do so; (2) that he could qualify an interest by showing that he had suffered injury of a substantial, particular, special and peculiarly personal nature beyond all others, as a result of the alleged criminal acts of the three police officer respondents; and (3) that ex facie of the Bill he has made out a prima facie case of the commission of a crime or crimes by the said respondents. On the second Bill the complainer further contended, having been unsuccessful in respect of his contentions under the first Bill, that the Court had proceeded upon the view, and wrongly, that the Lord Advocate was not obliged to give the Court his reasons for refusing to concur in the desired private prosecution.

"Held (1) that only in very special circumstances would the Court sanction a private prosecution; that the crimes which it was sought so to prosecute, viz. perjury and perverting the course of justice, were crimes pre-eminently suited to impartial rather than to ex-parte investigation and to such upon all the available evidence rather than upon what might be the choice of an interested party; and that plainly the very special circumstances before desiderated had not been made out; (2) that while it was undoubtedly the law that where the Court is considering a Bill for criminal letters the Lord Advocate is expected to state his reasons/reasons for not concurring therein, the Lord Advocate, through his Depute, had in fact stated very fully to the Court his reasons for refusing to concur in the prosecution sought; and that the Bills must be refused".

My lord, I do not think it is necessary to go through the detail of their lordship's judgements on the matter. Curiously, exactly the same Bill, for reasons that were stated, came up a second time in the Court of Appeal with the Lord Justice General in the chair, exactly the same Bill, for reasons that were explained by the Lord Justice General at pages 13 and 14. It may be of help briefly to look at the Lord Justice General Lord Emslie's opinion on this matter.

LORD CULLEN: We better do that after lunch. We will adjourn until ten minutes to two.

After an adjournment for lunch.

LORD/

1.50 p.m.

LORD CULLEN: Yes, Mr. Campbell. When you are ready?

MR. CAMPBELL: Thank you, sir. Over lunch I was reminded that before lunch I referred you, sir, to repealed legislation in the form of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975 rather than the modern version. I dare say I could attempt to justify that on the basis that was the provision in force at the time.

LORD CULLEN: Is it to the same effect today?

MR. CAMPBELL: I am assuming so, sir, but I will certainly check that by tomorrow but I would anticipate that that provision, Section 456, which I think did mention predecessors will have been repeated in the new Act but I will certainly check it. I would be very surprised if there was any material change.

Sir, I was referring to Meehan v. Inglis in 1975 JC Cases. The only passage that I would be dwelling upon is in the opinion of the Court delivered by the Lord Justice General, Lord Emslie, at Page 14, halfway down the page. "In our opinion Mr. Meehan's proposition is without substance. It is undoubtedly the law that where the Court is considering a Bill for Criminal Letters, the Lord Advocate is expected to state his reasons for refusing to give his concurrence. One corollary is that a private party will not be permitted to proceed unless some very special cause is shown for interference by the Court, where the Lord Advocate has refused his concurrence and has stated his reasons for that refusal. Another corollary is that where the Lord Advocate offers no reasons to the Court it may be presumed that he has none. Contrary to Mr. Meehan's assertion, however, the Court on 11th October 1974 laboured under no error on this matter and, indeed, as the opinion itself disclosed the Court proceeded to judgment only after the Lord Advocate by his Depute had stated very fully to the Court his reasons for refusing to concur in the prosecution sought by Mr. Meehan. Further the dictum of the Lord Justice General (Clyde) in McBain is not to the effect contended for by/by Mr. Meehan. Lord Clyde did not say that the Lord Advocate was not obliged to give his reasons for refusing to concur in a private prosecution. What he said was that it is utterly inconsistent with our system which is essentially one of prosecution in the public interest that 'the quotes should examine.....the reasons which have affected the Lord Advocate in deciding how to exercise his discretion and it would be still more absurd for this Court to review their soundness.' we see no reason to differ from that expression of opinion in so far as it is directed to cases where the Lord Advocate's reasons for refusing concurrence are derived from an exercise of his impartial judgment after exhaustive investigation of all sources of evidence. The position would, of course, be otherwise if the reasons turned upon a question of law or relevancy or, as in J. & P. Coats Ltd., upon the construction of documents".

Sir, in my submission that passage has to be read in the context of the case in which it is stated, namely an expression of the approach when considering whether or not to scrutinise the soundness of an impartial exhaustive investigation of all sources of evidence in the context of in effect bringing in a positive result in the nature of a fresh prosecution.

I can derive some comfort from the qualifications upon it which are stated at the foot of the page but, in any event, in my submission it should not be read beyond its context as for example whether the scope or the potential for improper influence or interference with an impartial investigation is past, it doesn't prevent for example this Tribunal or Parliament looking to the past and seeking to learn lessons for the future. So I invite my lord to treat this passage as indeed others to similar effect, as simply examples of situations where the Court may be reluctant to sanction a private prosecution rather than necessarily an example where it would be improper to comment upon past events where any risk of prejudice to the impartial position by a public prosecutor arises.

In any event, again I note that it is in a sense simply a reluctance to embark upon corridors and passages of the decision making process itself rather/rather than necessarily any reluctance to comment upon the decision itself.

Some support for that approach can perhaps be gained on Page 15, towards the end of the first paragraph. "The Lord Advocate's refusal to support private prosecution was based upon the exercise of his impartial judgment after this exhaustive investigation and we were reminded, further, that quite apart from this careful review of the matter raised by Mr. Meehan on this occasion, the Lord Advocate and two of his predecessors had previously fully examined the allegations now made and had decided against public prosecution". So, my lord, in my submission it may be one thing in those circumstances for the Court not to sanction a private prosecution. It doesn't follow that in subsequent years it would then be improper for Parliament to scrutinise what happened and to comment upon it if that was thought appropriate in the public interest.

Sir, there is the well known case of X v. Sweeney in 1983 SLT48, the Glasgow rape case, but I don't think it advances matters for present purposes. The issues which were discussed at length in that case don't arise at all in the present context but I can provide my lord with a copy of that decision for consideration if that would be helpful.

The only other case that I wish to mention in any detail is a case in which my lord was involved in Court. It is McDonald v. HMA reported in 1988 SLT at Page 713. My lord can see what seems on the face of it to be a somewhat unusual case where not only was the person attempting to seek the sanction of a private prosecution but the prosecution was to be against both the Lord Advocate and, if my lord looks halfway down the first column of Page 174, a particular Procurator Fiscal who may now be doubting the common wisdom about lightning not striking twice.

