WEDNESDAY, 29th MAY, 1996.

FIRST DAY.

LORD CULLEN: Ladies and gentlemen, this is the opening of the Dunblane Public Inquiry. The first thing I would like to do is, for the record make sure who represents whom this morning, apart from the Lord Advocate and the counsel appearing with him. Mr. Campbell, there may have been some changes since you addressed me four weeks ago.

MR. C.M. CAMPBELL, Q.C.: Sir, my name is Colin Campbell, Q.C. I appear with Miss Laura Dunlop, Advocate, instructed by Levy & McRae, solicitors. I appear on behalf of the families of the deceased children, the families of the injured children and the families of the children absent from the class on the day in question. I also appear for Mrs. Harrild and Mrs. Blake.

MR. A.T.F. GIBB: Sir, my name is Andrew Gibb, solicitor, and I appear on behalf of the 23 members of the teaching staff of Dunblane Primary School who are members of the Educational Institute of Scotland and also the six members who are members of the PTA. I do not appear for anybody else.

MR. M.J. JONES, Q.C.: Sir, my name is Michael Jones, I am a Queen's Counsel, instructed by Messrs. Simpson & Marwick, W.S., and I appear on behalf of Stirling Council.

MR. J. TAYLOR: Sir, my name is James Taylor. I am representing the interests of Central Scotland Police.

MR. M.S. STEPHEN: Sir, my name is Martin Stephen, and I appear on behalf of Mr. Ronald Taylor, the headteacher.

LORD CULLEN: I take it that is all those who appear here today to represent parties.

One or two things I would like to say at this point perhaps for the assistance of those who are seated in the audience. Four weeks ago at the Preliminary/

Preliminary Hearing I set out the ground rules which were to be followed in this Inquiry, and since that time have had no need to change those rules: so those will be the rules for this Inquiry.

There will be no opening submissions in this Inquiry; we will go right into the evidence, subject to any preliminary points which are brought to my attention before we get to the first witness.

The Inquiry will sit daily Monday to Friday, from 10 till 1, and in the afternoon from 10 to 2 until 20 past 4. That afternoon period may be altered, not as regards its length but as regards its position, in the light of experience, having seen how matters go.

Firstly, a word for counsel or those who are representing the party, solicitors or counsel. I do not mind whether you stand or sit when you are putting questions; but whatever you do, make sure that you are within a proper range of the microphones. We have a perfectly good sound system, so make sure you use it correctly.

Before I call the Lord Advocate, are there any preliminary points that any of the parties would like to raise at this stage?

There was no response.

LORD CULLEN: Very well. Lord Advocate?

THE LORD ADVOCATE: Sir, you will recall that at the Preliminary Hearing I made reference to my decision to grant an immunity from prosecution, and I wish to make my position clear on that matter. I wish to make it clear that anything which any witness says in evidence before the Inquiry will not be used in evidence against him or her in any criminal proceedings in Scotland, except in relation to any offence of perjury or against the course of justice.

Given the nature of the evidence which is likely to be given before the Inquiry, I consider it extremely unlikely that witnesses should have any concerns about self-incrimination; but I have found it appropriate in the public interest to give this undertaking/undertaking in order to avoid any such difficulty arising.

Sir, as you will recall, the remit which you were given following the resolution by both Houses of Parliament was to enquire into the incident at Dunblane Primary School on Wednesday, 13th March, 1996, which resulted in the death of 18 persons. Of those 18 persons 17 were murdered at the hand of Thomas Hamilton: their names are as follows:

Victoria Clydesdale, Emma Crozier, Melissa Currie, Charlotte Dunn, Kevin Hasell, Ross Irvine, David Kerr, Mhairi MacBeath, Susan Mayer, Brett McKinnon, Abigail McLennan, Emily Morton, Sophie North, John Petrie, Joanna Ross, Hannah Scott and Megan Turner.

Sir, in relation to each of these victims various Productions have been prepared and are included in these three red folders which I will present to you in a moment. They include in relation to each of these victims a pen picture of the victim concerned, certain detail of the various witnesses who had dealings with the victim and various other documents, including the post-mortem reports which were prepared following upon the tragedy which occurred. It is not the intention to lead any of the detail that is contained in these folders, out of respect for the privacy of the individual families concerned; but it is of course correct in the public interest that this full detail should be presented to you.

In relation to the eighteenth death, that of Hamilton himself, separate Productions have been created, and it is in the public interest that some of these will be discussed in detail as the Inquiry unfolds.

In addition, sir, another folder has been made up, including similar details, pen pictures and other information, medical information, relating to the other people who were in the gym when this tragedy occurred, and other people within the school who suffered injuries as a consequence of Hamilton's actions. Their names are as follows:

Aimie Adam, Coll Austin, Matthew Birnie, Mary Blake, Scott Crichton, Eileen Harrild, Steven Hopper, Robbie/

Robbie Hurst, Any Hutchinson, Ryan Liddell, Mark Mullan, Andrew O'Donnell, Victoria Porteous, Robert Purves, Benjamin Vallance and Stewart Weir.

As far as humanly possible, sir, the evidence will be led in a manner which avoids identifying the names of individual victims. It is I know the earnest wish of all of the relatives of those who died and of those who survived and their relatives and indeed of all of us who have been involved in preparing for this Inquiry that the privacy of those who have suffered so much as a consequence of this tragedy should be respected.

It is the earnest hope of myself as Lord Advocate and of all those who I have spoken to about this matter that if by any process anybody is able to identify the name of a particular victim, even though that name is not mentioned on the floor of the Inquiry, no mention of that name should be made in the media, out of respect for those who have suffered; and if inadvertently any name is mentioned I am sure we can rely on the support of the media in this matter, following the traditions which we have come to expect of them in the Courts in this land.

Sir, I do not think it is necessary for me to say any more at this stage, but I do formally present these four volumes as containing the information to which I have referred.

LORD CULLEN: Perhaps I could ask the parties whether they have any comment they want to make on the statement the Lord Advocate has made in relation to the method of dealing with information in relation to the individual victims.

There was no response.

LORD CULLEN: I have satisfied myself already that it is entirely appropriate the Inquiry should proceed to entertain evidence in this particular way, having regard to the wishes of the relatives whom I have had an opportunity to meet, and I entirely sympathise with the way the Lord Advocate has outlined in dealing with this particular aspect of the evidence which is for me to consider.

I would associate myself with the remarks he has made in regard to the media. I know I can rely on them to respect the wishes the relatives have so clearly and unanimously expressed.

THE LORD ADVOCATE: Sir, the first witness who will give oral evidence is James Lister.

JAMES LISTER (37), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY THE LORD ADVOCATE: I am a Police Constable with Strathclyde Police Force. I have 15 years' police service.

I think you are currently attached to the Strathclyde Police Air Support Unit in Glasgow? - That is correct, sir.

And in the course of your duties I think you regularly act as an observer within the Strathclyde Police helicopter, and take aerial photographs when asked to do so? - I do, sir, yes.

On Friday, 29th March of this year were you requested by Detective Chief Superintendent Ogg of Central Scotland Police to take a number of aerial photographs of Dunblane Primary School and the surrounding streets? - Yes, sir.

And later that day did you, accompanied by another officer, fly over the school and take with a camera a large number of photographs? - I did, sir, yes.

I want you to look please at four photographs. First of all Production R1, which will be shown on the screen for the benefit of the rest of us. Do you have sight of that yourself? - I do, sir, yes.

This is a photograph taken from quite a height, which shows you the whole school, the playing ground and various of the surrounding streets? - That is correct, sir, yes.

Look please at R2. That is taken from a/a slightly closer position, again showing the whole of the school, the various entrances to the school grounds and the playingfields? - Yes, sir.

R3, please. Again this is slightly closer in, showing most of the school building? - Yes, sir.

And finally R4. That is another close-up view of the school, again showing most of the school building, from a slightly different angle? - Yes, sir.

No cross-examination.

EILEEN HARRILD, (43), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY THE LORD ADVOCATE: I think that you are 43 years of age and you live in Dunblane, is that correct? - Yes.

I think that you are employed by the Local Education Authority as a physical education teacher? - Yes.

And in connection with this matter I think that you have provided a number of statements including one to the Procurator-Fiscal? - Yes.

Would I be right in understanding that you would prefer to have that statement in front of you as you are giving evidence this morning? - If it would be helpful.

LORD CULLEN: Yes, I am quite content with that. I take it you have had a chance to look at this before? - Yes, I have.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY THE LORD ADVOCATE: Now, Mrs. Harrild, does that statement record that you have been a teacher since 1973 and as a physical education teacher I think you worked at a number of schools in the area? - That is correct.

And these schools include Dunblane Primary School? - That is correct.

How often did your duties take you there? - Two and a half days a fortnight.

Which days are these? - Monday afternoons, Tuesdays all day and Wednesdays all day.

Am I right in understanding that you have been visiting Dunblane for the last four years or so? - That is correct.

And your duties include working with staff of the school to plan the physical education programme for the children, to assist class teachers and to teach individual classes in physical education? - That is correct.

I wonder if we could ask you to assist us with/with the layout of Dunblane Primary School; what I propose to do is have placed on the monitor two photographs and hopefully together we can just work our way round the geography. I think you will appreciate that you are one of the first witnesses to give evidence and I want to be clear about the geography with you before we come to the particular event? - That is fine.

If you look first of all please at photograph R3; now, that is obviously an aerial view photograph which shows the two means by which vehicles can be driven into the school grounds, is that correct? - That is correct.

I understand the route from the bottom of the photographs comes from Doune Road? - That's right.

And then there is another route coming in from the top of the photograph? - Yes.

THE LORD ADVOCATE: Sorry, it may assist if I come over to where the equipment is and pointed myself.

LORD CULLEN: Certainly, if that is helpful.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY THE LORD
ADVOCATE: Now, what I propose to do is to point to various parts of the school building and talk through the various parts of the building, the various routes in; am I right in understanding if you come in from Doune Road and park a car there the main or normal entrance into the school building would be through the doorway to which I am pointing at the moment? - Yes, that would be right.

As you go in that entrance and turn into this area that I am circling there, what is that? - That is the dining room.

That is a sort of open-plan area? - Yes.

Am I right in understanding that the Headmaster's Office is somewhere in that area? - That is right, yes.

His name is? - Mr. Taylor.

What/

What is the area I am pointing to now? - That is the assembly hall.

And this area here? - That is the gymnasium.

Could you assist us, please -- we have a plan which we can also look at in a moment which we will do but if you are in this open-plan area you walk through there and turn to your left to get into the hall, is that right? - You can walk through the dining hall into the assembly hall.

When you are in the assembly hall how do you get to where the gymnasium was? - You turn to your right and you have a corridor which takes you through a set of doors towards the changing area and the gym is to your right.

We see other buildings in the grounds, are these classrooms? - Yes, they are classrooms.

Which have been separate from the main school building? - Yes.

There, there, and there? - Yes.

And then the main block of classrooms? - Yes.

Could we look again at R4 which was one of the photographs we looked at earlier; this is another view of the school from a slightly different angle? - That is correct.

If we come in from Doune Road and park somewhere in this area here you would have to walk in there to go in the entrance we were referring to earlier? - Yes, that's right.

And looking at the building from this side that is the assembly hall, isn't that right? - Yes, that's right.

That is where the gym was? - Yes.

I think we can see that there is a small area as you come out the gym and you get a view of these classrooms here? -

That is correct.

And/

And the big classroom block over there? - Yes.

If we look next please at the large plan which is on the board; we will need to get the camera changed for that; perhaps I could ask you to come up to the board and we will do our best, if you stand on that side and we will go over this again for the benefit of those who are listening. Doune Road is on that side here? - Yes.

If you go in the entrance door you go into this open-plan dining hall area? - Yes, that is correct.

There we see Mr. Taylor's study off that? - Yes.

As you told us earlier you can walk straight through the dining room hall area into the assembly hall? - Yes.

And at the far end of the assembly hall from the dining hall is the stage area? - Yes.

I think you also told us along the side of the assembly hall there is a corridor area? - That is correct.

Am I right in thinking that that is not a solid wall between the corridor and the hall? - No, a barrier.

You can walk through, you go through some doors and if you carried straight on and turned to your left that takes you into the gymnasium? - Yes.

On your right as you go along this corridor there is a small corridor that goes off to the boys' changing room and the boys' toilet? - Yes.

There is a staff room? - Yes.

Is that the room you would use when you were working in the school? - Yes.

And there is the girls' toilet? - Yes.

The/

The girls' changing room which has a shower room off it which you can only get into through the changing room? - Yes.

On the far side of the gymnasium there is a gym store? - Yes.

And I think fire doors coming out on one side of it? - Yes.

You can also see from this plan that at the far end of the gymnasium there is a door which opens out into this small area we were looking at in the photograph? - Yes.

And also the assembly hall itself appears marked on the plan as well? - Yes.

Does that fit in with your recollection of the layout? - Yes.

Now, if we can go back to the detail of your statement; I think the next paragraph confirms to us what we have already discussed -- as you go along this corridor leading along the side of the hall to the gymnasium we have got the boys' changing room and then the staff room and then the girls' changing rooms? - Yes, that is correct.

On the 13th of March of this year I think you left home about 20 to 9 in the morning with your own children and drove to Dunblane Primary School? That is correct.

That morning you would arrive about 10 to 9? - That is correct, yes.

Your own children attend the school itself? - Two of them do, yes.

That morning I think there was an assembly taking place in the hall, is that correct? - Yes, there was.

We will hear more of this in due course but I think the size of the hall is not large enough to accommodate the whole school for assembly? - That is correct.

So the practice is to split up the assemblies/assemblies between different years? - That is correct.

On your arrival at the school I think you went directly to the gym area and, in particular, to your staff room? - Yes, that is correct.

Were you expecting the first class you had to teach to arrive about 9.30? - That is correct, 9.30.

This was a class which you understood to be attending the assembly? - Yes.

Whilst you were waiting for that class did you set up some equipment within the gymnasium? - I set up a lot of equipment that morning.

I am going to ask you to look at another Production we have which you may not have seen before but it may assist us in getting the layout of the gym as clearly as possible. Could we look at R8; it is the first sheet in that Production and if a piece of paper could be laid over the front box under the bottom of the corner of the Production; if that could be put up on the screen. Now, it is not in perfect focus but I think we see at the bottom left-hand side corner of the diagram there is a door? - Yes.

And that is a door which leads into the gym? - Yes.

As you go along the corridor and turn left that is the door into the gym? - Yes, that is the door into the gym.

Using that diagram can you indicate how you set up the equipment in the gym; imagine you are standing at the door looking up into the diagram? - I went to the top of the gym and I set out two sets of ropes, I took out some sets of beams, one was set up very low for them to do some balancing work.

I am sorry to interrupt but could you move your microphone so it is between you and the monitor? - I set up two sets of ropes and took out some beams; that took quite a little while and I took out lots of mats and I had the ropes and that is/

is what you see at the top of the picture; underneath that I put several mats and I also put a bench and I started to take out smaller equipment to put at the side of the gym so that the bulk of the floor was clear, two-thirds of the floor area was empty. At the side of the gym there was mats and heavy equipment that the children would use later on.

Now, am I right in thinking that between 9 and 9.30 there was another member of staff, a Mrs. Wilson, who was present with two older children? - Yes.

But did they leave by 9.30? - Yes, they did.

And then a Mrs. Blake arrived? - Yes.

Who was she? - She is the supervisory assistant and I was surprised to see her; I had a few words with her before the class came in.

Did she explain to you why she wanted to be there that morning? - Yes.

What was the explanation? - She was there to help Mrs. Mayor at the school.

And/

And shortly thereafter, I think the primary class you were expecting arrived with their teacher, Mrs. Mayer? - Mrs. Mayer was usually very punctual. They arrived a couple of minutes after that morning, just slightly later than normal.

So are we talking about a couple of minutes after 9.30? - Yes.

Did they come into the gym immediately or did they wait outside? - They didn't come in immediately. They waited outside. They always lined up outside the door and we waited for the children to come in.

Did you then ask the class to come into the gym? - No; I spoke to them first and told them what they were going to be doing that morning. The wee ones always get very excited when they come in and see what was out, and I just went to calm them down before they came in and told them not to touch anything and just come in and find a space, that they weren't to go beyond the beams or the ropes at the top of the gym, so they were spaced out in the bottom two thirds of the gym.

Would I be right in thinking that in view of the age of the children, they changed for gym before they come anywhere near the gymnasium area? - Yes, they changed in the classroom.

And the door through which they come is a door with some glass in it so you can see through the glass? - It's a double door with glass.

You told us then that they came into the gymnasium and were asked to stand in the central area? - They were asked to stand in the space. There's a red circle on your diagram and they were spaced out throughout the gymnasium, but not beyond the top half.

So they were to be clear of the equipment in the free area? - Yes.

I think you spoke to Mrs. Mayer on her arrival; is that correct? - I spoke to Mrs. Mayer just as the class had arrived. I probably did speak to her for a couple of seconds, and she explained that she was going to be going away that morning.

She/

She was scheduled to attend a meeting? - Yes.

And was she to be relieved? - Yes.

And then I think you were really in a position to begin the gym class? - I did, yes.

With the primary class? - Mrs. Mayer had a diary with her which she put on the bench at the top of the gymnasium, and I went over to a little boy who was standing close to me near the wall and I took his glasses and put them on Mrs. Mayer's diary, and then I was ready to turn and start the class.

And am I correct in understanding that the diagram indicates in outline form there was at this stage three adults in the gymnasium and a total of 28 children? - That's right.

One child happened to be near the three adults, and the others were spread around the free area? - Yes.

At that point, did you become aware of somebody else coming into the gymnasium? - I turned, having spoken to Mrs. Mayer, just about to start the lesson, and I was aware of the doors being opened suddenly, yes.

And these are the doors leading from the corridor? - Yes.

And what was it that you saw? - A man came through the door, and it was quite normal for people to come into the gymnasium. Sometimes they would come in and give a message or ask for directions, but as soon as I turned and I saw this man, he had a woolly hat on and he had a gun in his hand extended, and he immediately began to shoot.

If we go over that slowly, first of all you noticed he had a woolly hat on? - He had a dark woolly hat and earmuffs over his ears, and a gun in his hand.

Do you know whether he was wearing glasses? - Yes, he was wearing glasses.

And/

And was it really just instantaneously that he started to shoot? - No; he took a couple of steps, and I was very close to him, and it was only a few feet, because I was about to ask him what he wanted, and looked and saw the gun, and he starting shooting.

And when were you conscious of being hit by any shots? - Immediately; I had both my arms up to protect myself, and he started to shoot indiscriminately and very quickly.

And I don't want to go into a great deal of detail about it, but I think you sustained a number of injuries about your arms; is that correct? - Yes, and my chest.

That having occurred, what did you do? - I was in a lot of shock. I couldn't quite comprehend what was happening. I turned away from the man and made towards the open store area. I stumbled towards the open store area and I then had my back to the man, and during this time he turned his attention to the children and the people in that bottom third of the gymnasium. The shooting didn't stop. It was continuous and rapid.

You have referred to the open store area. Is that round, if we look back at the plan, to the right-hand side? - Yes.

We see we have got -- no, it's still the same document please -- we have got "bench" along the bottom, then "rack"? - Yes.

And then the area to the right of that leads into this store, but there is no doorway? - No doorway; it is an open-plan store area.

So you went in that direction and you were conscious of the gun fire continuing? - Yes.

When you got into the store, which part of the store did you go to? - I got into the store area and was aware that -- I went to the far end of the store area.

And did anyone else join you? - Yes; I was aware that I was followed by some children, and Mrs. Blake also followed there. I was also aware/aware that by the time they had arrived there, they had also been shot.

Sorry; could you say that again? - By the time they had arrived in the store area behind me, they had also been shot.

These were the children and Mrs. Blake? - And Mrs. Blake.

Am I correct in understanding that you remained in that store area until members of staff appeared on the scene? - Yes.

Now, can I ask you this -- are you able to give Lord Cullen any assistance as to how long you estimate the shooting lasted? - Yes; I am fairly certain it lasted between three and four minutes because I was very aware of what was going on, and while we were there, we were trying to do our best to keep the children quiet and protect ourselves, but we were unable to move any of the equipment to protect ourselves.

During that period of time, was the shooting continuous or were there breaks at all? - At the beginning it was very rapid and very continuous and I was aware of him moving around the gymnasium, and I was aware of where he was, and I know that at certain points he was at the very top of the gymnasium.

When you say you were aware of him moving around, were you able to see him or was it just the noise that you heard? - It was the noise and the location.

If we could go back to the detail of your statement please, I think in Paragraph 15 you make some reference to having lost your glasses; is that right? - Yes.

Did they fall off when you were moving? - When I was moving towards the store area, I had difficulty getting there and I stumbled and I lost them on the way.

And then the rest of that paragraph, I think you describe what happened as the children entered the gymnasium, and in particular tell us about/about what efforts you and Mrs. Blake were doing to try and console the children, who were obviously screaming at this time? - The children were amazingly calm. They were very surprised and they were very very good when we tried to silence them. They immediately were very quiet. They just put their fingers to their lips and they were very quiet. I didn't want them to go back again into that area.

I think in Paragraph 16 of your statement, you inform us that you didn't actually see Mrs. Blake sustain injury, or Mrs. Mayer sustaining the fatal injury she suffered? - Because I was first shot and I had turned my back on them, I didn't see anybody being shot.

And then in Paragraph 17, you go on to give us a little detail about how there was a gap in the shooting; is that correct? - Yes, there was.

What you say was this -- "There was a gap in the shooting; it stopped briefly, then started again. It wasn't as continuous as it had been, nor as much or as quickly. I can't say how many more shots there were, then there was silence. There was no shooting or screaming"? - That's correct.

And then I think this paragraph goes on to tell us, as I think you have already mentioned, that other members of staff came to your assistance? - Yes. There was a period of time when everything seemed to be very quiet and it seemed to last a long time, but then eventually yes, they started moving into the gymnasium.

Are you able to put any estimate on the number of minutes between the shooting stopping and the arrival of the first member of staff? - I think possibly it was more towards the end of the shooting -- there was absolutely no noise in the gymnasium at all. The children were very very quiet, so there was no noise. It seemed like a long time, and then the shooting did stop.

And how much later was it before the first member of staff appeared? - I am sure it wasn't very long. I am sure it was very quickly, but it seemed a long time.

And/

And I think shortly thereafter, some of the local doctors appeared on the scene? - I think it was staff who came to help us, and within not too long a period, there were doctors on the scene.

I think you were then taken to hospital; is that correct?
- That is correct, yes.

And was that the Stirling Royal Infirmary? - That is correct, yes.

Where you have been treated by a number of medical staff, including a Mr. Ritchie; is that right? - That's right.

With your permission, Mrs. Harrild, what I would propose to do at a later stage is to present to Lord Cullen a medical report dealing with the injuries, but not to discuss the detail with you today? - That's fine.

Are you quite happy with that? - Yes.

Now, I think it is quite clear the man who entered the gymnasium was one Thomas Hamilton. Had you ever seen him before? - I had never seen him before.

Had you heard mention of him before? - Yes, I had heard about him.

But you had no personal dealings? - I had no personal dealings with him at all.

Would I be correct in understanding that because of the fact you had children who attended at primary school, you had in the past received certain letters about Clubs which Mr. Hamilton ran? - I had received letters over many years from Mr. Hamilton, away back in the early 80's, and I had received one fairly recently, but my children never attended any of his Clubs.

That was one point I wish to be clear about -- as a matter of fact, none of your children ever attended any of the Clubs with which he was associated? - Never.

THE/

THE LORD ADVOCATE: The next witness will be Mrs. Mary Blake. Her evidence will be read to the Inquiry by Mr. Lake. It's from her precognition she prepared for the Procurator-Fiscal following upon a meeting with her some time ago. Thereafter the Inquiry will hear from Malcolm Chisholm.

MR. LAKE: This is the statement of Mary Edith MacKinnon Shearer or Blake, Supervisory Assistant, with an address in Dunblane, who is aged 51 years. "I reside with my husband and family. In around 1985 I obtained employment with Central Regional Council as a Special Duty Attendant at Dunblane Primary School. This job entails assisting children in mainstream schooling who have special needs.

"On Wednesday, 13th March, 1996 I left home for work as usual at about 8.50 a.m. I was due to start work at 9 a.m. I walked from my home to the school and entered the school from Doune Road. I walked through the Primary One, Two and Three playground, passing the main entrance on my right and turned right towards the staffroom. I arrived there just as the first bell was ringing, a few minutes before nine. I didn't see a white van as I walked through the playground.

"After arrival in the staffroom I walked up to the Primary One classroom, where I met Mrs. Mayer standing in the classroom door with her class lined up already dressed in their gym kit. Mrs. Mayer said they were going to assembly. I said to Mrs. Mayer that I would not be needed at assembly, and arranged to meet her at the gym at half-past 9.

"I went to the machine room and cut out some covers for the Primary One books. I was there for about ten minutes, and after that I went back to Mrs. Mayer's room, as I had remembered that I had left my handbag there. When I arrived there I saw Mrs. McLeod, and I told her that she would be at assembly. She had forgotten, and immediately took her class to assembly.

"I then returned to the machine room. I remember looking out of the machine room door as assembly was just finishing. It would be near enough 9.30 a.m. I went up to the gym, past the assembly/assembly hall. The children were still there. Assembly was finished, and the children were standing up and milling about. When I arrived at the gym, Mrs. Mayer's class was not there. Mrs. Harrild was standing just inside the gym door talking to Mrs. Wilson. Mrs. Wilson takes children to the gym some mornings between 9 and 9.30 a.m. She had two Primary Four boys with her. Mrs. Wilson is a Special Assistant like me. The two boys were still in the gym getting ready to leave. I spoke to Mrs. Wilson for a minute or two and then she and the boys left.

"That left me with Mrs. Harrild in the gym. Mrs. Mayer and her class arrived, and they all came in.

"I was sitting on a bench on the right as you come in the door, just a few feet away from it. Mrs. Mayer came in and sat down beside me. Mrs. Harrild had all the ropes and equipment out, and she took the children up to the top of the gym and told them they were not to touch the equipment, as it was for another lesson. Mrs. Harrild then told the children to run around the gym to warm up. I was keeping an eye on the child I was looking after. Mrs. Mayer told Mrs. Harrild that she wouldn't be staying for the class as she had a meeting, and the Assistant Head Teacher, Mr. McCombie, was coming down to the gym to take over her class for the rest of the morning. Mrs. Mayer was sitting nearer the door than me.

"My impression is that Mrs. Harrild called the children over and that they were standing generally in front of me and quite close to me. She was talking to the children. I remember I was standing up, and I heard a noise. It may have been a door opening or closing. I cannot say if it was a shot. I remember I looked towards the door. I saw a dark figure at the door. I think Mrs. Mayer was standing when he came in.

"Then I think Mrs. Mayer was on the floor. The children were screaming. The dark figure was just inside the door. He was wearing dark clothing and he had some sort of headgear on. I was then hit, and I remember my head hurting. I realised that something terrible was happening. I fell to the ground, and I could hear constant shooting/shooting. I have a memory of him having both his hands up, but I don't know if he had a gun in both hands. He was pointing the gun all around and shooting constantly. I could hear the children screaming. It was so loud that the screams seemed to be inside my head. My head was hurting terribly. I don't remember being shot in the legs. I assume that is why I fell down, but I can't remember when I was hit on the legs.

"I don't remember how I got up. I remember being up. The children were running round hysterically, and some were on the ground. I can't recall seeing any of the injuries specifically, but I can recall blood was splattering everywhere.

"I noticed Mrs. Harrild in front of me, and she was making her way over to the store area on the same side but opposite side of the gym from the door. There is an area there like a small corridor. I could see that Mrs. Harrild was clutching her arm, and there were about four children in front of me and behind Mrs. Harrild. I ushered them forward, and as I turned the corner Mrs. Harrild was lying behind some mats.

"The children were still in front of me, and I think there were four or five of them.

"I was in pain from my head and legs. I thought this was the end. I thought if he came round the corner we would all be dead. One child kept saying 'What a bad man'. They all kept saying they were sore. One boy had a hole in his arm and was holding it. Another girl was injured, I can't recall where. I remember seeing other injuries, but I can't remember who they were on. One had a wound on his or her leg above the knee.

"I was trying to keep the children quiet, and I was shushing them. The shooting seemed to go on for ages. I could hear the children screaming, and the noise seemed to be in my head. I could feel blood running down my neck, and I had a great deal of pain in both legs. I was lying in a big puddle of blood. I kept thinking he was going to come round and get us, and I tried to pull one of the mats over us, but I was in too much pain and I couldn't. The kids were crouched down, and I was trying to cover them.

"The/

"The shooting stopped for a short time, and the children were wailing, and I heard a buzzing sound in my head. Then the shooting started again for a few seconds and then stopped again. I don't know how many more shots there were, but there weren't a lot more. I don't recall if any other children came round, but we could hear the children outside in the gym screaming and wailing.

"I remember asking Mrs. Harrild if she was all right, and she said 'He got me in the chest', but her arm was also injured. She kept holding her arm across her chest.

"We felt so helpless, as I couldn't do anything for the children as I couldn't move. I can't remember much after that other than that people came. I think the first to find us was Linda Stewart, who is a nursery teacher, who was in a terrible state, and she was saying 'What can I do?' but there was nothing she could do.

"Then Dr. Wright and Dr. Watson arrived with Dr. Susan McCallan. I am friendly with Susan McCallan. There were police there. I was so cold, and somebody gave me a wad of paper towels and held them to my head.

"What seemed a long time later, I was moved. They opened the fire doors to take us out. I was taken by ambulance to hospital.

"I didn't know the gunman had shot himself. I thought he might have escaped or surrendered.

"I was shot in the head and both legs.

"I can't really estimate the time when the gunman came in. I would say it was about ten minutes after I arrived at the gym. I don't know how long the shooting took.

"I have never seen the man who came into the gym before. Before this incident I had never met or even heard of Thomas Hamilton".

LORD CULLEN: Thank you, Mr. Lake. Is the statement signed by Mrs. Blake?

THE/

THE LORD ADVOCATE: I understand there is a signed copy available, which will be presented to you. Certain short passages have been deleted from it, where references were made to particular children.

LORD CULLEN: I understand.

THE LORD ADVOCATE: The next witness is Mr. Malcolm Chisholm, my lord.

MALCOLM RODGER CHISHOLM (52), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY THE LORD ADVOCATE: I think you were formerly a member of Strathclyde Police Force; is that correct? - Yes, I completed 30 years' police service.

And between 1973 and June of 1994 were you attached to the Identification Branch of Strathclyde Police Force? - Yes, I was.

Following upon your retirement did you take up other employment? - Yes, I did.

Do you still hold that? - Yes, I do.

What is the nature of that employment? - I am now employed by Tayside Police Force as a Scenes of Crime Officer and also a Firearms Examiner.

Can I ask you to speak slightly nearer the microphone? Throughout your career both as a police officer and now as a Scenes of Crime Officer have you had a particular interest in and made a study of firearms and ammunition which is used in firearms? - Yes, I have.

And in connection with numerous enquiries have you carried out investigations seeking to link fired bullets and fired cartridge cases with specific weapons that may have been found or been associated with particular crimes? - On many occasions, yes.

Just/

Just in general, in very simple terms at this stage, can you outline for the benefit of the Inquiry the particular techniques one uses when one is trying to link a particular cartridge case and a particular bullet with a particular firearm? - Yes. When a gun is fired, obviously the cartridge is in the chamber. When the gun is fired the hammer drops and the firing pin strikes the base of the cartridge, bursts the primer, and this creates flame, which goes out into the main body of the cartridge, ignites the propellant, pressure builds up within the chamber, and this propels the bullet into the barrel of the gun. When it comes in physical contact with the rifling within the barrel the bullet gets churned or chewed up with the rifling as it goes along the barrel. If it is a self-loading weapon the cartridge is extracted, ejected, and this also makes marks on the case of the cartridge. So from the rifling marks on the bullet, from the extractor and ejector and firing pin, we can tie discharged residue with a firearm.

On Wednesday, 13th March of this year I think accompanied by a number of police officers you attended at Dunblane Primary School? - Yes, I did.

Approximately what time was it when you arrived? - Some time after half-past 11 in the morning.

And having been briefed to some extent about what you understood had occurred did you go into the school building and through the assembly hall into the gymnasium area? - Yes. I was met at the school by Chief Inspector Robertson, I believe his name was, who took us through the outer door of the gymnasium, where I was met by another officer, who appraised me of what had happened and what the condition was inside the gymnasium.

Could I invite you because of an anxiety on all parts to in some instances limit the evidence we wish to hear to keep your answers as short as possible, and if necessary we can ask a supplementary question? I am sure you are aware of the reasons why. Taking the matter shortly at this stage, did you then in co-operation with others, in particular Donald Scobie, begin a very detailed examination of the whole school area and what was to be found there? - Yes, I did.

And/

And that was an examination which was carried out in detail both on Wednesday, 13th March and Friday, 15th March? - That is correct, yes.

At the conclusion of that investigation and as a consequence of it did you prepare a number of Productions? - Yes.

I wonder if you could formally identify these at this stage. Could you look first of all at Production R7? Does that include towards the end of the binder a copy of a joint report which you and Mr. Scobie prepared? - Yes, it does.

Document R8. That is a series of diagrams of the gymnasium and surrounding areas; is that correct? - Yes, it is.

Production R9, a tool mark examination report? - Yes.

And R10, a striker mark examination report? - Yes.

Four books of photographs, R11, R12, R13 and R14. These were photographs actually taken by Mr. Scobie as part of a joint investigation you and he were carrying out; is that correct? - Well, he accompanied my examination and photographed as requested, yes.

R11 is a book of photographs of the cloakroom area; is that correct? - Yes, it is.

R12 are a large number of photographs taken I think on the 15th, which was said to be the second physical examination of the school? - That is correct, yes.

R13 are photographs taken of the hut Classroom 7; is that right? - Yes.

And R14 photographs taken from outside the school building, showing certain parts of the playground and the playingfields and the outside areas of the school precincts? - Yes.

Could you finally look at R15 at this stage, a chart, and formally identify it at this stage? - Yes.

I don't know that we need to show it on the screen at the moment, but that is a chart of the school area with certain annotations which you put on it; is that right? - That was completed by myself, yes.

Now, am I right in understanding that when you first entered the gymnasium there were a number of bodies of people whom you were informed were dead within the gymnasium? - Prior to my going into the gymnasium I was told that everyone in the gymnasium had been pronounced dead, yes.

And when you entered the gymnasium there were a number of bodies within it; is that correct? - Yes.

Now, in taking the evidence from you I do not wish you to make reference to any body other than the body of Thomas Hamilton. You understand the way I wish to approach it? - Yes.

When you first entered the gymnasium, this was from the doors leading from the corridor which leads from the assembly hall; is that correct? - Yes.

And after you had entered did you become aware of what looked like a large camera bag lying on the floor? - Yes, it was just inside the door of the gymnasium.

I think you then saw -- and we will come on to look in detail at this in due course -- various items of equipment associated with firearms, including magazines, spent cartridges and the like lying around; is that right? - Yes, the floor was strewn with them.

Did you then go up the side of the gymnasium to the far end from the point you had entered, and were you directed to the body of the man who was Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

Could you look please at R8, if we could, please? This will be put upon the screen for you in the same way as before. This is the first page I want to look at. It is just for illustrative purposes. I appreciate this is showing the scene as it was understood to be before the/

the accident, but I just want to get the precise position. Could you use that to point out please where the body of Mr. Hamilton was? - Yes, it was at the top of the gymnasium, virtually in the centre and almost against the top wall. His head was facing towards the top wall.

What you have done is point out the area at the centre of the top wall as we look at that plan? - Yes.

Looking at that body, was it obvious to you that it showed what I think you have described in the statement you prepared as a classic gunshot exit wound to the top of the head without there being any noticeable entry wound? - That was the way I saw it, yes.

Again we will come to the detail of this in a moment or two: but as far as firearms and ammunition are concerned, what was it that you noticed at this stage as you recollect it? - From the moment I entered the gymnasium?

No, on looking at Hamilton's body? - In relation to the body I noticed that Hamilton had four holsters of the right-hand draw variety strapped round his waist. He had two pouches; one appeared over one shoulder and hung down and the other was over the other shoulder and hanging down. One had burst open, and I could see I think it was two magazines and loose .357 cartridges which had spilled on to the floor.

Yes? - On looking towards the body, toward what was obviously the top wall, to the left of the body I could see two firearms: one was a Smith and Wesson revolver with black customised hand-grips and the other was a Browning high power self-loading pistol, which appeared to have a magazine in place.

Yes? - A cursory examination showed that the revolver appeared to be full. Also, to the left of the body there was what we term ear muffs, which tutors use to deaden the noise of the gun being fired. They were lying on the floor. Also, there was a woolly-type hat which had damage to the top of it and also a pair of spectacles. To the right of the body there was another two firearms. One again was a Smith and Wesson revolver/revolver and another Browning high powered, a different type from the one lying on the left-hand from the body.

Yes? - As regards this Browning high power, there was no magazine in position, and a cursory examination again of the revolver, which I remember was lying at a funny angle -- the butt propped up in the air against a bench -- it appeared to be fully loaded also.

Taking that in summary form to the left of Mr. Hamilton's body there were two guns, is that right? - Yes, there were.

And to the right of his body there were another two guns? - Yes, there were.

So we will come back to the detail of these in due course if we can but let us try to paint a picture of the outline at the moment. Am I right in thinking that at this stage nothing was touched by you, it was just a question of observing what was there to be seen? - That is correct, yes.

In due course photographs were being taken at the appropriate juncture by Mr. Scobie? - Not at this moment in time, no.

That came later. Did you then enquire of one of the police witnesses, I think, as to who might be the owner of what looked like a camera bag which was the bag seen near the door of the gymnasium? - Yes, it was rather a large case, it was quite obvious as we came into the gymnasium.

From the information available at that time did it appear to belong to Hamilton? - I was told it belonged to Hamilton, yes.

In view of what you have seen about what was being carried by Hamilton when you looked at his body and in view of the position and size of the camera bag what suggestion did you make? - I suggested that it might be an idea to evacuate the building and also the body of Hamilton and the locked camera case, the position it was in, that it might be feasible to have the body and the camera case checked out for booby traps.

Was that suggestion taken up and an arrangement made for an examination to take place to exclude the possibility of explosives of any sort? - It was.

Whilst that was being carried out I think you then discussed with your colleagues, both Mr. Scobie and the police colleagues, the procedure you were going to follow in carrying out a detailed forensic examination of the gymnasium itself, is that right? - Yes, we did.

And/

And did that involve dividing the gymnasium up into a number of marked areas to which letters were allocated? - We decided due to the size of the gymnasium we would break it into 12 separate sections with the games equipment area being another section, if you like.

I think we will hear from Mr. Gould shortly, he arrived from the Ordnance Unit and declared that it was safe for the examination to continue and when the camera bag was opened it was found to contain more ammunition? - Yes.

Am I right in understanding that as a result of your detailed examination which you carried out on the Wednesday and the Friday and having regard to the various pieces of equipment -- guns, cartridge cases and spent bullets -- you recovered you were able to form a professional view as to the number of shots which were discharged and where Hamilton was when these shots were discharged? - Yes, I was.

What I would now like to do is to take you to the joint report and take certain information from you under reference to that report and then as we go through it give you an opportunity of explaining to the Inquiry what view you formed as to the position Hamilton was in when the various shots were discharged. Your report is R7 and I ask you to look at that again. The first seven pages of this report detail a large number of items -- certain hand gun magazines, rounds of ammunition, cartridges and the rest -- indicating what it was you took possession of and, in particular, the area where they were found, the part of the gymnasium or wherever, the body of Hamilton or wherever, is that correct? - That is correct.

I don't think it is necessary to go through that at this stage but the report sets out in considerable detail precisely what had been found, where it had been found and am I right in thinking that the photographs which were taken by Mr. Scobie illustrate what is set out in these pages? - Yes, indeed.

If we could move on to the foot of page 7 of the report, this deals with the individual guns, is that not correct? - That is correct.

I think the simplest way of taking this evidence from you would be just to ask you to read out paragraph by paragraph, beginning reading "The first item...."? - "The first item was a swing-out cylinder, six-chamber, single or double action, revolver of American manufacturer (Marcas Registradas - Smith and Wesson model 19-4) chambered for .357 Smith and Wesson, centre-fire, Magnum cartridges and bearing the serial number 48K8754. It was in very good outward condition and full working order. The gun was accompanied by five apparently live .357 Magnum centre-fire cartridges of American manufacture (Winchester), (each loaded with a semi-jacketted, soft-nosed, hollow point bullet and a fired cartridge case of the same make and calibre. This last case bore clearly defined mark of a firing pin impression in its primer)".

I think your report goes on to indicate that this gun, as with others, you subsequently carried out test shots for the purpose of your examination of the nature we have been discussing earlier?
- Yes, a comparison.

Could you read out what you have to say about the second gun? - "The second item was a swing-out cylinder, six-chamber, single or double action revolver of American manufacture Marcas Registradas - Smith and Wesson model 19-7, chambered for .357 Smith and Wesson, centre-fire, Magnum cartridges and bearing the serial number BSR4422. It was in very good outward condition and full working order. The standard wooden handgrips had been substituted with customised rubber ones. The gun was accompanied by six apparently live .357 Magnum, centre-fire cartridges of American manufacture (Winchester) each loaded with a semi-jacketted, soft-nosed, hollow point bullet. Test shots were fired in the revolver."

Read on please to the third item? - "The third item was a self-loading magazine-fed pistol of Belgian manufacture (Fabrique Nationale - Herstal Browning hi-power) chambered for 9 mm Luger centre-fire cartridges and bearing the serial number 245PZ42837 (the letters PZ in the serial number denote the year of manufacture as being 1981). This was a custom-build, competition target pistol, having an extended barrel with a barrel weight fixed to the extended barrel cover for balance. This weight/weight would appear to be missing and a custom-built foresight put in its place. The hammer spur had been removed and ground to a smooth finish. Due to its manufacturer as a competition pistol, the magazine safety had not been incorporated within the weapon with the result that gun could be fired without the magazine being in place. Normally in standard models, when the magazine is taken out a spring-loaded safety lever is forced out in the magazine well; this lever is linked to the trigger lever and forces it forward from beneath the tail of the sear-lever. Thus when the magazine is removed and a cartridge is left in the chamber, the pistol cannot be inadvertently discharged and the magazine must be replaced before firing is possible. This type of weapon, when fully loaded, normally has a holding capacity of 14 shots -- 13 in the box-type magazine which fits into the butt-handle and one in the chamber. The gun was in good outward condition and when fitted with a magazine was found to be in full working order. Another feature of this type of competition gun is the minimum pressure on the trigger required to fire it (sensitised trigger fitted during manufacture). The gun was test-fired over several shots. Accompanying this pistol was an apparently live 9 mm Luger centre-fire cartridge of Swedish manufacture (Norma) fitted with a full metal jacket, semi-wadcutter type bullet, it was suitable for use with the pistol".

When you use the term "accompanying this pistol", what do you mean by that? - Well, I would take it that this cartridge had at some time been removed from this pistol and obviously it was part of the make-up or part of the label.

Finally you describe the fourth item and if you could read that out? - "The fourth item was a self-loading magazine-fed pistol of Belgian manufacture (Fabrique Nationale - Herstal Browning hi-power) chambered for 9 mm Luger centre-fire cartridges and bearing the serial number 245PZ69756 (year of manufacture 1981). This was the standard model of the pistol and was fitted with the magazine safety device. Again, when fully loaded with the standard length box-type magazine it has a holding capacity of 14 -- 13 in the magazine and one in the chamber. The gun was in good outward condition, and fitted with a magazine was found to be in full working order. The gun was test-fired over several shots/shots and accompanying the pistol was an apparently live 9 mm Luger centre-fire cartridge of Swedish manufacture (Norma) fitted with a full metal jacket, semi-wadcutter type bullet, it was suitable for use with the pistol described".

Can I ask you this, when rounds are discharged from these four weapons what happens to the cartridges? - In relation to the two revolvers, the empty cartridge cases would stay within the cylinder, they would have to be manually ejected and a fresh cartridge loaded and when a magazine is put in a self-loading pistol every time you fire the gun the cartridge case will be ejected from that gun and a fresh cartridge will be loaded and every time you press that trigger this will happen until the magazine is empty.

The two revolvers were the first and second of the guns you described? - Yes, they were.

These were the four weapons that you had yourself seen beside Hamilton's body on the 13th? - Yes, they were.

Now, we have reached page 9 of your joint report and it goes on to deal with items 15 to 13 consisting of 25 extended box-type magazines each capable of holding 20 x 9 mm cartridges and all intended for use with Browning hi-power pistols, including the two pistols described which was the fourth of the weapons you have described, is that right? - I think you said between 15 to 13, it is 5 to 13.

I beg your pardon? - Yes, that is what I found.

You go on to record that "This type of extra long magazine would give the pistol a holding capacity of 21 shots before loading was necessary. Each magazine was marked with a yellow sticker to the front and an orange sticker to the rear. This is not standard commercial practice and is quite obviously a ploy by the individual user to show what is the front and back for speed of magazine exchange. These stickers would appear to be held in place by Sellotape. Four of the magazines were empty, three were partially full and the remaining 18 were full."

And/

And your report then goes on to set out in tabular form details about these 25 magazines, and of the particular bullets that were to be found within those that were not emptied. Perhaps if we could take this part of your evidence in reasonably short form, the magazines were all found within the gymnasium; is that correct? - Yes, they were.

Some on the deceased; is that correct? - Yes.

Some in close proximity to the deceased, Hamilton? - Yes.

And others at different marked areas within the gymnasium? - That is correct, yes.

And at the foot of this table, as I understand it, it records there are a total of 25 magazines containing three different types of ammunition? - Three different types of -- it's the same 9 millimetre Luger ammunition with three different types of bullets.

66 of one type, the round nosed Norma, 243 of the semi-wad Norma, and 84 of the hollow point FC; is that right? - That is correct, yes.

Now, perhaps I could invite you to read on underneath the table? - "Of all the magazines containing ammunition, we noted that, with the exception of the one marked with an asterisk in the list, each was loaded in a uniform manner of cartridge sequence. The magazines were loaded in two different sequences of loading with the first four cartridges in the bottom of the magazine always being the hollow point type, followed by either 11 or 15 semi-wadcutter types and topped by either five or one round nosed type. This was further emphasised by the partially full magazines. The magazine, now marked with an asterisk in the list, had two semi-wadcutter types mixed in with the five round nosed types, i.e. two round nosed, two semi-wad, three round nosed and nine semi-wad. Apart from that still retained the split and total loading. The 21 loaded and partially loaded magazines contained a total of 393 apparently live, 9 millimetre Luger centre fire cartridges, all suitable for use with the two pistols described. They consisted of 66 full metal jacket, round nosed bullet/bullet types of Swedish manufacture (Norma), 243 full metal jacket semi-wadcutter bullet types of Swedish manufacture (Norma) and 84 metal jacket, soft nosed, hollow point types of American manufacture (Federal)".

Can I ask you this, Mr. Chisholm -- have you ever come across on a previous investigation the situation where magazines were loaded in a manner similar to that you have described here, with a mixture of different types of bullet? - Certainly I have come across magazines loaded with different types. Obviously it's not easy for the criminal classes to get ammunition of the same type, but the way these magazines were loaded in a uniform manner, I have never encountered this in all my years.

Could we then move on to the top of the next page please, and read the first paragraph for us? - "The items labelled '6 cartridges', 'quantity of shells', 'box of cartridges', 'box of cartridges', and 'six rounds (ammunition)', totalled 230 apparently live rounds of .357 Magnum, centre-fire cartridges, all suitable for use with the two Smiths and Wesson revolvers previously described. They consisted of 112 rounds of American (Winchester) and 118 rounds of Swedish (Norma), each fitted with a semi-jacket, soft nosed, hollow point bullet".

Am I correct in understanding that this is ammunition which was designed for us in the first and second of the four weapons you have described? - Yes, they were.

And this was all, as your report earlier describes, found at different places within the gymnasium, some directly related to Hamilton, and some at other parts of the gymnasium? - Yes, I think the two boxes that came out of the camera case.

You were then -- your report then goes on to deal with spent casings or cartridge cases. Perhaps just read that out first of all and then I will ask you a couple of questions about that? - "The labelled items which contained the headings or part of heading "Spent casing (S)" or "Cartridge case (S)" were found to contained 105 fired 9 millimetre Luger, centre-fire cartridge cases, each containing/containing the clearly defined mark of a firing pin impression in its primer. They consisted of 89 Swedish (Norma) and 16 American (Federal)".

Now, this is dealing with a total of 105 spent cartridges, if we can use that term, and where had they been recovered from, again putting it in general terms? - The majority of them had been recovered in the gymnasium, some in the passageway outside the gymnasium, on the stage of the assembly hall, and immediately outside the fire exit door of the gymnasium.

I wonder if at this stage please I could have put up on the screen Photograph R4? Now, I am sorry this is slightly dark, but do I understand -- that is much better, thank you very much -- that from this view of the assembly hall and the gymnasium, we see the small area on to which the fire doors from the gymnasium leads; is that right? - (No answer).

Do you see the bottom hut with the dark roof, just above the top corner of the roof, there is a small area? - I don't think you see the fire exit door there.

Mr. Bonomy will come across and help you point out the area. In fact, a better idea is if I ask you to look at R11 please, Photograph E, that is in one of the books of photographs, and perhaps, once we have found it, that could be put up on the screen so that everyone can see it? That is a close-up of the view that we were trying to point out from the aerial photograph? - Yes; I knew where the fire exit door was, but I couldn't see it.

Just wait a minute and it will be shown to us -- yes, that's it there? - Yes.

Now, the next few pages of your report goes on in considerable detail to consider your examination of various bullets and bullet fragments that were recovered during the course of the investigations, and I don't propose to go into this in detail at the moment because I will take the evidence in another way shortly, but would we be correct to proceed on the clear understanding that every effort was made as a result of extensive searches to recover, seek to recover every bullet, or/or bullet fragment, that could be recovered? - Yes, we searched everywhere to try and recover everything.

Now, could I ask you to turn please to Page 13 of the report? That page tells us that as a result of the very detailed comparison exercises and investigations you carried out, that you and Mr. Scobie were able to confirm that the various bullets recovered had all been fired by one of the Browning pistols which you have described to us earlier; isn't that correct? - Yes.

Or the Browning pistol you described to us earlier, the first of the two? - (No answer).

Having established which pistol had fired the 105 cartridge cases we talked about earlier, did you then carry out some tests within the firing range at Tayside Police Headquarters in Dundee? - Yes, I did.

What were the purposes of these tests at the firing range? - The first test which we carried out was to find out how far the cartridge cases, and in what direction the cartridge cases would be ejected when they came out of the pistol.

And as a consequence of that test, or those tests, did you ascertain that it was ejected to the right at a 45 degree angle to the rear? - That is correct, yes.

And that there was sufficient power generated by the ejector within the gun to propel each fired cartridge a distance of between 15 to 20 ft.; is that right? - It was consistent, yes.

Did you also carry out tests to determine how quickly shots could be discharged from the weapon? - Yes, I did.

And your report records that using the Browning still in its cocked ready to fire position, a full magazine of 20 shots was fired off as quickly as possible. The time taken to accomplish this was 5.46 seconds; is that right? - That is correct, yes.

Using the same weapon and utilising the seven magazines used during the incident, with the relevant/relevant number of cartridges in each, you and your colleague fired off a total of 105 rounds and ejected six magazines in the process, again for the purpose of seeking to determine how quickly that could be achieved? - That is also correct.

And the result of this test was that that exercise of firing off 105 rounds and ejecting six magazines could be accomplished in 50.4 seconds? - That is correct.

Did your inquiries then proceed to seek to offer to the police officers and the Procurator-Fiscal who were in charge of the investigation your professional opinion as to where shots had been fired from, and the number of shots that had been fired from particular positions? - Yes.

And/

And in seeking to form such an opinion you took account of full details of the articles that had been recovered, the bullets, the cartridges and everything else, your own physical examination of the gymnasium and the surrounding area and the detailed examination of the cartridges and bullets, and these tests I have just been describing? - Yes.

Did you also take account of the fact that of necessity there had been some movement within the gymnasium area involving the Emergency Services and others before you arrived on the scene and began recording what you found? - Yes.

Can I ask you to read on then from the top of page 14 of your report? - "If we were to add up the live 9mm rounds and fired 9mm cartridge cases we would find that in all they would total 501 rounds. We have 25 magazines each capable of taking 20 rounds, which would account for 500 of these rounds. The Browning pistol, Serial No. 245PZ69756, was recovered with a full magazine in place plus one round in the chamber. This would account for the extra round. However, if we were to accept that this gun held 21 rounds, it would be logical to accept that the Browning pistol, Serial No. 245PZ69756, would also have held 21 shots at the commencement of the incident. While this is technically true, it would not be feasible in relation to personal safety. As already stated in our description of this weapon, the hammer spur had been removed and that area smoothed down. This has made the hammer extremely awkward and almost physically impossible to cock in a safe manner, especially when we are expecting to have a live cartridge in the chamber. Realistically, to have a full magazine and one in the chamber the gun would have to be cocked and kept in the cocked position. When you consider the minimum pressure required on the "sensitised" trigger, it would not be feasible for the gun to be carried any distance in a holster, for personal safety especially".

Yes? - "It is our considered opinion that, when Hamilton arrived at the school, the Browning pistol, Serial No. 245PZ69756, only held a full magazine and did not have one in the chamber".

I wonder if I could break off there. I wonder/wonder whether there might be slight confusion here. Am I right in understanding from what you tell us in the previous page of your report that it was the Browning pistol, Serial No. 245PZ42837, that was actually used to discharge the rounds? - Yes.

If we go back to page 8 of your report, in the third item, the third item is the Browning 245PZ42837; is that correct? - Yes.

That is the pistol that had certain alterations to it, if we could put it in these terms? - Yes. Obviously this is a mistake on my part.

I want to be quite clear about this. Going on to page 14, the first Browning you refer to is 425PZ69756, which is recovered with a full magazine plus one in the chamber; is that correct? - Yes.

But when you next refer to the Browning pistol, both in the sixth line and then further down just before we broke off, the reference number would be 245PZ42837? - Yes, that is correct.

You then go on to say "It is therefore logical to assume that all 9mm cartridges (501 in total) have been accounted for. Apart from the recovery of one fired .357 calibre cartridge and also a .357 calibre fired bullet, there does not appear to be any other issue affecting our conclusions that, when Hamilton arrived at the school he had in his possession 242 rounds of .37 Magnum cartridges, with both revolvers being fully loaded with six rounds apiece. If this is accepted, it would appear that when Hamilton arrived at the school he had at his disposal 743 rounds of ammunition, all magazines were fully loaded with 9mm ammunition, each self-loading pistol held a full magazine with one pistol having an extra round in the chamber, and each revolver being fully loaded with six times .357 rounds apiece"; is that right? - Yes, that is correct.

Now, your report then goes on to deal with the bullets which were recovered. I don't think it is necessary to go into the detail of this, but I think three paragraphs down your conclusion is "The end total unaccounted for would be at most 14 bullets/bullets", and you suggest that these might be irrecoverable for a variety of reasons, and again I don't think it is necessary to dwell on that matter. In the next few paragraphs I think you give us a little detail about the ammunition itself. Perhaps you could read out from the paragraph beginning "The 'full metal jacket'"? - "The 'full metal jacket', i.e. round-nosed and semi-wadcutter are made for both military or target shooting where an expansion of the bullet is not desired. The hollow point, although also intended for target shootings, is a very popular hunting round in America".

Yes? - "The general idea is to weaken the front part of the bullet sufficiently to have it expand upon hitting a resilient surface. The Federal bullets achieve this through the soft, hollow nose mushrooming on hitting the target and causing the petal design of the forward section of jacket to fold back over the base. The design of the bullet is to stay in the target and do the maximum amount of damage (same principle as the 'dum-dum' bullet which was banned by the Geneva Convention)".

Can I just be clear about this? These are the three types of bullet you were describing from the ammunition recovered from the 25 magazines; is that correct? - That is three types of bullet, yes.

We had 60 round-nosed Norma, 247 semi-wadcutter Norma and 84 hollow point FC; is that right? - Yes.

As far as the first two of these, round-nosed Norma and semi-wadcutter Norma, are they suitable for target shooting? - Yes.

What about the third type, the hollow point FC? - Yes, they are also used for target shooting.

But it is also apparently used for hunting purposes in North America? - Not only hunting purposes, but most of the Services in America, the Police, for example, carry this type of ammunition, for obvious reasons.

I think at the top of page 15 you give us/us some technical detail about bullets, that the round-nosed bullet weighs 115 grains, has a muzzle velocity of 115 ft. per second and a striking energy of 341 ft. pounds? - Yes.

The semi-wadcutter and hollow point bullets each weigh 124 grains. Both types of bullet have a muzzle velocity of 1140 ft. per second and a striking energy of 358 ft. pounds? - Yes.

All types have an extreme range in the region of 1 mile? - Yes.

Does that mean if you fire it out in the countryside in the open air at a certain angle it can go up to a mile in distance? - Not with the particular guns we are dealing with here. If it was firing in the Browning it would probably have a maximum range of probably 1,000 yards. This type of ammunition is obviously used in other guns.

Now, can I take you back to Production R8, which is the series of diagrams? I think the first diagram you are being shown is on the third sheet of the Production, page No. 1, which is Production R8. It might be helpful if we gave you a copy of that to have in front of you as well as the one that is going to be put up on the screen? - Thank you.

Now, am I correct in understanding that on this and the next few pages of this Production you and Mr. Scobie have sought to set out in diagrammatic form your professional opinions as to the number of rounds discharged from particular positions? - And directions, yes.

Yes: and this is described to us on pages 15 and 16 of the joint report we have just been going through? - Yes.

And this is expert evidence given by yourselves on the basis of your professional experience and your physical examination of the locus and what was recovered from the locus? - Yes.

But not on the basis of any discussions with any witnesses who were physically present at the time? - That is correct. It was from what I found/found.

Now, what you say is this, first of all: "It would appear that in the sequence of events the first shot that was fired was the one to the floor of the stage"? - Yes.

If we look at this page -- I will get Mr. Lake to help us point things out as we go through, which will enable you to remain beside the microphone. If we look at position I, the figure shown on the stage of the assembly hall, and from that position there one shot was fired, and this ended up in the floor of the stage? - It went through the floor of the stage, yes.

And you continue in your report "It is debatable whether this shot was intended or if it went off by accident. If we took a guide from the fact that all holsters were of the right side draw type, it is logical to assume that Hamilton drew the Browning pistol with his right hand and retracted the slide and cocked the gun with his left hand. If the gun at this time was pointing to the floor, it is a natural action to turn the back of the gun with the left hand to grip the slide so that the ejector port faced away from the loader. If Hamilton was facing towards the door, leading from the stage into the hallway, the ejector port would be either facing the door or the wall at the back of the stage"? - Yes.

"If the gun was fired in this position, the ejected cartridge case would go up in the air slightly towards the left and in the direction of the door. This would account for the cartridge case being recovered on the floor of the stage near the wall and door"? - Yes.

"The next shot would appear to be into the wall of the toilet from the hallway outside the entrance to the gymnasium. There does not appear to us any logical explanation for this shot or whether it was intended or accidental"? - That is correct.

You then go on to say this: "It is likely Hamilton then went through the door into the gymnasium, which would appear to have been open. From the doorway and vicinity of the doorway he has fired/fired off approximately 29 rounds, emptying a magazine and loading a fresh magazine in the process. These 29 rounds would appear to have been directed towards all parts of the gymnasium"? - Yes.

Just recapping on what we have discussed so far, your opinion is based upon where bullets were recovered, or cartridge cases were recovered and so on? - Yes.

He would then appear to have walked up the left side of the gymnasium to a point midway, where he has exhausted the second magazine in the process? - Yes.

It would appear he has fired another six shots while reaching this point? - Yes.

Then if we can move to the next sheet, please, which is page 2 in the Production, I will read this out for you. "From this position" -- that is position 4 -- "he has fired another eight rounds, mainly across the gymnasium", into an area which you describe, which was one of the areas that you marked off as you indicated earlier? - Yes.

I think, reading the matter shortly, whilst still in the general area of the middle of the gymnasium he would appear to have fired at least a further 16 rounds before moving to the top of the gymnasium? - Yes.

Can I ask that the Production be moved on to page 4, which is the figure at position 6? What you say at this point of your report is that after he had proceeded to the top of the gymnasium the sequence of events are in doubt as to their chronological order? - Yes.

Do I understand correctly from that that whilst you are able to express an opinion as to the number of shots that were fired and the direction in which those shots were fired it is not impossible for you to express any clear view as to the order in which the shots were fired? - That is correct.

In reference to this page, from the position which is marked 6, what you say is this: "From the top of the gymnasium he has fired off another/another 30 rounds and also exhausted a further two magazines. He would appear to have changed magazines a further two times, only partially using the magazines in the process. At some time he has fired a shot from this position out through the window beside the fire exit door, whether by design or otherwise", and I think you see that on the next page of the Production, page 5, with the figure at position 7? - That is correct.

What you say about this -- perhaps I can read it again -- is "At some time he has fired a shot from this position out through the window beside the fire exit door, whether by design or otherwise. The breaking of the glass has obliterated his view, and he has then opened the fire exit door and started firing towards the cloakroom from the doorway"? - Yes.

Now, it would be helpful I think to look again at the photographs that we were examining earlier, Production II. Could you look at RII, photograph E? Have you got that? - Yes.

Now/

Now, we are looking, first of all, at photograph E which shows this area to the outside of the fire exit; could you go back in the book of photographs B and could you please point out to us in that photograph where we see the cloakroom? - Yes.

It will be necessary for you to get up to do that? - The cloakroom is down here.

That is across the playground area, is that correct? - That is correct.

Whilst you are still there could you point out Classroom 7; that is one of the detached classroom buildings we have looked at in the overhead photographs? - Yes.

If you could go back to your seat, please. As you were telling us in the written report was that, in your opinion, after he had opened the fire exit door he started to fire towards the cloakroom from the doorway, that is right across the playground area that we see in the photograph on the screen; you say at least four shots were fired from this position before he stepped outside and continued to fire a further four shots towards the cloakroom and nine shots towards the classroom adjacent to the fire door? - Yes.

He had then re-entered the gymnasium and moved towards where there was a beam across the area A2 as you have described it; here he had then directed a large number of shots towards all parts of the gymnasium including the games equipment room, he would then appear to have ejected a partially full magazine from the pistol leaving one round still in the chamber; at that point he would be facing down the gymnasium near to the central upright beam in A2. We don't have obviously the door or the plan A2 marked on it but can you assist us where that was as far as the layout of the gymnasium was? - It is near the two mats -- if we look at any one of these beams running across the mat you can actually see the bar marked.

If we look at page 5 of R8 again, just point it out? - The bar goes across the middle of the mat or the beam as it is termed.

So/

So it is at that position facing down the gymnasium; is this towards the doors which he had entered originally? - Yes.

What you then go on to record in your statement describes what he did to himself and could I ask you just to read that out? - Is that page 16?

The top of page 16? - "He switched the pistol from his right hand and drew the Smith and Wesson revolver, serial number 48K8754, with his right hand. He had then placed the muzzle of this gun in his mouth, pointing upwards, and pulled the trigger. The fired bullet has exited the top of his head, impacted on the ceiling slightly behind him and dropped on to the floor in B(1). A fountain of blood has followed the bullet out of the hole in the top of his head and sprayed in virtually the same direction as the bullet on to the floor behind him. The force of the shot has thrown him in a backwards direction with the result that he has landed on his back in the position found. The recoil of the fired gun has resulted in it being torn from his grasp and landing on the floor of the gymnasium. He has managed to retain a grip on the pistol in his left hand. The solitary live cartridge, found on the floor, would appear to have been knocked out of a partially full magazine, on it being ejected from the pistol and hitting the floor."

Could I ask you to go back to the book of photographs, R11 please; I asked you earlier to point out where the cloakroom was and where Classroom 7 was? - Yes.

Both these areas would be the subject of detailed examination? - They were, yes.

And what signs of damage by gunfire was found? - As regards the cloakroom, the walls of the entrance on the right-hand side before you go into the inshot leading into the cloakroom, there was a bullet hole in this wall and on the outside fabric of the door, the window, the wood panels above and below these windows, there were bullet holes which had penetrated and gone through into the cloakroom. Obviously the bullets had been recovered from within the cloakroom and obviously the impact damage/damage which resulted within the confines of the cloakroom. As regards hut No. 7 nine bullets had penetrated the outside wall and windows; the majority of these bullets had passed through the classroom and impacted on the windows overlooking the playground and the walls, door panels and had exited into the playground.

If we look at photograph E in this book of photographs, R11; this shows a view of the Classroom 7, is that right? - That is correct.

As I understand, from what you have told us the rounds discharged by Hamilton when he is standing outside the fire exit doors of the gymnasium had gone in the far side of that building as we look at it, most of them had crossed right across the classroom and were embedded on the wall on the nearside of the room? - Yes, nine bullets had entered the classroom, some of these bullets had obviously been absorbed by various articles just inside the window -- a book, an electric plug, a book binder -- but the majority of these bullets have passed through through the classroom, some exiting through the front window.

All these were recorded carefully by you and I understand that that photograph in these Productions show in close up where the various marks were to be seen and where the bullets were recovered? - Yes.

I think, am I right in understanding that you actually have the guns with you today? - Yes.

They are available for Lord Cullen to see if he wishes to do so? - Yes.

THE LORD ADVOCATE: Sir, I would not propose to physically produce them but they are available for examination.

LORD CULLEN: Do any of the parties want to see these Productions within the Inquiry itself?

None of the parties wished to see the guns.

LORD CULLEN: I may take the opportunity to look at them in due course.

CROSS/

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Mr. Chisholm, earlier in your evidence you told us that you arrived at the gymnasium I think about 11.30 in the morning? - Yes.

And you also told us that there came a time when you were concerned about the possibility of booby traps and the like? - Yes.

Did I correctly understand that at that point or shortly after it the gymnasium was evacuated? - As soon as I made the request we exited the gymnasium.

Can you remember when it was that that happened, how long after your arrival? - Time wasn't of the essence; we got to the entrance to the gymnasium and we put on the necessary attire to go into the gymnasium. I observed, walked up the gymnasium -- 20 minutes -- say 12 o'clock.

Say round about 12? - I would say so.

A decision was taken to evacuate the building? - Probably round about 12 o'clock.

Then, we understand, of course, that checks were made and the all-clear as given; how long roughly did this process take? - I think Mr. Gould had to come from Edinburgh so that took time. I think we probably entered the gymnasium for the best part of an hour which gave us time to assess the rest of the school, so to speak; we were shown Classroom 7 and the cloakroom and also the cartridge cases lying outside the fire exit door. I think we obviously took time to have something to eat that was available at the time -- probably about two hours.

Two hours? - Possibly.

So what I am particularly interested in for present purposes is your best recollection of how long the process of checking took; in other words, how long until people could come back into the gymnasium? - (No answer).

If you don't know? - I can't honestly answer that -- it seemed ages.

Can/

Can I ask you a few questions relating to a certain passage in your joint report; at the foot of page 7 you describe the first item or the first weapon; you describe it as a swing-out cylinder, six-chamber, single or double action revolver; what are we to understand by a six-chamber, single or double action? - A weapon of that type, it is a revolver, it has a revolving cylinder which has six chambers with the result it can hold six cartridges and when you fire the gun the action on firing activates a pawl which will automatically turn the cylinder to bring a live cartridge into the hammer as you bring it over. Once you have fired that you will have a fired cartridge comes under the hammer so the next time you pull the trigger the pawl activates the cylinder action and..... When I say you pull the trigger in certain actions you have to pull back the hammer and then pull the trigger; in a double action you pull the trigger, as you pull the trigger this brings the hammer back.

What is the difference between a revolver and a pistol? - Well, a revolver has this cylinder; a pistol has, what we term, a magazine, whether it is in the butt, the side or the top it will have this magazine so that when you load a round into the chamber, cock the gun, when you fire the gun it will fire a bullet and on firing the bullet the power generated by the cartridge will fire your bullet; it will also stop backslide, if you like, and this will eject the fired cartridge case and in the process as it reaches as far back as it is going it will come forward again and as it comes forward you pick up a fresh cartridge and chamber it and in the process it will cock the weapon, it will leave the chamber in the cocked position.

Does that mean that with a pistol of that variety you can fire as many bullets as are in the magazine? - That is correct, yes.

Turning to page 8, having dealt with the second gun which you described, again a revolver, you again describe the third gun as a self-loading, magazine-fed pistol. By self-loading, magazine-fed, are we to understand the process which you have just described to me a moment ago? - Yes, that is correct.

Would/

Would this be described as an automatic weapon or a semi-automatic weapon, the revolver? - Well, if they are self-loading automatically that is when you press the trigger and you have the magazine in the gun, the pressure in the trigger will fire off all the bullets in the magazine to empty; with a self-loader obviously you have to keep pressing the trigger until it is fired.

Just pausing there, the particular pistols with which we are concerned here, each time the trigger was pulled one round of ammunition would be fired? - That is correct, yes.

And what are we to understand by a round of ammunition? - Firing off bullets, if you like.

One bullet? - One bullet, one cartridge case will be ejected.

So throughout your report when you refer to a round of ammunition are we to understand one bullet? - No, normally when I term a round it is a live cartridge; it is the terminology that is used, it is a live cartridge -- yes, it will be.

You have described the pistol used as a custom-built competition target pistol? - Yes.

Again can you elaborate on what we are to understand by that? - Yes, it is.....obviously the majority of these guns, Brownings are very popular with the Armed Forces and with certain police in America and Forces all over the world, it is one of the most sold guns, most used guns; obviously in the standard model which I have described we have models made purely for target shooting and this was one of these.

So when you refer to this gun as this type of competition gun, for example, towards the end of the main paragraph in the middle of page 8 of your report, what kind of competition are we to understand this gun would be used for? -

It/

It is obviously target shooting. It's not a gun that you would take out into the forest and shoot birds and animals with. You could, but that's not what it was designed for. It's designed purely for the slightest touch on the trigger, to discharge a round of -- the less pressure you use on the trigger, the more steady the gun will be.

I think you describe in that paragraph that certain modifications had been carried out to this weapon which in effect increased the sensitivity of the trigger mechanism? - This is made by the manufacturer, yes.

And is that with a view to assisting the user, amongst other things perhaps, in the kind of competition that you have just been referring to? - It's all geared towards that, yes.

And why would that be helpful or necessary in the kind of competition that you have been referred to? - It's a higher degree of accuracy, if you like.

It's nothing to do with how many bullets you can discharge in a short period of time? - It's purely down to the balance of the gun and the accuracy of the gun.

Turning on to Page 13, you refer to certain tests which you carried out with a view to discovering how many shots could be fired from the Browning pistol, 42837, in a certain period of time. You indicate 20 shots in 5.46 seconds? - Yes.

And again, using the seven magazines, 105 rounds in 50.4 seconds? - That's what we found.

So in layman's terms perhaps, does that mean 105 bullets in 50.4 seconds? - That's correct, yes.

Pulling the trigger each time? - Every time the trigger was pulled, a bullet was discharged.

You were asked certain questions by the Lord Advocate relating to the type of ammunition which Hamilton had in his possession on the day, and you/you drew a distinction between the metal-jacketed up bullets and the soft nosed bullets, which you pick again at the bottom of Page 4 of your report? - Yes.

You make reference to the particular design of the bullet which is designed to stay in the target, and as you put it, do the maximum amount of damage, and you told us that this was the same principle as the Dum-Dum bullet which was banned by the Geneva Convention? - Yes.

I take it the particular bullet which was used on the day, which was in Hamilton's possession on the day, is not banned by the Geneva Convention? - No.

Are you able to assist us, and please say if it is outwith your expertise, why it is that that particular type of bullet, the bullet in Hamilton's possession, is not covered by any ban along similar lines to the type of bullet banned by the Geneva Convention? - That, I can't say. I can't understand it myself. It is in general use in America. Most of the police forces in America use this type of bullet, obviously as man stoppers.

Why was the Dum-Dum bullet banned by the Geneva Convention? - It was to do with the War. It wasn't actually the Geneva Convention that brought it up. It was the Hague Conference at the turn of the century, but it was banned by the Geneva Convention. It was a 303 cartridge that was made in India, and obviously Dum-Dum was the arsenal in India where it was made, and what they did was they sectioned the front of the bullet so that when it did hit, it actually became two or three times the size. On striking, it made a bigger hole, and they reckoned this wasn't fair in war.

But are you telling us that you find it difficult to understand why the same principle should not apply to the type of bullet which Hamilton had in his possession? - If you were getting down to comparisons, a wad-cutter or a round nosed or a hollow point, they are all going to do the same if they hit in the right place.

I think finally, in the most general of terms, are we to understand that apart from the final/final shot fired by Hamilton, that all of the other bullets were fired by one weapon? - By one gun, yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: Can you tell us how commonly owned these two particular kinds of revolver and pistol are, from your own personal knowledge? - I only get them in over the years from the criminal classes. I am not a member of any Gun Club, so I don't know how popular they are, but let's put it this way -- the Browning pistol features prominently in many of the cases that I have dealt with over the years. Maybe the Smith and Wesson revolver you occasionally get one in, but they are not as popular as the self-loading pistol.

RE-EXAMINED BY THE LORD ADVOCATE: Just one point which arises out of a point that was raised -- whether or not such weapons are used by the criminal classes, am I correct in understanding that according to current law, it is possible to obtain certificates which entitles you to acquire or possess these four firearms and all the ammunition that was recovered? - You would require firearm certificates, yes.

But it is possible to acquire certificates which entitles you to hold them legally? - Yes.

BY LORD CULLEN: Can I just ask you a few questions, if I may? At Page 8, referring to the third firearm, you pointed out that it had an extended barrel. Do you see that? - Yes.

What is the practical significance of the barrel being extended? - I think it is obviously to put weights on, so that it balances the gun. When you fire, there is less of an uplift or recoil.

Has it got anything to do with its performance in the sense of accuracy or distance over which it is effective, or anything of that sort? - It has nothing to do with distance, but accuracy, yes, that is what it is geared towards.

And the other question -- at Page 10, dealing with the different types of ammunition recovered, can you tell me what is meant by the term "semi-wadcutter"?

"semi-wadcutter"? - If we were to talk about a wadcutter itself, we would have a cartridge case with a flat nosed bullet laid across the edge of the cartridge case. The bullet is actually contained completely within the cartridge case. A semi-wadcutter, it is not quite -- it's not flat right across. It's conical shaped with a flat nose. Obviously round nosed is self-explanatory.

So that is a flat nosed piece of ammunition, is that right, as compared with the other types which are round nosed or hollow point? - Yes.

And in practice, do you know are all these used in target shooting? - Yes, they are.

DAVID JOHN GOULD (32), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY THE LORD ADVOCATE: Mr. Gould, is your full name David John Gould? - Yes.

Are you 32 years of age? - I am.

Are you an ammunition technician Class 1 with the Royal Logistic Corps of the Army? - Yes, I am.

I think you have completed some 15 years' Army service? - That is correct, yes.

And are you currently based with 521EDO Squadron at Craigiehall in South Queensferry? - It's actually 521EOD Squadron.

Does your job at Craigiehall involve you in carrying out bomb disposal duties throughout the whole of Scotland? - It does.

And from time to time, are you asked to carry out this duty by members of the civilian police forces? - Yes, I am.

On the 13th March of this year during the morning, did your duties take you to Glasgow? - They did, yes.

At/

At some time during the course of the day, were you instructed to attend Dunblane Primary School? - I was, yes.

Do you recall when you received those instructions? - I believe it was around about 14.30.

That is 2.30 in the afternoon? - Yes.

Did these instructions come from Army Headquarters in England? - Yes, they came from the Joint Services EOD Operation Centre, which is the National Bomb Disposal Centre down in Didcote in Oxfordshire.

On receipt of those instructions, did you travel to Dunblane Primary School? - Yes, I did.

Approximately what time did you arrive? - I believe it was round about 20 past 3 in the afternoon.

When you arrived there, did you meet a Senior Detective Officer, Detective Chief Superintendent Ogg? - I did, yes.

In general terms, did he brief you as to what was understood to have taken place within the gymnasium at the school? - Yes.

Was there concern expressed that there might be some explosives or suspect device either in a bag or on the body of a man known as Hamilton? - It was believed that there was a small possibility that this may have been the case.

What steps did you take to check whether this concern was well founded or not? - When I arrived in the gymnasium there were a lot of people obviously carrying out an investigation. I needed to, one, because of danger if there was a device, and also because I was using X-ray equipment that has its own hazards associated with it, it required me to move the people out of the gymnasium, and I then proceeded to carry out an examination of the bag, the body of Hamilton, and the firearms that he had used.

Before we come to the detail of what you actually/actually did, when you say that there were other people within the gymnasium when you arrived, who were they? Were they police officers? - Yes, I believe so; forensic scientists and police officers.

So you requested that they physically remove themselves from the premises? - I did, yes.

And then, using techniques with which you were familiar, did you check the bag and the body of the man whom you understood to be Hamilton? - I did, yes.

Was anything found which was of any relevance to the issue of explosives or suspect devices? - No.

How long did it take you to form that conclusion? - It's difficult to say, but probably round about 15 or 20 minutes.

Were you then in a position to inform the Chief Superintendent that he and his officers could resume their investigation? - I did, yes.

Did you yourself have any dealings with four weapons that were to be seen in the gymnasium? - I did, yes. I asked -- amongst the things I was asked to clear as well as the bag and the body, were the weapons themselves, and I took X-rays of each of the four weapons to see whether there was anything unusual, or whether they had been booby-trapped themselves. They hadn't, and I then asked the police if they wished me to unload them and make them safe, which they indicated they did, and I then did that.

So with regard to all the weapons, you unloaded such cartridges as they contained? - Yes, and I indicated to the police this was exactly what I had done.

I think you were also asked to examine a vehicle which was parked within one of the playgrounds of the school? - I was.

Was that to the front of the school? - It was, yes.

Was/

Was the vehicle -- what type of vehicle was it, as you recall it? - Can I just refer to my notes?

Surely? - It was a white Ford Courier Popular 1.8D van.

Is that a van or a car? - It's a small van.

And was it parked near to a wall adjoining the playground? - I believe so, yes.

Was it also found to be clear of any explosive devices? - Yes.

It took you about 15 or 20 minutes to examine within the gymnasium? - Yes.

D.J. Gould62
Cross-examined

And/

And how long did you examine the car? - Probably a further 10 minutes.

Are you able to assist Lord Cullen about the time at which you completed the investigation you have been asked to undertake? - By the time I had finished, obviously I had to take my statement to the police, and by the time I had finished it was round about a quarter to 5.

That covers the time from your arrival and when you were briefed, your work in the gymnasium, your work in the car and the providing of a statement to the police? - Yes.

BY LORD CULLEN: When was it that you found there was nothing amiss in regard to your examination of the gym? - I didn't actually take up that time. Round about 20 minutes after I arrived. I arrived about 15.20, 10 minutes for a briefing from the police officer there and probably 20 minutes after that.

That would bring us to about half an hour after 20 past 3? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: You have told us you received your instructions to attend Dunblane at half-past 2 in the afternoon? - Yes.

Where were you at that time? - I was outside the Hilton Hotel in Glasgow.

And your instructions came from Didcot? - They did.

Can you help us as to why your instructions would come from Didcot? - Throughout the UK whenever the police invite a bomb disposal team to attend the National Reporting Centre at Didcot are the tasking force the police have to go through. Didcot ask the nearest available team. It would be at the option of Didcot, who would be aware of who was the nearest team and who could get there the quickest, and they would dispatch them.

It follows from that that you were the nearest team to Dunblane? - Yes.

We/

We have been told earlier this morning that concern about the possibility of a booby trap or something of that nature was first expressed at about midday, by a forensic scientist. Please tell us if you cannot help with this, but can you offer any explanation as to why your instructions were received by you some two and a half hours later? - I cannot comment on that. At around half-past 2 when I was tasked, as far as I am aware that was the first my National Centre at Didcot knew about it.

I take it you were the first bomb disposal officer on the scene, to your knowledge? - I was, yes.

And when you arrived people were in the gymnasium?
- Yes, they were.

Did you carry out any check as to who these people were and why they were there? - I was escorted to the gym by a policeman, and the scene was explained to me, and the bag and the body that I was being asked to look at were pointed out to me. All of the other people in there I assume were all part of the investigation.

You yourself carried out no check as to who the people that were there were? - No.

Did you instruct that the gymnasium should be evacuated? - I did.

No further cross-examination.

LORD CULLEN: We shall now rise for lunch and resume about 5 to 2.

After an adjournment for lunch.

LORD CULLEN: Shall we begin again? Lord Advocate?

THE LORD ADVOCATE: My first witness is Professor Busuttil.

ANTHONY/

ANTHONY BUSUTTIL (58), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY THE LORD ADVOCATE: What are your professional qualifications? - Doctor of Medicine, Fellow of the Royal College of Pathologists, I hold the Diploma in Medical Jurisprudence and the Fellowship of the Royal Colleges of Physicians in Edinburgh and Glasgow.

I think you are Regius Professor of Forensic Medicine at the University of Edinburgh? - I am.

I think on the 13th March of this year you were asked to work with other consultant pathologists in carrying out the necessary post-mortem examinations following upon the tragedy at Dunblane Primary School? - I was.