If my lord looks at the rubric. "The complainer was convicted after trial in the High Court and appealed against conviction on the ground inter alia that in the course of the evidence of a Crown witness who was giving evidence exculpatory of the complainer (but in conflict with the witness's earlier/earlier statements to the police), the Advocate Depute instructed that the witness be charged with attempting to pervert the course of justice by having earlier given the police a false statement which was different from his evidence in Court, and thereby rendering the complainer liable to suspicion and arrest. Neither the complainer and his representatives nor the trial judge were advised that the witness had been charged, and the Crown case was presented to the jury on the basis that the earlier statement was in fact the truth. The appeal was refused. The complainer thereafter brought a Bill craving the High Court to issue Criminal Letters to permit him to institute a private prosecution of the Lord Advocate and the Procurator Fiscal at Stirling for subornation or perjury at the original trial and perjury by misleading the Appeal Court. The Lord Advocate's concurrence in the Bill was sought but refused. Held, (1) that since the Lord Advocate's concurrence had been refused, the Court had to consider the facts alleged in the Bill to decide whether the circumstances therein set forth were such an exceptional remedy should be allowed to the complainer; (2) that the action which was taken during the trial in relation to the witness was not an attempt to induce him to give perjured evidence but an attempt to persuade him to tell what the Crown believed with every justification to be the truth and accordingly the action did not amount to attempted subornation of perjury; (3) that since the crime of perjury was the judicial affirmation of falsehood upon oath and neither of the respondents gave evidence upon oath, the allegation of perjury was irrelevant and misconceived; and Bill refused".

Sir, I need not take up a lot of time on this. I refer to it principally because it would appear to be an example of cases in this general context with particular relevance to the judgment of the Lord Justice Clerk, Lord Ross, at Page 718, an example where the Court did in fact enter into the merits of the decision not to concur in the prosecution rather than simply proceeding simply upon the basis that the Lord Advocate had decided not to concur in the prosecution. Plainly, this is a somewhat special case given the identity of the proposed accused.

Sir,/

Sir, those are all the cases that I wish to refer to. Some reference was made in the Lord Advocate's statement to the statement to Parliament by the then Prime Minister, Harold McMillan, on the 16th of February, 1959 in connection with the Tribunal of Inquiry set up to investigate the John Waters case. I have a copy of that passage from Hansard which I can make available to my lord if that would be helpful.

LORD CULLEN: I think I have that already. I have been given a copy in that context. Yes, I have it.

MR. CAMPBELL: I'm obliged. All I would say with reference to the passage in Hansard is that one sees towards the foot for example of the first column that emphasis is placed upon the dictum of Lord Simon in an English case in a similar context, that the Attorney General in England should absolutely decline to receive orders from the Prime Minister or the Cabinet or anybody else that he should prosecute.

LORD CULLEN: What column is that?

MR. CAMPBELL: I'm sorry, it is the bottom of the first column. Column 31 towards the foot. "In reaching his decisions the Lord Advocate's duty in Scotland, like the Attorney General's in England, is to act in a quasi-judicial capacity, whether the person involved is a public functionary or a private citizen. In the words of Lord Simon he should 'absolutely declined to receive orders from the Prime Minister or Cabinet or anybody else that he should prosecute'." That passage and indeed the opening paragraph in the Prime Minister's submissions emphasises that the Prime Minister's main concern, namely to avoid improper influence on the decision-making powers of the Lord Advocate of the day and, my lord, in my submission there is no risk of such in the context of the immediate matter at hand.

So, sir, in conclusion, my submission is neither this Tribunal nor Parliament are inhibited by any rule of our law that prevents scrutiny and comment upon the conduct and decisions taken by the Public Prosecutor in respect of Thomas Hamilton and to/

to embark upon this exercise would, in my submission, do no harm to the underlying rationale of such restrictions which have been enunciated in the past, namely the importance of preserving the Constitutional position of Public Prosecutors as both independent and impartial.

Sir, it is not in dispute that the circumstances of the Dunblane tragedy are exceptional and the public concern and public interest and scrutiny of all relevant circumstances leading to the awful events needs no emphasis by me and unless I can assist you, sir, on any further subject that is all I wish to say.

LORD CULLEN: Thank you, Mr. Campbell. Does any other party wish to speak on this matter? Mr. Bonomy, do you wish to respond?

MR. BONOMOY: I think I ought to respond, sir. Obviously I subscribe wholeheartedly to the concluding remarks of Mr. Campbell about the exceptional nature of the events we are investigating here. However, I do not consider that anything else that has been said in his submission can, sir, alter the approach that the Lord Advocate has decided to take and which I invite you to endorse.

I have already advanced the authority I consider appropriate to support the principle. The principle either exists or it doesn't exist. It is impossible to define strategic limits to such a principle depending on the circumstances of the individual case. In my submission, there is no distinction between leaving a decision to a Procurator-Fiscal and not interfering with it and what has been sought to be shown to be a separate issue of later examining that decision critically. The two in my submission are identical. That is illustrated by the way in which a number of points have been made in the course of Mr. Campbell's submissions. For example, he has I think upon a couple of occasions today said things similar to assuming a satisfactory explanation exists in a Procurator-Fiscal's decision or words like "We will possibly never hear whether they have good explanations for their decisions". These, in my submission, are clearly examples of what would be the result of infringing the principle that every decision/decision made would be made under the threat of being called upon to account at a later date. So it matters not whether a question can only be posed or pressure placed before the decision is taken, the very threat of questioning later imposes exactly the same pressure in my submission on a Fiscal and that is most clearly highlighted in the very question on Friday which gave rise to my intervention. You may remember, sir, that the question posed was "Let us just assume for the moment that your view of the law is correct and the view put forward by Mr. Gallagher was wrong. Would you agree that in that situation there are really only two explanations that would happen, that Mr. Gallagher misunderstood or didn't know the law or he was giving you a pretext for a decision which was based on other reasons?" Now, that that should be raised later imposes exactly the same pressure on the Procurator-Fiscal before he makes his decision.

LORD CULLEN: Sorry, I don't quite understand that. We're talking about an examination when the matter is so to speak dead.

MR. BONOMOY: Yes.

LORD CULLEN: What Mr. Campbell is doing is saying that this is a situation where there will be no current pressure and we may have something to learn, he says, from going at least some distance into the subject.

MR. BONOMOY: But it means, sir, that every decision hereinafter made, if there is no such principle recognised, will be made under the threat of that pressure being brought to bear at a later stage.

LORD CULLEN: But he says I think that one can compare the threat, if that is the right word, which could arise if somebody elected to try to apply for a private prosecution.