Could you have before you please Productions R20 and R21? Feel free to make reference to any other notes you may have with you? - Yes.

R20 is a joint report prepared by yourself and a colleague; is that correct? - Yes.

Who is that? - Dr. Hosie Tevadia, a consultant pathologist at Stirling Royal Infirmary.

And R21, which you have also been given, is in two parts, both of which are entitled "Summary of Pathologists' Reports"? - That is correct.

Am I right in thinking that in the course of your considerable experience as a pathologist there have unfortunately been occasions where you have required to participate in post-mortem examinations of a number of bodies who have died in the one incident? - Yes, I have.

When such tragedies occur is it normal practice for the pathologists involved to have some discussions about the procedure which is to be followed before the work actually commences? - Yes, decisions are taken jointly together with the local people who are involved in the incident and colleagues who are also going to be working with you.

I think in the course of the 13th March and following on into the early morning of the 14th March you worked with other colleagues and also closely with the Procurator-Fiscal at Stirling? - That is correct.

I think Production R20 tells us that after discussions involving Dr. Tevadia and the Procurator-Fiscal a decision was reached that it would be practicable to carry out the necessary examinations at the Royal Infirmary in Stirling? - Yes, having expected the facilities in conjunction with the Procurator-Fiscal and colleagues we felt this was a suitable place to carry out this investigation.

And what happened is that there were two teams of pathologists established, each consisting of two pathologists? - Yes.

You were in one team and Dr. Tevadia was in another? - That is correct.

You also had the assistance of the necessary support staff to assist in this difficult and delicate task? - Indeed.

After discussions with the Procurator-Fiscal was a decision reached that as far as examining the bodies of those who had been killed by Hamilton was concerned that the examination would be as limited as was possible? - That is correct.

And in particular a very definite decision was taken not to dissect the bodies in a way which might normally be done when someone suffers a violent death? - Absolutely.

And that applied to the children who were killed and to Mrs. Mayer? - That is correct.

As far as Hamilton is concerned, I think a different course of action was followed, and his body was subject to as detailed an examination as was possible? - Yes, a full post-mortem dissection was carried out on Hamilton.

Again in discussion with the Procurator-Fiscal, police officers and those who were assisting the relatives of the deceased at this very difficult time/time I think arrangements were made for the bodies to be viewed and identified before your examination actually commenced? - That is correct.

And one objective clearly was that as far as those who had been killed by Hamilton were concerned the examination should be completed as quickly as practicable, death certificates issued and the body then released to the relatives for burial or cremation as they chose? - That is correct.

I think the work upon which you and your colleagues were engaged began at around 4 p.m. in the afternoon of the 13th March? - That is correct.

And continued through until 4.30 the following morning? - That is right.

In relation to each of the victims who were killed by Hamilton a joint report was prepared by the two pathologists who carried out the examination? - That's correct, yes.

Recording what was observed? - Externally, yes.

The results of X-ray examinations which were carried out? - Yes; each of the bodies was X-rayed prior to the external examination, and the X-rays were examined by us.

And expressing your professional opinion as to the cause of death? - Yes.

THE LORD ADVOCATE: These reports you will appreciate are included with the red volumes that I handed over this morning.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY THE LORD
ADVOCATE: Now, I want to ask you only a very few questions indeed about the injuries sustained by those who died at the hands of Hamilton. Am I correct in understanding -- and this is looking at the totality of the examinations, including those conducted by yourself and those conducted by Dr. Tevadia -- that there was a range in the number of gunshot wounds that they had sustained? - That is correct.

Ranging/

Ranging from one up to seven? - That is right.

It follows from that obviously that the gun which we have already heard discharged all the wounds sustained by those victims was of a nature where one shot could prove fatal? - A shot to any of the body cavities would have proven fatal.

From the medical perspective were you able to support the view expressed by others that all the injuries had been sustained as a result of shots with the same type of weapon? - Yes, all the shots observed on all the bodies could have been produced by the same weapon. Different ammunition may have been used.

Am I also correct in understanding that there was a considerable variety of wounds, some of them fatal and some of them non-fatal, when looked at in isolation? - Yes, that is correct.

And it was impossible for you to tell from what precise distances particular shots had been fired? - It was not possible from an examination of the body to determine a range.

My understanding also is that your examinations disclosed no instances of a contact wound, when the gun had been in contact with a body when it was discharged? - None of the gunshot injuries were contact-type injuries.

One other matter I would like to take from you. I think you and your colleagues were able once the reports had been finalised to meet with those relatives who wished to discuss matters with you? - Yes, we made ourselves available, and I think with one exception all the relatives met us.

Now, can we turn next to deal with the question of the examination of Thomas Hamilton? Before I do that I should formally have taken from you that R21 -- and this will be obvious to his lordship -- sets out in summary form details of the particular examination? - Those are the summaries in relation to the cause of death of each individual person.

And so far as the 17 victims of Hamilton were/were concerned, they are summaries of the larger, fuller reports that can be found elsewhere? - Yes.

I was asking you to look at R22, which is the post-mortem or autopsy report of Hamilton. Can you formally confirm that is a joint report by yourself and Dr. Tevadia? - It is indeed.

Could you also have before you please Productions R23, R24, R25 and R26? Now, I would like to go through the post-mortem report of Hamilton in some detail. It records his name, Thomas Watt Hamilton, his date of birth being given as the 10th May, 1952, which made him 43 years of age on the 13th March; is that correct? - Yes.

His address as 7 Kent Road, Stirling? - That is correct.

The place of death is recorded as Dunblane Primary School, time pronounced dead 1020 hrs. on 13th March, 1996, this having been done by Dr. Kenneth Stewart, a police surgeon? - That is correct.

The time a person is pronounced dead I think is not necessarily the time he actually dies? - No, it is the time a doctor has confirmed the fact of death.

And it is recorded that the cause of death appearing on the death certificate is "gunshot injury", the certificate signed by Dr. Tevadia, the colleague who assisted you with this examination? - Yes.

And his examination was carried out as I understand it on the 14th? - Yes, it started at 1.20 p.m. on the 14th.

I think if you look back at the protocol No. R20 there is a reference to an examination between 9.30 and 1.20; is that Hamilton? - No.

Now, the second page of the report records those who were assisting at the autopsy who were present, including police officers, photographers, radiologists, and their names are all set out? - Yes.

The body we see from page 3 was identified/identified to you by two members of Strathclyde Police Force to whom the deceased was known during life? - Central Police Force.

William Whyte and George Gauld? - That is correct.

A. Busuttil

It records that before you started the autopsy the hands of the deceased which had been bagged previously into clean bags were swabbed for firearms discharge residue? - Yes.

Done by police officers of the CID of Central Scotland Police? - Yes, in our presence.

Your report goes on to record that the body had been partially unclothed at the locus? - That's right.

In the mortuary various other items of clothing are removed and no doubt this was taken possession of and labelled by the police in the normal form? - That is correct.

Some of these items were bloodstained? - Yes, they were.

The next section of your report is headed "External Examination" and it is a physical description by you of what you saw on visual examination of the body? - That is correct, yes.

I think the only specific matter I wish to take from you is you record on the last sentence of that section that there were no external features of natural disease? - That is correct.

The next section deals with the post-mortem changes, the changes after his death, and I don't think we need to trouble with that. Could I ask you to read the following section which is headed "Recent Injuries"? - Yes, reading from the report, "On the left side of the head (temporo-parietal area) 70 mm to the left of midline and 155 mm above the bridge of the nose there was a stellate irregularly rounded lacerated wound 40 mm x 35 mm with radiating splits up to 1.5 mm in length extending from its edges."

You make reference to a photograph which I don't think we have but perhaps you would point to the area on your own head? - It is in this part of the head which I am pointing to here, the top of the head just a few inches above the ear.

The left ear? - Yes, the left ear. "Emerging from the wound are fragments of bone and brain/brain tissue. The above injury is consistent with an exit wound. The head throughout showed gross deformity of its bony vault, more marked on the left side with disruption to the left eye socket causing sinking of the left socket and the surrounding facial bony tissues to well below the level of the right eye socket. The entry wound corresponding to this exit wound was located within the mouth where there is a large defect with total disruption of the upper jaw, the maxilla and hard palate". Do you wish me to carry on?

Yes? - "A post-mortem parchmented yellow based abrasion measuring 3 mm x 5 mm was seen in the region of the left hip, 130 mm below the anterior superior iliac spine and 230 mm from the midline."

So if we pause there, as far as the recent injuries were concerned, leaving aside the post-mortem matter you have just mentioned, they are limited to signs of gunshot wounds where the entry point had been located within the mouth and exit point the area in your head that you pointed to a moment ago? - Yes, that is correct.

Do you then pass to a detailed examination of the internal parts of the body? - Yes.

I don't think it is necessary to go through these in detail but as far as the head and neck are concerned when that was carried out were your findings really limited to what you would expect when a gunshot wound had been suffered in the manner which Hamilton had inflicted upon himself? - Yes, there was a track leading from the inside of the mouth to the exit wound of the skull and the tissues between the boney tissues and the brain tissue was damaged to the left of the track.

You then have a section headed "Cardiovascular System"? - Yes.

You make some reference under the sub-heading "Coronary Arteries" to some minor change but apart from that your findings were normal for a man of his age? - They were indeed.

The next heading is the "Respiratory System"; again I think there are minor matters mentioned/mentioned in relation to both lungs being slightly congested but otherwise was it normal for a man of his age? - They were indeed.

The "Digestive System" is the next sub-heading; leaving aside the gunshot injury again was it normal? - Yes, it was completely normal.

The next sub-heading is "The Genito-Urinary System, Lymphatic System and Endocrine System", and again they are all normal with the exception of the gunshot wound? - Yes.

The next sub-heading is "Cranium and Nervous System"; what did you find there? - The brain obviously showed gross damage in relation to the track of the gunshot and this brain had to be retained to be examined after prolonged fixation in formalin.

We will deal with that but otherwise was there anything of any significance? - There was nothing.

The "Muscular Skeletal System", again nothing of any significance? - There was no abnormality.

Turning to the next page in accordance with the procedure you follow for carrying out a full autopsy, did you take a number of specimens for forensic examination? - Yes, we did.

And analysis? - Yes.

And we will turn to the results of these in a moment. The next paragraph was relating to radiology. This records the results of the X-ray of his body? - Yes, that's right.

And apart from confirming the damage caused by the bullet was there anything of note discovered? - There was nothing else of note.

We next turn to the heading "Brain Examination"; perhaps you could explain to Lord Cullen and those present what this disclosed? - The brain showed evidence that it had been damaged by a gunshot; there was a track extending from below upwards with extensive damage along that track and/

and bleeding along the track and in the membranes surrounding the brain at this particular point. The only other minor, very minor abnormality, was a small or tiny nodule which was present on the outer aspect of the brain and the lining of the brain which was probably present for several years and is of no consequence.

Over on the next page the report records the result of the histology and the examination that was carried out. I think you have already dealt with the normal findings in the brain and the small nodule you mentioned but otherwise again there was no abnormality? - Apart from the very minor inflammatory changes in the thyroid gland there was no significant abnormality.

You then go on to record first of all the opinion of the cause of death and that is recorded as being a gunshot injury? - Yes, that is correct.

And perhaps you could now read to us the commentary which follows on the last page of your report? - Yes, there are six points -- the first point, "The deceased was a healthy, well-built, middle aged caucasian male. 2. "There was no evidence of natural disease both with the naked eye and by microscopical examination and microscopically from the examination of representative specimens of the internal organs", nothing that would have taken account of his behavioural abnormalities. No. 3. There was no evidence of ongoing chronic intravenous drug abuse. No. 4. Death resulted from a single gunshot discharged within the mouth from a hand gun. This is a characteristic elective site for self-infliction of such an injury in persons committing suicide. 5. Death would have been instantaneous, 6 relates to the toxicology studies of blood specimens and other remains which I removed.

Could we just look at these documents which are other reports which will be given to you; first of all, R23 is a joint report by John Oliver and Hamilton Smith? - Yes.

Which deals with the analysis of samples of blood and urine from Hamilton which you have seen for yourself? - Yes.

Perhaps/

A. Busuttil

Perhaps you could read it out for us? - "The blood sample was analysed for alcohol, acidic drugs, basic drugs, benzodiazepine drugs, opiate drugs, paracetamol, LSD, cannabinoids, amphetamines, cocaine, buprenorphine, methadone and solvents; the urine sample was analysed for alcohol. All analysis gave negative results.

Putting that in layman's terms the analysis you carried out of the blood and urine samples with a great variety of drugs and alcohol was entirely negative? - That is correct.

And you pass to the next Production, R24, this is prepared by a Dr. Ian Dale, the Department of Forensic Medicine at the University of Glasgow?

- Yes.

It records that acting on the instructions of the Procurator-Fiscal at Stirling Dr. Dale examined a sample of liver labelled as having been taken from Thomas Hamilton and was analysed for lead content and the lead concentration was recorded as being 0.25 parts per million and this is within the normal range of lead concentration? - That is correct.

There was no abnormality there either? - There was no chronic lead poisoning.

Passing on to R25 which is in two parts; the part which deal with the results of the scientific analysis is a letter by Dr. Cowan of King's College, London, dated 3rd April, 1996 which appears to record that the sample of urine which had been given to them for urinary androgens and for the presence of synthetic anabolic steroids was examined using the procedures documented in the laboratory? - Yes, that is correct.

It records that the tests were negative both for synthetic anabolic steroids and for urinary androgens? - Yes.

Again reading the matter in layman's terms there is again no abnormality there? - There is no indication that this man had been taking synthetic anabolic steroids.

Finally look at a separate report, R26; there/

there is another report prepared by Dr. Dale relating to the examination of blood labelled as having been taken from Thomas Hamilton; it records findings in relation to copper and zinc and also indicates what the normal ranges for such chemicals are; what do we draw from these? - Again the level of copper and zinc from the sample of blood taken from Thomas Hamilton was within the normal range.

These are the reports which lie behind the sixth part of the commentary? - Yes, that is correct.

HOSIE TEVADIA, (59), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY THE LORD ADVOCATE: What are your professional qualifications? - M.B., Ch.B., F.R.C.Path., D.R.C.O.G.

I think you hold the post of Consultant Pathologist at Stirling Royal Infirmary? - Yes.

And during the day of the 13th of March of this year were you asked in co-operation with Professor Busuttil, the last witness, and other pathologists to work out a procedure for dealing with the post-mortem examination of those who had died at Dunblane Primary School earlier in the day? - Yes.

Could you look please at Productions R20 and 21; I think the first document, R20, sets out the procedure which yourself and Professor Busuttil evolved after discussion with interested parties including the Procurator-Fiscal? - Yes.

And I have to take formally from you because Professor Busuttil didn't conduct all the post-mortems of the 17 people who were killed by Hamilton at Dunblane Primary School that in relation to those who you examined with your colleague, Dr. Stewart, the procedure set out in this protocol was followed? - Yes.

And in particular the full reports were prepared on the basis of the external examinations that were carried out and X-ray examinations that were/were carried out? - Yes.

R21 which you have I think still at the moment includes the summary of those post-mortems which you personally were involved in, is that correct? - Yes.

Could you also formally look at R22 and can you confirm that is a full and accurate report of the post-mortem examination of the body of Thomas Hamilton which you and Professor Busuttil carried out on the 14th of March? - Yes, that is correct.

JACK/

JACK BEATTIE (43), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY THE LORD ADVOCATE: Doctor, is your name Jack Beattie? - Yes.

I have to ask you how old you are? - 43.

And your professional qualifications? - M.B., Ch.B., F.R.C.P., D.C.H.

What post do you currently hold? - I am a consultant paediatrician at Stirling Royal Infirmary.

Could you have before you please Production R27? Do you recognise this document as one that has been prepared by you for the purposes of this Inquiry? - Yes, I do.

In the introduction, it says that it has been prepared at the request of the Procurator-Fiscal in relation to injuries sustained by those who survived the Dunblane incident. The details included are summaries of medical details, and if required, more specific information will be made available for the Inquiry? - Yes.

Could you read for us please the first paragraph after the heading "The Medical Response to the Incident"? - "At 09.48 hours on the 13th March 1996, the Accident & Emergency Department at Stirling Royal Infirmary NHS Trust received initial notification of a shooting incident at Dunblane. Within a few minutes, the full extent of the incident and the possibility of multiple child casualties or fatalities was known. A major incident was declared and the plan hospital response to such an event began.

Is Stirling Royal Infirmary a hospital which has the major incident plans available to deploy when a major incident occurs? - Yes; all hospitals by law or by organisation have to have such a plan.

Now, the site team which was assembled to go to the scene is recorded by you. It includes a number of doctors and a number of nurses; is that right? - Yes.

All/

All of whom are named? - (No answer).

It records that you went there in a police car and by ambulance, and that you arrived at Dunblane Primary School at approximately 10.15? - Yes.

On your arrival, were you guided by police officers and ambulance personnel who had already arrived, to the area of the school gymnasium? - Yes, we were.

Which you found to contain, as the report tells us, a large number of dead and injured children, and one dead adult? - Yes.

Is that the Mrs. Mayor that you are referring to? - Yes, it is.

Perhaps you could use your report to explain to Lord Cullen briefly the procedure you then followed? - Yes -- in these situations, the process is one which is termed triage, in which the first priority is to evaluate the number of casualties, those who are still alive, and to define those who are dead, and then to assist with the live casualties, who needs the immediate treatment at the site, who is beyond treatment on some occasions, and once we have assessed that initial evaluation, we then treat patients in a priority order, depending on their needs, and this also gives us the opportunity to decide who is fit for evacuation and what the sequence of evacuation might be.

Would I be correct in understanding that part of having a major incident plan involves training exercises to cope with situations where a procedure is required to be applied? - Yes, there are training episodes on a regular basis.

Your report then tells us that following this initial period of evaluation, or a period of initial evaluation, you became involved in the clinical care of the injured and also instructing other staff as to what they might do while you concentrated on those who were in the most serious critical condition? - Yes, that is correct.

Turning to the top of the page, your report records that the evacuation of patients began shortly/shortly after your arrival at the scene; is that right? - Yes, that's right.

And then in tabulated form, there are details in relation to particular individuals, which we needn't go into? - Yes.

I think you yourself accompanied one of the critically injured children to hospital, together with another less seriously injured child? - Yes, that is correct.

You then went back to the school to be sure that no other senior medical support was required of you? - That is correct.

There were of course other medical colleagues at Stirling Royal Infirmary dealing with those patients as and when they arrived there? - Yes, that is correct.

Your report records that at the Royal Infirmary, the major accident plan had been activated, operating theatres at the hospital had been cleared of planned surgical cases, and that when the patients were transferred to the Accident & Emergency Department, they were handed over to the care of individual surgical and anaesthetic teams to carry on the treating of the patient concerned? - Yes, that is correct.

The next sentence of your report refers to a secondary triage process, but perhaps if you could just briefly explain what that is? - Yes; the secondary triage process is in some ways a repeat of the first process, but at hospital when patients are re-assessed, again to try and prioritise those needing immediate surgery from those who can wait, so it is a matter of trying to sort out the very serious from the less serious.

I think you received some support in this work from a medical team from the Royal Hospital for Sick Children in Glasgow, who attended; is that right? - That is correct.

Some of the injured were sent to Falkirk and District Royal Infirmary for care, and others, as the report makes clear, required to be transferred to the Sick Kids Hospital in Glasgow because/because of the specialised treatment that was necessary? - That is correct.

I think in the next page of your report, you have a table setting out the details of how you categorise the degree of injury suffered, and they range from two who sustained no physical injury to those sustained very serious injuries indeed? - That is correct.

And the final pages of your report provide Lord Cullen with a little detail of individual patients, which I don't wish to go into, but can I take this from you -- those who sustained gunshot wounds, in some instances, it was limited to one wound, and in other instances, more; is that right? - Yes.

And individual gunshot wounds had in certain instances inflicted very very serious injuries on the patients concerned? - Yes. I would say that four of the children had potentially fatal wounds.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Just very briefly, if I may, and I don't want to go into any detail whatsoever on this, you told us that you arrived at the gymnasium approximately quarter past 10? - Uh-huh.

Having identified those children who were still alive, I think you tell us that some of them had minor injuries? - Yes.

Again, if I can stress without going into any detail, were some of those children able to identify themselves? - Yes. In fact, even the most ill child could tell me his name, so some of them were able to speak to me and identify themselves.

I take it your priority at that time would be to provide medical care? - Yes.

Rather than providing information to families? - Yes.

Just going back a little in time, is it accurate to indicate that while you were first informed of the incident at 09.48 hours, within a very short period of time, it was appreciated by you and/

and others that this was a very serious incident indeed? - Yes; we had a sequence of four meetings over two or three minutes.

And that again, just very briefly, so far as arrival at Stirling Royal Infirmary is concerned, from table one on the second page of your report? - Yes.

Do we understand that those children who were taken to the hospital all arrived round about 11 o'clock in the morning? I think it ranges from quarter to 10 to 10 past 11? - Yes.

No re-examination.

The/

THE LORD ADVOCATE: Sir, the next Production in chronological order is R28, a report prepared by Mr. Ritchie, dealing with the injuries sustained by Mrs. Harrild. Following on that matter, which I explored with her this morning, I wish only to tender that report; I see no need to go into the detail of it or to call Mr. Ritchie.

LORD CULLEN: Very well.

THE LORD ADVOCATE: Sir, the next report again in chronological order is R29, which falls to be spoken to by Michael Smith. You asked this morning, sir, for a signed copy of Mary Blake's statement, and I have it now.

MICHAEL FLEMING SMITH (50), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY THE LORD ADVOCATE: What are your professional qualifications? - Bachelor of Medicine and Surgery at the University of Edinburgh, as well as a Master of Surgery at that University. I am a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh, and I am a Master of Arts at Edinburgh University.

What post do you currently hold? - I am a consultant neurologist at Stirling Royal Infirmary NHS Trust.

Can you look at Production R29, please? Do you recognise that as a medical report which you prepared on a patient, Mary Blake? - No, this isn't about Mary Blake. I have my own copy, which has not got a number.

LORD CULLEN: If the witness has got a copy let him please use his own.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY THE LORD
ADVOCATE: This is a report signed by yourself running to three pages; is that correct? - Yes, that is correct.

With Mrs. Blake's name, date of birth and/and address on the top of it? - Yes.

I don't wish to go into a great deal of detail about this, but in outline are you able to tell us from that how many gunshot wounds Mrs. Blake sustained? - She sustained four gunshot wounds.

And again in very general terms, on which parts of her body were these inflicted? - One on the scalp, one on the left anterior thigh and two on the right anterior thigh.

I think as we may have heard from her statement this morning, she required a number of operations to be carried out; is that right? - Yes, it would be reasonable practice with this sort of wound to make an incision in the wound and to leave it open and then later to go back to do a delayed primary suture. She was in theatre on two occasions.

I think you have seen Mrs. Blake on a number of occasions since March? - Indeed I have.

From a purely surgical and physical point of view are you optimistic she will make a good recovery? - That is the case; I have no reason to think otherwise.

No cross-examination.

EDWARD GOLDIE (56), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY THE LORD ADVOCATE: I am an officer in the Central Scotland Police Force stationed at Dunblane Police Office. I have 17 years' police service.

Were you working in Dunblane Police Office on the morning of the 13th March of this year? - That is correct, sir.

Do you recall receiving a message from Police Headquarters over your personal radio about some incident occurring at Dunblane Primary School? - That is correct.

Do/

Do you recall what time that was? - Roughly about quarter to 10.

What do you recall of the message as it came to you at that time? - The message was that there was a man within the school grounds with a gun.

I think you were at the time in the company of another officer, Police Constable Sneddon? - That is correct, sir.

On receipt of this message what did you decide to do? - We left the office and headed towards the school.

Before you left the office was there a telephone call received by Constable Sneddon? - Yes.

Who was that from? - Sergeant Collins in the Control Room.

Was this about the same matter? - Yes.

How long would it have taken you to leave the office from the time the message was first received over your personal radio? - About five minutes.

As long as that? - It could be slightly less.

How long would it take to drive from Dunblane Police Office to the school? - I would say it would take about five minutes, normally.

I wonder if we could look at some overhead photographs we have got. Could you look at R1? Do you recognise that view? - I take it that is the primary school in the centre of the field, yes, sir.

It might be better if we looked at a closer photograph, R3? - Yes, sir.

That is a closer view of the school, showing the entry from Doune Road at the bottom of the photograph and another vehicular entry at the top? - Yes, sir.

Which/

Which entry did you use? - The one on the bottom side.

When you drove in -- you were in a police vehicle; is that right? - Yes, sir, that is correct.

When you drove in where did you go to? - We drove up the entrance to the school near the bottom picture. There were two cars there. We checked the interiors of the vehicles on driving in, and there was no one there. We continued on until just to the small car park at the front of the school.

As you drove in you looked to your right to see if you could see anybody around the playingfield area? - Yes.

You saw no one there? - There was no one there.

Did you then carry round on the roadway to your left behind this row of small trees into the small car park area where we see a blue car parked? - Yes.

We have heard from a previous witness that that leads from the main entrance into the school building? - Yes.

Are you able to give us your best estimation as to the time it was when you got there? - I would say about 9.50 we got there, roughly.

On entering the school did you meet anybody? - I assumed it was a teacher who met us at the front door; it was a woman with grey hair.

A female adult you met? - Yes.

Some time thereafter other police officers I think arrived; is that right? - Yes, after we had been to the gym.

Are you able to give us any assistance as to the time by which other officers had arrived, or were you so concerned about what you were observing that you were not in a position to do so? - It seemed quite a while, but it could only have been/been a short time before officers did arrive.

No cross-examination.

LESLIE CAMPBELL GOW HAIRE (38), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY THE LORD ADVOCATE: I am employed as an ambulance technician by the Scottish Ambulance Service, based at Callander.

Were you on duty on the morning of Wednesday, 13th March of this year in Callander? - Yes, sir, that is correct.

Some time in the earlier part of the morning did you receive a telephone call from the Ambulance Centre in Motherwell about Dunblane Primary School? - Yes, sir.

Can you recall when that message came to you? - 9.44.

Could you look please at what I hope is Production R30, a handwritten note? Do you recognise that piece of paper? - Yes.

Who prepared it? - I got the times from my log sheet, which times I have passed on to my controller, then I put the times on my log sheet.

When ambulance men are going about their duties they require to record the times when they receive messages, when they arrive at scenes of accidents, when they go to hospitals and so forth; is that correct? - Yes, that is correct.

Do I understand you have taken from the records which are kept in connection with this matter various times relative to what you did that day? - That is correct.

We see the first entry is when you were dispatched from Callander at 9.44? - That is correct, sir.

Was that in response to a message from your Central Control relating to some incident involving/involving a shooting of children at Dunblane Primary School? - That is correct.

The route from Callander to Dunblane takes you through the Village of Doune and into Doune Road and Dunblane itself? - Yes, sir.

Was it from that road that you entered into the primary school? - Yes, sir.

The sheet informs us that you arrived there at 9.57? - That is correct.

What does the next entry mean "Called major incident 10.01 approximately"? - That is to inform the Control that what we have appeared to be a major incident.

That is a message sent by you to your Control confirming that you were at the scene, that this was a genuine report and it was a major incident? - I arrived on the scene at 9.57, and after we made our assessment I came back out to the ambulance and radio-ed for some back-up.

Now, I don't want you to give us any details about any of the patients you dealt with that morning as far as to who they were or what injuries they sustained; but I think the sheet goes on to record that you left the scene, the school, at 10.15 with one patient and arrived at the Royal Infirmary in Stirling at 10.25? - That is correct.

You then headed back to the school a few minutes later, getting back there at 10.37? - That is correct, sir.

Then you did a second trip from the school with a patient, leaving at 10.49 and arriving 10 minutes later at 10.59? - Yes, sir.

And at this stage you took Sister Hyslop to the school; is that right? - Yes, she escorted us down with the second patient with Dr. Stewart, and she requested to go back up to the scene.

The there seems to have been a final trip back to the hospital with certain medical staff, Dr. Beattie, Sister Hyslop and others? - Yes, sir, that is correct.

No cross-examination.

THE/

THE LORD ADVOCATE: Sir, Mr. Lake will now read the statement of George Anderson.

MR. LAKE: This is the statement of George Anderson, British Telecom engineer, 32 years old.

"I am employed by British Telecom as a telephone engineer. My main function is to repair faults on customer telephones.

"On Thursday, 14th March, 1996 I called at Doune Road, Dunblane, to carry out repairs as several complaints had been received from residents that their telephones were not operating.

"About 9.15 that day I was at the Exchange and established that the faults were underground.

"About 9.45 a.m. the same date I arrived at Doune Road near to the new Tesco shop. Examination of the lines there revealed that the fault led to the line pole DP31 situated within the grounds of Dunblane Primary School at the rear of Rokeby House, Doune Road, Dunblane.

"On gaining access to this pole, about 10.45 a.m. on Thursday, 14th March, 1996 I established that the fault was going back from the pole to the underground cable. I went to the junction at Doune Road near to the school, but I could not identify the lines. I returned to the pole and was listening on an amplifier to hear the tones. The tone was connected to a line on the pole.

"I was standing on the ground at this point and I glanced down to the bottom of the pole. I then saw that the cable going into the ground at the back of the pole had been cut.

"I stopped work and informed the police". That is a signed statement.

THE LORD ADVOCATE: Sir, the next witness is Michael Baxter, who will speak to Productions 16, 17 and 18.

MICHAEL/

MICHAEL BAXTER (40), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY THE LORD ADVOCATE: Are you employed as a forensic scientist? - Yes, I am.

Is that at the Police Forensic Science Laboratory, Tayside Police Headquarters in Dundee? - Yes; I am head of the laboratory.

What are your professional qualifications? - I have a Bachelor of Science Degree in Molecular Biology, and I am a Chartered Biologist and a Member of the Institute of Biology by Examination by Chemistry.

Could you look at Productions R16, R17 and R18? - Yes.

Do you recognise these three joint reports as having been prepared in the laboratory of which you are in charge? - Yes.

The first report is prepared by you and a colleague, the second by yourself and the same colleague and the third by two other colleagues; is that right? - That is correct.

Can I just briefly take from you what the contents of these reports are; the first report, R16, deals with the examination of blood samples taken from Thomas Hamilton, is that correct? - Yes.

The second report deals with the examination of a quantity of boys' swimming trunks which bear to have been found in bags in the front bedroom of 7 Kent Road, Stirling, on the 20th of March, 1996? - Yes.

What the report says is this -- "The above items were examined and found to comprise of a large yellow plastic container with a red cap with PAINS-WESSEX SCHERMULY written on the outside, and a rope handle. On opening the container, thirty-seven pairs of children's swimming trunks were found lying loose, followed by a Littlewoods bag containing a further fifteen pairs of children's swimming trunks. There was another Littlewoods bag with eleven pairs of swimming trunks, at the base of the container. A number of the sixty-three pairs of swimming trunks had one or both of the labels removed but by comparison with those where labels were still present, the wearer age range was mainly 8 to 10 with some at 7 to 8, 8 to 9 and 9 to 10 years. The eleven pairs of swimming trunks found in the second Littlewood bag, were generally stained with a white substance. Part of this white substance was analysed and found to be a paint-like substance. All sixty-three pairs of swimming trunks were further examined, and nothing further of significance was found."? - Yes.

When you say they were further examined, can you give Lord Cullen and those present an indication of what sort of substances you were looking for? - Yes, any obvious bloodstains or signs of the presence of semen; all presumptive tests for the presence of semen gave negative results.

Can you recall whether these swimming trunks gave the impression of being used or were they in a new condition? - No, there were two Littlewoods bags of swimming trunks and inside them at the top of the container were some new swimming trunks and the other bag of swimming trunks seemed to be fairly old, the ones towards the top looked more/more recent.

Did they all show some signs of being straight out of the wrapper? - I wouldn't say that -- some of them looked fairly new but quite a number of the labels had been removed.

Now, finally can we look briefly at R18; this is a report prepared by other colleagues but in the context of this Inquiry we can take the evidence from you. The purpose of this report is to deal with the examination of various bloodstains found on the clothing of Thomas Hamilton when his body was recovered, is that right? - Yes.

And what the report concludes, having dealt with DNA profiling, the results of various tests that were carried out was that there is no indication that the bloodstaining on the clothing of Thomas Hamilton came from anyone other than himself, is that right? - That is correct.

As far as the number of specific stains that were found are concerned there was a very strong indication that the blood had come from Hamilton, is that right? - Yes, the majority of these stains.

In a fewer number there was a moderate indication that the blood came from Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

We don't need to go into the details of these obviously but the results indicate a strong probability that the blood came from Hamilton, but more importantly, it gave you no indication whatsoever that the blood came from anybody else? - That is correct.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Just one matter if I may -- look again at R17 on your report concerning the swimming trunks? - Yes.

You make no mention there of the colour of swimming trunks? - That is correct, yes.

Could you tell us anything about the colour? - Yes, the majority of swimming trunks were mainly black but there were other colours including red and blue and green, multi-coloured green, / green, red and blue as well and the majority were black with a white or red motif on them.

JOHN OGG, (49), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: Are you a Detective Chief Superintendent with Central Scotland Police? - Yes, I am.

How long have you been in the police? - 30 years.

How much of your service has been with Central Scotland Police? - All my service.

What is the area that your police force covers? - Central Region -- well, what was Central Region.

Is that still the position since the reorganisation of the local authority? - Yes, it is.

So Dunblane, both before the incident and since the incident, falls within the jurisdiction of Central Scotland Police? - Yes, it does.

Could you give us just a very brief description of Dunblane itself; first of all, can you tell me what the population is roughly of the City of Dunblane? - It is about 8,000.

Is the town industrial or is it a town which may be referred to as a dormitory town? - A dormitory town.

The people in Dunblane work generally where? - In Glasgow or Edinburgh or Stirling, they tend to commute.

A number will work locally? - Yes.

Is Dunblane a place that is easily accessible from most of the Central Belt of Scotland? - Yes, it is, it has a good motorway link.

I think it also is linked regularly by trains/trains from both Glasgow and Edinburgh? - Yes, it has a regular train service.

Since the reorganisation of the local authority into which jurisdiction does it now fall? - Stirling.

And before the reorganisation which authorities were responsible for Dunblane? - Central Region and Stirling District Council.

As at the 13th March this year how many schools were there in Dunblane? - There was Dunblane High School, Dunblane Primary School, and also Queen Victoria School.

Is there a further primary school planned or being built in the area? - That's right.

When was it that you first learned of the events at the primary school? - About 9.40, 9.45 that morning.

Were were you? - I was in my office at Police Headquarters.

How did you find out? - One of my officers came and told me that there was a suggestion that there had been a shooting incident at the primary school.

What was your immediate reaction to that? - I asked him to get more information, he came back minutes later and said that he thought there were fatalities involved and I then travelled to the school.

When did you get there? - About 5 past 10, perhaps 10 past 10.

There was already a police presence there by that time? - Yes, there was.

As a result of these investigations you have made have you established at what time the police presence first got there? - About 9.50.

Have you been able to establish when the police were first alerted to the incident? - 9.41.

And/

And has that been done by reference to telephone records? - It was.

Now, can you just confirm that time, have you got the exact time of that in your mind? - 9.41 the phone call was made.

Once you got there what were your responsibilities? - The Chief Constable appointed me as senior investigating officer.

And throughout this enquiry have you retained the position of senior investigating officer? - Yes, I have.

I take it that various aspects of the whole enquiry have been delegated to other officers? - They were.

In due course we will hear from a number of individual officers who have investigated certain aspects of the enquiry? - Yes, that is correct.

And so far as the incident itself is concerned I am going to ask you a number of questions about the results of the police investigation and I am going to ask you to summarise the results in so far as we have not heard this from witnesses this morning or will not hear them from witnesses yet to come but there are other areas in which you have been involved, is that right? - I have been involved in the whole enquiry.

So you will be required to come back later to deal with certain other elements of the investigation. I want to start just now by looking at some of the details immediately before and during the incident itself and I think you have compiled your own statement in the form of a report setting out the information that you have managed to put together from various Forces? - Yes.

If you could have that in front of you and could you first of all turn to the second page of it; at the very foot of that page you refer to a sighting of a man answering Hamilton's description by a witness at about 9.30 a.m.? - The is correct.

But I think just before that there was a sighting by another lady, a Mrs. Newbiggings? - That/

That is correct, at the rear of the school.

Now, you will be given a copy of Mrs. Newbiggings' statement and if you could have that in front of you and you will see that is a signed statement from her and if you look at the first page does she confirm at the end of the third paragraph that she was at the school at about 9.28? - She does.

And that she drove there by the Cawder Road entrance? - Yes.

Now, if we could have the photograph on the screen, R3 I think; do we see there that there are two entrances to the school top and bottom of the photograph and the Cawder one is the top one? - That is correct.

And I think after that at the foot of the second page of your statement you confirm a sighting by Mrs. McMillan? - I do.

And that is from the other entrance to the school, is that right? - That is correct.

And she saw at that stage a white van with a man bearing the description of Hamilton, similar to the white van at the top entrance seen approaching the school from the road at the bottom as we see it in that photograph? - Yes.

I think that Mrs. McMillan also confirms that the van turned left from Doune Road into the road leading into the school? - It did.

And therefore it came from the left-hand side of that photograph as we look at it? - That is correct.

Can I take it that from the Cawder Road entrance road to the one off Doune Road you can drive up going virtually in a circle? - That is correct.

And that that journey would just take a matter of two or three minutes? - That is correct.

I think also Mrs. Hamilton's statement told/told you that the driver was driving very slowly? - That is correct.

We have just had read to us a statement by Mr. Anderson, a British Telecom engineer, about the cutting of a wire, a telephone wire; can you tell us from that photograph where it was?
- It was at the top of the telegraph pole -- there is a vehicle parked almost directly under it in the photograph.

I think as we look at that photograph it is against a sort of fence or a hedge, is that right? - That is correct.

Where is the hole? - There are two vehicles -- it is the blue vehicle, I think it is blue.

You can see a hole dimly in the photograph? - Yes.

There's a vehicle right beside it? - That is correct.

Perhaps if you just went over to the image so you can stick a pen on the hole; I think the Tayside forensic scientist lab. was able to confirm that the pliers which were recovered from the scene and were in Hamilton's possession had actually cut the wire?
- That is correct.

Were you able to establish what the wire related to? - It was the telephone supply to the houses surrounding the school, not in the school itself.

So the cutting of the wire had no effect on the telephone communication at the school? - None.

Could I ask you now just again very briefly to have Mrs. McMillan's statement in front of you and to go to page 3 of that.
This is the statement of Mrs. Audrey McMillan. Could you go to page 3 of that and read paragraph 16? - "This man was out of his van at this point and looked directly at us. He walked round the side of the van, the driver's side, and opened both rear doors. I then noticed him lean into the van, I couldn't see his head but I could see his legs under the door."

Go/

Go to paragraph 18 now, the first one over the page?
- "He was inside the van for a second and he turned round with his back to me and laid down a silvery grey plastic sheet that he unfolded on the ground; it looked as if it was a tool wrap which had objects in it because there was lumps but I couldn't say what it was."

Just stop there -- so we have him by 9.30 in that area where the hole is unwrapping something that may contain tools? - That is correct.

Which had come from the van? - That is correct.

Now, moving on, I think you have done your best on the basis of all the information available to estimate the time at which the first shot was fired? - That is correct.

What/

What is your conclusion about that? -

About 9.37.

And why do you reach that conclusion? - The Headmaster, Mr. Taylor, was on the telephone. The itemised calling shows that that call was made at 9.38 and 52 seconds, just shortly before 9.39. The phone call to the police was at 9.31 and that's when a witness came in and told the Headmaster to contact the police, that someone was in the school with a gun. The ballistics evidence indicated that the shots that were fired could be discharged in 10.2 seconds, so it is working from these calculations.

I think the ballistics information was it could be discharged in 50 seconds? - Sorry -- 50.2 seconds.

But what we do have is a fixed time for Mr. Taylor's telephone call to a colleague at 9.38 and 51 seconds? - That is correct.

And that is confirmed by telephone record? - It is.

And we have the call to the police by Mr. Taylor, a 999 call? - It wasn't a treble 9 call.

From the school at 9.41? - Yes, but it wasn't treble 9. It was an ordinary call.

An ordinary call at 9.41? - (No answer).

So by 9.41, someone has alerted you to the fact that shooting is taking place in the school? - That is correct.

Now, the 50.2 seconds we have heard evidence about already. That's the time it would take to discharge 105 shots, shooting constantly without interruption? - That is correct.

If I can take you to Page 4, we have heard some evidence of the order of events today already, but your information confirms that Mrs. Harrild was the first person shot? - That is correct.
That/

That probably Mrs. Mayer and then Mrs. Blake were shot; is that right? - That is correct.

We have also heard of the spraying of shots around the gymnasium, and then further shooting from various points which we have seen on diagrams, and throughout that time, the magazines were being changed? - That is correct.

And magazines were found around the gymnasium? - That is correct.

But if I can take you now to Page 5 at the top, I think you can tell us something about the events affecting a pupil, who was a pupil in one of the primary seven classes? - That is correct.

Now, it is important to retain the privacy of the various witnesses involved who are youngsters in particular, and it is important that when you give an account of this, that it is on the basis that this is simply a child involved without giving us any names. Can you tell the Tribunal what exactly happened in relation to the child who left the primary seven class? - He walked up the side of the gym, that is the south side of the gym.

Can you tell us from the photograph which side that is? - He left the classroom here and walked up this way here and round to this classroom here.

Now, in the course of the taking the route from the primary seven huts along the gymnasium and then down the right-hand side of the gymnasium as we look at it, did he observe anything happening? - He saw Hamilton in the first position when he entered the gymnasium and then he also saw him in the middle of the gymnasium discharging shots. Hamilton, it would appear, noticed him, and discharged a shot in his direction, and he was injured by breaking glass.

Where roughly was he when he was shot at by Hamilton? - He must have been in this area here.

So he is going down the right-hand side of the gymnasium at that stage as we look at it? - As/

As we look at it, yes.

And I think there is a hole in the window consistent with the bullet that sent glass in the direction of the pupil? - That is correct.

Now, I think your investigation leads you to the conclusion that Hamilton, after being near the entrance to the gymnasium and then further up the gymnasium, also fired shots at the top end of the gymnasium? - That is correct.

Both back down the way and also out in the direction of other buildings? - That is correct.

And that he actually went outside? - He did.

Are you able to work out from what you have gathered from eye-witnesses, along with the ballistics information, roughly the order of these events? - Yes.

What can you tell us about that? - From the time he entered the gym?

Well, I think we know that he sprayed something like 29 shots around the gymnasium and that he was halfway up the gymnasium and directed shots in a certain direction. Once he gets towards the top end, can you tell us something of his actions? - After he dispersed the firearm in the middle of the gymnasium, he then walked in a semi-circle and discharged more shots there. He then moved up nearer the top of the gymnasium and discharged a shot through the window at the east side of the gymnasium down towards the library entrance. He then discharged -- he opened the fire escape doors and discharged four shots from within the gymnasium out towards the library.

When you say the library, do you mean across to the main building? - That is correct.

The two-storey building? - That is correct.

So he is shooting more or less straight across? - Uh-huh.

Yes;/

Yes; carry on? - He fires four shots from within the gymnasium in that direction and then he steps out of the fire escape door and discharges another four shots from there. He then turns his attention to the primary seven hut at the right-hand side of the fire escape and fires nine shots into that.

If you look now at Photograph R4 please? There, we are looking at the gymnasium from a rather different direction and we can see a part of the sort of platform you walk out on to if you emerge from the fire escape? - That is correct.

That is where he went and started shooting across at the entrance to the main building and also at the primary seven hut? - That is correct.

And we can see in that photograph just how close the primary seven hut is? - It's very close.

That is Mrs. Gordon's class, I think? - That is correct.

Which was in the first part of the hut; how many shots were discharged in there? - Nine.

No child was injured there? - No.

What action did Mrs. Gordon take? - Mrs. Gordon noticed him in the gymnasium firing his firearm, and she told her class to get down on the floor, which is very fortunate, because one of the bullet holes was through the back of the chair.

I think a number of bullets were actually recovered from that particular classroom? - That is correct. Four exited from the windows at the opposite end of the classroom.

Now, at the main building, however, there was some injury? - That's right.

And one of the teaching staff there sustained injury? - That's right. She was walking along the corridor.

Who was that? - Mrs. Tweddle.

Was/

Was she on the upper or the lower level? - Lower level.

And which part of the body was she struck on? - A glancing blow to the head.

Could you perhaps look at R11, which is a book of photographs, and at Photograph B? If we could have that please on the imager? Now, there, do we see on the right the primary seven class? - That is correct.

Straight ahead, the entrance way, the sort of alcove entrance way at which some of the shots were directed? - That is correct.

That is where one of the members of staff was struck? - She was in the corridor, yes.

And do we see also the fence along the side of the raised paved area, on to which Hamilton emerged through the emergency fire doors to fire these shots? - That is correct, at the bottom left-hand of the picture.

Just before all this happened, a class had gone from one of the other parts of that hut across to the main building to an art room? - That is correct.

A pupil was sent back? - He was.

What happened to him? - He saw Hamilton at the door, at the fire exit door of the gym discharging his firearm. He saw him level the gun in his general direction, but he wasn't injured.

The gun was pointed at him? - That is correct.

He was simply going back a message that he had been instructed to go by one of the teachers? - He was going to get scissors, I think it was.

Now, does the evidence that you have seen suggest to you when Hamilton went back into the gymnasium, he fired some more shots? - It's thought he fired five or six shots when he returned to the gym.

Could you look now please at R8, and just/just have this in front of you and not on the imager please, and would you look at Page 3 of that? - Yes.

I think that earlier in your evidence, you did mention a series of shots fired in a semi-circle? - That is correct.

And does this diagram portray that? - Yes.

And is it clear also from your investigation that some of the shots fired at this stage resulted in bullets being embedded in the floor? - That is correct.

Now, one of the members of staff from whom you have information, I think, is Mr. Scott; is that right? - That is correct.

Could you have now his statement in front of you? Is that the statement of David Duke Scott, a student teacher from Dunblane? - It is.

Now, what were his movements around the time this was happening? - He was in the art class when this was happening and witnessed Hamilton shooting.

Was he able to see into the gymnasium? - Yes.

I think, so far as Hamilton's own position is concerned, any time he describes his arms, they are actually pointing out the way in front of him in a sort of shooting position? - That is correct.

And I think if you go to Paragraph 19, he says that after he went back into the gymnasium from the paved area outside, he fired the gun about six times? - That is correct.

And/

And that was a very quick sensation, with only a second between firing? - Yes.

You were not aware whether he was firing at anyone there, because you couldn't see anyone in the room at that point? - Yes.

Could you read paragraph 20? - "...there was a lapse of time of about five seconds. He took one pace backwards and he lowered the gun. He appeared to make some form of motion with his hand in his clothing; I don't know what he did with his clothing. Then he turned the gun on himself, close to his face, holding the gun in his right hand. I couldn't see if he put the gun into his mouth or just his face. I couldn't say if it was the same gun I seen him with earlier or a different gun. I then heard a shot. The man's head went slowly backwards with a jolt, his knees folded and he landed on the floor on his back."

If I could take you on to page 7 of your own statement, I think you are able to establish that it was Mr. Scott who was able to relay information to other members of staff that the gunman, Hamilton, had shot himself? - That is correct.

Now, the exact sequence of events thereafter we will probably hear more from other witnesses about: but I think towards the bottom of that page you confirm that another member of staff, Mrs. Eddington, telephoned Ambulance Control at 9.43? - That is correct.

And that coincides with the information in the ambulance log? - That is correct.

And we have heard from Mr. Haire earlier that the first ambulance arrived at 9.57? - That is correct.

One of the men to go into the gymnasium fairly shortly after the incident was over was Mr. Currie, the janitor? - Yes.

He was not the only one, but I think you got some information from his evidence and that of others about where guns might have been at that stage? - That is correct.

Can/

Can you tell me what you have been able to establish about the guns themselves and where they were at that point? - One gun was in his hand, another was in the holster. Mr. Currie removed or kicked one of the guns out of his hand and removed the other one and put it across. When the police arrived, however, there were four guns on the floor. We never managed to trace anyone who spoke to moving the fourth gun.

I am going to ask you now to look briefly at another photograph.

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, it may be you should just have a quick glance at photograph R19. I think there is only one photograph there. It may be disturbing to some people, but I doubt if it really is in the circumstances of the case. I propose to put it in the imager.

LORD CULLEN: I have no objection to doing that, Mr. Bonomy.

MR. BONOMOY: Thank you sir.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: You will see that is the photograph of the top end of the gymnasium? - That is correct.

With the body of Thomas Hamilton where it has already been described to us as being? - Yes.

Do you know when that photograph was taken? - Yes, that was taken by a police photographer probably some time after 11 o'clock that morning.

That is before the guns were made safe by the Bomb Disposal Officer? - Yes.

Because there is no sign of the ammunition he removed from the guns? - That is correct.

We see four guns in the photograph? - Yes.

Can you confirm to me that the one on the left, marked "Gun 3", the Smith and Wesson, is the one he shot himself with? - That is correct.

And/

And "Gun 4", the Browning, was the one used to do all the damage? - Yes, that is correct.

And we see at the far end towards the windows the other two guns together? - Yes.

That was the other Browning and the Smith and Wesson that were never used? - Yes, that is correct.

Are these in the positions as the police found them? - That is correct.

I think just to complete the picture inside the gymnasium for formal purposes and so that Lord Cullen is fully advised of matters would you look please at R8? Can you confirm to me that that shows the resultant positions of various people in the gymnasium, when the police arrived on the scene? - Did you say page 2?

It is the second diagram, headed "Gymnasium After Incident"? - Yes.

It has got a circle where Hamilton was at the top? - That is correct.

Does that show the positions of the various victims in the gymnasium when the police arrived on the scene? - No, it shows the position of the victims that we co-related would in all probability be immediately after the shooting.

In other words, activity taking place before the police got on the scene would have altered this picture? - That is correct.

Now, I think that many of the staff of the school were then involved in a whole variety of activities to try and bring assistance and comfort to the people who had been injured? - That is correct.

I want to turn away now a bit from the events in themselves, the actual shooting, to the immediate aftermath. As a result of the message to you or telling you that there was a shooting in the school were steps taken to alert armed police officers? - Yes.

What/

What was done about that? - An Armed Response Team was brought together and arrived at Dunblane Police Office at 10.10.

Where would they have come from? - They were on-duty officers coming from Headquarters.

In a situation like this, an emergency situation like this, would it be a scratch team? - It would be a holding team who would attend first.

And that would be the trained officers who happened to be immediately available on duty to go to this locus? - They would attend at the Armoury first to draw their firearms, to be issued with their firearms, and then go to the locus.

When did they get to Dunblane Police Office? - About 10.10.

By that time did you realise their assistance was pointless? - That is correct.

And were they stood down? - Yes, they were.

Are there formal steps of any kind that have to be taken to declare a major incident like this as falling into a significant category? - That is correct.

What steps are taken? - Stirling Royal Infirmary or the nearest hospitals are informed that the Emergency Services are declaring a major incident.

Whose decision is that? - In that instance it was the Chief Constable's.

By that time he has been alerted? - He was at the locus at the time. He attended the locus at the same time as I did: that would be just before 10 past 10.

At what time did you declare it a major incident? - 10 past 10.

Is it always a police decision? - No, depending on the circumstances it could be the ambulance or the medical staff, but in most instances/instances I have been at it is a police decision.

I think there was a pretty quick response from the local doctors? - That is correct.

How quickly were they on the scene? - I think they were there just after 10 o'clock, 5 past 10.

That included doctors and nurses from the Dunblane Health Centre? - That is correct.

I think you had a very prompt attendance by a doctor from Doune and one from Callander? - That is correct.

Now, it was the job of someone obviously to certify life extinct in respect of each of the deceased victims? - That is correct.

And can I take it it is no surprise to find a time later than 10.10 on a death certificate, since that reflects the time at which the doctor actually makes the pronouncement? - That is correct.

Can you tell us when the first medical team from Stirling Royal Infirmary arrived? - I think it was 10.15.

And they were followed by other teams from the same hospital? - That is correct.

Did you also have a team from Falkirk, or was the patient simply taken to Falkirk? - No, a team attended from Falkirk, and arrived there about 10.35.

Two members of the Procurator-Fiscal's staff I think were notified because of the deaths? - That is correct.

How quickly were they on the scene? - They arrived at 10.40.

Now, can you give Lord Cullen just a very general impression of the problems you faced at that stage? - The problems in respect of.....?

What you were going to do with a very large/large number of casualties on your hands who were confirmed dead, and obviously a whole host of problems. Can you give us a rough idea of how you began to cope with all the problems that must be solved? - We set up an office. The priority of course was to get the injured off to hospital. The first thing we did was put a cordon round the school. The next priority was to get the injured away to hospital, then to try and identify the deceased, and then institute enquiries, which would be followed by the appointment of Production Officers, setting up an administrative system and so on.

Now, certainly by 10.20 can I take it it is clear that there are a number of dead persons in the gymnasium? - That is correct.

How long did it take after that to remove all the injured? - The last of the injured was removed from the gymnasium by 11 a.m.

Of the people who were removed from the gymnasium, all but one actually survived? - That is correct.

If I could take the question then of identification of the various victims that were in the gymnasium, how did you begin to go about that exercise? - We were relying on the school staff. Unfortunately the one school teacher who knew the class, Mrs. Mayor, was amongst the fatalities. There was an added difficulty with the register, that it had not been completed that morning; so we were not sure who all were in the class at that particular time.

When did you establish who was absent? - Just before 11 o'clock it was suggested to us there was a possibility that two of the pupils were absent, so we despatched officers with instructions to approach with caution, because we didn't know if these were the two that were absent. It transpired that these two children were absent from school that day.

If you go to page 10 of your statement I think you set out in the bottom third or so the names of teachers who tried to assist in identifying children? - That is correct.

That/

That must have been a difficult job for anyone, a harrowing experience for anyone? - Regrettably so.

How were the teachers able to cope with that? - They did extremely well. The head teacher and his staff, the teachers who were involved, did an absolutely unbelievable job, because of the circumstances, which were extremely distressing.

I think some of the teachers may have had previous dealings with some of the children; is that right? - Yes.

Some of the nursery teachers? - Yes, it was the nursery teachers that were being used.

Can you tell us about any particular problems that arose in identifying who exactly were the victims in the gym? - Yes. At one stage we were relying on labels on clothing, one particular child had a name tag on which didn't relate to anybody in the gym. We also had a victim identified as dead in the gym and also at Stirling Royal Infirmary.

Were there school record cards referred to? - Yes. Again, unfortunately one of the victims in the gymnasium did not have a school record card. It wasn't until we reverted to the school roll that we realised that this girl was in attendance at the school.

Apart from one pupil, therefore, there were cards with names of the pupils that were in the particular class? - That is correct.

Do you remember whether these records cards had photographs of the children on them? - I don't think they had. We obtained a school photograph, but it was of little help.

Again in very general terms I would like you to tell Lord Cullen what help you think a photograph can be in circumstances like this? - On that particular day?

Yes? - It would have been of little or no use.

Dr. Beattie told us today that the children who were injured were largely and perhaps all I think able to give their own names to anyone who asked: if a doctor wanted to know, the children could say who they were. Is that your experience? - No. We had extreme difficulty that morning with communications between our Casualty Bureau and the locus. There was only one telephone into the school, which was virtually engaged, I think by anxious parents.

That was not a very clever question. Did you yourself have any direct dealings with any of the injured children? - No.

And I take it police officers largely would not be the ones communicating with the children? - No: Paramedics and doctors were.

So when you were trying to establish who the injured children are some of your communications in that connection would be with the location of the children once removed to hospital? - Yes, that is correct.

Did you have any difficulty communicating with the hospital? - Tremendous difficulty.

Can you tell us what these difficulties were? - There was only one telephone into the school. It was virtually continuously engaged, by anxious parents phoning in or the media phoning the school. We reverted to Cellnet phones. Unfortunately again, the Cell became completely blocked, again I think because the media had descended very quickly on the locus and were using up the Cellnet.

That is a mobile phone? - Yes.

So you couldn't make any use of it? - No, I couldn't make contact.

Now, I assume that the normal police communication systems do not rely on the mobile phone network? - No: the radio system not at all. That was an option open to us, but we chose not to use it, because all the information that would have been coming across was extremely sensitive, and obviously there was a very strong possibility/possibility that scanners would be used to pick up these radio messages.

How was it you went about finding out who the children were that were in hospital? - Eventually staccato fashion we managed to get through on the Cellnet phone, and we got two or three names at a time.

Do your police force engage in exercises in which disasters of one form or another are simulated with a view to seeing how you might cope with them? - Yes.

Did these exercises involve anything like this? - Nothing at all -- we have never had an exercise involving a man shooting; it is usually train crash disasters or suchlike.

In something in a building like this in a town where a large number of people can congregate quickly? - No, we have never had an incident like that.

So were the sort of problems you encountered with communications problems you were encountering for the first time? - Yes, on that scale. We suffer the same problems every time we have a major crime in a rural area, it takes two or three hours, sometimes longer than that, to get additional phones in.

In the later part of that period, between say 10.15 and 1.15, we are talking about three hours or so, in that latter part of that period were you still looking for information about a number of children or was it just the odd one that was outstanding? - A number of children we were looking for information -- we were reasonably satisfied that we had identification almost complete at 12.04; we had information from the hospital that there was another victim or that there was a victim who was in the hospital who had actually been identified as being in the gymnasium.

Now, as a result of this did you make any particular decision about how and when the news of the death or injury would be conveyed to parents or close relatives of the victims? - As soon as we got information about the injured we started to convey that information which was before the parents of the deceased had been informed..... The decision made or my decision at that time we should be 100 per cent sure that we have all the children identified for fear of informing the wrong parents.

I think there is some anxiety on the part of some people and the parents who were involved here and these are parents of injured children rather than children who died that perhaps more could have been done to match up the injured children with their parents a bit more quickly? - In retrospect it was a decision we made at the time although some of the injured children were away to the hospital before police resources arrived in any strength. We felt it was insensitive to note the children's names as they were going to the hospital but in retrospect perhaps we should have done that.

There was the odd situation here where perhaps a relative who wasn't as close a relative as a parent or another relative was learning of the injury and being present in the hospital earlier than the parent because they were amongst groups who were still at the school. Now, can you explain how that happened on this occasion? - Yes, the relative must have gone to the hospital and got the information there whereas unfortunately, as I said, we were having great difficulty getting information at all from the hospital to the locus.

What arrangements were made for the parents of the Primary 1 Class at Dunblane Primary School when they arrived? - I believe they were taken to a separate house and eventually they were brought to the staff room in the school.

Did someone else deal with that end of it? - Superintendent Holden.

We will hear from him in due course? - Yes.

Now, when it got to 1.15, 1.30, and you knew who the victims were did you then establish a system for communicating information to the close relatives of the victims? - That is correct.

What was that? - We had a family liaison team made up of two police officers and a social worker to inform relatives and to remain with the relatives throughout the enquiry.

Roughly what time would these teams make contact with the families that they had to communicate the information to? - Between 1.30 and 2.30.

And/

And was there a separate team for every family? - I think some of the injured shared a family liaison officer but there was certainly one to every deceased family.

Adjourned until tomorrow.

SECOND DAY.

10.05 a.m.

JOHN OGG, (Recalled),

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: At the end of yesterday we were dealing with the way close relatives were informed of the events as far as affecting their families. Just to complete the picture, can you tell me first of all whether you feel that the police in general in Central Scotland have learned from the problems which arose in that particular connection? - Yes, I would say we have.

Are there any particular lessons you can tell us that have been learned or anything that you feel might affect the way that you deal with such a situation in the future? - I think if the same thing or something similar happened we would note the names of the injured as they went away. I would say also that communications could be improved by using radios.

In this particular instance was there an officer in charge of communication? - No. Chief Superintendent Moffat is responsible for communications in the Force.

Was he assigned to particular duties at this Inquiry that day? - Yes, he was dealing with matters at Headquarters.

What about on the spot? Is there anything to be said for having someone in charge of communications on the spot? - Quite honestly I don't think it would have helped.

Now, there are a couple of things I want to clarify from yesterday. We heard some evidence of the cutting of the telephone wires affecting the surrounding houses, at a pole? - That is correct.

Now, can you confirm for me that the white van in which Hamilton arrived was actually parked right at that pole? - Yes.

And/

And that was a van, registration number M394 KBO? - That is correct.

Now, as the morning progressed how many Central Scotland police officers were involved in the investigation in the course of the day? - The actual investigation of the incident?

Yes? - Both?

I think we could divide it into stages. On the actual day handling the emergency how many police officers were involved? - I would say there would be over a hundred.

From later that day and over subsequent days when you were investigating the circumstances? - About 65.

And up until now how many have continued to be involved? - At this present moment about 20 officers as of today are involved in the investigation. That 65, however, was only reduced last week.

Going back to the day itself, in the immediate aftermath, from 10.15 onwards, what were the up to one hundred officers doing? - They were employed in cordon, at the locus, taking statements, at the hospital, at the mortuary and at Headquarters.

Were some officers involved in actually dealing with the removal of bodies from the gymnasium? - Yes.

And assisting with the injured being taken to hospital?
- Yes.

Now, did you also oversee a search of Thomas Hamilton's house? - I did.

At what address? - 7 Kent Road

Is that in Stirling? - Yes.

In the course of the search in his house was any camera equipment found? - I think it was.

Was it of a very minor nature? - Yes.

No/

No indication of a camera business operating at that stage from the house? - No.

Were there further magazines for ammunition found in the house? - Yes.

Could you look at the book of photographs, PHOB25, photograph 17? Have you got that? - Yes.

Where was that photograph taken? - In Thomas Hamilton's house.

Was that during a search by the police after these events? - That is right.

What part of the house are we looking at here? - That is the lounge.

What are we seeing there? - Cases of bullets, some cartridges, some sticky tape. He had taped magazines with sticky tape for quick loading, with different coloured tape at the back and front.

Where were the pliers actually found? - They were found in his bag in the gymnasium.

Do you know how many more rounds of ammunition were found in the house? - I can't recollect.

Another officer will be able to confirm that for us? - Yes.

We can see there there are boxes in a metal box. Do these contain ammunition? - Yes.

I think in the course of your further enquiries into this you learned that a number of letters had been sent by Thomas Hamilton in the days immediately before the 13th March? - That is correct.

One of these was sent to Buckingham Palace? - That is correct.

Could you look at Production D88? Now, is that a communication that was recovered from Buckingham Palace? - It is.

Is it dated 7th March, 1996? - It is.

With/

With a number of items attached to it?

- That is correct.

Which are also letters? - Yes.

Is there an envelope with it? - No, we did not recover the envelope.

So the envelope was not recovered. Can I take it your enquiries did not establish exactly when this was received at Buckingham Palace? - No.

It is addressed to "For the Attention of Her Majesty the Queen"? - That is correct.

Now, if the first page of that could be put on the imager can you confirm that it comes from 7 Kent Road, Stirling? - It does.

With the phone number? - Yes.

And it is addressed to "Your Majesty"? - Yes.

Can you read the beginning of it? - "I understand you are Patron of the Scout Association, and in that capacity I would like to make you aware of my long-standing complaint against the Scout Association".

Read on to the next paragraph, please? - "Over 20 years ago, as a young man of about 20 years of age, after my time as a Venture Scout, I was asked to become a Scout Leader, which I did with enthusiasm and in a fair and competent manner. I was at that time, however, somewhat disillusioned with the general management which existed in this District at that time. After a period of a year, I was offered a better position by District Commissioner J. Don within the Association in Mr. Don's nearby District of Hillfoots, which I accepted. However, my transfer was refused by Scottish Scout Headquarters without any explanation. D.C. Don approached my previous D.C., Mr. R. Deuchars, and as a result of this reported in confidence to me that Mr. R. Deuchars was attempting to have me branded as a pervert. When Mr. Don demanded justification of this, Mr. Deuchars' only response was that I was 'friendly' with the boys. Mr. Don remarked that a Scout Leader was supposed to be/be friendly with the boys, and as a conclusion Mr. Don reported to me that he had nothing on me but he may cause me considerable damage if unchecked."

Does it then go on "In what I consider to be a breach of natural justice, Mr. R. Deuchars then submitted a confidential report on me in line with the Policy Organisation and Rules of the Association. I know that no child has ever made any complaint of a sinister or sexual nature against me, but D.C. Deuchars, together with the A.D.C. Mr. Samuels and the G.S.L. Mr. McKenzie, visited and interviewed every child in my old Group, including especially everyone who had been a member and left. Nothing of a sinister nature came to light. However, in a bid to justify his actions, Mr. McKenzie reported that Mr. Deuchars had sought to create innuendos about me with the statement: 'Why is he so enthusiastic? Think about it'. Mr. J. Don referred to jealousy as the likely cause."? - That is correct.

Can you read the next paragraph? - "My attempts to approach Scottish Scout Headquarters were ignored, and I could get nowhere, since I was blocked from all angles. I was unable to get any response as to whether or not I was blacklisted or informed about details of the confidential report by Mr. Deuchars. As time passed numerous and various reports were received that Mr. Deuchars was passing information within the District Scout area that I was a pervert, which was passed to the public in an underhand manner".

I think if we go over the page, it says "Over the past 20 years of youth work this has caused me untold damage, including Council, Police and Social Work investigations where they had acted as a direct result of information received in absolute confidence from officials of the Scout Association. Any subsequent investigation was instigated on a whim and without proper complaint, cause or justification. For the purpose of the police complaints procedure, the investigative skills of the police are put into reverse. It seems to be a tactic of the police during any investigation to spread innuendos to as many people as possible and in such a way as to cause maximum damage, and then when their investigation comes to nothing they do nothing about retracting their accusations./

accusations. This has probably been the most damaging of all on the part of the Police and Council."; Is that how the paragraph reads? - Yes.

Can you read the rest of the letter?

- "I have been involved with the Organisation of Boys Sports Clubs for over 20 years, and the rumours circulates by officials of the Scout Association have now reached epidemic proportions across Central Region. As well as my personal distress and loss of public standing, this situation has also resulted in loss of my business and ability to earn a living. Indeed, I cannot even walk the streets for fear of embarrassing ridicule".

Yes? - "All of this and more has been caused by the mal-administration of the Scout Association and their denial of natural justice and duty of care. To some Scout Officials it was simply a ruse to oust a rival Group".

Yes? - "I turn to you as a last resort, and am appealing for some kind of intervention in the hope that I may be able to gain my self-esteem in society. I am, Your Obedient Servant, Thomas W. Hamilton."

That is a letter complaining about the actions of the Scout Association, the police and local authorities? - That is correct.

Do you know whether any similar letter had ever previously been sent? - I don't think there was. We never discovered any.

Can you give us your best estimate of the time when this would have been received at Buckingham Palace? - It would probably be over the weekend of the 9th/10th.

Now, it was copied I think to a number of people? - That is correct.

To the best of your recollection can you tell me who they were? - The Secretary of State, I think it was sent to Bannockburn Primary School, Dunblane Primary School, Detective Sergeant Moffat of the Child Protection Unit, the Family Unit in the police, the Scotsman, the Daily Record -- there were others, but I can't recollect.

Are/

Are you able to tell us when they had received their copies? - I think most of the newspapers received them on the 13th March.

The day of the incident? - Yes.

We will hear some evidence about when Dunblane Primary School received their letter. Now, attached to the letter you quoted there were a number of other documents. Is the first of these a copy of a letter headed "Boys' Sports Club Group Committee", dated 24th March, 1993 and sent to Michael Forsyth, M.P., at the House of Commons? - Yes.

Is the heading of that "Juvenile Crime"? - It is.

Is it commenting on the horrific murder of Jamie Bulger? - It is.

Again/

10.20 a.m.

Again is this a letter complaining about police incompetence? - It is.

And is it the police only that are complained about in this particular one? - It seems to be Central Scotland Police being obsessed with child abuse.

I think it complains also about some of the parents who have made complaints about it? - Yes.

And some of these complaints related to taking photographs? - That is correct.

And it is referring to Clubs in Dunfermline? - Yes.

Did a copy of that accompany other letters that were sent to the media and to other locations? - I don't think so.

I think the next attachment is a letter dated the 18th August, 1995 again from 7 Kent Road, this time addressed to "Dear Parents"? - Yes.

This time mentioning the Scouts, is that right? - Yes.

The Dunblane area? - Yes.

And mentions taking boys from Stirling to Dunblane Rifle Club? - Yes, that is correct.

And mentioning the problem associated with camps held at Dunblane High School? - Yes, that is correct.

There is a bit written at the bottom of that letter, on the bottom of the second page which we see on the imager, Page 2 of the letter "Dear Parents", the 18th August, 1995, I think there is a bit "Dear Mr. Forsyth"? - Yes.

"Prior to October, 1983 70 Dunblane boys attended the Dunblane Club weekly, now there are five of which only one attended the 1995 course/camp. Others are bussed in from other areas to/to attempt to make up the numbers. Thomas W. Hamilton 11/2/96"; does that appear to be the other letter which is added on to it on the 11th February 1996 to be sent to Mr. Forsyth? - That is correct.

And then was there a copy attached of a letter of 26th January, 1996 to Dr. Robert Ball, Education Convener of Central Regional Council? - Yes.

And then is there a letter dated the 26th March, 1996 from a firm of solicitors? - That is correct.

Sent to Mr. Hamilton which had been copied to be attached to this? - Yes.

Was that to do with his failure to get Legal Aid in connection with a dispute he was raising? - That is correct.

Do you know what the dispute was he wanted to take to law? - I think it was a disagreement he had with the District Council and he wanted Legal Aid to pursue it.

And then is the last item attached to the letter to the Queen one from the "Boys Sports Clubs Group Committee" dated the 28th June, 1993, a circular "Dear Parents" and headed "1993 residential sports training course"? - Yes.

And that is advertising the course and its cost and where it will be? - That is correct.

We have heard already of the analysis or the examination by forensic scientists of swimming trunks which were recovered from Mr. Hamilton's house; now, you oversaw at the search which recovered this? - Yes, that is correct.

There were, I think, 63 pairs of trunks? - There were.

Can you tell us the breakdown in colour? - They were mainly black, I think some blue, a few blue and two or three pairs of red.

These are the questions I have to ask you subject to one thing and this is a matter which obviously/obviously great consideration has been given to before deciding whether this question ought to be properly asked in the public interest.

I want to ask you about certain conclusions you have drawn about the way in which Thomas Hamilton behaved in the gymnasium. I think you have access to all the statements of eye-witnesses and also to the ballistics and forensic science reports? - Yes, that is correct.

I think you have yourself drawn the conclusion that in the gymnasium there was a group of children who either had been disabled by the firing of the gun or who themselves had been thrown to the floor over whom Hamilton stood and fired his gun? - That is correct.

From a distance which must have simply been the height of his hand above the children? - That is correct.

The only other thing I want to ask you is whether the statements you have read and all the evidence you have considered has enabled you to determine at what point in the school he actually entered? - I think that he entered by the door at the north west end of the school beside the boys' toilets.

Can you go round to the diagram there and the camera will pick up the diagram in the area you want to point to; if we can go back a bit so we can get a better overall view; that is the door which was formerly at the end of the cupboard walkway into the school? - That is correct.

I take it there is no evidence that says clearly that is the way he entered? - No.

And that is a conclusion drawn by you from all the evidence? - That is right, most likely because the traffic was very heavy in the area of the main entrance.

You think he was more likely to be seen coming in if he came in the main entrance? - Yes.

And no one actually saw him enter? - No.

I/

I think if we look at a photograph for the moment which is R3, again that can be shown on the imager and if you could just point to the entrance on that photograph for us? - Here.

There are other possibilities I think, one of which is the main entrance, is that right? - That is correct.

Just point to that please? - Here.

I think there are doorways into the Assembly Hall from the other side, is that right? - There are two emergency fire escape doors.

Can you get in from the outside through these? - It is doubtful because the janitor claimed in his statement that these doors were locked, you can only make an exit from these doors.

BY LORD CULLEN: Just one matter before you go on, perhaps you could explain to me how he would get from the parked position of the van to the door beside the boys' toilet so we can be quite clear what the possible routes were? - The van was parked about here, he went up here, down here and down there and in that door.

That is indicating going round to the west, it must be?
- Yes.

It would be west and swinging round and going east and coming to that entrance? - Yes.

Where that corridor meets a large part of the building?
- Yes, that's right.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: I would like to ask you some questions about the communication with families on the day; I do recognise that these questions are being posed in hindsight and I hope you accept I am not suggesting that people didn't do their best. You have told us that parents began arriving at the school quite quickly, presumably news was spreading through the community and indeed there was information through the broadcast media very quickly also? - Yes, that is correct.

So parents were coming to the school knowing/knowing that something terrible had happened but not exactly what or to whom? - That is correct.

Can I take it that you will have been anxious to assure that the time spent by the parents waiting for news of their own child was as short as possible? - That is correct.

Now, you have told us yesterday of your plans in the aftermath and you said that you wanted to have the injured children taken to hospital, then place a cordon round the school, identify the deceased and then institute your inquiry which involved appointing production officers and setting up an administration system; can you tell me where in that sequence informing relatives fitted in? - That was an equal priority with identifying the deceased, we wanted to identify them first before we informed the relatives.

So that would come before the stage you described about appointing production officers and setting up the administration system? - No, that was all happening at the same time but that was a priority, it would certainly come above that but there were many things happening simultaneously.

We know that the parents of children in Mrs. Mayer's class knew that this was the class affected and were taken firstly to a private house? - That is correct.

And were up to the school around lunch time? - Yes.

I think that that was in a mini-bus? - I believe so.

Once they were in the school they were taken to the staff room? - I believe so.

Did you personally go to speak to the parents either in the private house or in the staff room? - No, Superintendent Holden was dealing with that.

Once the parents were in the staff room it is correct that they were taken out of the staff room by the names of their children being called out?/

out? - I believe so.

The order of events was that the injured children's parents were taken out first? - That is correct because we had.....ultimately we were getting the identities of the injured children, information regarding that so we could identify them.

Yesterday we heard Dr. Beattie said that even the most seriously injured child could give his own name? - Yes.

Were you aware of that? - Yes.

Now, can I take it that you do accept that the surviving children wanted to see the parents? - Yes.

And also that the priority for parents of an injured child was to be with that child? - Yes.

We know, because you have told us, that the names of the children leaving in the ambulance were not retained; can I take it you accept that that meant that the process of reuniting the parents with the injured children took around three hours? - Yes.

If parents were arriving at the school shortly after 10 the process of telling the parents of injured children.....? - I think the children.....it was just after 12 we started to tell them when we had that information but there was a delay, yes.

If, in fact, there was a suggestion that some of the parents of the injured children were not told until after 1'clock about what had happened to their children then it would be about three hours? - That is correct.

And that, in the circumstances, is quite a delay? - It is.

Turning to the bereaved parents is it your understanding that they were taken from the staff room one family at a time? - I think they were/were taken out in groups of three or four.

The families.....? - The families of the deceased.

Yes? - Yes.

Could you be mistaken about that? - Superintendent Holden was dealing with this.

That is something we can ask him? - Yes.

Now, the timings you gave for that process, could you be wrong about that, would that have been rather later than you suggested yesterday? - No, I think information came from the liaison officers, that was the source of my information.

Might it be the case that, in fact, there was still parents waiting to be told by half-past 3? - I don't think so.

Well, might you be wrong about that? - I am only going from the information that has been given to me, Superintendent Holden was dealing with that and that certainly from the victim profile we drew up and from the information, that is where I took my information from, 2.30 was the last.

Well, you suggest that Superintendent Holden would be in a better position to explain about the times? - He will know firsthand.

But if parents were to say that some of them were not told until around 3.30 you are personally not in a position to contradict that? - No.

So at that stage it follows that some parents had been waiting for around five hours for news? - I find that difficult to believe.

I think if that is correct it does follow, does it not? - It does follow.

Do you know if some of the parents in the staff room had other small children with them to look after? - Yes.

Obviously/

Obviously that would pose particular difficulties for them? - Yes, it would.

You told us yesterday that at the scene the Chief Constable was present as indeed were you as a senior officer? - Yes.

If during the period of hours when the parents were waiting for news, if they asked for a senior officer to go and speak to them and were told that no one was available can you explain why that was if you and the Chief Constable were present? - No, I can't explain that but as I say Superintendent Holden was dealing with that aspect.

Did anyone come to you and ask that you go and speak? - No.

You described yesterday the setting up of liaison teams for each family? - That is correct.

And in the case of parents of a child who had died that team included two police officers and a Social Worker? - That is correct.

So those individuals were briefed concerning what had occurred prior to the parents being told? - Yes.

Is that part of your contingency plan for a disaster such as this, that others should be told before the relatives of those involved or was that something that was simply decided on that particular day? - That was something that was decided on that day and reason was to provide a better service to the parents.

Do you accept that that fact also of others knowing before the particular families might cause distress to some families? - If it did I can assure you it was the exact converse, the reason it was done; it would be so there would be a professional social worker along with a police officer when the parents were informed.

You were asked by Mr. Bonomy if you would be looking at some aspects of the matter in retrospect? - Yes.

Is/

Is that something that you would be prepared to look at? - Yes.

If I could just turn very briefly to one other matter; you spoke of items that had been found in Hamilton's home? - Yes.

I simply wonder if you found a typewriter or a word processor? - No, there was nothing at all like that.

Are you able to explain by what means these typewritten letters were produced? - Yes, they were done at the University.

Was there somebody who did them? - Hamilton took them up to the University and had them word processed.

CROSS/

10.40 a.m.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: Mr. Ogg, as you know, I represent, among others, Mr. Mayer and his family. Can you take it from me that Mr. Mayer's daughter Esther went to Stirling Royal Infirmary about 12 noon and heard about 12.30 someone asking about children in Mrs. Mayer's class, and that she thereafter immediately went to the school and arrived about 1 o'clock. She was I understand put into the staffroom with the parents, but I understand that her father, Mr. Mayer, arrived at much the same time but was put into the library on his own, and was left in the library for some half an hour before he threatened that he would go out to the media to try to find out what was happening, before the police officer who was at the door reluctantly conceded that the worst case scenario had occurred. Have you any information to contradict that information I am giving you? - Yes. My information is that when Mr. Mayer arrived at the school he demanded to know what had happened to his wife, and the officer concerned was D.S. Moffat, and he told him virtually as soon as he arrived at the scene. That is my information -- and he asked for the use of a phone and was given the use of a phone.

I have to say that my information is Mr. Mayer sat in the library for about half an hour before he was told anything. Now, obviously this may be subject to evidence from elsewhere, but only at half-past 1 after he had got it out of the officer there that his wife had died, he spent an hour trying to contact Esther, who was in fact only a few yards away from him in the staffroom -- thinking she was still at Stirling Royal Infirmary? - I'm not aware of that.

And he used a phone in the library? - He certainly used a phone.

And indeed it was only at quarter to 3 that Esther and Mr. Mayer met each other when she was brought through to the library and met her father? - I don't know about that.

Whatever is the position about the children -- and I accept the validity of the difficulty you had -- there was no difficulty, was there/there, in indicating both to Esther and to Mr. Mayer virtually on their immediate arrival that their mother had died? - There should have been none.

And indeed that doesn't appear to have been done, if the information I have is correct? - If the information you have is correct then that would be the case, but as I say my information is D.S. Moffat told Mr. Mayer immediately he arrived.

Can I suggest that perhaps one thing that could be looked at in this dreadful situation which occurred -- and I accept entirely that you were in a very difficult situation that day -- is that in tragedies such as this a senior officer should immediately be appointed to be the sole line of communication with any people who arrive who may be involved in the tragedy, either as near relatives of the deceased or injured? - We did that that day. Superintendent Holden -- that was his function.

Well, why was it then Superintendent Holden didn't apparently meet with Mr. Mayer, as far as I am aware, at all? - I don't know.

You will appreciate Mr. Mayer and his daughter's concern about the lack of communication? - I do.

And again can I simply endorse what Miss Dunlop suggested to you, that lessons may be learned from this dreadful tragedy about communication? - Yes. We accept that fully.

No cross-examination by Mr. Jones.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: I wonder if you could remind us what your principal concern was on the 13th March in relation to giving information to the parents? - We wanted to ensure obviously that the information was 100 per cent accurate. We felt we were in a dilemma if we made a mistake and gave out the wrong information. That was heightened just after 12 o'clock when we learned that one of the deceased who was in the Infirmary had been identified as being in the gymnasium as well -- and that caused us great concern.

Just/

Just taking up that point, what steps did you take upon learning about the confusion from the hospital? - We then had to re-identify, so to speak, each of the deceased.

You would be informed of the identity of the child in the hospital, and you would have believed that there was a child of the same name in the gym. Were there any specific steps which you were able to take in relation to carrying out that identification process? - That information came via the incident caravan -- simply the identity of the child or the believed identity of the child in the hospital. We then tried -- as I say, communications were failing at that time on the phone side. We tried to contact officers at the hospital to find out what the identification was at the hospital. I think we had three phone calls and eventually we found it was from a name label in the shoe of the child at the hospital. Unfortunately, as I said earlier in my evidence, we had identifications made -- sorry, we had clothing with name labels which didn't refer to any child in the gym. So we couldn't be 100 per cent certain. So again we had to go back to the staff and ask them to go round the bodies again and try to trace the marks with the class records, to identify all the dead children.

You mentioned there the staff having to go round the bodies again. In fact, how often did you require some members of staff to go round the bodies? - I am sure they went round -- different members of staff, because the staff were breaking down -- understandably so. They did a tremendous job, absolutely unbelievable job, but they were breaking down, and we had to give them breaks in between going to look at the bodies.

Apart from the effect on the staff was there noticeable effect on your police officers attending? - Yes, a great deal of police officers -- it was an absolutely unbelievable situation, and I saw police officers crying.

Now, you told us yesterday that you thought that it would have been insensitive to note the children's names as they were going to the hospital -- and the reference for that, Sir, is page 114. I wonder if you could just elaborate a little/little bit on that piece of your evidence? - My thought was that the primary concern was to get the injured children to hospital as quickly as possible, because some of the children were very seriously injured - to receive treatment and hopefully save their lives. And I felt it would be insensitive for a police officer to be standing by noting their names as they went. In retrospect, had we known what we now know in hindsight, that there was going to be great difficulty in communications -- had we known then, we would definitely have done that and taken any responsibility for the insensitivity; because in the end of the day we would have been able to inform the parents much more quickly.

I take it in the gymnasium those attending to the children would be carrying out medical processes; is that right? - That is correct.

I wonder if you could have a look at Document Production R27? I wonder if you could have a look at the first page of that document, and without actually reading it out, because of the sensitive nature of the information contained in the document, could you have a look at the last paragraph on the first page and let us know if that is the sort of processes which were being carried out on the 13th? - That is exactly what was happening.

And did you form the view at the time that it would have been inappropriate for the police officers to have interjected with any specific questions? - Very much so.

You referred a few moments ago, and indeed yesterday, to the difficulty which there was in communicating with the hospital, and this morning you talked about encrypted radio. Can you tell us just a little about what that involves? - We do have encrypted radio in the Force, but unfortunately it is very short range -- but it is available. And basically it means that if anyone scans in they can't hear messages being passed because they are coded.

I take it from the answer to that last question that the range was insufficient to enable communication between Stirling and Dunblane? - That/

That is right. We have a few sets which are used for surveillance purposes, but they are short range.

What steps did you take to facilitate communication between Dunblane and Stirling on the 13th? - We tried to use the land line available. The incident caravan was brought to the location reasonably quickly, but again we hadn't mobile phones and normal radio communication -- so we relied mainly on land phones.

And did you make any attempt to increase the number of land lines available? - We did that immediately by contacting BT at Headquarters. The first additional phone line into the school I recollect was about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, but the request was made immediately.

Now, you mentioned yesterday that in other major incidents there has been a delay in obtaining the land lines. Would it be fair to say that on other occasions the media interest has not been so high and that Cellnet facility has been available to you? - That is correct.

Before I leave the topic of encrypted radio, to your knowledge is long-range encrypted radio available in other Forces? - The Scottish Crime Squad have it. I am not aware of any other Scottish Force that has it, but some English Forces may have it.

This morning you referred to the constitution of the liaison teams, and I appreciate that was an area where Superintendent Holden can perhaps help us the most. Can you tell the Inquiry what the thinking behind the constitution of the liaison teams was? - As I said earlier, it was to make the parents -- to reduce the problem as far as informing the parents was concerned. It really was born out of the concept we had for child protection issues, where investigations are done by two agencies, the Police and Social Work together -- specially trained officers from the Social Work Department and specially trained police officers who are jointly trained. And that is where the concept came from, and as far as possible the police officers used and the social workers were child protection trained officers. So it was hopefully to be tactful in understanding the situation that we developed/developed the teams. The additional police officer was on the understanding that the parents would identify the body to the police and then the police would identify the bodies to the pathologists, and so again it would decrease the trauma.

And you took the view I take it from your evidence that the breaking of the news to the parents would be better achieved if those breaking the news had a briefing before doing so? - That is correct, but it was not only to break the news. The idea behind these teams was to give continuing counsel and comfort, and a point of contact to these families.

And have these teams remained in place up to the present time? - Some of the teams are with the families today and yesterday, and will continue to be with them.

We heard some evidence yesterday that certain advice had been given that the gymnasium should be evacuated because of the concern that Mr. Hamilton's body might have been booby-trapped in some way? - That is correct. I can't remember. I think it was either the ballistics officer or Dr. Tevadia, the pathologist, who suggested something I hadn't thought of, that the body may be booby-trapped. That was about 12 o'clock. But I made a conscious decision then that the MOD, or the Bomb Disposal, normally ask us to evacuate if we have any suspicious devices -- I made a conscious decision that the body had been in position for about two hours at that time, the witness Currie had kicked away guns and so on. So my instructions were the forensic team and police officers shouldn't go near Hamilton's body, it should be treated as a sterile area, but that we should carry on with the process of identification, because I felt there was an element of risk, and I felt any delay -- that had to be balanced against any delay that would have occurred as far as identification was concerned.

Now, a number of comments have been made about the police handling of the conveying of information to the parents in the course of the Inquiry. Have you been aware of these complaints before? - No.

When did you first become aware of them/them? - Just in the last two or three days.

And what, if any, steps have you taken since being informed of these complaints? - We offered to meet with the families to explain our position and the difficulties we faced that day.

And was the offer of that meeting, to your knowledge, accepted? - No.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. STEPHEN: Yesterday you said that the call which Mr. Taylor had made to report the incident was an ordinary call and not a 999 call? - That is correct.

I think the reference is page 98 of yesterday's notes. Do you know for sure that it was indeed an ordinary call or could it perhaps have been a 999 call? - No, I am almost 100 per cent certain, because it came into our switchboard and not into our control room, and all 999 calls come into the control room.

And is there any log of that? - Yes, we checked on that.

Could I ask you to look at Production R28, in particular the second page of that? This is headed up "Major Incident at Dunblane Primary School Log, 13th March, 1996"? - That is right.

Could you read the first entry from that? - That is a 999 call to the Ambulance Service, which I think was made by Mrs. Eadington or Mrs. Awlson.

That wouldn't be a reference to Mr. Taylor's call? - No. That was a telephone call that was made to the Ambulance Service.

If I could refer you to one other matter discussed yesterday and today, that is with regard to the identification of the injured children who were removed from the school? If I understand your evidence you accept you thought it was inappropriate for police officers to seek identification of the children as they were being taken out of the school? - That is correct.

Do you know if anyone else may have sought/sought to identify these children before they left for the hospital? - No, I am not aware of anybody doing that.

Is it possible that someone may have done that? - I don't think so. It would have made our task much easier. That first hour was chaotic, as you can well imagine, with injured children being removed and being treated at the locus.

No re-examination.

BY LORD CULLEN: Just one matter. You have expressed the view that lessons can be learned from what happened on the 13th March. Am I right in thinking that these lessons would eventually be expressed in the form of some written procedure, in the event of such an emergency in the future? - That is correct.

Has that process already been carried out, or is it still to be done? - The Inquiry is still ongoing -- I haven't had an opportunity yet.

And who would have the responsibility for reducing such matters to writing? - I would imagine it would be our Force Executive.

The Force Executive? - Yes.

11.00 a.m.

MR. BONOMY: Sir, the next witness is Ronald George Taylor.

RONALD GEORGE TAYLOR, (46), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: Are you the head teacher of Dunblane Primary School? - I am.

How long have you been in that job? - I have been head teacher at Dunblane Primary School since August, 1993.

I would like to ask you a little about the school itself first of all. I think you should look at the 13th March, 1996. Can you tell us something about the size of the school? - On 13th March, 1996 the school roll was approximately 640 pupils.

How does that compare with other primary schools in the country? - I think it makes us one of the largest primary schools in the country. I know of two other similar sized schools.

How is the population of the school divided? - It is divided into 20 classes.

How many teachers are there? - There are approximately 20 teachers in the school.

How many auxiliary staff do you have? - We have 10 auxiliary staff, and we have cleaning staff.

Now, I think there is a management structure within the school? - Yes.

You are the head teacher. Can you tell us something about the level below you? - There is a Depute Head Teacher, Mrs. Eadington.

What other staffing positions of authority are there? - There are two assistant head teachers.

Who were they? - Mrs. Awlson and Mr. McCombie.

I show you photograph R3. That shows the school/school as it was on the 13th March? - Yes, it does.

There is a main teaching block which is largely to the upper left-hand side of that photograph? - That is correct.

How many separate huts do you have? - There are five -- I am sorry, six -- separated hutted units, four of which we use as classrooms, the fifth one which is used as the kids' room and the sixth one a music room.

Is there a link between the school, the assembly hall and the gymnasium? - Yes.

On the far side of the building on the left-hand side there is something which stretches out. Is that a hut or is that attached to the main building? - To the rear of the building?

Yes? - That is a hut. Can I go to the photograph?

Yes, please? - Are you referring to this area here?

Yes? - That is the staff room, which is connected to the main building.

By its very nature it must have a lot of doors? - Yes, indeed.

The huts, for example: do they just have one door or do any of them have more than one door? - Most of the huts have two doors, not counting fire exits.

Taking the main T-shaped building, including the gymnasium and the hall, how many ways are there in? I don't mean ways that you can come out. If we could confine ourselves to ways in for the moment? - To the best of my knowledge there are six.

Can you point them out? - The main entrance, this entrance here, there is an entrance in this corner here.

That is at the junction between the link and/

and the main building? - That is correct.

On the far side from the main entrance?

- Yes. There is a door here which allows access.

That is further along, up the photograph, on the main building? - Yes, and two entrances on either side of the staff room block.

In addition to these are there ways out that you cannot get in by, or could not get in by?

- Yes.

Where are they? - There are two in the nursery area here.

That is on the very left-hand end of the main building?

- That is correct: and one along here.

Near one of the other entrances you showed us? - And two off the main hall.

Are these on the far side of the main hall as we look at it? - Yes, indeed.

Can you definitely not get into any of these, or could you definitely not on the 13th March? - That is my impression.

Are these push-bar doors? - Yes.

So you could escape, but you couldn't get in? - Yes.

Is that always the case? - One of these doors is often used as an entrance at lunch time for the pupils who are in the Primary 7 hut here.

Was it the case in March that it was used as an entrance? - Yes, but at lunch time.

Knowing what you know of the whole events, without going into the details, how do you think Thomas Hamilton got in? - I am convinced the police report is correct and that Hamilton entered by this entrance here.

Why do you think that? - Because of the busyness/busyness of the front central foyer area, and the arrival of parents to the nursery, and there were several parents still in the nursery at that time. I am quite convinced if he had come in the main entrance we would have seen him.

So we can exclude the two exit doors, can we? - Yes, we can.

What was the normal starting time in March for the school? - 9.

For everybody? - The staff's starting time is earlier than that, and most staff arrive even earlier.

But for the pupils? - 9 o'clock.

There is a nursery somewhere? - Yes.

In the main building? - Yes.

What is the starting time for the nursery? - 9.30.

There was clear reference yesterday to some evidence gathered by the police from people on the two roads into the school and coming to the nursery at 9.30. That would explain why there was traffic to the school at that time? - Yes.

Did you have regular assemblies? - Yes.

Can you tell us the sequence of these? - The assemblies take place at the moment on a Wednesday morning, but they are rotational, because we cannot get all the children into the hall at the one time, so we rotate them. On one Wednesday there would be the infants' assembly, which is Primaries 1, 2, 3 and 4, followed by a senior assembly, Primaries 5, 6 and 7. These dates would be rotated in relation to when was the best time for the assembly. On one Wednesday there would be the infants' assembly, that is Primaries 1, 2 and 3, then an assembly for Primaries 4, 5 and 6, and a senior assembly for Primary 7. These dates would be rotated in relation to when was the best time for these assemblies.

How long do the assemblies last? - They vary./

vary. The infants' assembly is often shorter, because the children have a shorter attention span, and the senior assembly often has prize-givings, awards, etc., so it often lasts longer.

On that particular morning, 13th March, I think it was to be an infants' assembly? - Yes.

Lasting from when to when? - 10 past 9 to half past 9.

Which classes attended? - All classes in Primaries 1, 2 and 3.

What were the total number of pupils roughly that morning? - Approximately 250.

How many members of staff? - There would be ten members of staff approximately, including myself.

Would they go into it? - Yes.

Including the Minister? - Yes, indeed.

Yourself and how many? - All nine class teachers plus Mrs. Eadington.

You have heard the suggestion -- well, it was more than a suggestion -- here that the first shot fired was into the stage floor of the assembly hall? - Yes.

Can you tell us exactly when assembly finished that morning? - Approximately 9.30.

So once that finishes how long does it take to evacuate the children? - It doesn't take too long; just a few minutes. The children all exit from the same door as previously with their teachers back to the classrooms.

From what we have heard we are talking about a seven minute spell from 9.30 to 9.37, when the shooting actually started. How much of that spell would be occupied by children going to their classes? - Three or four minutes, I would say.

If this had been a senior assembly, when would it normally have finished? - As I said, it varied./

varied. It would normally have finished about 9.40, perhaps even later. The senior assembly the week before lasted an hour.

Even on an average basis it would have finished after the shooting started? - Correct.

Did you ever meet Thomas Hamilton? - I met him on one occasion.

When was that? - I'm not terribly certain when it was, it was approximately 18 months ago.

Before you met him had you heard about him? - Yes, I had.

How did you come to learn of him? - I learned about him from a number of staff and from one or two parents.

What sort of things did you learn initially? - Initially I learned that he conducted a boys' club based in Dunblane High School, and that there were some concerns about the club itself.

Who expressed concerns to you? - I can recall two parents in particular who expressed concern to me about inappropriate clothing, as I recollect it, and about Hamilton taking photographs.

Do you remember what the inappropriate clothing was? - I would be guessing, but I think it was swimming trunks.

That is a vague recollection? - That is a vague recollection.

And the other complaint was that photographs had been taken of the children? - That is right.

Was there any suggestion that these were indecent? - There was a suggestion that these were inappropriate.

What were the circumstances of your meeting him? - Previously several leaflets had arrived in an A5 format, which gave details about the/the clubs, and these I had to bin. Subsequently Hamilton came to the school, and I met him in the foyer of the school, and he handed me a further 40 to 50 such leaflets. He asked me to distribute them.

Yes? - He also complained about members of staff who had been driving parents away from his boys' club, and would I perhaps disabuse them of the idea that he was a pervert.

When you binned the first lot, was that instantly they came in, or was it after finding out some more information? - It was probably after finding out some more information.

When you got them in did you go and ask? - Yes, I remember discussing with Mrs. Eadington. Following that I decided to bin them. My understanding is that leaflets had arrived in the school prior to my becoming the head teacher, and that they were also binned.

Is what to do with leaflets like that a decision for the head teacher? - Yes.

Would it be appropriate on occasions to consult the Education Department Headquarters? - Yes, sometimes Headquarters alert one to activities which were perhaps inappropriate, but I don't recall them doing that on this occasion. The staff however were adamant that that had been the practice in the past.

Did you express views prior to meeting Hamilton to parents or members of staff about what should be their attitude if he approached them? - Yes. Some parents asked me about the boys' club, and I said I had heard a number of allegations, but I was unsure about them. However, I concluded from what I had heard that I would not send my own children to the club, and they thanked me for that.

When Hamilton met you and asked you to disabuse staff of the rumours about him did you say anything to him? - I was very neutral.

What did you do with the second lot of leaflets? - I binned them also.

Now, /

Now, to be absolutely clear about the location of clubs, do you remember where the club was that he was trying to circulate material about? - Dunblane High School.

Were there ever any clubs to your knowledge from what you have gathered -- I know you had only been there a relatively short time -- were there ever any clubs of his run in Dunblane Primary School? - To my knowledge, no.

Did Hamilton ever have any role to play in the activity of Dunblane Primary School? - No.

After all this had happened did you ever hear anything further from him? - There were a number of letters which arrived at the school.

What were these? - These were photocopied letters circulated to various people and addressed to various people.

Do you remember who they were addressed to? - To Michael Forsyth, I recall, the Secretary of State.

Any other names that you remember? - Yes, I think I recall one of them was addressed to Councillor Ball.

Could you look please at Production R30, which also has on the back DDH361? Could you look at that first of all? Is that a letter dated 26th January, 1996? - It is.

To Councillor Ball? - Yes.

From 7 Kent Road, Stirling? - Yes.

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, if you have not got a copy of that you will find it attached to the one I referred to earlier.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:
Now, does that look like the letter that you received? - It does.

Does the timing match? - I am sorry?

Does the date match the time when you recollect/recollect the letter coming in? - I think it does.

That is the end of January, 1996; is that right? -
Yes.

I think it complains about gossip in Bannockburn
Primary School? - It does.

And later in the first paragraph it says "At Dunblane Primary School, where teachers have contaminated all of the older boys with this poison, even former cleaners and dinner ladies have been told by teachers at school that I am a pervert"? - Yes.

Does it go on "There have been reports at many schools about boys being rounded up by staff and even warnings given to entire schools by head teachers during assembly"? -
Yes.

It goes on in the second page "I have no criminal record, nor have I ever been accused of sexual child abuse by any child, and I am not a pervert"? - Yes.

"I have always run my clubs in a fair, proper and competent manner and ensured that no child or parent has any proper or legitimate complaint. Nevertheless, this defamation coming from the respected source of local primary school staff has caused untold problems everywhere within the Region and beyond"? - Yes.

11.20 p.m.

I think that he contributes in the next paragraph the origin of this when schools became involved in 1983 when an official of the Education Department telephoned numerous schools to warn Headteachers about him? - Yes.

Now, you remember receiving the letter in these terms, do you? - Yes, I do.

I think he then also towards the end of that last paragraph mentions a Dunblane Scout Official, David Vass and talks of his malicious work and he goes on to talk about Mr. R. Deuchars as being at a complete loss to know what all this is about? - That is what it says.

Now, we heard evidence this morning about a letter to the Queen; did you ever see that? - I did.

When did you see a copy of that letter? - I recall that letter arriving on the morning of the 12th March.

Was it that letter only or did it have this attached to it? - As I recall it was that letter only.

Would you look then at the letter which was D88 that I think we saw earlier and tell me if that is the same letter that you received? - Yes, I think that is the same letter.

What did you do with it? - I read it, I recalled discussing it in the secretary's office with a member of staff, I handed it to Mr. Convery, my Assistant Headteacher.

Is that the last you saw of it? - Yes.

Do you know if the police recovered your copy? - I don't think they recovered this particular letter.

It went where it belonged perhaps? - I think so.

Is it possible that the letter arrived on/on the 11th rather than the 12th or are you fairly confident of your recollection that it was the 12th? - Fairly confident.

If I could turn to Wednesday, the 13th, what time did you actually arrive at the school? - I arrived at the school at 8.15 as I do most mornings.

Any sign of a white van? - None.

Where did you go to when you arrived? - I went to the office area beside the dining room area and into my own room and into the secretary's room.

Through the main entrance, I take it? - Through the main entrance.

By that time have all the entrances to the school been opened up? - Yes.

Who was responsible for that? - The janitor.

Well, even before he arrives are there people who have to open part of the school? - Yes, the cleaners arrive earlier.

You have experience of other schools indeed working with the Education Authority? - Yes.

For how long as a teacher? - Coming up 22 years, 19 years as a Headteacher.

Is it then common practice that the janitor has that primary responsibility? - Yes, it is.

Who was responsible in March for locking up at night?
- The janitor is the security man who checks and locks up at night.

Do the cleaners come in at night as well as the morning? - Yes.

Are they working at night after he has left? - No, he comes back in the evening because of school lets.

He/

He then physically checks? - Yes.

Were there many school lets in March? - The usual number, I am not sure.

Every night? - Almost every night.

Till how late? - 9.30.

And the janitor's job is to lock up? - Yes.

Now, were you in your office from then until 9? - My own office and the secretary's office.

After the pupils began to arrive what were your movements? - I welcomed the School Chaplin, Mr. Pringles, spent some time with him and moved into the main hall.

Was there a hold up in starting assembly? - On that morning there was a minor holdup.

What was the reason for that? - One or two of the classes were a little late in arriving for assembly.

Did you participate in the assembly? - As normal I would introduce the assembly, I would welcome the children to the assembly and hand over to the Chaplin who would normally conduct the assembly.

Did you stay or leave? - No, stayed.

When it was finished where did you go? - To my office area.

Did you have to see Mr. Pringles off the premises? - Yes, I would normally spend a moment or two with the Chaplin prior to his leaving.

Is that what actually happened? - To the best of my recollection, yes.

You then went back to your own office? - Back to Mrs. Topping's office, the secretary's office.

You/

You got a message? - Yes.

What was that? - That a phone call had been received which I had to return.

Did you return? - I went to my own room and returned that call.

This has been timed, that is a call to Mr. Livingston? - Yes.

9.38 something? - Yes.

Is that consistent with your own personal recollection? - Yes, it is.

Were you looking outside when you were making the call? - I was seated at my desk.

Does that face out the window, away from the window? - The window is to my right.

Have you any recollection of looking outside? - Not in the early stages of that phone call.

In which direction does the window from your office look? - It looks on to the playground opposite.

That is in the U-shaped area we can see towards the top of the photograph? - That is correct.

During that call did you realise something wasn't right in the school? - During that call I began to hear some noises.

What were the nature of the noises you heard? - It sounded at first like indistinct bangs.

What did you think at first they came from? - At first I thought they came from the area towards the right of the school, that U-shaped area.

And what was your first reaction or first thought what might be causing the noises? - My first reaction was that builders must be in the school and I remember being slightly irritated because I hadn't been informed that builders were expected.

What/

What happened then? - I continued my conversation and the bangs seemed to be louder and closer.

Did you at that stage then continue with the conversation with Mr. Livingston until something else happened? - That is correct.

What was the next event? - The next event was that Mrs. Awlson arrived at my door, she arrived.....

What was strange about her arriving? - She arrived in a crouched position and she said words to the effect that "There is a man in the school with a gun" and she shouted to me to get down.

What did you do? - From the look in her eyes I realised immediately that something was seriously amiss and I cut off my call to Mr. Livingston.

What did you do then? - I then dialled 999.

There has been some evidence about who you dialled at that point and there is no doubt it was the police; are you clear in your mind it was a 999 call? - In my own mind I am quite clear about that because I have never dialled a 999 call before and I didn't have the number of the local police station to dial.

Did you dial immediately? - Immediately.

Do you remember what you said? - Yes, I said words to the effect that there was a report that someone had a gun and I made the inane comment it might be someone firing off blanks.

Do you know why you said something about blanks? - I don't know, I have never heard a gun report before.

Was that call of any significant length? - It seemed to me to be a lengthy call, that is my impression -- I was becoming quite irritated because I wanted to go and see what was happening.

Was/

Was clarification being sought from the other end? - I seem to remember hearing the number read back to me.

Your phone number? - Yes.

When the call ended what did you do? - I left my room and went into the dining area and to my right I saw Mrs. Awlson attending to Mrs. Tweddle.

Was she already injured? - She appeared to be injured.

Now, did you get any information at that point about where this was happening? - Yes, Mrs. Awlson referred to the gym, it was the gym.

By that time did you realise it was the gym or was there still uncertainty in your mind? - Until that moment there was uncertainty in my mind.

Can we just be clear about the layout now of the area we are talking about and can we come to that diagram on the wall or on the board which will be shown and can we look at the side of the Assembly Hall. Now, there are what looks like steps there and then a passageway along the side of the Assembly Hall? - Yes.

Can you see into the Assembly Hall from there? - Yes, you can, it is a raised walkway and there are pillars.

Were you on that at all? - Yes, after I had got the message from Mrs. Awlson that it was the gym I went round from the dining room area to the double-doors here; at that point I remember telling the kitchen staff that they had better get back into the kitchen because we were unsure what was happening; I continued from here on to the corridor and it was at that point I was aware that Mr. Scott had joined me.

Mr. Scott was a student teacher? - Yes.

Where did he come from? - I wasn't sure at that time.

Where did you go from there? - Together/

Together we went along the raised walkway towards the gym.

Was there anyone else around that area as you ran along? - No.

Was there any noise coming from the gym by then? - I didn't hear any noise until I arrived at the gym door.

Was there still a noise? - I didn't hear any noise until I arrived at the gym door.

I am concerned about the banging noises? - No, I heard no further banging noises.

When you got to the gym door I take it there were still no banging noises? - There were still no banging noises.

So the shooting was over? - Yes, the shooting was over, Mr. Scott had told me at that point that he had shot himself.

He had seen that? - He had seen that.

Can you give us a rough estimate of the time lapse from when you first heard these noises when you were outside and the time Mr. Scott told you that he had shot himself? - About three minutes.

You can sit down now, Mr. Taylor. Did you open the door to the gym? - One of the side doors to the gym is badly hinged and is often half open, I don't recall if it was fully open or not; I burst into the gym.

Now, what faced you when you went into the gym? - It was a scene of unimaginable carnage, it was one's worst nightmare.

Smell? - Yes, the area seemed to be thick with a bluish smoke and the smell of cordite was quite strong.

From where you were could you see right to the end of the gymnasium? - Yes, one can.

From this point I am really concerned to know/

know what people did rather than what they saw and perhaps you could help me first of all by telling me what was your instant reaction or what did you do first of all? - The first thing I did was I noticed there was a group of children to the right-hand side of the gym who were crying and who were obviously less injured perhaps than others; I asked Mr. Scott to attend to these and remove them from the gym.

Was he able to do that? - I left him to do that.

But later on I think you discovered he had done it? -
Yes.

Where did he take the children to? - He took them to the area just outside the gym, the corridor area just outside the gym.

Where did you go? - I ran back to the office area and shouted to someone to phone for ambulances.

And somebody did? - Yes, somebody did.

Who was that? - To the best of my knowledge it was Mrs. Eadington.

Where did you go from there? - I went back to the gym and I remember asking for other adults to come and attend there, to come and help, particularly the kitchen staff who had re-emerged from the kitchen.

Initially when you went back into the room what was your attention drawn to? - The children.

Did you take any action in relation to any child before Mr. Currie drew your attention to focus on Thomas Hamilton? - No, I was moving through the gym and trying to ascertain what was happening and I became aware that Mr. Currie was to my left.

What happened then? - We both continued to move through the gym and it was at that point I noticed Hamilton at the top of the gym, he seemed to be moved; John, Mr. Currie, was further down/down the gym than I was and I noticed there was a gun lying on the floor beside Hamilton and I asked Mr. Currie to kick the gun away.

May that gun have been in his hand, in fact? - My impression was that it was on the floor.

What did Mr. Currie do? - He kicked the gun which I recall spinning towards him and ending beside a bench in that area.

That would be away from Hamilton's left-hand side? - Yes.

Did you see Mr. Currie do anything else? - Yes, we noticed that Hamilton had a gun in his hand, it is my impression it was his left hand and Mr. Currie removed the gun and threw it to the floor to Hamilton's left.

A similar direction to the first gun? - No, the first gun spun to the right-hand side of the gym as we look at it; this gun was towards the fire door side.

And I think someone else came into the gym at that point? - A voice behind us shouted words to the effect "Leave the gym alone" and I became aware there was an off duty police officer had arrived.

Did other staff come into the gym? - Yes, soon thereafter Mr. McCombie arrived in the gym, three of the kitchen staff were there and Mr. Scott was attending to the children outside.

I don't think it is necessary for the purpose of this Inquiry to ask you what you did in relation to any of the children or what happened while you were doing so but can I just ask you to confirm in general terms that you did try to give help to some of the injured children? - Yes.

Were you aware of police officers arriving? - Yes, I recall the arrival of the two first police officers on the scene.

That would be uniformed officers? - Yes, they were.

Did/

Did that seem long after the incident? - It actually didn't seem very long.

Were you aware of other members of staff trying to do the same thing as you were to help the children? - Yes, I was.

How did the staff cope with that? - This was very difficult; the children outside were being comforted by Mr. Scott and Mrs. Garland and some of the kitchen staff, they were doing a magnificent job, some others were in the gym itself trying to attend to the more seriously injured children; the staff and I just did what we could, they were quite magnificent.

Were you aware of injured teachers? - I became aware at one point; I hadn't looked into the store area of the gym so I moved into that area whereupon I found Mrs. Harrild lying on the floor and Mrs. Blake beside her.

Was anyone giving attention to them? - At that moment, no.

11.40 a.m.

Did help arrive from other staff members? - Soon thereafter I understand that other staff members arrived. I was unable to do very much. I spoke to both teachers and tried to reassure Mrs. Harrild that help was on its way, and Mrs. Blake seemed to me to be attending to her.

Mrs. Blake was giving some assistance to Mrs. Harrild? - Yes.

But both were significantly disabled at that stage? - Yes.

Were you aware of Ambulance staff arriving? - Yes. The emergency services began to arrive.

Now, how can you thereafter remember what happened in detail? Can you remember much? - I have some vivid memories, but the order of events is a little unclear.

Did you also provide, along with other members of the staff, assistance to the paramedics and doctors who arrived? - Yes.

Someone did something about covering the windows? - Yes. During this time a number of men who were strangers to me -- I assumed they were police officers -- with Mr. Currie, had obtained some material which I think had come from the stage, curtains on the stage, and used this to cover the windows on the gym.

Were you involved at any stage with the officers who were in charge of the scene, Mr. Ogg and Mr. Holden, that is police officers? - Yes, but not at that point.

And when did you first meet them? - When the Ambulance service and the doctors had arrived in numbers, I went back to the office area in the school and met Mr. Ogg at that stage.

Your job was really over in the gym, at least? - Yes.

Well, part of your job? - Yes.

Have/

Have you any idea what time it was when you were discussing how to proceed with Mr. Ogg and Mr. Holden? - I am really not sure of the time that was.

What sort of decisions did you make at that stage? - The next priority at that stage was identification, and we realised then the difficulty that that would give us because of the scene in the gym and because of the fact that the class teacher was not available to us.

You give the impression that attention was focusing on identification very quickly? - No, some time had passed till this point - some children had already been transported to hospital.

I am trying to understand your position as best I can. An important or difficult job of confirming that certain children were dead had to be done, and were you present when that was actually being done by the doctor who confirmed that each child was dead? - No.

I take it that too had been done, however, by the time you were discussing things with the police? - I assume so, yes. There was considerable chaos and confusion.

But you knew that the question of identification had to be dealt with? - Yes.

Who said that? Who was the person who said "We have to turn our attention to this"? - I think it was Chief Superintendent Ogg.

What did you think you ought to do then? - The only thing to do was to get members of the staff who may be able to help us, and take them to the gym -- they included the nursery staff that had some of these children the previous year, and Mrs. Eadington who was Deputy Headmistress with responsibility for the infant classes.

Were you personally familiar with any of the children? - I was familiar with the faces but not familiar with their names. I was aware of the names of some of them.

And had you yourself been able to put any/any names to faces that you saw? - Yes.

And was that a limited number of children? - That is a limited number of children.

Can you tell me then, who were the staff -- the names of the staff you relied on principally to assist in this exercise? - Mrs. Eadington, Mrs. Stewart -- the two Mrs. Stewarts, the nursery teacher and nursery nurse, and Mrs. Isles, another nursery teacher.

Had all the children been through the nursery? - No.

Was there a police officer assigned to take charge of this duty as well, do you remember? - A sergeant.

Is Tatnell the name? - Yes, a Sgt. Tatnell attached himself to me and was of some assistance, some considerable assistance to me. I am unsure if he was assigned to do that.

But he was there? - Yes.

Can you tell the Inquiry the difficulties that you experienced when you actually tried to do this job? - It was a most harrowing time for the staff involved. We had to take staff in and out of the gym on several occasions. It was a very traumatic experience for us.

And at that stage you are relying on eye-witness identification? - Yes.

Did you have to try to move to other ways of ensuring that you were accurately identifying children? - Well, at a fairly early stage I got from the files the record cards of the children involved, and we tried to use them to help us.

Had the register been marked? - The register had not been marked that morning.

So did you know whether any children were absent? - No, we had to rely on the police to confirm that two children were absent that day.

So/

So that was a job the police had to do? - Yes.

And was it common that the register wasn't marked before the assembly? - I am not certain, but the unfortunate coincidence on this occasion of a Primary 1 class going immediately to the gym, immediately from the assembly area, and having to change prior to going down to the gym, was a factor.

And that could well have been the normal practice, could it? - Yes.

Education is the priority of the school, but we now know that there are other very significant issues which may even be greater priorities. Do you have a view now about the significance of marking the register before anything happens in the school? - Yes. Of course, as I say, under normal circumstances that would have been the case, but the coincidence of these two events was unusual -- because of the rotational nature of the assembly.

Do you think if there were photographs of the children with the children's record card, it would assist at all in a situation like this? - I think in a situation like this it would have been of limited assistance.

Photographs were obtained at some stage in the process? - We provided the police with a class photograph.

I suppose a class photograph can always be kept ready to hand? - Yes.

And photographs taken individually of the children? - Normal practice would be that on alternative years, a photographer would come to the school and take family and individual photographs.

If it was your decision now, would you have individual photographs on the record card? - I would have an individual photograph within the record card. The photographs we occasionally get put on record cards are too small to be of any use.

So you would have larger-sized photographs/photographs? - I would.

I suppose it is important that they are kept up-to-date, because young children no doubt change more quickly than most of us? - Yes, indeed. I have already asked that the school photographer undertakes this next session.

Was your task hampered at all by the fact that a number of children had been taken off to hospital very quickly? - Yes it was.

I suppose that, taken with the uncertainty about who was absent, would create one difficulty? - It did.

Was there any confusion that you were aware of in the identity of any of the children in the gym? - In what sense?

Well, was there uncertainty that any identification was accurate that you were aware of? - We were uncertain about identities because of the situation I have described. I wasn't aware of anything specific.

Did you make use of clothing and names on clothing at all to try to help? - Yes, it helped, but I felt because of the gym clothing that they were wearing that I should re-enter the gym and check particularly one group of children, the name tags on the back of the shorts.

Can you tell us now whether any of them were wearing clothing with the name tag of another child? - I can't testify to that. I was made aware that was the case.

In the course of the day or on a later occasion? - Later on in the day.

Were you aware of the problem that one child was identified in two different places? - Not at that time.

But you learned again later? - Yes.

Was that later the same day? - I think it was later the same day.

Was/

Was there a child in relation to whom there was no record card? - Yes, there was.

And that was because she was a very recent arrival?
- That is correct. The record cards had not arrived.

Did that cause any difficulty? - That caused a little more confusion. The police were concerned that no record card was there.

Did you yourself have to leave the gym on a number of occasions and go back in? - Yes.

And even after you had done this did you have to assist further in the actual marking somewhere on the floor of the gym of the identity of the various children? - No. By that stage we felt we had almost come to an end of our usefulness. That one last task was carried out by nursery staff and Mrs. Eadington.

But you didn't go back into the gym to do that? - No.

We have heard quite a lot today, and later on yesterday, about telephones. How many telephone lines had the school? - Officially there was one telephone line to the school, which was Central Region policy, I understand. We had a second line put into the library, which we used for Internet purposes.

And could that line be used for ordinary calls? - Yes.

It could be? - Yes.

And was it used that day? - It was used that day.

In the children's record cards there would be a contact name, address and telephone number, should the parent be uncontactable in an emergency? - That is correct.

And in relation to all the children was there such a contact? - I am uncertain as to that, but it would be normal practice.

That/

That is the general position? - Yes.

And presumably the way you communicate is by telephone? - Yes, that is right.

That system no doubt works if one child in an emergency has to be taken home, or indeed even perhaps a class in an ordinary emergency need to be taken home. How did it work on this day? - The police had taken over the issue of telephones, and it was a matter for them, but it was clearly a huge disadvantage to only have access to two outside lines at that point. I was aware, however, of some considerable activity by BT engineers, who were busy installing outside lines.

I don't suppose you know of any instant answer to this problem? - More telephone lines in schools, which we have at present.

How many do you have now? - I think, because we have an outside telephone line to every classroom in the school and various other areas, we have somewhere in the region of 45 lines now.

So there is now a line to every class? - There is.

Is that a situation unique to your school? - I think it is.

And is that because of the events there? - Yes.

BY LORD CULLEN: And can I ask, is that through a central switchboard, or is that separate lines, or what do you mean? - Separate lines.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:
Now, we have heard evidence that an attempt was made to cut off your phone line, which didn't work? - Yes.

I suppose on any number of future occasions the same attempt could be made. Would you see any advantage in having a mobile or Cellnet phone in the school? - Yes, indeed. The senior staff in the school currently have mobile phones too.

Is/

Is that something which has been introduced since 13th March? - Yes.

Security of the school I suppose can be looked at under a number of headings. There is the physical security of the building at night when you leave. Were you happy that that was adequate prior to this incident? - Yes.

But then there is the question of visitors to the school. Can I ask you first of all if anything has changed since 13th March? - Yes, we have a visitor badge entry system.

Prior to 13th March did you have any particular arrangements in place for visitors? - Visitors were encouraged to report to the Secretary's Office.

How were they encouraged to do this? - This is normal practice in all schools. I can't recall if the signs requesting parents to do that were still in evidence, but they were there at some stage.

Picture someone arriving with leaflets he wants the teacher to distribute -- prior to 13th March how did he know where to go? - The front entrance looks directly on to the Secretary's Office, with a small badge.

So it is made obvious in your school? - Relatively.

Now what do you do? - Now, because there is an entry badge system, signing in and signing out.

And is that done at the Secretary's Office? - It is done immediately inside the front door.

And is there someone there attending to that? - At the moment there is.

Who is that? - We have a community policeman, P.C. Stark in attendance at the school all the time.

Do you think, in the long run, it is a good/good idea to have a policeman at the door of every school? - No, it is not.

So what is going to happen once the initial circumstances die down? - Obviously the security of all schools will be reviewed, but in our school we have a new security system being implemented at the moment which will eventually cause a single entry access door.

And when that happens will there be somebody at the door? - Hopefully there will be a bell system, with a redesigned office area so that the office staff can overview the front door to check on the identity of everybody who arrives.

So by signs people can be directed to the one entrance? - Yes.

At the entrance there can be a sign saying that you ring a bell? - Yes.

When the bell rings someone can answer? - Yes.

And attend to the person who wishes to come into the school, find out why he is there, and give him a badge if he is to be permitted entry? - That is correct.

Is that something that you now consider to be essential? - I think in our position, my answer is yes.

Do you think that it is essential in all schools? - I can't answer for all schools, but I would certainly recommend that this system be actively pursued.

Do you think it detracts from the atmosphere that we hope to have in primary schools? - It may do, but there are greater considerations than that.

Well, is it impossible really to ask you about how, having someone at the door, or a system like this would apply, or be felt, in a school which hadn't suffered, and continues to suffer, in the way yours does? - I think all schools throughout the land suffered from what happened here.

But/

R.L. Taylor

Cross-examined

But do you think it is right to look at Dunblane, see what is necessary there, and apply that all over? - It may well be that the experience that we gain with our security system could be made available to all schools.

Are there any other security arrangements being installed in the school? - We have a camera system at the moment.

Covering/

12 noon

Covering where? - It covers the majority of the school grounds, particularly the entrance doorway.

Where are the viewing screens? - In the janitor's office.

Is there someone manning them throughout the school day? - No. As I understand it it is a specialised system, and the pictures are beamed directly into Police Headquarters.

Are there further security arrangements being installed at the moment? - Yes; the locking systems which I mentioned earlier, and also as part of that the emergency doors are linked into a buzzer system so that if the emergency doors are opened inadvertently the janitor would be alerted.

Now, I take it you have continued to have playtimes? - Yes.

And children go outside? - That is correct.

Do you see that as an essential and necessary part of the school day? - Yes, indeed.

I suppose the camera system would give some reassurance while the children are outside? - Yes. They also have playground supervisors; but an extended camera system would be very useful.

Who are the playground supervisors? - Parent helpers.

How many do you have? - We have five currently.

Prior to the 13th March did you have parent helpers? - Yes.

Do you know whether parents who take on these responsibilities or have the opportunity to do so are vetted or checked in any way? - Yes. These are parent helpers who are employed by the local Education Authority.

Do you know whether the local Education Authority/

Authority do anything to check their background?

- I think their criminal backgrounds are checked.

Do you have personal knowledge of whether the check is wider than simply a criminal record? - I wouldn't know.

Even before the 13th March do you know if there was any check even on criminal records? - Yes, I think there was.

To be absolutely clear about the use of the telephones, before the police took over responsibility or control for the phone lines was there any opportunity to use the phone to contact parents of the class you knew had been involved in this? - There would have been some opportunity in the early stages, but very quickly the phone became very busy.

Do you know if anyone did actually phone any of the contact numbers? - I don't think so, but I am not sure.

Is there a fax in the school? - Only subsequent to March 13th.

What was the reason for introducing it? - To increase the communications system. It was just part of the system that was installed.

It is to improve communications, I take it in connection with safety? - In connection with all communications.

I take it one way of improving the communication with parents in a class like this would be to get information to the Education Authority and ask someone with a lot of phone lines to do something about it? - Yes.

That is always assuming they have not turned up outside the school? - That is correct.

But introducing such a system, where do you contact the Education Authority, would at least spread the load and increase the opportunity for communication? - It would.

CROSS/

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: If I could just ask you one or two brief questions about identification. You referred to names of clothing, and you were specifically asked about a child wearing clothing which had a different name? - Yes.

Do you know if that was in fact the name of an opposite sex sibling? - I am sorry, I don't know.

In so far as the child for whom there was no record card is concerned, is it in fact the case that that child had begun school with the other members of the class the previous August? - I am not certain about when the child had joined the class.

If I could suggest to you that the child began school with all the other children you would not be in a position to contradict that? - That is correct.

But for some reason her record card has not been filled out? - That would be most unusual.

Finally in relation to identification, were you aware of one set of parents of an absent child phoning in early on to make clear their child was at home safe? - No, I was not aware of that.

Turning to school security, you obviously have a number of years' experience, and indeed I think you stated you had some 19 years as a teacher. Is your new system like anything you have ever seen in any other school? - No.

Finally, if I could ask you for some information about Dunblane, how many schools are there in Dunblane? - In Dunblane at the moment we are the largest primary school. There is an Episcopalian school, St. Mary's, and just outside Dunblane is a small rural school called Kirkton Primary School, and there is also Queen Victoria's School.

So within Dunblane itself there are four schools; is that correct? - Yes.

CROSS/

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: It might be helpful if you express any view you might have on the question of vetting of those who participate in after-school lets. Do you take any part in perusing any applications received for evening lets in your school? - No. Let applications are sent directly to the Region. These are applications for the use of the building outwith school hours, which is quite different from after-school, extra curricular activities in which I would be involved.

Have you any view as a member of the education profession as to whether there are any steps which could be taken to vet those who are involved with children in evening lets? - Obviously I think the system needs to be tightened up considerably with regard to any adult who has any contact with children.

I think there is a fairly stringent vetting procedure in relation to teachers; they all need to be members of the General Teaching Council? - Yes.

I think you indicated your playground supervisors are also checked? - Yes.

And you have a statutory requirement to provide supervisors in the playground? - Yes.

Is there a Scottish Criminal Records Office check done on other members of your staff, as far as you are aware? - Yes, indeed.

Do you consider it appropriate that a SCOR check should be done on anyone involved in evening lets or anyone involved with children? - I think anyone involved with children, whether in schools or on our premises, should be subject to such checks.

Is it your view that those involved in church activities, whether Sunday activities or Cubs or Scouts, should be vetted? - Yes.

Do you think it is also appropriate that where evening lets are involved that the local school should be asked for any view as to whether the let is suitable or not? - Yes.

I think that did not happen before? - That/

That does happen on occasions.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: Are you able to recollect the time when the school records cards were produced on the morning of the 13th? - I am quite unspecific about when that would be, but it wasn't very much later, after the Emergency Services had arrived in numbers.

You say when they arrived in numbers. I think the first of the Emergency Services was arriving round about 10 o'clock; is that correct? - Yes.

Are you able to say roughly how long after that.....?
- It could have been half an hour after that: at 10.30-ish.

If I could now turn to the topic of school security, would it be fair to say that some schools will be located in built-up areas and other schools will be located in fairly open country environments? - Yes.

And we also have schools who will vary considerably from the small country school to the large City Centre school? - Yes.

That will involve different sizes of school rolls, and also it will involve different geographical regions? - That is correct.

Could it be the case that a security provision for one school might be inappropriate as a security provision for another school? - Specific systems may well be inappropriate, yes.

Does it follow from that that in order to arrive at a constructive view as to what ought to be the security provision in any school it requires each one to be examined and assessed individually?

- I think that would be appropriate. I would also imagine that the authorities would wish to consult fairly widely about the position of individual schools.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. STEVEN: Can you tell me what if any instruction was given to you, or guidance, by the Region in relation to matters of security prior to the 13th March of this year? - I/

I can recall no such guidance.

Do you think you should have had some form of guidance from the Region or their successors? - Yes, indeed; and that is beginning to happen.

Can you tell me briefly what the position of the school was on the 13th in relation to the people visiting the school, or if someone was found wandering in the school? - The normal practice would be that any adults on the school staff would approach the stranger and try to determine what the purpose of them being there was. It is very difficult with a large school. It is one of the duties that the janitor for example has.

Moving on, do you think there is anything you or your staff might have done or would have done differently on the day which would have given more assistance to the injured children? - I think the staff that day in relation to the children did absolutely everything that they could, even beyond all expectations, and we have taken considerable comfort from the fact that any that survived did survive.

Lastly, can you tell us how the children and the staff are now getting on with it? - The children have shown resilience and are getting on very well, and so are the staff; but it is very difficult and continues to be difficult.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: You were asked about the record card that was not there. Can you tell me what the system is for ensuring that we do get record cards for children who are transferred from somewhere else? - In normal circumstances contact is made with the Authority to request that cards are forwarded. The length of time this usually takes varies.

And that is done by school staff, a secretary? - Yes.

And it would be I suppose up to her to follow it up if there was no response? - Yes. The problem is that the response varies considerably from one Authority to another.

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, the next witness is Agnes Awlson.

AGNES/

AGNES AWLSON, (47), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: I think you are one of the Assistant Head Teachers at Dunblane Primary School? - That is correct.

And you held that position on the 13th March of this year? - Yes.

Now, you have been at the school a while, I think; is that correct? - Yes, since 1988.

Have you been the assistant head teacher throughout that period? - I have, yes.

So you transferred into that post? - Yes.

On the 13th March when did you arrive at the school? - About quarter past 8.

Just as usual? - Yes.

Assistant head teachers have administrative duties? - Yes.

Class teaching responsibilities as well? - This year I have a class as well as being assistant head teacher, yes.

Do you teach all the time? - Four days out of five.

Did you have a class that day? - Yes, I did.

Between 8.15 and 9 were you in the classroom or somewhere else? - After I arrived for work I usually check my mail, say good morning and then go to my classroom, and that is what I did.

Where is your classroom? - It is one of the three Primary 7 mobile huts.

We have got the photograph still on the screen. That is the white hut with the grey roof, between the main building and another dark-roofed hut towards the top of the photograph? - Yes.

And yours is the middle of three classes there?/

there? - Yes.

I think you had someone else walking along with you?

- I had a student teacher, Mr. David Scott, working with me.

Your class wasn't involved with assembly?

- No.

But somewhere after 9 o'clock they were going somewhere else? - At 9.30 they were booked into the art room for an art lesson. Mr. Scott was going to take them.

Where is the art room? - In the main building, opposite the Primary 7 huts.

Going back to the photograph, you would leave the middle of the hut and go more or less straight across the photograph itself to the join between the main building and the gate that is used to gain entrance to the administration.....? - Yes. There is one door that is always left open, what we call the library door; the other door is the fire exit, so it is more or less like that.

It is more or less at that angle shown in the photograph? - Yes.

And that is where your class would have to troop up to? - Yes.

Did you part company with them at some stage? - I was behind them. Mr. Scott had gone ahead, and I was locking the doors.

Did the children go straight across? - No, they were lined up, and I instructed them to walk across, that I would be behind them.

Had/

12.20 p.m.

Had somebody forgot something? - Well, I reached the library door and one of the boys in my class had been sent back by Mr. Scott to fetch a pair of scissors from the classroom.

Did you have to go back in again? - No, I just said to him "You know where they are, the top drawer, just go and get them".

Did he have to take the keys? - No, it is the cupboard door which has my handbag that I locked, not the classroom door.

Did you carry on into the main building? - Just after I had spoken to this boy I heard noises and I was alerted.....I didn't know what they were, very sharp noises.

Were you still in the playground? - We were still in the playground.

Midway between the two? - No, almost on the veranda just before going into the library door.

So you were more or less at the main building? - Yes.

And you heard what sort of noises? - A sharp metallic noise, several of them.

Can you give us your best approximation of the time? - Well, my RE class finished at 9.30, the art room was booked from 9.30; I kept the class back a few minutes and then instructed them to cross the playground so within five minutes, five or six minutes I would think.

So 9.30 is a fairly accurate stab at the time when this all started? - Yes.

When you heard the noises what did you do? - I looked towards the direction from which the noises were coming, I heard other noises after that, very faintly screaming noises, and then the metallic noises started again.

Did you know approximately where they were/were coming from? - I knew it was coming from the region of the gymnasium.

So having worked out where they were, having heard not only the metallic noises but the sound of children -- --? - Yes.

What did you do? - I went through into the library door, through the school and straight up towards the gymnasium.

Were you on that stepped walkway along the side of the hall? - Yes.

That is the same road as Mr. Taylor eventually takes?
- Yes.

How far did you go? - Almost to the swing-doors at the end of that raised walkway, they were open and that is also.....I didn't go as far as the gym doors.

What did you do when you got to that point? - The noises were still going on and I saw what I thought were cartridges lying outside the gym doors and I realised something dreadful was happening and I turned to raise the alarm.

You had realised obviously by that time there was shooting? - Yes.

Is that the point at which you realised there was shooting? - Before that I remember feeling irritated and angry that workmen should be causing some alarm to the children; I was going to investigate that; it wasn't until I actually drew near to the gymnasium I realised it was something much worse.

When you were at the swing-doors and stopped was this banging still going on? - Yes.

What did you then do? - I turned and went back to Mr. Taylor's office very quickly to raise the alarm.

Now, he described you as being crouched down when you went into his gym? - Yes.

Was there any particular reason for that?/

that? - I thought whoever was doing this, I didn't know if it was one person or what, I thought they may have been threatening the safety of everyone else in the school.

You thought he may be behind you? - Yes.

What did you do when you got to Mr. Taylor's office? - I went in and said.....I can't remember the exact words, that someone had a gun and get help.

What did Mr. Taylor do? - He was on the telephone, he looked up and immediately put the telephone down and lifted it again.

Were there still noises at that stage? - I can't recall.

Did you then leave Mr. Taylor's office? - Yes.

Where did you go? - I went out into the corridor and I looked to my right and saw Mrs. Tweddle lying on the floor.

Was she conscious? - She was.

Did she look injured? - Yes.

What sign was there of injury? - She was lying on her back and her hand was behind her head and there was a lot of blood.

Were there any children around? - One of the other members of staff was just going through one of the other doors with her class and I called to her to get her children on to the ground and to hide in the corner.

What did you do about the member of staff who was injured? - I went into the janitor's room, got some paper towels; she didn't want to move her hand from behind her head and I placed some towels under there and comforted her.

How long were you with her? - Two or three minutes.

Where/

Where did you go from there? - I realised that Mrs. Tweddle was not going to lose consciousness, she was talking and another member of staff came and took over and I went up to the gym.

Before you got to the gym did you meet somebody coming back the way? - Mr. Taylor was coming out of the gym; he said to me "Have you been in there" but I said "It's all right".

Did you go in at that point? - Yes.

You would see the same sight as he would? - Yes, some of the injured children had already been removed and were in the corridor as I approached the gym.

When you went into the gym what did you try to do? - I tried to help the children who were injured, establish the kind of injury, tried to remember my First Aid training to make sure all the children who were injured were able to breath and stayed to comfort as much as I could.

Was it immediately obvious to you that some of the children were dead? - Not immediately -- as I approached some of the children Mr. Currie, the janitor, said to me "You can't help them, Mrs. Awlson, they're gone".

And then did you realise that some of them were actually dead? - Yes.

Is it also right to say that immediately you went into the gym you were aware that there were certain deceased persons immediately inside the gym? - Yes.

Now, there were children that you could help? - Yes.

Can I take it that is how you spent the time immediately after going into the gym? - Yes, that is correct.

And indeed your contact was with a number of children? - Yes.

Were you aware of other people other than teachers arriving to provide help? - Yes.

Who/

Who were you first aware of? - I think I am aware of some policeman but I didn't speak to anyone and then I was aware of the local practice doctors arriving because I know one of them and then the Paramedics arrived.

And by that time were there also other teachers in the gym giving assistance? - I only remember Mr. Currie and one other member of staff but I know there were others.

Now, so far as the later work is concerned, this is the job of identifying victims -- were you directly involved in that? - No.

Were you involved in giving support to the teachers who were there? - No.

And it was determined that you really couldn't be of practical assistance because there were professional people there what did you then turn your attention to? - I left the gym and went into the Assembly Hall where some of the injured children.....where all of the injured children were being removed to and assisted there until they were taken away.

Did you also stay with Linda Stewart for a period? - Briefly -- Linda was in the gym and she had been asked to stay behind to identify....to help identify the children and I stayed with her, yes.

Can I turn to the situation facing the children in the other classes of which you had one? - Yes.

What attention was then paid to your own class? - My class was with Mr. Scott and Mr. Scott, having witnessed Hamilton commit suicide, asked one of the other teachers to take care of my class while he came downstairs; I didn't know that at the time.

Did you have any further contact with your own class in the course of the morning? - No.

So what were your duties thereafter? - I assisted with reuniting parents with their children; it was difficult because of the layout of the school, it really had to be teachers who knew where/where the classrooms were to go and get the children.

Could you tell me a little more about how this was done? - Parents were allowed into the corridor at the nursery.

These are parents of children in classes not involved in the incident? - Yes.

They are allowed into the corridor at the nursery? - Yes, and they gave their names and the names of the children and the classes of the children to the police.

Just before we go any further, if we see the diagram -- can you point out to us where the nursery corridor is that the parents came into; if you point to it then the operator will home in on the right part (witness indicates).

So you are pointing to the area which is really adjacent to the main entrance to the school? - Yes.

And that is the corridor there, is it, and we see the word "nursery"? - Two nurseries and the corridor was there.

Where were the parents assembled? - In this area here.

That is in the corridor? - Yes.

That is the point at which you tried to unite pupils with parents? - Yes.

Could you go back to your seat, thank you. So this exercise is undertaken in relation to all the pupils who are in all the other classes unaffected? - Yes.

Can I take it that the pupils had to stay there until the parents came for them? - The pupils had to stay in their classrooms until the parents came for them.

Were you involved in that area, taking the names of the patients and arranging for the children to be collected? - Yes.

Did/

Did you collect them yourself? - Yes.

So you would go to whatever class a child was in because of your knowledge of the school and bring that child to meet the parents? - That is correct.

Now, how long did that all go on for? - I could only do it for a short time because I felt as though I was going to.....I needed to sit down so what I did was I went to some of the older classes and I asked a member of staff to assist.

So other staff became involved in the job you had been doing up until that point? - Yes.

Now, can I take it that this job took a long time? - I am not sure.

You don't know how.....? - I don't know how long it took.

Obviously it depended on word getting to the parents to get to the school? - Yes.

And we did hear something about communication difficulties, difficulty with communicating with parents? - Yes.

Now, Mrs. Awlson, just to be sure that I covered all the ground, can I ask you whether there is anything that you want to say about the security arrangements either at the time for visitors or that have now been introduced? - I feel reassured at the system that is being introduced and the way that visitors are met and have to wear badges, that helps me a great deal because in the past when I have not had a class it has been part of my job to ask if I can help anyone that I don't recognise in the school so now I know that they are recognised as visitors and have badges.

Now there is no doubt that no one should expect to be recognised unless they have a badge? - Yes.

There are obviously additional measures in force when somebody has entered and so on and that must give you a feeling of added security? - It does.

Do/

Do you think the camera system is of benefit? - Yes, it is quite clear.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: Just briefly as someone who has been involved in education for years have you formed any view as to the appropriateness or otherwise of the vetting of people involved with children outwith normal schooling activities? - Yes, I think it should be done.....I wasn't really aware it wasn't done in the past but I am aware of that now and I would expect it to be done for anyone who is working with children.

JOSEPH HOLDEN (42), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY THE LORD ADVOCATE: You are a Police Superintendent with Central Scotland Police? - Yes.

How many years police service do you have? - 23 years.

I think you are presently based at a police station in Stirling? - Yes, I am a local unit commander.

At this stage of the Inquiry I want to ask you questions about your involvement with the events of Wednesday, the 13th March? - Yes.

Am I right in understanding that that morning you were on duty within Police Headquarters in Stirling? - Yes, I was.

At what time did you become aware that there had been a shooting incident at Dunblane Primary School? - About 10 to 10.

How soon did you decide to go to Dunblane? - Within minutes of that time -- I quickly spoke to Chief Superintendent Matchett who directed me to be the senior operational representative or uniformed representative to go to the school.

Who gave you that instruction? - Chief Superintendent Matchett who is my direct superior.

And/

And apart from being directed to being the senior uniformed officer there did he give you any other instructions on what you were to do when you got there? - No, I was just to make my way there and take command of what was appropriate on my arrival there and we had very little information about how serious the incident was.

What time was it you arrived at the school? - About 10 past 10.

By that time had other police officers arrived? - Yes, I entered the gymnasium from the store room and I immediately saw Detective Chief Superintendent Ogg and Superintendent Winning within the gymnasium.

And/

12.40 p.m.

And they and other officers I think were dealing with the situation within the gymnasium? - Yes, they were.

And did you have any discussion with Mr. Ogg and his colleague as to what role you would play? - Not at that moment. I made my decision at that time that my responsibility was to secure the school and the exterior of the school.

And did this involve establishing some form of cordon?
- Yes. Very quickly we tried to establish a cordon -- certainly within the next five or 10 minutes -- a cordon around the perimeter of the school grounds, as well as an inner cordon on the four outer corners of the school building.

I wonder if you could look please at some photographs? Perhaps we could look first of all at RI, which I think is one which shows an overhead view from some distance? - Yes.

You recognise that view? - Yes I do.

Can you indicate to us where you established the outer of the two cordons you referred to -- you can go to the imager and with a pencil or pen indicate it to us? - The first cordon -- what manpower we had, we utilised, and I took the decision that we would immediately have someone on the four corners, which basically would cover the inner entries to the school. With the manpower left I was trying to establish a cordon which would take in that type of area. That wasn't clearly established for something like 10 or 15 minutes, on the arrival of more officers, because it was quite an extensive cordon, and our priority at that time was to try and have a line-of-sight cordon.....

If we could go over that step by step, I think you have told us first about the inner cordon, and that involved establishing officers at the four corners of the blocks of the school building; is that right? - Yes. It was to cover the four corners, and to also try to cover the four basic entries that I knew about at that time.

What was the purpose of that cordon? - Very/

Very quickly we had a crowd gathering here of possibly parents, possibly relatives, possibly other onlookers; and we also were having the first arrival of media as early as 10.30, 10.25.

So you are pointing at this stage to Doune Road, and the entrance into the school building from Doune Road? - Yes. That was becoming the natural collection point for people arriving at the school. Now, the inner cordon is at the four corners of the school buildings. Where did you seek to establish the outer cordon? - Having sent officers to these four corners what I intended to do was to bring the cordon out towards the outer entrances of these pathways, and then to cover that garden there -- I didn't successfully achieve that. Chief Superintendent Matchett, the officer I mentioned earlier, arrived 10 to 15 minutes later, and he took over that responsibility with the arrival of reinforcements from uniformed officers.

So when the outer cordon was eventually established, as I understand it, it was at the street entrances to the pathways leading to the school building; is that right? - Yes, but as I was aware, there was two pathways where I am pointing, and also two pathways on these corners, towards the south of the school.

But as far as Doune Road entrance or exit was concerned, then, how far up could parents and relatives, and anybody else, get before they came face-to-face with the cordon? - In the very early stages I believe my recollection is that they were actually -- persons had reached almost just short of the janitor's house; but when we quickly established the cordon, it moved back to the actual entrance from Doune Road.

Perhaps you could resume your seat. It is not an uncommon phenomenon that when a tragic incident occurs, such as a train crash, the collapse of scaffolding, an incident at a football ground, or something of that nature, people tend to congregate, for a variety of reasons, many of them perfectly bona fide -- they are concerned that some of their loved ones may be involved. Does the Central Scotland Police have any form of written instructions or protocol which officers are expected to/

to follow when coping with this aspect of the incident, namely the management of the large number of people and members of the public who tend to congregate? - There is no distinct written protocol. Each incident would be seen as different -- particularly the type of incident we were dealing with that morning. It would be the responsibility of I, as senior officer who was trying to achieve that type of control, to brief the officers involved and assure myself that they were aware of how to deal with these people. A lot of these people became very necessary to us -- not just parents or relatives, but there were a lot of people coming to help. We had midwives and nurses and people arriving from health clinics. So it was important that we were able to -- "vet" would be too strong a word -- but to be able to pick out those people who were coming forward to give assistance, who could be of assistance to us.

So as I understand it the procedure followed by your Force is that the senior officer there, based upon his general training and experience, requires to set up the procedures there and then? - Yes.

And that the officers that are present, who are either sent to assist him, or requested by him, come to assist him and set up a procedure which sets up this cordon and allows people who are to be admitted through this cordon -- whether they be medical people or whatever, but to keep out other people who have a legitimate interest to be around, but who have no requirement to go through the cordon? - Yes. It is very important.

Do we understand correctly then from what you have told us that following upon this outer cordon being set up there was a constant traffic of people coming whose identity had to be clarified and then allowed through to assist with what was going on? - Yes. In the very early stages there was traffic of people coming through because that was people who were arriving to assist, all sorts of people. There was a fairly dense crowd very quickly.

That was the next matter I was going to ask you about. I think you mentioned some time before half-past 10 not only had parents and relatives/relatives and some of the children turned up, but there appeared to be members of the media as well? - Yes.

By 10.30, which is some 20 minutes or so after you arrived, how large a crowd do you estimate had congregated in the general location of the Doune Road entrance? - My recollection -- I would estimate somewhere between 200 and 300 people were there about 10.30.

And would it follow therefore that people such as the ambulance and the police cars and medical staff's cars who had to get in and out had to negotiate their way through this large crowd? - Yes.

People, we stress, who had every right to be there, and perfectly understandable reasons for being there? - Yes.

We will come back to the detail of this in a moment, but can you point out to us please the house which I think was used at one stage during the course of your work? - I eventually used two houses, but the first house that I used was this house here on the east side of the drive.

And the second house? - The second house was the white house immediately opposite on the west side of the drive.

And were these arrangements made by the occupiers being approached and asked if they would make their premises available? - Yes. I spoke to both occupants personally.

Well, we will come on to the detail of that in a moment. Now, can you recall when it was that you became aware of the identity of the class that was involved in this tragedy? - I am vague in my recollection whether it was before I first went down at 10.30 or just minutes later -- somewhere about 10.30 to 10.40.

And by this stage there was this large crowd congregated there? - Yes.

By this stage you would appreciate that it was your responsibility to deal with the parents of/

of the children in that class? - Yes. I was given the responsibility of that.

And also the relatives of any adults who may have been injured in any way? - Yes.

And I assume also the parents and relatives of any other children that might in some way have been injured, whether physically or otherwise, as a result of what had happened? - Yes, that is right, and also in the very initial stages I was also responsible for these other parents and relatives of pupils who were in here, and for the remainder of the school.

Yes. Well, that is another point which we could maybe just deal with now. In addition there was the problem that in this very large primary school there were a large number of other classes and a large number of children who were physically within the building, apparently physically safe, but whose parents were outside in increasing numbers, unaware precisely what had happened? - Yes, that is correct.

Now, we know as a matter of fact that the school kept record cards with certain details of individual children's or parents' contact telephone numbers. What was your understanding that morning as to whether any use was being made of such documentary material with a view to contacting the parents in Mrs. Mayer's class? - I was aware that within the temporary incident office that Detective Chief Superintendent Ogg had set up, that these were the primary sources of reference early on in the incident. I observed these types of documents within that office and in the office of Mr. Taylor, and there was conversation and reference to these documents.

So you knew that they physically existed? - Yes.

But were you aware whether any use was being made of the information within them to contact the parents by positively phoning them or sending officers round or anything of that sort? - Not at that stage. They were being used, but during my observations there was inherent difficulties with using the cards in combination with the class register/register, which hadn't been used that morning. It seemed to me that difficulties were being experienced that the officers involved didn't know who was all within the class that morning at half-past 9.

Yes, but was the purpose of the officers using them at that time to assist in identifying those who had been killed and injured?
- Yes.

Was that the sole purpose, or were they also being used for the purpose of trying to contact the families.....? - No. The decision, as it appeared to me, was that the cards, the records, were being used to identify those deceased and injured.

Yes. So you were faced with the practical problem of this increasing number of parents and relatives, some of whom would certainly include the parents of the children in Mrs. Mayer's class, and others would include the parents of children in other classes? - Yes, that is correct.

Now, faced with that situation, what steps did you take to identify, and if appropriate -- I was going to use the word "segregate". That is possibly the wrong word to use. But what steps did you take to take to one side those who were the parents of children in Mrs. Mayer's class? - I saw that as my first task, and I confirmed personally with Detective Chief Superintendent Ogg that it was Class I/13, and that it was Mrs. Mayer's class. And these were the pieces of information that I would use to first of all try to separate those parents from the mass of parents. I then arranged for the first house that I indicated to be used to put the mass of parents and relatives, parents or guardians of children who were at the school, to be placed within the grounds of the house, and within the house itself, because there was ever-increasing states of distress ongoing at that point, and some of the people within the crowd required water, they required to be in a place indoors. So I secured that house and I asked the police cordon to envelop that house within the perimeter cordon, so in effect we pushed the cordon out to get those people within the cordon, and secure within the cordon from people outside.

So/

So if we can just try and be quite clear about this, the first house you used was the one to the left of the driveway as we look down the photograph? - Yes.

And as I understand it you used the grounds of the house and the house itself? - Yes.

And parents and relatives -- anyone who had a legitimate interest in caring for and being responsible for children were invited into these grounds and into the house; is that right? - Yes, that is correct.

Can you tell us at what time approximately that was done? - It would be shortly after 10.30 that we first used that house.

And this invitation I understand was extended without any distinction between the parents of Mrs. Mayer's class and the rest of the parents? - That is correct.

And I think you also said that you simultaneously made arrangements for the police cordon to include the grounds of that house? - Yes.

That would mean, though, that those who did not fall to be invited into the grounds, the normal onlookers or members of the media, were not far away -- just over the wall? - Yes, some 20 yards away.

And all of this must have been an extremely distressful business for all the parents involved at this stage? - Yes, it was very intense.

Because not only were they aware that some sort of incident had occurred, they were extremely uncertain as to whether their particular child or children were involved? - Yes.

And this was all taking place in the public gaze, with members of the public and the media, perfectly understandably, taking a very close interest in what was going on? - Yes.

THE LORD ADVOCATE: Sir, this might be a/

a convenient time.

LORD CULLEN: Yes. We will adjourn now till 10 to 2.

THE LORD ADVOCATE: Before we break off, could I raise one matter? I have discussed this informally with my learned friends -- but subject to your permission, Sir. I would wish to deal immediately after lunch with the evidence of Agnes Watt, who will be in attendance then. It would involve interrupting the Superintendent's evidence, but I understand there to be no objection to that.

LORD CULLEN: I am quite content that should happen.

think a family decision was reached that your own parents would adopt your son and effectively take over the care of him? - Yes, that is right.

And was it at that time that he took on the surname of Hamilton? - Yes.

A few years later, by which time your son was around eight or nine years of age, did the whole family move to the Stirling area? - Yes.

I think whilst your own parents remained there permanently, occasionally you worked away from Stirling, in local hotels in the Region? - Yes.

In the fullness of time did your son find out that you in fact were his natural mother? - Yes.

And that his grandparents had in fact adopted him? - Yes.

When your son left school what did he do? - He worked in the Council.

In what sort of job? - What do you call it? Architect.

In the Architects' Department? - Yes.

Was there also a time when he was involved in running a woodcraft shop in Stirling? - Yes.

Am I correct in understanding that you remained in fairly regular contact with your son right up until the date of his death? - Yes.

And over the years, even when you were working away from Stirling you and he still remained in touch with each other? - Yes.

Do you recall how long ago it was when your son found his own accommodation in which to stay? - He stayed with my father and my father left and went somewhere else to stay. He was staying there himself at 7 Kent Road.

So for a while he stayed with your father, James Hamilton? - Yes.

But/

But then your father went off to other accommodation, leaving your son in the address in Kent Road? - Yes.

In the last few years of his life how regularly would it have been that you saw your son? - Oh, quite often.

As often as once a week or more often than that? - Maybe twice a week: and then he always phoned me at night to see I was all right or was at home.

Did he phone you each night? - Every night.

Every night you spoke on the phone? - Yes.

Did he come and visit you from time to time? - Yes.

Did you visit his house? - At first, but not.....

Not latterly? - No.

I take it you met him by chance in the street from time to time? - No, he would phone me to meet him, and we used to go for a meal.

Now, can I ask you a few questions about things over the last year or two? What did you understand to be your son's source of income over the last two years; was he working, as far as you were aware? - No, when he gave up the shop he was buying and selling cameras.

After he gave up the shop he was involved in buying and selling cameras? - Yes.

Did he make any money out of that, as far as you were concerned? - Yes.

That gave him some income? - Yes.

Did he have any other sources of income, as far as you understood? - No.

Do you know whether he was in receipt of Social/

Social Security Benefit of any sort? - I don't know.

Was he ever in a position to give you money from time to time? - Yes.

How often did that occur? - Every time he had a wee sale of cameras he used to come and give me something.

What sort of sums are we talking about?
- £50.

If he sold some cameras and made a bit of a profit he might on occasions give you up to £50? - Yes.

How did he go about buying and selling cameras? Did he operate a shop, did he do it by advertising or mail order? - I couldn't tell you.

In the years up until the time of his death what impression did you form as to whether he was able to make ends meet or whether he was short of money? - I used to give him money if he was short.

What sort of amounts of money would you give him? - About £30 or something.

How often would that be? - Not very often; about twice.

So there were a very few occasions when you were able to give him something? - Yes.

Was this after he complained about being short of money? - Yes.

Were you aware whether or not he had any debt due to anybody? - No.

What about friends that he had? In recent years did he ever appear to have girlfriends or lady friends? - He had a girlfriend, but she got too serious, and he didn't want to know.

How long ago was that? - Oh, that was a long time ago.

In/

In recent years was there any friendship with members of the opposite sex? - I couldn't tell you.

You were unaware of any? - Yes.

I think we understand he had some involvement with boys' clubs? - Yes.

What did you understand that to involve?
- He just said he was going to a club. I didn't know anything about clubs.

Do you know how often he went there? - No.
Or where the clubs were? - No.

We know as a matter of fact that he owned a number of guns and ammunition. Were you aware he had an interest in guns? - Yes.

Over how many years was that? - Oh, it was a long time. I didn't know he still had them.

Had you ever seen these weapons? - Once.

Where was that? - In his house.

In recent years do you know whether he went to gun clubs or shooting ranges to shoot? - Yes, he said -- he usually said he was going to a rifle club.

So he talked about going to rifle clubs on occasions?
- Just once. I didn't know if he was still going or not.

Over the years up until the time of his death did you and he have any serious arguments or disagreements about anything? - No.

A number of years ago was there some problem involving telephone calls which you had received from your son? - Yes.

How many years ago was that? - That was a good few years ago. You see, I am a diabetic, and he said there was an ambulance coming for me to take me to -- oh, where is that place again?

A/

A hospital of some sort? - Yes.

Whereabouts is the hospital? - Inverness.

How many years ago are we talking about? Two or three years ago, or more than that? - About four years ago.

How many of these phone calls were there?
- I think there were just two.

Were you upset about the phone calls at that time? -
Yes.

But I think any problems associated with them blew over; is that right? - Yes.

I have asked you about whether he had any lady friends. What about male friends? Did you ever see him in the company of other men? - There was one used to come to his house, James Gillespie.

Was he the only one you were aware of, or were there others? - I don't know of any.

In the last few weeks of his life did you notice anything unusual about your son? - No.

Was he talking about anything different from what he normally talked about? - No.

Did he come and visit you any less frequently than he used to do? - He always came.

So he kept coming as normal? - Yes.

Did he telephone you as normal too? - Yes.

During these last few weeks did he make any mention of any debts that were due by him? - No.

We know he sent a number of letters to people over the years. Were you aware of that at that time? - No.

In the last few weeks of his life did he mention anything about letters to the Queen, to the Secretary/

Secretary of State or anything in that connection? - No.

Did he make any complaint about the Local Authority or headmasters or the Scouts or anything of that nature? - No, he never mentioned anything.

Now, I want to ask you a few questions about the few days leading up to the date of his death. We know he killed himself on Wednesday, 13th March. Do you recall him coming to see you on the previous Sunday? - No, he came on the Tuesday.

Had you seen him on the Monday? - Aye, down the town.

You had met him in the town? - Yes.

Was this by arrangement or by chance? - By chance that time.

What did he tell you about what he was doing that day? - He never said. Oh, on the Monday he said he was going to the University.

Did you know why he was going to the University? - No.

And then you said on the Tuesday he came to see you; isn't that right? - Yes.

What time of day was that at? - 6 o'clock. No, about 2, because he went away at 6.

During the course of the afternoon? - Yes.

Was he at your house for a number of hours? - Yes.

What did he do when he was there? - He had a bath and something to eat, then he sat and blethered, then went away.

Was it his practice sometimes to have a bath at your house? - Yes, because he didn't like a shower.

It/

It would not be uncommon for him to have something to eat either at your house? - No.

During this "blether" as you have described it, what do you remember you talked about? - My father.

Was your son upset or annoyed in any way at talking about your father? - No.

After he left that night did you talk to him again on the telephone? - No. It was me that phoned him.

So you talked when you phoned him? - No. I couldn't get anybody. The police were there at the time. He usually phones me when he goes away. I was wondering why I didn't get a phone call. I waited till the Wednesday, and when I phoned the police were there.

Your phone call was not till the next day? - Yes.

And by the time you phoned his house the police were involved in the situation? - Yes.

2.15 p.m.

I asked you about what he had been saying about his grandfather on the Tuesday afternoon and as I understand it it was a perfectly normal conversation at that time? - Yes.

In the past had there been any difficulty between your son and your own father? - Yes, they didn't get on.

In general terms what was the cause of the disagreement? - I can't tell you, I don't know, they just kept arguing; you see, my Daddy drinks and he used to come in and Tommy would be in his bed and he used to wake him up and start arguing with him.

Were the arguments between your son and your own father the reason why your father moved out to his own house? - I couldn't tell you whether that was it.

BY LORD CULLEN: Can you tell me how many years ago it was when your father moved out, very roughly? - I can't remember, sorry.

SHEILA SUTHERLAND, Sworn:

EXAMINED BY THE LORD ADVOCATE: I think you reside at an address in Stirling, is that right? - Yes.

And are you a friend of Mrs. Agnes Watt? - That is correct.

Have you been a friend of hers for a number of years? - Yes, I have, for 10 years.

During that time did you meet her own son, Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

How frequently would you see him? - About once a week, something like that, not very often.

What did you understand Mr. Hamilton to do for a living over the last few years? - I thought he was just unemployed but apparently he was selling/selling cameras and buying them and things like that, running boys clubs -- that is all I knew of him.

We will come to the boys clubs in a minute; as far as his income was concerned do I understand correctly that he was basically unemployed but he had some income from buying and selling cameras? - Yes.

During your conversation with him what impression did you get as to whether he had enough money to live on or whether he was short of money or what? - No, he sometimes borrowed money from his mother but not very often.

Did he ever complain to you about being hard up? - No, sometimes he would say "I am a bit short this week but I will manage".

Did he ever complain to you about having debts which he couldn't pay? - No.

Did you get any impression as to how much money he made from buying and selling cameras? - No.

Now, you mentioned about boys clubs? - Yes.

What did you understand about Mr. Hamilton, as far as running boys clubs was concerned? - He said it was more or less to keep boys off the streets and for something to do.

Was this something he did every week? - Yes.

Whereabouts were these clubs? - I thought they were just in Stirling but apparently he was all over.

Did he ever make any complaints to you about how people in authority such as the police or local authorities reacted to his involvement in boys clubs? - No, never.

We have learned already in this Inquiry that he wrote a number of letters about boys clubs and his involvement with them? - Yes.

Were/

Were you aware of that? - No, neither Mrs. Watt or I knew anything about that.

Did you ever see him in the company of other friends that he had? - Just that James Gillespie, that was the only one.

How often was he in Mr. Gillespie's company? - I only saw him about two or three times.

Did he ever talk about anyone other than Mr. Gillespie as being a friend of his? - No.

In recent years did he run a motorcar? - No, he used to hire a van when he needed one.

He was able to drive? - Yes.

And occasionally he hired a motor van? - Yes.

But otherwise he just used public transport? - That is correct.

A number of years ago do you remember some problem involving Mrs. Watt and her son about telephone calls? - Yes.

What do you recall about that? - Well, to me it seemed as though it was more or less schoolboy humour.

What did you understand had been going on? - I thought it was rather silly.

What had the son been doing? - Well, he had discovered she was diabetic and he phoned her.....he called a friend to phone her and tell her that she was going up to a clinic in Inverness but I just told her that couldn't happen because the clinic is here.

Was this something that had upset Mrs. Watt? - Yes, it is, very much so.

Was it at that time that there was a disagreement between the mother and the son? - Yes.

Did/

Did that blow over? - Yes, it did.

In the last two or three years of his life how would you describe the relationship between Mr. Hamilton and Mrs. Watt? - Very good.

From what you could see was there any difficulty between them? - No.

Did you know Mrs. Watt's own father, James Hamilton? - Yes, I knew him.

Did you ever see him in recent years in the company with Thomas Hamilton? - No, never.

What sort of relationship did you understand they enjoyed? - Very bad.

What was the cause of the problem? - The father's drinking.

Now, a further matter I want to ask you about is the question of Thomas Hamilton's ownership of guns? - Yes.

Were you aware that he owned a number of guns? - I knew he had four rifles, I have seen them in his house but I didn't know about any other guns; he had licences for these.

For how long had you know he had a number of rifles? - Two or three years anyway.

How many times had you seen them? - Only the once.

In his house? - In his house, yes.

And where in his house were they? - They were kept in a sort of locker like an Army foot locker and chained up and padlocked and kept in a cupboard.

How did you come to see them on that occasion, did you ask to see them? - No, we were talking about one of my neighbour's having an air-rifle to shoot pigeons and he said "I have got a rifle" and he took us into show us it.

And apart from that occasion were you ever/ever with him when he talked about guns and ammunition? - No, we didn't even know he belonged to a gun club.

In the last few months of his life you continued to see him approximately once a week? - Yes, just every now and again; sometimes we used to meet him up the town.

Did you notice any change in him over this period of time? - No.

Did he appear to be angry about anything? - No.

Or upset about anything? - No, a complete mystery.

Did he complain about local authorities or members of Parliament or anything of that nature? - No, never at any time.

Mr. Lake, Advocate, for the Crown read Mr. James Hamilton's statement to the Inquiry.