MR. BONOMOY: Well, I'm about to deal with that and in my submission there is a clear distinction between investigating a decision and what is behind a decision and in the circumstances to which reference has been made this morning and this afternoon to granting authority to bring a private prosecution, in my submission the decision to/

to grant a Bill for Criminal Letters is quite a separate issue from the issue which arises in the present case. It is coincidental that it is in the case of McBain v. Crichton which involves a private prosecution that the principle was declared by the High Court so specifically. It does not follow that the principle is something which is inherent to the question of whether or not a private prosecution should be brought only. In each of the cases which have been referred to it is, in my submission, clear that the court has refused to examine the reasons which have been given and indeed it is recognised that it was open to the Lord Advocate to give no reasons for refusing to concur. If, however, the reasons given, that is stated reasons do not on the face of them justify a decision, that is on the face of the stated reasons or if no stated reason was given at all then the court has taken the view that that does not prevent it from making its own judgment about the law that ought to apply to the facts before them and the relevancy of any charge that might be brought in deciding whether or not to authorise a private prosecution. Now, it would in my submission be impossible for the court to do otherwise. The court could never sanction a private prosecution without being satisfied that there was a relevant charge to be brought and, in my submission, the opinions that have been referred to today go no further than that. In Meehan v. Inglis, 1975 at page 14, we are at the foot of the page, as Mr. Campbell directed your attention, it says "The position would, of course, be otherwise if the reasons turned upon a question of law or relevancy or, as in J. & P. Coats Ltd. upon the construction of documents. What we have said so far is sufficient to dispose of the proposition....." In other words the court has to be satisfied in a case of a private prosecution that there is a relevant charge to be brought or there is on the face of the document evidence to support a charge.

LORD CULLEN: Yes, but these are cases where the court is exercising its own judgment, knowing the decision that has been taken and the stated reasons and not going beyond the stated reasons.

MR. BONOMOY: And what it has not done, in my submission, is said the Lord Advocate or the Procurator-Fiscal erred in some way in the exercise of/

of the discretion he had. All that the cases say is that there may be situations where we decide as a matter of law that there could be a relevant charge brought and in these circumstances that will be one factor to be taken account of by the court in arriving at the decision on a Bill for Criminal Letters.

LORD CULLEN: So could Mr. Campbell invite me on the basis of the evidence to decide whether a relevant charge could have been brought?

MR. BONOMOY: That in my submission would be one area that your lordship may be invited to make a decision on if there was sufficient material available on the basis of what has already been presented to the Inquiry.

LORD CULLEN: Yes, I am not talking about anything other than what has already been disclosed in evidence.

MR. BONOMOY: Yes, and the way in which you, sir, phrased the question was whether a relevant charge could have been brought.

LORD CULLEN: Yes.

MR. BONOMOY: Now, that is a matter of fact in my submission on which findings could be made.

LORD CULLEN: You see, we are getting to the point where you come very close to what Mr. Campbell is wanting to make submissions about.

MR. BONOMOY: Yes, that may be one point on which he does want to make submissions, in which case the position is clear and it is not making any inroads, in my submission, in this case, into the principle which has been stated, whether or not the facts could have supported a charge.

LORD CULLEN: So what by contrast would represent an inroad?

MR. BONOMOY: Whether or not a charge ought to have been brought.

LORD CULLEN: And is that because it involves factors beyond strictly the matter of relevancy?

MR./

2.20 p.m.

MR. BONOMOY: Yes. What the Lord Advocate has chosen to do in this case, and the exceptional nature of the course taken cannot be emphasised enough, has been to present material which is normally confidential, such as police reports into an investigation, the investigations carried out by them, and that of course presents the Inquiry with material which may enable the Inquiry to draw certain factual conclusions, but it would be wrong in my submission for the Inquiry to review the decisions made in this case on reviewing the exercise of discretion that was undertaken by the Procurators Fiscal, or for the Inquiry to actually endeavour to do the job of the Procurator Fiscal and decide what course of action would have been appropriate in the circumstances, and you, sir, will have noticed in particular that I have not endeavoured at any stage to interrupt evidence which related to the communication of material from the Procurator Fiscal to third parties, including police officers, again material which would normally be regarded as confidential and which you, sir, have seen witnesses themselves giving evidence, asked carefully whether they ought to answer the question before proceeding to answer it because they know very well the confidential way in which that material was conveyed to them.

Now, having got that far, in my submission it is appropriate for the Tribunal to draw conclusions that are appropriate from all the material, and I appreciate that it presents certain difficulties in deciding in what areas it is wrong, into what areas it is wrong to transgress, but I think that it will be possible to distinguish clearly between conclusions that may be drawn as matters of fact from the material presented, and by that, in that category, I include deciding whether the evidence was sufficient for example to constitute a relevant charge, and distinguish between these conclusions and conclusions about the way in which decisions were arrived at, which in my submission it would be wrong for the Inquiry to enter into.

Now, sir, in my submission there is a distinction, therefore, demonstrated in the cases we have been looking at between reviewing the decisions made/made and deciding what the substance of the evidence before the Court amounts to.

LORD CULLEN: But in cases in which the Court has decided to sanction a fresh prosecution, it must have reached the point at which they were satisfied that a relevant charge could be brought on the basis of the information before it; is that right?

MR. BONOMY: They would have to do that, sir.

LORD CULLEN: But what happened to the rest of it, the discretion which the public prosecutor exercised?

MR. BONOMY: Well, the test is entirely different in relation to bringing a private prosecution. The Court has also got to be satisfied that there are exceptional circumstances which justify authorising the prosecution, and within exceptional circumstances are a whole host of considerations, and it is because of the application of that particular criterion that there have only been two private prosecutions in the course of this century. The most recent case.....

LORD CULLEN: But does a consideration of those exceptional circumstances mean that the Court eventually comes into the same position as the public prosecutor was or would have been?

MR. BONOMY: Well, we are now looking at a particular subject which in my submission doesn't assist the determination of the issue for the Inquiry. The Court would obviously have to be satisfied that it was appropriate to proceed before deciding to proceed, but generally speaking, that issues has been approached as a combination of the clarity of the material before the Court supporting the proposed charge, and the exceptional circumstances justifying an individual being authorised by the Court to bring his own prosecution.

Now, we have seen the circumstances of J. & P. Coats where the Court was particularly impressed by the strength of the case, and the clarity of the case, and the lack of any explanation for/for not proceeding. The only other example, which has also been referred to in passing, is the case of X v. Sweeney, which involved, as your lordship is aware, very clear evidence in respect of the circumstances, and quite independent issues which led to the failure to prosecute, and a very significant change in circumstances which gave rise to the exceptional circumstances which led to the prosecution, so in both of these cases, which are the only two that really provide any guidance on this, the strength of the evidence to support the case was such that there probably would have been very little question of discretion involved. Certainly there was no question of discretion significantly involved in the Courts deciding to authorise the private prosecution.