"I am 87 years of age, widowed and reside alone at the above address. I am a retired Heating/Ventilation Engineer. Thomas Hamilton is my grandson, although my late wife Katherine and I adopted him in 1952 as our son. My wife Katherine and I were married in Glasgow in 1927 and at that time we stayed in various digs in the East End. In 1928 my wife and I legally adopted a baby girl, Agnes, and we moved to a house in London Road, Parkhead. During the War I rented a house at Mordant Street, Bridgeton. When the War ended I rented a house at 37 Bellrock Street, Cranhill, Glasgow. My daughter Agnes married Thomas Watt on 8th December 1950 and they moved into a house in Lily Street, around the corner from Bellrock Street. Thomas Watt was employed as a corporation bus driver at the time. Thomas Hamilton was born on 4th October 1952 and shortly after this Agnes and Thomas Watt were divorced. As a condition of the divorce my wife Katherine and I adopted Thomas and he and Agnes moved in with us at 37 Bellrock Street, Cranhill./

Cranhill. Thomas first attended primary school in Glasgow. On 10th May 1963 my family, that is my wife Katherine, Agnes and Thomas Hamilton moved into a house at 11 Upper Bridge Street, Stirling which I had purchased. When we moved to Stirling Thomas initially attended the Territorial School in Cowane Street then moved to Riverside Secondary School. There was never any problems with him at school either from a truancy or behavioural position. Thomas left school when he was 15 years old in 1967. He began working in the draughtsman/architects office of Stirling County Council where he remained for about three years. On 29th January 1968 we moved to a house at 24 Queen Street, Stirling which I had bought. I subsequently sold 11 Upper Bridge Street, Stirling on 14th March, 1968. Again it was myself, my wife Katherine, Agnes and Thomas. In 1970 Thomas, then 18 years old, purchased premises in Cowane Street, Stirling and opened a do-it-yourself shop. The shop was known as "Wood Craft". I cannot remember Thomas having any major medical problems, he was never in hospital, he only had the usual children's illnesses. He was a member of the Boys Brigade, I think he was in the company which met at the Old Baptist Church at the top of Station Road. This was when he was at school, but I do not think he was a member long. I did not know that he was a member of the Scouts. I do remember that he was a member of the Rifle Club which met in a hut in Irvine Place, Stirling, when he was 16 years old, again he was not a member long, the hall was pulled down shortly after he joined. I never bought him any firearms, air pistols, rifles or the like. I never saw any firearms in the house. On 1st May 1974 we moved into a house at 39 Forth Crescent, Riverside which I had bought, I sold the house at 24 Queen Street, Stirling on 24th June, 1974. It was whilst we were staying in Forth Crescent that my wife Katherine told Thomas that Agnes was his natural mother and that we had adopted him, until then Thomas had thought of Agnes as his sister. In fact after he had been told he still treated Agnes as his sister. Agnes moved out of Forth Crescent, Riverside, having got a house of her own, she moved in there on the 11th March 1985. This left myself, my wife Katherine and Thomas staying in the house. The reason I had bought this house was because my wife Katherine had developed angina and the house was on the flat and was easier for her to get about. She was in a wheelchair by that time. In 1987 I think/think it was about 16th February, I sold the house at 39 Forth

Crescent, Stirling and was allocated a house at 7 Kent Road, Stirling. The reason I sold the house was that my wife's condition had deteriorated and she was confined to a wheelchair and 7 Kent Road, Stirling, was on the ground floor and had a wheelchair access ramp. We moved into 7 Kent Road on 15th February, 1987. The tenancy of 7 Kent Road Stirling was in my name. My wife Katherine died on the 24th August 1987 at Stirling Royal Infirmary. On 6th June 1988 I signed a joint tenancy of 7 Kent Road, Stirling with Thomas. I was never aware of Thomas being a Scout Leader, I never saw him with a uniform and he never mentioned it in the house. In all the time that I lived with Thomas I never once saw him with any guns in the house, I never knew that he had any. Thomas always had his own bedroom. I was aware that Thomas was involved in running boys clubs and he spent all his time with the Clubs, he started running the Clubs shortly after he sold his shop in Cowane Street. I think that was the reason he sold the shop, it was too much like work and interfered with his other commitments. I had no involvement with his shop at all. Thomas was always a very calm person, certainly in the house, there were never any moods, tempers. He never showed any violence at home, he never raised his hands to me at any time. I never knew Thomas to ever have a girlfriend, he never went out socialising, never went dancing or out drinking. I do not think he ever drank and he never smoked. He had his own friends to visit at Kent Road, but I never took any interest, I do not know who they were. When they came they would either go into Thomas' bedroom or into the living room and I would go to my bedroom. On 24th August 1992 I moved out of Kent Road and into sheltered housing accommodation. The reason I moved out was that Thomas began to take over the whole house, he moved all my personal possessions and items of furniture into my bedroom, some pictures I had on the wall and my telephone and other personal items. I just could not be bothered with it all and went to Stirling District Council and they arranged for me to move. I did occasionally see Thomas in the street in Stirling or in the Thistle Centre, but we just ignored each other and walked on, I never stopped to speak with him. In all the time Thomas stayed with me I never once had anyone, either from groups or organisations, nor individuals come to the door/door with any complaints about Thomas' behaviour or concerns about the Clubs. About 1.30 p.m. on Wednesday, 13th March 1996 I heard about the shooting incident at Dunblane Primary School. I was sitting the Thistle Centre, Stirling, just amongst a group of other elderly men when one of them mentioned it. It was only when I went home about 3.00 p.m. that day and two reporters were at the door and began asking questions about Thomas and looking for photographs, that it dawned on me that Thomas was the person responsible".

JOSEPH/

2.35 p.m.

JOSEPH HOLDEN,

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY THE LORD

ADVOCATE: I wonder if we could please have back on the imager the photograph we were looking at this morning. I think it was RI? Mr. Holden, when we broke off before lunch we were discussing the situation whereby at your request the parents and the relatives and carers for the schoolchildren, in a large group, had been invited to go into the grounds of the house to the left of the entrance? - Yes.

And by so doing detach themselves from the other members of the public and the members of the media who were out in Doune Road? - Yes, that is correct.

Can you just remind us of approximately when this took place? - That was occurring approximately about 10.30, 10.35.

Can you just remind us whether by that stage you were aware that it was Mrs. Mayer's class that was involved? - Yes, I was aware.

When you invited the parents to move into the grounds did you give them any indication as to which class was involved? - No, I did not, not at that time.

Was that a deliberate decision on your part? - Yes.

And could you explain to us why, at that stage, you treated them as an omnibus group? - Yes. There was two main reasons for my judgment at that time. One was that I would confirm, first of all, that information that I had received, that it was Mrs. Mayer's class and (2) that I had nowhere that I could secure or put the parents of Mrs. Mayer's class having made that announcement; because it was such an obviously emotional, plus disturbing news, that I was going to give them, that I had foreseen that I would have to have some place to put them and to cater for their distress, even more so than what was occurring in that first house.

Tell/

Tell me this, how many officers did you have physically available to you in that house at that time? - There was quite a number. There was at least two of Inspector rank and certainly several uniform constables available at that point.

At this stage members of the media would perfectly understandably be pressing for information to be given to them? - Yes, I believe so.

Who was responsible for dealing with these requests? - Certainly at 10.30 or 10.35 I was not aware of any designated officer at that point, but to be fair I was immersed in the problem I had at that time.

Do you, however, have some recollection of members of the media clamouring for information in this general area? - Yes. I was aware of photographers taking photographs from Doune Road towards the crowd that were within the house and without the house, and I was aware of other journalists there.

In the fullness of time was a particular officer or officers delegated responsibility for dealing with the Press? - Yes, quite quickly after that.

And when they were carrying out this job where did they do it? - I think eventually as the morning went on, perhaps towards lunchtime, Victoria Halls in Dunblane was used. Precisely when that development took place I do not know. I was also aware prior to that the gathering in Doune Road had been briefed by Detective Inspector Mather, and quite soon thereafter Chief Inspector Munn from Strathclyde.

I may be wrong here. I am relying on my own recollection, but I have some memory of senior officers and possibly also the Chief Constable being interviewed by members of the media at this junction around lunch time that day? - I know he was interviewed quite early on in the day. I was not aware of where that had occurred.

Now, when you invited the large group to go into the garden grounds of this first house, at that stage did you give any indication as to whether or/or not there had been fatalities? - No, I did not.

Were you aware at that stage there had been fatalities? - I had been within the gym and I had been informed that there were fatalities within Class I/13. I was not sure of my information -- that had been the first burst of the information I had got within quite a frenzied incident room some 20 minutes before.

So was it a conscious decision on your part not to mention fatalities at that stage? - Yes it was.

And can you explain why you took that decision? - Principally because I didn't want to mention Class I/13, and I didn't want to give out information that I wasn't sure about. And I took the decision to tell those persons that a serious incident had taken place and that I would leave the house, confirm what information I could, and return as soon as possible.

After you had got them all into the grounds -- I take it they all wouldn't get into the house? - No.

So you had to speak to some of them outside; is that right? - Yes.

With members of the public and the Press over the garden wall? - Yes.

Did you explain to them who you were? - Yes, identified myself, because I was in plainclothes at the time.

As a superintendent? - A superintendent, yes.

And did you indicate to them you would go up to the school for further information? - yes, and I would be their contact.

You made mention of some police inspectors, two police inspectors? - Yes.

Were they in uniform or in civilian clothing? - Yes. Everyone else was in uniform that/that had a specific function that day. I wasn't. I was in normal dress.

What about the Inspectors? Did they remain down in this garden ground till you returned? - Yes, they did.

At this stage was any consideration given to moving the outer cordon further out, so to speak -- by moving it further along Doune Road in both directions? - I am not sure about that, because I had moved from being responsible for the cordon, having handed that function to Chief Superintendent Matchett, to becoming responsible for the parents. But I am aware that the cordon -- rather than the cordon, traffic control, was becoming necessary in Doune Road from what I observed from the house.

So that part of your responsibility is passed to another officer? - Yes.

Now, having returned to the school did you see Mr. Ogg again? - Yes. I went to the room in the foyer.

And when you spoke with him again was there any further discussion about the identification of Mrs. Mayer's class as being the class involved? - Yes. I asked the specific question could I have it confirmed that it was Mrs. Mayer's class, and it was Class I of I3.

Was there then some discussion as to whether the parents of these children should be informed of that fact? - Yes.

And what was the upshot of that discussion? - It was agreed that I should go back and separate Class I/I3 parents or relatives, and to move them to a house, or some other premises that they could be cared for whilst we catalogued who was there, and whilst identification processes were ongoing -- which had just about commenced when I entered the incident room, which would be just before I think about quarter to 11 or 10 to 11.

So by the time you were effectively authorised by Mr. Ogg to separate out the parents of Mrs. Mayer's class from the other parents? - Yes.

You/

You were aware that the process of identifying the victims was under way? - Yes.

But was clearly not completed? - Not at all. It had only just started, was my impression when I entered the room.

You talk about having another house or a building. Was that then identified by you? - Yes. I left the school and made my way to what I saw as an appropriate building on the opposite side of the track.

And you got permission from the occupiers of that, to use that? - Yes.

Who was responsible for inviting or arranging for the parents of Mrs. Mayer's class to move from one set of grounds to the other? - I took that responsibility, and went back into the first premises, and I addressed those gathered outside from the steps of the house, and I also repeated the same address within the lounge of the house -- quite a large room within the house -- in which I informed those present that the children affected by the incident were those in Class I/13, Mrs. Mayer's class.

This was obviously another extremely stressful moment for the parents concerned? - Yes, very much so.

And without in any sense wanting to identify any criticisms or anything at this stage, the fact of the matter was that this was having to take place partly in the open air, with a large number of people in the garden, strangers out in the street and members of the media looking on? - Yes.

At this stage did you make any mention of fatalities? - No. I made a judgment that I wouldn't do that until I had the parents of the children in Class I/13 within the confines of the second house.

So that was another conscious decision by you? - Yes.

And then was it necessary for the relatives concerned to move across the entrance road into/into the grounds of the other house? - Yes, with the assistance of the officers that were there.

And all of this having to take place under the eye of the media, which was increasing in number by the moment; is that right? - Yes, it did.

With the benefit of hindsight, clearly there might have been some scope for moving the Press back a bit? - Yes. I couldn't say "No" to that, but I think that the cordon did the best possible, and that the Press were only partially on the road at the time. My announcement, for what it was worth, wasn't a shouted announcement. We were very much aware of that problem at that point.

Yes. I am just trying -- I am not seeking to point out criticisms or argue them, or defend them? - No.

I am just trying to examine possibilities. Clearly one thing that might be worth looking at in the future is that in a situation where the relatives of some form of incident or tragedy have to have distressing information conveyed to them, one matter the police might bear in mind is the need to keep onlookers, whether they be members of the public or the media, sufficiently far away as not to impinge on those who are directly affected? - Yes, absolutely.

Now, can you assist us please as to approximately what time it was that you managed to move the parents and relatives of Mrs. Mayer's class into the second of the two houses? - Yes. I think that was about 11 a.m. or thereabouts, approximately -- perhaps just after 11.

Were you yourself physically present when this transfer was taking place? - Yes. I accompanied the parents because I wanted to give them further information once inside the house.

It would be practicable to get them all inside the house? - Yes. It was a large house.

And that would get them out of the immediate vision of those who were out in the street? - Yes it did.

Before/

Before we come to deal with that aspect of the matter, can we just deal briefly with those parents who remained in the first house and in the first grounds. Did you yourself have any continuing involvement with them? - Within my address, when I had announced the Class I/13 information, I addressed the rest of the parents but I think to be frank -- I think it was lost in all the confusion after my announcement of Class I/13 -- was that we would come back and inform those parents of when their children would be available to them and where their children were within the school.

And when you say it was lost -- the understandable anguish that occurred when you dealt with Mrs. Mayer's class? - Yes.

Had the effect of making it less easy for others to take in what was being said? - Yes, and also there was quite a noise as well.

And thereafter, dealing with this larger group, if we could, was a procedure set up whereby individual children within the school would be re-united with their parents and carers who were in the first house? - Yes. That process was started later on that morning, and came under the command of Chief Superintendent Matchett.

Do you, from your own knowledge, know how long it took to complete? - It was quite a lengthy exercise. I observed the process that was ongoing while I was doing my other duties, and it would be a very rough estimation, but I am of the mind that it took some two or three hours.

But you yourself had no direct involvement? - No.

Well, if we could return to the much more important group, namely the parents of Mrs. Mayer's class, and for the purpose of taking in more detail the evidence that I would like to take? We are now inside the second house. You are there with other police officers? - Yes.

And all of the parents of Mrs. Mayer's class that you had spoken to had come with you? - Yes.

Did/

Did you by that stage know whether you had the parents of all the children who had been in the class that day? - No, I did not.

You didn't know one way or another? - No.

What did you feel it appropriate to tell them at that stage? - I felt it appropriate that I tell them what I knew at that point, and what that was was that a shooting incident -- a man had entered -- sorry, I think I said a person -- I am not sure -- a man or a person had entered the gymnasium and had discharged a firearm and that there had been fatalities and injured -- seriously injured.

Did you at that stage know how many children had been murdered? - No.

You knew that some children were dead? - Yes.

And that at least some of the other children were injured, some of them very seriously injured? - Yes.

Were you aware whether any of the children were uninjured at all? - No.

So your state of knowledge was that some were killed and some were injured, in certain instances very seriously? - Yes.

On that being said to the parents, did any of them appear to have any information as to the number of children who might be dead? - Yes. A man, or a male person, which I assume was a father, immediately said that he questioned -- or he asked me to say that there was 12 dead, 12 deceased. And I asked him "How do you know that?" and he told me that a radio broadcast -- either he had heard or he had been told that a radio broadcast had numbered the dead as being 12.

Now, what sort of time are we talking about for this? - I think we are talking about 11.15 a.m., or 11.10 a.m.

Do you yourself know as a matter of fact when/when information was given to the media about the number of fatalities? - I don't.

Looking back on the situation with which everyone had to cope that morning -- the parents, the police officers and those who were asked to assist -- did it make matters any more difficult for all those involved that the members of the media may have been in the position to broadcast details of numbers killed and injured before the relatives of those who had been killed and injured were being informed of what had happened? - Yes. I mean, I was quite shocked at the statement made by what I assume was a father; and it certainly didn't make my job -- I didn't know that information. That information could have been correct, and I didn't want to deny it. I just didn't know that information, so it did make my job much more difficult at that point.

We may touch on this later -- in fact, we will touch on this later on as we go through the events of the next few hours -- but certainly from my understanding of the situation there is no doubt that statements were being given to the media about fatalities before individual families were finally informed. Does that accord with your understanding? -

It/

2.55 p.m.

It seemed to be, that morning -- that was the first instance that I experienced.

I want to be quite clear of this, out of fairness to all concerned. There must be an issue which requires to be addressed as to whether it assists those responsible for bringing news to the individually affected families whether they do that before any formal statements are given to the media? - Yes. I felt quite heavy that I was the person responsible for giving the information to these parents, and very early on that morning an announcement like that affected my credibility with the parents about whether I was giving them the information I knew at that point.

Now, having told the parents what you have described did you then inform them that you intended to go back up to the school to endeavour to obtain more information? - Yes, I did.

Clearly if there was to be a senior officer responsible for giving information to the parents that day you were that individual? - Yes.

You had been instructed to assume that responsibility, you had done so, and you had made clear to the parents that you were the senior officer who would be dealing with them? - Yes.

There were however other officers on the premises with you? - Yes.

Do you remember who they were? - At the point of address I think Detective Sergeant Allan Moffat was within the hallway, and I think Inspector Ross was outside the house.

Still dealing with the time you were at the house, were any other people allowed admittance to that house, by which I mean Ministers, doctors, nurses, or whatever? - Personally I was aware of two other midwives or nurses in uniform who were inside the house. I was very soon thereafter aware of Clergy having arrived, and I think one doctor had arrived.

This is in the house itself? - In the second/second house, yes.

You told me a short while ago that when you first got to the second house you were unaware whether you had all the parents concerned or at least a representative of each family unit with you? - Yes.

Were any steps taken by you to try and clarify that matter? - Yes.

What did you do? - I asked Detective Sergeant Allan Moffat to note who was within the house, which was a difficult task, from the information I had just given them. This took some time, but he later reported to me that all of the parents pertaining to Class 1 -- we couldn't say all the parents were there, because we still had a problem with identification, as the morning went on, of the deceased.

What are Sergeant Moffat's normal duties? - He's in charge of what we term the Family Unit, which is child protection investigations, sexual offence investigations. This is very much a unit of seven people who work in conjunction with the Social Work Department and have special training for sensitive type operations and investigations.

So Sergeant Moffat at least has particular experience in dealing with families and children in difficult situations? - Yes.

Immediately under you who would be the next senior officer? - Inspector Ross, who was the man detailed as I left the house to go to the school to keep the house secure and keep intruders out.

And all the time outside, apart from the ever-increasing group of people who were gathering there would be ambulances going back and forth, police cars and various other vehicles? - Very much so.

Now, having left this second house did you go back up to the school again? - Yes.

Are you able to assist us as to approximately what time you had reached by then? - I think we were just short of half past 11, approximately.

Did/

Did you meet up there again with Mr. Ogg and with the headmaster and others? - It probably is not as simple as that. When I entered the school I became involved with at least two distressed people within the doors of the main school, who stopped me in my tracks for a few minutes, then I entered the incident command in pursuit of the information.

When you say two other distressed persons, do you mean adults? - Yes.

By that time had the process of trying to identify those killed been going on for some time? - Yes.

And we have heard certain difficulties about that, which I don't think we need to dwell on with you. Am I right in thinking you yourself played no physical part in the identification process? - No.

Now, I may be wrong, but I think we have already heard evidence that by 11.30 all the surviving victims had left by ambulance for the Stirling Royal Infirmary? - Yes. From my knowledge of the enquiries and from being involved since then, the evacuation had finished by 11.

Now, would it be fair to say that by this stage because of the practical problems which were being experienced in identifying those who had been murdered the factual situation was that some of the victims were identified, but others were not? - Yes.

This is the position as at approximately 11.30? - Yes.

Now, as a matter of fact it was some time later before any of the parents of Mrs. Mayor's class were informed that their individual child had been murdered? - Yes.

Was any consideration given by you and others at that time as to whether to inform parents individually, as and when you could, or alternatively wait until all the identifications were certain and then begin the process of informing? - I had two concerns at that point, both/both of which I put to Detective Chief Superintendent Ogg. One was that if we were having problems in identification how were we getting on from the casualty viewpoint with regard to the injured. We discussed that at that point. Both were very problematic at that time, because we were not getting anything back from the Casualty Bureau, and identification of the deceased was so shaky that it was not of the standard that I would have gone back to the parents at that point with.

Yes? - So there were two concerns I was looking at and that he was looking at as well.

Perhaps we could recap on a point we discussed earlier today with Mr. Ogg. As a matter of fact, no details were taken of the identity of the surviving victims as they left in an ambulance? - I am not aware of that having happened.

Clearly if that had been done that would have assisted? - Yes, if we had been definite about any of these persons leaving we could have gone back to the house and got the.....

I am not for a moment suggesting that would have been a complete solution, but if as each ambulance left a record had been kept of who the victim was understood to be, and the factual basis of that understanding -- namely whether the child himself had said "I am Donald McKay" or whatever name, or whether it was "This is believed to be Donald McKay" -- that would have assisted in solving the problem you faced? - It would have.

So the practical problem you had is that as I understand it there were a number of deceased victims at the school, some of whose identities were uncertain; is that right? - Yes.

There were a number of surviving victims at the hospital; is that right? - Yes.

And one deceased victim at the hospital?
- Not until about midday were we informed about the deceased victim at the hospital.

But there was some uncertainty about the identities of some of the surviving victims? - There were two problems: (1) we were not getting any/any information back from the hospital; and (2) was the uncertainty of the identification of bodies within the gym, which was throwing doubt on the total identification.

And the problem was being aggravated by the communications problem we have had explained to us? - Yes.

I just want to be clear about this so that all those who have an interest can understand the position. Am I correct in believing that even in a situation where you were quite satisfied that a particular victim who had died was correctly identified, there was a conscious decision not to inform the parents of that child until the whole identification process was complete? - To the extent that the seemingly positive identification -- doubt was being thrown on that because of the problems that were being experienced by the attempts to identify the remaining victims.

I will see if I can understand that. Because there was doubt about some identifications you were treating that as casting a doubt, a measure of doubt, on all of them? - Yes. From my observation, that was quite right.

Now, leaving aside the problems you faced in identifying the victims, you then had to evolve a procedure for actually informing individual family units of the particular tragedy that had befallen them? - That was probably my next problem. My first problem that was facing me at that time, just about half past 11, towards 12 o'clock, was the fact that I had a number of parents in the house, time was marching on and I didn't have any information for giving to them. I felt very strongly that we should at least display to them that they were our first priority, and it was at that point that we asked that we bring these parents up and put them within the school.

So were arrangements then evolved to bring this group of parents up from the second of the houses into part of the school? - Yes. I found someone I think was a member of staff there -- I can't recollect who it was -- and the staff room was identified because of the facilities within it, plus there was a separate entrance from a corridor just before/before the staff room, which was convenient for a discreet entry to the school.

Which part of the school is the staff room in? Can you point it out on the photograph we have got? - I think it is that one there.

So would it be possible to bring them round the side of the building? - Yes. From there there were two passenger transport vehicles from the Ambulance Service drove up and came round and parked here.

If you could just resume your seat, please. Now, what time was this transfer effected? - I think just before 12 or just after 12.

And you say two ambulance transport vehicles were used? - Yes.

Were these vehicles able to get into the grounds of the house? - I am not sure. I wasn't present at the house at that point. Inspector Ross was seeing to that. There was no reason why they could not have.

And to some extent at least this exercise was taking place in the view of those out in the street, members of the public and members of the media? - Yes.

Now, you say you were not present when this took place? - No.

Why was that? - It was because I briefed Inspector Ross and I briefed Inspector Cairns, who assisted him in this task, and I felt it was more important that I be in the incident room, trying to get the information which the parents required.

What time would it be by the time this transfer was completed? - Very roughly I think about half past 12 or after half past 12.

By that stage was there some genuine uncertainty about identification? - Yes. By about 12 to 12.30 we were getting intermittent identification of injured at the hospital coming through in perhaps three's and four's.

Did/

Did you yourself go to the staff room? - No, I didn't enter the staff room. I was in the corridor outside the staff room.

Why did you not go into the staff room? - I had no further information to give the parents at that point, and it was only minutes before information started to come through and we started the process of extracting the parents of injured children, whom we informed, and I spoke to them in a room adjacent to the staff room.

Well, we will come on to the detail of that in a moment. When you first went to the vicinity of the staff room it would be some time at 12.30 or afterwards; is that right? - It may just have been earlier than that.

Some time around 12.30? - Yes.

At that stage there was some continuing uncertainty as to the names of the victims who had died? - Yes.

The parents inside the staff room were at that stage unaware whether their children had been killed or seriously injured? - That is correct.

They were obviously more than anxious for information? - Yes.

Can I ask you, Superintendent, so that we all understand this. At that stage were any steps taken to inform the parents within the staff room that there was this continuing uncertainty about the identities of those who had been killed and those who had survived? - I did not specifically instruct that, and I did not do it myself. I took the view that I should be trying to get that information, and I was within the incident room doing that. I was successful in getting that with regard to the injured.

You appreciate, as I am sure you do, that the role that I am performing in this Inquiry is to explore the facts, I am not interested in making a specific criticism one way or another, I am just acting in the public interest for the benefit of everyone trying to get at what happened that day and what people were thinking that day? - Yes.

I am sure on the basis of your experience you will appreciate that but the fact of the matter is that from about 12.30 there was this group of parents within the room who were uncertain whether their child was dead or alive and you were aware that there was that uncertainty? - Yes.

And you knew that despite the intensive efforts of police officers, teachers and others there were practical problems in identifying victims? - Yes.

What I want to ask you about is why the problems that medical and other staff were experiencing in identifying victims wasn't conveyed in general terms to the parents as an explanation for the delay which was undoubtedly building up? - There are two comments I would make -- one was we felt that with every minute that went by we would get information that we could go and gives these parents; the second being that, rightly or wrongly in hindsight it wasn't felt appropriate or of any help to go in and say while the uncertainty continued; a mixture of these two things were what was in my mind, certainly.

Now, we know as a matter of fact that the liaison groups were set up to deal with informing the bereaved? - Yes.

And the parents of those who were seriously injured? - Yes.

And these liaison groups included a mix of police officers and social workers? - Yes.

And around what time were these groups drawn together? - We started to look at that task in running in tandem as an intermittent identification of injured children coming in from the/

the hospital; it would be somewhere prior or just previously to 12.30 or just after; in tandem we started to then have that identification of who the deceased children might be coming in or a positive list of fatalities and we should make the appropriate arrangements for that; the briefing I had been given by Detective Chief Superintendent Ogg was to create these teams of two police officers and one social worker for each family and when we had a list of the family we could allocate the family to a family support team or a liaison team.

Was it your responsibility for sending to the school the necessary police and social work personnel to constitute these teams? - All during that morning there had been police officers sent to the school recording duties and social workers had been sent as part of the major incident procedure; in actual fact we were able to create teams from the numbers that were within the school to a large extent.

So both Police Headquarters and Social Work Headquarters sent along sufficient personnel to constitute I think a three-man team for each family? - Yes, to a large extent we were able to create these teams from personnel at the scene.

After these teams had been gathered together were they briefed by you? - Yes.

What was the nature of the briefing that was given? - It was very very brief because at that point we knew who the fatalities were and that it was a priority to get the teams to the respective families to the identified rooms within the school where the news could be broken to them.

I want to be clear about this; were the liaison teams purely for the families of those who died or were they also for those who were injured for those who had died at that time; it wasn't until later on in the day that there was a creation of a separate team, in fact, some of our deceased liaison officers became involved with the survivors, the injured parties as well.

As a matter of fact who was informed first -- the parents of the surviving victims or the parents of the deceased? - The parents of the survivors./

survivors.

Again I ask you if you could explain to Lord Cullen and all of us why that approach was followed? - I had approached the incident command team and Detective Chief Superintendent Ogg and said I felt that if the deceased identification wasn't forthcoming that we should be tackling it or we should try tackling it from the survivor side of it; at that point in time which was about 12 o'clock there was no identification of any surviving from the hospital because of the communication difficulties; nearer to half-past 12 it started to come in from the hospital confirming the names of the injured children and it was decided that because we had that information quite properly that these parents should be told immediately.

And as a matter of fact how was that achieved? - It achieved by myself going to the staff room but not going into it and asking the policewoman who was within the room to ask for the families to come out by name and they were asked out in the order that we were getting them back from the hospital in blocks of three or four; they came out and I spoke to them within the adjacent room where I was only able to tell them that there child was alive but was injured and in most occasions within Stirling Royal Infirmary; there was one child who was at Yorkhill.

Were any arrangements laid in place for conveying parents concerned to the hospital? - Yes, it was as quick as I was speaking to them a car or an ambulance was driven to the door next to the staff room and parents concerned were taken to the appropriate hospital.

And did people go with them? - I think so but I am not sure about that; the priority was that they were driven; if it was a police car it would be a police officer, if it was an ambulance I would reckon it was only ambulance personnel that were with them.

Now, one comment which was raised this morning when Mr. Ogg was giving his evidence was that at certain parts during that day those who were the parents of the bereaved were seeking information from a senior officer and were not able to get it; as/

as a matter of fact having spoken to the parents in the second of the two houses -- --? - Yes.

It was some appreciable or considerable time later before you saw them again, is that right? - Yes.

You have explained your reasons for the approach you followed but I take it that you would understand the complaints that they might perceive if they were being denied access to a senior officer? - Yes, the senior officer who identified himself to them earlier on, yes.

Would I be right in understanding that if that is the perception and if that is the criticism that was made you and your senior colleagues would be quite prepared to think through the ramifications of the approach you personally followed in this part of that day's activities to see whether an alternative approach might be of benefit? - Yes, we would and I have.

Now, the process of informing the relatives or the parents of the injured children can't have taken terribly long? - No, it was very quick; in saying that perhaps 20 minutes, half an hour.

Now, there is a question I ought to have asked a while ago and my apologies to all concerned for not having done so; what dealings did you have with the relatives of Mrs. Mayer that day? - None, I didn't see Mr. Mayer at all.

As a matter of fact what is your understanding as to who dealt with Mr. Mayer and other members of the family that day? - I recollect it because it was in the process that we were trying to put together that day because Mr. Mayer arrived from outwith the locality having been away from the region and arrived at the school and was spoken to or was received by Detective Sergeant Moffat again who had moved up from the house to the school.

So is it your understanding that it was Mr. Moffat who dealt with Mr. Mayer? - Yes.

Anything/

Anything you know about how Mr. Mayer was dealt with comes second-hand from Mr. Moffat? - Yes.

Well, I think my lord is aware that Mr. Moffat is to give evidence in due course so I won't ask Mr. Holden any more questions on that matter. Could we go back to the staff room please; could you give us an approximate time by which all the parents of the injured children had left the staff room and set off in the various pieces of transport to where they were going? - I think it was between.....if it wasn't 12.30 it would be about 12.45 I think.

Now, there have been some questions raised today about the timing at which the parents of the deceased children were informed of the particular deaths that had occurred; during that day were you yourself making any notes of the times as you went along? - Yes, I was taking notes of the times but it wasn't what I would have called a record of it; what I did was brief these officers who were going to undertake breaking the news to the parents so that they should also have in their statement including the arrival time and they should not the time of notification when they brought the news to the parents.

Just to be clear about this, as I understand it you took a few notes during the course of the day? - Yes.

But not in any sense a full record? - Not at all.

But do I understand as part of your briefing of the liaison teams was that they were informed they would have to provide statements in which they should record, amongst other things, times? - Yes.

Now, am I right in understanding that in preparing to give evidence today you have checked on the timings set out in the various statements prepared by others? - Yes, the statements by liaison officers and parents.

Is your understanding of the time scale within which the parents of the deceased children were/were informed to some extent at least coloured by what you have seen in these statements? - Yes.

Doing your best to look back to the day itself can you assist Lord Cullen and us all as to your best estimate as to the time at which the process of informing the parents of the deceased children began? - From looking at the records and from my recollection and specifically more dependent on the records or the statements the first notification was at 1.45 and the last notification, although we believe it was incorrect, was at 3.00 p.m. and was more likely to have been at 2.30 p.m.

Just take it step by step, I think before we do this can I ask you a few general questions; I take it in the course of a very difficult day, particularly for the parents involved, this must be the most emotional time for everybody? - Yes, very much so.

Looking at the records the times, as I understand it, run from somewhere -- is it 1.45? - Yes, there is an area of time which we think is an error as well which is 1.30.

Let us take it factually and let's see if we can establish what the factual position is; the records created by those who were asked to prepare statements ran between 1.30 and 3 o'clock? - Yes.

You believe that the first time was an error as being a quarter of an hour too early? - Yes.

Can I ask you why you hold that view? - Yes, because I believe I was briefing the officers and the teams at that time and that the manner or method of leaving the briefing to go and break the news because we had to have three or four teams at any one time going to the staff room and the first batch of times was at 1.45 and 1.30, I believe, is wrong.

So it is because they went in batches -- --? - Yes.

That you think that the isolated incident of 1.30 might be an error? - Yes, because I/

I do believe I was briefing them at that point.

At the other end of the time scale there is one at 3 o'clock? - Yes.

And why do you hold the view that that might be an error? - Because the officer involved said that he went with a liaison officer who he identified from another team in this batch and that batch was at 2.30.

Well, understanding the reasons you have given why you consider there might be an error in these timings the fact of the matter is that there are records created by those involved which describe this exercise as lasting from 1.30 to 3 o'clock? - Yes.

I don't want to go on to any unnecessary distressing evidence but did it take a few minutes for each family for this procedure to be gone through before steps were taken to move on from the place where they were informed of this tragic news? - It varied -- as I observed I wasn't within the room, the separate room, when the news was being broken but some families remained for quite a while and some families wanted to leave immediately, some wanted to leave with the officers or the team that was with them and some wanted to leave without them, there was a complete variety.

I am quite sure we all understand that people react differently in such difficult and tragic situations but when you say some wished to remain for an appreciable period of time what are you talking about -- 10, 20 minutes, longer? - No, perhaps about 10 or 20 minutes.

Now, it may be very difficult for you to do so but if you could leave out of your mind for the moment what you have read in the records and look back to your recollection of that day, what is your best recollection of the time scale over which this very difficult exercise was carried out? - I think I was briefing at 1.30, towards 1.45, so if you were depending on my recollection 1.45 seems to be the earliest for the first notification, that is my honest recollection, I don't think it was that far out from there on.

EXAMINATION/

3.35 p.m.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY THE LORD

ADVOCATE: Now, another matter which was very understandably raised earlier today was the fact that some of those who were waiting for news of their child in Mrs. Mayer's class had other children, as I understand it, with them during the difficult hours they had to wait. Were you aware of that? - My recollection is that there were children -- children of perhaps teenage, or 12-year olds, that is my recollection.

Older children? - I think so.

You have told us about midwives and possibly a doctor getting access to the house. What about the staffroom? Were professionals you were in a position to assist given access to the staffroom as well? - I am sure that nurses, and the midwives, accompanied them to the room. I am aware, although I can't positively say, that a doctor was with them; and the reason I say that was that I had a conversation with Dr. Cathcart in the corridor, and it certainly was the intent that doctors would be within the room; but I honestly couldn't say that they were in there.

What about members of the clergy? Were you aware of any of them being around? - I am aware that the clergy were within the house, and I think there was at least one clergy within the staffroom.

From your point of view would there have been any reason for a member of the clergy being excluded from the staffroom? - Only if those within didn't wish it.

Yes, yes -- but you were unaware of any problem one way or another about that? - No, I wasn't aware.

If individual children who were injured had been identified, by whatever means, before they left to go to hospital -- a process which as I understand it was completed by about 11 o'clock -- would it have been practicable for the parents of the child concerned to go with them in the ambulance/ambulance, do you think? - Had the child been identified, and had the parents been identified, I would see no reason for it not to have occurred, but it would have been very difficult to have achieved that task in the circumstances that were ongoing.

Well, I may be wrong, but by 11 o'clock you were really not in a position to identify those who were in Mrs. Mayer's class? - No.

Let alone individual parents of that class group, were you? - No. I am sorry, I thought you were asking the question if the child had been identified and the parents had been identified?

Yes -- you would need to have identified both the parents and the child? - Yes.

But even if the child had been identified as the ambulance made to leave the school grounds, let us say at quarter to 11, by that stage you were not in a position to identify the parents? - No, because we hadn't separated them from the larger group at that point.

But if on the other hand you had known the identity of the injured children as they left to go to hospital, the probabilities are that you could have reunited parents and child sooner than was in fact achieved? - Yes.

So that would be one clear practical benefit of a procedure which endeavoured to identify injured parties, whether adults or children, when they leave the scene of a tragedy or an accident? - I think, with respect, simply put -- because we would have had a problem with identifying what was a life-threatening injury at that point, and any few seconds' delay would have had ramifications -- but yes.

Well, I am not suggesting it is a complete solution, but certainly something worth looking at? - Yes.

Now, just two final matters. Undoubtedly there were serious problems experienced that day in the identifying of those who were dead, in particular, and also those who were injured. Would/

Would I be right in assuming that not only Central Scotland Police, but other police forces in Scotland will seek to learn what lessons they can as to how to solve the practical problems that were faced that day? - Yes. That is certainly one of the strengths of the police service, that they will learn, and that they do look at real life incidents and see if matters can be learned from the process.

I think Lord Cullen, and those of us who practice in the Courts, will be aware that, although there are individual police forces within Scotland, they co-operate on a large number of matters to do with training and planning and looking at current issues and difficulties? - Yes, particularly in the major incident field.

Another major problem that was faced that day was the question of communication. We have had the suggestions of the need to have further land lines in places like schools, greater availability of mobile phones at situations where incidents or accidents may occur. From your perspective of what happened that day, and on the basis of your experience, do you have any idea as to what might be done to overcome communication problems of the nature that you all experienced? - I think certainly as a senior investigating officer in the Inquiry -- or as depute investigating officer -- I have discussed with the senior investigating officer the fact that it was frustrating that we didn't have a radio communication channel which was secure that we could have utilised with any land lines and Cellnets -- the digital Cellnet, certainly. We could have gone on to a secure radio, UHF or VHF channels. That is not in our possession. There are very few of them in the country because of the large expense, but it is certainly something if we had had a secure radio channel, we would have got on a lot better.

Normally I think we would expect police officers to use encrypted radios, secure radios, purely in connection with criminal investigations where one was anxious not to have criminals listening into the police radio traffic? - Yes.

But does it follow from what you are saying that there is another very distinct use, namely in situations such as this after a major incident/incident or accident, where there is a need for urgent transfer of information, but also a need to keep that confidential until full public statements can be made? - Yes, absolutely.

Because it is, as a matter of fact, perfectly possible for a bona fide radio ham to listen in to police messages? - Yes. It is even more common -- every day of every week there is scanning by various people, and one of the problems we have is the Press and media can do that too.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP:

Superintendent, could I ask you firstly about the possibility that some parents -- parents of children in Mrs. Mayer's class were directed not to the private house when they arrived, but to the Westlands Hotel. Do you know anything of that? - I am not aware of any parents going into the Westlands Hotel, but I am aware of the existence of the Westlands Hotel. For a period that morning it was being used as some sort of reception centre. I am not aware of that happening, but if it did, in the confusion of things, it may have happened.

So if it did happen, it was something that wasn't meant to happen? - Certainly.

You told us that your initial responsibility related to erecting a cordon round the school? - Yes.

You were relieved of that responsibility and given the responsibility of conveying information to parents; is that correct? - For the care and control of the parents, yes.

And you recollect that that was around 10.40 or 10.45? - It could have been even earlier.

Well, until your being given that responsibility no one else had been specifically asked to take care of that? - Not that I am aware of.

So this question of whether the names of children being taken from the scene in ambulances should be ascertained -- that is not a decision that you took -- you wouldn't decide whether that should or should not happen? - No.

And/

And you are not aware of anybody with prior responsibilities, who might have taken that decision? - No.

So there was no question at least as far as you are concerned of you actually making a decision not to take that course? - No. I would say that was not within my remit at that point.

Now, you also told us of the position you found yourself in when a father had information which he had gleaned from the radio, but you were unable to confirm or deny his information? - That is correct.

Presumably the response that you were not able to confirm or deny was that the parent concerned would not be happy with that response? - I am quite sure he thought himself that I knew things I was not prepared to tell him.

So in fact even then there were complaints being made by parents about communication; is that correct? - No -- well, it was a statement he made to me -- "Has 12 children been killed?"

But the parents presumably were not satisfied with your response? - No, I wouldn't say that.

Well, have you not been aware for some time that the parents were not satisfied with the responses that were given to them on that day? - No, not for some time.

Well, when did you first hear this? - I was informed two days ago, I think -- was it Tuesday or Monday of this week; and I saw a document with I think it is eight points on it, and that was the first time I was aware.

Well, you spoke earlier of having a sense of your credibility with the parents being adversely affected. Does that not mean that there was tension about your inability to give information? - Absolutely, yes.

Now, you were asked about whether a senior officer could have spoken to parents when they/

they asked that such a person should be available, and you said that you would think about it, in retrospect, think about that point, and that you had thought about that point in retrospect. Can I take it from that answer that you would treat that matter differently if you were faced with it again? - No, what I meant by that is that, as any person would do, I went over in my own mind those actions that day and the judgments I had to make that day. And one of the concerns that I had was that period of time that those parents were in the staffroom and I wasn't able to gain information that I could have passed to them, or I could have translated that inability to them. I have thought about it several times, or a number of times, and I can't think how I could have.

Perhaps if you could accept that I am not seeking to lay personal criticism upon you, and if you could simply tell me if you accept for the parents to be asking for a senior officer to come and speak to them, and for that request not to be granted, is not satisfactory? - I was not aware of that request.

But please simply consider if that had happened, it would not be satisfactory, would it? - Of course not. If that request had been made and it had been denied that would have been terrible, yes.

Now, once the parents were in the staffroom in the school, you said you had a recollection that among the group there were some older children? - Yes.

Did you know that there was, for example, a very small baby, and that there was also a toddler? - No.

You have no recollection that that group included some very small children? - No.

Who had their own requirements at that stage? - I was not aware of that, no.

As far as timings are concerned, if we could deal firstly with the conveying of information to the parents of injured children, the parents for example who required to be taken to Yorkhill -- they were/were taken in a police car; is that right? - Yes.

And if I suggest to you that that was in fact in a police car with a siren and blue light, does that accord with your recollection, or is that something you don't know about? - No, I do know about that, because I spoke to the driver and told him to bring his car there, and my recollection was that it was a marked police vehicle.

So that was something that was done at great speed?
- Yes.

Now, how long do you think it would take to get from the scene to Yorkhill under those conditions? - Very quickly, I would think.

About half an hour? - I think probably at the most.

Half an hour at the most? - I would have thought so.

So if there is information that parents arrived at Yorkhill only around 2 o'clock, then that would mean the parents of injured children, at least who were going to Yorkhill, were leaving about half-past 1? - Yes.

And you have confirmed to us that the time between the parents being given the information that their child was injured and their departure for Yorkhill Hospital was very slight indeed? - Yes, according to my recollection, yes.

Now, as far as the conveying of information to the parents who were bereaved is concerned, the times which you have quoted are extracted by you from records made by other people; is that correct? - Yes.

Presumably you have no way of knowing whether the timings were written down after the event, or by whom the entries were made? - The officer who submitted the statement would be the person responsible for the accuracy of the times, and I would expect officers to note times as things are happening.

Given the particular circumstances, however/however, there could be some margin of error presumably in the records made? - Yes.

Indeed your own sense was that 1.45 as the earliest time would be too early? - 1.30 -- and 1.45 would be a shade short of my recollection.

3.55 p.m.

Your own recollection, without looking at the records, might mean it was nearer 2 o'clock? - Yes.

And that is when the parents were taken privately to rooms to be given information? - Yes.

How many rooms were available for that purpose? - I think there were a maximum of 17 rooms available.

And there were obviously as you have told us different periods of time spent by individual families after they had heard the news? - Yes, I am aware of that, because I was in the corridors and I saw people leave, I saw officers approach and saying they were having to go and make phone calls for people, and people seemed to be leaving between those margins of time.

And it is correct, is it not, that the families were asked to leave the staff room on an individual basis: it was done one at a time? - To an extent. Because we had the information we wanted to get it to them quickly, but it would have been an impossibility for 15, 16 or 17 officers to go to the room at the one time, so we tried to arrange it that perhaps two or three at a time. I would guess on the practicalities of it that one would move into the room, then another one would follow.

If the position is that there was still a family waiting for information at about half past 3 -- that is their recollection -- then given the circumstances on the day, relying to some extent on their recollection, you would personally not be in a position to contradict that? - No, I wasn't there then.

When did you leave? - I left about 3 o'clock. I had been given other duties.

Finally, in connection with the issuing of general guidelines to the Central Scotland Police, you said there were no guidelines dealing with information to relatives; is that correct? - My recollection of that is that I said in relation to a written protocol there was a reference, but that was in/

in relation to cordon duty.

Perhaps I could just confirm with you. The question which I have noted is that you were asked whether Central Scotland Police had a protocol which officers would be expected to follow regarding the management of those selected at an incident. You said no, but you were referring to cordon duties specifically? - To control of those people and cordon duty.

In so far as communications to relatives is concerned, is there any guidance note or any written protocol? - There is general guidance to the Force. There is also the training that every officer would get in his early training period in the first few years of his service. Beyond that I would say no.

Does the training include instructions to keep the time when people are left wondering what has happened as brief as possible? - I am not aware of any protocol or guidance along those lines.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: I know the Lord Advocate has asked you if you had any dealings with Mr. Mayor, and you said no. Did anyone report to you Mr. Mayor's arrival at the school? - They didn't report to me. They briefed me later on in the afternoon, or it could have been the next day. It was D.S. Moffat.

Were you aware of Esther Mayor's arrival at the school? - No.

Could I simply comment to you that her recollection is that she was taken to join her father at quarter to 3 from the staff room, and at that point there were still a significant number of parents in the staff room? - I can't comment on that.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: Can you tell us a little bit about the logistics which were involved in setting up the liaison teams? - Yes. The brief that I got from Detective Chief Superintendent Ogg was to create such a thing, and that two police officers and a social worker should comprise a team.

Yes?/

Yes? - One of the police officers should be chosen with experience not in that type of work, perhaps, but if they had experience in the Family Unit or child protection type of work, that we should strike for that. To a large extent we managed to do that.

Yes? - Where we didn't manage to do that we certainly picked the lead officer in the team for his or her experience or ability to deal with that particular type of task.

Yes? - We then had to develop how we were going to tackle that task. (a) These officers and social workers knew very little about what had happened that morning, so a briefing was necessary, but it had to be a shortened briefing. We tried to create 17 teams, but that required 34 officers plus 17 social workers. We then, because we wanted rather than to break the news one at a time or if we had two rooms two at a time, we decided we would do it simultaneously as best we could. We had to find 17 rooms within the school.

Yes? - There was a particular problem for our liaison team, that when they went to accept or to take their family we had a very simple difficulty in making sure our liaison teams could make their way to the particular designated room, which wasn't a great difficulty but it slowed us down a bit.

How did you overcome that difficulty? - We got hold of two members of staff and one police officer who had had a quick tour of the school, and these rooms had been identified to him. Unfortunately we were slowed down a bit by one of the school staff being unable to carry on with the task, because he had been involved in the incident all day. That is no criticism of him. That is how we managed to do it. We went in three or four groups, with three guides as it were for most of the process.

Now, you have indicated from looking at the records available to you that the last relative of a deceased child was seen at 2.30 p.m.? - Yes.

Was there anything in the records which you looked at to suggest that the last time was as late/late as 3.30, which has just been suggested to you? - Not at all. 3. p.m. was the latest time that was mentioned.

Reference has been made to the need to take one of the children to Yorkhill, and subsequently the parents of that child were also taken to Yorkhill. Do you know from looking at the records in your role as investigating officer when the parents reached Yorkhill? - I don't know.

At the time when you separated the parents from the group outside the school and took them to the first house I think you indicated you were aware that the class involved was Class 1/13; is that right? - Yes.

Were you aware at that time of any children from another class had been involved in the incident? - No. I had very scant information at perhaps what was the busiest time of that incident that that was the class involved.

Was your understanding at that time that there was a possibility that there could have been children from another class involved? - Yes. I wasn't sure of the information.

Did that factor come into play at all in not separating the parents of the children in Class 1/13 from the other parents? - I was happy in my mind nearer 11 a.m. that morning, when I made my second visit to the temporary command room and spoke to Detective Chief Inspector Ogg and asked him these questions, and he confirmed that to me.

And it was after that that you took the parents of the children in Class 1/13 to the second of the houses you have identified? - Yes.

Now, you were asked by the Lord Advocate if it would have been prudent to indicate to the parents of the class there was some difficulty in identifying the children. If you had given such an indication to them have you considered what sort of response you might have obtained from them? - I have considered it. Actually I don't know what kind of response I would have got. I was more conscious of the fact that I couldn't give them the information, and that the questions I was being asked, / asked, the answers I would have given them would not have been suitable and would not have satisfied them. I honestly didn't see this as a comfort factor of my appearing in that room for a very few seconds. It would very quickly have disappeared, and probably they would have turned on me, because I couldn't necessarily explain.

If there had been a suggestion from the parents that they might have assisted in the identification, would that have been appropriate in your opinion? - In my opinion, not at all.

You have told us that there were a number of Inspectors who were delegated by you to be with the parents? - Yes.

At what stage was it that they first took up such duties? - At the stage when we moved from the first house to the second house and then throughout the move to the staff room until the liaison officers took over their duties.

We have heard reference being made to a number of Inspectors. Perhaps you could tell us who they were? - Inspector Ross, Inspector Cairns, halfway through the move or between the second house and the staff room, and Detective Sergeant Allan Moffat.

Was there an Inspector Rose involved at some point? - Inspector Rose was involved in the initial stage of moving from the first house to the second house. He had a specific area of responsibility in securing the entrance to the school from Doune Road, which obviously enveloped the second house.

In your terminology does the rank of Inspector come into the category of senior officer? - Yes.

No further cross-examination.
No re-examination.

PAUL HUGHES, (35), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY THE LORD ADVOCATE: I am a Chief Inspector in Central Scotland Police. I have/have 16 years' police service.

I think you have been responsible for compiling a report into the financial situation of James Watt Hamilton? - That is correct.

Can you have a copy of this document in front of you, please, which I think has got the Production number R32: do you have that? - Yes.

Am I correct in understanding that although this report bears to be prepared by you it merely summarises a considerable amount of investigatory work carried out by officers of Central Scotland Police? - That is correct.

That involves production of a multitude of police statements and financial vouchers of one sort or another? - That is correct.

The purpose has been to present to the Inquiry in as clear a form as possible what was known about Hamilton's financial position in recent years? - That is correct.

On page 1 of the document I think you record that Hamilton held a number of bank accounts, and then you go on to say "This report will show that Hamilton was in financial difficulties, but despite this he obtained a Debenham's account and a Barclaycard account during the latter part of 1993, and that he continued to use both of these accounts heavily during mid-1995 and up until early March of this year"; is that correct? - Yes, that is correct.

And in your next paragraph you expressed that the limited movement within the other bank accounts and the heavy use of the Barclaycard and Debenham's card were a good indication that Hamilton relied on the credit cards for everyday living? - Yes.

The first account you mention is the Trustee Savings account, which has been closed for some time; is that right? - Yes.

You then deal with an account he held with the Royal Bank of Scotland at their branch in Stirling? - Yes.

I/

I think, reading the matter shortly, he had two accounts, one which at the date of his death had a very small credit balance in it of £4; is that correct? - Yes.

And the other was overdrawn to the extent of some £3299.50? - I think if I may direct you to page 27 of my report, in cumulo Mr. Hamilton was withdrawn to the extent of some £3511. That was a combination of figures between an overdraft he had at the Bank of Scotland and one at the Royal Bank of Scotland. He in fact re-financed a loan in July, 1995, which reduced the overdraft in the Royal Bank of Scotland account to some £900, but he still had £2924.07 within the Royal Bank of Scotland on the re-finance arrangement, which had to be taken into consideration. It was not strictly an overdraft: the re-finance arrangement was for the purpose of reducing the overdraft.

4.15 p.m.

I can understand that but I see in the very last paragraph of page 2 a reference to the 14th February 1996 -- should that be the previous year? - Yes, that is an error I wanted to point out, it should be 1995.

The Royal Bank account was overdrawn? - Yes.

And we then see in the next page that he had an account with the Bank of Scotland, again at a branch in Stirling and that too was overdrawn? - Yes.

And then moving to page 4 we see that he had an account with the Clydesdale Bank, is that right? - That is correct.

And what was the state of play with that deposit account at the time of this death? - It had a balance of 3 pence.

So as far as the bank accounts are concerned he was significantly overdrawn at the time of his death? - That is correct.

Page 5, we deal with the Barclaycard position and you go on to detail how this was issued to him in September last year and I think you and your colleagues have conducted a very detailed examination on the use of that Barclaycard in the time leading up to the date of his death, isn't that right? - That is correct.

Amongst other things he seemed to use it regularly for shopping at supermarkets? - That is correct.

What was the financial position with regards to the Barclaycard at the date of his death? - The limit on the Barclaycard had been reached, £1500, by the 8th March 1996.

He was withdrawn there as well? - Yes.

I don't think that we need to go through the next few pages in any detail but you have illustrated/illustrated various types of purchases by the use of the Barclaycard and some were mail order transactions involving firearms-related equipment?

- That is correct.

You then set out full details of that for us? - Yes.

You have also assisted in identifying the purchase of the pliers which were used to cut the telephone wires? - Yes.

Which were purchased in January 1996? - Yes, that is correct.

You have been able to assist in some of his travel with British Rail in the weeks leading up to his death? - That is correct.

And a place in Bishopbriggs where he frequently had a meal on occasions where he had visited his boys' club? - Yes.

And the next page you go through a great variety of purchases, some to do with his interest in photography and the rest? - Yes.

Could we turn to page 15 which deals with a Debenham account; this had been opened on the 27th November last year and again you carried out, with the assistance of the company concerned, efforts to try and establish what he bought and how much he spent? - That is correct.

They include a fairly large number of items of gents clothing, the sort of things one might buy in a Debenham's store? - Yes.

What was the state of that account at the date of his death? - Withdrawn on debit to the tune of £737.74.

I think you also have carried out an investigation as to what sort of income he had? - Yes.

Did you ascertain from the local authority that he was in receipt of Housing Benefit in connection with his dwellinghouse he rented at 7 Kent Road, Stirling? - That is correct.

I think you made a detailed investigation of the properties he used to own many years ago including one which he sold in Stirling away back in 1985 for the sum of £30,000, is that right? - That is correct.

And he also appeared, away back in the early 1980s, to have owned a boat which was destroyed in a fire, for which he received insurance funds of £24,668? - Yes.

I take it you found no trace of him having any capital invested in any bank or building society? - None.

At the time of his death? - None.

I think in the early '90s there appeared to be some difficulty with unpaid Tax and National Insurance, is that correct? - Yes, that is correct.

That was vouched by a letter which was found in his house? - Yes.

But there was no recent information about that? - No, none.

As far as the receipt of benefit was concerned apart from the Housing Benefit what was the position? - He was on Income Support up until November, 1993 but that ceased after he was reported to the Department of Health and Social Security for running a business from his home and claiming Unemployment Benefit; no further payments were made after that time.

Just to be clear about this, was his business to do with purchase and sale of item of photographic equipment? - Yes.

Prior to 1993 he was in receipt of benefit but that ceased because he had some income from buying and selling cameras? - Yes, that's right.

I think your enquiries also disclosed that he borrowed from a finance company some monies in 1994 with a view to financing his camera business, is that correct? - Yes, that is correct.

And/

And what was the state of play about that loan as at the date of his death? - The second loan that he took out in January, 1994 had a balance of some £1500 and that was added to a third loan he took from the first finance company which commenced in 1995; at the time of his death the combined debt in relation to these loans was some £2350, I believe.

Although he had been making repayment to the finance company concerned there was still substantial money due there as well? - Yes, that is correct.

In general terms what impression did you form as to the success or otherwise of his business in buying and selling cameras? - It certainly appeared that he was obtaining finance to purchase equipment which he was selling on, whether or not he was making any profit in regard to that I haven't been able to establish but I certainly don't think it was a great deal of income he was making from that pursuit.

Did your enquiries also establish that he was in arrears to the former Regional Council in relation to Council Tax? - Yes, that is correct.

And they were involved in certain legal proceedings against him? - Yes.

And early this year did he make a further application to the finance company which had loaned him money in connection with the camera business for an additional loan of £3,000 but that application was refused? - Yes, that is correct.

I think you also made enquiries about the utility accounts such as electricity, gas and British Telecom and found them to be, by and large, in order? - That is correct.

Now, the next section of your report deals with accounts which were maintained in connection with this boys' clubs activity; again a great deal of detail was examined by you; can you just, for the purpose of us all, summarise what the position was with regard to that? - Yes, Hamilton began copied detail accounts on the 2nd May 1988; he started off the account showing a deficit of the sum/sum of £2663; basically it was difficult to know the accuracy of these accounts because there is no method of testing how accurate the deficit was when the accounts began in 1988; however, we analysed these accounts between 1988 and 1996 and each year he suffered substantial losses, if the accounts are accurate which in cumulo to the sum of £15,907, that appears to be the total altogether.

If the account was accurate there would appear to be a drain on his financial resources from that activity as well? - Yes, that is correct.

Then if we pass to page 28 of your report where I think you seek to summarise the position; you really say that Hamilton was undoubtedly in severe financial difficulties, his total assets and bank accounts and the like amounting to 3 pence while he was overdrawn in cumulo to £3,500, he had unpaid loans of £3,250, he owed the Royal Bank also £3,000 and then you summarise various other debts that you have already described and you describe him as having an overall debt of in excess of £11,000 plus the deficit on his boys' club of £15,000? - Yes, that is correct.

Apart from such money he made from his photographic equipment and such limited income as the boys' club account disclosed could you find any other source of income he had? - None at all.

And as you say at the top of the next page his financial predicament was worsening by the existence of a Sheriff's Warrant in connection with a Council Tax debt and the threat of seizure of any monies and effects in connection with that matter? - That is correct.

Adjourned until tomorrow.

FRIDAY, 31st MAY, 1996.

THIRD DAY.

KAREN JOAN GILLIES (35), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I think you work as a receptionist for Findlay Guy Van Hire in Stirling? - I do.

And your duties include concluding agreements for the rental of vans for the company? - Yes.

I think on Monday, 11th March, you were at your work as usual? - Yes.

And that someone, either in the late morning or early afternoon, came in to see about hiring a van? - Yes.

What is your recollection of that visit? - On that particular day I am fairly certain I was actually on the phone at the time so it wasn't me who dealt with the customer, although I was aware he was there.

Did you notice anything about him at the time? - Nothing particularly, no, because I was holding a conversation with someone on the phone. I am sure it was actually a mechanic who dealt with the customer. I had an ear on the phone and an ear on what was being said because it is my job and I wanted to hear what he was telling the customer, the correct details.

And did he go and come back the following day? - Yes.

Roughly what time? - Slightly before 3 o'clock.

And did you deal with him the following day? - Yes.

What was the subject of your conversation with him then? - Just purely about hiring the van. He/

He knew exactly what he was there for because he received the details of hire the day before, so he could tell me exactly what he wanted.

What did he say he was wanting? - To hire a small van for one day.

Would you look please at Production ME7? Is that the rental agreement that was completed for the vehicle? - Yes, it is.

Who rented the vehicle? - Mr. Hamilton.

He signed what name? - Thomas W. Hamilton.

And what is the address on the form? - 7 Kent Road, Braehead, Stirling FK7.

What was the vehicle? - A Ford Courier.

Colour? - White.

Is the registration number on the form accurate? - No.

What was the registration number of the vehicle which he got? - N394 KVO.

How long did he take the vehicle for, or what was he entitled to have it for? - For a 24-hour hire.

Roughly what time was that he was hiring on the 12th March? - He left our grounds at approximately 3 p.m.

How did he pay for it? - He left a cheque as a deposit.

How much for? - £50.

I think that cheque is still here and is produced? - Yes.

Did he pay anything else? - No, just purely he left a deposit. We calculate the cost of the vehicle hire at the end of the hire and the customer/customer then pays and his deposit is returned to him.

Did he, however, say anything about paying for it in advance? - Yes, he wished to pay the hire of the van at the time over and above the deposit. I explained that it is very difficult to do because we couldn't calculate if he would bring it back fuelled up or that he would exceed his 100 miles, so therefore it may go above the £31.

Did you tell him not to pay at that stage? - Not to pay to his return.

Do you ever ask people about why they want to hire vans? - No, not normally, unless they have difficulty in deciding what size of vehicle they want, and then I ask why they want it and we can decide what is best for them.

I take it from what you have seen in the Press and so on you know that it was the same person as the Thomas Hamilton who is the subject of this Inquiry? - Yes.

Did you notice anything in particular about his manner or demeanour on these two occasions when you saw him, and particularly on the occasion when you spoke to him? - On the second occasion, yes.

What did you observe? - He unnerved me quite a bit.

Why? - The way he spoke mainly. He spoke very slowly, very clearly, precisely, but with no emotion or expression, or -- there was just nothing, nothing in there. You couldn't have held a conversation with him.

Had you ever met him before? - No, apart from the previous day.

No cross-examination.

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, you should have a list of witnesses which is a provisional list and on it there are numbers for the witnesses. There are two witnesses, 21 and 22, in respect of whom it is proposed that a statement should now be read. One of these witnesses is a young child whose age will be/be given in the context of the statement and the other is his father. It is not proposed to reveal the identity of either of these witnesses in the course of the reading of their statements. If that could be done with your approval, sir, I would in that context invite Mr. Lake then to read first of all the statement of the child followed by the statement of the father.

LORD CULLEN: Do parties have any comments on that proposal which is quite acceptable as far as I am concerned?

No response.

MR. LAKE: This is the statement of the child who resides in Dunblane. I am nine years old and stay with my Mum and Dad and little brother. I go to Dunblane Primary School.

For about three or four years I have gone to a boys' club in Dunblane High School. This club was on a Thursday night between 6 and 8 and a man called Mr. Hamilton ran it. He was sometimes helped by a man called Ian. We did gymnastics, football and other games.

The last time I went to the club was the Thursday before the incident at the school. Mr. Hamilton was there. It was just the Dunblane boys that were there, there were about six of us. We did the usual games. We had to do quite a lot of gymnastics. I was playing football that night. In the middle of football, Mr. Hamilton took me out and sat me on a bench to speak to me. He asked me the way to the gym and the way to the hall. He asked what time certain classes went to the gym and the main way into the school. He asked directions about once he was in the main hall, how to get to the gym and where the stage was. He asked how to get to the assembly hall, and I told him to turn right after the main entrance. He said what day do all the people go on the stage to do the play. I didn't know and he said to ask the P7s to find out. He asked if the younger children, like the Primary 1s to 4s, go to the assembly at a different time to the Primary 5s to 7s. I told him that the assembly was on a Wednesday morning and the younger ones went after us. He asked me what time did assembly start and gym, I said 9.30 for assembly. I didn't tell him the time for gym. I think Stuart Morris said it was/was 9.00. He wanted me to ask the P7s but I didn't.

The other question was something to do with the gym fire exit. I think it was how many fire exits there were to get out of the gym. Mr. Hamilton asked me these questions every single week. He had been asking me these questions for a long time, about two years. He didn't ask me any more questions and said I could go back to playing football.

The statement of the child's father is as follows. He resides in Dunblane and is aged 43 years. I am married and reside with my wife and two sons aged 9 and 7. For around two years my eldest son has attended a boys' club held at Dunblane High School. The club ran on a Thursday night between 6 p.m. and 8 p.m. and was supervised by a man by the name of Thomas Hamilton. I had spoken to Hamilton a few times and was satisfied in my opinion that he was capable of running the club and looking after my child. I have heard that he had been drummed out of the Scouts. But when I did make tentative enquiries, no one could come up with anything specific. I monitored the club quite closely and popped in sometimes and I was satisfied it was being run properly. I still had mild reservations about him. However, my son did continue to attend.

My son knew Hamilton very well and found it hard to accept that he had been involved in the shooting. His initial reaction to hearing the name of the gunman was "It can't be Mr. Hamilton, he was a nice guy."

After the incident my son was not particularly communicative, he was a little bit on the quiet side. He saw a paper on the table, on the Friday after the shooting and stabbed at a picture of Hamilton with his fingers and said "Jerk".

Shortly after that he said "I don't know if it's important, Daddy, but Mr. Hamilton has asked me things about the Primary School." I asked, what sort of things, and he said he had asked which way to go for certain areas of the school, such as assembly, and which way did you turn for the assembly hall. When I asked him when he asked questions/questions about directions he said he did that every week. I said it was surely not every week and he said, "Well, for quite a while". He mentioned the gym but I didn't press him. I discontinued questioning him. I decided not to push him any further and to leave the questioning to the police. I said I thought we should tell the police and if they thought it was important they might want to speak to him.

I contacted the Incident Room and explained the situation. It was some time later that the police spoke to me and arranged to speak to my son. They spoke to him the day after me and took a statement from him. He said that he had told Hamilton that assembly went from 9.00 to 9.30 to 10 o'clock".

STEPHEN CONNELL (38), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you a Constable with Central Scotland Police? - Yes, that is correct.

Normally in the Underwater Search Unit based at Headquarters? - Yes.

How long have you been in the police? - 16 years.

I think among your duties in this investigation, one was to take part in a search of Thomas Hamilton's home at 7 Kent Road, Stirling? - That is correct.

And that search was done, at least your part of it, on Wednesday, 20th March? - That is correct.

In the course of the search did you find a railway ticket? - A railway ticket was found.

Would you look please at DHE46. Is that the ticket? - That would appear to be the ticket.

Where was it found? - It was found within Mr. Hamilton's jacket in the living room.

No cross-examination.

ROBERT/

10.20 a.m.

ROBERT GOUTHER (37), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you a clerical officer with British Rail? - Yes.

Based in Stirling? - Yes.

Could you look please at a Production which is No. DHE 46? Can I take it you have seen that before? - Yes.

What is it? - It is a sprinter ticket, a train ticket.

Which route does it relate to? - Dunblane to Stirling.

Now, can you tell from that ticket where it was purchased? - Yes.

Where? - On the train at 11.55.

And that would be 11.55 on which date? - 12th March.

And that is a train from Dunblane to Stirling? - It is.

Is there a train that goes from Dunblane to Stirling that would be doing the journey about 11.55 on the 12th March? - There is.

Do you know whether that train was on time? - I do.

And was it? - It was.

No cross-examination.

GRAHAM KATE (26), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I am still an acting Detective Constable with Central Police. I have been a police officer for five and a half years.

Now/

Now, I think that one of the items which you at one stage handled in the course of this Inquiry was an audio cassette tape recording of a telephone call? - Yes.

And that was given to you by a sergeant in the course of the investigation? - Yes.

Now, what did that audio recording relate to? - I was told by the sergeant that it related to a treble 9 call received at the control room -- by Mr. Taylor.

That is a call from Mr. Taylor? - Yes.

So that was actually a recording made which the police do have of the call Mr. Taylor made to the police on the 999 Emergency Service system? - That is what I was informed, yes.

The other matter I want to ask you about is some research you did into video tape recordings that show the movement of people in streets and roads around Stirling? - Yes.

Now, what work did you do on that? - We were instructed to view certain video tapes held at the CCTV Video Room at Stirling Police Office, in an attempt to try to trace the movements of individuals.

Were you looking in part of that exercise for the movements of a white van? - Yes.

Registration number M394 KBO? - Yes.

Now, in the video recordings that you have observed for the morning of the 13th March are you able to say something about the movements of what looked like that van? - Yes.

What can you tell us? - I believe it was at 9.12, one of the cameras showed a white van fitting the description of that vehicle approaching the Boroughmuir roundabout from Boroughmuir Road.

If that is right and the vehicle was travelling at average speed towards Dunblane how long would it take to get to Dunblane? - I am not sure myself. I know a timed run was made.

Do/

Do you know what time was take on the timed run? - I am sorry, I don't know.

Just roughly from your own experience, what time would you expect that journey to take? - I would say from there, perhaps about 15 minutes.

And can I take it that from the road that the van was seen on it could in fact get on to the road to Dunblane? - Yes, that is correct.

No cross-examination.

FRANK ALFRED GORDON (54), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: I own premises in Stirling known as the Stirling Racquet & Trophy Centre.

Did you know Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

For how long did you know him? - Well, I have known him really for 20 years.

Was there another member of his family that you originally new? - Yes, his grandfather.

Did Mr. Hamilton from time to time do business with you? - Yes.

And what was that? - He got trophies and medals for Boys Clubs.

Did he do that regularly? - Yes.

Can you give us a rough estimate of the extent to which he did business with you? - Well, monthly -- sometimes more. He used to buy medals, trophies, and get photocopying done.

Did you have the facility for photocopying? - Yes.

On a monthly basis did he buy a number of medals and trophies? - Yes, he would buy everything from 30 medals at a time. Sometimes he would/would buy maybe a couple of hundred pounds for one person, just for for an individual alone.

On Saturday the 9th March did Mr. Hamilton visit the shop? - Yes.

Is that the last time you actually saw him? - No. I saw him on the Monday. He came in on the Saturday and said "I need another two medals", but he said "I will come in on Monday and get them", and he came in on Monday morning and got them.

Well, was it Monday? - We were a bit confused at the time. The staff thought it was Tuesday, and I thought it was Monday.

What is your best recollection now? - I think it was Monday.

And did he get the medal from you? - Yes.

What was it for? - Football.

Do you know -- just answer this yes or no -- do you know was to get it? - No. He never got them engraved or anything.

Did he ever get them engraved? - He got the cup engraved when he got the cup about a year ago. That was for somebody in Dunfermline I think.

Now, did you have any casual conversation with him on the Monday morning when he collected the medal? - Not really, no.

Was it you he dealt with? - Yes.

Did you speak to him about anything apart from handing over the medal and taking the money? - No.

Nothing at all? - No.

Can you tell me anything about his spirit or his mood at that time? - He acted pretty normal. He talked very slow anyway, and never sort of looked you in the eye, but he was pretty normal/normal that morning.

Did he say anything about a photograph in a trophy magazine that you remember? - Oh yes, he did, looking back he did - there was a photo magazine on the counter and he said "That is good photography". I recall that now.

So it would be fair to say he did in fact have some casual conversation with you? - Yes, I remember now he did mention the photography, because he was a keen photographer. He mentioned the quality of the photography on that magazine.

Did he seem any different from normal? - No.

No cross-examination.

ALLAN ARTHUR JEFFREY (62), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I am the Reference Librarian at Stirling Library.

You knew Thomas Hamilton? - I did.

How long did you know him? - Perhaps five or six years. I really can't put a date on it.

When did you first get to know him? - Coming into the library -- although I was aware of his existence, having seen him when he lived in the Riverside, but I had never spoken to him.

So five or six years ago you spoke to him? - He came into the library.

And thereafter did you speak to him from time to time? - He came into the library and he would speak to me, and of course I would speak back.

And where his visits to the library frequent? - It varied. There would be periods of time he would come, but I would say fairly frequent, irregular.

And/

And can you tell us what you know please of the purpose of these visits? - It was for photocopying. He had a lot of correspondence regarding this Clubs that he ran. He photocopied publicity material for them -- letters to parents, letters and forms of application, to have the approval to the boys going to camps, and his responsibility for them during the camp. He also had letters from Viewforth and Randolphfield -- that is the Education and the Police -- where he would photocopy the letters he received and also his replies to these bodies.

Now, he would presumably know where the photocopier was and would be able to go and use it freely without assistance from you; is that right? - He would, but since he was running off multiple copies he quite often got the key to bypass the coin machine, and he would settle up at the end.

Now, did your conversations go beyond the formalities necessary to organise the photocopying? - Well, when he was waiting on them running off he would say -- he would speak of the nature of the stuff he was doing and that type of thing, yes.

And what sort of thing did he tell you about? - He spoke of his difficulty getting leases of halls for his Clubs, and this was the nature of the letters to and from -- his replies to Viewforth. He also had had some difficulty with the police. He had had visits from the police at his camp at Loch Lomond, and the correspondence -- he seemed to come over as an injured party, and always he seemed to be justifying his running of the Clubs and camps and justifying, or rather refuting any allegations that were held against him.

But you were getting one side of the story, obviously?
- Very much.

And therefore no one can invite you to try to judge the issue? - No, sorry.

But all I am trying to get from you is just the nature of these conversations. Now, they concerned disputes he had with, you say, Viewforth -- that is Central Region? - Central Region Education.

The/

The Education Department? - Yes.

He mentioned them? - Yes.

And the police -- he felt victimised by the police? - I would say so. He felt it was unjust, what was alleged against him.

Did he ever say anything about the parents of the boys at the Boys Clubs doing or saying things that he felt were victimising him? - He did say that there was a tendency for sometimes a boy or two boys being dissatisfied with the camps, say the feeding or something of this nature, and this was the complaint.

Did he ever go as far with you as to suggest, or tell you in fact, that people were making claims that he was a pervert of some kind? Did he ever say anything about that? - No, I wouldn't say so distinctly as that. He did say that the police on one occasion had said "So you like taking photographs of small boys", you know, "partly dressed". That was one occasion. But he did show me a number of the photographs he had taken, and it seemed they were boys -- for instance one of them was in a boat, and up each side of the sides there were lads in swimming costumes and....

Life jackets? - Yes, life jackets. They were all dressed, and the photographs that he did show me seemed to indicate that the boys were enjoying the camp, and he used these for publicity. He used these in the Clubs to pin on notice boards in order to promote the Club or the activities that the boys were involved in.

Now, apart from authorities and parents, did he get into tangles, perhaps of his own making, from time to time with commercial companies? - I don't recall him saying about a commercial company.

Does the name Cameron Equipment mean anything to you? - Not at all. I understood all the equipment he had belonged to the Club, although I think he did say when I mentioned the cost of it all that the tents were hired.

He/

10.40 a.m.

He never said anything to you perhaps about complaining to a company about stuff not being up to standard and getting some benefit out of doing that? - No.

So far as these copyings are concerned, on any one occasion how many copies might he make of his publicity material? - It would be well over a hundred. It would depend. If he was sending letters out in order to attract membership he would run quite a lot.

Do you remember the highest number he ever did at once? - He did speak on one occasion of seeking to do blanket coverage in Dunblane, refuting some rumours that had been spread about him, regarding him. He was quite annoyed.

Do you remember how many of these he did? - I think he said 500 of that. I don't know if he did the 500 but he said that was his intention and he did run off some, that was for sure.

Do you remember roughly when that was? - It might have been a year ago. I haven't got much to hang dates on on account of the fact I am always in the same place. There is nothing to relate it to other than his visit.

Were there times he talked of successes with the clubs? - Yes, on one occasion one boy did very well on something. I think it was football. This lad's photograph was in the papers with a text and he photocopied that. He saw it as good publicity.

Were there occasions when he was pleased with the response in a particular area to his advertisements for members? - He did say on one occasion he had enough for two clubs. That was over towards Dunfermline. He did say that he was happy with the result.

Were you ever in his house? - Never.

Were you ever invited? - I was invited on several occasions. This arose.....he would stop you often in the street. He would stop many people in/

in the street and he did see me in the area once and asked me if I lived down where he lived and I said no and he said "I saw you down there" and I said "Yes, I was visiting my mother".

But there was no occasion you actually went to his house? - No.

When was the last time you saw him? - The last time I saw him was Monday the 11th.

About what time? - Between 10 and quarter past. Maybe about 10 past 10.

Was that in the library? - That was in the library, yes.

Why had he come there? - To do some photocopying.

Was he able to do that? - No, he was not able to do that because the photocopier was out of order and I told him so.

When he learned that what did he do? - He said to me that he would come back regarding the photocopying but since he was here he would address some envelopes.

And did he do that? - He did that.

Did you see who he was addressing the envelopes to? - I didn't, no.

Were there many? - Not a lot. I was quite busy, although the library was not very full and I didn't see it.

Was he any different from normal? - Not at all. I did say to him "You are in early this morning" and he said yes, he agreed, but he didn't make me any the wiser, not for example taking the originals out to photocopy them, hence there was no discussion of what was in them or who they were to.

So is the answer that he was just his normal self? - Very much his normal self. Speaking slowly and as always seeming to be very much in command of the situation that he was in.

No cross-examination.

ROBERT/

ROBERT JOHN TOGNERI, (57), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you a retired school teacher? - I am.

And do you live in Stirling? - I do.

I think you knew Thomas Hamilton years ago? - Over 30 years ago.

In what connection? - He was a member of the Stirling Chess Club.

He would be in his teens at that time? - Pardon?

He would be a teenager at that time? - Yes, he was.

Was he in the club for long? - As far as I remember, three or four years.

Keen? - Yes, he was keen.

Did you thereafter continue to be a member of the club? - Yes, from then on.

But he was no longer there? - No. The late 1960s he left.

In the years since, almost 30 years since, have you met him at all? - A few times. Say half a dozen times in those years.

Where would you meet him? - In the town.

Did you speak to him from time to time? - Yes.

Can you remember anything now of the subjects of conversation? - He would talk about his boys' club and his interest in photography.

Were the conversations generally positive or were there feelings of victimisation and depression? - Certainly victimisation. He felt he was hard done by. He was always complaining against authority.

Did he mention any particular authorities?/

authorities? - No. The police perhaps but nobody in particular.

The police, though, were mentioned, were they? -
Yes.

When was the last time you met him? - Monday the 11th, two days before the event.

At roughly what time? - I don't know exactly but it was about 11 o'clock in the morning.

Did he indicate where he had just been when you met him? - No, but I met him at the Stirling Post Office, the GPO.

Is that near the library at all? - Fairly near. Five minutes walk away.

Did you speak to him on that occasion? - Yes.

Did you actually walk a distance together? - We walked from the Post Office to the Thistle Centre.

Do you remember what the conversation was about? -
Well, I asked him how his numbers were going at the boys' clubs and he said that the numbers were down. He sounded very unhappy.

Anything else you remember? - He was wearing a blue anorak and his cap with the earmuffs.

Anything about his demeanour, his general state, that you noticed? - Round-faced, slow voice and he was a wee bit low, a wee bit unhappy that day. Subdued. He wasn't as talkative as usual.

Did he make what you thought was a strange suggestion? - Yes, when I think about it he asked me if I would like a coffee or a meal.

Had he done that before? - Yes, previously he had asked me for a coffee and once I had gone for a coffee with him.

And did you accept the offer on this occasion? - No,
I had shopping to do.

How/

How long then was it you were actually in his company? - Say five minutes.

No cross-examination.

GRACE JONES OGILVIE (63), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you a retired shop assistant? - Yes.

And I think that you live at 11 Kent Road in Stirling? - Yes.

Now, that would make you a neighbour of Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

Can you tell us the relationship between the two houses, how close they were? - 1, 2, 3 and 4 and that is me and that was Mr. Hamilton.

So he was bottom left and you are top right? - Top right.

When did he first move to that address roughly? - I think it may be seven or eight years ago. I'm not too sure.

But you were already there? - I was there, yes.

And at that time were what you would understand to be his mother and father also in the house? - Yes.

The lady who was known as his sister but was actually his mother, was she there as well? - No, she didn't stay there.

Did you ever see her? - Yes, I did see her.

How frequently was she a visitor initially? - I would have said maybe once a week.

When did you find out the true relationship of the members of the family? - After this incident happened.

Now, I think Mrs. Hamilton, senior died about/about a couple of years after the family moved to 7 Kent Road? - I think so, yes.

And were you then aware of Mr. Hamilton, senior moving out? - No, I didn't know he had moved out but I was told later.

And were you aware then that Thomas Hamilton was living in the house on his own? - Well, when I had been told, yes.

Roughly when was that? When did you know that? - Well, I would say maybe about five or six years ago.

Now, during the intervening period until now, or until the 13th of March, were there many visitors to the house? - Yes.

Can you tell me something of who these visitors were? - Well, mostly STV.

That is an STV van or car? - Yes, a car.

A car with STV on it? - Yes.

And this is a private visitor as you would understand it who happened to have such a car? - Yes. The police.

How frequently were the police there? - Well, maybe once or twice a month but quite often the police car was down.

Anyone else? - There was a landscape gardener came.

What was his name? - James Gillespie.

Did you know him? - No.

How did you learn his name? - It was on his van.

At any stage while Mr. Hamilton lived there did you know anything of what he did for a living? - Well, I did know that he did boys' camps.

Is that all you ever knew of what he had actually/actually done for a living? - Well, that's all I knew about, yes.

How did you know about the boys' camps? - He told me.

How frequently did you have talks, conversations, with him? - Not a lot but one or two conversations I had with him. Out the back in the garden or on the road.

If you met in the street would you acknowledge each other? - If I was on the same side as him, yes, but if I was on the other side, no.

Would you stop in the street or would it be very rarely you would actually have occasion to stop and speak to him? - No, I wouldn't stop and speak to him.

So that on the occasions when there was some conversation between you, who was it that started the conversation off? - It was him and I nearly jumped out of my skin.

Can you remember the first time that happened? - Well, if I was maybe out the back hanging out my washing, he was there. I never heard him coming but he was there and he would speak and I just got a fright and I would talk but then I just left him.

Did he ever do anything that you saw that either upset you or caused you any anxiety? - Well, he didn't really upset me but he asked me into his house and I was caught unawares and I went into his house but I was most uneasy. That sort of upsetting.

Was it just one occasion you were inside the house? - One occasion, yes.

Apart from that, and I will come back to that in a minute, there was not anything else you were aware of going on in the area which caused you any concern? - Just the way he went about. He was a sort of odd character. The way he walked and spoke.

Tell/

Tell me something about the way he walked? - He sort of crept. He was very head down and sort of crept along.

What about the way he spoke? - He was very proper and soft spoken.

He has been described as a slow, deliberate speaker?
- Yes.

Was there any sign in the activity around his house that he had an interest in boys' clubs? - Oh, yes.

What were the signs? - Well, he used to get a van from Central Region and he told me it was for camps on Loch Lomondside or at Queen Victoria School and he used to have big boards and he would take them down the back and paint them white. That was for flooring at the camps for the boys to sleep on.

Did you learn anything about whether he charged very much for these camps? - Yes.

Did you learn that from him? - Yes, I did.

What did he tell you about that? - £70 or £80 per week.

When you saw a van around the house, did you see boys there as well? - Once.

What age were they? - Well, I would have said between maybe six and 10 years of age.

What were they doing? - Well, they were in the van and he would put in big rolls, bales, of toilet rolls and washing up liquid but the boys would be in the van or running round the van. They were never in his house.

Tell me about the circumstances in which he invited you into the house? - Well, I was coming home one night round about 9 and he was at his front door looking up towards Annfield and he had a sort of telescopic thing in his hand and he was look at Annfield through it and he saw me coming and he just said "Mrs. Ogilvie, can I have a word?" and/and I said "Well, what is it, Tommy?". "Just a minute" he said and his front door was open and he didn't go to shut it. He walked in in front of me and I walked in behind him and into his sitting room and he asked me to sit down. Well, I did sit down.

Roughly when was this? - Well, it was the summer time. I can't remember if it was last summer or the summer before. It wasn't any earlier than that.