LORD CULLEN: It would obviously be very difficult in a case in which it was obvious that there was a number of discretionary factors available to the prosecutor, I suppose the Court in those circumstances might be very slow indeed to interfere.

MR. BONOMOY: That of course is particularly true in relation to summary proceedings. The matter may be easier to determine in relation to the more serious cases, but in the present circumstances, it may be just, I think, helpful to say, to state the obvious, but to remind everyone of the obvious factor that before a prosecution can result in a conviction, there has to be proof of guilt beyond all reasonable doubt, and that therefore the fact that there is sufficient evidence to bring a charge is far from being the only material consideration in the mind of a Procurator Fiscal in deciding whether or not to proceed.

There are very important additional considerations to be borne in mind, and that of course means that so far as the two examples in this Inquiry are concerned of decisions not to prosecute, there would be a very significant element of discretion to be exercised by the Fiscal, even if he accepted there was sufficient evidence to proceed.

Now, sir, in my submission there is a clear distinction, therefore, to be drawn between inquiring into what is behind the decisions and the Court/

Court itself drawing conclusion from the material which the Lord Advocate has authorised to be presented to the Tribunal.

I invite you, sir, to accept the statement of principle which was made yesterday, and also in the course of the further procedure at the Inquiry, to apply that principle. That of course means either deciding to accept the presentation of the evidence in the form proposed, that is in the statement which has been made available to you, or, and this is not necessarily an alternative of course, but it is the obvious additional way at least of doing it, or calling for some evidence from Procurators Fiscal who were directly involved if you, sir, feel that that would aid the investigation that you have been appointed to carry out. I have ensured that such witnesses as are available are here in case your lordship should decide that that evidence -- some evidence is required to be given orally by them.

LORD CULLEN: Thank you very much. One other matter, Mr. Campbell -- perhaps I should have asked you what your position was in the light of your submissions this morning, what is your position about the recall or non-recall of Detective Constable Taylor, because you made it quite clear to me, I think, that your main concern is with regard to making submissions.

MR. CAMPBELL: I think it is highly unlikely that I would ask for him to be recalled, sir, but something may depend upon the terms of your decision.

LORD CULLEN: Yes, well, I am going to rise for a period. It will be a relatively short period, in order to consider the submissions that I have received, and when I come back, I shall deal with the matters that I have been asked to deal with.

After/

2.40 p.m.

After a short adjournment.

LORD CULLEN: Can I say first of all that I am most grateful to Counsel for their very clear submissions to me in regard to the problem which has arisen at this comparatively late stage in the Inquiry.

In considering the dispute which arises today, it seems to me in the background there are two main considerations. The first is the consideration that in exercising his independent quasi judicial role he should not be subject to pressure or influence from outside sources. The locus classicus for that rule can be found in the speech of the Prime Minister, Harold McMillan, in the passage to which I was referred.

Mr. Campbell has submitted to me, however, that this is not a case in which that arises, because we are not considering here a case in which a decision has not yet been taken or a case in which a decision is still open to re-consideration, nor are we dealing with pending proceedings.

The second consideration which seems to arise is the question of confidentiality. It is I think well settled that information which becomes available to the prosecutor in the course of the performance of his work is and should remain normally confidential to him. That is referred to in the statement made by the Lord Advocate at the foot of page three, where he says "Prosecutors are required to make judgements on their credibility and on the weight to attach to individual pieces of their evidence. Prosecutors are also entitled to take account of other information placed before them, which may be confidential", and so on.

Now, in this particular case Mr. Campbell did not seek to have the inward thinking of the prosecutors explored in this case, no doubt for perfectly good reasons. His submission was that he should be entitled to make comment on the decisions not to prosecute or in the case of one of the Procurators-Fiscal the decision not to grant a warrant.

Now, /

Now, Mr. Campbell drew my attention to a number of cases dealing with this, dealing with these very special circumstances in which the Supreme Court has decided whether or not to allow a private prosecution to proceed; and he pointed out that in these cases the Court was able to reach its own view as to whether prosecutions should take place, in order to secure that justice was carried out. By implication I think he was suggesting that this was a comment on the Lord Advocate's decision to decline to prosecute. On the other hand, Mr. Bonyon has pointed out that in cases of that sort, while it was expected that the Lord Advocate should explain his reasons, he was not required to do so, and he pointed out that there was no question in these cases of the Court seeking to usurp the position of a prosecutor by reviewing his decision. He accepted on the other hand that it would be open to the Court, and certainly open in this case, to consider what could be done on the basis of the material available. So in this case he accepted as I understood him that it would be open to this Inquiry to entertain submissions as to whether there was material on which a relevant charge could have been brought.

Now, it is plain that the material which is available to the Procurator-Fiscal covers a considerable wide range, from at the one end matters of law, matters of available evidence, to at the other end various considerations where his discretion has wide room for play.

I am satisfied that it would not on the one hand be proper for this Inquiry to require the prosecutors to justify their decisions, or to entertain submissions as to the sufficiency of what was put forward in justification of those decisions. On the other hand, I see no good reason why this Inquiry should not entertain submissions based on the available evidence. I am not going at this stage to draw any hard and fast line as to what can and cannot be submitted on the basis of the available evidence. It would certainly include on the basis of the possibility of sufficiency as to whether a relevant charge could have been granted or whether some other decision in the circumstances could have been taken. That is as far as I go. I merely illustrate what might be the subject of submissions.

I consider that in this case, as in any other case, where a submission can properly be made on the available evidence, there is no reason whatever why that should not be made. This is after all a free country. For that reason, therefore, I would not wish to inhibit submissions. But of course it has to be clearly understood that these submissions must be based on the available evidence and do not enter into a review in one form or another of the decisions reached by the prosecutors.

Turning to the invitation the Lord Advocate extended in his note, as far as I am concerned I am content that this Inquiry should not require the soundness of the decisions to be subject to detailed examination in submissions, but I do wish to hear submissions based on the available evidence insofar as submissions can properly be made on the basis of that evidence. Whether that can be described as a matter of fact, as Mr. Bonomy said, or whether it is not a matter of fact is of no consequence to me. I wish to hear what can properly be submitted on the evidence available.

That brings me to another matter. It is of course in a case of this sort for the Lord Advocate to decide to what extent he should adhere to any rule or principle against the disclosure of information available to or information about the prosecution system. That is a decision over which I have no right of control. In the present case, I note that the Lord Advocate's position is that it is appropriate that evidence should be available as to the information provided to and the inquiries made by the Procurators-Fiscal and the decisions taken by the Procurators-Fiscal and the stated reasons for these decisions.