When you sat down what happened? - He asked me to look at a video.

What was on the video? - Small boys.

How long did it last? - Well, he fast-forwarded it and stopped it and let it go for a bit and then he would fast-forward it again and let it go for a good bit. That is what he did all the time and he was very proud because he said "These are my boys". That is what he said. I sort of had my back to him and I was looking out the window more often than I was looking at the video.

How long do you reckon it lasted, showing you this video? - The bit that he showed me, well, I think about 40 minutes.

And can you tell me what you saw on the video? - Just small boys.

Doing what? - Well, they were walking along or maybe running. I can't remember if they were jumping over a wooden horse. I can't remember that but I think there was one bit that there was that on it but I'm not too sure. But they just seemed to be marching in lines, the boys.

Did they approach the camera at any stage? - Well, they turned their head towards the camera.

As they walked past the camera? - Yes.

So they would come right up to it more or less and look at it and walk past? - No, they were walking to the camera, the video, they were walking but they were never looking straight singly. It was just as if they were in a line and they were photographed as they were walking up. They didn't look/look straight into the video.

Were there close-ups of their faces? - No, I would have said maybe from the waist up.

Did you actually see the boys from the top? - In one or two parts, yes.

How were they dressed? - They had very small shiny bathing pants on.

Colour? - Black.

All of them? - Yes.

Were they all dressed the same way? - Yes.

Throughout the whole video? - Yes.

Could you tell whether there was only one occasion that was being filmed or there was more than one occasion on the video? - I would have just said one occasion.

And so far as these boys were concerned, can you help me about their ages? - Again I would have said seven to ten years of age.

Apart from the video did Mr. Hamilton show you something else? - He did.

What was that? - He didn't take it out and show me. It was a box that was more or less at my feet. It was like a box on a ship, an old box with rope handles. He opened it and there was a lot of frames in it, picture frames. There was no pictures I don't think but he just opened it and he took out one picture of one boy and said he was his favourite or his star pupil or something to that effect but I just glanced at it because I was uneasy.

What/

11 a.m.

What was that boy wearing? - He was just from here up -- bare skin.

No clothing on his upper body? - No.

What was it that you felt uneasy about? - I didn't think I should have been looking at that video. I wasn't really interested in the video.

Apart from that, can you say whether there was anything improper, apparently improper or indecent about it? - I wouldn't say it was indecent, but I didn't like it. I was just uncomfortable.

Was there any what may be described as strange activities you observed out in the back garden? - Beg pardon?

Did you observe any strange activities on Mr. Hamilton's part out in your back garden area? - Yes, fires.

How frequently? - Maybe twice a month.

During what period? - About six months.

When was that? - Prior to this incident.

About six months ago? - Yes.

How many times did you observe fires? - Altogether I think I saw about a dozen.

Did you see what Mr. Hamilton was burning? - No, I didn't. I smelt it.

What did you smell? - Well, when I lived at home with my mother she had a knife -- well, it was a sort of spatula -- and it was in the frying pan, and the handle of the teapot was the same, and the gas was on, and sometimes it would burn and you would smell it. Well, it was that smell -- like Bakelite, because I came through from my living room and I could smell it in the hall and I would say, "That's him at that fire again". I banged/banged the windows to let him know I knew because he was sitting in full view because there was these security lights at the back and when someone walks past they light. Well, he sat on a chair and fuelled these fires.

Can you say anything about what was being burned?

- No, I only saw boxes.

Were they cardboard boxes? - Yes, it was egg boxes, that size of box.

Could you tell whether there was anything in the box?

- Oh, yes, there was stuff in it, yes.

You are clear about that? - Yes.

When you were in the house did you see any photographs on the walls of his house? - Well, the first time I saw photographs on his walls was his living room when I went past the house and he put the light on, and I saw them on the back wall, but when I went into his house they had been taken off the living room and they were in the front bedroom. The door was slightly ajar when I went in and I saw them on the wall of the front bedroom.

What were they pictures of? - Boys, small boys.

What were they wearing? - Bathing pants.

The same as the video? - The same as the video.

When was the last time you saw Mr. Hamilton? - The Friday before this incident.

That would be the 8th March? - Yes.

About what time? - 8 o'clock at night.

Whereabouts did you see him? - Coming down my path to go and visit a neighbour when he spoke -- I didn't see him, but he was coming along the side of the hedge on the main part of the road, and I said to him -- I got a fright again because the hedge is quite high -- I said, "Could you not whistle/whistle when you come?" and he says, "Did I give you a fright?" and I said "Yes". Well, I walked along the road with him and he was talking about ghosts.

Was he talking about where he had, talking about a particular place when he was talking about ghosts? - Yes.

Whereabouts? - Upper Bridge Street, the big house, his mother and father had a big house when he was small.

Was he carrying anything? - Carrying anything, yes.

What was he carrying? - Letters. He told me what he was carrying.

Did he tell you what the letters were for? - No.

Did you see how many he had? - Well, I didn't actually look at them. I saw them, there was quite a few, but I mean, it could have been a book in an envelope. I didn't really pay particular attention.

What size of envelopes were they? - (Indicates 6 inches).

A square shape? - No, like that.

6 inches long, about 3 or 4 inches deep? - 4 or 5.

Apart from talking about ghosts, which you have told us about, was there anything about his manner or his appearance that appeared unusual on that last occasion? - No, he was just the same.

Anything unusual for him? - No, just his usual creeping about.

No cross-examination.

DAVID/

DAVID MacDONALD (28), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Do you work as a financial adviser? - Yes.

And do you live in Aberdeen? - Yes.

Have you been in Aberdeen for about six years? - Yes, just about that.

Before living in Aberdeen did you live in this area? - Yes.

In which town in particular? - Stirling.

Was that with your own family? - Yes.

Did you know Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

When did you first get to know him? - Round about 1980.

When was your first encounter with him? - First of all I was really with my father, and we went down to the Woodcraft shop with my Dad to buy various woodcraft.

Did he have a shop called Woodcraft? - Yes, it was Woodcraft Cowane.

That was in Cowane Street, Stirling? - Yes.

And this is about 1981 or so? - About 1980.

And you were there with your father? - Yes.

At that stage were you still -- you would still be at school. Which school did you go to? - St. Modan's High School.

Did you ever go to any of Mr. Hamilton's boys' clubs? - Yes, I was a member.

When? - Just about that period.

Where was the club you went to? - It was/was a club up at the Borestone.

What is the Borestone? - An area of St. Ninian's, on the north side of Stirling.

When you say the Borestone -- were there premises there? - It was a school actually, Borestone High School.

It was not a Primary School, it is a High School? - I'm not sure now.

For how long did you attend that club? - Maybe 18 months.

Did you go to any summer camps that were organised? - Yes.

Where did you go to camp? - It was up at Balmaha.

Roughly when was that? - It would have been in that period.

We are talking about the very beginning of the '80s? - Yes.

Summer time? - Summer.

How long were you there? - Two weeks.

Was that a tented camp? - Tented, yes. It was on the islands actually.

Off Balmaha? - Yes.

Do you know the name of the island? - No.

How did you get on at the camp? - What do you mean?

How did you get on with Mr. Hamilton? - Okay, yes. There were no problems.

No problems with Mr. Hamilton? - No.

Did you go to more than one camp? - Just the one camp.

Was/

Was there any particular reason why you did not go to more? - Well, I had other interests as well. I did a lot of other types of sport and so on.

Did you ever, throughout this period from then up until now, did you ever hear stories or rumours about Mr. Hamilton's behaviour with boys? - Well, I know during the camp there was one child -- I can't remember his name -- Tom Hamilton didn't like very much, and the child left early, and I think the parents had a sort of grievance with Mr. Hamilton about that.

Do you know why the child left early? - No. I think Tom maybe picked on him or he just didn't get on too well. I don't know the reason.

But going back to the question, it was really the whole period -- I appreciate you referring to an actual time -- but I was thinking of the whole period right up to now, did you at any stage hear stories that were really rumours about his behaviour towards youngsters? - Yes, there was a rumour that went about that he was a bit weird but it didn't seem to come to anything. No one seemed to know what that was based on.

You can be weird in a number of ways. Do you know in relation to what it was suggested he was weird? - No.

So you really never heard what may be described as firm rumours about specific types of behaviour? - No.

Did you end up for a period working with Mr. Hamilton? - Yes, I worked casually in his woodcraft shop for about a year or something.

Did your father actually buy stuff from him to do his own DIY work? - Yes, along with a lot of other people.

I appreciate that, but your father would be a customer?
- Yes.

Was there any particular day of the week you worked in the shop? - Yes, a Saturday morning I worked in the shop.

For/

For how long did you do that? - Just about over a year I would say.

Why did you stop? - Mr. Hamilton -- he actually used to sell a lot of DIY equipment and then he started moving into kitchens, and there was a shop next door that sold kitchens, and he had no further use for me. He employed a few other people to instal kitchens for him and didn't have any use for me after that.

We are talking about what, 1982 roughly? - Well, 1981 I would suppose, about August-September.

During the period you worked for him what age would you be? - About 12.

Did he do anything improper to you? - No, not at all.

Was there any hint of something that perhaps should be avoided? - No. I wouldn't have continued to work there if I thought there was something strange.

After you stopped working there did you still see him regularly or did you just never come across him for a while? - Well, thee was a period when I never saw Mr. Hamilton for maybe four years.

When was the next time you saw him? - I went to University in 1984 -- probably didn't see him for four or five years.

When did you next see him? - Probably it would be at the University.

What was he doing at the University? - He used to get -- he always used to carry this black case, and he used to get typing done.

And someone up there did it for him? - Yes.

You mean at the University? - Yes.

That would be the reason he was there? - Yes.

Did/

Did you enjoy having a conversation with him? - He was quite an intelligent man. He did seem a little eccentric in the sense that he did speak very slowly but, yes, he was interesting enough to speak to.

When was it you moved to Aberdeen? - 1990 I think it was, 1991.

Did he keep in touch with you there? - Yes.

Was there any particular reason why he did that? - Well, he was unemployed and what he used to do was sell and buy camera equipment, and he used to phone me and tell me about various deals he had done with his cameras.

Had you an interest in photography? - Yes, it was quite interesting.

Did you do any deals with him? - Deals, no.

Did he phone quite a lot? - He did phone me quite frequently, yes, and eventually it got a bit wearing having so many phone calls.

What did you do? - He used to phone usually after 9 o'clock.

In the evening? - In the evening, because that's when his clubs finished, and it got to the stage he was becoming a little bit of a pest so I actually left -- I got my Mum and Dad if they were phoning me I got them to ring a couple of times and ring off and then.....

You would answer it? - I would answer the phone, yes, because with Tom, when he did phone, he could be on for quite a long time.

So from 1990 right up to 1996 did he continue to keep in touch with you? - Yes.

And how frequently during that period did he speak to you on the phone? - It was maybe a couple of times a week, something like that.

What were these conversations generally about/about? - It was usually about cameras he was buying. He seemed to start off this business with buying and selling, and I think it was Canons or Minoltas, and eventually he moved on to Hassleblad which was a more selective type of camera and they were worth a lot more money buying and selling.

Sorry.....? - He made quite a lot of money.

That's what he told you? - Yes.

During that time did you also see him from time to time? - Yes.

Did he appear to have money about him? - I'm not sure.

Was there any way you could judge whether he actually had any money? - No. He used to wear the same blue jacket all the time and quite a sort of crumpled sort of shirt.

Did these conversations extend from photography into other subjects? - No, it was mainly photography.

Well, did he never express grievances which he had to you? - Yes.

Was that in the context of these conversations? - Yes. He expressed a grievance about the police, and I think what happened was the police had gone to one of the camps and confiscated various equipment that he was working with.

That/

11.20

That was photographic equipment? - Yes.

And did he have any other grievance that you talked to him about? - Well, he felt that he was being victimised.

By whom? - By the public.

The public? - The public.

Was he more specific than that? - It was really to do with his Clubs. He felt that the public, you know, had some sort of rumour about him that was stopping him from continuing his Clubs.

And did he say whether his Clubs were being adversely affected by that? - Yes.

Did he say how? - Sorry, what do you mean?

Well, did he say what was happening to his Clubs as a result? - The attendance numbers were dropping.

So that is one side. Did he ever say anything about not being able to get facilities, premises to hold them in? - He never mentioned that to me.

Just that the numbers were dropping? - The numbers were dropping.

Did that sort of feeling of victimisation take up much of the conversation? - Not really. It was quite a small part. I found it hard going. I didn't find it that useful to talk about. It was really the cameras I spoke about.

He mentioned the police and he mentioned the public?
- Yes.

Did he say anything about people in Dunblane at all in any of these conversations? - Yes. It was mainly Dunblane these Clubs were, so he could have felt that is where he was being victimised./

victimised.

He didn't say so in so many words, but you drew that conclusion? - Well, I drew the conclusion that was the area.

Did he ever mention the Scouting Association in that connection? - No, he did mention that he had been in the Scouts, but he didn't follow it up.

Have you ever been in his house? - Yes.

How frequently were you a visitor? - Very infrequently -- maybe three or four -- three times a year.

When were you last in the house? - It would have been about Christmas.

1995? - 1995.

And when you went to the house what happened generally? - Just watched TV.

And discussion of cameras and so on at the house? - Yes. He would have a collection of cameras which he would bring out.

Cheap, expensive? - Expensive.

And a lot of them? - No, not a lot of them. There were maybe three or four.

Can you give me an example of an expensive piece of equipment he would have? - He had various like lenses -- zoom lenses, which were quite large.

Was he specialising in any particular make? - Hassleblad, initially, I think it was.

Is Hassleblad an expensive type of equipment? - Yes.

And what are its specialist features? - Of a Hassleblad camera?

Yes. Anything particular about it? Is/

Is it lense quality or is it something else? - Well, the one feature of a Hassleblad I believe is that the lense can be more expensive than the actual body.

And apart from cameras did you see the work of his camera at all? - Yes.

And how keen a photographer was Mr. Hamilton? - He seemed a very keen photographer.

Now, did he specialise in photographing anything or any people in particular? - Well, he seemed to specialise -- in fact, it seemed almost all about boys in the Clubs.

Did he display these? - Yes, yes.

Whereabouts? - There was photographs all over the wall, and he also had photographs in albums.

Did these photographs have any common features in them? - They were mainly in a gym -- young kids, maybe six/seven years old. All they had on was black swimming trunks.

Swimming trunks, all of them? - Yes.

Mainly, anyway? - Yes.

Did the photographs disturb you at all? - I didn't really like them. I don't think it was necessary for kids just to wear trunks -- possibly if they had on shorts and T-shirts, that it would have been better.

Did you ever ask him about that? - Yes.

And what was his explanation? - He just said it was natural to do it that way.

Did you ever see any video film he had shot? - Yes.

Did he actually have video equipment that he showed you, in the house? - He had a video machine, but this might have been two or three years ago.

That/

That is a video camera? - He had a video camera, yes, and he also had a video machine, but it was about two or three years ago.

In December did he have a video camera or a video machine? - No -- not that I saw anyway. I didn't see it in the room.

Do you remember if he had any video equipment by the time you saw him in December? - If he had it was very little.

Did you get the impression he was having any financial difficulties? - I would say that regarding camera equipment there was certainly a winding-down, there was a lot less buying and selling.

Is there anything else you can tell the Inquiry about his interest in photography or the nature of any photographs you saw that might be relevant to Lord Cullen's search for information? - No. I know that he also, apart from photography -- he also did some freelance work as well, somewhere in Glasgow.

That would be on a commercial basis? - Yes.

Can I turn now to guns? Did you know he had an interest in guns? - Well, when I was in his Club he had an interest in guns then, but I didn't realise that he still had that interest now.

Back at the beginning of the 1980's did the Club have a name? - The Rovers -- The Rovers Sports Club.

And how did you learn of his interest in guns at that time? - Well, the main Club was in Borestone, but occasionally he would take us to Dunblane to the gun club there and we would fire air guns.

And were these rifles or pistols? - I think there was a mixture of both.

And what did you fire at? - Just targets, round targets.

What/

What age were you? - I must have been 12.

Was there a crowd of you? - Yes.

What was the variation in ages? - Well, they varied from very young -- maybe five or six, up to 13 or 14.

And did they all go shooting? - Yes.

And so far as organisation and discipline were concerned in the shooting exercise, can you tell us something about that? - Very organised.

Did you ever feel in danger when you were shooting?
- No, never.

And how was Mr. Hamilton for discipline? - Very very strict.

And did that apply when he was organising shooting as well? - Yes.

Did you ever see anything, any weapon, other than an air weapon? - Yes. He had .22 guns, real guns, which were very old guns I think from the War.

.22 pistol or rifle? - Rifle.

Did he have one or more than one? - More than one, maybe half a dozen.

Were they his? - I don't know. They may have belonged to the Club.

But you have no recollection of a .22 pistol at all, just a rifle? - No, I have no recollection of a handgun, no.

Just a rifle? - Yes.

And more than one rifle? - Yes.

And you say up to six, do you? - Possibly, yes.

And where did you see them? - In the Club./

Club.

Where did you see them? - In the Club.

Did he have to take them to the Club or were they perhaps based on the Club premises? - Based on the Club premises.

Now, were these used in your presence? - Yes.

By whom? - By Mr. Hamilton and the other members of the Club.

Did you fire a .22? - Yes.

How frequently were these visits to the Club when weapons other than air weapons were used? - I would say it was mainly air guns that were used -- may once every two or three weeks -- less frequently with the actual bullets.

So with weapons other than air weapons did you use them more than once? - Personally? Myself?

Yes? - Yes.

So roughly on how many occasions do you tell us that you actually used them? - Three or four times.

During the period you have known Hamilton, were you aware of him having any sexual relationship, either hetero or homosexual? - None at all.

Now, I think recently Mr. Hamilton had some dealings with your father? - Yes.

What was that about? - My father was installing or looking to install a kitchen in his house, and with Tom being a previous kitchen specialist, he offered his services to help install, or select a kitchen.

Now, early in March were you out of the country? - Yes.

And when did you return? - It was on the Monday previous to the incident.

That/

That is Monday the 11th March? - Yes.

Did you go back to Aberdeen? - Yes.

Do you have an answering machine? - I do.

Did you check it when you got back? - Yes.

Were there any calls from Mr. Hamilton? - Yes.

How many were there? - I think two.

Were there any messages left? - Just to say that Tom had called, no message.

And the following evening, that is Tuesday 12th March, was there also a message on your machine? - Yes.

And what was the nature of that? - Again just to say Tom had called.

Did you do anything about that? - When I returned from work I phoned him back.

So was that in the evening after the Clubs would be over, if he had a Club? - I think it was after 8 o'clock, yes.

How long did you speak to him for? - I am not very sure, but I would think less than an hour.

A long conversation, obviously? - Fairly long.

I mean, when you say "less than an hour" do you mean approaching an hour? - Yes.

Now, what was this conversation about? - It was about the kitchen that he was installing for my father.

Did it extend beyond the kitchen? - He had said -- for a while he had said that he was quite a lonely person, and that it wasn't good to be alone for all your life; which I thought was a bit strange./

strange.

Was that something he hadn't touched on in past conversation? - He had touched on it before.

Was it different this time? - Not any different, no.

Did you react to that part of it? - Yes. I said to him that, I mean that, you know, it is possible for anyone to be lonely at some point in their life, so it is not a big deal.

Did you give him any encouragement and tell him what he should do? - No.

Did you ask him about his business at all? - I did ask about the cameras.

And what did he say? - He didn't seem as interested any more in the equipment. I felt over the last few months there had been a winding-down of the cameras. He didn't seem to be selling as much.

Now, did he keep the conversation going, or was it you that.....? - It just started to fizzle out.

I am sorry? - It just started to go quite flat, so I said it was getting late.

And that is when you got to the end of the conversation? - Yes.

But during most of the hour, or up to an hour that you spoke, was he fluent in his conversation? - I think he was talking slower -- slowing down.

Was there anything that cheered him up at all in the course of the conversation? - The thought of maybe doing the kitchen work.

That was the thing he had an interest in? - Yes.

Would you say that he was noticeably different from usual on that particular conversation?/

conversation? - No, no.

Over the last six months or so had you noticed any change in his attitude to things in general? - He did seem -- again related to the cameras, he did seem less enthusiastic about his camera business.

Was there any change in his tone or his attitude towards his grievances? - He had had these grievances for quite a long time, and when he spoke to me about them I found it quite disinteresting, and he did tend to just stop talking about it.

Over the six months before the incident did he talk at all about Dunblane? - Dunblane? Not in particular, no.

Did he talk at all about parents of boys, and any problems he felt he was having from them? - Yes.

And you have mentioned guns in the early 1980's. Did you ever see guns in his house? - No.

Did you know he had a continuing interest in guns? - I did notice -- he used to have various magazines in his house, but I did notice there was one magazine which was called Sporting Life, or something, which had a shotgun on the front, so I assumed that was a gun magazine.

But in the six months before the incident how often do you reckon you were in his house? - Maybe three times.

And any sign from either conversation, or what you saw, that he had any interest in shooting? - No.

Had you any reason to think he still had guns? - No.

No cross-examination.

WILLIAM/

WILLIAM MacDONALD (56), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: I live in Invernessshire. I am a retired police officer.

You I think knew Thomas Hamilton for a number of years? - Yes, approximately 15 -- round about 1981.

How did you first get to know him? - When he opened his Woodcraft shop in Stirling, and it was about the only one in Stirling at that time. There was no B & Q at that time and suchlike. It was well-known.

Did you have an interest in do-it-yourself? - Yes.

And were you a customer of the shop? - I was indeed.

Over/

11.40 a.m.

Over what period did Mr. Hamilton have that shop? -
On recollection I think he had it for about six years or so. I think it closed down in 1986 if I remember.

Do you know anything of the circumstances which brought it to an end? - Not really, no.

He never said anything to you about that? - No.

While you were dealing with the shop was it, as far as you were concerned, a reasonably good shop? - Yes, it was a very well equipped shop.

Did it appear as though it was a popular place? -
Yes, it was popular.

So it would be for at least a period a successful business? - Yes, I would say so.

Did Hamilton know what he was about in the business of selling that type of material? - Yes, I would say that he was very well up on it, yes.

Now, you I think developed an acquaintanceship as it were beyond simply being a customer with Hamilton. Is that a fair way of putting it? - An acquaintanceship, yes.

Did he contact you for example outwith the shop? -
Not much, no.

Occasionally? - Occasionally I would say, yes.

Was there anything in particular that would cause him for example to phone you or visit you? - No, the only times he visited in that time would be possibly transporting materials and suchlike. I am talking about wooden panelling and suchlike that I had ordered.

That is a delivery? - A delivery, yes.

So did your contact initially not really go beyond the relationship between customer and shop? - Yes, that is correct.

Now, /

Now, he had a boat I think? - Yes, he had a boat on Loch Lomond.

Were you ever on it? - Once, yes.

Could that be described as going beyond the sort of customer/shopkeeper relationship? - Possibly, yes. I think I recollect in this instance he had delivered material one evening and he mentioned the boat to us.

And did you and your wife go on the boat? - Yes, and there was also a couple of friends I believe at that time.

Where was it kept? - It was kept at Balmaha at Loch Lomond.

What kind of boat was it? - It as a cabin cruiser. I think it was round about 27 feet in length and an onboard engine.

What became of it? - I think he sold it. He obviously sold it. I think, yes.

You didn't know anything about it being destroyed at all? - He had one after that that went on fire.

This one was sold and he got another one? - Yes.

And then the later one went on fire? - Yes.

Is that something you just heard about from him? - I just heard about that, yes.

Now, can I take it that the end of the shop meant that you didn't see Mr. Hamilton for a while? - I didn't see him possibly until maybe..... or remain in contact with him until maybe 1990 or so.

And who contacted whom on that occasion?
- It was him that happened to meet my mother who was down here on holiday at the time and he gave her a lift home.

And did your mother live near to him? - No, /

No, my mother was down on holiday with me at that time and he obviously recognised her in the town and gave her a lift down the road.

And did you speak to him on that occasion? - Yes, I did.

Was there something concerning him? - No.

Nothing that he told you that was a cause of concern at that time? - Not that particular day but I did meet him one day in the town afterwards.

And was that when he told you about something that was concerning him? - He did mention he was getting a bit of harassment with Region about school letting and suchlike for his boys' clubs and I did mention to him at that particular time that he would be better forgetting his boys' clubs and doing something worthwhile as he was quite a talented person.

In what respect was he talented? - Well, he had a lot of knowledge in relation to building and he had his cameras etc. and he seemed to have quite a lot of knowledge and I thought it was wasted with what he was doing.

When you first met him did he already have an interest in photography? Back in 1980? - No, I can't recollect at that stage.

When were you first aware of the interest in photography? - It would be in 1990.

Would it be right that the first time you met him again was actually around 1989 and one of the things he was concerned about was the involvement of the police in a camp he had been running at Loch Lomond? - I did hear about that.

Did he tell you about it? - He possibly would have told me but he knew.....when I advised him at that time to forget his boys' clubs and suchlike, he never ever spoke about boys' clubs etc. to me again, from that time on. I wasn't interested in them in the first place.

Now, /

Now, after you had come across him again, did he maintain regular contact with you? - Not really because I retired in 1991 and although I still come down to Stirling and I have contacts in Stirling, for the last five years I have been mainly up north. I come down in the winter time, round about November.

So if I had a statement that says "In the following period he would phone my house regularly, on average once every six weeks or so", is that wrong? - No, I never heard from John (sic) Hamilton. I saw him round about Christmas or New Year time in the town. I never heard from him until I met him about a fortnight before this incident.

I will come to that in a moment but back in 1989 and 1990 did he have contact with you on a fairly regular basis? - Not fairly regularly but he would on occasions phone all of a sudden, and then you wouldn't hear from him for quite a while.

I take it you had regular contact with your son during that period? - Yes. Oh, yes.

That is David MacDonald? - David.

Were you aware that Hamilton was keeping in touch with him? - Yes, he was phoning quite often to David. Certainly more so than me.

That's fine. So you met him again in what, February of this year? - It would have been. Yes, it would be February.

And where was it you met him? - I met him outside the Thistle Centre.

And did he seem any different at that stage from what you had known in the past? - Not really, no.

I think you were actually doing something to the house? - Yes, my wife and I were intending to fit a new kitchen.

Is that in the house in Stirling? - Yes.

And did Mr. Hamilton give you some help? - Yes./

Yes. Well, he gave me some advice on doing it and in that particular fortnight prior he was phoning quite a bit and his concern was kitchens and measurements and telling me the best places to buy materials and so on.

So did that go on right up until what, the 11th of March? Up until the 12th of March? - Yes, the 12th.

He still had contact? - Yes, indeed he had.

Did any of his conversations on the phone extend beyond kitchens at all? - No.

Now, on the 12th of March, in the morning, did he phone you at your home? - Yes.

And did he give you advice then about the size of units that you should be ordering for your kitchen? - Yes, I felt it was a little bit odd because he did mention.....he was very concise and I felt very up on kitchens etc. but he did suggest a 1000 unit than a 600 unit to me which would knock the whole context of the kitchen out and I thought that as a bit unusual for him. He is quite a deep thinker.

Did he say anything, though, apart from talking about the kitchen? - No, he was only on very briefly and I had a lot to do apart from the kitchen.

Was there anything in the conversation or in the fortnight or so, perhaps even a bit more than the fortnight, that you had been speaking to him again that would give you any hint that something like what he did was likely to happen? - Oh, none whatsoever. No.

Did he mention guns at all to you between February and March? - No, but he knew I wasn't fond of guns anyway and he would never mention guns to me.

Did you know he had an interest in guns? - Yes, I did.

How did you know that? - Because he mentioned/mentioned it to me early on in our acquaintanceship.

Your son went to a boys' club of his back in the early 1980s? - Yes, he did.

Were you ever concerned about the fact that he was at one of Mr. Hamilton's clubs? - No, I wasn't concerned at that time.

Were you a Central Scotland Police officer? - I was.

Over what period were you with Central Scotland Police? - From 1960 to 1991. 31 years.

During that period were you aware of rumours about Hamilton's behaviour towards boys? - Yes, latterly.

Roughly when did you first learn of this? - I think something developed but I can't honestly say.....would it be in 1991? There was one incident where Strathclyde Police had something at a cinema at Balloch. I heard about that.

So you heard about something in Balloch in 1991? - That would be about then.

Was that the first that you had heard anything adverse like that about him? - Yes, I would say so. Yes, I didn't have contact with him or anything concerning him maybe from 1986 to 1990.

Let's go back to 1980. Between 1980 and 1991 where were you actually serving as a police officer? - I was in the Traffic Department.

Where is that based? - Police Headquarters.

I am trying to establish what the extent of common police knowledge might have been about his general activities. Can you tell me anything you knew prior to 1991? Let's leave that one aside. Anything you had heard even in the form of rumour about Hamilton's behaviour towards children? - No, not really.

No cross-examination.

IAN/

IAN McDIARMID, (33), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you a police photographer with Central Scotland Police? - Yes.

Based at Headquarters in Stirling? - Yes.

How long have you been a police photographer? - Eight years.

Now, I think that you took a large number of photographs in connection with this enquiry? - Yes.

Could you look first of all please at Production PHO E28. Now, are these photographs that you took? - Yes.

Are they of a motor car? - Yes.

Can we have this first one on the imager please? A motor van rather. What is we see there? - It is a Ford motor van.

Registration number? - M394 KBO.

Where did you take the photograph? - That was at Police Headquarters in Stirling.

Can you now look please at photographs PHO E25. Now, are these photographs that you took? - Yes.

At 7 Kent Road? - Yes.

And did you take them again on Wednesday the 13th of March, 1996? - Yes.

We better have this I think on the imager. If we could have the first one please. Is that the outside of the house? - Yes.

If you look at the third one please. Is that the back of the house? - Yes.

Now, I think you also went inside, is that correct? - Yes.

Would you look at 6 now, please. Is that the/

the kitchen as you found it? - Yes.

And 7 I think gives us another view of the kitchen? - Yes.

Would you also look at 8 which I think is also the kitchen? - Yes.

Now, would you look please at 9 and tell us what we see there? - That is a view from the kitchen looking towards the rear bedroom.

If you look now please at No. 13. What is that a view of? - That is a view within that room.

What is on the walls? - It appeared to be targets, shooting targets.

Had they been shot at? - Yes.

Are they clipped in some way and then hung up? - Yes.

Are there any marks of where bullets have penetrated on these targets? - Yes.

Each one, except one, has a red centre? - Yes.

Had these just been drawn on the targets? - I don't know.

They all seem different in size, is that right? - Yes.

Now, can you look now at 15. Where was that taken? - That was in the same room.

And do we see there boxes with ammunition in them? - Yes.

Now, would you go please to No. 18. What do we see in that photograph? - That was a photograph of a cupboard which was within the same room and appeared to be a pile of photographs.

Were there any photographs displayed on the walls of the house at all? - Not that I can recall.

Now, /

Now, would you look please at No. 21. Where is that?
- That was within a cupboard in the hallway.

Now, there is a metal cabinet there? - Yes.

What is that? - I think it was a gun cabinet.

Was it empty when you saw it? - Yes.

If you look now at 22. What is that? - That is a view from the hallway looking towards a room to the front of the house.

It has got wardrobe space in it with clothing hanging,
is that right? - Yes.

And a lot of stuff just lying about? - Yes.

Was there a bed in that room? - Yes, there was.

Have/

12 noon

Have a look at No. 23. I think you will be able to see the edge of the bed and the rest of the state of that room? - Yes.

Could you look now please at 25? Is that the living room? - Yes.

And there is a briefcase open? - Yes.

And paper, some sort of magazine open on the floor. It may be a television or radio magazine. Otherwise, nothing unusual about that room? - No.

If you look at the next picture, 26, you will see there is in fact a television opposite the chair? - Yes.

No. 28, do you see a close-up of the contents of the case? - Yes.

And there is a letter there? - Yes.

Can you tell me who it is to? - It was addressed to The Queen.

Have a look at No. 30. What is that? - That is a view of a telephone directory.

Where was that? - On a table in front of the television.

If we go to 31 do we have a close-up of it? - Yes.

The significance of the close up? - It had the address of Dunblane Primary School.

The phone number and the address? - Yes.

You took a number of other photographs but I don't think I need ask you about these. Thank you very much, Mr. McDiarmid.

No cross-examination.

ANDREW/

ANDREW LAWLESS (36), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you a Detective Sergeant with Central Scotland Police? - Yes.

Are you based at Stirling? - Yes.

How many years' police service? - 14 years' police service.

I think part of your duties in connection with the Inquiry was to search at 7 Kent Road? - Yes, that is correct.

I think you did that on the afternoon of 13th March? - Yes, I did.

I think from the house you took a number of items and some of your colleagues took a number of items? - Yes, that is correct.

Now we have seen from the photographs that there was in the house ammunition? - That is correct.

Can you tell me how much ammunition was in the house? - Yes, I can.

What was there? - The ammunition was contained within four metal strong boxes and the ammunition in total was over a thousand rounds of ammunition.

Was that 280 rounds of .357? - That is correct.

715 rounds of 9mm? - That is correct.

And 11 rounds of .38 Special? - That is correct.

I think you also recovered in the course of your investigations the medical records of Mr. Hamilton from Dr. Hanley? - My colleague Detective Constable Simpson recovered the medical records.

You have seen them? - Yes.

Could you look please at DI/H/3? The number/number is also DANT/13. Are these the medical records that you got from Dr. Hanley? - Yes, they are.

Can you confirm that they show the attendances at the doctor between 1959 and about 1970 which all dealt with minor complaints and a number of them in particular for minor skin complaints? - Yes, that is correct.

And then there is another couple of these in the 70s, 1972 and 1973, December 1972 and February 1973, again minor skin complaints? - Yes.

And then '74, some treatment for indigestion? - Yes.

And from then until 1993 there is no sign of contact with doctors or hospitals at all? - Yes, that is correct.

I think that on the 16th March, 1993 there is an attendance by Mr. Hamilton recorded at the Accident and Emergency Department of Stirling Royal Infirmary? - Yes.

And that was an X-ray for some strained ankle? - Yes, that is correct.

All he got was a support bandage? - Yes.

Can you confirm that that is the only evidence there is of attendances on any doctor after 1974? - Yes, I can.

And Dr. Hanley has confirmed that that is his knowledge as well? - That is correct.

If I can go back with you particularly to the search of the house. Can you confirm that you also removed a number of certificates from the house? - Yes, I did.

Did these include birth and adoption certificates and so on? - Yes.

I think you also removed certificates that related to education? - Yes, I did.

Could/

Could you look please at DANT/5 which is also D3/H/I? Did you remove that? - Yes.

Is that a school certificate of Thomas Hamilton from Riverside Secondary School? - Yes.

Does that relate to an intensive four-year course on technical subjects? - Yes.

And does it talk about two City and Guilds courses? - Yes.

One for mechanical engineering and craft practice and secondly carpentry and joinery? - Yes.

I think he successfully, apparently successfully completed the first year of each of these? - Yes, he has.

Would you look please at DANT/7 which is also D4/H/I. What is that? - That is results from the Royal Society of Arts at Stirling Riverside Secondary School issued to Thomas Hamilton then staying at 24 Queen Street, Stirling, the subject being English Language.

What is the date on that -- no date? - There is no date.

But I think you have got a series on that for 1968? - Yes.

MR. BONOMOY: That should be D5/H/1, sir.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: If I can go back to the one I intended to ask you about which is DANT/6 which should be D4/H/I. What is that document? - That is a pupil's school record.

Is that the record card and attendances at Riverside School? - Yes, it is.

Did Mr. Hamilton attain any qualifications or pass any certificates that are recorded in that? - There is a number of school report cards contained within that book.

And these are just reports of his progress through the school? - Yes, from the first year/year through to fourth year in that school.

Now, could you look please at DANT/8 (also D6/H/I)? Is that a Scottish Certificate of Education Certificate for Ordinary Grade passes in 1968? - Yes.

Does it show Thomas Hamilton passing Ordinary Grade Arithmetic, Technical Practice, Woodwork and Metalwork? - Yes, it does.

Lastly, look at DANT/9 which is D7/H/I. Is that a School Leaving Certificate? - Yes, it is.

Is that Stirling County Council Riverside Secondary School? - Yes.

And does that show that Mr. Hamilton had passes in English, Art? - Yes.

And merit passes in History, Geography, Arithmetic, Mathematics, Science and Technical subjects? - It does.

No cross-examination.

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, the next piece of evidence will be given by reading a police statement in this instance of a witness who is Roger Peter Charles Allston. Mr. Allston for various domestic reasons has declined to attend the Inquiry, but if you, sir, thought it necessary steps could be taken obviously to arrange for his attendance. But having considered the terms of the statement to the police, I have come to the view the reading of that statement would be sufficient for the purposes of the Inquiry. The witness number is S662.

LORD CULLEN: I am content you do it in that way.

MR. BONOMOY: In that event I would invite Mr. Lake again to read the terms of this statement.

MR. LAKE: This is the statement of Roger Peter Charles Allston, living in Gravesend in Kent. I am 48 years of age, married and reside with my wife, daughter (13) and son (11). I am a freelance/freelance photographer at present and have been a photographer for over 30 years. As such I do buy and sell equipment fairly frequently, generally through a magazine called Amateur Photographer.

Approximately two and a half years ago, mid-August, 1994, I contacted a man in Stirling over the phone, by the name of Tom Hamilton who was selling an exposure meter which I was looking for. This advertisement was in Amateur Photographer. I chatted to Tom for a while, when I got hold of him, about cameras, etc. He appeared to me to be very knowledgeable about cameras and photography and seemed as though he could get his hands on whatever equipment I wanted. This seems slightly strange for an amateur, however, I put it down to enthusiasm. I did not buy the equipment at this time and informed him I would get back to him.

I shopped round and found that Tom was offering the best price, so I contacted him again with a view to buying the item. On speaking to Tom we again chatted for a while during which he informed me that he was having problems with the lighting in some of his photographs. I told him to send some of the photographs down to me and I would point out and rectify the problems. I also bought the exposure meter he was selling.

On receipt of his photographs I noticed that they were all portraits of young boys or groups of boys. They were, however, perfectly normal and decent. I realised his problem and phoned him up. I informed Tom of the mistake and told him what equipment he needed to obtain to rectify this.

We again chatted for a while during which he informed me that he was going to start up his own photographic business by hiring local halls and sending out flyers. I wished him good luck and told him if there was anything I could do then he should get in touch with me.

We formed a friendship over the phone and would speak to each other frequently, passing on tips and general chat. I saw his phone number advertising equipment for sale in the Amateur Photographer in almost every issue. It was clear that Tom was trading, however, he insisted he was merely enthusiastic.

Tom/

Tom told me that he was the Chairman of Scottish Boys Clubs and he did seem to have a great liking for children and it was my impression that it was a healthy liking and not sexual. He told me that he put his boys through fitness schemes as a "Healthy Body - Healthy Mind". Tom hated fat children and blamed the parents for allowing them to eat junk food.

I can recall Tom telling me that he was keen on guns and was a member of a shooting club. He told me once that he thought the Clint Eastwood films were totally unrealistic because Eastwood continues talking throughout using his Magnum. Tom said that his Magnum was so loud that if he didn't wear ear muffs then he would be temporarily deaf.

Tom was usually a very jovial man and very talkative.

Some time towards the beginning of this year (1966) Tom told me that Trading Standards had been to his house accusing him of being a trader. Tom said that he had managed to fob them off but they told him he could no longer advertise in the Amateur Photographer. Tom was very upset and depressed at that as this was his sole form of income. He told me his photograph business was down the tubes. However, he was going to fight the ban from Amateur Photographer.

I received less and less phone calls from Tom and when I did he was very subdued and depressed. I did not know of the rumours going around about him.

Towards the end of February 1996 Tom told me he was shooting more and more as this took his mind off his problems. The last time I spoke to Tom was Wednesday, 6th March, 1996. He hardly spoke. He told me he had lost his fight with Trading Standards and Amateur Photographer. The last thing Tom said to me was "I'm going back to my guns" and he then rung off.

I never spoke to Tom again although I was concerned with what he had said. I never met Tom in the flesh, it was purely a telephone friendship.

DAVID NOLAN (37), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I am a Detective Sergeant with Central Scotland Police and I have 18 years' service.

And you are actually based in Falkirk? - That is correct, yes.

Now, you had a number of duties in connection with this Inquiry, but one of them was to be part of the team of officers investigating the firearms history, and indeed the licensing history of Thomas Hamilton? - That is correct, yes.

Now, we are going to hear evidence later in great detail about that. I want to ask you a few questions to try to set the initial scene in this. I think that you and your team investigated the history of the holding, purchase and sale of firearms by Hamilton? - That is correct, yes.

And also the holding and purchase of ammunition by Hamilton? - That is correct.

And to try to make the history clear, one of the things you did was draw up a number of charts? - That is correct.

I am simply going to ask you to look at a couple of these and talk us through each one. First of all, would you look at the chart which is C2/L1? Now, can you confirm first of all that this is a chart drawn up by your team relating to the purchase and holding and sale of firearms? - That is correct.

And could we have that then on the imager, because that is probably the best way for all of us to follow it? Now, can we see -- if we get the very top, please, as well -- it is necessary to go to the top of it. Do we see the years are set out from 1977 to 1996? - I will need to get the original document, the writing is so small.

Well, if you just hold on we will give you an extra copy. That might be the best way. Now, do we see that the years 1977 right up to 1996 are/are set out across the top of the document? - That is correct.

And that down the left-hand side is the name of each of the weapons, that so far as you have been able to tell, Mr. Hamilton owned at some stage? - That is correct.

I think you have then blacked in for the period of his ownership of each weapon the squares across the page opposite the name of that weapon? - That is correct, yes.

And just to demonstrate how this simply illustrates the position, do these show that as far as you can tell the first known purchase of a weapon was of a Vostock .22 in 1977? - Yes, 20th February 1977.

By which time Mr. Hamilton had a firearm certificate? - Yes.

Is that a handgun or a rifle? - A handgun.

And we can see that about the end of 1977 he disposed of that weapon? - On the 17th March 1977 he disposed of it.

Sorry, the 17th March. And if you look again at the next three weapons, which are a Smith and Wesson, an Anschutz .22 rifle, a Browning .22 pistol, and a Smith and Wesson .357 -- I presume the two Smith and Wessons are revolvers? - Yes.

Sorry, that was four -- and then the fifth one is a Sako rifle. We can see the periods during which he had owned each of these? - Yes.

If we take the first three, the Smith and Wesson, the Anschutz and the Browning, they were all acquired in 1977 or 1978; is that right? - That is correct.

And were they all disposed of around the same time? - Disposed of in 1984.

And all roughly at the same time, or -- two of them at the same time? - Two of them at the same time, October 27th and one on the 3rd June.

And/

And the two that were disposed of on October 27th 1984 were a Smith and Wesson revolver and a Browning pistol? -

That is correct.

And indeed also in 1984 he appears to have disposed of a Sako rifle and another Browning pistol? - That is correct.

So overall throughout 1984 he had disposed of five weapons? - That is correct.

Now, if you go to the very end of the right-hand side of the chart, we can see the weapons he actually held, so far as your investigation can tell, as at the 13th March 1996? - That is correct.

And does the chart show that these were the four weapons that we have already heard about in evidence? - Yes.

Now, two of these he had held or owned for a considerable length of time? - That is right.

The Smith and Wesson .357 weapon had been owned since when? - The 4th December 1979.

That was -- sorry, can you give me that date again? - 4th December 1979 for the Smith and Wesson.

And he still had that one in 1996? - That is right.

Therefore this is a Browning which he had owned for a number of years as well? - Yes, from 7th November 1984.

And then we can see that he had, fairly shortly before March 1996, acquired the other two weapons? - That is correct.

When did he acquire the other Browning? - On the 11th September 1985.

And when did he acquire the other Smith and Wesson? - 23rd January 1996.

Now, do you know yourself which of the four/four weapons was used to do all the shootings in the school? - I know it was one of the Brownings.

Do you know which one it was? - I would need to refer to other charts.

We will check that in a second. Now, I think the chart beyond that demonstrates the ownership and sale of a number of other weapons during that period? - That is correct.

Thank you very much. Now, you can part with that chart for the moment and can I ask you now to look at the chart C3/L, and it extends over four pages. Now, is that a chart recording purchases of ammunition? - It is, yes.

Where did you get the information about the purchases of ammunition? - From the various firearms certificates.

So on Hamilton's certificate there would be a record of the purchase of ammunition? - That is correct.

Now, that has to be recorded only in certain circumstances; isn't that right? - I think it has to be recorded on purchases of ammunition.

Well, a commercial purchase has to be recorded; is that correct? - That is correct, yes.

What about the acquisition of ammunition at the Club for the purpose of shooting at the Club? - If he shoots it at the Club it does not need to go on the certificate.

It doesn't need to go on the certificate? - No.

What about the reconstitution of ammunition by a person who has the equipment at home, to use the discharged casing of other rounds and to insert the material, including the bullet, that makes up the round? Does he have to record that on the certificate? - I think so, from my knowledge, yes.

And/

And I take it then that the only records which were on Mr. Hamilton's certificate were those of commercial purchases? - That is correct, yes.

And that you have recorded here the whole sequence of purchases recorded on his certificates between 20th February 1977 and -- is it 23rd February? - 27th February.

27th February 1996? - Yes.

Now, is there a pattern or a particular feature that you do observe about the purchases - He was shooting quite a lot in 1977. It tapered off in 1978. There was a lot of activity in 1979; very little in 1980; only one in 1981; '82 it picked up; '83 there were three purchases; '84 there was quite a lot of activity. There were seven purchases in '85 -- sorry, there is a whole page in '85, so there was a lot of activity in '85 and '86. '87 there are five, and between '87 and 1995 there was no ammunition purchased at all.

The dates there may be of some significance. That is between the 22nd October 1987 and the 22nd September 1995? - That is correct.

There is no record of any commercial purchase of ammunition? - That is correct.

Then between the 22nd September 1995 and the 27th February 1996 what purchases were made, and can you give me these individually, please? - On the 22nd September 1995 he purchased 50 rounds of .357 ammunition. 29th September 1995, 300 rounds of 9 millimetre ammunition. 30th December 1995 700 rounds of 9 millimetre, and 25th January 1996, I think it is 450 rounds of .357. The 12th February it was 200 rounds of 9 millimetre. 16th February, 100 rounds of 9 millimetre, and 27th February 100 rounds of 9 millimetre.

Sorry is 16th February, the second-last one -- I appreciate it is not very clear -- but is that not 400? - I think you are right, yes, that is 400 -- it is a bad copy.

Now, that was 400 rounds of 9 millimetre; is that right? - That is correct.

Followed/

Followed by another 100 rounds of 9 millimetre on the 27th February? - That is correct.

Or it might be the 23rd, is it not? - It looks like 27th on this copy.

All right, the 27th. And the 2nd of February (sic) as well was also 9 millimetre; is that right? - That is correct.

So there is 700 rounds of 9 millimetre bought in February, and 1,000 rounds had been bought between September and December? - That is correct.

And in addition 500 rounds of .357 were bought between September and January? - That is right.

Now, could I ask you just to go back now to the other chart which you looked at showing the guns? Now, if I tell you that the gun that Hamilton shot himself with was the Smith and Wesson, 48K8754, can you confirm to me that that is the one he owned from 1979 right through until his death? - That is correct.

If I tell you that the Browning which was used for the shooting within the gymnasium and outside was 245PZ42837, can you confirm to me that that was the one which was purchased on the 11th September 1995, more or less immediately before he started purchasing ammunition again? - Yes.

No cross-examination.

GARY HYDE (27), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: I think you manage a shop in York called York Guns? - That is right.

And you are authorised firearms dealers with North Yorkshire Police? - That is correct.

I think around 9th September 1995 you got/got a phone call from a man called Thomas Hamilton? - That is correct, yes, we did.

Was that the first time you had encountered him? - Well, to the best of my knowledge, yes.

What was the purpose of the phone call? - The gentlemen in question was inquiring about 9 millimetre pistols, and what we had in stock.

And did you have something in which he was interested? - Yes, we had.

What was it? - It was a 9 millimetre Browning high-powered competition model.

Was that something he had expressed an interest in, a particular type of Browning, or was he just asking generally? - He was asking generally. We do carry quite a good selection of pistols. It was something within his price range and something we -- not so much recommended -- but it was something within his price range.

12.40 p.m.

Did you pick that out as the first one you told him about or did you give him a selection and he picked it out? - It would be quite a while ago. I can't remember at the time. We would probably have gone for quite a few.

This is on the telephone? - That is correct.

As a result of his interest, what did you do? - We then decided to sell Mr. Hamilton the weapon. We reserved it for him and subsequently he sent down his Firearms Certificate and a cheque with a letter for the goods.

So he had to send you what documents? - He sent us his Firearms Certificate, his gun licence.

Is it the original or does he send you a copy? - The original only. We would never accept a copy.

How much did he pay for the gun? - I haven't got my original statement or invoice with me.

All right, if you look please at Production FAE83. Is that the invoice? - That is the original invoice torn out of our invoice book when we gave a statement to the police.

And does it record the number of the gun? - Yes, it does.

What is the number? - 245PZ42837.

If you could just put that on the imager briefly so that everyone can see. I don't think that document has been circulated.

So that is the invoice, is it? - That is a copy of the original invoice, yes.

Is that a page out of a book you were keeping? - It is a page out of our invoice book. There are one or two crossings-out.

What was the price? - £304.

How/

How was it paid? - It was paid by cheque.

Did you clear the cheque before you sent him the gun? - No, we never clear cheques on Firearms Certificates.

Was it okay? - The cheque was okay.

Did you hear any more about the gun? - Yes, we did. The gun was sent by Datapost and Mr. Hamilton phoned up and said he wasn't happy with the weapon in question and we then talked about it and he said that the weapon was not quite what he had in mind and it wasn't in the actual condition which was described on the phone. He then sent it back down to us and then I called him or he called myself, I can't remember with it being a while ago, and said the weapon wasn't in as clean a condition as he expected and I then asked him if he would like it if we tidied it up a little bit and put in a few extra bits and pieces and he said okay and we would reduce the price, give him a part refund and send the gun back to him.

How much was the refund? - It was about £50. Hence the crossings-out on the invoice. That is why it looks a little bit messy.

It will help us I think to understand how these things work better if you could tell us what record you then had to make of this transaction? - On the initial sale?

Yes? - Well, the Firearms Certificate is received usually by Recorded Delivery or Registered Post. We then completed the invoice and put the weapon out in our Firearms Register, completed the table on the reverse of the licence, checking he had authority to purchase the particular weapon in question and the gun is then sent by Datapost straight up to Scotland.

So his certificate will tell you whether he can purchase this weapon? - It will indeed, yes.

And you would record the purchase on the certificate?
- We would enter it on the back and I would sign it as I did so. It would be entered in/in our register as a sale going out of the stock.

So does that mean that his certificate when you get it records somewhere on it the guns he actually possesses at that time? - The licence itself when it arrives tells me what he already has in his possession.

As well as what he is authorised to hold?

- That is correct, yes.

And as long as there is enough space left as it were between the two you can sell that gun? - As long as he has not already purchased a 9 mm we have authority to sell him the weapon.

He could of course have permission for more than one 9 mm? - He could possibly, yes.

And indeed in this case he did? - Not to my recollection. I can't remember.

It is unfair to ask you I think but you can take it from me that he did. Is that unusual? - Not particularly, no. Various different weapons for different types of shooting.

No cross-examination.

ROBERT LINDSAY SPEIRS, (39), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you the manager of the sports department of Crockets the Ironmongers in Glasgow?
- Yes.

I think Crockets are also dealers in firearms? - Yes.

And authorised to be dealers by the police, is it? - Strathclyde Police, yes.

How long have you actually worked as the manager of the sports department? - Eight and a half years.

And throughout that period have you been responsible in the shop for the sale of firearms and ammunition? - Yes.

During/

During that period, has it been the practice of the shop to stock a selection of firearms? - Yes, sporting rifles and shotguns. We used to stock handguns up until six years ago and then we ceased trading in handguns.

Did you cease trading at all in them? - Just in handguns. We still do sporting rifles and shotguns.

If I want a particular handgun could you get it for me, albeit you didn't have it in stock? -We could certainly try and order it for you.

And do you do that or did you give that up too? - Very, very seldom do we sell any over the last six years.

Is there any particular reason why the business was developed that way? - We had found that a lot of companies down south were able to sell handguns a lot cheaper than what we could so we decided.....also the shop had a break-in and a number of handguns were stolen.

So it has not been a downturn in interest that has created the change in practice in your business? It has been a change in the commercial situation and the risk of having stock there at all? - Yes.

Now, were you familiar with a customer of yours called Thomas Hamilton? - Not really familiar.

Did you know who he was? - Well, by coming into the shop to buy ammunition, yes.

Is it right to say that the company you work for has actually done business with Mr. Hamilton since about 1979? - It was news to me. The police told me that we had sold him firearms but that was news to me because that was prior to myself starting with Crockets.

But you do now know the position is the company dealt with him back to 1979? - Yes.

And that was always on a proper basis with the Firearms Certificate recording the transaction and/and your Register recording the transaction? - Yes.

Now, I wonder if you would look please at a Production which is FA69. What is that document? - It is a document from Central Scotland Police giving a warning that failure to renew timeously may result in possible prosecution. It is about renewing your Firearms or Shotgun Certificate.

And that is all it says, is it? It is obviously the wrong form then. Is that Production No. FA69? Can I see it for a moment please? I am sorry, but I don't have the Production to hand. What I intended to give you was a Firearms Certificate.

LORD CULLEN: Is it FA41 by any chance?

MR. BONOMOY: I am completely beaten at the moment, sir. I am sorry. If I see it I might be able to..... it is actually a later one I am looking for, sir, but I think I can make some progress without it at the moment.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: I was going to show you a certificate that you made certain entries in from September of 1995. Can you confirm to me that on the 29th of September, 1995 that you did sell Mr. Hamilton 300 rounds of 9 mm ammunition or can you not remember that? - I think I did, yes.

Sorry? - I believe so.

Do you remember Mr. Hamilton coming into the shop?
- Nothing out of the ordinary, no.

You don't remember him coming in and asking what 9 mm ammunition you stock? - I think actually he phoned first. I am sure he phoned and asked first what ammunition we stocked.

Do you remember him asking for a particular type of ammunition? - That was at a later date. I think that was this year he had asked if we could order him ammunition.

You don't remember him in September, 1995 asking about what is called Geco ammunition? - We carry/carry that in stock, 9 mm Geco. We normally carry in stock 9 mm Geco and 9 mm Winchester.

You don't remember telling him in September that was the position? - I think I told him that over the phone.

Now, does the type of ammunition make any difference to the performance of the weapon? - No, we normally just keep what is called full metal jacket in stock because, according to all the written literature, it seems to cycle better.

Full metal jacket? - Yes.

But does the particular make, whether it is Winchester or Geco, does that make any difference? - It is two bullet weights.

The Geco is a 123 grain bullet and the Winchester is 115 so some pistols will shoot more accurately with a heavier bullet whereas some shoot more accurately with the lighter bullet.

BY LORD CULLEN: What do you mean by cycling? What is cycling? - You know the rounds are in the magazine and some guns, if they have been altered for competition use, the slide as it goes backwards and forwards picks up the rounds from the magazine and feeds it into the chamber and each time you pull the trigger the empty case gets drawn back and thrown out and it goes forward and picks up another round. Well, some guns need quite a bit of recoil. It is gases that cause the action to work forwards and backwards and if there is not enough gas produced then sometimes you will get a mis-feed or a malfunction.

Recoil is used to feed another round into the chamber, is that right? - Yes.

MR. BONOMOY: I think, sir, that it might be helpful if you were prepared to declare an early lunch.

LORD CULLEN: Yes, I think that would be helpful.

MR. BONOMOY: And the Productions can be sorted out and then the evidence will proceed more quickly in the afternoon.

LORD CULLEN: I think that is right. We will rise now and resume at 10 to 2.

After/

1.55 p.m.

After an adjournment for lunch.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMY: Mr. Speirs, I hope that we now have the right Production. It is D/H/E29.

MR. BONOMY: Sir, in the folder it should be D10IL.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMY: Now, do you recognise that as the firearms certificate you were referring to? - Yes.

And it has on it a table which is Table 2 recording purchases of ammunition? - Yes.

And it records a purchase on the 29th September 1995 at your shop? - Yes.

Now, that was a purchase of 300 rounds of 9mm Geco? - Yes.

Can you tell from that entry the type of ammunition it was -- I know the make is Geco, but can you tell what the nature of the rounds were? - It is 123 grain.

Give us that slowly? - It is 123 grain full metal jacket, and Geco is the manufacturer.

And all these rounds would be the same? - Yes.

Now, that is a September transaction. You think that that was organised on the telephone? - I am pretty sure that he phoned up and asked what types of ammunition we had, you know, what types we stocked, and I told him that we kept Winchester and we kept Geco, and I think he said, you know, he had never tried the Geco before, so he may possibly come through and purchase some, to try them.

And did he come into the shop? - He came in, according to this, on the 29th of the ninth 1995.

Do you remember him coming in? - Not really/really.

Now, the next transaction relates to your shop as well; is that correct? - Yes.

And what was that transaction for? - That was for 9mm.

Now, that is 9mm ammunition -- how many? - I think it is 700 rounds.

Do you remember that transaction? - I think that was the Winchester stuff, because he had said that the Geco, you know, wasn't functioning properly, or he didn't like it, it wasn't giving good groups.

That would be good results on a target, good groups? - Yes.

And he wanted to purchase a different type? - Yes, to try them.

Now, is that 30th December 1995? - Yes.

So 700 rounds of Winchester 9mm? - Yes.

Now, is that also full jacket? - That is full metal jacket, yes.

And can you tell me anything also about the make-up of that ammunition? - Well, Winchester Suffolk is a lighter bullet. It is 115 grains as opposed to the 123 for the Geco.

Apart from purchasing that ammunition, did Mr. Hamilton ask you to order other ammunition? - He asked about 357 ammunition, which we could get it in -- you know, would we get it in for him? And I told him at the time that, you know, we could make orders for customers, but with ammunition we would only get it in if we were getting an order up for the shop, otherwise he would need to pay the carriage costs.

And what was his reaction? - He said that would be fine, that he had spoken to our suppliers, Winchester UK, they had 300 rounds, I think/think it was, of an ammunition that he was looking for.

Was it perhaps 450 that they had? - I thought it was 300, but it would be the 450 one.

Now, could these rounds be constituted differently so that they have a soft point? - The 357 for a Magnum?

Yes? - Those were soft point, yes. It was ones that we didn't stock. They were a lighter bullet. We stocked the 158 grain, you know, .357 Magnum loaded with a 158 grain bullet.

And is that also soft point? - Yes. He wanted the lighter weight, 125 grain.

And did you get them? - Well, we had an order coming up from Winchester, so I phoned them and asked them if they could put these in along with it.

And did you contact Winchester and get them up? - Yes.

And were they sold, according to this certificate, as well? - Yes.

And what does the certificate say about this? - 25th of the first 1996, Crocketts, Glasgow, 450 .357 Magnum, RFB 13, Strathclyde, signed by Jane McMahon.

And is she one of the staff? - Yes.

Now, do you remember Mr. Hamilton coming in with a catalogue of Federal ammunition? - Yes.

And what did he want to know on this occasion? - It was 9mm ammunition he was enquiring about that comes from Edgar Brothers. He said he had tried the Geco and he had tried the Winchester and he was looking to try something else, because he was looking for the best possible cartridge.

Now, did he place an order? - Yes. He asked us to order 100 rounds of the 9mm Federal.

And did you get them? - We got them up with/with an order, yes.

And when did you supply them to Mr. Hamilton? -
The 27th of the second 1996.

I take it all of these transactions were paid for by Mr.
Hamilton? - Yes.

How did he pay? - On the two occasions that I served him it was with credit card. The last two I don't know -- I think the last one was cash.

Was Mr. Hamilton, as far as you were concerned, simply an ordinary customer, or was there anything odd or peculiar about this dealings with you? - I only really spoke to him a couple of times on the phone, and then for the length of time it took to fill out his certificate. I couldn't say -- there was nothing out of the ordinary.

No cross-examination.

GEORGE HARRY STADEN (49) ,Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: I am a Director of London Armoury Ltd., from London.

And your company retails firearms and other sporting accessories? - That is right.

And are registered firearms dealers? - Yes.

I think that you have checked back through your records, as requested, to see what transactions there were with Thomas Hamilton; is that right? - That is correct.

And can you confirm that on the 20th December 1995
Mr. Hamilton was in touch with your company? - That is right.

By telephone? - By telephone.

And what was his interest at that stage? - He purchased a set of Packmire grips for a Browning pistol.

How/

How did he pay for them? - By credit card.

What did they cost? - £37.50 in total.

Now, on the 29th December, nine days later, did he contact you again? - He did.

What was he after this time? - Another set of Packmire grips and two Shocktech recoil baffles.

BY LORD CULLEN: What are they? - They help to reduce the recoil of a pistol.

Are they fitted to the gun? - They are an additional thing that is supposed to be better than the original that comes with the gun when it is new.

They replace something on the gun? -
Yes.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:
They are inserted somewhere into the gun, are they? - Underneath the barrel.

And they reduce the amount of recoil? - They are reputed to.

That is what they are supposed to do? - Yes.

Do they? - Probably not -- and Mr. Hamilton didn't think so, because he returned them.

First of all, going back to the first item, the grips, were they for a Browning pistol? - They were.

And were they the exact same grips as the last time?
- They were.

The same price? - Yes.

The Shocktech baffle -- was that for a Browning? -
Yes.

Both of them? - Both of them.

I/

I take it you can't put two on one gun? - No.

How did he pay this time? - Credit card.

Total price on this transaction? - I haven't the total. It is £31 for the Packmires, £26.75 each the Shocktechs, £6.50 postage.

I think on the 16th January 1996 Mr. Hamilton phoned you again, is that right? - Not according to my records, no.

You didn't get a call asking about the cost of postage for a Smith and Wesson revolver? - Well, I did, but I don't have the date of that.

Was it some time in January? - Yes, probably.

And was he looking for a price for the weapon as well as the postage? - Yes.

Did you give him a price? - I did.

What was the price? - I believe it was £396 plus £10 postage.

Later in January was he in touch with you again? - Well, we received a letter from Mr. Hamilton enclosed with the two Shocktechs which he returned and requested a refund of £53.50.

And I think you gave him a refund; is that right? - That is right.

I am moving past that now, to I think an interest that was expressed in holsters? - That is right, on the 24th January he wanted two holsters, which I believe were for Smith and Wesson revolvers, but I can't confirm that.

Did you supply holsters? - I did.

Two of them? - Two of them at £27.95 each, plus £6 postage.

Again, paid how? - By credit card.

Now/

Now, do you advertise that you can supply through the post, in certain magazines? - I do.

Which magazines do you advertise in? - Target Gun and Hand Gun Review.

Why do you select these two magazines? - Because they give me the best return.

And are they the ones that are most widely read in the community of people who use guns for sport? - I believe so, yes.

And can I take it that you have not sold any ammunition to Hamilton? - No, sir.

And that while he enquired about a Smith and Wesson revolver, you didn't actually supply one to him? - That is correct.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: If I could just ask you one or two questions about the periodicals to which you have referred, the Gun Review and Target Gun -- do these come out weekly or monthly? - Monthly.

And are they available in an ordinary newsagent's? - Yes, W.H. Smith carry them.

They carry advertisements by dealers in firearms? - That is correct.

And do they also carry advertisements by individuals wishing to dispose of firearms? - A few.

So it would be possible to locate new weapons or second-hand weapons from these? - That is right.

The other question I wanted to ask you was the periodical entitled "Target Gun" -- is that more specifically directed towards handgun users? - Yes.

So that is dealing with people who have handguns for target shooting competitions and that sort of thing? - It is a little more specialised than the Gun Review, in handguns.

"Gun/

2.10 p.m.

"Gun Review" then covers the whole spectrum of shooting as a sport, does it? - More than "Target Gun" does, yes.

No re-examination.

JANET NEIL (60), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I think you are the Manageress of D. Crockart & Sons in King Street, Stirling? - Yes.

How long have you been employed by that company?
- 42 years.

I take it you started more or less just after leaving school? - When I was 17.

What is the general nature of the business? - Clothing, fishing and shooting. It is a country sports shop. Retail.

I think the shop is registered to sell firearms and ammunition by Central Scotland Police? - Yes.

Did you have a previous family connection with the business? - Yes, my father was the manager for 50 years.

I think since 1984 the shop or business has been owned by Mr. Bell? - Yes.

But you are the person who had and has principal direct dealings with firearms transactions? - Yes.

Does the shop stock handguns? - No.

Has it ever stocked handguns? - No.

Does the shop sell handguns by request?
- By request, yes.

And/

And do you get many orders for handguns? - No.

Over the years have you had many and it has dropped off or has it been a steady flow? - No, approximately six in 42 years.

What about handgun ammunition? Do you stock that? - Very, very little. Maybe one box of just two sizes.

Prior to March 1996 did you have many customers for handgun ammunition? - Very few.

How many in fact? - I don't know. Maybe two or three. Not much more.

And one of these was Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

How long had you known Thomas Hamilton? - From a very early age. I would think maybe 16 or 17, maybe a wee bit younger.

How did you first come to come across him? - I think he bought an airgun. His parents bought an airgun when he was very young. Well, not very young. A teenager.

We have heard a statement from his grandfather who really was known as his father that he had never bought him any form of weapon. How clear is your recollection of that? - I really can't remember. It is a long time ago.

I appreciate that. That is why I ask. Are you able to say that he actually had a gun bought at that time? - I am quite sure he an airgun. Quite sure.

And that it came from your shop? - Yes.

Have you any idea when he first bought handgun ammunition from you? - No. Not without looking at the records.

Well, I wonder if you could now look please at Production FA3 which in the volumes should be D24 L. Now, is that a firearms certificate in the/the name of Thomas Hamilton issued in February 1977? - Yes.

And on that are there recorded transactions in ammunition? - .22 only. Target pistol ammunition. It just says 1,000 .22.

Well, let's take this in stages. Do you have Table 2, ammunition? - Yes.

And is that table complete in fact? Is it filled up by ammunition transactions? - Yes.

And in there does your company's name appear a number of times? - Yes.

And are all the transactions relating to .22 ammunition? - Yes.

Now, does that help us to determine when Mr. Hamilton first dealt with you in the purchase of ammunition? - Yes.

When was that? - The 14th March 1977.

Can you tell that by the signature on the right-hand side? - Yes.

Because the company name is not there but is Currie the name of one of the staff? - It is one of the assistants, yes.

So from the 24th (sic) of March 1977 you had dealings in the purchase of ammunition? - Yes.

Did you ever sell firearms to Mr. Hamilton? - Yes.

When was that? - Do you mean a rifle or a handgun?

A gun or a rifle? - I have sold him a rifle and two handguns.

Do you remember what the handguns were? - One was a 9 millimetre Beretta and the rifle was a .223... I don't know the make. Sako I think it was.

Have you also bought firearms from Mr. Hamilton?/

Hamilton? - Yes, we bought a .223. The three items he did buy from us were special order for him.

Yes, but did he ever sell any to you? - Yes.

Do you remember what he sold to you? - I think it is in my notes if I can read it.

Well, it might help if I give you another Production. Can you look at FA18 which is D35 L. Now, that is another firearms certificate? - Yes.

And do you have there a record of any transactions with a gun? - Yes, I bought from him a .27 Sako bolt action rifle and a .22 Browning rifle.

When did you purchase these from him? - 26/10/84.

Both of them on the same date? - Yes.

And does that certificate also show that you sold him a .223 Browning rifle? - Yes.

When was that? - 7/12/84.

Now, I think thereafter you regularly sold ammunition to him, is that right? - Yes, for about another year or two years.

And if you look please at what I think is DHE29. This is another continuation of the firearms certificate, is that right? - Yes.

And there are three sales of ammunition on it in respect of your company? - Yes.

When was the last one? - 16/2/96.

Sorry, I will rephrase that question. When was the last one in 1987? Is it not on that form? - No.

Can you help me with the front of that again please? Can you help me with the front of that again please? Can you give me the date on the front of the certificate? - 14/2/95.

Well, /

Well, just keep that one with you just now please and can you have in front of you FA27 which is D50 L. Does that record ammunition transactions up to 1987? - 1986.

What is the last one in 1986? - 2/10/86.

Do you remember that there were transactions in 1987 terminating on the 22nd October 1987 and that there was then a gap until 1995? - Yes, we never seen him for all that time. He was never in the shop.

So from the 22nd October 1987 until 1995 you didn't see him? - No.

Now, if you go back to the one that you had a moment ago which was DHE29. Are there three ammunition transactions on that form? - Yes.

What is the date of these? - 22/9/95, 12/2/96 and 16/2/96.

Are these three occasions on which you sold ammunition to Mr. Hamilton? - Yes.

What did you sell on each of these occasions? - In September I sold him .357 Norma.

How many? - 50. On the 12th February I sold him 200 9 millimetre Luger and on the 16th February we sold him 400 9 millimetre Luger.

Now, you must have a fair experience of dealing with customers like Mr. Hamilton who want to buy ammunition on a regular basis, do you? - Yes.

When you see their certificates, these people who do target shooting, when you see their certificates do they have a maximum amount of ammunition they can purchase and a maximum amount that they can hold? - Yes.

Is there a sort of standard quantity or do you get a feel for what might be a standard amount that is permitted to be held and purchased? - Well, I mainly deal with rifle ammunition, mostly sporting, and very few handguns so I don't really deal a lot with the amounts that they could have with/with handguns.

Do they get a lot more for handguns than for rifles? - I deal with so few.

Well, you can see what is on that one? - Yes, I know.

I mean, what are the limits for Mr. Hamilton? - Mr. Hamilton was allowed to hold 1,500 in his possession and he was allowed to buy 1,000 rounds.

That is of what? - That is all the different.....each one that he held, each rifle.

How many types of ammunition? - Five.

So he could hold five times 1500 rounds? - Yes.

Now, do people with rifles get that sort of permission?
- No.

What sort of average to they have? - Normally maybe 500 to possess and 200 or 300 or buy.

In the case of rifles, do they have different types of ammunition and can hold 500 of each type? - No.

Just usually one type? - No, they can buy different types as long as it is the same calibre. They can buy high velocity or hollow point or solid but only one amount of 500.

And would they have 500 for each of these or would the total have to be 500? - The total would be 500.

That is the sort of normal certificate for a rifle shooter?
- Yes.

The 1,000 means, this is in Mr. Hamilton's case, that that is what he could buy on any one day? - On any one day.

So I suppose he could come back on the following day and buy another 1,000? - Yes.

And/

And over the two days he would have bought 2,000? -
Yes.

Is there any way you would know whether he had got rid of the other 1,000 or at least 500 of them so that he fits within the limit? - No.

Is there any system for checking? - No.

Now, I wonder if you would look please at DCFA85 which is also in volume D99 L? - Yes.

2.28 p.m.

Do you recognise that document, Mrs. Neil? - Yes.

What is it? - It is a note from Tom Hamilton asking us to try and get him this ammunition.

What is it? - 1,000 rounds of 9mm Luger full jacket round nose.

9mm Luger full jacket round nose? - Yes.

And 7.5 G -- what does that mean? - It must be a reference.

And 116 GR. -- does that mean anything? - That is the grain of the bullet.

Is that a light or heavy bullet? - In handguns, I really don't know much about ammunition for handguns.

Now, did you get the thousand rounds for him? - No, it was discontinued -- we phoned up about it and it was discontinued.

Now, did Mr. Hamilton speak to you about his attempts to check whether that ammunition was available? - Yes.

What did he say to you? - He seemed to think that the company had the ammunition in stock, and when we telephoned for it they said it was discontinued.

Now, would you look please at DC/FA86, which is DI00L? Is that another note from Mr. Hamilton? - Yes.

Addressed to you? - Yes.

What does it say? - "Mrs. Neil, please supply 200 rounds of Winchester X3574P .357 Magnum JHP, 10.3 gram".

Did you actually get that note? - He brought that note in to me.

And/

And what did you do about that? - Well, we phoned up a company to see if they had it and they didn't have it, they would have to order it.

And did you get it for him? - Yes. It is still in the shop.

And when you indicated you didn't have it readily available, what did he say to you? - Just to order it for him.

Did he at any stage say he had got some elsewhere?
- Yes.

What did he say about that? - He just said he would buy elsewhere just in case there was any delay in us getting it.

And was that all in January? - That was all in early February.

Did you learn in January or February that he was buying a gun? - Yes.

What did he tell you about that? - I wasn't there the day he ordered it. He just came in and asked to get a price for a handgun.

And did you get it? - We got him a price.

Did you get the gun? - We got the handgun, yes.

And did you sell it to him? - Yes.

What was it? - A .357 Magnum.

That is a Smith and Wesson revolver? - Revolver, yes.

And how much was it? - We charged him £410.

How did he pay for that? - He paid by cheque. He paid for it before we got it.

Now, would you look please at DC/FA/91, which sorry, is D102L? Is this another note from Mr./

Mr. Hamilton to you? - Yes.

And what did he request this time? - He asked for us to buy the 750 rounds of Norma ammunition for a 9mm, 125 grain.

Well, does that refer to 750 rounds? - Yes. He had telephoned a company and they said they had 900 rounds left, and we were to get him 200 rounds on, for him to try it, to get their grouping. And when he got them, he said he would let me know the next day if he wanted the remainder of what the company had in stock.

It was 950, so that is the other 750? - Yes.

And did he order the other 750? - Yes.

And did you get them for him? - Yes.

And did he get them? - He got 400 of them.

How did you find Mr. Hamilton in his dealings with you? - Very quiet, polite. He always knew what he wanted. He always came in with his notes, exactly what I had to order.

Anything about him that ever gave you cause for concern? - Not really, no.

Did you ever find out why there was this gap between 1987 and 1995? - No. I never asked him. He never really spoke about his life in any way. We just took it he was buying elsewhere. We are a bit more expensive than some other places. We don't do mail order, and I took it that was the reason.

In recent years has mail order been a growing way for people to acquire guns and ammunition? - Yes.

Has that affected your business at all? - Yes, it did, yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: I wonder if I could just ask you about periodicals. Do you stock gun magazines? - Years and years ago. We/

We only kept one.

Which one was it? - The Gun Review.

And do you know if Mr. Hamilton read that magazine?

- Yes, he ordered it.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. JONES: Mrs. Neil, you have said that you took it that between 1987 and 1995 Mr. Hamilton was buying elsewhere. Could you look again at the certificate that you had and just tell us whether there is any record on the firearms certificates of any purchases from anybody other than you between 1987 and 1995? - That is up to 1984 on that one -- do these certificates all follow each other?

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, it may be that the question caused some confusion. I wasn't meaning to suggest for a minute that Mr. Hamilton was purchasing ammunition commercially by mail order. I think Mrs. Neil's assumption was that he was buying elsewhere. But there is, I can assure Mr. Jones, no evidence in any of the documents to suggest Mr. Hamilton bought ammunition commercially between October 1987 and September 1995.

LORD CULLEN: Does that clear the point?

MR. JONES: It does, sir. I just wanted to get it into the record that according to the Firearms Certificate there is no record of commercial purchases between these two dates.

LORD CULLEN: Yes. I think that was my impression -- so I don't think we need to trouble the witness with the question any more.

No re-examination.

JAMES O'HANLON GILLESPIE (38), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I stay in Stirling.

Do you have a business? - Yes.

What/

What is that? - A landscaping business.

Do you have a van connected with that? - Yes.

With your name on it? - Not any longer.

Did it used to have your name on it? - Yes.

And would it from time to time be parked outside Thomas Hamilton's house in Kent Road, Stirling? - Yes.

When did you first get to know Mr. Hamilton? - It started back when I was 16, serving my apprenticeship. My brother-in-law had a carpet shop next door to him. So when would that be, roughly? - I was 16 at the time. I am 38 now.....

Could you just speak a bit closer to that microphone so that we can hear you? - I was 16 at the time.

Now, his shop was actually known as Woodcraft, was it? - Yes.

And how long did it operate for? - I am not sure. I have only known him since then.

And how long did you work as the apprentice in the carpet-fitting business? - For one year.

And thereafter did you have no contact for a time with Mr. Hamilton? - Yes. My brother-in-law opened up a carpet shop in Barnton Street, and I was driving off and on for him, and Mr. Hamilton asked me to drive for him, like to go through to Glasgow to uplift kitchens.

And what age were you then? - About 20.

I think you applied for and got a firearms certificate? - That is right.

When was that? - I applied when I was 21/

21.

So what year is that -- 17 years ago -- so 1979? - Yes.

At that time were you aware of Mr. Hamilton's interest in shooting? - Yes.

Was it that that encouraged you to take up the sport? - No. I went once or twice with him to Callander.

Was he a member at Callander, then? - Yes.

Did you join Callander club? - Yes.

How long were you a member for? - About two years.

Now, what is the name of the club? - I can't remember the name of the club.

During the two years that you were a member did you shoot much? - I went once or twice with him, and somebody else from Doune, and I went once or twice on my own, and that was about it, I think -- I lost interest in the shooting.

How many times over the two years do you reckon you went there shooting? - Probably about seven times.

What weapons were you using? - I was using a Smith and Wesson revolver, .22, and I also had I think it was an Anschutz rifle.

Now, when you gave up the shooting did you lose contact with Hamilton? - Yes, I lost contact with him for -- not straight after that, just maybe over a year or so after.

And when did you end up in touch with him again? - I met him one day in Port Street, about six years ago.

Now, was there anything in particular that gave rise to continuing contact with him after that? - I told him I had started up in business and he told me with him being in business himself he could/could sort of point me in the right direction and give me some pointers.

So did you meet him from time to time? - Yes.

Where? - At the house -- his house.

And how was he occupying himself, largely, at that stage? - What do you mean, sorry?

What was he doing? - At that stage?

Yes, what was he doing at that stage for a living, or what was his general activity? - He had an interest in cameras, and Boys' Clubs, of course.

And how major was his interest in Boys' Clubs? - Just running Boys' Clubs in Dunblane and various other places.

How much of his time did that take up? - Most days of the week I think.

I take it in the evening, rather than during the day? - Yes.

Were you involved at all in his Boys' Club activity? - Not at all, no.

What about giving him lifts and so on? - I gave him lifts once or twice to his clubs, and I also gave him lifts from Bridge of Allan to Menstrie to uplift the mini-bus.

Did Mr. Hamilton at any stage throughout the period you have known him ask you to become involved in the Boys' Clubs? - Yes he did.

When was that? - Well, he asked me first of all away back when I was 16, and also when I was about 20, when I was driving for him, and I said "I have no interest in Boys' Clubs whatsoever".

Into 1994/1995 did you fairly regularly run him to and from the Boys' Clubs? - Sorry, what dates?

During 1994 and 1995? - Yes.

And/

And is that in the van that you have? - Yes.

Now, was there anything particular that sort of kept your friendship with him going? - Not really. That was the only -- I would take him from clubs, to clubs -- he would give me advice on my business, and sort of book-wise.

What did he do with you book-wise? - He just advised me how to keep my books initially.

Did you have any other common interests? - No, none whatsoever.

Did you know where Mr. Hamilton got his letters typed? - Yes. He told me at the University.

Did you ever take him there? - I did.

And was that on one occasion or more than one? - About two or three occasions.

And on these occasions did he wait till the letters were ready or did he go back for them? - Sometimes he waited, but most of the time I dropped him off there and he made his own way back.

And did you know what all his correspondence was largely about? - Well, he showed me one or two letters just complaining to the Council and that sort of thing.

Did he complain a lot to you? - He just read the sort of things he wrote, and quite frankly I didn't listen to what he was saying because I wasn't interested.

But did he moan about things generally? - Yes, he was being classed as a pervert and that sort of thing, you know.

Well, did you hear talk of him being a pervert from anywhere but him? - No.

So what sort of things did he say in that connection? - Just he was being sort of singled out, sort of thing.

Sorry/

Sorry? - He was being singled out.

By whom? - By various people. He never named anybody.

Did he name any organisation? - No, I don't think he did, actually.

Was/

2.50 p.m.

Was there a stage at which you actually stopped giving him lifts to and from his Clubs? - Well, before this happened at Dunblane, the last time I spoke to him in the house was about four or five weeks before that.

And up until that time were you still helping out running him back and forward? - No, because I was getting into a busy time.

So when did you actually stop running him back and forwards? - Probably about February time.

And latterly were you only running him.....sorry, January time.

And just before that were you only running him to and from two places? - Yes.

Where were they? - Menstrie and Bridge of Allan.

Is that Menstrie Centre and Bridge of Allan Sports Hall? - That's right.

At that time, that is January of this year, was he running Clubs elsewhere? - I'm not sure whether he was running them but he was uplifting boys and taking them to like football throughout the region.

Now, about seven weeks or so before the 13th March did something happen in Mr. Hamilton's house with a firearm that you ought to tell us about? - Yes.

What was it that happened? - He was cleaning his revolvers at the time and he had one revolver in his hand and he asked me if I had any kids would I allow them to attend the Club and I said, no, I wouldn't. Then he pointed the revolver at me and fired it with a blank chamber so I got so much of a fright, I was holding a cup of coffee at the time and I called him a stupid bastard and threw the coffee at him and walked out smartly and that is the last I saw him.

How/

How long exactly was that before the 13th March? - I think it was about four or five weeks.

Now, before that happened how many guns did he actually have out? - Two. And was he cleaning them? - Yes.

Do you know what both guns were? - I think one was a 9 millimetre.

Was was the other one? - I think it was.....I'm not sure. A 357 or a 44 Magnum. I'm not sure.

Can I be clear whether these were pistols or revolvers? - Well, the 9 millimetre was a pistol and the other was a revolver.

And which one is it you say was aimed at you? - The 9 millimetre.

You have just said it was the revolver. Can we be clear about this? - It was the 9 millimetres.

And that is not a revolver? - No.

You do agree with me that a moment ago you said it was a revolver? - Well, I meant to say the 9 millimetre.

Did you report that to the police? - No.

Why would you not have let any child of yours go to one of his Clubs? - I thought he was too military.

Was that the only reason? - Yes.

The incident itself that you have just described, what did you make of it at the time? - The reason I never reported it was because he would just have denied it.

I understand that but what did you make of the incident? - I didn't make much of it at the time, just the fact that I had got a fright.

But you made no further contact with him? - No.

Did/

Did he try to contact you? - No.

Did you think that he was dangerous? - Yes, I think so. Well, obviously then he gave me the idea that he was dangerous.

Did anything else happen that gave you the impression he might be dangerous? - Just the idea of having guns in the house in the first place, two many for anybody to have in the house at the one time.

Do you know how many he had? - I knew he had the revolver and the 9 millimetre. I think at one stage he had a machine gun at one point.

But did you know in February or whenever this was that he had four handguns? - No, I just knew he had the two.

And had you on any other occasion in the last 18 months or so seen any of his guns? - Just the two that I have described.

How often have you seen them? - Probably once or twice before that.

What was he doing on these other occasions? - Just cleaning them and he asked me too if I wanted to hold them and I said no thanks.

So nothing inappropriate was done on these other occasions? - No.

Where did he normally keep them in the house? - I think it was a cupboard in the hallway.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: You didn't see Mr. Hamilton at any of his Boys Clubs or camps, is that right? - No.

You didn't. Yet you said you would not have allowed a child of yours to go and you explained that by saying he was too military? - Yes.

Can you explain a little more what you mean when you said that? - Once or twice when we were in the house he showed me some videos, gymnastics, he had been coaching the boys and also I had/had been taking him up to the Clubs and I have also heard him shouting.

What did you see on the videos? - Just gymnastics and playing football. Mostly playing football.

What about the videos made you think he was too military? - He shouted at them too much. Too rough with the kids. Shouting.

Did you notice anything about what the boys were wearing? - Well, at the time of football it was shorts. That is the only one that I have seen.

What about gymnastics? - Not very much gymnastics. Mostly football.

No re-examination.

JOHN ALEXANDER CAMERON MOFFAT (42), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Do you stay in Stirling? - Yes.

Are you a digger driver? - Yes, that is correct.

Now, are you a member of Callander Rifle & Pistol Club? - Yes, I am.

Do you have a position in the Club? - Yes, I do. Currently I am the honorary membership secretary.

How long have you held that position? - This is my second year.

And how long have you been a member of the Club? - I can't be absolutely certain but I believe I went there to begin with round about 1979.

Was the Club in 1979 known as the Callander Rifle & Pistol Club? - Yes, I believe it was./

Does it have its own premises? - Yes, it does.

What is the nature of these? - The Club has a 25 metres indoor range and it has a Clubhouse.

How many positions in the range are there? - As far as the small bore rifle is concerned, there are eight firing points. For small bore and full bore pistol there are four firing points.

Are firearms kept on the premises? - Yes, they are. The Club owns its own firearms and they are stored there.

Are these firearms in large or small quantity? - I don't really know how to answer that question except to say that currently the Club has between eight and 10 small bore rifles and perhaps half a dozen or so small bore pistols and three full bore pistols.

Are these for the use of Club members? - Yes.

Are there other people that Club members can bring to the Club who can use these? - If a Club member comes along with a friend, perhaps to show off his sport, then we do allow people to use the small bore pistols but it is understood that the member is responsible for the friend's behaviour.

Does the Club require a particular form of permission to be able to allow this to happen? - The Club does not actually make any demands on anybody. If they come along, as I say, with a friend on one evening we simply take the view that this is somebody who has come along, wants to see what's happening to experience the atmosphere. We don't make any demands. We don't ask them to sign anything. We don't even ask them to pay any money. But if they come along the following week then they are asked if they would like to become a member and if they say yes, they would actually, I give them a little form and ask them to fill it in and I also ask them for some form of character reference.

How long would they need to wait or come along/along and shoot for before they could become a member? - Well, we take the view that there is a minimum requirement of six months. That means attending regularly for six months before we would even consider putting them before the Central Committee to grant them full membership.

Is this your own Club's decision about the period? - Well, we decided, we took it on our own selves to put on a six months probation period of anybody who was coming along, although the governing bodies for the sport reckon that if a person is already a firearms certificate holder, has been a member in good standing of another Club, that there really is no need since that person will be assumed to have been vetted by the police, there is no need for him to be a probationary member.

What is the position then if one of your members brings along a friend who does not hold a firearms certificate? Can that person shoot as long as your member is responsible for him? - That person would be allowed to shoot on the first night, given that the member said that he was going to be responsible. The guy would get to shoot on that night. They would be allowed to shoot but if it looked as if they were going to come along regularly then I would have to ask them to, as I say, fill in the little form and bring me a character reference.

And at that point would he be allowed to continue shooting before the character reference came along? - Not if that person was a complete beginner, no.

When he has given you the character reference and completed this probationary form, can he come along without the member and just shoot on his own? - Yes, he can, given that he has expressed a desire to become a member. He can come along on his own and he would be allowed to shoot.

Now, to enable that to happen whereby a person who is not a full member of a Club can shoot on the premises, do you have to be recognised by either the home office or the Secretary of State to be able to do that? - Can you say that again please?

Does your Club have to be recognised by the/

the Home Office or the Secretary of State before it can permit a non-firearms certificate holder to shoot? - I am not exactly certain of how the law works on this but I do know that our Club needs to have Home Office approval before we can be a Club.

So yours is a Home Office approved Club? - Oh, yes.

That's fine. Apart from the firearms owned by the Club for the use of members, do any of your members keep their firearms on the Club premises? - Yes, I do believe that a couple of the guys prefer to store their firearms on the Clubs premises.

Would there be room for the Club to provide facilities for everybody to do that? - Oh, gosh. I honestly don't know. At the moment the strongroom is not terribly big but I dare say that with a certain amount of judicious moving about it would be possible to put in sufficient strong boxes or strong safes to allow members to keep their firearms there, yes.

So far as the Clubhouse is concerned, is that a social club? - Shooting is a very social sport but it is not exactly a social club. You must remember that the place started out as a hut and it was bricked up on the outside and a new room was put on. It has the basic facilities. It has lighting and heating and toilets and running water but that is about it.

Does it have a liquor licence for example? - Oh, no.

Do shooting clubs that are of a bigger size have liquor licences? - I don't think so. The only place I can think of in Scotland was the shooting centre and they had a liquor licence but that is about the only place I know of.

Where was that? - That was in Bonnyrigg in Edinburgh.

Had that now closed down? - That is correct.

Do you know over what period that place operated?/

operated? - No, I really couldn't say. It was the early 1980's anyway.

Was that a commercial operation rather than a members Club? - Yes, it was run as a commercial operation.

Now, on the 24th February of this year did you get a call at home from Thomas Hamilton? - What day was the 24th? Was that a Monday?

Well was it around the latter part of February? - Yes, that is correct.

And why was he phoning you? - Tom Hamilton phoned me because he said he was looking for somewhere to shoot regularly.

Now, what were you able to tell him? - Well, I had to tell him what I would tell practically everybody. I asked him who he was and I asked him how he knew to phone me and then I tell him the shooting disciplines that are currently shot at Callander. I just basically tell him about the Club and the kind of shooting that we do, ask him what kind of shooting he has done or what kind of shooting interests him and then I invite him along to see the place and get to meet the members.

So he was able to come along on that sort of basis if he wanted? - Yes, that is right.

Now, did he come? - Well, Tom Hamilton told me that Mondays night weren't good nights for him. Wednesday night was his preferred night for shooting so the conversation was more or less a case of "Okay, Tom, I'll see you when I see you, probably some Wednesday night. Goodbye" and the next thing I know is that I turned up on the Monday night following that and Tom Hamilton was there and I was a little bit surprised about that, given he said that Monday nights were no good for him.

So it was a Monday he phoned you and the following Monday he turned up? - Something like that, yes.

In the original conversation you had with him did he tell you anything about past membership of the Club? - Yes, he did. Tom Hamilton/

Hamilton told me that he had been a member of Callander years ago and I have been going there since 1979 and I didn't remember him and I said that to him. I said "It must have been before my time then, Tom, because I don't remember you" and he said "Oh, I used to come with Clive Woods". Now, I don't remember Tom Hamilton but I do remember Clive Woods. I remember shooting pistol with Clive Woods so when he said the name Clive Woods I knew he must have been coming down round about 1981, 1982 or 1983. Something like that.

Has Woods not shot with you since about that time? -

No.

We have just had evidence from a man called Gillespie -- James O'Hanlon Gillespie -- who suggested he was also a member of Callander. Does that mean anything to you? - The name doesn't ring any bells.

Did Mr. Hamilton say anything about giving up or interrupting his shooting activity? - He said to me on the phone that he had been away from shooting for quite a while, and he said to me that he wanted to get back into it, now that he had more time on his hands. I asked him what he did for a living and he said he was a gym teacher. I am old enough to remember the time when being a teacher meant something, so I said "That's good". So with that in mind the conversation progressed a little bit further, but he did say going through to Callander shooting didn't take his fancy any more, he had progressed beyond that, he sort of found it sissy - not difficult enough.

Did he say whether he was a member of any other club? - He said he was a member of Stirling Rifle and Pistol Club, and that he had been a member I think it was of Dunblane, he said.

Would you be able to do full bore pistol shooting in Stirling? - I believe the Stirling boys used to hire Whitestone Range, and I think they had an arrangement with the Territorial Army whereby they were allowed into the Riverside Range to do pistol shooting, I think.

And these would be places you could do full bore pistol shooting? - Yes.

Can I go back to an earlier question. Did he say anything about having to give up shooting for a while? - No, he didn't say he had given it up -- I don't think he used the words "give up". I think he just gave the impression life had presented other things for him to do and he had to push shooting on to the back burner.

On the Monday when he did attend, the first Monday, was that still in February? - Yes, I think it was. I think it was the last Monday in February.

Well, /

Well, I think that was 26th February? - Well, that is when it would be, then.

And did you go that night? - Yes, I did.

And was he there when you got there? - He was there. I turned up late expecting to find everybody hanging about in the cold, but one of the other members had arrived early and he had opened up and let the guys in.

And how did you learn that Hamilton was there? - I was coming from the car and the assistant secretary, Raymond, passed me and he said "There's a new guy in there asking for you", and that is when I knew there was someone there.

And did you go and speak to him? - I did, yes.

Had he already been in shooting? - No, he hadn't. I said "Hello there, how are you getting on", and all that jazz, looked around to see who was in the clubroom, and I sort of said "Have you been on the range and seen where we shoot?". And he said "Yes I have, thank you very much". And then he followed me into the range. The guys were round the bottom of the range and they were hanging up targets and patching up bullet holes and saying "How are you getting on", and all that jazz. And I noticed that Tom Hamilton had taken his guns out his bag and he had put them on the upper shooting plinth, or -- I don't know what you call it -- the upper shooting bench. And I was kind of irritated by that, because it is not the way we do things in Callander -- but he hadn't been shooting.

Now, what were the guns? - They were two Browning 9 mm self-loading pistols which the Browning people call "high powers".

Were they both high powers? - Yes, they were both high powers.

MR. BONOMOY: Would you just give me a moment.

THE WITNESS: Certainly.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: The two/

two guns that you saw I take it were both Browning guns? - Yes, that is right.

Were there differences that you could detect between them? - Yes. One of the Brownings was just a completely plain, ordinary, bog standard Browning high power. The other one was the variant -- I am not sure of the correct name that Browning have given it, but they call it something like "The Target" or "The Competition". It is a variant. The barrel is about an inch and a half longer. It has a cosmetic muzzle weight at the front. Apparently they were supposed to do some work on the guts of the thing to make it more accurate and easier to shoot, but that is about it.

Now, were you at all surprised to see him with two weapons like that? - I was surprised, because there isn't a police force in the U.K. that give out -- well, put it this way, they don't like to give firearms of the same calibre. They take the view that if you have one gun of that calibre you don't need another. So to see two Browning 9 mm there, I was surprised by that. Having said that, if you can demonstrate good reason for needing two firearms of the same calibre, then they take the view that if you have a reason for it then, you know, they will give you it.

I take it that one reason could be that you were shooting in different types of competition, albeit with the same calibre of weapon? - Yes, that is true up to a point, but I don't know if it applied in Tom Hamilton's case, because Tom Hamilton told me he shot close pistol. Well, if he shot close pistol and shot 9 mm Browning, why did he need two pistols to shoot one discipline -- that particular discipline? I could understand if he needed two pistols for two completely different disciplines. I have pistols -- right, I use a .22 pistol for one discipline, and I use a .38 calibre pistol for another; but why have two guns of the same calibre for the same discipline? It doesn't make sense.

Now, that night was he allowed to shoot his own guns in the range? - Yes he was. I told him on the phone that we had had experiences of people coming in and bringing along firearms and shooting holes in our target range. So I told him "If/

"If you want to shoot your own guns you will have to do a little marksmanship test for us". And he said "Yes, okay, thank you very much". And I gave him a gun -- I even gave him the ammunition -- and he performed the marksmanship test, he kept his bullets on target where they are supposed to be. So I said "Fair enough, you have demonstrated you can hit the target, so you can use your own guns".

So he hit the target, anyway, with all ten shots? - Well, kept the bullets within the scoring rings.

And what is the diameter of the scoring rings? - A PL7 target is approximately what -- about 2 feet square, 2½ feet square, something like that.

And he was within that range, and allowed then to shoot himself? - That is right.

Or to shoot, rather, his own weapon? - That is correct.

Now, did you notice anything odd about the use of targets later that evening? - I certainly did. It was odd in as much as I found it odd -- it jarred slightly. The PL7 target is a fairly big target, and we shoot at it from 25 metres. I said to him "Tom, there is plenty targets there, pin one up, and on your own shoot and we will watch you and make sure you don't do anything daft" -- or words to that effect. He took the target but he didn't pin it up. He put it down and he told me "No, no, it is all right, I prefer to use my own targets". And Tom Hamilton's idea of a target was two pieces of A4 paper sort of stuck together and pinned on the back wall; and what he liked to do was put little fluorescent stickers on the A4 paper and shoot at them. Now, that is odd -- well, it is not terribly odd, because sometimes shooters who are having problems with trigger control or sight picture -- sometimes they prefer to shoot at a blank piece of paper so that they don't have anything to distract themselves.

If he had used the club's targets? - Yes.

Would that mean a target which was disposable after he had used it? - Well, the targets cost about 25p each, so they are too expensive/expensive to throw away after they have had a few bullet holes, and what we do is we patch them with sticky patches and re-use them again and again.

We have seen photographs which show the sort of bits of paper you are describing hanging on a wall with these marks, these fluorescent or coloured marks on them? - Yes.

- Well, he would up to a point but some of the people who come down are really keen, and really enthusiastic, and they will shoot at a target and they will be so proud of themselves that they actually say "Could I please take that away and keep it, so that I can show my husband" -- or "so that I can show my wife" -- or whatever. And we say "Well, yes, on you go".

Maybe you could look at one of these photographs. They are PHO E25, photograph 14 -- just have a look at the screen there. Are these the things that you have been describing to us? - Yes, that is the things.

Do you have yours up at home? - No, I have been doing it so long I am only interested in what the score is, I'm not interested in showing off.

I take it you have a lot of friends who are marksmen?
- I made a lot of friends when I joined Callander Rifle and Pistol Club, but shooting is a social event to me.

Do people do things like this, hang up the targets at home? - No, not by and large, no -- what? Hang that on your bedroom wall?

Is it important that it is a bedroom? - No, it is not important, but I just wondered.....

Can you help us a little with what you are wondering about? - Well, it is just he has got what -- one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight of them hanging there, and it just seems strange.

It is a room which was not used as a bedroom/bedroom -- the same room, if you look at photograph 15, you will see that in the same room there were boxes of ammunition, and a table where he worked, and you will see some more of the targets there? - Yes, I see that.

Does that help clear your mind about it?

- Yes, it does, thanks very much.

How does that help? - Well, he has got a lot of ammunition there, and he has got his targets, and he has got his sticky tape and his scissors and all the rest of it. He is quite orderly.

Most people I know, they have their ammunition and their firearm, and they go down to the range and they get their targets down there -- the target is not important to them, except what the score is. They don't take the target home as a trophy. That is not like anyone I have ever met. I mean, beginners proud of themselves for the first time, yes, they take the target home to show off, but after a couple of weeks it is no big deal any more.

Are these targets anything to be proud of anyway? -

Not really.

I mean, looking at the scores -- if you see 14 again on the screen, it comes up quite clearly -- you can see the groupings, such as they are? - Yes, but tell me how far away from the target was he when he shot them?

Well, I can't answer that, I am afraid? - If those targets were 10 metres away then it is not that terribly great.

25 metres? - That is okay.

Right, thank you. Did you notice anything about the ammunition he tended to use? - I saw his ammunition on the shooting range. It was factory ammo. Now, factory ammo. is quite expensive. It is about £5.50 for 50 rounds. So most of us don't shoot factory ammo., we manufacture our own ammunition. But the stuff he was using was 9 mm parabellum, and it was a 115 grain bullet, full metal jacket.

It sounds impressive. Is it as expensive as/as it sounds? - Well, as I say, it is about £5.50 for 50 rounds of the cheapest stuff you can buy. It goes up and becomes more expensive as it gets a better grain.

Would he be the only person around the club that used that sort of commercially produced ammunition, or would some of your members also do that? - The club has its own 9 mm at the moment, but there really isn't anybody who shoots it regularly. I am just trying to think who has 9 mm pistols. I know some of the chaps have 9 mm, but I think that most of them re-manufacture their own ammunition.

Do you do that at the club premises? - I take my reloading gear to the club premises and I reload there, because when I have made a bullet or bullets, I fire them across a chronograph to tell me how fast they are going, and I examine the bullets to see there is no signs of over-pressure or pace slipping, or anything like that. And when I see the bullet is a good bullet I make up a batch of a couple of hundred.

And you do that at the premises? - I do that at Callander, yes.

Do most people do that, or do most people do it at home? - Most people who are members of the club who re-manufacture, they tend to re-manufacture their ammunition at home.

And did you notice how Mr. Hamilton transported his ammunition? - No, I never paid any attention to what he carried his bullets in.

You didn't notice he had a box? - No, I couldn't say with any certainty.

Or a tray with the bullets in it? - No. I seem to recall that he discharged ammunition from an open box of bullets, just an open carton of bullets.

Now, /

3.30 p.m.

Now, can I take it that he remained in the range for a while and shot his own weapons? - That is correct, yes.

Did he come back again? - Do you mean did he come back again on another night?

Yes? - Yes, he came back the following Wednesday. I think it would be the 28th of February he came back.

And were you there? - Yes, I was there.

Was the shooting any different that night? - I couldn't tell you. I don't think so. I think he just did his own thing again.

Do you remember one of the other members, Mr. Barr, practising? - I remember that Tom was competing with the Scottish Pistol Association in their pistol competitions running over the winter time and Tom had to complete round No. 8 of the Police Pistol One Match and since he had to shoot it anyway and since Tom Hamilton had said he was interested in Police Pistol One I asked Tom Hamilton if he would like to compete along with it, to practice, to have a go.

What is Police Pistol One? - Police Pistol One is a National Pistol Association shooting discipline and it consists of 30 rounds fired in three distinct series. One series at 25 metres, one series at 15 metres and one series at 10 metres. At 25 metres the competitor has two minutes to fire 12 shots at a target 25 metres away. In two minutes. So that is 12 shots in two minutes at 25 metres. Practice two at 15 metres has six series of one shot in two seconds and that translates that the shooter charges his firearm, comes to the ready position and on the command "Fire" then has two seconds to raise the piece and fire one shot into the target. He does that 12 times. That is two series of six. He then moves down to 10 metres and he then has to engage the target with two shots in two seconds and that constitutes the Police Pistol Match.

What is the nature of the target that is being/being fired at? - The target is a stylised representation of a human being. It is a black and white target and it looks for all the world like a man wearing dark clothes holding a firearm in a sort of crouching or bending position.

Are there rings on the target? - Yes, there are scoring rings.

They are not quite circular, are they? - No, they are sort of oval or oblong.

Like a running track shape? - Yes, that is exactly right.

I assume the higher score is as you get nearer the centre? - That's exactly correct.

Anything odd about the way Mr. Hamilton carried out this exercise? - Well, people who shoot Police Pistol a lot, who practice it a lot, tend to be very deliberate with their 25 metre shooting because points are lost if you shoot too rapidly or you don't take sufficient time to get your sights just exactly right but Tom Hamilton charged his magazine, loaded the gun and at the command of "Fire" he raised the gun and simply let a fusillade of shots, getting the gun empty as fast as he could, jammed the next magazine in and blasted away with it until it went empty. That is how he shot it.

Was there something odd also about the position where you had to fire one round in two seconds? - Yes, there was. Along with Tom Barr and Tom Hamilton there was a comparative newcomer to the club in the range at the same time, a gentleman by the name of Ian Campbell. Ian is a newcomer and he is very keen. He is a very nice man. Ian had expressed an interest in learning to shoot so I invited Ian along with us and for Ian's benefit I explained what was required in words of one syllable and when it came to firing one shot in two seconds I said "Fire" and Tom Barr and Ian Campbell both reacted correctly and fired one shot but Tom Hamilton raised the pistol and managed to get four shots off before I could shout "Stop" so I had to sort of say to him "You know, Tom, that's not the way it's done. It is one shot in two seconds, not four" and he said "Oh, yes, I am sorry. Thank you very/very much". He thanked you quite a lot.

Did you ever get back the probationary membership application form? - Yes, I got that back.

Would you look please at ME19 which in the volume is D103L. Is that it? - That is it, yes.

Fully completed? - Yes.

Was it that Wednesday night that you got it? - That is correct, yes.

The following Wednesday was the 6th of March, exactly a week before the 13th which is the day of the incident at Dunblane? - Yes.

Was he there on the 6th? - Yes, he was.

Anything odd happen that night? - I don't think so. I can't remember.

Did you speak to him at all about the reference you required? - Yes, I did. I said to him on the Monday night when he got this form, he knew that he was required to give me a reference and he got the form on the Monday night and told me he would have the reference soon. When he showed up the following Wednesday I said "Have you got that reference yet?" and he said "No, soon" and when he turned up on the 6th of March I chiselled him again and said "Where's the reference you are supposed have had? You said you would get it". "Oh, yes, there has been a bit of a hold-up. I am getting it for you".

Did you ever see his Firearms Certificate? - No, I never saw his Firearms certificate at all.

May I take it you just assumed because he had guns he would have a certificate? - I did, yes.

What category of people can provide references for you? - Well, I personally, since I sort of got left sort of, you know, just to get on with it as it were, I decided that since the police ask for a doctor or a lawyer or a Minister of Religion or a teacher or whatever that we would just ask/ask for the same categories of people with the exception that a police officer cannot be used for a reference if you like when you are applying for a Firearms Certificate but I sort of thought well, a police officer would do as a referee for somebody who was wanting to become a member of the club.

So what were the categories? - Police officer, teacher, a doctor, lawyer, Justice of the Peace and Minister of Religion.

Did you see whether Mr. Hamilton allowed anyone else to use his guns on the range? - I understand that he offered people a shot if you like of his guns. He offered me a shot as well, offered me a go but I have shot too many guns. It doesn't do anything for me any more. Perhaps if it had been something exotic I might have had a shot but a Browning, no. I have fired too many Brownings to be impressed by them.

Did you see anyone else using his guns? - No, I didn't. Any time I was Range Officer he was firing his own firearms. He was using his own guns.

What is a Range Officer? - What is a Range Officer?
A Range Officer is a person who is in charge of the range. A Range Officer may be a shooter, he may actually be competing, but the Range Officer is responsible for giving the range commands so that actions are done in concert if you like. For example, you come in, make sure everybody in in the range, close the door and then you will say "Okay everybody, ear defenders on, shooters collect firearms, shooters come to the firing line" and until those words are said you don't pick up a gun, you don't move your ammunition until you are told you may by the Range Officer.

And that would happen during the Police Pistol One competition? - That is correct.

When Mr. Hamilton was simply practising would he require a Range Officer? - Yes. Oh, yes.

There is always somebody there? - Yes, there is.

Now, if he had produced a reference from a professional person, from one of the categories that you/

you have described, he would have automatically have become a probationary member? - Yes, he would have.

He would have had to be for six months or would it have been less for him? - No, it doesn't make any difference.

Six months? - We take the view that it doesn't matter. Six months.

Would the Committee then have to decide on full membership? - Well, it has to be a Committee because if it is an individual who says "No, you can't get in" then there is always a chance that it is spite or badness. If it is a Committee decision then I suppose it is fairer.

And in six months do you reckon you would have enough experience of someone to make that judgment? - Well, the way it works is that it is a social sport and it is a particularly social sport in Callander. We do a lot of shooting but we also sit around the pool table and drink a lot of Coca-Cola and do a lot of chattering and I never recommend anybody to the Committee until everybody had has a chance to look him over or her over and see whether or not they could get along with this person, whether they could shoot with them. Safety is a big consideration but if somebody gives you bad vibes, you don't want to shoot with them.

Were you at the stage of knowing enough about Mr. Hamilton to give any judgment on his final membership? - No, not at that time.

Were you concerned about him at all by that relatively early stage? - I personally wasn't but having said that, on an evening shooting in Callander there is quite a lot of work to be done. It is like any activity. In order for all the members to enjoy there is a certain amount of housework or housekeeping that has to be done, from brushing the floor to washing the dishes and quite often it is 'Joe Soap' that gets left to do it so I didn't really have a great deal to do with Tom Hamilton at that point other than being Range Officer on a few occasions when he was in the range shooting.

CROSS/

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: Just one question if I may. You described shooting with a .22 as sissy. Can you help me please with that? - No, he described it in those terms.

A .22 calibre pistol does not produce a great blast, does not produce great noise, does not kick very hard. Forget all you ever saw in the movies. It doesn't work like that. Quite a lot of people, most people in fact, get into shooting via small bore .22 calibre and then they graduate. Some people do say with a .22 calibre that there is no challenge to them and that is what he said. It was not a challenge to him.

So things like blast and noise and power are all-important, are they? - They seemed to be important to Tom Hamilton, yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: I wonder if you could help me. One of the things this Inquiry will obviously look at is the question of the holding of firearms? - Yes.

Can I put to you a proposition that a central armoury manned by the police for instance regularly might be a way of holding firearms as opposed to keeping them in strongrooms in a club such as yours which could not be manned 24 hours a day. Have you any comment to make on that? - Well, there are a lot of competitions around Scotland and the North of England that I go to and speaking personally it would not be convenient for me to have to go to a central armoury and pick up a gun and then drive to the competition. I don't think I like that idea very much. There is always the point that it is your gun and you have got to clean it and you have got to look after it. You have got to take it for repair. You have got to practice with it. That is a lot of shuttling backwards and forwards, backwards and forwards. I don't think it is a good idea.

Well, you may not think it is a good idea but certainly the teaching staff at Dunblane Primary School, this is one of their areas of major concerns now? - Yes.

And it may indeed be a major concern of others. Albeit it may not be convenient, obviously this Inquiry has to look at the public interest as opposed/opposed to the interests of those such as you. Can you see the legitimate concerns to do something that is required in the public interest following on this tragedy? - I honestly don't know. I honestly don't know. I enjoy my sport. I get a lot of fun out of it. Society has to protect itself, I agree with that, but as to what the answer is I honestly don't know. I don't know if it would serve the public to have all firearms banned or kept in a central armoury. I honestly don't know. I honestly don't know. Tom Hamilton, I think he was mad to do what he did and I am not mad. I know there are a lot of people with a lot of reservations but I am sorry for what happened, I really am, but I don't know what the answer is.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: You will be the holder of a Firearms Certificate, is that right? - That is correct, yes.

Can you tell us which Force issues that certificate to you? - Central Region Police.

Have you had occasion to apply for a certificate from any other police force? - No.

You indicated in your evidence that there is no police force in the land which would issue a certificate for two 9 mm handguns. Do you recall that? - Yes, I recall saying that.

I was wondering how you managed to form that view if you had only.....? - Well, hang on a minute now. What I mean is that police forces in general don't like to give out guns of the same calibre. I mean, I own two .22 calibre rifles and when I applied for the second .22 calibre rifle the officer who came along said to me "John you have already got one rifle, what the hell do you need another one for?" I said to him "It's a different discipline, Duncan. This rifle is for positioning and the second rifle is for pulling". "Oh, okay, I'll go and tell them that". That was a good and sufficient reason. If I had said "Duncan, well, I just fancy another gun", I know perfectly well he would have said "That's not a good enough reason, you're not getting it".

And do you know what reason was given by Mr. Hamilton? - No, I have no idea.

So/

So does it follow therefore that if an appropriate reason is given there would be no good cause why two guns of the same calibre might not be permitted? - If Tom Hamilton had a good reason for having two guns of the same calibre of the same make and the same type, if he had a good reason then I daresay Central Scotland Police would have given him it.

We have heard evidence from Mr. Gary Hyde who is the manager of an outfit called York Guns. Have you heard of York Guns? - I have seen their advertisement.

Is it quite a big outfit? - I think it is.

Where was it you saw their advert? - It was in a shooting magazine called "Target Gun" I think it is.

So they advertise quite regularly in such magazines?
- Yes.

His view this morning was that it was not unusual for someone to have two 9 mm firearms. Is that something you would agree with or disagree with? - I wouldn't agree with that. I would not agree with it because.....

Do you think he might be in a better position to judge, being the manager of a main dealership? - Well, he is in the business of selling guns.

Does that not mean he might be in a better position to judge than yourself? - No, because I have been asked for my opinion. What you have got is my opinion. What you said was Gary Hyde's opinion. I think it was odd given that he was interested in shooting Police Pistol. He was interested in shooting Police Pistol and he got a 9 mm to shoot Police Pistol so what was he needing another one for Police Pistol for?

That would depend on the reason he gave to the police, would you accept that? - Yes.

RE/

3.50 p.m.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: You mentioned practice as one of the reasons for taking weapons home? - Yes.

What practice do you do at home? - Oh -- right. It is a technique called "dry fire", and it is very useful for helping to develop your muscle control, to hold the firearm steady. The National Small Bore Rifle Association Disciplines, and the International Shooting Range Disciplines require the competitor to hold the pistol in one arm.

So you can imagine 2 lbs. of metal at arm's length -- after a while it starts to wobble and shake. So what we do is we dry-fire pistols, being a device which allows the hammer to be cocked and then the trigger squeezed, but the hammer -- it doesn't fall on the firing pin to stress it and therefore vibrate it. The hammer is intercepted, there is a check -- there is the same trigger weight, but there is no damage done to the gun. Now, dry-firing is a damned good method of improving your scores.

One thing I take it for sure is that you don't need ammunition at home? - No, because it is on your firearms certificate, that the firearms and the ammunition are to be used in the appropriate range. Now, your home isn't an appropriate range, unless you happen to have a range there.

So you don't need to keep the ammunition at home? - No.

And it is presumably easy to store ammunition in a club? - Yes it is.

You also don't need to have the magazine at home? - No, I don't think you need to have the magazine at home.

And it would be easy enough to keep the magazine at a club? - Oh yes, magazines are small.

But at the moment you can buy magazines even without your firearms certificate; is that right? - That's correct, yes.

So it wouldn't be much good keeping magazines in the club unless there was some way of preventing/preventing the ready substitution of other magazines you can buy in the street? - Well, it doesn't really matter anyway, because it would be a simple matter to open the pistol up, insert a bullet into the breach, close the pistol up and bang, you could fire it.

Only if you had it at home? - Only if you had the ammunition at home.

And you would have to load it one by one? - Yes.

For every shot? - Yes.

So at least you wouldn't be able to do the damage that was done at Dunblane? - That is very true.

BY LORD CULLEN: Just on the matter of magazines, can you tell me, do magazines bear unique serial numbers or not? - No.

One other matter: you said when you first came to Callander Range Mr. Hamilton was doing his own thing? - Yes.

Presumably that means shooting on his own; is that right? - No. When I say he was doing his own thing I mean he was shooting at his own targets.

Was he competing with anyone else? - No, he wasn't competing with anyone else.

Though he told you that he had engaged in Police Pistol? - Yes.

And there was some sort of competition about that on the second occasion? - That is right.

Is it common or uncommon for shooters at a club like Callander to shoot entirely on their own without competing against somebody else? - Most of the people I know, they shoot for scores, so that the scores can be compared with other people, in models -- for glory, because there is no money in it. Some people are shy, they don't like to shoot in close-up competition because they feel if they don't/don't do very well people will laugh at them, people will snigger and make caustic comments. But by and large people shoot for scores to be compared with other people.

Do you mean by that they shoot in competition? - They shoot in competition. The Scottish Pistol Association run competitions for every class of firearm and every -- how can I put it -- ever skill of a shooter.

But there are some shy people who prefer to shoot on their own? - That is correct, yes.

Does that mean they will always remain in that condition? May they graduate to competition, or are they likely to be that way all the time? - Well, what we try and do is we try and encourage them by -- how can I put it -- how can I put it -- we try and encourage them, to give them that self-confidence to know that they are not alone, that everybody makes mistakes, everybody has bad days, and that there is a tremendous camaraderie among members, among all the people who you will meet at shooting competitions.

JOHN SMITH BAIRD WILSON (62), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I live in Stirling.

Were you formerly a police officer? - Yes.

With Central Scotland? - Yes.

Over what period? - January 1955 until July 1989.

Now, that is what -- 34 years? - Yes.

That is a long time for a policeman? - Yes. I was kept on that bit extra because I was the Firearms Instructor.

And during which period were you the firearms/firearms instructor.

And during which period were you the firearms instructor? - I qualified in 1975, although I had started in 1974, and finished some time in 1989.

Did you know Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

How did you get to know him? - He had a shop, Woodcraft, which was in Cowane Street in Stirling, one of the DIY places. His prices were good. He used to give 10 per cent discount to the police.

So the police actually got a discount? - Well, I did, and certainly others did as well.

While you were dealing with him in the shop, and perhaps over the years after that, were you suspicious of anything? - Yes.

What? - He was unusual -- effeminate. He had a tendency to sort of wring his hands. There was a bit of a feeling of discomfort.

What about his interest in Boys' Clubs, young boys? - As far as I knew he hadn't been reported for anything. I knew he was interested, because he had his back shop done out with carpet right up the wall, and he had boys' photographs on the carpet.

Can you tell me what these photos were like? - They were I think stripped to the waist like photographs -- certainly nothing naked.

We have heard some evidence today of photographs with black swimming trunks and nothing else -- they weren't of that type? - I can't remember that.

But nothing indecent? - No.

Did you know he was interested in shooting? - Yes.

And because of your interest as the Firearms Instructor did you have something in common there, or did it never arise? - Not a great deal. I/

I had a fair idea of what weapons he had, but I never shot along with him. On one or two occasions he asked if he could come to the Police Range, and I always managed to put him off for some reason or another.

Would you take someone else to the Police Range? -
Yes.

But not Thomas Hamilton? - No.

Why? - Well, I suppose because they looked normal and Tommy Hamilton definitely didn't look quite the normal person.

Were you yourself a club shooting marksman? -
Well, I was an instructor.

I appreciate that, but were you also a member somewhere? - Yes. I took the class on Wednesday night, the Police Firearms Club, and so shot on a Wednesday night.

So there was a Police Firearms Club on Wednesday night? - Oh yes.

And where did that normally shoot? - Randolphfield, the Police Headquarters, Randolphfield.

Thursday, 7th March this year, did you meet Thomas Hamilton? - Now, if this is the meeting in Debenham's?

Yes? - I couldn't swear whether it was Thursday or Friday, but I did meet him.

So that is 7th or 8th March? - 7th or 8th March.

Where did you meet him? - In Debenham's, the Cook Department of Debenham's.

In Stirling? - Yes.

About what time? - I would have thought 20/25 past 11, or maybe -- I was with him for about 15 minutes I think, and I do know that I left him at 20 minutes to 12.

Is/

Is that a Department where you can buy kitchens? -
Yes, there is kitchen.....

Or kitchen units, anyway, and fit them yourself? - No,
no.

Just kitchen utensils? - I had been giving a cookery course at one of our local hotels, and I was interested in cooking -- so it was utensils.

Were you speaking to him? - Yes.

Initially what was the conversation about? - Well, I heard him say "Hello, John, how are you?" I turned round, and of course it was Tom Hamilton. It was his usual, wringing of the hands, and I asked him what he was doing and he said he was dealing in camera lenses and cameras.

Did he ask you what you were doing? - Yes.

And what did you say? - That I had retired.

Were you uncomfortable in his presence? - Yes.

Was that always the case anyway? - To a certain extent. He was okay in his Woodcraft shop, because it was a customer/client relationship (sic); but in Debenham's he had put on weight -- he looked different, and I felt uneasy while I was speaking to him.

When had you last seen him? - Five or six years ago I would have thought.

And this occasion on 7th or 8th March, was that the first time you had felt uneasy? - No, but I felt uneasier.

Right. Did he say anything about what he was doing in the shooting world? - Yes.

What did he tell you? - He mentioned Callander -- he mentioned the range there. He said that the Linofix -- the Linofix is a screen which stops spatter from bullets -- was badly damaged, and
the/

the range was spattered. And he said "Much the same as you had at Police Headquarters" -- when our range had to be closed because there was excess lead and not enough ventilation in it.

Did you give him some advice about that problem? - I gave him advice about two or three things. The main thing I gave him advice about is I have tinnitus, a ringing in the left ear, and I told him to make sure he always had his ears covered, never to have a shot without -- for a while at the Police Range we were getting ammunition in that was pumping about a third of its content out on to the floor, so much so that when the cleaner was using the Hoover one day it blew up because it was full of gunpowder. I told him about that.

And that was the general nature of the conversation?

- Yes.

Did he ask about instruction in shooting? - Yes.

What did he ask you? - He said "My conventional shooting is okay, but I am not very good at 10 yards", and he said "I could do with some instruction" -- inferring that I give him it.

What was your response to that? - I said that I had tinnitus and I seldom pulled the trigger of a gun, I certainly have stopped shooting game and I have become anti blood-sports.

Did you mention the problem with your ear? - Yes. I think he knew this before -- yes, I am sure he said "How did you get on with your ear?" I am sure he brought that up, although I couldn't say for certain.

And do you have some dispute ongoing over that? -

Yes, I do.

So there is a claim involved? - Yes.

And did he know that? - Yes.

When that was discussed did his attitude seek to change? - It did. For the first time ever I heard him actually speak against the police. Until then as far as I was concerned he was very very/very police-orientated.

And what did he say? - Regarding?

When he spoke against the police on this occasion? - Oh, yes, he said, you know, the authorities were against him, the parents of the children were against him, the police tried to get kids to say he had done things that he hadn't done -- he certainly was anti-police.

Did he then go on to specific incidents involving the police? - He did.

Which was the first one he mentioned? - Hungerford.

What did he say about Hungerford? - He said that as far as he was concerned that the police, when Michael Ryan started shooting in Hungerford -- that the police were scared to go in. And I said "Well, as far as I remember Michael Ryan was hidden and the police would have been going in as targets". And I finished up by saying one or two other things, but said -- I was disagreeing with him, I was getting a wee bit annoyed, and I said -- my actual words were -- "Anyhow, these nutters normally kill themselves anyway, they don't want to be wounded by police firearms officers".

And did you also say it was better if they did that anyway? - I did.

And did he talk about one local incident as well which actually wasn't a firearms incident? - It was a firearms incident.

Well, in the sense that there were ordinary police officers there? - Yes, but this particular one had happened in Cowie just outside Stirling, where a man phoned up one night and said there was an idiot running about with a shotgun. When the first policeman went out there he found out in actual fact this was the person who had phoned, and he had the back and front of the vehicle blasted by a shotgun.

Now/

4.10 p.m.

Now, you had a view about that incident, the Cowie incident? - Yes, he said that the police firearms team should have been out and taken care of it.

Did he then ask you a question about police firearm responses? - Yes.

What was the question? - I think the first one was "Are firearms kept at all police offices?" and I said "Well, there certainly wasn't while I was there. It was only places that were manned 24 hours a day". Did he ask you anything about the time that the police would take to respond to an armed incident? - Yes, he brought that out by saying "I think that there should be a permanent firearms response unit available, armed and in a car or in a van, that they can get to the scene, very, very quickly".

Can you say that again? You said.....?
- He said.

That the police should.....? - That they should have an armed response vehicle like other forces do -- obviously he had read quite a bit -- that other forces do so that they could get to a firearms incident quickly.

Did you get the impression he was looking for information? - No, not at that time.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: A matter I might raise with you in view of your lengthy experience in firearms is as you will appreciate the staff in Dunblane Primary School take a particular view about firearms? - Yes.

One matter I would like to ask you about is the possibility of a central armoury at perhaps Police Headquarters where all firearms would require to be kept. Have you any view on the practicability or otherwise of such a facility? - Is this for civilians?

Yes? - Absolutely impossible.

Impossible? Why is that? - For the number/number of firearms that are held in Central Scotland it would need a huge team of men to look after it. With the few guns that we did have at the Central Scotland Police Sports Club, it was bad enough there and you are only talking about a few, but to keep weapons, that number, it would be thousands of weapons. Impossible in my opinion.

MONDAY, 3rd JUNE, 1996.

FOURTH DAY.

GORDON STUART CRAWFORD (36), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you an Engineer?

- I am, yes.

Do you live in Falkirk? - Yes, I do.

I think you are the Secretary of The Stirling Rifle and Pistol Club? - That is correct.

How long have you been secretary? - Since 1990.

How long have you been a member of that club? -
Since 1986.

Are you a member of any other pistol or rifle club? -
Yes, I am.

Which ones? - It is the Forth Shooting Club.

Where is it based? - It is currently constructing an indoor range at Hopetoun.

How long have you been a member of that club? -
Two years.

Do you hold any official position there? - No.

Are you the holder of a firearms certificate? - Yes.

From which police authority? - Central Scotland Police.

How long have you held a firearms certificate? -
Since 1987.

Can you tell me what weapons you are authorised to hold under that certificate? - I currently have authority or am in possession of eight at the moment and have authority for another five,
I think it is.

Eight? - Yes, eight at the moment.

You/

You hold weapons because of your position as secretary of that club? - I also have the club's certificate, yes; I have five on that certificate.

I am not so concerned about that; can I look at your own personal.....as a personal marksman how many weapons are you authorised to hold? - I think it is a total of 12; I don't have my certificate with me to refer to but I have eight in possession at the moment.

You could have 12? - Yes, I think it is 12.

What are they? - I have a .38 centre fire rifle, I have a .22 rifle, a 357 revolver, a .45 self loading pistol, a 22 self loading pistol, a 38 self loading pistol, a 38 self loading revolver, I have a 308 long range pistol which is a single shot pistol and a 12 gauge shotgun.

Are these all for different shooting disciplines? - That is correct.

So could it be said that any one of these is simply a spare for the ones you normally use in a particular discipline? - They could be regarded as a spare, yes; I only have one 22 target pistol at the moment so as far as the 22 UIT type of disciplines are concerned I don't actually have a spare.

LORD CULLEN: Could you bring the microphone closer to you, I am having difficulty hearing you.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: You have a number of full bore handguns in the list that you gave us? - That is correct.

And there were a number of different calibres there? - Yes, that is correct.

Can you just tell me the calibres of full bore handguns you have? - I have a 38 calibre self loading pistol, a 38 calibre revolver.

Are these for two different disciplines or/or for the same discipline? - The 38 revolver was purchased with a view to customising it into a competition pistol; it was bought secondhand with the intention to send it to a gunsmith to make into a proper competition target revolver.

Would this be used in the same type of competitions or different ones? - They could be used in the same type of competitions; once the revolver was customised with a proper target barrel, sight, etc., it could be used in a variety of police or service type pistol competitions; the self loading pistol can also be used in these competitions and also for competitions where it is only for self loading pistols.

So it has a wider use than the revolver? - No, the revolver has a wider use than the self loading pistol although the self loading pistol is my particular favourite.

Can we move on to your handguns? - I have a 357 revolver -- again it can be used for police pistol type discipline; I do keep that as a spare for that sort of competition; it is basically out of the box, it has no modifications done to it whatsoever so in some competitions you use it to fire a pistol which is completely standard.

Does that complete the list of full bore handguns? - No, I have also a .45 self loading pistol that I use for service pistol type disciplines.

Now, can you with any one of these carry out all the disciplines that you are interested in for handguns? - No, I can't.

For example, you have talked about police pistol and service pistol competitions; can you participate in all of these? - You can participate if you are prepared to be orientated; not all the procedures are entirely suitable, each has different characteristics; the police service is a self loading 38 calibre.

Can you use either one of each of the other three for the discipline you presently use that one for? - Yes, you can.

Do/

Do you compete outwith your own clubs? - I do.

Where, for example, do you compete? - I have been a regular contender at Bisley during the May Bank Holiday weekends since 1993.

Your firearms certificate will fully authorise you to hold ammunition? - That is correct.

How much? - My personal certificates entitle me to hold about 4000 rounds of mixed calibres.

That is for the various calibres you have? - Yes.

A total of about 4000? - Yes.

And that is for as many as 12 weapons altogether? - Yes.

Now, when you first applied to join The Stirling Rifle and Pistol Club in May, 1986 -- --? - That is correct.

Was the system you had to go through the same as is in force at present? - No, it is not, it is slightly different; then you had two sponsors for the club, two full members of the club.

To propose and second you? - Yes.

That is in 1986? - Yes.

What is the difference today? - The difference today is they have changed it back to that system where it is now only one full member is required under the Home Office guidance but the club still require two.

So the system is actually the same? - Essentially, yes.

Apart from having a proposer and seconder does a person that wishes to become a member need any other support or approval? - Prior to the 1st January the club's application form required every applicant to have a signatory who was someone/someone who knew him personally outwith the club.

Were these eligible people who were under a restriction in some way? - We suggested that they actually have someone of a professional standing -- in other words, somebody who could at some point in the future be a counter signatory for a firearms certificate application form.

Is that still the case after the 1st January? - No, the criteria was relaxed by the Home Office on the 1st January.

What is the position now? - They suggest you don't need a counter signatory on the application form.

Do you not bother with any supporting referee now? - We actually find that most of our new members who come along to the club are by invitation only so they tend to know somebody in the club already.

The fact of the matter is if someone from outside wished to come along they would need the support of a referee? - That is correct.

Does the Stirling club have premises? - No, we don't.

Where is the shooting range? - We hire ranges which have a variety of certificates; for a competition of a military variety we would hire the Whitestone range in Dunblane and we are currently using the Inverclyde International Sports Centre at Largs.

Are these all ranges where you can use full bore weapons? - Yes, they are.

Are club members mainly interested in full bore or small bore shooting? - The majority of members are interested in full bore.

How many members does the club have? - Approximately 63 currently.

Did you know Thomas Hamilton? - Only in the context of shooting on the range, I didn't know him personally.

In/

In that context when did you first meet him? - When he probably joined the club during 1987.

Do you remember him joining in 1987? - No, I don't, I wasn't secretary then.

Well, what is your best recollection of when you first encountered him on the range? - Probably 1988 onwards, 1989, something like that.

Was he a regular visitor to the club meetings at the various ranges from 1988? - No, he wasn't; he was an irregular attender in the fact we would regard him as a fair weather shooter -- unless it was bright and sunny Tom wouldn't appear.

Can members of the Stirling club acquire ammunition through the club? - Yes, they can.

Do any of the members actually do that? - Yes, they do, in the context of full bore rifle ammunition.

And what about pistols? - We have only started re-stocking pistols since the end of last year.

Between 1988 and the end of 1995 did you stock ammunition for pistols? - I have only had the club certificate since 1995, I think it is, so prior to that it was a previous club armourer who has always certain stocks of 9 millimetre ammunition but it never moved.

Thomas Hamilton's firearms certificate indicates no purchases of ammunition between 1987 and 1995; now, that would apply only to commercially purchased ammunition? - That is correct.

Without ammunition you can't do any shooting; are you quite clear that he had attended the Stirling meetings between 1988 and 1995? - Yes, I have seen him, I would say I have seen him several times.

Over that period? - Over that period.

On/

On an annual basis can you give us a rough idea of how many times he attended your meetings? - Maybe three or four times -- as I said he wasn't a very regular attender.

Is there a book in which attendances at meetings is to be recorded? - We used to keep a loose leaf attendance sheet; as I said to the detective who came to the house I had only recently had a clean out and I have got rid of them all.

So there are no records of what he did? - Apart from the attendance book there is no record going back beyond January.

Is there anyone in particular he came to the club with?
- He was always seen with Clive Wood.
Was Clive Wood a member? - Yes.

Was he a member before Thomas Hamilton? - I don't know.

Do you know if Thomas Hamilton may have had membership much earlier than 1987 which elapsed? - I don't know, I can't answer that.

Did you ever have a conversation with Hamilton? - Not in a social sense.

About shooting even? - Yes, I had various conversations with him on the range when he would appear, the last of which was on the 2nd March this year.

Generally speaking what were these conversations about? - It is hard to remember exactly; I would ask him about what he wanted to do, what he would be looking to do, the particular shooting discipline; like the police or service disciplines, Tom wasn't interested, he didn't appear to be competition orientated, he wanted to do other things, shooting at 10 metres which we are not interested in and we suggested to him that he follow along with everybody else in the club.

Did he? - To an extent; he wouldn't necessarily follow the course of fire, he didn't have a good understanding of competition.

What/

What do you mean he didn't follow the course of fire?

- It starts at 25 metres, it is classed as a repeat A target which is a caricature of a man's pose on a police training target; 25 metres, it is 12 rounds in two minutes and the command is six rounds down range and most of the members would follow that command but Thomas would blast off all 12 rounds and I had occasion to mention to him that the course of fire was strictly six rounds where he has to load six rounds, re-load another six rounds; it is not in the rules of competition and he continued with the full 12 rounds.

When did you first experience this behaviour that was not in keeping with the rules? - Prior to becoming secretary, as an ordinary member; on all occasions I had noticed Tom on the range he would tend to fire the full magazine rapidly, there was no deliberate practice on his part to improve the score or to improve his technique.

Is/

10.20 a.m.

Is that not something that should have caused concern to members of your club? - The criteria on the range is that safety is everything on the range, and there is a qualified range conductor, and obviously that is the sole criteria in management of the range, that everything is safe and is seen to be safe. If somebody fires off 12 rounds in 20 seconds, as long as these rounds are entering into the backstop, or the bullet catcher, that person is deemed to be safe.

Can it be said that what he was doing in these circumstances was genuinely target shooting?

- No.

Is that not in fact the only good reason a member of a rifle or pistol club has for getting a Firearms Certificate? - I would agree with that, yes.

BY LORD CULLEN: Just to be clear about this, was he in fact taking part in competitions against fellow members, or was he working on his own or what was he doing? - Tom never entered into competitions whatsoever.

Would you describe him, in the way in which he carried out the discipline, or rather failed to carry out the discipline as was intended

-- was he doing this solo, or was he doing it along with others? - There was others in the firing line. You would have five people in a row, and they would all have their own individual targets. When Tom blasted off in 20 seconds it was noticeable that other shooters in the line were disturbed by his rate of fire.

And was there a Range Officer giving a command as to when to fire? - I have given that command on occasion, and I have had to chastise him. I have said to him "That isn't in the spirit of the competition".

But he wasn't in fact competing? - That is correct.

He had a starting point given to him by the Range Officer, and of course the same would apply/apply to any other shooters in the line? - Yes. If he wanted to shoot he had to start along with the rest of us, and do the discipline we were practising, otherwise he wouldn't be able to shoot. When we tried to give him advice he wasn't open to that advice.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: And does it follow that the other persons who were shooting at the same time were actually shooting against each other so that their scores would be counted up? - That is correct.

You also mentioned his fondness for shooting at 10 metres? - Yes.

I take it to enable him to do that he would have to do the earlier routine of shooting at other distances first of all till he got to the 10 metre line? - That is correct.

Or is it yards or metres you work with? - Metres.

BY LORD CULLEN: I should have asked you another question. You said he was a fair weather attender. Does your club have any rule by which in order to retain membership somebody who is a member requires to attend for a minimum number of meetings a year, or something of that sort? - Not currently, although that has been debated. To date the problem Stirling faces is that by hiring an MOD range, as we do, the MOD have cancelled events at short notice. So if we were to impose on somebody "You must come four times a year", we have had a whole year cancelled from under our feet at one point -- almost a whole year. They can cancel a booking within seven days and say "You can't use the range, the range has been closed for maintenance work".

I can understand that, but that isn't likely to result in one year's meetings being cancelled? - It has happened in the past.

For a year? - Yes, they have closed it because of problems with the bullet catcher at the back, what we call the backstop.

But in practice when that has happened have/have you been able to reinstate at least a reasonable number of meetings in the year? - Yes, we have used other ranges.

So at no stage has your club had a rule of the sort that I have envisaged? - That is correct.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: Have you yourself since you joined the club regularly attended meetings? - Yes, I have.

What sort of percentage attendance have you had over that period? - I would say 90 per cent.

So far as Hamilton is concerned what did you observe about the pattern of his attendance? - Very haphazard. There was a period where we hadn't seen him for I would say nine months.

And then what would happen? - He would suddenly appear back again.

How often? - It happened at the beginning of this year where we hadn't seen him since probably last May, something like that, and he started appearing on January, and he was walking into the range, which was unusual.

You mean walking from his home? - Well, he had either got public transport somewhere -- because the range -- it is a Sunday booking that we have, to which he appeared to walk out just after lunch time.

Prior to that how did he travel? - He travelled by vehicle.

By car? - By car.

On the subject of membership, just to complete that -- which we touched on earlier -- is there a fee to be a member of your club? - Yes.

What is the fee? - It is currently £55.

And is there any form of membership card or identification issued to members? - I have attempted to issue membership cards to all members, not long after I became Secretary. They had to produce/produce photographs. Not all members complied with that, but the majority of members who turn up have membership cards.

So this is the ones who have produced photographs who have membership cards? - Yes.

Some haven't done that? - Some haven't done that.

So far as recent attendances are concerned by Hamilton, can you tell me when you first saw him in 1996? - It would be the first booking at Whitestone, I believe.

Would that be 4th February? - It rings a bell, yes.

We are talking about late January or early February, are we? - Yes.

Was he with anyone on that occasion? - No, he wasn't. He came himself.

Did you see him shooting? - Yes I did.

What was he shooting with? - He had three pistols, two 9 mm Brownings and one revolver. At the time I said to the detective at the time that I thought it was a Luger revolver. I later corrected that. It was probably a Smith and Wesson.

Now, is it common for someone to turn up at one of these meetings with three guns? - Yes, it is not unusual.

Do you know whether he used them all? - No, I don't.

Would the next meeting be a fortnight later? - Yes, it would.

Did he come again? - Yes.

Do you remember what weapons he had on that occasion? - Again as far as I remember he had two 9 mm Brownings with him. I can't recall if he had the revolver.

On any of these occasions did you make arrangements/arrangements for him to get a lift home? - Yes, I did.

Who was that with? - I think in the first instance it was with the club President, George Smith. I gave him a lift home on one occasion as well.

So on one of these two occasions you actually ran him?
- Yes.

Now, when was the last time you saw Hamilton? -
March the 2nd this year.

And where was that? - That was at the Scottish National Sports Centre at Inverclyde, at Largs.

So you had booked the range there for the day? - That is correct.

And did you meet him there? - Yes. He was brought there by Alex Wood, and he was a passenger in the car with two other members.

Did you have any discussions with Hamilton that day? -
Yes, I did.

What was that about? - It was the start of the competition season, so members had expressed an interest to do some practice prior to competition starting. So they wanted to do a police pistol course of fire and a service pistol course of fire. So we put the targets up, and Tom came along and stuck on the self-adhesive orange fluorescent patches, two of them. And I said to him "That is not what we are here for", and took them off the target.

Had he done that before? - He would do that at Whitestone, yes. He used to put little fluorescent patches on.

And did you allow him to do that at Whitestone? -
Some people put little white marks on as an aiming mark. It appeared that is all he was doing.

Presumably you put that in the middle of the bullseye? -
Well, in the competitions you don't/don't have an aiming mark like that. You have to stay with the existing target. You can't put your own aiming mark.

But where did he put these aiming marks? - He put one in the centre of the target and one at the top of the target.

And why would he put one at the top of the target? - I am not sure.

And he was allowed to do this at Whitestone when there was no formal competition going? - That is correct.

Where did he put them on the target at Largs? - In Largs on the PPI target -- the target takes the form of the caricature of a man. He had one fluorescent marker on the centre and one round about the chin area which would be in the position of the '7' ring of the target.

Now, in the past you saw him do that and he was allowed to shoot. Did he shoot in the direction of these markers? - Yes, he did.

So there would be two points on the humanoid target that he was shooting at at Whitestone, for example? - Yes. At Largs I had taken those markers off.

Did you have to give him any other individual instruction at Largs? - I tried to give him some instruction as to the course of fire at the start, knowing in the past he had shot off 12 rounds in 20 odd seconds. However, that was to no avail, because he basically did the same as he did before, and I had to say to him then that it wasn't in the spirit of the competition.

Which guns did he have with him? - At Largs I believe he had the three guns with him, two 9 mm Brownings and a .375 revolver.

Was he using any one in particular? - I believe he was using the Browning more than anything else.

Well, that would be one of the Brownings? - That was one of the Brownings, yes.

Can/

Can you tell us any distinguishing feature about that which would enable us to tell which of the two Brownings it was? - The Browning he was using was -- they call it a competition model. It has a longer barrel and a barrel weight.

Later on in the day did you speak to him at all, or was that the last you spoke to him? - No. We started to do service pistol targets, and that entails a competitor has two targets in front of him, a left and a right, and you eventually end up at 10 metres. Now, the course of fire is six rounds, only it is three on each target at 10 metres in six seconds. Tom expended 12 rounds on the one target, with one pistol, and I said to him "That is out of order".

But so far as you were concerned there was nothing unsafe about it, I take it? - No, there was nothing unsafe. His handling of the firearm was safe.

And as long as there was nothing unsafe the club wouldn't do anything about his membership? - That is correct.

BY LORD CULLEN: Let us ask you: supposing he persisted in such behaviour, despite what you said to him? - Yes.

Would any club official take any further action? - Yes. It would get to a point whereby the rest of the members would get fed up having to correct him. We would say to him "Either you follow the course of fire that we are giving you or you don't take part at all. It gets to a point whereby if you are constantly watching this person, then safety could be compromised by an individual like that, because you are constantly aware that he is doing something different from everybody else, and you would tend to focus on that individual.

And not taking part at all would mean effectively not being able to use his gun in any range where your club was operating? - We would quite specifically say to him "Look, if you are going to carry on this behaviour then we don't want you to take part". We would do competition targets. There would then be a period of time when the targets which are turning targets would be static/static and we would say to people "Look, if you want to have a small bit of practice to yourself you can go in at that point in time". So Tom would slot in then, but as far as the theme of the day was concerned, it was going to be competition practice.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: So in other words, you were really concerned at allowing him to take part in your competitions, but his membership would still be secure? - Yes, it would.

Even in spite of repeated breaches of the instructions that a Range Officer was giving him? - He had been given instructions on the course of fire. If the person chooses on the course of fire to fire off in 20 seconds, if he does it in two six-round spurts, that is up to him. He has two minutes in which to fire, within a particular stage. If he chose to fire in 20 seconds, then all that would be reflected in is a poor score.

Yes, but he was doing something you thought wasn't in the spirit of the competition? - Yes. These were the rules I was operating to, and these are issued by the National Pistol Shooting Association, Shooting Rules and Regulations. So running competitions within this context, I had to point out to him that it wasn't in the spirit of the competition.

Now, we have heard some evidence about the Browning you have mentioned being modified in a way which meant that when you removed the magazine the gun wasn't safe -- whereas with most guns when you remove the magazine it can't fire, there is a mechanism that it can't fire; is that right? - Not all guns are manufactured the same.

Is it not unusual to have one in respect of which the removal of the magazine doesn't make it safe? - It is not unusual. I have a pistol which is like that.

Can I ask you just a little bit about ammunition. Mr. Hamilton used ammunition which he bought commercially? - That is correct.

As far as you could tell; is that right? - That is all I ever saw him use, was commercial ammunition./ ammunition.

So can I take it he never bought any at your club? - No, he never bought any of our ammunition.

At the Largs meeting -- sorry, if I can go back to that question: is it unusual for someone just to use commercially manufactured ammunition? - Yes, it is.

Is it exceptional? - It is exceptional, because commercial ammunition is expensive and it doesn't necessarily give you the best target performance from the pistol.

But do you have other members who use only commercially manufactured ammunition? - I can't think of any at this time.

So far as the Largs meeting is concerned, did he actually score in the competition? - Yes, I scored his target for him.

And how well did he score? - He was 220 out of 300.

And how does that shape up? - Well, as an example, I have got a score sheet from Pistol '94 at Bisley, and there was 561 competitors in 1994, and 220 would have put him at 533 out of 561. Mine was, on this one, at No. 35.

On/

10.40 a.m.

On the day at Largs where did it put him? - At the bottom out of the I4 that were there.

Just look at one document for me please. It is ME65. In the volume it is D55L. Is that Mr. Hamilton's application for membership of the Stirling Rifle and Pistol Club? - It is.

Dated 18th February 1986? - That is correct.

And he was proposed by a gentleman called Cole and seconded by a gentleman called Perry? - That is William Cole and William Perry.

Were they both members at that time? - They were, yes.

His occupation was given by Mr. Hamilton himself as a kitchen fitter? - That is correct.

And he gave a firearms certificate number; is that right? Down at the bottom. FAC, does that relate to a firearms certificate? - I'm not sure. I didn't write that.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Am I correct in understanding that if I wanted to join the Stirling Club I would not require to have in my possession a firearms certificate? - That is correct.

What I would require according to your rules would be the support of two members? - That's correct, yes.

But in terms of Home Office recent changes in fact only one would be required at least for some of the club? - Yes, that is correct.

So if I wanted to learn how to use firearms without going through the procedure of obtaining a firearms certificate from the police, a club such as yours would be the means of doing it? - That is correct. We have no means of checking your background. So in essence you can come along and sign the attendance sheet which has been created since/since January where under Section 21 of the Act you have to declare you are not a prohibited person. So you can come along and engage in target shooting with us. You can use the club guns and as far as we are concerned we don't actually know whether you are a prohibited person or not. You have made a statement you are not but you can continue using the club guns but you would not be able to take them away with you. You would only be able to use them on the range.

And if in fact I possessed firearms unlawfully at home, let's say, then again my membership of a club, a gun club, would afford me the opportunity of learning how to use such weapons? - Not with illegal guns.

Agreed, but with similar weapons? - You could certainly learn the skills, yes.

So far as Thomas Hamilton is concerned, if, and I appreciate it is only an if, if by March of this year he had formed some murderous intention then the shoot on the 2nd March 1996 would have given him an opportunity of practising his skills such as they were? - He has practised those skills since 1977 I believe, far less the 2nd March.

I wonder if I could just ask you a few general questions. Is the Stirling Pistol and Rifle Club subject to..... I'm not singling your club out here. Let me make that plain. I'm just using you as an example. Is your club subject to any system of police or any other authority's registration or approval? - The club has Home Office approval currently. We required in 1992 to re-submit for approval and that was done under..... I forget the number. The Home Office approval reference number is DDG/5/5/C3. That was confirmed by the Secretary of State for Scotland on the 27th May 1992. Information regarding the club, the club has a safety and training document which you are more than welcome to have a look at and that is all contained in there for the club.

Is a club such as yours required to seek and obtain such Home Office approval? - I believe we are, yes. I believe some other clubs, if they are a private club, I think that is the term, they don't actually need approval but we need approval in order/order for members to have club guns and to use club guns.

So the approval or the need for approval is triggered by the existence and use of club guns? - That is correct.

And just in the briefest terms if you would, what do you require to do or submit or undergo in order to obtain this approval? - You have to have a proper constitution which I have a copy of.

I don't think we need to go into the details of the constitution? - Right. A proper constitution. That constitution was sent to the Scottish Home and Health Department for approval along with the club's application form for approval.

Anything else? - We also supplied, and I don't know if this applies to other clubs, a safety and training document which we had compiled over a number of years.

Does anybody come to speak to you or to inspect you or to ask questions or anything like that? - I don't recall that that happened, no.

Apart from this 1992 approval procedures which you have just mentioned, was the club subject to any form of licensing or registration or police approval? - We currently have to have what are called range conducting officers who are qualified as such via the Ministry of Defence through the auspices of the National Rifle Association. In the past that was done by recommendation from the club chairman. In other words, if I thought that that particular person was of suitable character he would be recommended to be a range conducting officer. His name would go to the National Rifle Association and we would end up with a range conducting officer certificate. Come January of next year the Military have said, and the NRA have agreed, that qualification by recommendation should cease and from that point you have to be course qualified. Last year Stirling took the decision that we would be course qualified early so 12 of our members have been through a recognised ranging conducting officer's course for both rifle and pistol for the use of military ranges.

And/

And this course would equip you to carry out the duties of such an officer I take it? - Yes, it does. Again, I have copies of the course notes that were supplied as part of the training package.

But am I to understand from this that for example you would not require any approval or registration or licence from Central Scotland Police for example? - Effectively the police would be taking it that you were Home Office approved.

Can I take it therefore and please correct me if I am wrong, that there was no system whereby anyone from the Home Office or from Central Scotland Police would monitor or supervise the activities of the club? - That is correct.

And so far as the conduct of the club is concerned, and please don't misunderstand me, I am not making any personal criticism but just in general terms, so far as the rules and conduct of the club are concerned, that would be a matter for the club itself to determine? - That is correct.

You explained in answer to a question from my learned friend Mr. Bonomy what you would do in certain situations where for example a member does not obey orders. Am I correct in understanding that there are no universal standards laid down which clubs such as yourself must follow? - To some extent that is correct. There is no standard training package that clubs should actually follow and that is why we attempted to create our own. Competition rules however are the most comprehensive set of rules that we currently have. Both with the UIT discipline and for the certificate discipline.

And the reason for that presumably is competition by its nature would require to have rules and regulations which every body abides by? - That is correct.

Is there any local hierarchy of gun clubs and associations? - Not as far as I am aware.

Is there any national hierarchy? A Scottish Rifle Association? - Yes, there are Scottish/Scottish Associations. There is the Scottish Rifle Association. There is the Scottish Pistol Association. There is the Scottish Target Shooting Federation which is an amalgam of all bodies.

What is the role and function of such national organisations? - In the case of these organisations, they would organise competitions outwith other clubs and they organise competitions which are open. So in the case of the Scottish Pistol Association, they regularly run competitions through the season at a variety of ranges throughout Scotland.

So do I correctly understand from that answer that their principal function is in terms of the organisation and regulation of competition? - Yes.

How many female members does the club have? - Five.

Out of how many? - Out of about 63.

Are these five full members, the ladies? - No, they are not. Only two are full members. The other three are probationers at the present time.

How many members roughly are members of the Police Force? - I have one member who is a member of the Police Force.

You mentioned I think at the beginning of this year the Home Office suggested that the need for a counter-signatory on any application to join your club could be done away with in general terms. Was any reason given for that change in the procedure? - I think it may well have come from the Firearms Consultative Committee.

Were you aware or were you informed of any reason for this relaxation? - No, it just came through in the form of a notice from the National Pistol Association and it was reported and given to us in the Firearms Section in the form of a leaflet.

Again, forgive me if this is familiar to yourself but am I correct in understanding that Hamilton was somewhat perhaps unusual in only using commercial/commercial ammunition? - Yes, he was.

The normal practice or the common practice would be what? - The normal practice for the members of Stirling is to reload their own. This affords them the ability to match the ammunition to the particular firearm they are using. Not all firearms are the same. They have different twists in the rifle or the barrel. One may be faster or slower than the other and for that reason you wish to make ammunition which will best utilise the ballistic performance.

Forgive me because I really know very little about this but am I to understand from.....? - It is like a car. It is a tuning process. You may find that some ammunition might fire okay through a Smith and Wesson and if you use the same ammunition in a Colt it does not group so well so you end up losing a point so the benefit of reloading is that you can then tune the ammunition by changing the amount of powder you put in it or changing the weight of the bullet or the style of the bullet that you use to obtain the best performance.

So you effectively manufacture your own ammunition?
- That's correct, yes.

Were you aware of any reason why Thomas Hamilton differed in this respect? - I don't think he was interested in the aspects of the reloading side of things. He merely just wanted to go up and shoot. That was it.

He wasn't interesting in the reloading aspects and he didn't appear to be interested in competition? - That is correct.

What was he interested in? - He appeared to be just interested in coming along and having a casual shoot on those occasions that he appeared at the range.

Reverting again if I may, and forgive me for using you as an example here but I am sure you will understand why I am asking you these questions? - Yes.

If a member simply stopped coming to the club/club, what if anything would you do? - If a member stopped coming to the club, currently there is not much we can do under the constitution unless he fails to pay his subscriptions. I have had occasion recently to inform Strathclyde Police of such an incident. I have a Fax which was dated the 25th March 1996 about a member who has failed to pay his subscription and I have told them that he is no longer a member of Stirling Rifle and Pistol Club.

Are you envisaging the introduction of any system whereby for example if somebody simply stops going to the club you inform the police authority? - Yes. I think we should. I think it is a responsible thing to do.

When you say Yes, you think you should, is this something you are envisaging for the future? - It has been discussed in the past, about absentee members if you can call it that or people who appear to go from one firearms certificate renewal to the next and we never see them. Once they have a membership of a club, under our constitution it is difficult to remove them for that reason and it has been discussed numerous times in Committee how we actually go about enforcing it without putting the club in danger of litigation for a variety of reasons, as has happened before elsewhere.

Sorry, forgive me. I am not really quite with you. What is the relevance of litigation? - Well, one club down South I believe tried to get rid of a member and they found themselves in Court. So our club is fairly small. We don't have large resources to counter the grievances of a member if he feels he has been hard done by. So yes, we would seek that members who don't do regular attendance, we have to deal with that and say to them "If you don't attend then you can no longer be a member". It is something we have to look at in the future, yes.

Since you have been a member of the club are you aware of any member being expelled? - Yes, I am.

And what, if any, action was taken in relation to that person so far as informing other parties was concerned? - I know of two individuals. One was not long after I joined the club/club. The club used to use what they call a barrack range on the Forthside TA Centre and adjacent to that barrack range is a small room which members use to wait there to go to the range itself. I was not a firearms certificate holder at that time. My friend was the full member. Somebody was showing someone a pistol and used a blank. He was trying to demonstrate how the firearm functioned by putting a blank in the magazine. He then put that magazine into the pistol and let the slide go forward. As a consequence of that his finger was on the trigger and the gun went off. That person was immediately ejected from that club and I believe the then Secretary informed the local police and there was no question, you know, of that absolutely stupid act.

The second person was.....he had been introduced to the club by a person who is no longer a member; he appeared to be okay, he did everything he was told and he had applied for a firearm certificate which was granted; he then got a rifle and he brought that rifle up to its first outing. His friend had manufactured some home made ammunition for him but that ammunition was made using a case which had been fire in another rifle, the consequence of that was the head space or basically the case didn't properly fit the chamber, although it was the same calibre the case didn't quite fit properly the chamber of the rifle so when you fired the rifle the bolt and the whole action of the rifle jammed, it couldn't open, it seized solid; this individual took umbrage at this saying the person had destroyed his rifle and he walked off the firing point; he had left the rifle in its position because it hadn't been cleared, the bolt action was open so it was left on the firing point, pointing in the same direction, towards the target; at the end of the day when we were packing up we realised this person, instead of walking off the firing point, had walked off the range and left the rifle; the then secretary of the club also had a dealer sticker and he took charge of that rifle and entered it on to his register; he contacted the person concerned and that person gave him cause for concern that that person was of unsound mind and the secretary phoned the police and the man's certificate was removed.

So I am led to understand from that that there is a rule in the club if anybody is expelled the police are informed? - That is correct.

If, and in so far as somebody has a firearm's certificate when they join the club, are they required to exhibit it? - Yes, they are.

Is there any regular review of that certificate by the club? - No.

The last matter I want to ask you about is this -- do I understand correctly that on the last shoot that Hamilton was at on the 2nd March he was firing at targets which took the form of the outline of a human figure? - That is correct, yes./

yes.

Is that a common practice? - It is a common practice that is currently used -- what they call police pistol discipline; it is based on a police training target which has on it scoring rings going from 10 out to 5, I think it is, if I remember rightly.

As someone not involved in this type of activity the question arises as to why a humanoid form of target is used rather than any other form of target? - My own opinion is there is no reason for a humanoid target to be there; you can remove the form by changing the pattern -- it is black and white, it is a repetitive target; if you change some of the patterns then the humanoid figure would disappear and a competitive shooter wouldn't notice any difference whether it is a humanoid target or not; in fact, such targets are produced for Germany where the same competition is shot in Germany, the Germans don't allow humanoid targets.

And these targets are turning? - Yes, what you have is you go through a course of fire; at 25 metres you have 12 rounds in two minutes to include a re-load so in the case of a revolver or self loaders it is six rounds and six rounds so you must be able to re-load in that time; going forwards to 15 metres it is two 6 round targets and then it is one shot per two seconds exposure to the target, the target will turn away for five seconds, re-appear for two seconds and in that two seconds you fire one shot. After you have completed that you go forward to 10 metres; there is two shots in two seconds so again the target turns away for five seconds and re-appears for two and you fire two shots so it is a total of 30 shots; the possible score is 300 and a good club shooter should make 285 to 290.

And Hamilton? - 220.

And this is a police pistol discipline you are describing? - Yes, that is correct; I may add, he wasn't interested in any of the UIT disciplines at all.

That is a form of shooting which, if I am understanding it correctly, has been developed for/for the purpose of police training, presumably improving their skills?

- No, it was developed from police training, it is not used as police training, the police training is slightly different.

Whatever the reason for the form of competition, the result of it would be to improve his skills in this time firing at a humanoid target? - A humanoid target is not necessarily required for competition, as I said earlier.

You have told us about Hamilton's behaviour in the club over the years, somewhat solitary and non-competitive? - That is correct.

Was he alone in that form of behaviour or were there others in the club that exhibited similar characteristics? - There are other members who are non-competitive, yes; I wouldn't say they are the same as Hamilton though.

In what way was Hamilton different? - Hamilton was a loner, he wouldn't engage in social conversation with anybody; it is known also that women members didn't particularly like being around him, he was a bit of a creep in their eyes.

A bit of a what? - A creep.

He was obviously a very different character from others in the club? - Yes, he had a distinct effeminate voice; I didn't speak with him as much as.....there was other members of the club who had tried to a greater extent to get into some conversation with him but to no avail.

Did you ever consider doing anything about Hamilton and his behaviour? - To some extent he was such an infrequent visitor; you would say "The next time that guy comes up I will have to have a word with him" but he wouldn't appear and so by the time he came up you had actually forgotten what had happened previously; that is to some extent the way that Hamilton came to the club, it was haphazard, and up until the turn of the year he has had as much attendances in the first three months of this year that he has had in the previous year.

CROSS-EXAMINED/

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: I just wondered, when it comes to renewal of firearm certificates whether there is any liaison between the police and the clubs as to an individual's continuing suitability? - In some respects it is haphazard; I have sometimes got a phone call asking "Is this person a member of your club?" and on some occasion I am asked to write a letter to confirm whether this person is a member of our club.

Is that just basically to find out whether they are a member? - Yes, sometimes we get a phone call.

I presume there is no requirement for applying that renewal of certificates to state what gun clubs you are a member of? - The application form doesn't allow for that, no.

If it were to allow for that and allow the police to investigate the conduct of any such members then that might have had a bearing here -- I just say might? - It might have had a bearing, yes.

Because clearly Hamilton's behaviour at the club was not conventional? - Yes, but we have also heard that his behaviour outside the club was not conventional.

I am trying to find out if there could be any tie up between the renewal of a certificate and any investigation of membership of a club before the renewal takes place? - Yes.

It also seems strange to me that in any commercial purchase, as long as any holder of a certificates goes and purchases commercially, they don't need to show that they have used up their existing supply of ammunition; say, for instance, they have permission to hold 1500 rounds you can go and buy 1000 rounds a day? - Yes, that is correct.

So far as home made ammunition is concerned presumably you need a cartridge each time you renew a bullet, do you? - Yes, you keep the cartridge case and you would purchase a primer, powder and the bullet, the major component of that being the primer; without the primer nothing works./ works.

Can you purchase cartridge cases without anything in them? - Yes, you can.

Would you need to exhibit your firearm certificate to do that? - No, you wouldn't.

So that a way round the difficulty for the restriction for holding ammunition is to purchase empty cartridge cases, any number? - Currently you, as a private citizen, can purchase all the components needed to make a round of ammunition; as soon as you make the round of ammunition you are breaking the law.

Presumably you can purchase any number of cartridges and primers by mail order and there would be no check up?
- Unless you know what you are doing you are endangering yourself to some serious injury.

Certainly Hamilton at the time of his death or just prior to his death had a significant number of rounds of ammunition that he was permitted to have? - I am not aware of that.

Did the local police visit your club at all from time to time? - No, they don't.

As a matter of routine? - No, they don't although the door is always open.

Did it occur to you to report your concerns about Hamilton's behaviour to the police? -No, because I said earlier he did everything that was safe on the range, his firearm was pointing towards the target, towards the bullet catcher, he didn't swing it round to point it at other people so in that context he was safe.

But he wasn't there in the spirit for which the club was founded? - That is correct.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: You told us that the club buys in stocks of ammunition, is that correct? - That is correct.

Did you keep any records of all the stocks which you maintain? - Yes, I keep a ledger./ ledger.

Can you just talk us through what would happen if a club member was to purchase ammunition from that stock? - If on a range day he was to purchase 100 rounds of 38 special ammunition, provided he fires it off on the range on the day there would be no entry on the certificate; however, if he was to take some away with him then the remaining rounds would be entered on his certificate.

In so far as individual own records are concerned what would be disclosed in that record for sale? - It would be recorded as being sold to an individual, X number of rounds.

Is the name of the individual recorded in the club record? - Yes, I do.

You said specifically there that you did; is that a practice which was common before you took over your responsibility? - I can't answer for that, no, I don't know.

When was it you started having responsibility for ammunition? - I think it was 1994 when the existing or the previous armourer resigned his position.

Is it possible for a member of the club to purchase ammunition from club stocks and his shooting colleague to use it? - Could you repeat that question?

If I was a member of the club would it be in order for me to purchase ammunition from club stocks and for the person with whom I was shooting to use that ammunition? - In the confines of the range, yes but if it came to taking it off, if you had any left it would have to be entered on one or other person's certificates.

You indicated that between the years 1988 and 1995 Hamilton attended three or four times but I was wondering whether that was three or four times per annum? - Yes, three or four times per annum, usually during the summer.

BY LORD CULLEN: Is your club affiliated/affiliated to any organisation? - Yes, we are affiliated to the National Pistol Association, the National Rifle Association and the Scottish Pistol Association.

Does your club, by reason of that affiliation, apply any standards which any of these organisations laid down? - It is mainly concerned with the conduct of competitions.

What about safety? - The safety one is the National Rifle Association for the.....they run courses for training for officers which are approved by competent military authorities.

That is training for officers? - Yes, training for officers.

When it comes to somebody who wants to become a member presumably he has to be a probationary member for a certain period? - That is correct.

Is that invariably the course for any person that comes in? - The criteria allows for the club to waive the probationary period for members of the Armed Forces, the police, etc. which we never have.

What is the probationary period which your club applies? - Currently the Home Office reduced it down to three months; in our constitution it is between three and six months and at the discretion of the Committee we can extend that probationary period if we feel it necessary.

It is three months unless extended? - It can be between three and six, yes -- three months.

Is there some form of check that is carried out on a probationary member to see whether he is, in view of the Committee of the club, fit for full membership? - In the past couple of years we only have about, I think it is, five or six probationary members at the moment; I have been doing training with them on a one to one basis or as a group; it doesn't necessarily involve the use of firearms, it can be simple discussion as to what they need to do in order to hone certain skills; you don't necessarily need a firearm to complete the training; when you come on to the range you are trying to enforce what you have told them.

Well, /

11.20 a.m.

Well, that is skill, but what about for example safety, whether a person is competent in handling a firearm with safety? Is there some check on that? - That check is done during the probationary period. They have a one-to-one supervision during that period.

That is in the club rules; is that right? - That is in the club rules, yes.

And is that in any way connected with some form of national standard, or is that simply what the club itself devises? - It is what the club itself devises. We recognised some time ago -- it came out probably in 1988 or 1990 that the standard of shooting was going down and the supervision of probationary members wasn't all it could be, so we devised a safety brief that I give to everybody that comes on to the range as a new member, whether they have a Firearms Certificate or not -- they all get the same brief, and they get a hand-out to take away with them.