I have seen Mr. Vannet's report, and with his usual thoroughness he has set out a considerable amount of detail as to these matters, and I am certain that that report will be of significant assistance to this Inquiry. At the same time, in his note which Mr. Bonomy read yesterday the Lord Advocate has given me an opportunity to invite individual members of the Procurator-Fiscal's Service who were concerned with these events to give evidence as to the facts set out in Mr. Vannet's report. I consider that in general it is not necessary, but I consider it would be desirable to have/have evidence from two members of this Service who were apparently able to give evidence in regard to certain matters which have already been explored at this Inquiry. These two persons are Mr. Cardle -- I am thinking in particular of his evidence in regard to the linking of a report which Mr. Vannet refers to as report 1A -- and secondly Mr. Gallagher, as to the communications between him and Detective Constable Taylor in regard to report No. 4.

I hope this is sufficient to enable the Crown to identify the matters about which I am interested, but I leave it entirely to Mr. Bonomy to decide what further evidence in fact might usefully be taken from those two witnesses when they enter the witness box.

MR. BONOMOY: Thank you, sir. Shortly I will ask you to adjourn briefly while I take stock of the direction you have now issued for these two witnesses to give evidence, and to organise events accordingly. It should be possible to deal with them this afternoon, possibly completely, but if necessary it may extend into tomorrow.

May I however now that this issue has been resolved say something about one matter connected with it, which is causing me concern. Yesterday afternoon I explained the position in relation to the review carried out by Mr. Vannet to which you have just referred. It has been suggested in the Press that Mr. Vannet's review had not been known of, apart from by the Crown, at all before recent enquiries appeared in the Press, and that it would never have come to light had it not been for recent publicity.

You will appreciate the great detail into which that report goes, sir, and the time which would be taken to compile it and the period of time which must have been covered to provide so much detail.

I wish to make it clear for the record that the fact that this was being undertaken was made known to all parties to the Inquiry at an early stage, and that the Tribunal and all parties to the Inquiry were informed in writing by me at the time of first issue of paperwork to parties that Mr. Vannet was carrying out this review, he was named in the/the notice to parties, and that any material relevant to the investigation would be issued. That notice was sent out in the middle of May.

It has also been suggested in the Press that important witnesses have not been called to give evidence to the Inquiry. Now, I would like now yet again to repeat the invitation which was given by the Lord Advocate at the Preliminary Hearing, that any people who consider that they know of witnesses or other evidence relevant to the issues to be considered by the Inquiry which has not been led should contact the Procurator-Fiscal forthwith so that action can be taken to ensure that that evidence is led.

Could I now have a brief adjournment, sir, to organise matters?

LORD CULLEN: One other matter. Mr. Campbell, you said you might be able to tell me whether you wanted to have the witness Mr. Taylor back once you heard what I had to say. Do you wish to have him called?

MR. CAMPBELL: No, sir.

LORD CULLEN: Very well. How long are you likely to take, Mr. Bonomy?

MR. BONOMY: 10 minutes.

LORD CULLEN: Very well. 10 minutes.

After a short adjournment.

MR./

3.20 p.m.

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, the course of action I propose to follow now is to lead the two witnesses that were mentioned in your decision, and thereafter to have the report read. I expect it will be necessary to read the report in full. That depends a little on the evidence we hear, but I suspect it will still be necessary to give the complete context to read it in full. The first witness I propose now to lead is James Cardle.

JAMES CARDLE (62), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you James Cardle? - I am.

Do you live in Cardross? - I do.

Are you 62 now? - Yes.

And you are retired, retired from the post of Procurator Fiscal at Dumbarton? - That is correct.

When did you retire? - August 1994.

How long were you the Fiscal at Dumbarton? - From February 1980, so that was 14 years.

How long in total were you a member of the Procurator Fiscal's Service? - From August 1967.

And when were you first legally qualified? - 1956.

You have already been asked, I think, by Mr. Vannet, a number of questions about the involvement of your office in cases, a case reported against Thomas Hamilton? - Yes, I was.

I want to ask you about one particular part of that Inquiry, but I think to give it proper context, I should invite you to have two sets of papers before you, which are R59 and R60. Now, if we/we take first of all R59, do you recognise these as papers relating to the report of a case against Thomas W. Hamilton, 7 Kent Road, Stirling? Do you recognise these papers as papers from the Dumbarton, or copies of papers from the Dumbarton Fiscal's Office relating to a complaint against Thomas W. Hamilton? - Yes, they are.

And does that case have a Fiscal's case number? - Yes -- 0359/88. It's on the backing.

Now, you took a decision about whether or not to prosecute that case. Can you tell us what your decision was? - The decision eventually was "No proceedings".

At some stage, the papers came back to you; is that right? - Sorry, I don't understand the question?

Well, perhaps if you look at the other Production, R60? - Yes.

And you take the two together, can we deduce from both that at some stage this case in some form was re-reported to your office? - No.

Well, did it come back into your office? - Depending which number you are talking about. R59 never left my office. R59 was kept in my office and filed away. In the fullness of time, this other report, R60, arrived in my office on its own.

Now, can you tell me whether someone brought it to your office or it was sent in? - I personally did not receive it. It's possible that a police officer came and left it in my office personally, but he did not speak to me. Are you talking about R60?

Yes? - Yes.

Can we tell from the papers when it was brought, or when it came into your office? - There's no stamp on this because as soon as it arrived on my desk, I realised it should not have come to me. I see there is a stamp on Page 19 of the report which has the Deputy Chief Constable of Strathclyde Police, and the date on that is the 16th June/

June 1989, so it must have been some time after the 16th June 1989, but I can't say when it actually arrived in my office.

What was it about that report that made you think you ought not to deal with it? - It was a complaint against the police.

And why should you not deal with a complaint against the police? - Because complaints against the police are not dealt with by the District Procurator Fiscal. They are dealt with by the Regional Procurator Fiscal.

Is he a Fiscal that has responsibility for a number of Courts? - Yes.

And yours was one of those within a particular Region? - North Strathclyde.

And who was the Regional Procurator Fiscal for North Strathclyde? - Robert Lees at Paisley.

So a complaint against the police goes to him? - It does.

That complaint was instigated by Thomas Hamilton? - It would appear to be.

Against, can you tell from these papers, which police officers? - I would -- well, if you look at Page 1 of the report, it's against Constable George Gunn and Constable Donna Duncan, both of the police office, Balfron, which would of course be Central Scotland Police.

I think you have there actually the complete police report, which I wasn't referring to at the moment? - This is the one which has R60 on the face of it. These are the papers that were presented to me, the entire matter.

Well, what I was wanting you to look at exclusively was the Procurator Fiscal's papers. Now, perhaps I can have that re-organised just now? You should have two separate bundles, R59 and R60? - I have.

And the R60 -- it seems to consist of a police/police report as well as correspondence? - It does indeed, yes.

And is it more or less there in the bulk and form in which it came into your office? - It would come in like so.

What did you do with it? - I had a quick glance at it, immediately realised it was a complaint against the police, and as such, fell to be dealt with by the Regional Procurator Fiscal, and there are good reasons why the Regional Procurator Fiscal deals with these matters and not the District Procurator Fiscal.

So/

3.40 p.m.

So what did you do with it? - I looked at page 19 of the report.

If you look at it, you will see handwriting beside "Deputy Chief Constable, Strathclyde Police", a datestamp, and there is a handwritten note, which is "Chief Superintendent Discipline. Please have a senior officer take this report to P.F. Dumbarton and for any further enquiry necessary to be carried out".

MR. BONOMOY: The witness is referring to D2K which is the original version of the report of investigation into Hamilton's complaint, then he has the additional material. I think for present purposes he is referring to the part copied in D2K.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: You have a reference there to a note by a police officer? - Yes. It was addressed from the Chief Superintendent, Discipline. "Please have a senior officer take this report to P.F. Dumbarton and have any further enquiry necessary carried out", and it is initialled.

So he took it to the right place by the sound of it, as far as his instructions were concerned? - Yes, that was in accordance with the note.

What did you do? - I phoned up Strathclyde Police Headquarters and asked for Complaints and Discipline. In fact I asked for the Chief Superintendent, Complaints and Discipline.

Yes? When the phone was answered it was a Chief Inspector Brockie who answered the phone. Now, I knew Chief Inspector Brockie from his days as a police officer in Dumbarton. I asked to speak to the Chief Superintendent, who was not apparently available, and Mr. Brockie said "Can I help you?". I said "I have received a set of papers which appear to be a complaint against the police from Central Scotland Police, and there is a note to the effect that a senior officer from Discipline should take this to me, the P.F., Dumbarton. This should not have come to me, Mr. Brockie", and his words were "It should have gone to Mr. Lees, Mr. Cardle", and I said "That is my feeling as well", and he said "Don't/

"Don't worry, I will arrange to have it uplifted".

Yes? - As far as I remember, I phoned Mr. Lees and told him about it, because it should not have come to me. It was uplifted and taken from my office to Mr. Lees in Paisley, and thereafter was dealt with by Mr. Lees in Paisley.

Was that the end of your involvement with that report?
- With that report, yes.

Now, the problem with this is that in that report there are statements from witnesses who had not been interviewed at the time of the original report against Hamilton, which you did consider and marked "No Proceedings"; is that right? - Yes.

Is it possible it was the police intention that you should reconsider the case against Hamilton in the light of this additional material? Would a Procurator-Fiscal normally do that? - No.

Why? - For two reasons. The first reason is that I had already marked this case "No Proceedings". This decision was not intimated direct to Mr. Hamilton, but was made known to the police, and I believed had got through the various Departments in the local authority, Social Work Department and that sort of thing, that I was taking no proceedings.

Yes? - That being so, that was the end of the matter. No proceedings could be taken against Mr. Hamilton. It was therefore a futile exercise to consider any further evidence, because the decision had already been taken that no proceedings should be taken against him.

Yes? - That is the first reason. The second reason is that it is quite clearly laid down and has been approved by the Appeal Court the procedure whereby the Regional Procurator-Fiscal investigates complaints against the police, because under no circumstances should information which has become available arising out of investigations into complaints against the police, these results should not be made known to the person who is dealing with any criminal case against a complainer in a complaint against the police. They are kept completely separate.

Yes?/

Yes? - The Regional Procurator-Fiscal should not be aware of any information which has come to light as a result of police enquiries into complaints against the police.

Can we be clear about the extent of that? Let us assume that in connection with some complaint against the police involving minor conduct, a minor assault by the police, and the complainer himself is the subject of investigation for a minor assault, but in the course of the investigation into the complaint against the police someone confesses to murder unconnected with that investigation. Are you saying that that would never get back to the Procurator-Fiscal? - That is an entirely different matter.

Why is it different? - This complaint against the police we are dealing with here arises out of the same set of circumstances as a criminal case involving Thomas Hamilton.

So that is the limit of that rule, that if you get material in an investigation of a complaint against the police that relates to the same set of circumstances it cannot be used against the complainer? - Yes.

Going back to R59 for a minute, the top item on it is a note typewritten with your initials at the bottom dated 20th March, 1990? - Yes.

Can you tell us the import of that note? - What happened was that on the 19th March, 1990 a letter was received at my office from the Director of Education of Lothian Regional Council, and that is in the correspondence there, attached to R59, a letter dated 13th March, 1990, when he specifically asked what happened.

Yes? - Now, in the letter he refers in the last paragraph, which starts "You will see that, according to Mr. McMaster", of Strathclyde Police, "a report by Inspector Keenan of the Central Scotland Police was submitted to the Procurator-Fiscal, 3 High Street, Dumbarton. The report was submitted by Strathclyde Police, as far as I am aware. I understand that this took place at some point between May and July, 1989".

Yes?/

Yes? - Now, as far as I could see from the Director of Education's letter, he was enquiring as to an outstanding case involving Thomas Hamilton.

Yes? - My office had no note of any report received in May, 1989, and that is why there is a note with that letter which says "No report submitted J.R. 19/3/90" -- "J.R." is the office manager in Dumbarton.

Yes? - She checked and ascertained that in fact there was no report received here in 1989.

Yes? - She showed it to me, and I recollected from looking at this it was clear it was a Central Scotland Police matter, and I recollected that that report was now in regarding a complaint against the police, R60: I remembered that.

Yes? - I phoned up Paisley, and I wrote beside the last paragraph on the letter of 19th March, 1990 "O8.89RDF/DH/89/10748" in my hand-writing. I had obviously phoned up Paisley and ascertained that that was the matter referred to in May and July? - Yes.

Now, I had not had anything to do with that, but I wrote a letter dated 20th March, 1990 to the Director of Education, and I did point out that I had received.....

I think you should read that letter? - "I refer to your letter of 13th March, 1990 and to my subsequent telephone conversation with your Mr. John Perry" -- I must have phoned Mr. Perry up.

Yes? - "I understand that you wish to know the position regarding any criminal proceedings which may have arisen out of a summer camp run by Mr. Hamilton on Inchmoan Island, Loch Lomond in July, 1988".

Yes? - "I would confirm that I did receive a report from Strathclyde Police arising out of this camp and, after considering this, I decided not to take any criminal proceedings against Mr. Hamilton in respect of that camp."

Yes? - "I trust that this information is sufficient/sufficient for your purposes".

Yes? - Now, I had no response to that. Thereafter, for the sake of having something to file, I dictated that note, which is also on the file, which is headed "Thomas W. Hamilton, 7 Kent Road, Stirling".