But once they have gone away with that hand-out is there some check before they become a full member that they are really competent in a safety sense? - That check would be by other members of the Committee, if there is any other members of the Committee on the range at the time, they would check as to the suitability of that person -- has he done anything that would disturb anybody with regard to range safety?

You have told us that now you have what you call an attendance book? - That is correct.

Since January of this year. What categories of information go into the attendance book? - The attendance book has -- I don't actually have it, the police now have it.

I think it is sufficient if you simply describe the categories of information that go into the book? - The information is they are asked for a declaration which says "I am not a prohibited person under Section 21 of the Firearms Act". So that declaration is at the top of the page and then they sign their name below that, all members sign their/their name below that.

Do you mean each time they attend? - Yes.

And presumably there will be a date to indicate what the relevant date is? - At the top of the page, the range they are on, whether it is Whitestone, Inverclyde or Blair Atholl.

So at the top of the book you can find which members have attended which meetings on which days? - That is correct.

As well, of course, the declaration which you have indicated to me? - Yes.

Is there any record kept of what particular firearms or calibres of firearms are used on these occasions? - No, there isn't.

Is that something which would be practicable? - I don't see why not.

You said -- you were asked some questions about telling the police if somebody had simply ceased coming. I think you indicated a point might come where you might tell the police? - Yes.

As far as you are concerned what kind of gap would be sufficient for you to take that course of action? - Well, currently under the Constitution, it is only when they fail to pay their subscription.

I know, but we are talking here not about failure to pay, but failure to attend? I would say two years would be a reasonable time.

And you would report it to the police. What action would you anticipate the police might take if they got that information -- what are you looking to the police to do? - Basically enquire if the person is still around and still has a Firearms Certificate -- the person in that two years may have turned his Firearms Certificate in.

Is this information to help you to run the club, or is it to provide information to the police for the police to use? I just want to be clear what you have in mind? - I think it would be information/information for the police to use.

And what kind of use do you think they might make of this information under the system as it presently is? - I would hope they would go along and see the individual concerned and ask him "We understand you have not appeared at a range. Can you confirm where you are shooting with your firearm?".

And if he said "I am not shooting anywhere, I have lost interest in the whole subject", then -- I mean I appreciate you are not a police officer, but what do you envisage might happen? - Therefore, under the Act, he doesn't have good reason.

And what might follow from that? - He would have to surrender his Certificate, probably.

Pardon? - He would probably have to surrender his Certificate and put his firearms into storage or sale.

So you assume there is a power on the police to demand surrender of a Firearms Certificate if he has ceased to use his firearms? - If he has ceased to have good reason to have them, yes.

If he has ceased to have good reason to have them. I see. One other question -- you were asked about the extent to which there was any need to record the sale of ammunition by a club, and of course you have pointed out that would be if any ammunition was not used on that occasion but was taken away? - That is correct.

Presumably there is some procedure for this, is that right, in your club? - For recording the ammunition?

Who would be responsible for seeing that a record was made of any ammunition that was bought on the range and actually carried away unused? - That is my responsibility as the Firearms Certificate holder for the club.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: On the point Lord Cullen was asking you questions on relating to reporting members who have shown little or no interest/interest in club activity, is the factual position that you do report to the police if there is a failure to pay a subscription and the person thus loses his membership? - Yes, there is. There was one occasion recently on the 25th of March.

But if a person simply fails to attend for a couple of years you do not at present report that to the police? - That is correct.

And that is something you thought might be a good idea, to report to the police? - I think if you are into sporting shooting competition, etc., regular attendance is a must.

Now, you have referred on one or two occasions to the expression "prohibited person", and you now have it at the top of your attendance book of the people attending on any particular day? - Yes.

What is a prohibited person under Section 21 of the Firearms Act? - A prohibited person is someone who has served a prison sentence which is between three months and three years -- he is prohibited for I think it is five years. Anybody who has served a prison sentence in excess of three years is prohibited for life to be anywhere near a firearm or ammunition.

So we are talking about people with criminal records which prevent them holding Firearms Certificates? - That is correct.

You mentioned that in two contexts. One was in the application form to join the club; is that right? - Yes, that is correct.

They have to declare they are not prohibited persons?

- Yes.

And similarly on the attendance book? - That is correct.

And is that essentially the only declaration that a person is giving you in respect of his fitness to be a member of the club? - That is correct.

And so far as Hamilton is concerned, of course,/ course, he had a Firearms Certificate? - That is correct.

And therefore he would need to make no declaration when applying for membership about not being a prohibited person, you would assume that from the fact he had a Firearms Certificate? - He applied to the club in 1987 when those rules didn't exist.

Does your Home Office approval as a club have anything to do with the fact that you don't have your own premises, or is that immaterial? - Immaterial.

And can I take it there is absolutely no system that you are aware of for the police to vet applicants for membership to the club who do not hold, and who have not applied for, a Firearms Certificate? - That is correct.

This is just to be absolutely clear about the position so far as Hamilton's performance in the club is concerned: did he at any stage in shooting the way you have described break any of the competition rules? - He did on two occasions on the Police Pistol course of fire that I conducted, where he had loaded up what in my opinion -- the rules dictate you have to do six rounds on two separate occasions -- sorry, I'll start again. At two minutes the command is "Six rounds load and be ready". In Hamilton's case his magazine had 12 rounds in it. Part of the practice is you have to do a mandatory reload of the revolver or pistol, and he failed to do that.

So he was actually breaking the rules when he did that as far as you are concerned? - Yes.

Turning to these targets which are in human form, and looking at full bore shooting practice or competition carried out or conducted by your members: are the targets they shoot at in the main of the human shape, or are more of the competitions and practices they do related to targets which are not in that shape? - They are more in the human shape.

What are what you described as "UIT disciplines" -- please just give me that in general terms, / terms, because I appreciate this is a very detailed subject? - UIT disciplines are covered by the Union Internationale De Terre, which is the governing body of that particular sport. It covers firearms of calibres between .22 and .38 calibre. It is generally shot single-handed at bullseye- style targets.

And that union is the governing body of that type of competition? - Yes. The firearms concerned must fit a control box.

So that presumably means the firearms have to be of a particular dimension that fits within the box? - That is correct.

So far as removing ammunition from the range is concerned, if you purchase it from the club, is there any form of control in existence to prevent me at the end of the competition from simply putting the 10 remaining cartridges I have got in my pocket and walking off without telling you? - There is no control. Everybody is deemed to be individually responsible.

You talked about one-to-one training of probationary members at your club. Who is the supervising member of these one-to-one sessions? - It would be a full member of the club who actually owns a Firearms Certificate.

GEORGE FREDERICK SMITH, (57), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I am a self-employed fencing tutor, and I live in Stirling.

Are you presently President of Stirling Rifle and Pistol Club? - Yes, that is correct, I am.

When did you join it? - 1972 I believe.

And have you been a member since then? - Yes, I have.

You presently hold a Firearms Certificate? - Yes, I do, yes.

Do/

Do you also have a Shotgun Certificate? - I do.

In your Firearms Certificate there will be provision for holding particular weapons? - That is correct.

Can you tell me what weapons you are authorised to hold please? - Yes. I have -- at the present moment I have 17 guns, but eight of these are antiques. One is inoperable. I have one shotgun, which is usable, four handguns and four rifles.

Are the four handguns similar to each other? - One is a .357 revolver; one is a .45 automatic -- semi-automatic pistol. One is a .22 semi-automatic pistol, and one revolver which is a .455, which is a relic of the last War, I believe.

Do you use it in competition? - Yes. There is what they call -- it is basically old guns that are used for the competition -- but that is at Bisley.

Are the other three handguns you have referred to interchangeable for competition? - I am sorry -- interchangeable?

Yes, can you use any one of the three for a number -- for most of the disciplines that you would compete in? - I see what you mean. No, the .22 pistol would be used for small bore pistol shooting.

The .357 would be used under Police Pistol, or disciplines like that, the semi-automatic -- well, we do have a .45 revolver competition as such, so they are used in different disciplines.

And how much ammunition are you authorised to hold at home? - 200 rounds for each of the weapons, but I have never got that much.

And I take it, just to be clear about it, you are authorised to keep the guns at home? - Yes, I am.

Have you, in the last ten years, been a regular attender at meetings of the Stirling Rifle and Pistol Club? - Yes, I am. Occasionally I have to miss one or two for either holidays, illness or/or work, but most of the time I am there.

Can you give me a rough estimate of the percentage attendance during that period by you? - Oh, about 80 per cent I would think.

Did you ever see Thomas Hamilton at any of the meetings of the club? - Yes, occasionally.

And by that I am referring to the last ten years or so? - Yes.

Did you ever speak to him? - I probably did, but I would guess it would be just to pass the time of day -- except on the last meeting that we had.

Well, when was that? - That was February. I think it was February 8th or about that time.

And do you remember encountering him on that occasion? - Yes, I do.

And in what circumstances? - Well, the first one was when he happened by chance to be standing next to me in the firing line when we were shooting at targets. He was using a Browning semi-automatic pistol, which was a Target model of that type. And after we had the guns cleared and we went up to look at the target, I commented to him on his shooting, which was reasonably good considering the fact that it was factory ammunition he was using; and that was the sum total of that part of it.

On/

11.40 a.m.

On that occasion were you concerned at all about the way in which he was firing? - Well, it surprised me that he fired very rapidly all the time but I was aware that was a trait of his, that he always seemed to do it.

When commenting on his score did you say anything to him about whether or not he should be competing? - Yes, I said to him that he had done reasonably well and with a bit of practice he ought to be going in for competitions with a score like that and he said "Thank you very much " and that was the end of the story.

Were you aware he did not go in for competitions? - Well, I had never seen him at any of the competitions that I had gone to.

Now, is that the day that you gave him a lift home? - That's correct, yes.

So is that the only time you had any real dealings with him? - Yes.

Are you quite clear that it was February? - Yes, that is correct.

Do you know for sure when it was? - I think it was the 8th but I am not absolutely certain. I do recall saying to the police that I wasn't sure at the time.

Was there anything remarkable or noticeable about the journey home? - On the way back he asked me..... he had heard that I had lost my job. I had been made redundant and he asked me if I had another one and I told him that I had decided that I would become self-employed and become a coach. He told me then that he was a coach which surprised me because I really knew very little, virtually nothing about him and I asked him what he coached and he said he coached gymnastics. I asked him where that was and he said it was at Dunblane. I thought he said the Dunblane High School. I can't remember after that what we said. I probably said "Oh, very good" or something like that and then the conversation lagged.

What/

What did you make of him as a result of that day? - Well, I was quite surprised. He was a very uninteresting sort of person with very little to say for himself. The only thing I could say that was good about him was that he was careful with his firearms and he didn't cause any trouble in the club but he didn't appear to me to be the type of person who would get on with children. That was all. Being a coach myself.

After the tragedy I think you were present at a meeting of various members of the club just to discuss the situation, is that right? - Yes.

Was that a formal meeting or just a get-together? - It was just a get-together more than anything else I think really to discuss what had happened.

Did anybody at that meeting come up with anything firm about his behaviour that perhaps some action should have been taken on? - Not really. I don't think anyone really knew very much about him and there was nothing he had ever done or said which would have suggested anything otherwise. In fact, after the incident I was told that it was probably someone in our gun club and I scrolled through the members and I just couldn't think of anybody and he certainly didn't come to mind as being the person.

At the meeting we are talking about was there any discussion about him breaking any of the club's safety rules? - Oh, yes. There was a slight one. I think everybody has at some time or another been picked up for something. We were very strict on safety and discipline. I think he had lowered a gun out of line with the target or something like that and had been corrected by one of the members but I think that was the only occasion I know. He accepted the criticism and that was that.

Is there any restriction on the amount of ammunition that a person who is either attending a club or in fact is it only members who can buy ammunition? - Yes.

Was there any restriction on the amount of ammunition a member of the club could buy on any one occasion, apart from the limit on his firearms certificate/certificate? - Oh, I see. No.

As long as he is within the limit of his firearms certificate he could buy that amount from the club? - That is correct, yes.

Can you look please at Production SRFA117 which should be your club's attendance diary or book. Is that what it is? - Yes.

Was there a meeting on the 18th February? - The 18th, yes.

Would that be the date that you ran Hamilton home? - Yes, I believe it probably was. It could have been the 4th because I have signed that one.

It could either have been the 4th or the 18th? - Yes, I think that is right.

BY LORD CULLEN: Sorry, that is the 4th of which month? - Sorry, February.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: If I noted you correctly, so far as Hamilton is concerned you said that no one in the club knew very much about him? - Yes. Well, as far as we know, he attended in the afternoons. We generally fire rifles in the morning and in the afternoon we would move to pistol on the range and because Hamilton so far as I know did not possess a rifle, he would come in the afternoons and he would leave very shortly after he had done a shooting. That was generally before the club meeting had finished so he would appear and do a shooting and then go away again.

What I was wanting to as you was whether that was an unusual situation where you would have a member about whom very little was known or whether there are a number of other people in your club who fall into that category? - I think in general the majority of people had been introduced to the club by other members at some time or another and so they tended to be much more integrated into the club. Hamilton, I am not absolutely certain about this, I think we inherited from a period when Dunblane Small Bore Rifle Club had decided to close down through cost and they tried to sell the club to us. There were only three members left and that is why financially/financially they couldn't run the club any longer. We had a meeting, as far as I recall, of the entire club and those who shot full bore rifle objected because they wouldn't be able to take advantage of the building. It was an indoor range. In the end, we didn't buy it and I believe they Army eventually purchased it but in the interim period there was an agreement I think that the members of that club could join our club and one of them was Hamilton although I'm not absolutely certain about that, so Hamilton came to us in a slightly different way and he never really took a lot of interest in the club but he never did anything which would have made us think we ought to do something.

Another thing which you said I would like to ask you to elaborate on just briefly if you would. You told us yourself Hamilton did not appear to be the sort of person that would get on with children. What did you mean by that? - Well, he was a bit introverted. He hadn't a lot to say for himself and I didn't..... this is in retrospect, I might say. I thought this since this incident and perhaps my opinion is coloured by what happened but looking back he didn't seem to be, you know, full of life or interested, the sort of person who could get children interested in a subject but that is purely my opinion.

I think you told us about an occasion when you gave him a lift in your car? - Yes.

Did you feel comfortable in his presence? - Well, I didn't actually. I didn't particularly like him very much. I felt he was slightly effeminate. Just the way he spoke. There was no other reason to think anything other than that. I just didn't find him very interesting. There was nothing that we could talk about, except firearms I suppose but even then his interests were related to what he had and he didn't reload his own ammunition which was unusual.

We heard a little bit about that from Mr. Crawford so I won't ask you about reloading? - Right.

Just one final matter. We have been told that one form of target practice uses targets in the shape of the human body? - Yes.

Maybe/

Maybe I should know this but if I attended the Olympic Games or the Commonwealth Games would I see riflemen or pistol shooters firing at human form targets? - I am afraid I don't know that either, I am sorry. There is a possibility, yes, but I really don't know. I have never been to the Olympics to see the shooting but it is a recognised form of target that we use.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: You mentioned that you yourself had authority for up to 200 rounds of ammunition for each weapon you own? - That is right.

But you rarely get to that figure. How many rounds of ammunition would you fire at a maximum at any one shoot? - Maybe 30 to 60 rounds of rifle ammunition in the morning and maybe 150 rounds perhaps or 100 rounds pistol in the afternoon.

BY LORD CULLEN: Is that purely you you are answering for or as a matter at large? - It is for myself.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. GIBB: As a matter at large, how many rounds do you think? - Do you mean for everyone?

Yes? - Oh, I see.

What is the absolute maximum you would shoot, the number of rounds, at any one competition? - Perhaps 30 rounds in a particular pistol competition a single person would fire.

You see, I think we all know that Hamilton had permission to possess up to 1500 rounds of ammunition for each individual weapon. Is there any need for such a high number of rounds to be possessed at any one time? - Personally I don't think so. I reload the gun and I only reload enough for the next shoot. It is target ammunition so I believe Mr. Crawford explained that we tend to reload down as much as possible so that you get accuracy rather than power from the gun.

Would it surprise you that Hamilton had permission to have up to 7,500 rounds of ammunition on his certificate? - Yes, it seems a lot.

Or/

Or that he had probably at the time of the incident about 7,000 rounds of ammunition in his possession? - That would not..... well, it would surprise me but, I mean, he was allowed to buy..... He would be allowed to buy X amount of ammunition at any one time. Is that right?

Am I right in thinking that at the time of renewal of firearms certificates there is no requirement to disclose the Clubs you are a member of? - No, I think you just state on the application that you intend to use it, the weapons, to shoot targets as the reason for having this.

So the good reason to apply for a certificate is that you want to become a member of a club? - That's correct, yes.

But you don't need to satisfy the police as to a continuing good reason for the renewal? - I think you have to be a member of a club to continue to have a firearms certificate. So they would presumably know that you are a member of a club.

As far as you are aware, is there any check done on clubs when an individual person seeks to renew their firearms certificate as to their suitability for renewal? - No, I am not aware of that.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Can you look please at Production ME65? You will see that that is Hamilton's application for membership of your club? - Yes.

With a proposer and seconder. Would that have happened if he had simply been someone you inherited from Dunblane Club? - Yes, it would have. He would still have had to fill in a form. Oh, yes.

RAYMOND REID (49), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Do you stay in Callander? - Yes.

I/

I think you are a baker? - I am.

Now, you hold a position with Callander Rifle and Pistol Club, you hold an official position with the Callander Rifle and Pistol Club? - Yes, I am the Secretary.

How long have you been the Secretary? - About 30 years.

How long have you been a member of the club? - 36 or 37 years.

Are you a member of any other club? - No.

Do you hold a firearms certificate? - I do.

Do you hold a shotgun certificate? - I do.

In terms of your firearms certificate, how many weapons are you authorised to have? - I have on that certificate three target rifles, a .22, a .22 sporting rifle, a 357 revolver, a 9mm pistol and a .22 pistol.

How much ammunition are you authorised to hold? - I'm sorry, I can't tell you offhand. It is no more than 2,000 rounds in total for all the calibres.

That is taking them together? - Taking them together.

Was Thomas Hamilton ever a member of the Callander Rifle and Pistol Club? - Not to my recollection but I could not go back through the books as Central Scotland Police have them in their custody. I can't remember over the years.

So you have never made a check through the books to establish whether or not he was ever recorded as a member? - No, that would fall into the position really of the Treasurer or the Membership Secretary.

I think that you were asked on the 11th April to provide to the police any documentation there/there was which might indicate whether or not Hamilton ever was a member of the club, is that right? - That would be correct, yes.

And did you hand over a number of documents to the police? - Yes, all the books going back as far as 1972 and all the Treasurers' books back to the same period.

So you had Minutes of meetings from 1970 in fact onwards, did you? - Yes, I had Minutes from 1954.

But you yourself have not gone through these at all to see whether there was any record of Hamilton being there? - No.

Now, can I take it that you had never encountered him prior to 1996? - No, I first met him in 1972.

Where did you meet him in 1972? - Dunblane Small Bore Rifle Club.

Was he a member there? - As far as I know, yes.

Were you also a member at that time? - No, at that time there was a Stirling and District Shoulder to Shoulder League which came from Callander, Stirling and Dunblane or wherever and we went to other clubs and competed on a shoulder to shoulder basis.

What/

12.00

What do you remember of him in 1972? - He just made by skin creep, he was one of these people I didn't like to talk to.

Was he shooting in competitions then? - Yes, he would have been.

At that time he wasn't the holder of a firearms certificate but I daresay he could have shot in these days as a member of the club using the club's equipment? - That would be correct, yes.

Did you meet him after that on any occasion? - I think I was in his shop one time.

As a customer? - Yes, as a customer.

Now, apart from this occasion when last did you encounter him? - I met him one evening, he was down at Callander Rifle Club and was due to shoot and the club wasn't open and I happened to be walking down the street.

When are we talking about? - February this year.

Before that did he actually contact you at home? - Yes, there was a phone message but I never followed up.

Did you understand that his interest at that time was in membership of the club? - Yes, I would assume it would have been.

So you met him some time in February when you arrived at the club? - No, I was on my way down the street, I was just actually going to the club.

What happened? - I was walking with a boy that shoots with us and we were chatting away and he kept interfering and I was actually quite nasty to him and he jumped on the bus and went back to Stirling.

What was he asking about? - Why was the club not open, it should be open.

Did/

Did he ask you about the best night to come to the club? - I perhaps said to him to contact John Moffat, I can't really remember.

If thereafter there was contact to Moffat that may explain why he contacted him? - Yes.

Now, in the time that he was thereafter there attending at Callander did you see him? - Yes, I was down at two committee meetings which happened to be on a Thursday evening and through some misunderstanding there was very few members turned up and there was no committee meeting on that night.

Did you see Hamilton shoot a pistol? - No, I didn't see him shoot, I saw him there.

Did you have any conversation with him on this occasion? - I may have spoken to him as I would speak to all the members before I left.

Were you aware that he had applied for membership?
- Yes.

Now, in the Callander club is there a probationary period for anyone who wants to be a member? - Six months.

And what is the purpose of the probation? - The purpose of the probation is so that members get to know their prospective member and to see that he appears at least once a week and how his attitude is on the range and after that he is put forward by the membership secretary to the committee who are asked to decide whether he should become a member.

At that stage do members express their individual opinions from what they have seen of the performance of the probationer? - Yes.

WILLIAM PATRICK CAMPBELL (44), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: You work as a Plant/

Plant Operator? - Yes.

I think you stay in Falkirk? - That is correct.

Now, you are a member of Stirling Rifle and Pistol Club? - Yes.

Do you have an official position with the club? - I am the Competition Secretary, I am also a course qualified RCO.

That is a Range Conducting Officer? - Yes.

So you have been through training that has been recently introduced by the National Rifle Association? - Yes, I have.

When were you first aware that you had a member in the club called Thomas Hamilton? - Basically it would be the beginning of this year; I became competition secretary at the latter end of last year and it was at Whitestone I actually met Thomas Hamilton.

Is that the very first time you met him? - Yes.

How long have you been a member of the club? - About three years.

Can you remember the first of these occasions? - I think it was about January, I can't remember the date, at Whitestone; I was conducting the range that day.

Can you remember anything particular about how he behaved? - Everything he was asked to do he did properly and I found him a shy man, he didn't say very much -- that is basically all I can really say.

Can you remember what guns he was using? - It was a Browning 9 mm.

Did he only use one? - He had two, he had two holsters and he had one in each holster.

Were they both right handed holsters? - No, /

No, one was facing to the left and one was facing to the right.

But were they both for a right handed person? -
Yes, he was right handed but he used.....the way the holster was set up it was facing to the right and one was facing to the left.

Now, did you go to a shoot at Inverclyde in March? -
That is correct.

I think that was the 2nd March? - I think that is the date, yes.

Did you travel along with Hamilton to that? - Yes, he phoned me up on the Friday evening and asked if he could get a lift; well, at that time I didn't know if I was going to be taking my car, my cousin's car or travelling with Alex Woods at the time so it was decided on the Saturday morning that Alex would take all four of us in his car.

You agreed that Hamilton could go? - Yes.

Did he have to get himself from Stirling to somewhere?
- Yes, he had to get himself to Falkirk.

He did that, did he? - Yes.

Who all was in the car with him? - There was myself, Alex Woods, my cousin Alexis Fawcett and Tom Hamilton.

Was Alexis Fawcett a member of the club too? -
She is a probationary member.

In the course of the journey was Hamilton sitting in the front or back of the car? - The back.

Who else was in the back? - My cousin Alexis.

Was that the same on the way back? - Yes.

Do you remember much in the way of the conversation/conversation on the way there? - We were sitting in the front of the car and it is very difficult to hear conversation in the back so I was more or less talking to Alex Woods on the way there and on the way back.

At the Inverclyde Shooting Range did you see Mr. Hamilton shooting at all? - I was taking the range at some point but I didn't really pay much attention to him shooting; what we did do when we went there at first, we put up some PPI targets and he had red stickers and he wanted to put the red stickers on and Gordon Crawford said no, that is not permissible because we were going to do PPI targets.

That is police procedure 1? - Yes.

That is a target which is in a human shape? - Yes.

Was that the only target used that day? - No, there was a service procedure V target.

What are they? - An army type running man, camouflaged brown and black.

Again a human form? - Yes.

You actually were the Range Conducting Officer, at least one of the Range Conducting Officers for that shoot? - Yes.

Were you not involving yourself in what Hamilton was actually doing? - At that time I was on the range when this one was short so I think Gordon was taking the range at that particular time.

At that stage in the day did you not see him? - Yes, he tended to be very rapid in his firing.

Did you have an observation about him which struck you as unusual? - Yes, just the sort of speed he let rounds off at the targets and he wasn't really very interested in the competition side of it, he just wanted to shoot basically.

Is that okay by your book? - No, not really, it is not part of the competition; it is 15 seconds and his was off in five seconds, just as/

as fast as he could pull the trigger basically.

Are there marksmen who perhaps get the best results by shooting immediately and as quickly as they can or is that just exceptional? - To me he wasn't interested in competitions really; basically I have only met the guy a couple of times on the range; everybody else takes their time and takes aim and that is the thing that should be done.

So he was unique, as far as that is concerned? -
Yes.

Nothing that you would complain about? - No, everything you asked of him he would do correctly.

Do you remember anything of the conversation on the way back? - No, as I say, I couldn't hear what was being said; the only thing is when he got out the car in Stirling my cousin did mention.....her words were "That is a right weirdo, that one" -- basically that is what she said.

That is Alexis Fawcett said "He is a right weirdo"? -
Yes.

She said something else? - Yes, she did but I can't remember exactly what it was.

Did she say something about the way he talked about his guns? - Yes, she did.

What did she say about that? - She said he was on about a Kalashnikov rifle, he moved his gun, he stroked his gun -- to me that was unusual.

Does the expression "he talks about guns as though they were babies" ring any bells with you? - Yes, my cousin said that -

- as though he was.....that is what he lived for was his babies, if you like.

When she described him as being a weirdo and mentioned the way in which he talked about guns what was your reaction to that? - Well, afterwards, before anything, before this had happened, Gordon said that Robert Mullen's wife found/found him the same way; women seemed to have that intuition about the guy but to me I just found him a shy guy, he didn't like to speak much, he was a hard person to have a conversation out of.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Do I understand correctly that you are a Range Conducting Officer? - Yes, that is correct.

So you will have undergone training for that role? - That is correct.

After you heard Alexis Fawcett making the remarks which she did about Hamilton did you contemplate doing anything about this, so far as Hamilton was concerned? - Well, if everything is done correctly on the range and obey all the orders and rules what can you really do about it; I mean, he did everything correctly.

Please understand I am not saying this in a critical fashion but were you aware that he had a firearms certificate? - Yes, he did.

Now, so far as the visit to the range that day, was that the occasion when Hamilton was putting stickers on human form targets? - Are we talking about the range at Largs, Inverclyde?

Yes? - That is correct.

Whereabouts was he placing the stickers? - He was placing the stickers, one on the head and one on the chest about heart level.

How did you view this behaviour? - Well, there is a shooting discipline called a practical procedure we have used which is brown targets and that is how these people score -- there is a wee square and that is a high scoring target; I think that is what he was into; I didn't know him very well so I didn't know what type of shooting he was doing.

Did you consider anything different or unusual about his behaviour in that regard? - With that procedure in competitions I thought it was unusual and I sought Gordon's advice on that.

What was the advice? - Not to use them,/ them, not to use the stickers.

Just as a matter of clarification are we to understand that there is a form of competition which rewards accurate shooting relating to the heart and head area? - I am unsure about that because I never taken part in that sort of target but there is no human form involved at all, it is just a small square with a larger square involved.

GEOFFREY CLIVE WOOD (51), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: I think that you live in Doune? - Yes.

I think that you work as a Cameraman? - Yes.

Now, I think that you have known or you did know Thomas Hamilton for a number of years? - Yes.

When did you first come across him? - In the early 1980s at Callander Gun Club.

Were you a member there? - Yes.

And do you remember the first time that you actually met him? - Not especially.

Did he start going to the club then around the time that you are talking about, the early 1980s? - Yes.

Do you remember whether anyone in particular came with him or he just appeared on his own? - It is so long ago I don't really remember.

Do you remember if he became a member of Callander Club? - I assume he did.

You were a member yourself? - Yes.

Over what period? - Probably for about/about three, four, five years.

Apart from seeing him at the club did you see him anywhere else around that time? - Well, after that, after our initial meeting he was.....he owned a shop called Woodcraft and I actually met him there because he was a useful guy to know, he gave you discounts on DIY.

Is this at the same time that he was going to the Callander Rifle Club? - Yes, well, in the early stages.

So/

12.20 p.m

So over how many years do you reckon he attended at the Callander Club while you were going? - Probably -- from memory -- it is very hazy -- three to four years, I would say.

Now, did you then join Stirling, a Stirling club? - Yes.

And is that the Stirling Rifle and Pistol Club? - Yes.

Do you know when you joined it -- do you remember that? - I think it was in the late 1980s -- 1987 probably.

Was Hamilton a member there? - He became a member, yes.

After you or before you? - After.

Had you anything to do with him becoming a member? - He may have introduced himself to me. I don't recollect actually specifically sponsoring him. I think he sort of turned up and we knew each other, that that was it.

Now, we have seen an application form dated 1986. It doesn't have any reference to you on it, but would that be consistent with the time? - It is certainly about the time that I joined the club,

yes.

There has been a suggestion in the evidence today that he might have been inherited, as it were, from a Dunblane club which was folding around that time. Does that mean anything to you? - To a certain extent, yes. He ran -- or he used the premises for a club at Dunblane. It was a rifle range, a .22 rifle range, and he used those premises. But I was never connected with that club.

Is that something that you know from speaking to him? -

Yes.

Now, how long did you remain a member of the Stirling club? - I still am a member.

And since the mid-1980s have you been a regular/regular attender at meetings of the club? - Yes.

Are you a member of any other clubs? - Until recently I was a member of two clubs, one which followed from another, in Edinburgh -- in the Edinburgh area. The last one was called The Phoenix.

Now, Mr. Hamilton lost or sold up the shop he had in Stirling, the shop you have been referring to? - Yes.

After that shop had been sold, did you hear from him, looking for assistance in getting to and from the club's meetings? - Yes. I mean, we have kept in touch since -- I mean, there was a period of time where we sort of lost contact. I think he stopped -- two or three years ago he stopped going to the Stirling club. I think he probably went once or twice in that particular year, and I think possibly round about 1993, 1992/1993, and during that period I didn't have much contact with him other than chance meetings perhaps in Stirling shopping streets.

Going back though earlier than that, did he have his own transport when he had his own business? - Yes, he had a Transit van.

After he had lost that did he turn to you for transport to get to and from club meetings in the mid-1980s? - Yes.

Now, was he shooting at all between 1988 and 1990? - Sorry, can you repeat that?

Was he shooting at all between about 1988 and 1990? - Probably, yes, I would say so.

Did you know anything about where he got his ammunition? - It seemed to be -- he mentioned Crockets. I think that is where he got it -- if he didn't, well, I know it is possible to buy ammunition from the club, so some of it may have come that way as well.

Were you ever aware of him buying ammunition at the club? - Not specially, no. I don't remember an instance where he actually bought it.

There/

There is a gap in the information at the moment which I am trying to fill. He doesn't appear to have purchased ammunition commercially between late 1987 and 1995, and there is no hint of where he might have got his ammunition at the moment, and yet there does seem to be evidence that he was shooting during that period, although it is fairly vague evidence. Now, can you help us at all to fill that gap? - There was a period of time -- and again this would be some time in the 1980s -- where we paid a number of visits to a club called Ashgill.

Is that near Larkhall? - Is that near Larkhall? Down the A71 near Stonehouse?

Yes? - And it was possible to buy ammunition there. We were just visitors.

Did you actually see him buying any? - Yes, he must have done. It was Early Target ammunition, which was made by a company called Mountain and Sowben. It was reused cases, and it was repacked ammunition. It was not brand new ammunition.

Is that ammunition he would just shoot off on the range on the actual day? - Supposedly, yes, but it would be possible to take it home if he had surplus. Whether that was legal or not I am not sure.

Did you reckon, though, that he was shooting between 1988 and 1990? - 1988 and 1990? I think so.

And then between 1990 and 1992? - I think so, yes.

You have got no impression of him giving up for a year? - There was a year -- I can't remember which particular year it was. As I say, I think it was around 1992/1993 -- where he seemed to be more occupied with other things, and we rarely saw him on the range, in fact.

That is one year only -- approximately? - Yes. It might have been a bit more or less.

Were you ever in his house? - Yes.

Frequently?/

Frequently? - Well, only during the times I picked him up to go to shoots, so that would be no more than twice a month.

When were you last in his house? - I think at the beginning of this year.

On any occasion when you were in the house did you see photographs of young boys around the walls? - No.

Were you aware of his involvement in boys' clubs? - Yes.

How did you know about that? - Gossip, and he told me himself.

Did he talk about his involvement very much? - He tried to, but after his initial conversation I tried to -- he was very repetitive. At one point he was having problems with getting school lets, which involved an ombudsman, and he spoke to me about that.

Did you hear a lot about the ombudsman? - Yes.

Did you ever hear rumours about him? - Of various kinds, yes.

Did that information come from him or from other sources? - Both.

What was the general nature of the rumours you heard from other sources? - That in some way he was not a satisfactory person to be running a club.

In any way specifically? - Nothing specific -- no, I don't recall anybody actually specifically saying he had done X, Y or Z.

I think you actually bought a gun from him at one time? - Yes.

A Beretta? - Yes.

Nothing wrong -- a perfectly straight-forward transaction? - Yes.

You/

You say you last saw him in January. Was that at a shooting meeting? - Yes.

And was that at the Whitestone Range at Dunblane? - Yes.

Did you take him there that day? - Yes.

Did you watch him shooting at all? - Yes.

Do you remember what he was using? - I think he was using both his weapons, which were a Browning and -- he had acquired, by that time, I think a second Browning which has been spoken about, so he had two Brownings. I think he was using one of them, I think his new one, and he was also using his revolver.

Anything you observed about his shooting behaviour that day which caused you concern? - Nothing especially different from any other occasions.

Was there anything unusual in general about his shooting behaviour? - He used up more ammunition in the time allotted, because the shooting is regimented into shooting details, and usually you are given enough time to fire say ten rounds. He might fire 20 in that time.

What about the speed of the firing? - Well, that is obviously firing at a faster rate than perhaps you normally would.

Less carefully? - It depends on the individual, how well they can shoot. Some people require a lot of time between shots. Other people can.....

How good a shot was he? - I would say certainly average. He wasn't a poor shot.

Did he say anything to you on that occasion about trying to get back into Callander? - Yes.

Did you find out any particular reason why he was wanting to rejoin, or join that club? -
The only reason as far as I could see was that -- it was on a Wednesday night. The club had converted to/to full bore shooting. It was a club I had been to before, and I think he was running a boys' club on the Wednesday night as well, and somehow he thought I would be quite useful in getting him a lift home, and I really wasn't interested in doing that.

So he was obviously trying to encourage you to join? -
Yes.

But do you know why he wanted into Callander? - I think it was a function of the frequency -- it was every Wednesday I think it was. I think they ran every Wednesday, whereas the Whitestone -- sorry, the Stirling club's dates sort of vary quite a lot depending on an ability to get bookings on ranges. So he would probably be able to shoot more frequently there, and I don't know how it tied in with his other activities.

When did you last speak to him on the telephone? - About the Saturday before, or about a week before -- not the Saturday closest to the 13th, but I think the weekend before that.

And what was the subject of that conversation? - Could I give him a lift to Whitestone, I think it was -- yes, I think it was -- to whatever the meeting was, and I said no, I wasn't going, I was doing other things.

Are you clear it is not the weekend immediately before the incident? - Oh, I would have to -- I think when I spoke to the detective constable who came to see me I was able to pinpoint it then by looking at the dates for the bookings for the Stirling club, but I have since forgotten. All I can say is he left a message on my answering machine, and I phoned him back, and so there would be a record there with BT, I imagine, on his phone bill.

But it was to arrange to go to a meeting? - Just purely to be a facilitator, a ride to Whitestone.

And when was the Whitestone meeting to be? - I can't remember.

Well, was it immediately? - The one that was, yes, about to -- but I can't remember when that was.

But/

But were these normally at the weekends, though? - Yes, they were on a Sunday.

So if he phoned you on a Saturday.....? - Well, it would be that Sunday, yes.

The following day? - Yes.

Can you just look at Production SRFA117, and could you look up the 10th of March? Now, is there a meeting anywhere near to that date? - There doesn't seem to be any record for the 10th March on this.

What records are there for March? - There is this one, 2nd -- sorry, 2nd March.

There is one for the 2nd. Is there one after that? - No.

So it would be possibly in relation to the meeting on the 2nd March? - It could be.

Now, did you notice anything odd about him on the telephone that day? - Not especially, no.

Did you consider yourself to be a friend of his? - Well, in different circumstances I would have said I was as friendly as I am with anybody -- you know, I class him as a useful acquaintance. He was somebody who had been extremely useful in the past and therefore, yes, he was a friend. He wasn't a close friend. My friendship only really revolved around the shooting club.

Was there anything you ever noticed about his behaviour that was peculiar in the sense that it might indicate he had very odd tendencies, for example, that he was paedophile or something of that nature? - No.

Over the last five years or so have you noticed any particular change in his behaviour or his mental state? - No, not -- no.

What about his physical shape? - He was getting fatter.

Significantly? - Yes.

He/

He always bought his ammunition commercially. You sound like a fairly experienced marksman. Is that unusual? - Well, as far as I am aware there are roughly three ways of obtaining ammunition. One is you buy it from the club, two you buy it commercially from a registered gun dealer, and thirdly you can make it yourself. As far as I'm aware he didn't make it himself.

What do you do? - I have made my own, but I have also bought commercially.

Is it unusual for someone who shoots off a lot of ammunition never to make any of his own? - It depends how rich you are.

Did/

12.40 p.m.

Did he strike you as rich? - Oh, I knew that he wasn't rich. Certainly after the shop had closed he certainly wasn't a rich person but I've no idea what his income really was.

With the benefit of hindsight, is there anything that you can think of that gave any hint that he would do anything remotely like the shooting at Dunblane? - No.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: You were asked certain questions relating to Hamilton running boys' clubs and the like? - Yes.

Without beating about the bush, am I right in understanding that there was a considerable amount of rumour and speculation relating to his running of these boys' clubs? - From both sides, yes. I heard both sides of the story from various people. Some people thought he was a very nice person and other people thought he was a suspect person.

And the rumour and speculation included the question as to his motivation for running these clubs? - Not specifically.

When you say not specifically, generally that is what it related to? - There was innuendo but individual people were not able to say that X had been a boy who had been abused in any way.

Did Hamilton discuss these rumours and speculations with you or mention them? - He did at the time of his action I think against the Council, was it, which involved the Ombudsman.

Did he attempt to defend himself against these accusations in any way? - He said that as far as he was concerned he was not guilty. Not in those words but that was the gist.

Well, what were his words? Was there anything particular he would say? - I can't tell you. It was just a conversation we had at the time. You talk about many things and you can never remember precisely.

Did/

Did the question of whether he had any perversion come up? Was that ever discussed? - He said that some people thought he was a pervert.

So that would tell you quite a lot about the nature of the rumours and speculation? - Oh, yes. Don't get me wrong. I was aware of what was being suggested but I gave him the benefit of the doubt because there were enough other people who thought he was a straightforward person, including policemen and various other people.

No re-examination.

NIGEL KENNETH BELL (29), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I think you are a surveyor? - Yes, that is correct.

And you live in Dunblane? - Kinbuck.

Now, I think that you are or certainly were earlier and may still be a probationary member of Callander Rifle and Pistol Club? - Yes, I was.

Are you now a full member? - I haven't taken up membership at all. I have not actually been back to the club.

I think on Wednesday, 6th March you attended the club? - Yes.

When you went in were there other members around the place? - There were approximately three or four members.

Was there anyone actually shooting at the time? - There was. From the noise coming from the range it was clear there was somebody firing a full bore pistol.

Just one person? - Whenever I went into the range it was only one person, yes.

Before you went into the range did you ask those who were in the club who was there? - I did. I recall mentioning "Oh, who's in the range?" and/and I was told at the time that it was, and I recall this quite vividly, somebody mentioned that it was the strange man from Stirling with the odd voice.

Did you know who that was? - I didn't know, no.

You had never encountered him before? - No, the 6th March was actually a Wednesday which is not a night I would normally go down.

When you went into the range did you see the person referred to? - I did, yes.

What was he doing? - Well, he had stopped firing. We have lights on the outside of the range and a bell and whenever you want to enter the range, if you feel the firing has stopped, you would press the bell and whenever the light goes off it is clear to enter the range and he was just standing at the bench.

Did you speak to him? - I did. I just introduced myself and said "Hello" and he said the same.

Was there then an arrangement made between you? - There was. I actually asked him did he want to be the range officer for that session's firing and he said he didn't want to be so I took on the responsibility.

Does that mean whenever there is more than one person there someone must act as range officer? - Yes, they must do at all times.

Can that person also participate in the shooting? - He can, yes.

And Hamilton didn't want to do it so you did it? - That is correct.

Now, you were only a probationary member of the club at that stage? - Yes, I was.

And is that okay? - To the best of my knowledge it's okay. Certainly I was aware of the criteria to be a range officer and I was happy doing it.

Do/

Do you hold a firearms certificate? - I hold a shotgun certificate but not a Class I.

Were you a member of any other club at that stage? - No.

Prior to going to Callander and becoming a probationary member, had you previous experience of firing handguns? - The only experience I have had was in approximately May or June of 1995. The Stirling Sports Council were offering introductory courses to sporting activities and that is how I became introduced to Callander. That is the only time and I have been going reasonably regularly since then.

So how long were you a probationary member prior to the 6th March? - Since I went on the introductory course in about May or June of 1995.

Why hadn't you taken up full membership? - There is a restriction within the club rules which is you must be a probationary member for at least six months before you can make an application to join and during that time you must have attended regularly in order that the club members might see if you are a fit and responsible person.

And you hadn't had long enough? - I probably could have made an application after six months, yes.

Now, was there anything remarkable about the shooting that then took place with you and Mr. Hamilton? - Not really out of the ordinary other than he certainly fired a lot more rounds that evening than I would ever have seen anybody else firing.

What about the targets he was using? - The targets were different, yes. He was using a sheet of white A3 paper from a drawing book which had either red or orange little rectangular stickers right in the middle of it and he was using these as target practice. It is something I have never seen before but I have not been a very regular shooter.

Does that mean he was trying to group the shots around the mark on the paper? - He was, yes/

yes.

And was he succeeding? - Yes, at one particular point he actually indicated to me to stop shooting and asked if he could show me he had hit a bull.

When you went forward each time and got the scores, what did he do with the target? - He very carefully removed the targets and took them back to the bench where he had an A3 drawing book where he would then place each of the targets.

Now, did you ask if he was a member at Callander? - I did, yes, just in conversation.

What did he tell you? - I recall that he told me that he wasn't at this time but he had been in the past.

Did he say anything about what he had been doing for a number of years immediately before this, how much shooting he had been doing? - He told me that he hadn't shot for some time but that he was getting back into it because he needed the practice.

Did he say though for how long he hadn't shot? - I don't recall.

Did you ask him why he needed the practice? - I did. Most people who shoot enter competitions fairly regularly themselves and I assumed it was for competition but he actually said No, it wasn't, he just needed the practice.

Was there any conversation about where you came from? - There was. He asked me where I was from and I said "By Dunblane" and he expressed some interest just in sort of passing and I got the impression that he knew Dunblane quite well although he did mention he was actually from Stirling.

Did he say anything about whether he had been a member of a gun club at Dunblane? - He did actually, which surprised me. I mean I haven't been in Dunblane for a terribly long time but I certainly never heard of a gun club in Dunblane.

Was there anything in your conversation that/that made you feel uneasy or uncomfortable? - I did not feel happy with the gentleman at all in that very unlike the rest of the members of the Callander Rifle and Pistol Club, they are all very friendly, and he was very..... he came across as being a very intense man. I felt very uncomfortable with him.

Was there anything else in particular about him that made you feel uncomfortable? - No.

Anything in the way he spoke or did anything? - He was just very deliberate and very intense.

Now, did you shoot with him more than once that evening? - I did, yes.

Did you use his weapon? - I did, yes.

Did he offer it to you? - Yes, he insisted that I used it.

Now, the weapon that you used, was it a standard Browning pistol? - It was.

And therefore there was nothing particularly sensitive about the trigger mechanism? - Not that I was aware of.

It may be of some reassurance to you to know that that is not the weapon that was used in the killing. Now, did you use it on more than one occasion? - Yes.

Was that at his insistence? - It was, yes.

Did you readily take up the offer or was he persuasive? - He was very persuasive. It wasn't something..... I didn't want to shoot a full bore pistol that night at all and I was quite happy shooting the 22.

Was there a youngster around the range? - There was, yes.

Was he involved in the shooting that you and Hamilton were doing? - Not at the same time as I was, no.

Were/

Were you aware of him being in Hamilton's company for part of the time? - Yes.

How old was the youngster? - I don't know.

A teenager? - I would guess so.

Was Hamilton actually trying to coach him at one stage when you went back into the range? - He was, yes.

Now, were you approached again by Hamilton for a favour? - I was. I was just in the club lounge talking to some of the members and he approached me and asked me if he could have a lift to Dunblane Railway Station where he would get a train for Stirling.

Did you give him a lift? - I did, yes.

Were you happy to? - No, not at all.

Can you tell us just what it was overall that made you unwilling to give him a lift? - I found him just a very intense man but I didn't think..... I just didn't feel comfortable with him. I couldn't put my finger on anything specific other than I was just very uncomfortable in his presence but I would never have seen anybody stuck for a lift home.

When it comes to saying that a person is not a fit person to hold a gun in his hand, can you pinpoint a particular feature about him which would make him unsuitable or unfit to hold a gun? - No, I think as far as the club is concerned it is more a question or whether or not you are responsible and that is following the guidelines that are set down for the use of firearms. In other words, being safe.

Now, I think when you got to the car you actually, perhaps panic is putting it a bit high but something happened which caused you even more concern about getting into the car? - Panic is pretty close to the case. I, as I have said, was very uneasy in the gentlemen's presence and when I got to the car it was only then that I realised that my son's baby seat was in the front of the car and he/

he asked me to leave it there and he would sit in the back and I was really, really uncomfortable at this stage about Mr. Hamilton being in the back of the car, particularly with firearms and particularly given that nobody in the club, unless they overheard our conversation, knew that I was giving him a lift.

Now, I take it you managed to make arrangements which resulted in him being in the front passenger seat? - Yes, I did. I moved the car seat.

In the course of that journey do you remember anything of the conversation? - I do. I remember the conversation very well.

What was it about? - The conversation started off really just about his shooting and the fact that he enjoyed shooting. He mentioned that he had had a firearms licence for more than 20 years. He got a bit agitated at one particular point because he explained to me that at one stage he had held something like, if I recall, a 243 rifle, a self-loading rifle, and he was quite aggrieved obviously at the police for having taken it off him. I asked him why it had been taken off him and he said it was as a result of what had happened at Hungerford and the fact that Michael Ryan, I think his name was, had killed so many people.

Which caused the law to be changed? - And caused the law to be changed, yes.

Now, did that appear to be something which Hamilton held as a grievance? - Very much so. He was really angry at the fact..... I was under the impression that the rifle that he had, he hadn't had it for very long and he had mentioned that it had cost him about £1,200 and that as a result of the law being changed the police actually bought the firearms back from the owners and he mentioned that he had only been paid £700 for it and he was very angry about that.

So he was harbouring a grievance about the change in the law and about the police? - Yes.

Now, as a result of the way in which he was speaking to you about this particular subject, were you even more concerned about his presence in the car? - No more so than I already was, no.

Did/

1.00

Did the conversation continue fluently after that? -
No, it was very much in fits and starts.

How did you keep it going? - I just tried to keep talking to him; I asked him at one stage what he did for a living and he said that he was a gym teacher or words to that effect; I presume this meant that he was actually a teacher at one of the schools.

Did you find out from him how many guns he had? -
Yes, he talked about having four pistols at one stage; it was a very disjointed conversation; he did start off first of all by saying he owned a shotgun and a rifle which he had sold recently; I think I may have said "What other firearms do you have" and he said that he had two Brownings which were standard for competitions and which he obviously had with him on the club nights together with two Smith & Wessons .38 revolvers and he also mentioned in the same conversation, I was under the impression thinking although he didn't ever mention, a Beretta of some sort.

Was there conversation about the use of ammunition and the type that was used? - Not that I recall, no.

You were not surprised at all that he was using commercially manufactured ammunition? - No, I mentioned to him at one stage that he had fired, in my impression, an awful lot of ammunition that night; in fact, I asked him how many rounds he had fired and he said he had fired several hundred rounds; I mentioned that would be very expensive to do and that most people who were at the club generally only fire just a few rounds a night; I recall I think having shot 15 rounds on a night.

How many did he say he had fired? - Several hundred he said.

At night? - Yes.

After you had dropped Hamilton off I think you went straight home? - Yes.

Did/

Did you say anything to your family or to your wife about what had happened? - Yes, I did; I think, if I could go back in the conversation, he mentioned he had been a gym teacher and I asked him where; he said "The High School", he took a boys club or something on a Thursday night; I had expressed an interest because I actually go to the High School on a Thursday night to play badminton and I said I had never seen him there; he actually got quite angry with me at this stage and said was I questioning him; I said no, I was just curious because I was there on a Thursday and he pointed out that his boys club finished just before 8 o'clock before the badminton started which was quite plausible; I said to my wife that I met this guy who I was particularly concerned about and more in relation to being involved with children than as far as firearms were concerned; my wife did mention that, you know, there is no point in actually doing anything about it, Nigel, because the Council would never have allowed him to run a boys club unless it was appropriate.

Did you see him again after that night? - No.

Where were you on the morning of Wednesday, 13th March? - I was in the office, I had a meeting to go to in Stirling at 9.30.

Did you tell anybody about what had been taking place on the 6th March? - I did, yes; I was explaining to one of my colleagues at work that I had met this gentleman, Mr. Hamilton, and I did mention that I was a bit concerned of the fact that he had gone on about this 243 rifle and about how he was annoyed at it being taken away from him as a result of what had happened at Hungerford and that is as far as the conversation went and I had to leave.

Roughly what time was that? - It was about twenty five past nine.

You said earlier that you haven't actually taken up membership of the Callander Club? - I haven't, no.

Are you intending to? - I have no thoughts one way or another.

CROSS-EXAMINED/

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Just very briefly if I may -- you told us that at the range that evening you acted as the Range Officer? - Yes.

Have you undergone any formal training for the position of Range Officer? - Yes.

So did the Callander Club have a formal requirement that a Range Officer should undergo some training before carrying out that role? - Everybody, to the best of my knowledge, would be automatically trained in carrying out that duty.

How was that training given? - It is done over a period of time; when you say formal training it is not a question of "Tonight is going to be a training night and you will be trained as a Range Officer"; it is more a question of initially during the six week introductory course that we had the very first thing that you learn is how to obey the Range Officer and to know what the various commands would mean; you obviously start to pick it up from that point and you gradually are asked to carry out the duty of Range Officer in front of other people.

So you learn by watching others doing it and then you are asked to do it yourself? - Yes.

And others watch you? - Yes, that is certainly what I found from my own personal experience.

After an adjournment for lunch:

BRIAN/

BRIAN DAVID FAIRGRIEVE (69), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: You live in Polmont? -
Yes.

What is your occupation? - A retired General Surgeon.

What are your qualifications in relation to being a surgeon? - M.B., Ch.B., F.R.C.S.

You also are the holder of an MBE? - Yes.

What was that awarded in respect of? - My international dealings with Scouting.

When did you first become involved in the Scouting Movement? - As a boy I think -- do you mean as a leader?

When did you first become involved in Scouts as a leader? - 1957, I think.

And what was your role within the Scouts in the 1970s? - I was County Commissioner at that time.

And what are the responsibilities of a County Commissioner? - Well, there are administrative responsibilities for the whole of the County; I have to say that the name, County Commissioner, has been changed now to Area Commissioner; when the regions came into being I became Area Commissioner and the responsibilities are to ensure that the Scouting is run smoothly in the County and the District Commissioners who represent the various aspects within the County were able to meet with me and each other to discuss matters relating to Scouting in our particular area.

So within the hierarchy of the Scouting movement the District Commissioners were beneath the Area Commissioner? - I wouldn't like to say beneath, but yes.

In the hierarchy? - Yes.

When did you first become aware of Thomas Hamilton's involvement in the Scouting movement?/

movement? - In the early part of 1974.

How did you become aware of his involvement? - I was informed by the District Commissioner, by Comrie Deuchars that Hamilton had taken some boys to Aviemore and had shown irresponsible behaviour in that these boys were forced to sleep in his van in winter conditions in spite of the fact that Hamilton had told the parents he had booked them into a youth hostel.

Why did Mr. Deuchars tell you that? - He was informing me because he thought I ought to know about such things.

What did you do in response to that? - I encourage Comrie Deuchars to investigate further any failings that Mr. Hamilton may have and as a result we requested Hamilton resign which he did.

What was the basis for requesting him to resign? - In response to the irresponsible behaviour for boys on the hills and he also acted improperly by taking boys on to his sailing craft on Loch Lomond; we checked Hamilton fairly early on and he was assessed and the report that was given to me was that Hamilton knew nothing about boats or the sea and was certainly not suitable to take charge of boys in a craft.

You said that the original complaint made by Mr. Deuchars related to boys that Mr. Hamilton had taken into the mountains; was there any complaint regarding the use of a craft? - I honestly can't be certain about that.

What exactly was the complaint regarding taking the boys up to the hills? - The fact that he had promised the parents that they would be sleeping in hostel accommodation and the fact that he made them sleep in his van and when Comrie Deuchars checked with the youth hostel there had been no booking made by Hamilton in advance in spite of the fact he informed parents there would be.

Safety. What was your concern in relation to that conduct? -

Safety of the boys? - Yes.

And/

And safety as to their physical harm? - Yes, because of the inclement weather one would expect in February or March in the Aviemore area.

Were there any other allegations made in relation to Hamilton? - No allegations made to me, no.

Are you aware of any allegations made to anybody else? - No.

You said you discussed with Mr. Deuchars and you invited Mr. Hamilton to resign? - Yes.

Did you speak to him prior to having that discussion with Mr. Deuchars? - Yes, I did -- not prior to having the discussion with Mr. Deuchars; I spoke to Hamilton after Mr. Deuchars had made these facts available to me.

But was that before or after you invited him to resign? - I invited him to resign after I had met with him.

Can you remember when you met with him? - I think it was April or May, 1974.

What was the discussion when you met with him? - With Hamilton?

Yes? - It was a long discussion and one which I tried to shorten but Hamilton went rambling on in various different directions which actually gave me more and more cause for concern as I spoke to him because I didn't think he was a particularly stable person and I was very glad that we were taking that step to have him removed from the Scout movement.

I appreciate it was a long time ago but can you remember what he was rambling on about? - No, I can't but he had certain the ability to go on and on and on in a variety of different ways.

You said this increased your concern? - Yes.

In what way? - I formed the impression that he had a persecution complex, that he had delusions of grandeur and I felt his actions were/were almost paranoia; I am not a psychiatrist, I am a surgeon so my skill is not really based on the psychiatric facts that I know of but I was doubtful about Hamilton's moral intention towards boys although I had no evidence whatsoever except clinical acumen.

So if you could explain to me how you arrived at your concerns regarding his moral intentions? - Just with discussions with Hamilton like I would assess a patient with whom I am having a dialogue and I would come to a diagnosis and the diagnosis I came to was I was fearful of Hamilton's intentions and his responsibility.

Having reached that conclusion what did you do to communicate your view to others? - I wrote a letter to the Scottish Scout Headquarters -- I think that was in August; there was some delay, I can't be absolutely certain about the delay but there was a period of time when we were considering.....we were trying to obtain Hamilton's warrant badge and he was reluctant to give it back to us initially but finally when the warrant did come back I wrote a letter to the Scottish Headquarters and gave my opinion as I have already expressed to you that gave me cause for concern.

What is the significance of the warrant? - The warrant is a document that is given to you when you are given some position of authority in the Scout movement but the positions of authority vary from Assistant Scoutmasters or leaders up to group Scout leaders and then up to Assistant Commissioners.

Is a warrant required for all these positions? - Yes.

When do you recollect that Hamilton returned the warrant? - April I think it was.

BY LORD CULLEN: What exact position did he have at the time, what was the warrant relating to? - He was warranted as an assistant scout leader or a scoutmaster in these days.

Was that for a particular Scout group? - He tended to go between two groups; he was firstly with/with the 4th/6th which is a troop which meets, in fact, in the church next door to here and then he went across to Bannockburn, the 24th, and associated with that troop and he caused some trouble there because of some discipline matter and he aggrieved parents and he was asked to leave Bannockburn or he asked to leave the Bannockburn troop, by which time we were asking him to return the warrant of the 4th/ 6th.

So the warrant bore on it the name of the particular Scout group as well as the position? - Yes.

So it was from the 4th/6th that you were seeking his removal? - Yes.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: And the things that led to you seeking that removal was that incident regarding the hills or the disciplinary matter that you just referred to? - All the matters together.

All the matters together? - Yes.

Could I ask you to look at Production DSA6 which I think in the volume is D4/H iv; do you recognise that? - Yes, I do indeed.

What is that? - It is the letter that I wrote to Hamilton asking him to return his warrant book to me.

That letter is dated? - The 25th May, 1974.

Do you recall whether you received the warrant in response to the letter? - Eventually we did -- I am not certain whether it was in direct response to this letter or not.

Could I ask you now to look at Production DSA9, in the folder that is D6/H iv; do you recognise this? - Yes, I do indeed.

What is it? - This is a letter that I wrote to the Scottish Scout Headquarters giving them my impression of Thomas Hamilton and telling them that he had not yet returned his warrant to me despite the fact that I have approached him to do this/this on several occasions.

What was your purpose in writing that letter, in giving your impression of him? - Because I felt he shouldn't be a member of the Scout movement.

I see in the second paragraph of that letter you make reference to his failure to return the warrant and then you express your view in the third paragraph; could you read the third paragraph? - The whole of the third paragraph?

Yes? - "While unable to give concrete evidence against this man I feel that too many 'incidents' relate to him such that I am far from happy about his having any association with Scouts. He has displayed irresponsible acts on outdoor activities by taking young 'favourite' Scouts for weekends during the winter and sleeping in his van, the excuse for these outings being hill-walking expeditions. The lack of precautions for such outdoor activities displays either irresponsibility or an ulterior motive for sleeping with the boys".

I think you then go on to refer to the incident of boating which you referred to earlier? - Yes.

And you said your concerns were either irresponsibility or an ulterior motive? - Yes.

And that was based on the hill-walking expedition? - Correct -- do you want me to continue?

If you read the fourth paragraph? - "His personality displays evidence of a persecution complex coupled with rather grandiose delusions of his own abilities. As a doctor, and with my clinical acumen only, I am suspicious of his moral intentions towards boys".

What did you understand the Scout Headquarters could do with the information in that letter? - I think under the circumstances to notify the neighbouring County Scouting organisations so that if Hamilton tended to approach them they wouldn't give him access; by this time he still had the warrant, he hadn't returned the warrant/warrant as far as I can recall by this time and I thought the Scottish Headquarters could enter Hamilton's name in a confidential file.

What is the purpose of a confidential file? - To have a file on people whom the Scout movement doesn't consider should be dealing with youths.

If you look at the second page of that letter, can you see what that is? - That is a form that the Scottish Headquarters use when there is some suspicion about a person in the Scouting movement; it is a form that has to be signed by the Commissioner which gives details and this was a form that I signed and returned the details about Thomas Watt Hamilton including his age, his height, the description of the man, the colour of his eyes and so on and various other pieces of information for the Scottish Headquarters to subsequently record on their confidential file.

What was the purpose of that file? - Simply to reinforce the information that I had given in my letter.

Could I ask you to look at DSA10 which is D6A/H iv in the folder; what is that? - This is a letter in reply to mine, I think the one I have just read out; I think this is a letter from Scottish Scout Headquarters to tell me that they had received the description form and that went on to add that Thomas Hamilton had attempted to gain access to Scouting in Clackmannanshire which he failed to do because the Scout Headquarters had notified the neighbouring counties.

In the second paragraph there is a reference to that application being accompanied by his record book? - I must have received his record book by that time, I am not absolutely certain of the date when he returned.....he did eventually return the record book to me.

And was the record book the same thing as the warrant book? - Yes, it is loose terminology, I am afraid.

Did you have any further contact with Mr. Hamilton after you had had his warrant returned to/

to you? - Yes, I did.

When was that? - I think it was 1977 when he came to me and I interviewed him in Falkirk Royal Infirmary; he demanded an interview with me because he wanted to come back into Scouting.

Did he arrange that interview with you in advance? - Yes, as far as I can remember.

That was in 1977? - Yes.

Were you aware in 1977 that Mr. Hamilton attempted to rejoin the Scouting movement? - I had known from various sources, I don't remember exactly the details but I had known from various sources that Hamilton had been trying in various directions to gain access back into the Scout movement.

Was he successful in that? - No.

What stopped him from being successful? - I think the organisation system; when a person approaches the Scouts to join we always make enquiries about the suitability of that person and as Hamilton's name was on that file then Hamilton wouldn't be given a warrant on the basis of that.

Did you have further contact with Mr. Hamilton after 1977? - I don't think I met him personally but I had had phone calls from him.

Do you recall when these phone calls were? - I can't remember exactly.

Prior to considering the telephone calls do you recall considering a report from the Ombudsman's local administration in 1984? - I was given a copy of that Ombudsman's report.

Who gave you that report? - It was given to me by the Scottish Scout Headquarters to which I responded.

What was the purpose of giving that report to you? - Just to see if the information regarding the Scout movement was accurate.

If I could ask you to look at Production DSA30,/

DSA30, in the folder that is D24/H iv; also it would be useful if you would look at DSA28 which is D23 in the folder; starting with the first of these documents can you say what it is? - It is a letter from the Scottish Scout Headquarters to me dated the 23rd August, 1984, simply telling me about the Ombudsman's report and asking me to read through this and to agree whether or not the information relating to the Scouts was accurate.

BY LORD CULLEN: Strictly speaking it was a draft?

- Yes, it was.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: Did you consider the terms of the report? - Yes, I did.

You say in that letter dated 23rd August there are five particular passages within the report to which your attention was drawn? - Yes.

Considering these in turn by looking at the report, the second of the two documents you were given, and look at paragraph 4 of the draft report in which there is reference to an official of the Scout Association passing information to a councillor, do you see that? - Yes, I do.

Do you have any information to confirm that? - No, I wasn't aware of that.

Do you have any information to suggest that it wasn't true? - No.

On page 3, paragraph 7, the last sentence of that makes a reference to the Director of Education saying that Hamilton had previously made it clear he had no connection with the Scout movement; are you aware of Hamilton claiming to have any connection with the Scout movement? - I don't think he made any direct reference to that as far as I am aware although I do remember he did use the word "Rover" which was at that time a Scout word.

On page 4 of the draft report in the tenth paragraph, about five lines down, there is a reference to the deputy director indicating he had been told by the Scout Association that they had removed Hamilton because of certain undesirable characteristics/characteristics but the Association were not prepared to say this formally; were you aware of the Association having done that? - No, but I was latterly aware they had agreed that this was accurate as far as the Scouts were concerned but I wasn't aware that they had told anyone outwith the movement that he had undesirable characteristics, I am not aware of that.

Did you seek to dispute that finding? - Who?

Did you seek to query that? - No.

On the sixth page of the draft report, paragraph 14, at the very bottom of the page and the start of the next page there is reference to a letter by Hamilton in 1974 saying that he had resigned his leadership within the Scout movement? - He did eventually resign, we asked him to resign and he did resign and that is when he returned his warrant book and record.

So Hamilton did write a letter resigning from the Scout movement? - I am not sure whether he wrote a letter or not but he certainly did return the warrant.

BY LORD CULLEN: Was that before or after his position was terminated, was it written after the event? - Yes, in fact it took quite a bit of persuading for him to return the warrant book; he was out of the Scouts by that time and he did return it eventually but I am not exactly sure of the details.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: Before continuing with the report could you look at DCRC ALB 1F1 and in the folder it is D27; now, was this a letter, a handwritten letter, by Hamilton dated the 28th April, 1974 which doesn't indicate to whom it was addressed and which he says he tendered his resignation of the 24th Stirling Scout Group and he goes on to say "I disapprove of your behaviour" who he says to be the District Commissioner? - Which letter are you referring to?

It is a handwritten letter dated 28th April, '74? - This is all dated 1981.

Perhaps/

Perhaps if I could give you my copy of the letter; have you seen that letter before? - No, I haven't.

Do you see in that letter Hamilton purports to be resigning from the Scout Association? - I haven't seen that letter before.

So that wasn't a letter that Hamilton wrote to you when he resigned from the Scout Association? - I don't think Hamilton wrote to me when he resigned from the Association, I wrote to him but I don't think he wrote back to me but I certainly haven't seen that letter before.

Can I ask you to have before you document reference number DSA15 which is D10 in the folder; do you recognise that letter? - Yes, I do.

Who is it addressed to? - It is addressed to me.

Who is it from? - Thomas Hamilton.

What is the subject matter of that letter? - This followed an interview I had with Hamilton in Falkirk Royal Infirmary; I think my interview was on the 19th August and this is a letter dated 28th August and he simply says "I am sorry for any inconvenience I have caused you. I would be obliged if you would keep me in mind should any positions be available. Tom Hamilton". I think he wrote a similar letter almost identical although it wasn't a photocopy, he wrote a similar copy to the Scottish Scout Headquarters.

As far as you are concerned it is a letter of resignation? - It is a letter of resignation, yes; no, I am sorry, may I correct that -- I don't think I look upon that as his letter of resignation; he had already returned the warrant prior to my meeting with me in the Falkirk Royal Infirmary; this was 10 days after my meeting with him in Falkirk Royal Infirmary he wrote this letter because we had a long meeting in the infirmary and we discussed all aspects of his membership of the movement and this was him replying to me by saying he regretted any inconvenience he had caused me.

To/

To return to the Ombudsman's report, that is DSA28 and DSA30, we were looking at page 6 and reading from the bottom of that page to the top of the next page and reference was to Hamilton writing a letter which showed he had resigned from the Scout leadership in 1974 because of his certain disapproval of certain actions of certain Scout officials? - Yes, that was Hamilton's impression which he gave to the Ombudsman at the time of the inquiry.

You have no recollection of having received such a letter? - No.

Can I ask you now to look at page 8 of the draft report, paragraph 18 and the part of the text which is inset halfway down there where there is reference to "The title of the club does not appear to imply any masquerading under the banner of the Scouts or any other uniformed organisation". Were you aware of any concern that Hamilton's organisation was masquerading as Scouts? - I think the use of the word "Rovers", he was using the words "Stirling Rovers" and Rovers was a name that we used to use before Venture Scouts became the usual terminology but at that time Rover was in vogue and there was a slight worry on our part that Hamilton may have been suggesting to people who didn't know that he may be part of the Scout movement.

Could I ask you to look at document DSA31, in the folder it is D25; is that your reply to the previous letter? - Yes, it is.

What did you set out in that letter? - I simply gave an synopsis of all that had happened in relation to Hamilton and the Scout movement for the period of time from 1974 to the date of this letter; the reason that I brought all the information together in this letter was that we could have for ourselves or for our records a synopsis of the situation with regard to Hamilton because it seemed to me at this time that this was an ongoing situation with him continuing to be troublesome to us.

The first thing you say in the second paragraph, you say that Hamilton was requested to return his warrant because he wasn't considered to be/

be a suitable person to help out? - "He was, in fact, requested to return his warrant so that the whole situation could be clarified and due to the fact that he was not considered to be a suitable person to be holding a warrant in the Scout movement at that time".

In the next paragraph you refer to the meeting that you had at Falkirk Infirmary in August, 1974? - Yes.

And you note that he had acted in a breach of the rules of the Association? - Yes.

Again in the next paragraph you refer to the letter we have already looked at in which he said he wouldn't trouble you further? - Yes, he also said during the interview he would make no approach to scouting unless they approached him first and then he wrote the letter where he had apologised to me for any inconvenience caused.

The paragraph after that, you refer to a meeting in 1977? - Yes.

Which you say had taken place at your house? - Yes, he phoned my house, it was a phone call.

Did you ever receive an unannounced visit by Mr. Hamilton to your house? - Yes, I think I did but I can't remember exactly the date when that took place.

Perhaps to assist you you could have in front of you document DSA70 which is D29 within the folder? - Yes, I had forgotten about this meeting; Hamilton had appeared at my door at 4 o'clock on the Sunday afternoon on the 17th August, 1986.

This document you have in front of you, these are types notes? - These are notes that I took after Hamilton left; I felt very concerned and I felt I had to write down all my dealings with Hamilton and then I subsequently had this typed so that I could read my writing which is not particularly legible.

Did/

2.35 p.m.

Did he discuss the effect that these rumours, as he saw them, were having on his life?

- He said in paragraph 6, I think it is, he maintained his life had been ruined by malicious rumours about his behaviour and his views, rumours spread by Scouting Commissioners in the Dunblane area.

You asked him to substantiate that statement, that the rumours had been spread by Scouting Commissioners in Dunblane, but he declined to do so? - He declined to do so because he said the matter was in the hands of his solicitors.

Some five paragraphs up from the bottom you have made another assesement of Mr. Hamilton which begins "From the purely professional point of view"? - Yes.

You say there you regard him as having become even more obsessional, and from the look in his eyes you wouldn't have been surprised if he was currently on psychiatric drugs. Is that a view of him you reached as a result of your conversation over the hour? - Yes.

What did you do with this typewritten note? - What did I do with it?

Yes, what did you do with that? - Simply held it in my own files.

You see on the second page of that there is a handwritten note and that is dated the 24th of August, 1986? - Yes. That was another phone call from Tom Hamilton about ten days after he appeared on my doorstep, and he phoned me and asked me if I had thought over what he had said during his last visit. I explained about my -- I can't read my own writing, I am afraid -- "and found talking difficult".

BY LORD CULLEN: Is it "accident"? - That is correct.

You must have had an accident? - I did. I fell out of the loft, and broke two ribs, and I was having difficulty in speaking to Hamilton. He apologised for bothering me and said he would re-contact/contact me in a few weeks.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: So that wasn't a long conversation? - No.

Can I ask you please to look at document DSA38, which is D30 in the folders? You will see this is a letter to you from Mr. Jefferies at the Scout Association Headquarters? - It is.

That is dated the 19th August, 1986? - Yes.

That letter records that Hamilton had visited the Scout Association Headquarters and discussed matters with a person there? - Yes.

In the second paragraph it is indicated that Hamilton was still claiming that he was being slandered by Scout people in Stirling? - Yes.

And mentions a Mr. Deuchars? - Yes.

And Mr. Deuchars has given his view of Hamilton in the third paragraph? - Yes.

And he says he regards Mr. Hamilton as suffering from a persecution complex? - Yes.

So to that extent he was agreeing with your view of him? - Yes. That would be ten, 12 years after my initial letter to Scottish Headquarters about Hamilton.

What did you do in response to having received that letter of the 19th August, 1986? - I don't think there was anything I needed to do at that time.

Can I ask you to look at document DSA72 or D31 in the folders. Do you see what that is? - Yes. It is another record of a further phone conversation with Hamilton that I took on the 16th September, 1986.

And what is the subject matter of that telephone conversation? - Well, clearly it was Tom Hamilton's attempt to get back into the Scout Movement.

And/

And once again he was expressing concern at being blacklisted? - Yes.

And asking to see a confidential report on him contained in Scout Headquarters? - Yes.

And your response to him was the Scout Association did not require to discuss with him the reasons for not taking him on as a Leader? - Correct, yes.

Could I ask you next to look at document DSA39, which is D32 in the folders? You will see this is a letter which has been copied to you from a Mr. Garth Morrison? - Yes.

The subject matter of the letter is that once again Hamilton has been making complaints to the Association? - Yes.

And had been seeking an opportunity to respond to what he saw were criticisms of him? - Yes.

He referred to the report from the Commissioner for local administration, and the reference there to what he calls "The grapevine of innuendo and unattributable comment"? - Yes.

What was the purpose of writing to you in these terms? - This was a copy of a letter sent to Headquarters and to me for information from the Chief Commissioner, Garth Morrison, who was not aware of Hamilton's existence until he received the telephone call from Hamilton, and Garth Morrison wrote to me simply to say he had had this long monologue, as he calls it, on the telephone, and he asked me to suggest to him how he should respond to this.

And did you discuss it with him? - I didn't discuss it with him because he wasn't available, but I left a long message with his secretary.

What did you suggest in that message? - I suggested that Hamilton not be reinstated into Scouting for a variety of reasons, and I suggested to him that he ought to proceed with a degree of caution because I was frightened that Hamilton might go/go into legal circles and involve the Scout Movement, although there was no justification whatsoever for that, in my opinion.

You said that Hamilton ought not to be permitted into the Scout Movement for a number or a variety of reasons? - Yes.

What were those reasons? - The ones I have already stated in regard to irresponsible acts on climbing, boating, handling of parents, discipline of Patrol Leaders, which cumulatively added up to an irresponsible person.

So there was no additional material? - No, because he was out of Scouting then. Anything that has happened subsequent to 1987 has been outwith the Scout Movement.

Could I ask you to look at DSA73, which is D34 in the folders? Do you recognise this? - I do.

What is it? - It is a note that I obviously wrote down to remind myself of phone conversations that I had had. This is December, 1986. On Sunday the 6th I had a phone call from Comrie Deuchars to tell me that Tom Hamilton had recently been to see him.

And the second note there is? - And the second note was on the Wednesday, 10th December, from David Vass, the Chief District Commissioner of Trossachs Area, to say Tom Hamilton had been to see him at his house, and true to form he had been difficult to get rid of, and he made wild accusations about various aspects of the Scout Movement.

It was about that time your involvement with the Scout Movement ceased; is that correct? - I retired in 1987, yes.

Did you have any further dealings in respect of Hamilton? - I don't remember anything else.

Did you at any time have evidence or concrete evidence to suggest that Hamilton would harm children in any way deliberately? - No. He would/would harm them by default in the sense of taking young boys -- I am talking about ten, 11 year old boys -- to the Aviemore area and sleeping in a van -- I think is irresponsible. I don't think he set out to harm the boys, but his actions were those of an irresponsible Leader and we couldn't tolerate that. I had nothing to suggest that he was homosexually orientated. I was suspicious of his moral intentions towards boys, but that is a different thing. I never stated that he was a homosexual.

Did you have any reason to suspect he had paedophile tendencies? - I had worries.

And these worries are the ones you have already indicated? - Yes, which tended to grow throughout the years.

Were you aware that Hamilton had a Firearms Certificate? - No.

Were you aware that he ever used guns? - No.

Did you ever report any of your concerns to the police? - No.

Did you ever discuss with the police your concerns as to Hamilton? - Perhaps on an informal basis I did.

Do you recall a time in 1993 when two policemen came to see you regarding Hamilton? - No, I don't; I don't have any recollection of that, I am afraid.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Would it be correct to assume that, given your position of responsibility in the Scout Movement, one of your prime concerns would be the safety and wellbeing of the children who were members of the Scout Movement? - That was my prime responsibility.

That was your prime responsibility? - Yes.

So everything that you did would have been done with that prime responsibility uppermost in your mind? - Yes.

And/

And you have told us that you were concerned about Mr. Hamilton? - Yes.

Concerns which perhaps were not born out of any -- what is sometimes called hard and fast evidence? - Only in respect of the activities that he took the boys on, which was factual, and that represented in my estimation considerable irresponsibility; but as far as his moral intentions are concerned, that could only be what might be called "hunch". I like to call it "clinical acumen".

Would it be a fair summary that you felt that it was your responsibility to those in your charge to take firm and clear action as a result of your concerns? - Yes.

And that firm and clear action involved taking such steps as you could instigate to ensure that Mr. Hamilton played no further part in the Scout Movement? - Yes, although it was really Scottish Headquarters that took these steps, not me. I gave the initial report to Scottish Headquarters and they, with their communication system, notified the rest of the Scout Movement in the area.

You told us towards the end of your evidence-in-chief that you had discussed your concerns, at least informally, with the police? - Yes.

Could you elaborate on that please? - I can't really remember in any detail. It was probably a casual conversation, because I had a police near-neighbour, now moved away from the area, and I think I probably discussed Hamilton because I was a little bit anxious -- and I have no idea when that was.

Who was the police near-neighbour? - He was -- as I say, he has now retired from the police. He was Chief Inspector John Ferguson.

And what did you say to him? - I really have no idea.

Would it be fair to assume that you passed on the general concerns which you have told us about? - Possibly.

Could/

Could you look at letter dated 14th May, 1991? We are going to get into difficulty here because the numbers I have for Productions I think are different from the ones that are being used, but I think this is D46 of H4? If you bear with me for a moment I will get its other number -- no, I won't. I don't have it.

MR. LAKE: I think that is DSA68.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: DSA68. Just take a moment to -- I think again this is a letter which you wrote on the 14th of May, 1991 to a Mr. McKellar? - Yes.

Area Commissioner of Forth Valley Area Scouts? - Yes. He took over from me. I was the Area Commissioner and I retired and he took over the post as Area Commissioner from me in 1987, and he was still in that office in 1991.

Perhaps you could just read out the first couple of paragraphs? - This is to Jim McKellar, regarding Thomas Hamilton -- "That name will, I feel certain, ring a few bells, and I am afraid that it is probably about to ring a few more. I have heard that Hamilton is pursuing a case against Central Scotland Police for harassment, and is directing his complaint to HMI in Edinburgh".

And you go on to indicate that Hamilton's complaint appears to be principally directed at the police at this time, but you then felt you would be happier if your file was returned to you; is that right? - Yes. I had given Jim McKellar this file when I resigned or retired, rather, from the Scout Movement.

Why did you want your file returned to you? - I am really not quite sure.

Perhaps you could just read the last three paragraphs for us please? - The last three, starting with "Please feel free"?

Yes? - "Please feel free to take photocopies if you so desire, but I should be grateful if you would return this file to me as soon as possible. Hamilton has, in his time, taken on the Scout Movement, right up to the Chief Scout. Central/Central Regional Council -- right up to his M.P. and the Ombudsman; and now Central Scotland Police -- right up to H.M. Inspector. Surely all these folk are not wrong?".

What did you mean by "Surely all these folk are not wrong"? - Well, I can simply say they were all out of step except Hamilton, was the phraseology that I would otherwise use. I couldn't imagine all these organisations could be wrong in their assessment of the man.

At this time are you aware that Hamilton had been and was still permitted to possess a Firearms Certificate by Central Scotland Police? - I had no idea that he was using firearms at all, ever.

Were you ever informed that he possessed a Firearms Certificate? - No.

Could we go back to one of the earlier letters in the whole matter please, which, according to our numbering is document two of H4, which I think is DSA2 or 3, I am not sure which -- forgive me. It is a letter of 24th May, 1974 from Mr. Jeffreys.

MR. LAKE: DSA4.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: DSA4, I beg your pardon. This is a letter from Mr. Jefferies, the Executive Commissioner to the Warrants Department I think at Scout Headquarters? - Yes.

And it records that "The County Commissioner for Stirlingshire has advised" -- that is yourself? - Yes.

".....has advised that he has requested the return of Hamilton's warrant as he is suspected of improper behaviour with boys". I take it that is a letter relating to your concerns relating to his moral intentions? - Yes.

Well,/

3 p.m.

Well, specifically concerning paedophilia? - I don't think paedophilia was a word that was readily used in these days, 1974, but I would say Yes to that question now.

That is what it amounted to? - Yes.

In addition, the County Commissioner who is a medical man, thinks that Hamilton is mentally unbalanced? - That is not a phrase that I would use. I think David Jeffreys is using a little journalistic licence there and certainly that is not what I suggested.

Do we find your considered views therefore in your letter of the 29th June to Mr. Jeffreys which we looked at earlier? That is Document D6 which is DSA9. If you could just be reminded of that? - Sorry, what was the question?

We are looking for your considered views at that time. Can I take it this letter would be a record of them? - Yes. I think in the second-last paragraph.

I appreciate it is very difficult at this remove in time but can you tell us to the best of your ability why you entertained these suspicions and concerns which we find recorded in this letter? - I don't think you can quantify clinical acumen other than a hunch if you like but my medical training perhaps encourages me to see this sort of thing in people and I can't put it into more specific terms than that.

But there must be something to prompt these concerns, however well trained you are or were. What was it about either his behaviour or about what he had done or about the allegations or whatever which was prompting these concerns? - I find that very difficult to answer. I really do.

Moving on to the letter of resignation or the purported letter of resignation I think you were shown just briefly although it was the first time you had in fact seen that letter? - Right.

Could it be given to you again? I think it is D27? - This is dated 1981.

No/

No, what I had in mind was the document which you hadn't seen before which was purported to be dated I think in April 1974? - It is not that document. I have it, thank you.

I think we know that that letter emerged in the course of the Ombudsman's investigations? - Yes.

Can you take just a moment to read it? - Read it out, do you mean?

No, just to yourself? - I haven't seen this letter before today and I can only take it it was addressed to Comrie Deuchars. Would that be correct?