Could we determine when it was roughly that the decision to take no proceedings against Hamilton was actually taken in relation to the first report you received? - It would be towards the end of 1988.

And for the reason you have explained, it was never reconsidered? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Just a few questions, if I may. So far as the matter of the material coming back to you, the bundle.....? - Is this R59?

No, this is R60, the material on your right? - That is the complaint against the police?

Yes. Can you remind me what was said by the document addressed to you when the material came to you? - There was no correspondence, no letter with this. It arrived in this form, which is a folder with blue ends on it, and that is it.

Yes? - It came in, as any police report would normally come in. It just arrived. It was put on my desk, I looked at it and immediately saw it was a complaint against the police. I looked at it, it rang a bell, and I had a closer look at it, but I didn't read it in its entirety, I skimmed through it, because the idea it was a complaint against the police, which included Inchmoan Island, I knew what had happened on Inchmoan Island with Thomas Hamilton, I saw this note at page 19, someone asking a senior officer to take this report to the P.F., Dumbarton to have any further enquiry carried out.

Is this the note of 16th June, 1989? - It has got a datestamp opposite it with "Deputy Chief Constable, Strathclyde Police" round it.

Can I look at it? - Yes.

So/

So having read that, what action did you take? - My view was that it should not have come to me. It was a complaint against the police, and should have gone to the Regional Procurator-Fiscal.

So you simply sent it to the Regional Procurator-Fiscal, and that was it? - Yes. I took no further part in it.

You made reference in your evidence-in-chief to certain considerations relating to how you had already marked "No Proceedings" anyway? - Yes.

Was that a factor which came into your thought processes at that time? - In relation to this?

Yes? - No, not really. I looked at it basically as a complaint against the police, and it should not have come to me. The fact it may have contained further information about Hamilton arising out of this was entirely irrelevant.

I am just trying to get at the facts of this. If you look again please at the handwritten note, can you tell us what the document says? - "I'm aware that he still wishes to see me to fully discuss his complaint and answer any questions I may have. I seek your advice and guidance on this matter, and it may be that criminal charges are a possibility against the complainer, and I do not wish to prejudice any enquiry Strathclyde Police may wish to investigate".

Yes? - "I submit this report and attached papers for your information and attention. I would also add that the attached documentary file has been collated from a number of sources and contains additional information not held on Headquarter's file".

Did you get that? - Quite possibly I did. As far as I was concerned this case had been marked "No Proceedings", and there was no question of further enquiry into that matter. I can't remember consciously doing so, but if I did look at it that would be my attitude.

Did this question of having already marked it "No Proceedings" arise at that time or not? - I don't/don't know.

As a matter of your best recollection of events, is the position simply this, that you received this material, saw it was relating on the face of it to a complaint against the police and decided it was not a matter which you should look at, that it should be sent to the Regional Procurator-Fiscal at Paisley? - I may have applied my mind to the fact of that second-last paragraph, but if I did I would just take the view that the previous case was finished and done with, nothing else could happen at that time, we had marked it "No Proceedings", and that point was irrelevant. That being so, the whole matter was a complaint against the police, and a matter for the Regional Procurator-Fiscal. I cannot now remember to what extent I did do so, but that would be my thought processes.

Well, this is all somewhat speculative, isn't it? - I have already said I can't remember.

You see, the difficulty is that we have had evidence from Mr. Keenan, who gave evidence in the Inquiry on Day 7 at page 781 and page 782 to the effect that not only was there some material in this bundle which was new but that it related, some of it related, to different boys on a different week of this same summer camp? - I cannot comment on that. I was not here.

If you had contacted Mr. Keenan he might have told you that? - As far as I was concerned this matter referred to Strathclyde Police. My contact was with Strathclyde Police, and that was it.

Did you at any time know that Thomas Hamilton possessed a Firearms Certificate? - No, never: not until the day of the disaster.

In general terms, would you consider it relevant for a Fiscal to be made aware of the fact that the subject matter of the police report held a Firearms Certificate? - It all depends on what case you are talking about. In some cases it could be completely irrelevant.

In what case might it be relevant? - In cases/cases involving violence; that type of thing.

Assault? - Perhaps, depending on the severity of the assault.

Any other kinds of case? - I can't think offhand, to be perfectly honest.

No further cross-examination.

No re-examination.

WILLIAM/

4.00 p.m.

WILLIAM GALLAGHER, (37), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you William Gallagher? - I am, yes.

And are you 37 years of age? - Yes.

And are you an assistant solicitor in Crown Office, Edinburgh? - That is correct.

And how long have you been in the Procurator-Fiscal's Service, Mr. Gallagher? - Since 1980.

And how long have you been legally qualified? - Since that time.

I think between August, 1991 and July, 1994, you worked in the Fiscal's Office in Stirling? - Yes.

What was the position you held there? - I was Procurator-Fiscal Depute.

I want to ask you about one matter you dealt with during your period there, and to do that, it would be helpful if you could have R61 in front of you. Now, you will see that that is a bundle of papers, the top one of which is a ADZA, a police report, or at least an inter-police memo? - Yes.

Which has certain enclosures or attachments after the signature of Detective Constable Taylor? - Yes.

And it also has a backing? - Yes.

On the backing, do we see your hand-writing? - That is correct, yes.

And on the right-hand side of the backing as we look at it, is all the writing yours? - Yes.

And just to be clear about that, on the left there is a case number and the name of Hamilton, and the word "Information". That is not your writing? - No, that's not mine.

And the writing consists of two entries; is/

is that correct? - My entries, yes.

What is the first one? - The first one reads "Warrant refused meantime", and the next entry is "BU 3 months", and my initials and the date, which is the 11th of June, 1993.

You have written both these things at the same time?

- Yes.

What does "BU 3 months" mean? - It means to bring the papers back to me in three months, so that would be taken from me into the general filing system in the office, and there would then be a system whereby the papers would then be brought back to me in three months.

And do we see the next entry indicating that that appears to have happened? - That is correct.

And what is the next entry? - It is dated the 10th of September, 1993 and it has a marking of "No Pro.", no proceedings, and again my initials.

To what proceedings do these papers relate? - You mean the marking?

Yes? - The marking relates to the police information which is the initial document that you have referred to, the so-called AD2A prepared by Detective Constable Taylor, and it is dated the 9th of June, 1993 as well.

Do you remember that form being brought to your office? - Yes.

And do you remember who actually brought it to your office? - Yes, it was Detective Constable Taylor.

And do you remember discussing the terms of it with him? - Yes.

What was the purpose of his visit to the office? - His purpose was to bring the report with him and to discuss what was contained in it in order to pursue what is being sought by the report, namely that a warrant to search premises should be sought/sought from the court.

Now, whose premises were these? - These were premises, if I recall the detail of the report, Mr. Hamilton's house I think was being the area or the premises that the police wanted to search.

And we see the heading of the AD2A is Hamilton's name? - Yes.

And his address? - Yes.

So I take it all these papers apart from the backing would be brought in by Taylor? - Yes.

And all brought in at the one time? - Yes.

Was that a lengthy discussion? - Yes, I think it was. I think he was with me for perhaps 30 to 40 minutes, something of that order.

And was he concerned about one criminal subject only, and by that I mean criminal type of charge, or was he concerned about the possibility of more than one criminal charge? - No. You will see from page 4 of the original document that he has highlighted a number of potential criminal offences which were, if I recall it, discussed to a greater or lesser extent.

And these included crimes of dishonesty? - Yes.

As well as breach of the peace and lewd, indecent and libidinous practices and behaviour? - Yes, and a Contravention of the Children and Young Persons Act.

Now, what did you understand from Mr. Taylor was the purpose proposed for the search? - The purpose was to seek, as I understood it, to obtain photographs which the police thought were likely to be in Mr. Hamilton's possession.

Was there any indication given to you that any other documents might be sought to be included in such a search warrant? - No. There is mentioned in the report, and there was, as I recall it, some brief discussion in relation to the question/question of some offence of dishonesty, or offences of dishonesty, and if I remember correctly, there was perhaps some mention of some other document in that area, but I have no clear detailed recollection of him looking for anything other than photographs.

In the past, have you seen photographs that Hamilton had taken? - Yes.

When was that? - I think it was perhaps several months or perhaps even a year or two prior to that when I had seen a number of photographs, a substantial number of photographs.

So you knew the nature of the type of photographs that Hamilton took, at least some types of photograph that Hamilton took? - Yes; I had had some previous experience, and there was some suggestion in the report itself as to the sort of material that was likely to be shown in the photographs.

Now, when you have to decide whether or not to apply to the court for a warrant, can you help us with the general test that you would apply, legal test? - You would normally begin with the question as to whether or not there was constituted a criminal offence, and if you didn't get over that hurdle, then there is no pursuit that I would take beyond that. There would then be a number of other features that may be considered, depending upon the individual type of warrant which is being sought. You will be aware clearly that warrants can be obtained for a variety of areas, whether in relation to common law matters or in relation to specific statutory offences, and the consideration may vary according to what particular offence is under consideration.

In relation to photographs in the context of this case, what other considerations would you have to apply, or other tests would you have to apply, assuming there is evidence of a criminal act? - I would need to have clearer indication as to where the property was likely to be recovered, what basis there was for reaching that conclusion as to where the property was so that could be properly specified to the court when I sought to obtain the warrant, and an indication of the basis on which I was seeking to obtain the recovery of the warrant.

Would/

Would that relate to the nature of the witness? - Yes; it would normally contain a specification as to what I would understand the photographs would contain as a means to going towards establishing the offence that I was seeking to pursue.

After you had discussed the matter with Mr. Taylor, did you there and then reach a conclusion about whether or not an application should be made for a warrant? - At that stage, yes.

And what conclusion did you reach? - The answer was that it shouldn't.

Did you tell him why? - Yes.

And what indication did you give to him? - I indicated to him that I didn't consider that we had before us information to establish that a crime or crimes had been committed, and I should emphasise probable crime because while the question of dishonesty was mentioned, it wasn't pursued particularly seriously in my recollection.

Did that view of yours surface early in this discussion or only at the end of it? - It would be difficult to give an estimation of that because the time involved in reading the report would be four or five minutes in any event, so to that extent, before I formed any view, I would have to have gone through the report, and as I recall the way matters were discussed, Mr. Taylor brought the report, I was reading through it, and he was amplifying it as we went, so to that extent it wouldn't be immediate. It would be in the middle part of the discussion.

Was there a debate in which you were explaining your view and he was perhaps trying to persuade you to the contrary? - I don't recall him seeking particularly to pursue a view that I was saying that I said "No, I don't accept that". The position might have been that I would be saying "Well, is this the situation", and he would give an amplification of what was contained in the report, and we would then form a view, or I would form a view based upon that developed information.

Do/

Do you remember saying anything to him about the nature of the conduct as you saw it, and why it didn't amount to a crime on the face of his evidence? - Not in detail. I was discussing the number of offences and indicating to him my view that while this was clearly behaviour that was potentially the cause of concern, would be a cause of concern, it didn't cross the boundary into a criminal offence.

And when you say behaviour that was the cause of concern, what behaviour did you have in mind? - The behaviour that was described in the report, the conduct that was ascribed to Mr. Hamilton in relation to the particular boy or boys that were mentioned in the report, commented in relation to the earlier information which Detective Constable Taylor attached to the report, which was an earlier report which had been submitted by another officer.

That was Mr. Hughes, I think? - Yes.

Have you any recollection of discussing with Mr. Taylor the question of who it was being suggested was either alarmed, distressed or annoyed by the conduct which was described in his report? - I have some recollection of discussing with him what the perspective of the boy or boys was, and what the nature of their reaction was to it, yes, and I would clearly be interested in relation to that in relation to what was going on and how the boys perceived it and what was happening, yes.

Was there any discussion that you can recollect about the effect of the conduct on the adults or the parents? - I have a vague recollection -- it's not in any strong detail -- of some discussion about how the information came to light and what the view of the parents was in bringing this matter to their attention, and what their position was in relation to that, yes, to that extent, but no, if you are meaning in relation to at the time when the information may have been given to them by their children, no, I don't recall a discussion of that nature.

For example, do you remember a discussion about whether it was a crime to behave in the way that was described in the report, not to distress the/

the children, but to distress the parents as a result? - No.

Now, do you say that that didn't happen or you don't remember it happening? - I don't remember it happening.

Were you aware that Hamilton had a Firearms Certificate by this time? - It is mentioned in the report, yes, so to that extent, I would have been aware of it.

Do you remember if that was discussed between you and Mr. Taylor? - No, I have no recollection of that being discussed at all.

Do you remember very clearly at all how this discussion actually ended? - I remember that, and it is based upon what I have written in the marking as well, that my indication to Mr. Taylor was that I wasn't prepared to go to the court on the basis of the information we had to seek applying for a warrant, but that was not to be seen to be the final end of the matter, and if there were other matters that could be brought back, then that would be something that we could potentially review in the light of other information, and that was the period that I had given, the three month period, and I would have some discussion with him to that effect as well, to say I would take the papers back again at some indeterminate time in the future, and if there was something he wanted to bring to me, to bring it back.