All I want to ask you is whether the contents of that letter bear any relation to the circumstances surrounding Mr. Hamilton's removal from the Scout Movement? - No, I wouldn't have said so. The person referred to in the letter would appear to be Comrie Deuchars. Yes, it would appear to be him.

I take it from what you have told us that nobody gave you any information relating to this letter? - None whatsoever.

In 1974? - None whatsoever.

If such a letter had been in fact been sent to anyone in a position of responsibility, would you have expected to be made aware of it? - Not necessarily. I think this is a matter which could be dealt with by the District Commissioner who was Comrie Deuchars at the time. I don't think that it would have been necessary for me, as Area Commissioner or County Commissioner, to be brought into that. It was very much an internal matter.

You see, it has been written I think before the earlier correspondence setting out the reasons for Mr. Hamilton's removal I think? - Yes.

Which appears happened on your recommendation? - Yes.

In which he purports to tender his resignation? - Yes.

If/

If he in fact had tendered his resignation before the earlier documentation which we looked at, would you have expected somebody to have informed you of that fact? - I am really quite confused now about the timing. Can you perhaps rephrase that for me?

Well, the letter which we were looking at earlier which set out your considered views is dated June 1974. If I can remind you of that? - Yes.

Whereas this letter purports to be dated the 28th April 1974? - Yes.

Now, if in fact Mr. Hamilton had tendered his resignation as a Scout Leader before the earlier documentation which we were looking at, would you have expected somebody to have told you about that? - Not necessarily.

BY LORD CULLEN: The fact of the matter is this letter appears to have been written about a month before you asked Mr. Hamilton, pressed your request, to return his warrant? - I think so, my lord.

And I see your letter of the 25th May refers to an earlier one of the 15th May sent by Mr. Deuchars asking for that warrant to be returned? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Did Mr. Deuchars tell you at the time that he had received any information of a complaint? - I can't recall any discussion with Comrie Deuchars about this letter or its contents. Could I just add one thing? This letter makes reference to Hamilton tendering his resignation as Scout Leader of the 24th Stirlingshire Troop. He was not Scout Leader of that Troop. He was Acting Scout Leader of that Troop. He was actually warranted for the 4th/6th Troop which meets in Stirling itself so Hamilton was wrong in that statement but I haven't seen this letter before.

BY LORD CULLEN: Would Acting Scout Leader be covered by a warrant? - Not really, my lord. It is not essential I don't think. Perhaps the warrant procedures are in progress but it would be/be taken on an acting basis until such times as his warrant was..... but he was warranted in the Scout Movement for the 4th/6th.

Yes, somebody for which he was acting might already have a warrant for another post? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: I wonder if I could ask you to look at D22 which is DSA57. I think you will see that is a newspaper cutting dealing with parents backing youth leader after the Council end the letting of a premises. I think at that time you were still Area Commissioner? - I was.

And I think at that time that Hamilton has set up the Dunblane Rovers Group and I think also at that time you indicated earlier that Rovers was still a name known in the Scout Movement? -
Yes.

Being followed by the Venture Scouts? - That is right.

There was really nothing to stop anyone setting up a Rovers Group, was there? - None whatsoever.

And indeed there was and is nothing to prevent any person setting up any youth organisation? - Not as far as I am aware.

Do you accept that perhaps one of the areas this Inquiry will need to consider is the vetting of those who are responsible for looking after children in youth organisations in the broadest terms?
- Having spent my life trying in the Scout Movement, I think an organisation such as that should have some kind of confidential file on people who are potential leaders in that organisation.

Does the Scout Movement itself carry out any vetting?
- Oh, yes.

Does it have access to get a Criminal Records Office check for instance on those who wish to be in the Scouts? - I am not able to give that information but I understand the Chief Executive of the Scottish Scout Association is one of the witnesses and he will be able to give information about that, up-to-date information.
the/

Do you accept a certain inevitability that if there is to be vetting of those involved in any youth movement in the broadest sense that that may need to extend to more traditional youth movements such as the Scout Movement or other church-related organisations? - To the Scout Movement?

Yes? - We have it already.

Yes, but I am talking about some official vetting mechanism as opposed to the organisation itself? - I would think that would be very difficult to undertake because it is very difficult to tell people when your impression is based on clinical acumen and in Hamilton's case it was not that that made us think of getting him removed. It was irresponsible behaviour during various outdoor activities and that together with my impression of him were the reasons for having him removed and it would be rather difficult I think to put that down into..... I don't know. I can speak within the Scout Movement because it works there and we have had it working for years. I think it would be very difficult to have it widely used.

But Hamilton was a thorn in the flesh for years of the Scout Movement really from 1974 onwards? - He was indeed.

And indeed even as of today's date there would be nothing to stop the Hamiltons of this world setting up a youth group? - Nothing whatsoever as far as I am aware.

And is it your view that some sort of vetting mechanism is appropriate for non-mainstream organisations? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: Can you have DSA38 in front of you please? That is D30/H(IV). We have looked at this already today and I think that is a letter addressed to you from Mr. Jefferies. In the last paragraph of that letter it is suggested that nothing should be said about/about Hamilton as he is the sort who would resort of legal action. Do you know what sort of legal action would be in contemplation at that time? - This is David Jefferies' phrase, not mine, so I've no idea what he had in mind that Hamilton might do.

Can you also please have a look at the previous document in the pile which is D29/H(V), otherwise DSA70? This is a document we have already looked at. It is a note of a telephone conversation headed 17th August 1986. I think that is a file note you made following the appearance of Mr. Hamilton at your house, is that correct? - Yes.

And you said you kept that in your own files. Are these files which were located in your own house or elsewhere? - In my own house.

And later in your evidence you made reference to informal discussions which you might have had with a neighbour, Chief Inspector John Ferguson? - Yes.

Firstly, can I ask you if you have a clear recollection of having spoken to the police officer? - No, I don't.

Is it possible you didn't speak to him at all or is your memory of having spoken to him quite clear? - Having been a personal friend of him and a near neighbour, I could well have discussed this in the course of other conversations but I have no specific recollection of when and if I discussed Hamilton with John Ferguson.

BY LORD CULLEN: Can you just assist me with one point. Can you tell me to what extent Hamilton was given any reason or reasons, official or otherwise, for the removal of his warrant? - Yes, he was warned about the behaviour in Aviemore and the fact that he had failed his boating test and that this represented a lack of responsibility and as a result his warrant would be removed.

Was that given to him officially or unofficially? Was it in a letter for example or just in a conversation? - I don't think it was a letter. I think it was in a conversation between Comrie Deuchars and Tom Hamilton.

So/

So he may be able to tell us about that? - Yes.

So that is really as far as you are aware the reasons went, is that right? - Yes.

Whatever you yourself may have thought, that is as far as the reasons went? - Yes.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: You said in answer to my learned friend Mr. Campbell that you would not have used the word paedophilia in 1974? - I don't think so. I don't think it was a word that I knew in 1974.

Just to be clear about it; what exactly was your concern in relation to the moral intention towards young boys in 1974? - I think it is the word which is now used, paedophilia, yes. If it had been today I would probably have included the word paedophile.

So it would be correct to say there was a fear of improper sexual contact? - Yes, that was my fear but it was only instinctive.

One last matter; you referred to the various avenues pursued by Hamilton and his report to the Ombudsman? - Yes.

Were you aware of the outcome of Hamilton's complaint to the Ombudsman? - I think the Ombudsman came up in Hamilton's favour if I recall.

ROBERT COMRIE HESLOP DEUCHARS (68), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: What is your occupation?
- School crossing patrol and retired former BR employee.

Is it correct that you live at 5 Kent Road in Stirling? -
That is correct.

And that is close to No. 7? - Upstairs, yes.

Sorry/

Sorry, is that you are upstairs or 7 is.....? - No. 5 is upstairs. No. 7 is downstairs.

How long have you lived there? - Since 1970.

Before I turn to your dealings with Thomas Hamilton, I would just like to consider your connection with the Scout Association in general. When did you first join the Scout Association? - I joined the Wolf Cubs in 1934 and remained in the Scout Movement until I was officially retired in April 1993.

In the early 1970s can you recall what your role was within the Scout Association? - In 1970 I was Group Scout Leader of the 4th/6th Stirling Group. In 1971 I was appointed Assistant District Commissioner for Scouts. In January 1973 I was appointed District Commissioner for Stirling.

What were the responsibilities of the District Commissioner with regard to the appointment of Scout Leaders? - The District Commissioner has full responsibility for the appointment and termination of leaders in the Scout Movement within Stirling District.

If someone wished to apply to become a Scout Leader, to whom would they apply? - They would apply to me as District Commissioner.

And what would you do with that application? - When you are approached by someone to become an adult leader, the procedure which is laid down in the Scout Association Policy, Organisation and Rules is that an Inquiry Form is prepared by the District Commissioner and sent to our Records Office in order to determine the person's character, whether they are suitable or unsuitable for working with young children.

You said that is what is done. Is that what was done in 1970? - That is what was done in the case of Thomas Hamilton.

When did you first have dealings with Thomas Hamilton? - I would say as a civilian I visited his Do-It-Yourself shop on a few occasions prior to him approaching me to become a leader.

That/

3.20 p.m.

That is his shop in Cowane Street? - That is correct.

When did he apply to you to become a Scout Leader?
- I would say it would probably be May or June of 1973. I am not sure of the exact date.

Are you aware whether or not Hamilton had any involvement with the Scout Association prior to that date? - I had heard that he was a Venture Scout with the First Stirling, but as I did not visit Venture Scouts, who are supposed to be a self-governing body, to see that the thing was running well, I had no connection with Hamilton as a Venture Scout.

What is a Venture Scout? - As far as I know, yes.

What is a Venture Scout? - Well, he had his uniform and all the rest of it with the First Venture, and I believe Scott Park, who was the leader, confirmed he was a Venture Scout, but not a regular attender.

What age range do Venture Scouts cover? - Venture Scouts cover the age range -- well, at that time it was 16 years to 20 years.

Was he still a Venture Scout at the time he applied to become a Scout Leader? - No. I think he had just actually finished his Venture Scout period of service.

You said in 1973 Hamilton approached you to become a Scout Leader? - He actually phoned me at home one night and I arranged for him to come down and have a talk with me, so that I could get the various particulars from him, i.e. his name, address, date of birth, so that I could send away the enquiry form.

And that is the enquiry that has to be sent to Scout Headquarters? - That is correct.

Did you do that in respect of Mr. Hamilton? - I did.

And/

And what was the response? - As I did not receive a phone call within the next 24 hours it was assumed it was all right, but as I normally do, I wait until I get written confirmation that a search has been carried out and no record of any misdemeanours could be found.

And that is a record kept by Scout Headquarters? - That is correct.

At that time what was your opinion of Hamilton's character? - I would say he was young and very enthusiastic.

Were you happy to accept him as a Scout Leader? - Yes.

What are the responsibilities of a Scout Leader? - Well, as his first appointment was that of Assistant Scout Leader, he was under the direct jurisdiction of the Scout Leader of the 4th/6th Stirling, and also under the Group Leader of the 4th/6th Stirling, so he was only acting as assistant at that time.

So when you refer to him being an Assistant Scout Leader, was that after you had approved him? - That is correct.

And once he had been approved by you, that would be when he was granted his warrant book? - That is correct.

Was he able to be an Assistant Scout Leader without that warrant book? - He could have been on probation while his warrant was going through, but until the warrant is actually signed by me, it is an ineffective piece of paper. His service with the Scouts actually begins on the date the District Commissioner signs the warrant.

After you had sent the enquiry to Scout Headquarters did you make any further enquiries prior to signing the warrant? - No.

Did you see Mr. Hamilton again prior to signing the warrant? - No.

When did you tell him that he had been appointed as an Assistant Scout Leader? - When I received/received the completed warrant book, as it was known at that time, from Scout Headquarters, I went along and presented it to him.

And can you say again which Scout troop was it he was appointed to? - He was appointed as Assistant Scout Leader to the 4th/6th Stirling, which met in the Episcopal Church Hall, Dumbarton Road.

How did he get on as Assistant Scout Leader? - From memory he was very keen and willing to do this, that and the next thing. In fact, there was an occasion when I was approached by Mr. Sim, the Group Scout Leader, who unfortunately is now deceased, that Thomas Hamilton had offered to take some boys on his boat to Loch Lomond for some part of their Proficiency Badge work. I said "Under no circumstances until such times as that boat is certified by someone in authority who knows about speedboats".

This was arranged through Glasgow Scout Council, who had an expert, and Mr. Hamilton was given the name and address of this scrutineer, as I would call him, and advised to make arrangements so that his boat could be inspected. I received a report back from the gentleman in question, and Mr. Hamilton was declined a certificate on the grounds that (a) there were insufficient lifejackets/something aids -- I can't remember the words.

Buoyancy aids? - Buoyancy aids, that is it -- insufficient lifejackets/buoyancy aids, no distress flares and no oars in the event of the engine breaking down on the boat, and also his knowledge of the waters of Loch Lomond was rather scant.

And that is in relation to his seacraft or boatcraft? - Yes.

Your information about how he performed within the 4th/6th Stirling Scout Troop -- did that come from the Scout Leader? - Yes.

Who was the Scout Leader? - I think if I remember it was a Mr. Montgomery Stevenson.

And he was the source of your information? - Yes, and also from Mr. Sim, who was the Group Scout/Scout Leader.

Is Mr. Stevenson still with the Scout Association? - No, he is not. He left, and stays somewhere in the St. Ninian's area.

Did you have any problems with Mr. Hamilton as a Scout Leader at the 4th/6th Stirling? - No problems whatsoever.

How long did he stay at the 4th/6th Stirling? - Well, on the information I received from Mr. Sim and Mr. Stevenson, during September, or the beginning of October, I had had a conversation with Father McAllister of the Roman Catholic Church in Bannockburn, who wanted to resurrect the former 24th Stirlingshire, which was a closed sponsored group attached to the Roman Catholic Church. I pointed out to Father McAllister that there were no Roman Catholic leaders available, and he said "I am quite willing to accept a Protestant leader, as long as they run the troop, and I will look after the religious aspect of the boys within the group". And with that, and with the reports I received on Thomas Hamilton, I took it upon myself to give him a six months' secondment to start up and organise the troop at Bannockburn.

Is it correct that problems occurred while he was at the 24th Stirling Troop? - They did start to appear, but at the beginning I put it down to, shall we say, being inexperienced. His play times were somewhat stretched some nights, and there didn't seem to be much Scout work being done. So I reprimanded him, and things improved for a few weeks.

A more serious complaint was made, however, when he took some boys up to the hills? - That is correct.

Was that complaint made to you? - It was, by the parents of the boys who had been on that trip.

What were they complaining of? - They were complaining that the boys had arrived home on the Sunday very cold and hungry due to the fact that they had been forced to sleep in the van overnight, and the temperature had dropped so dramatically that the/

the van had frozen up and had to be towed to Aviemore to be defrosted.

What did you do in response to the complaint? - Well, after investigating and going round all the parents involved I then told Mr. Hamilton that his planning abilities were rather lacking, and in future he should double check everything -- because his excuse was that the accommodation had been double booked, and he didn't want to disappoint the boys, so he let them sleep in the van overnight.

So you warned Hamilton about his behaviour, but took it no further? - That is correct.

And there was a second complaint made not long after that? - Yes, within three weeks the boys again arrived home, but this time their sleeping bags were soaking wet, all their clothing was wet, and once again they had slept in the van.

Who made the complaint on that occasion? - The parents of the boys who had attended.

What did you do in response to it? - I once again went round and visited both the boys and their parents, and got their story, and one parent had produced a copy of the programme which Mr. Hamilton had issued on both occasions, and it clearly stated that the boys would be accommodated in the former railway hostel at Aviemore. Being a B.R. employee I immediately phoned my counterpart at Aviemore, obtained the phone number of the hostel, and confirmed with the owner of the hostel that no booking had been made at all by Mr. Hamilton in his name or in the name of the 24th Scout Group on either of the occasions.

Did you speak to Hamilton about this? - I did.

What did he say? - I told him after that that in view of his lack of qualities in leadership that I considered his services were no longer required in Scouting, and that I was withdrawing his warrant.

So what was the actual reason for withdrawing/withdrawing the warrant? - For the lack of planning and irresponsibility of Thomas Hamilton in putting young boys at risk.

That was at risk from cold? - That was correct.

Did you have any reason to suspect that he intended to cause harm to any of the boys in any way? - No reason whatsoever.

Did you have any reason to suspect there may be improper sexual motives in what he was doing? - None whatsoever, because when I asked the boys, the boys said "Oh, it was all right for Mr. Hamilton. He went on the front bench seat on the van with his sleeping bag and blankets, and we had to sleep on the cold steel floor".

Did you tell Hamilton that you were withdrawing his warrant? - I did.

What was his response? - His response was "It is your decision. I will resign" -- and he walked away from me then. Following that I submitted a form to Headquarters saying I did not consider him a suitable applicant due to his immaturity and irresponsibility.

And what was the purpose of submitting that to Scout Headquarters? - To ensure that he did not get another warrant in the Scout Association.

How would he be prevented from getting another warrant? - Well, the minute the application was filled up and sent to Headquarters, they would check the list again and say "No, no, your warrant is declined".

So the Scout Headquarters keep a list of persons they consider unsuitable to hold a warrant? - That is correct.

And is that referred to as the blacklist within the Scouting Association? - That is what is called the blacklist.

Could I ask you to look at a document which is DCRC AL/B1/F1/1. It is D27 in H4. I think/think there is not a copy of it other than this one -- there is a copy available now. That is a letter addressed from Mr. Hamilton, from an address at Cowane Street in Stirling, and is dated the 28th April, 1974.

It states "Dear Sir, I tender my resignation as Scout Leader of the 24th Stirlingshire Scout Troop. Firstly I disapprove of your behaviour as District Commissioner, in the underhand way you conduct Scouting business. Having helped at your summer camp, I was appalled at the conditions of safety, hygiene and equipment. I was shocked in your openly buying six bottles of cider and six bottles of wine for the consumption of young boys, and in the way it is common practice for all the Leaders to disappear to the pubs at night and leave the boys unsupervised". His reference to the District Commissioner in that letter would be a reference to you? - That is correct.

So this letter appears to have been written to you? - Well, may I say I can't recall having received that letter.

You never received that letter from Mr. Hamilton at the time? - Not that I can remember.

After you had terminated Mr. Hamilton's warrant what was the next time you saw him? - About 12 years later when a furniture van appeared at the gate of the block and Mr. Hamilton got out and started unloading furniture into the empty flat below where I stay.

So he was moving in beneath you? - He was. I thought he was just helping the old couple, but after the van left and he remained, my words at that time were "My God, what have I done to deserve this?".

Who were the old couple, as you have called them? - The old couple were who I was led to believe were the mother and father of Thomas Hamilton.

Did you speak to Hamilton and his mother and father while they lived beneath you? - I spoke mainly to the old man, because on one occasion he was attempting to cut the grass with an old hand mower and I said "Look, Mr. Hamilton, I will get the electric mower out and I'll tidy up the grass for you/you in five minutes. Put that old mower back in the garden shed", and ever since that day I have always cut the grass for him.

Did you socialise with Hamilton's father? - Yes, once we got to know each other, yes, we met on a Saturday or Sunday in the Masonic Lodge in Stirling.

Did you ever socialise with Hamilton? - No.

Are you in a position to say whether or not Hamilton was a Mason? - I don't think he was. I mean, talking to the gentleman that I assumed was his father I would say that no, Thomas Hamilton was not a member of the Masonic Lodge.

And did you have discussions with Hamilton while he was living at No. 77? - Mainly after he had pushed his father out of the house and become sole tenant of the Council flat.

When did his father leave the house? - I would say three or four years ago.

And what makes you say that Hamilton pushed his father out of the house? - Because on occasions -- it is a very quiet street, and on occasions, on odd nights my wife and I would hear this gentle tapping on the door downstairs, and this was the old man trying to get in, and speaking to the old man later, young Tom had deliberately locked the door and left the key in the lock, and made the old man stand out there for maybe ten, 15, 20 minutes, knocking at the door; and the old man would knock quietly because he didn't want to disturb the neighbours round about.

Did Hamilton's father ever complain to you that he was being mistreated by Hamilton? - He did.

What did he say was happening? - On one occasion the black and white television which was in the living room, according to the father, was removed and put into the old man's bedroom, and a new coloured television was installed in the living room, with strict instructions "The new television is for Thomas Hamilton's use only". Under no circumstances could the old man make use of this television.

And/

3.50 p.m.

And that was the way Hamilton treated his father? -
Yes.

You say when his father moved out you had a discussion with Hamilton? - That is correct.

Were there any particular areas Hamilton discussed with you? - The main area of discussion was between Thomas Hamilton and myself was the Sports Club or Boys Club or whatever it was that he ran at Dunblane. That seemed to be his forte in life and it was very successful and I remember saying to him on one occasion "Maybe this is what you have been looking for, Tom. It is your life", shall we say.

Did he have any complaints arising out of his operation of the Sports Club? - No, according to him it was going very well.

Did he ever discuss with you an incident arising out of a camp he held at Loch Lomond in 1988? - Yes, he was very upset that the police had raided the camp and judged the camp as a Scout Camp and not as the way he ran the camp and he was very distressed and he was determined that he would obtain an apology from Central Scotland Police for a mishandling of the incident.

Did he indicate to you that he blamed the Scouts in any way for what had happened? - Never once.

Were you aware whether Hamilton had many callers at the house at 7 Kent Road? - There were one or two but I wouldn't say he had many callers at the house.

Were these men or women that came to the house?
- Mainly men.

Would any women visit the house? - There might have been one but that is about 10 years ago at least.

Did any boys come to visit the house? - I have only seen young boys there once and that was at the end of one of his camps or..... No, I think/

Shelmerdine

think it would have been after he had started holding his annual do at Dunblane High School. A van drew up, young boys got out, unloaded the van, straight back into the van and away again.

So it was an isolated occasion? - Yes, definitely very quick.

Do you recall an incident in which callers to the house resulted in the police being called? - Yes, I do.

When was that? - I would say probably May or June of last year. I heard probably about 5 o'clock at night a very heavy hammering on Mr. Hamilton's door and then a knock came to my door and this well-built lad in his 30s asked if I knew if Mr. Hamilton was in and I said "Well, I'm very sorry, I can't tell you one way or the other".

What did the man do? - He said "Well, we'll come back later".

Did he come back later on? - He did. About 9 o'clock at night. I heard the front door being hammered and kicked and I heard his back door being hammered and kicked and the next thing I knew the police had arrived and there were actually two men there and they were put into the back of the police car. The police eventually got Mr. Hamilton to open the door and went in and had a few words, came out, spoke to the two gentlemen in the car and then they got out of the police car and walked round the corner as if they were going to another car.

Did you discuss that incident with Mr. Hamilton? - I did.

Did he tell you what had happened? - He said it was a misunderstanding about the gentleman who came to his door. I think it was his stepson and Mr. Hamilton had also I believe advertised a photographic business which offered to take young lads photographs and the stepfather had misinterpreted what the boy had taken home.

You mentioned a camera business there. Were you aware that Hamilton carried on a photographic business? - Well, some of the neighbours told me that he had pushed business cards through/through their letter boxes but I can't recollect getting one myself.

Did you ever see him using a camera? - Yes, on occasions. There was one occasion when I came home and he was in the front garden across the road photographing some pansies as the lady involved was an artist and she had tried to sketch the pansies so that she could later do the pansies in water colour and he took photographs for her and gave her the completed photograph when it was ready.

Do you know where he conducted his business from? - I am assuming it was from 7 Kent Road.

And you didn't notice any people coming to and from the house in respect of this business? - There were one or two cars came but I wouldn't like to say that they were there at the business. I believe there was one gentleman that Thomas Hamilton mentioned to me that he had just sold a camera to, but that was it.

Did he ever discuss any photographic assignments he was doing with you? - He did, because he came out of the house one morning heavily laden with tripods and camera cases and such like and I said to him "Where are you going, Tom?" and he said "Oh, I have got a conference to cover in Glasgow" somewhere. I don't remember where it was and he said to me "I'm going away along to get the train" and I said "Throw the stuff in the back of the car and I'll drop you off at the station" which I did and that was it.

You mentioned you saw one or two callers to the house, mainly men. Do you know who they were? - One of them was a landscape gardener by the name of James Gillespie and the other, I won't say frequent, was somebody who I am assuming worked for STV because they were in a blue Rover Estate with the STV insignia on the side of it.

Were you aware Hamilton kept guns? - No.

Did he ever discuss guns with you? - He brought a gun catalogue out once and whether I had mentioned earlier that I had at one time been a member/member of the Bridge of Allan Rifle Club, I said "Tom, I'm sorry, but my eyesight is gone, using rifles and that goes beyond me now."

Did you ever go into No. 7 Kent Road? - I was only privileged to visit the kitchen in No. 7 Kent Road. I was never in any other part of the house.

In passing by did you ever see into the house? - Only once.

Where did you see into? - For some unknown reason his front curtains were open and I recall seeing maybe 15 or 18 pictures round his wall of what looked like class photographs to me.

Were these photographs with a number of boys in each photograph? - Yes.

Could you see what the children in the photographs were wearing? - No, I couldn't.

Were you aware of those photographs being removed from Hamilton's walls? - Well, I did hear that they had been removed but I couldn't confirm or deny that statement.

Were you ever aware of him burning photographs? - Once again, I was told that he had had a bonfire out in the back garden and there appeared to be a smell of celluloid but I was out that night and I just saw the burning embers when I came home.

Do you know whether or not Hamilton worked? - I don't think he worked after his Do-It-Yourself shop collapsed.

Did he appear to you to be short of money? - No.

What led you to that conclusion? - Well, last year my wife had insisted that we fit a security light (a) so that she could see to drive into the garage and she also wanted another security light at the side of the house so that nobody could stand at the corner and catch her as and when she came out of the car. We got that fitted and Thomas Hamilton came to the door and said "That's a wonderful/wonderful idea. I have a lot of valuable equipment. How much did it cost?" I said "Well, the total came to about £64" so within five minutes he was back at the door and handed me £32, 50 per cent of the cost and the same thing happened when I persuaded him to connect an outside tap to his waterpipe, he paid 50 per cent of the cost.

In your opinion was he a good neighbour? - He was a very good neighbour.

Did you have any complaints about him? - The only complaint I had was the state that he kept his kitchen in and also that he refused to do anything about his front garden.

You said in 1973 you regarded him as being suitable for appointment as Scout Leader or Assistant Scout Leader? - Yes.

Did your opinion of him change at all as a result of living so close to him? - Yes.

When did your opinion of him change? - I would say just shortly after he had got rid of the old man out of the house.

You say that was about three years ago? - Yes.

What was your opinion of him after that date? - I felt that he had no self-discipline and he appeared to have no sense of responsibility.

Did he give you any cause for concern? - Not against me in particular or anything like that.

Did you see Hamilton going about in March of this year? - Yes.

In particular, did you ever see him making his way out of the house carrying letters? - Yes. I think it was either the Saturday night or..... no, it would have been the Sunday night prior to the Dunblane tragedy.

On the 12th March did you notice a white van parked outside his house? - Well, it wasn't actually parked outside his house. It was parked outside/outside between No. 1 and 3 which is two semi-detached houses next to our block. That is where it was parked.

Did you see Hamilton using the van? - Not on the Tuesday night. It was on the morning of Wednesday the 13th that I associated the van with Hamilton.

What was he doing with the van at that time that you associated it with him? - He was scraping ice off the van when I returned from the newsagent's to pop the Stirling Observer through the letter box for my wife.

Did you speak to him? - I did.

What did you say? - I asked him to save my legs and to save my feet getting wet in the snow would he put the Stirling Observer through our letter box so that my wife would get a read of it in the morning.

What time was this? - This was about 8.15 in the morning of the 13th March.

Did he strike you in any way as unusual at that time? - No, as I say, the only thing that made me sort of wonder was that he was up at that time in the morning because he wasn't an early riser.

But you saw nothing unusual in him at that time? - No, because when I proffered him the paper he said "Right, Comrie, I'll do that".

Were you aware of rumours circulating in Stirling and Dunblane regarding Hamilton? - I was.

What were the subject of these rumours? - There were rumours that he was sexually abusing children and such like and so forth.

Where did you hear these rumours? - From one of the neighbours following the camp at Loch Lomond and I said to the neighbour "Be very careful what you say. There has been no proof."

Did you have any reason to suspect Hamilton was in some way mistreating children? - None/

None whatsoever.

Are you aware that Hamilton ever blamed you for circulating rumours? - I did hear from my counterpart in the Trossachs, Dr. David Vass, that some letters had gone to parents in Dunblane saying that I, along with other members of the Scout officials, had spread malicious rumours about him but at the same time I also understand that there was another letter went to the parents of Dunblane that if they wanted a character reference then they could contact me and I would be only too willing to supply a character reference on behalf of Mr. Hamilton.

Did he ever speak to you and confront you with having, as he saw it, spread these rumours? - No, none whatsoever.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: When asked about looking into Mr. Hamilton's living room on one occasion I think you said something to the effect that for some unknown reason his front curtains were open? - Yes.

Do I gather correctly from that that generally he kept his front curtains closed? - That is correct.

Even during the day time? - Even during the day time, yes.

I think you told us that you became quite friendly with Jimmy Hamilton, Mr. Thomas Hamilton's adopted father? - I did.

And you would actually go for a drink to the Masonic Lodge? - That is correct.

Which Lodge was that? - Lodge No. 30 in Forth Street, Stirling.

When you were asked by my learned friend Mr. Lake as to whether or not Mr. Thomas Hamilton was a Mason, I think you made some reference to remarks made by Jimmy Hamilton in giving your answer that in your view he was not a Mason. What did Mr. Jimmy Hamilton say that caused you to be of that opinion? - I wouldn't like to say. I don't know. Tom just gave me the impression that he wasn't interested/interested in anything such as the Masons. I couldn't say what inference James made of that. Sorry.

Was Jimmy Hamilton a Mason? - He was.

In the same Lodge? - No, he wasn't actually a member of Lodge 30. He was a member of Lodge 76.

No re-examination.

SANDRA LESLIE FERNIE (47), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: I think you live in Cowdenbeath? - Yes.

What is your employment? - Administrative assistant with the Scouts.

How long have you worked for the Scout Association? - Seven years.

Who do you work with in the Scout Association? - Do you mean in close contact with?

Colleagues, yes? - Two other administrative assistants, the chief executive, the accountant and two programming executives.

Do you have any dealings with the chief executive?
- Yes.

Who is the chief executive? - David Shelmerdine.

What are your dealings with him? - We just do office work. Secretarial work.

In the course of your work do you answer the telephone? - Yes.

If anything arises, any query arises, in a telephone conversation, what would you do with that query? - Sorry?

If/

4.00 p.m.

If a query was raised in the course of a telephone conversation would you answer it, or would you refer it to another person? - It all depends what sort of query it was.

Do you recall receiving a telephone call from Mr. Hamilton? - Yes.

When was that? - Wednesday 6th March.

And what time was that? - I can't be exact. It was after lunch, which would be maybe between 1.30 and 2.

Did the caller say who he was? - Yes.

What did he say he wanted? - First of all he asked me who the Patron of the Scout Association was.

And what did you reply? - I replied it was the Queen, and could anybody else help him?

And did he respond to that? - He just wanted to know the other high ranking officials.

Were you able to give him the names of other high ranking officials? - I told him I didn't have them to hand.

Did you make any suggestion instead of giving him the names? - I asked him if the Chief Executive could help him.

Could I ask you please to look at document DSA50, which is also D50 within the folders. Have you seen it before? - Yes.

What is it? - It is my statement after the telephone conversation.

And is that a record of the conversation that you had that we were referring to? - Yes.

You see at the start of the first paragraph there is a reference to the enquiry as to who the Patron of the Association was and your reply that it was the Queen? - That is right.

And,/

And, as you said, he then asked whether there were any other persons in high office to whom he could write? - Yes.

It says there that you offered to send him a copy of your Annual Report? - Yes, that is right.

And what was the purpose of that? - Well, I didn't realise at first what he wanted or the reason for his phone call, and sometimes if they are doing their memoirs or something, if they have been in the Scout Association a long time, they are quite happy to have the Annual Report, and it goes into their portfolio.

Did Hamilton give you the reason for his call? - Not straight away, no. He just told me the Annual Report wasn't of any use to him, and I thought this was a little unusual, because they are normally quite happy to have the Annual Report.

And what did he discuss after that? - I asked him why he wanted this information, and he then told me that he wanted the Queen or other high ranking officials to know about the mal-administration of the Scouts.

Did he say what mal-administration he considered had occurred? - He just said it was being put about that he was a pervert, and that David Vass was going around the schools telling everybody he was a pervert when he was only actually an enthusiastic and friendly Leader.

Did he say what he meant by the fact that he was an enthusiastic and friendly Leader? - No.

Did he refer to his boys' club? - Sorry?

Did he refer to boys' clubs which he had started up? - Yes. He said he tried to start them up on numerous occasions, but because David Vass had gone into the schools it was very difficult for him.

He blamed all these matters on David Vass? - Well, he said David Vass was to blame -- he knew for a fact, that is what he told me, that David Vass had gone into the schools and approached the headmasters.

Shelmerdine

In/

In the second paragraph of that report you have made reference to allegations he had made against Comrie Deuchars? -

Yes. He had said that David Vass and Comrie Deuchars had said he was a pervert.

It is noted in the second paragraph that you offered to let Mr. Hamilton speak to David Shelmerdine, the Chief Executive? -

Yes.

What did he respond to that? - He responded by saying it was too late for that.

And later on, in the final paragraph of that page of your note, it is noted that you again suggested he should have a word with the Chief Executive. What did he reply to that? - He said he had sent letters to them before, and they had done nothing about it. I then asked him who he had written the letter to and who he had spoken to before.

Who did he say he had spoken to? - He said he couldn't remember all the names, but the one he could remember was Jefferies.

Who is Jefferies? - That is David Jefferies, a former member of staff.

What was his position in the Scout Association? - He was the Executive Commissioner.

At the top of the second page of that note you have again referred to the statement he made to you as to the effect of the various rumours. You have noted there he said he could no longer walk down the street, his reputation had been ruined, and he was close to bankruptcy because of the Scouts? - That is right.

Were these his actual words? - Yes, more or less, from what I can remember now, yes.

He blamed all these things on the Scouts? - Yes.

Is that the Scouts as an Association, or the individuals he had referred to previously? - That I don't know. He just said "The Scouts".

You/

You have then noted he said he wanted the Queen to know what kind of organisation she was Patron of? - Yes.

And finally it is noted that he asked you to send him names and addresses of all the high ranking officers? - That is right.

Did you do that? - No, I did not.

Why not? - I reported the conversation to the Chief Executive and he said "Don't send them".

When did you report the conversation to the Chief Executive? - The following day.

Did he give a reason for not sending them? - He just said "Oh, I know about Thomas Hamilton".

Did he say what he knew about Thomas Hamilton? - No.

Had you come across Thomas Hamilton before that telephone call? - No.

How did he sound to you on that call? - Normal. He wasn't aggressive or unusual in any way.

Were you able to gauge what kind of mood he was in? - I think he was -- I felt he was actually after sympathy.

No cross-examination.

DAVID JOHN CHARLES SHELMEARDINE, (48), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: Do you live in Dunfermline? - No, I don't live in Dunfermline. That is my office address.

Shelmerdine

What is your employment? - I am the Chief Executive of the Scottish Council of the Scout Association.

Is that a full-time post? - That is.

And what do your responsibilities include?/

include? - My responsibilities include the day-to-day management of the Association in Scotland, and also the development and implementation of policy.

When were you appointed to the post? - In April, 1987.

And who was your predecessor? - My predecessor was David Jefferies.

Prior to considering the operation of the Scout Association in relation to the appointment of Leaders at the present day, I would like to look first at the relationship between the Scout Association and Thomas Hamilton. Are you aware when Mr. Hamilton first approached the Scout Association to become a Leader? - Yes, I am. We have a record that he approached the Association in July, 1973, when a warrant was issued to him.

You weren't in the post of Chief Executive at the time? - No, I wasn't.

On what do you base your knowledge that he became or applied to become a Scout Leader at that time? - We have a record system that keeps records of Leaders who are appointed within the Scout Association.

Perhaps if I could then refer you to some of those records? Are you aware when a warrant was first issued to Hamilton? - Yes. That is the 11th July, 1973.

And could I ask you to look at document, reference DSA2, which is D1 in the folders? What is that? - This is the Leader Warrant Record Book which is issued to Leaders on appointment within the Scout Association and it is dated the 11th July, 1973.

And are you aware from the records that that warrant was subsequently withdrawn from Hamilton? - Yes, I am.

Are you aware what the reason for that withdrawal was? - The record on file suggests that the warrant was withdrawn because of concern over a couple of activities in Aviemore where the Association's rules in terms of adventurous activities/activities seemed to have been broken.

What form does that record of activities take? - That record is a report from the then Area Commissioner, Mr. Fairgrieve.

And could I ask you to look at DSA9, which is D6, and at the same time if you also have DSA4, which is document D2? Firstly, dealing with the one that is marked D2, do you see that is a letter dated the 24th of May, 1974? - 24th May, 1974, DSA4?

Yes -- sorry, you are on different numbering? - Yes. This is a letter from my predecessor, Mr. Jefferies to our Warrant Department at Headquarters.

What is the purpose of that letter? - This was to record that the then County Commissioner of Stirlingshire had withdrawn the warrant of Mr. Hamilton.

And what was the reason for the warrant having been withdrawn? - It is indicating here that there was an indication of improper behaviour with boys, and also that "The County Commissioner, who is a medical man, thinks that Hamilton is mentally unbalanced" -- to quote.

And looking then at the document that is DSA9, you will see that is a letter dated 29th June, 1974, and that is addressed to your predecessor, Mr. Jefferies, from Mr. Fairgrieve? - That is correct.

And in that he gives his opinion as to Hamilton's state of mind? - That is correct.

Shelmerdine

Attached to that letter on the second page -- could you say what that is, please? - This is what at the time was known as a descriptive form which recorded for the confidential files at Headquarters a list, of build, colour of eyes, hair, etc., of Mr. Hamilton, so that a record is put on file in case an individual tries to get additional certificates elsewhere in the Scout Association, potentially under his own or an assumed name.

And if a person did that you would be able to reject the application? - We would.

We/

We have heard reference this afternoon to something known as the blacklist. What is the blacklist? - This was a term used at that stage for a confidential file, confidential service record of Scout Leaders.

And those letters to which you have referred, are they part of the blacklist? - They would have formed part of the confidential file then called the blacklist, yes.

Are those the only letters that make up the blacklist against Thomas Hamilton? - No, there is a series of other information that has been kept since that time, in terms of correspondence or other information related to Hamilton's other activities.

Are you aware in general within that correspondence whether there are any complaints other than those referred to in these letters, made against Mr. Hamilton? - The complaints in the letters from Scout colleagues to the Records Department through Scottish Headquarters, are the only Scout complaints; but we were asked on a number of occasions to give references to a number of other enquiries that were made.

What enquiries were these? - There was an enquiry I believe -- if I could just give the date -- back in August, 1984.

Who was that enquiry from? - That was an enquiry on a draft report by the Commissioner for Local Administration, who was carrying out an enquiry as to the cancellation of school lets by

Shelmerdine

Central Regional Council. Mr. Hamilton had apparently at that time been stopped from using school premises.

We have already heard from Mr. Fairgrieve that the concern that he had about that regarded the method of the circumstances in which Hamilton came to leave the Scouts? - That enquiry was not about the main thrust of why Hamilton left the Scouts, no.

What other enquiries had been made to the Scouts? - There was an enquiry in June, 1993.

Who was that enquiry from? - That was by/by Central Scotland Police, who were carrying out an investigation.

What were they investigating? - I do not know the nature of the enquiries, only that Mr. Hamilton was connected to that enquiry.

Who, within the police, did that enquiry come from? - The original enquiry came from Detective Constable Taylor, I believe it was, from the Child Protection Unit, which I believe is based in Bannockburn.

And what was the nature of the enquiry? - The nature of the enquiry was to ask if Hamilton had been a Scout Leader, which we confirmed, and we also made available to them information which we had on the file -- for example the information about the Commissioner for Local Administration's report, and a number of the articles that had appeared in the Scotsman related to that enquiry.

Were the policemen permitted to have access to the files? - Yes, they were.

The Inquiry was adjourned until tomorrow morning at 10 a.m.

TUESDAY, 4th JUNE, 1996.

FIFTH DAY.

DAVID JOHN CHARLES SHELMERDINE,

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE:

Yesterday we discussed the fact of the file kept on Thomas Hamilton at Scout Headquarters? - Yes.

And you said it was referred to as "the blacklist"? - It the past it was referred to as the blacklist -- now known as "the confidential files".

And what is the effect of the record being kept there?
- The effect of the record being kept there is to ensure that if another person -- if the same person applies for an appointment within the Scout Movement elsewhere in the United Kingdom then we are able to check their previous record of service within the Scout Movement and if that has been unsatisfactory, we can deny an appointment to that Leader.

Does that apply for a defined period or is it in perpetuity? - It remains on the file in perpetuity.

You also said in some of the evidence you gave yesterday that you had enquiries about Hamilton by the Commissioner for the Local Administration? - That is correct.

And what was the purpose of that enquiry? - My understanding from my reading of the file is that a lot of a school premises, or premises belonging to Central Regional Council, or controlled by them, was refused to Mr. Hamilton, and he objected to that refusal and asked for an enquiry into that matter by the Ombudsman.

And what was the purpose of the Ombudsman's enquiry to discuss? - To my knowledge it had been mentioned that Mr. Hamilton had in fact been a Scout Leader previously, and that they had considered his work as a youth worker unsuitable.

And

Shelmerdine

And why did the Commissioner write to the Scout Association? - The Commissioner wrote to the Association to confirm various facts about our involvement with Mr. Hamilton.

Perhaps to consider those facts we could refer to the report which is DSA28 or D23, and a letter from the Scout Association which is DSA30 or Production D24. Perhaps first looking at DSA30, do you see that is a letter to Mr. Fairgrieve? - That is correct.

And in it the writer draws attention to five specific parts of the report where statements are made about the Scouts? - That is correct.

Are you in a position to say whether or not the statements made about the Scouts on those five points are an accurate record of the facts or an inaccurate record? - My understanding from reading through the file is that these were paragraphs that were highlighted, as you have mentioned, where the Scouts are noted in the report. My understanding is that we believed that we did not have to comment any further on those particular aspects. There was only one aspect that required further clarification, which is the subject of further correspondence between the Scout Association and the Commissioner.

Looking at the individual parts of the report in turn, the first is on page 2 at paragraph four, and if you refer to that paragraph you will see that the whole of it refers to dealings with the Scout Association. Do you see at the beginning there is reference to an award ceremony in October, 1981, and an official of the Scout Association drawing the attention of a Councillor to the fact the boys' group was not connected to the Scout Movement, although there was a similarity in the name; is that accurate? - That is correct.

And towards the end of that paragraph there is reference to the Youth and Community Officer having dealt with the local official of the Scout Association, who had confirmed that the group, that is Hamilton's group, is not affiliated to the Scouts, and that Hamilton had been removed from the Scout Association following a confidential report which showed him to be undesirable for Scout work? - That/

That is correct.

Is that an accurate representation of what happened? - Yes. If we are approached and asked for references for a former Scout Leader, we will indicate whether or not they had been suitable, and their service had been satisfactory.

And you provided that information to the local authority? - I believe so, from what I have read from the file.

The next reference is to the third page of the report and paragraph seven, and there there is reference in the final sentence to the Director of Education saying that Hamilton had made it plain in 1981 that he had no connection with the Scout Movement; and the Director commented that Hamilton's group's name had conveyed an impression that it was so connected. Are you aware of any impression that Hamilton's group was believed to be connected with the Scouts? - Yes. This and other instances where there is a very close similarity between the name of the Scouts and other derivatives of that name sometimes leads to confusion amongst parents as to the nature of the group that they are attending. In this case I believe the name of the group that Hamilton ran was called the Stirling Rovers. "Rovers" is a name that the Association had used up to the middle 1960s for a section of the upper age group known as "Rover Scouts".

And was the Association concerned about Hamilton's use of the word "Rover" in the title of his group? - I believe that there was concern at the time about the name, but there is no licensing that allows us to protect the name "Rovers", or associated names.

Is that saying that the Association were unable to do anything about the name despite their concern? - We would have been unable legally to do anything about the concern about the name.

Could I refer you to paragraph ten on the fourth page of that report? Paragraph ten reads "The matter was placed before the Further Education Sub-Committee on the 15th of August, 1983 and the item was taken in confidence. The Depute Director told/told the Committee that the complainant" -- that is Hamilton -- "had been given a let to set up a new group which the Depute Director felt was meant to confuse people with the Scout Movement. He indicated that they had been told that the Scout Association had removed the complainant because of certain undesirable characteristics, but were not prepared to say this formally". You see there there was reference to confusion with the Scout Movement, and that refers to the area you have just been discussing? - That is correct.

526
Shelmerdine

D.J.C.

Is it correct when it says that the Scout Association had provided information that Hamilton had been removed because of certain undesirable characteristics? - That is correct, but at the time there was no formal framework in which we could share this information, and therefore, like an employer seeking to employ a new member of staff and seeking references from other people, we provided a reference indicating that Mr. Hamilton, we felt, was unsuitable to work with young people.

What information was actually given to the local authority in response to their request? - I don't know, because there is nothing formally on file.

Are you in a position to say at all whether it was a general indication that he was unsuitable, or if any specific reasons for the unsuitability were given? - My understanding would be that at the time we would just indicate that we had found Mr. Hamilton to be unsuitable as a Leader. I do not have information as to the nature of how much information was passed.

BY LORD CULLEN: Can you say by which person that information was passed? - No, that is not clear.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: Would it be a person from the Scout Headquarters that that information was provided by? - It is unlikely. In this case it is more likely to be a local reference that is taken up.

In what way would that reference be taken up? Would it be by letter to Scout Headquarters? - It might be by telephone conversation. It could be by/by letter; and I do not know in these circumstances what was the nature or how that enquiry was responded to.

Are you aware whether it was a formal or an informal enquiry? - Sorry, could you repeat?

Was this a formal or an informal enquiry? - That I don't know.

Do you receive both sorts of enquiries? - We do receive both sorts of enquiries.

It states in the report there that the Association were not prepared formally to say that they regarded Hamilton as undesirable. Is it a general policy of the Association not to give formal statements? - Because there is no formal framework in which to provide full information, the information we can provide is only of a very general nature.

On page 6 of the report in paragraph 14, at the foot of the page, the sentence there reads "He also enclosed a letter which showed that he resigned his Scout Leadership in 1974 because of his disapproval of certain actions of other Scout officials". Did the Association accept that as an accurate record of what had taken place? - No. There is correspondence on the file indicating that the Ombudsman wished clarification on that point, and that we had in fact confirmed that we had no letter on record showing that he had resigned, and our understanding was that Mr. Hamilton's warrant had been withdrawn.

Did the Scout Association provide clarification to the Ombudsman on this point? - Yes, there was correspondence between my predecessor and Mr. Henry Procter, who was then the Secretary of the Scottish Council concerning this matter.

And as a result of that correspondence was information provided to the Ombudsman? - Only to say that we had no correspondence on file from Mr. Hamilton indicating that he had resigned, but we did have correspondence on the file indicating that the local Scout Commissioners had in fact withdrawn his warrant.

Could/

Could I ask you, before proceeding with the report, to look at another report, which is reference DCRC/AL/B1/F1/1? This is the one that is D27 within the folder. Now, do you see that is a letter from Thomas Hamilton? - That is correct.

Which bears to be dated the 28th of April, 1974? -
Yes.

And the opening sentence of that letter is to the effect that Hamilton tenders his resignation as a Scout Leader? - That is correct. This appears to be a letter to the local District Commissioner.

Does the Association have any record of having received that letter? - We do not have a record of having received that letter.

Returning to the Ombudsman's report, the final reference to the Scouts is contained on page 8, in paragraph 18, and in the text that is inset there is reference once again to the "The title didn't appear to imply any masquerading under the banner of the Scouts or any other uniformed organisation". And that was a statement of the Director of Education. Is that contrary to the impression of the Scout Association regarding the name of the group? - It is contrary to our belief based on the fact that we do get calls from parents occasionally seeking clarification as to whether the group that they belong to are in fact affiliated to the Scout Association or not.

Just looking at one or two other passages within that report, in paragraph 11 on page 5 -- just take the opportunity to read that. Do you see that paragraph notes that there were never any formal complaints made against Hamilton? - Yes, that is correct.

Despite a period of delay having been given to permit such complaints to be made? - Yes.

Did the Association take the matter of complaints into account in their dealings with Hamilton's warrant? - No, because we have rules in the Association and these rules are monitored by the structure we have in place, and as a result of that, in terms of internal supervision, we are able to/

to come to a decision whether or not an individual is operating within the framework of those rules of the Association. I believe, though, that there had been some complaints from parents in relation to the activities that Mr. Hamilton had carried out when he was involved with the Scouts, particularly these two events in Aviemore; but they were not formally documented at the time, until a report on why his warrant was cancelled.

Can/

10.20 a.m.

Can I refer you to paragraph 16 of the report on page 7? This is dealing with the situation when Hamilton's letting of a school had been revoked by the Council and it states "A petition with 70 signatories and more than 30 letters from parents requesting reinstatement of the let were received by the Regional Council and at a meeting of the Further Education Sub-Committee on 7 November 1983 consideration was given to these and to whether the matter should be reconsidered". Were you aware that such a petition of support had been raised in respect of Hamilton? - Only by virtue of an article which is on file from the Scotsman, I think headed "Parents Back Youth Leader" and having now read the file note of the Ombudsman's report, there is no other indication on file that we were aware of a petition and at the time we were not directly involved in this dispute.

I will come to consider newspaper articles on file in just a minute but if I can refer you to paragraph 20 of the report on page 9. There the Commissioner says "In the course of the investigation my officer asked the Youth and Community Officer whether there had ever been any concern about lack of organisation on the part of the Group over the years when they had a lot of school premises or whether there had been any trouble over the use of school premises or equipment. The Youth and Community Officer said that there had never been any indication of cause for concern either from parents or school janitors. The Group's behaviour in school was exemplary". Were you aware of that view being taken of Hamilton's actings? - In relation to this particular Inquiry, only what is written in the report. If that is compared with our view of the way that Mr. Hamilton organised activities in relation to Scout activities at an earlier stage than that, we would have some concerns about the organisation but we were not asked particularly to comment on that aspect of the report.

Did you submit any information or evidence to the Commissioner relating to the view of the Association of Mr. Hamilton's groups? - There is no written submission to the Commission, other than requesting that we looked over the draft report to/to check if it was factually correct in relation to the involvement of the Scout Association, where the Scout Association was mentioned.

You said the area in which you did consider it was inaccurate is only that in so far as Hamilton's resignation from the Scout Movement? - That is correct.

Can I ask you to look at two cuttings from newspapers? The first is reference DSA57 which is Document D22 and the second is DSA56 which is Document 28. Looking firstly at DSA57, Document 22, do you recognise this newspaper cutting? - This is the newspaper cutting that was on file.

And you see the cutting records "Parents of 70 boys who attend a Youth Group at Dunblane in Perthshire have been surprised and bewildered by the abrupt termination by Central Region of the Group's weekly let of the local High School. Many have written in protest to the Council asking for an explanation, and praising the way Dunblane Rover Group are run by Mr. Tom Hamilton. A petition has also been lodged". So you are aware from the newspaper cutting that that had taken place? - Only from the newspaper cutting, yes.

Just to complete that, that is a report from The Scotsman dated November 28th 1983, is that correct? - That is correct.

The second cutting which is Document DSA56, D28, do you recognise that? - That is another cutting from the Scotsman which reports the findings of the Ombudsman in this Inquiry.

What is the date of that cutting? - Wednesday November 21st 1984.

And what does the report say about the Ombudsman's findings? - In summary, it found that the Council had been unjust to Mr. Hamilton in withdrawing the lets for his Boys' Club.

You see in the second paragraph it says that Mr. Gillett who is the Parliamentary Commissioner for local administration, said "The Council's treatment of Mr. Tom Hamilton amounted to maladministration and that an injustice had been caused/caused him". Then there is a quotation saying "The evidence that the Group was well run and was supported by parents was ignored in favour of complaints which proved to be little better than gossip". Were you aware of that having been said by the Commissioner? - Only from the Press cutting.

Do you agree that the complaints proved to have been little better than gossip? - I can't comment on the particular situation of this incident. If you refer back to our own involvement in it then there was factual evidence as to our concerns over his unsuitability in terms of the organisation of outdoor activities.

So the Association on its own information had reached a conclusion radically different from that of the Parliamentary Commissioner? - We did.

Did you have enquiries from the Police to view your file on Mr. Hamilton? - I am aware of only one enquiry to us which is formally recorded in our file.

Can you recall when that took place? - That was not until June of 1993 and was an enquiry by Central Scotland Police.

Can I ask you to have in front of you Document DSA44 which is D47 in the folders. Do you recognise what this is? - Yes, the top half of the file note, the typewritten part, is my file note following an enquiry by Detective Constable Taylor from the Child Protection Unit in Bannockburn.

So an enquiry was made of you? - It was.

What was the nature of the enquiry made by Detective Constable Taylor? - The police were making enquiries concerning allegations of photographing boys in ill-fitting swimming trunks with the tops removed and the police indicated at that time that they could not find evidence of the photographs.

What did the Detective Constable seek from the Association? - The police were indicating that/that they wished to know about Mr. Hamilton's previous involvement with the Association.

Are you aware how the police came to know that there had been an association? - Yes, a member of the Scout Association who also worked with Central Scotland Police had indicated to the police that he had had a previous involvement.

Who was that person? - I believe that was Mr. James McCallum.

What was his position within the police? - I don't know his position at the time but he is currently I believe the Director of Management Services of Central Scotland Police.

Did you meet Detective Constable Taylor? - I did not personally meet Detective Constable Taylor. This was a telephone enquiry.

What information were you able to provide to him? - I provided information about the previous involvement of Mr. Hamilton as a Scout Leader and also the fact that we had withdrawn his warrant because the file indicated that his services had been unsuitable.

Did you give any information as to the basis on which the warrant had been withdrawn? - The file note indicated that the reports of both activities that Mr. Hamilton had undertaken at Aviemore had not been well organised and that was the basis of the withdrawal of the warrant.

Was Detective Constable Taylor able to see the file? - Yes, he asked if he might see the file and we indicated that he could come to our office and view the file.

When was that telephone enquiry made? - The telephone enquiry was made on 24th June 1993.

When was the file inspected? - On the same sheet of paper, the handwritten file note by my colleague, Mr. Henry Proctor, who was then the Secretary of the Scottish Council, dated 20th November 1993 where he records a visit of Detective Constable Taylor and a colleague.

At/

Shelmerdine

At the end of the first paragraph in that handwritten note there is a reference to the inspection being "All as a matter of complete confidence". What is meant by that? - I can't be sure what that means particularly but it is our usual practice if enquiries are made with the police to make available to them whatever information we might have.

I understand that but what is meant by the reference to that information being provided in complete confidence? - I don't know particularly what my colleague meant by that statement. It might be slightly superfluous in terms of the written note.

Did you ever get enquiries from the Press regarding Mr. Hamilton's behaviour as a Scout Leader? - Not in relation to his behaviour. I did have an enquiry in March of 1994 from the Sunday Mail.

What was that enquiry about? - The enquiry was merely asking if Mr. Hamilton had been a member of the Scout Movement.

Did it seek any information about why he had had his warrant withdrawn? - No, it did not.

What information did you provide to the journalist? - I gave information as to the length of service of Mr. Hamilton in the Scout Movement back in the early 1970s.

Did you provide any copies of what was already on your file? - I would need to be reminded of my file note in that context. I have a copy of my note here if that would be helpful, which I believe that the Inquiry has a copy of.

Perhaps parties don't have a copy in front of them at the moment. I wonder if you could provide that note and it will be placed on the imager for us all to see? - This is a copy of my file note.

The enquiry was from, as you can see, Marion Scott, and the enquiry asked if Thomas Hamilton had been a Scout Leader. I confirmed this and referred Marion Scott to two articles in The Scotsman which were already in the public domain.

Are/

Shelmerdine

Are those the two articles that we have just looked at? - That's correct, yes.

So the Association was happy to provide those articles as representative of Mr. Hamilton? - These articles were already in the public domain.

Was any further information sought from you? - Not at all.

Thank you. That is all that is required of that document. Did you have enquiries from other youth groups relating to Hamilton's suitability? - There is a file note indication that there had been an enquiry of one of our local officials within the Edinburgh Scout Area by another youth organisation.

What organisation was that? - It is not recorded. Only our response to our representative in the Edinburgh area.

When was that request for information made? - If I might just check. The information provided from our office to our local person in Edinburgh was in May 1988.

Do you have a file note of that? - Yes, I do.

Perhaps we could have that on the imager as well please. Was this note prepared by you? - No, this was a note prepared by Mr. Proctor, the Secretary of the Scottish Council, and is in his handwriting.

Does it say there what the request was from the other youth group? - No, it records the telephone conversation from Mr. Allan Willoughby, the official in the Edinburgh Scout Area, following an enquiry he had and was making comment and providing information about the Government Ombudsman's report which again was a document which was in the public domain.

So the information provided by the Association in response to the enquiry was the Ombudsman's report? - That is correct. I believe that that enquiry was probably from a local authority representative in relation to Mr. Hamilton's wish to operate another club or have another let in one of the Lothian Region's premises but I don't know where.

Turning/

Shelmerdine

10.40 a.m.

Turning now to Hamilton's dealings with the Association after he had had his warrant withdrawn are you aware of what Hamilton's initial response was once his warrant was withdrawn by the Association? - I believe from correspondence on file when told that we were withdrawing his warrant his response was the fact that he would resign as a result of that, but he had no option in the matter.

At that time when his warrant was withdrawn did he complain about that being withdrawn? - Not directly at that time.

Did he subsequently make complaints about having it withdrawn? - He subsequently did make complaints but prior to that he had previously tried to take up another appointment in Clackmannanshire Scout area and had been refused that because of his previous service in the Stirling area.

He was refused that after reference to the file? - Yes.

BY LORD CULLEN: When you say "you", at what level was that decision taken? - The application for the new warrant would be made to the local area Scouts within Clackmannanshire but before they could approve that warrant they would take reference with Headquarters to see whether there was a report on previous service.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: Could you look at DSA18 and 20 in the folders Nos. 14 and 16; looking at DSA18 you see that is a letter from Mr. Hamilton dated 25th February, 1977? - That is correct.

What is Hamilton seeking in that letter? - Mr. Hamilton had requested a Committee of Inquiry to be held under the rules of the Association as laid down in the policy organisation rules of the Association at that time.

And the second of these documents, DSA20, that is again a letter from Hamilton, this time dated March 2nd, 1977 to the Executive Commissioner, Mr. Jefferies? - That is correct.

In/

Shelmerdine

In that letter he again is seeking an inquiry in relation to the removal of his warrant? - Yes, that is correct.

This request was made three years after the warrant had been withdrawn? - That is correct.

Had there been other complaints made in the previous time prior to that? - We are not aware of any.

Were complaints made subsequent to these two? - Subsequent to these two there had been various bits of contact and correspondence over a protracted period of time.

Perhaps if you look at some other correspondence very briefly, could you look at document DSA22, D18 in the folders; do you recognise this letter? - Yes, this is a copy of a letter from Mr. Hamilton dated 7th April, 1977 that we have on file.

It runs to some five pages? - That is correct, a handwritten letter by Mr. Hamilton.

Perhaps you can see from the tone of that letter on the last page, the second last paragraph, Mr. Hamilton states "I have found that the CC is almost unapproachable and completely unreasonable, I will now discontinue the thought of holding a warrant as I do not want my good name to be part of this so-called organisation in this district"? - That is correct.

The letter was making complaints in respect of certain matters relating to the Association? - That is correct.

Can I ask you to look at DSA42 which is D35 in the folders; do you recognise this letter? - This is a letter, again from Mr. Hamilton, to Mr. Proctor at the Scottish Headquarters some nine years after the last letter; this letter is dated 12th November, 1988.

Is that not 1986? - Sorry, 1986.

And in the very first paragraph there is reference/

Shelmerdine

reference to complaints against the Association? - Yes, that is correct.

He goes on to detail in a number of further paragraphs stating exactly what the complaints are about? - That is correct.

In general terms what was the response of the Association to all these letters throughout that period? - The Association had been quite clear as to the reasons why Mr. Hamilton's warrant had been withdrawn on the basis of his adventure activities, the lack of preparation and planning for that in Aviemore and I am aware that there were other concerns expressed at the time and as a result of that we felt that although the warrant had been withdrawn on the breaking of the Association rules this was somebody who was perhaps unsuitable to work with young children.

Turning to more recent correspondence can I ask you to look at DSA46 and 47, 48 and 49 in the folders; taking it briefly, document DSA46 is a circular letter to parents in the Dunblane area from Hamilton? - That is correct, yes.

Did the Association receive a copy of that? - We received a copy of it on the 30th August, 1995.

What did the Association do with that letter? - Initially we were not sure who had sent a copy to us but we retained the envelope in which it had been sent and compared that with what we believed might have been a letter from Mr. Hamilton, a circular letter to the parents in the Dunblane area and kept a copy of this letter on file; we decided to take no action as the letter was not addressed to ourselves.

And looking at document DSA47 do you see that is a letter to Dr. Robert Ball, the Education Convener with Stirling District Council? - Yes.

Dated 26th January, 1996; did the Association get a copy of that letter? - Again we received a copy of that in an envelope; by comparison on the handwriting on the envelope we concluded that again Mr. Hamilton had, in fact, sent that copy to us.

What/

Shelmerdine

What action was taken in respect of that letter? - In respect of this particular letter we photocopied it to the Area Commissioner with Forth Valley Area Scout Council for his information.

We heard from Mrs. Fernie that there was a telephone call made to the office on the 6th March in which Hamilton requested information about the Association; were you aware of that call having been made? - Yes, I am aware of that call; Mrs. Fernie reported it to me.

Was anything done in respect of that call? - No, Mrs. Fernie had been requested by Mr. Hamilton for the name of the patrons and other key senior officials within the Association; I indicated that we would not provide that information to Mr. Hamilton.

And the final item of correspondence, would you look at DSA48 which is D51 in the folders; do you see that is a copy of a letter addressed to the Queen dated the 7th March, 1996? - Yes.

Did the Association receive a copy of that letter? - We received a copy of that letter on the 12th March, 1996.

Turning now to some general issues on the vetting of applications for positions within the Scout Association, how many applications do you get each year for persons to be considered as Scout leaders? - In the United Kingdom we get 17,000, roughly 17,000, appointment applications for youth, for Scout leaders in various roles within the Association each year; however, we carry out about 35,000 to 40,000 internal checks on people who have close access to young people within the organisation.

What is the difference between an internal check and an application? - There is none in that the application for a warrant within the Association has to go through a three stage process; the first stage is for the local Scout district to check up local references in which they inquire into the character and nature of the individual applying.

Who are the reference taken from? - The/

Shelmerdine

The application provides two referees.

These are taken up at a local level? - Yes, these are taken up at a local level, particularly where the individual has not been previously known to the Association.

What is the second stage of the appointment procedure? - The second stage is that an inquiry must be sent to our national headquarters to inquire whether there is any reason why this leader shouldn't be considered for an appointment.

And in checking it with Headquarters would reference be made to the confidential file? - Yes, there are currently a number of areas of references that we are able to access; one is our own internal record of previous service and whether that service was satisfactory; secondly, the Association has run, for many years, a Press cutting service in which it gets reports of these individuals that have been convicted of crimes against young people. Thirdly, it has access to the Department of Education employment list, 99 which is an internal index that is used for those people who are unsuitable, particularly to be in the teaching profession, and at a more unstructured level we can, from time to time, have information from various sources and agencies which provide us with information, but that is on a very unpredictable basis.

When you make reference to the general education list is that done for anybody.....? - It is possible for many applications to be considered as the organisation can have access to that list; what I am not sure is whether that list is a UK wide list or whether it is only an England and Wales list.

Are you aware how frequently that list is updated? - No, I am not.

In carrying out the check at Headquarters what is the Association attempting to find? - The Association is attempting to seek out anybody that could be placed in a position of trust within the organisation that could possibly be a threat to young people.

What/

Shelmerdine

What do you mean by a threat to young people? - Particularly in cases where their activities have been previously unsuitable; for example, in the case of Mr. Hamilton what we consider is the organisational abilities, whether an individual is competent to take young people into the outdoors and so put them at risk; for example, somebody convicted of theft might not make a good treasurer in the organisation.

On what basis might a person be refused at this stage of the application procedure? - The basis is the nature of the information particularly held of previous service; when a leader gives up an appointment within the Association a record of that service is sent to our national headquarters; in the vast majority of cases this indicates that their activities within the Association or role within the Association was satisfactory; a written report might add information to that, even if their service was outstanding in particular areas where they had particular expertise or skill or it might show that the leader was unsuitable for a certain position within the Association or that they were totally unsuitable and should not be considered for a future appointment within the Association.

And what factors are considered to be unsuitable for appointments within the Association? - This is a judgment that has to be taken by those making that report at the local level in view of the service.

What matters would be taken into account? - The factors to be taken into account might be the way that they implemented the role of the Association, whether they get on with other people and young people, the relationships that are made, whether or not they had a particular problem in terms of activity, understanding what we were trying to do, or perhaps they have refused to undertake training that we require for all our leaders to undertake.

Are these considered at the second stage of the report? - At Headquarters the report that comes back is the final stage in the appointment procedure; the report that comes back to the local Scout district might say that a particular leader should not be considered for a future/future appointment and therefore at that stage the matter would not be taken further and the individual would be told that their services were not required; depending on, if you like, a lesser report it might be that some of these issues would be explored at the final stage which is an interview between the applicant and the appointment sub-committee of the local district which is a group of people made up of experienced leaders within that Scout district.

They would consider the same factors which you have outlined? - They would consider a range of factors including the role that this volunteer was about to undertake and whether they felt the individual had the right attitude, characteristics etc. for working in that particular role; it would vary depending whether that role was working directly with young people or in some other capacity.

What sort of information would there be for a person not to get into the third stage? - An adverse report from the National Association.

Assuming that there was some sexual improprieties that were previously reported from the national headquarters -- --?
- Yes.

Are there any other basis of concerns that would bring such a report from Headquarters? - There probably might be; for example, if we were aware of a leader who had been convicted of particularly bad driving offences we would have a concern as to whether or not we would allow that leader to drive vehicles in which young people were taken.

So convictions for sexual impropriety and other matters? -

No,/

Shelmerdine

11.00 a.m.

No, it is difficult to easily say what the nature of offence would be. One has to look at it in the context of the role which a particular volunteer is being asked to take on.

You said you would carry out 17,000 such enquiries in respect of new applicants each year? - We appoint 17,000 Scout Leaders in various roles each year, but we carry out 35,000 to 40,000 enquiries.

So are you saying that over half of the enquiries made are rejected? - No. If I could explain, we give appointments to Scout Leaders, who we then are effectively allowing to be in a position where they can carry out unsupervised work with young people. There is another category of people for which we don't keep a national record of their service, but who help out on an occasional basis. This is mainly people called helpers or instructors, for which the appointment is made locally, there is no national record kept. Or it could be that parents are coming along on a regular basis to help out with a particular Scout Group, and over the last two or three years the number of enquiries to check out these people who are to have access, but not necessarily unsupervised access -- the number of enquiries has risen dramatically. Five years ago, taking the 17,000 you have pointed out, the number of enquiries would have been roughly the same as the number of appointments we made. However, now people are recognising the need to carry out more and more checks.

So these are enquiries being made in respect of people who aren't actually going to be appointed, but who could have contact with members of the Association? - Well, have contact with young people but not necessarily in an unsupervised role.

Can you give me an estimate of how many Leaders you have in total throughout the United Kingdom? - Appointed Leaders, we have around a hundred thousand Leaders, but if you then look at the number of people who actually help Scouting and its activities, that number could be easily double.

Is/

Shelmerdine

Is any continuing review of Leaders undertaken after their initial appointment? - Yes. Those that we appoint as Leaders, we have a formal review of their service after a five-year, and a number of factors are taken into account, whether or not their appointment is renewed. This could include whether they have been for training, and their actual activities within the Association.

Is a further check made back to Headquarters at five-year intervals? - No, it is not made back to Headquarters.

Can you give me an estimate of what proportion of five-yearly checks or five-yearly reviews result in action being taken against a Leader, such as suspension or expulsion? - No, I don't, because these reviews are carried out at a local level, and there is not the requirement to report that back to Headquarters, other than to indicate that the warrant has been extended for a further period.

So if the review was unsatisfactory, what would happen? - It could be unsatisfactory in a number of ways -- unsatisfactory in terms of not renewing the appointment -- because the individual had indicated they really have done their bit and would like to retire; and it gives them an opportunity, as a break point. It could be unsatisfactory where the Leader could say "Well, I have done this job for 15 years and I really would like another challenge", and therefore a possibility is reassignment in terms of another role within the Association. Or it could be that there is a decision not to renew the appointment because that Leader has not come up to expectations in terms of either the rules of the Association, or in a number of other factors.

And if the appointment is not renewed, the warrant would be withdrawn? - That is correct. It gives both parties an opportunity of reviewing the situation and renewing or not renewing, if you like, the contract between the Association and the individual Leader.

Of all the enquiries made at Scout Headquarters over the years, what proportion of them produce a response that that person ought not to be admitted/admitted to the Association? - I am not exactly sure of that number of responses. That would be information that I would be able to find out, but don't have it to hand.

If you are able to find that out, would you be able to provide that information to the Inquiry? - Yes, at the lunch hour.

The procedures you have just outlined are those in position today for the appointment of Scout Leaders? - Those are the procedures that are in place today. They are basically unchanged to what they were 20 years ago.

Just going back a little bit to where you said on a five-yearly review it may be decided that the Scout Leader's performance has not been satisfactory and their appointment would not be renewed. That would result in their warrant being cancelled? - Yes, or reassigned.

If the warrant were cancelled, would that result in a confidential file being created in respect of that person at Headquarters? - Not necessarily so. It would depend on the nature -- it is a discussion between that Leader and the person renewing the warrant locally, and it may be a Leader, for example, had been in the wrong role within the Association.

What sort of situation would lead you to creating a confidential file at Headquarters? - A serious breach of the rules of the Association, or more serious criminal or other offences.

What sort of breach of the rules of the Association? - The Association lays down a whole range of rules for the conduct of its activities. One example would be the conduct of its activities in outdoor adventurous activities where the risk to young people in terms of activities in the outdoor environment would be much greater, and therefore those are regulated quite closely by the Association, and we would consider it irresponsible to take young people out into those activities without following the Association rules.

And that could lead to a confidential file? - That could lead to a confidential file, yes.

Shelmerdine

I understand that the Association has a policy for child protection? - It does, yes.

And that is intended to deal with a situation in which allegations of child abuse are made? - Yes, child protection in general terms, but also there is a procedure laid down for actual allegations or suspicions of child abuse, what to do in those cases.

Could I ask you to look at documents DSA74 and 75? These are not in volume HH, but I understand copies have been provided separately. DSA74 -- is that a note of the Association's policy for child protection? - That is correct.

In paragraph A there is a statement about the general policy of the Association, which is to safeguard the welfare of members of the Association? - That is correct, by protecting them from physical, sexual and emotional harm.

And in Section B there is a reference to the selection of Leaders. Is that a summary of the procedures which you have just been outlining? - That is correct.

In Section C there is a reference to the guidance of persons or adults involved in Scouting in a Yellow Card entitled "Young People First"? - That is correct.

Is that the document that forms DSA75? - That is correct.

And that document, DSA75, provides a code of behaviour by means of a number of do's and don'ts? - That is correct.

And also on one side it provides information as to what is to be done if there are suspicions of abuse or allegations of abuse? - That is correct.

And perhaps, in summary, what it is intended to do is that the complaint should be referred up through the Association where it will be referred on to the Social Work Department? - That is correct. In the case of an allegation of actual abuse then it has to be referred immediately to the appropriate/appropriate authorities and passed on to them to investigate, rather than the Association to investigate.

The Association carries out no investigation of its own? - No. We must be clear we are talking about an allegation of actual abuse or suspicion of abuse -- then we have a statutory duty to pass on that information to the appropriate authorities.

And who might make such an allegation -- sorry, what would be the source of such allegations? - They could be various. It could be a young person themselves. It could be another Scout Leader worried about a particular situation. It could be a parent.

How many such allegations are made in respect of members of the Association each year? - To my knowledge in Scotland, which is my base, probably no more than a couple per year.

And I think you gave a figure earlier of the total number of adults in the Association as being 100,000 -- is that the United Kingdom as a whole? - That is the United Kingdom. We have somewhere over 8,000 appointed Leaders in Scotland, and the number of people helping would be double that.

And in respect of the couple of allegations a year, these are referred to some other organisation for investigation? - Yes. The most recent ones have come to my notice as allegations that have been reported directly to the authorities, and then obviously we have co-operated in the enquiries into the allegations.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: I take it you would agree with me that it is quite clear that since 1974 the Scout Movement has been of the view that Hamilton was not a suitable person to be placed in a position of responsibility over young people? - That is correct. We would not have given him another appointment within the Scout Association.

And you have the Scout file on Hamilton, and we have been provided with excerpts from it, and the reasons for that view of the Scout Movement are set out quite clearly in the file? - That is correct.

And/

Shelmerdine

And it would appear from the Ombudsman's draft report that we were looking at earlier, that in or about 1981 various officers of Central Regional Council Department of Education were informed that the Scout Movement took that view? - That is correct, but not in an official way. We were asked for an opinion.

And then in or about 1984, at the time of the Ombudsman's investigation, evidence emerged that Hamilton was in fact misrepresenting the reasons for his departure from the Scout Movement? - We believed, as we have heard earlier, he was saying that he resigned. The fact was that he was faced with a choice of effectively we were going to withdraw his warrant, and his response I believe at the time was "Well, in that case I will resign".

And then in 1993 I think you have told us that you made available to officers of Central Scotland Police the whole Scout Movement file on Hamilton? - That is correct.

Just a few questions, if I may, on the question of the Scout Association's procedures relating to checking potential Leaders in the Movement. When carrying out the various enquiries by way of checking that you have mentioned, does the Scout Association have access to that applicant's criminal record, if any criminal record -- if he does have a criminal record? - On a regular basis, no, we don't. In very exceptional cases then the police will co-operate through the Chief Constable and allow us access to it, but it is only on a very exceptional basis.

Would you see any value in some system which ensured that the fact that an applicant was, for example, a convicted child abuser, was brought to your attention? - It certainly would be helpful to make an assessment of a situation to be provided with that information. In the lack of that information being officially available at the moment, the idea of the press-cuttings service was to enable us to identify those people at an early stage, so that if any approach had been made to us in later years, we might have some chance of keeping them out of the Movement.

Well, no doubt that is a very laudable objective, /

objective, but would you agree it is a somewhat hit-or-miss system? - It is not the most efficient way of doing it.

On a slightly separate matter, does the Association have any general policy as to whether or not a Leader should be given sole charge or sole responsibility for a group of young people? - Yes, we do have a policy on that in that nobody may work unsupervised with members of the Scout Movement unless they hold a specific appointment, one of the 17,000 that I have indicated.

And we also have rules of the Association that in fact in general terms there should be two adults present, one of which must be the warranted Leader.

And finally I think you mentioned in answer to an earlier question that the Scout Movement made some provision for the training of applicants for Leadership positions? - That is correct.

Do I correctly understand that before anyone reaches this position of responsibility they will have undergone some system of service training or otherwise and therefore will have been subjected to a degree of supervision of other people? - No. The organisation of training is such that it is impossible to deliver all of the training that we set out for our Leaders within a very short space of time before they take up their appointment. The training is spread over a three-year period, and includes both skill training in terms of the programme of the Association, but also leadership training, i.e. their role as Leaders in working with young people.

There is perhaps just two documents that I would like to put specifically to you, reverting to the earlier matters. Could you have before you again please D47, which is also DFA44? This is the note of 24th June, 1993 relating to Detective -- as he then was -- Detective Constable Gordon Taylor's enquiry, and we see I think there is a further note of 20th October, 1993. As I understand it you were not directly involved in this -- or were you? - I took the initial telephone enquiry from Mr. Taylor.

I am obliged. So you would have been responsible for the terms of the note? - Yes, that is/

is correct.

Do we see in the note of 24th June, 1993, towards the foot, it is recorded that, "In confidence, D.C. Taylor was informed of the suspicion raised by Brian Fairgrieve in 1974, which led to the withdrawal/resignation of Hamilton? - That is correct, yes.

And then in the note of 20th October, 1993 we see that in fact the file had been inspected by prior arrangement; is that right? - That is correct, yes, on the 20th October.

Do/

Shelmerdine

11.20 a.m.

Do you know, and you may not know this, but do you know whether before this or afterwards the police officer did in fact make contact with Brian Fairgrieve because I think there is some suggestion that might have been done? - Yes, I believe I indicated at the time that the person who was closest to this particular situation and might be able to help further was Mr. Fairgrieve and Detective Constable Taylor indicated that he might contact Mr. Fairgrieve but I'm not aware whether he did or not.

Well, I think if we read on in the note of the 20th October, we see again that there is some discussion that this might take place in the context of the investigation about Hamilton's behaviour with young boys? - That is correct.

And do we also see that at that time the police had by then gained access according to your note to large quantities of photographs and a video? - That was, I am assuming, reported to my colleague by them, yes.

But these were inconclusive with regard to preferring criminal charges? - That is what the note says.

Reverting them for a moment to the draft Ombudsman's report that I mentioned a moment or two ago which I think is Document 23 in H(IV) which is also DSA28. I would like you to turn to page 4, paragraph 10. We read in paragraph 10 a reference to a meeting at Central Region Further Education Sub-Committee on 15th August 1983 and the item is taken in confidence. The Depute Director told the Committee that the Complainant had been given a let to set up a new group which the Depute Director felt was meant to confuse people with the Scout Movement. He indicated that they had been told that the Scout Association had removed the Complainant because of certain undesirable characteristics but were not prepared to say this formally. Do I understand that the Scout Movement were not asked at any time by the investigator in the course of this enquiry to specifically elaborate upon these matters? - I believe there might have been a meeting. If I can just..... correspondence between Scottish Headquarters/

Shelmerdine

Headquarters staff at the time and the Ombudsman indicated I think that there might have been a meeting or telephone conversation. I would have to check that correspondence here. If you would like me to do that?

Can you do that within a reasonable period of time or is that something you prefer to take time on? - Can I just check? I may be mistaken about this but I would just like to check. Yes, I'm referring to a letter from Mr. Proctor on the 13th September 1984 to Mr. K. Bratton, the Secretary to the Commissioner for Local Administration in Scotland. It appears to be a phone call subsequent to receiving the draft report which I now see is related to confirmation first by telephone and then in writing indicating that Mr. Hamilton's warrant had been withdrawn and that he did not in fact resign and that was I believe the first contact.

So am I correct in understanding that neither Central Regional Council nor the Ombudsman asked the Scout Association to elaborate in a formal manner as to what was meant by "undesirable characteristics"? - I'm not aware of being asked, that the Association was asked.

LORD CULLEN: I think that letter is D26, Mr. Campbell, in case you want to refer to it. You probably don't but it is there.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: Yes, perhaps you could just confirm this. If you look please at D26 of H(IV) which is also DSA34, is that the letter of the 13th September 1984 to Mr. Bratton you referred to just a moment ago? - That is the one I referred to, yes.

Plainly that does not elaborate on the matter? - No, looking at that letter on file, just to confirm again that I believe that was only confirming whether Mr. Hamilton's warrant had been withdrawn or whether he had in fact resigned.

And turning back again to the draft Ombudsman's report if you still have that in front of you? - Yes, I note that we keep referring to the draft report rather than the final report.

Yes/

Shelmerdine

Yes, am I right in understanding this is a copy of the draft or have I got that wrong? - Can I just be absolutely clear?

I may well have got that wrong? - There are subtle differences between the two. It is actually quite difficult to distinguish without the attached letter.

It doesn't really matter for my purposes? - The basic thrust is the same.

Yes, we can check that in due course but for my purposes if you look please at page 2 of D23 and paragraph 4. There is a reference there to an award ceremony in October of 1981 when an official of the Scout Association drew the attention of a Councillor to the fact that the boys' group was not connected to the Scout Movement although there was a similarity in its name and there is then a reference to the Scout official being displeased and the Councillor then took this up with the Director of Education who asked one of his youth and community officers for further information about the group. That officer carried out certain enquiries and he then said, looking at the next sentence, that he had checked with the local officer of the Scout Association who had confirmed that the group was not affiliated to the Scouts and that the complainant had been removed from the Scout Association following a confidential report which showed him to be undesirable for Scout work. To your knowledge, is that the only written record of this investigation and response by the Scout Movement to the youth and community officer? - I believe so, that this was an informal issue raised with the Councillor at I believe it was a Scout award ceremony to which the Councillor had been invited and had indicated that there did appear to possibly be some confusion between the name of the group operated by Hamilton and the Scout Movement.

And as to the identity of the Scout official? - I am not actually clear on who that was.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: I think in 1984 the Association drafted the documents which we have seen, namely the overview of policy and guidance for child protection? - Yes, the overview that/that you have before you is in fact my summary which I have used at various child protection seminars that we have had recently.

You made reference also to some doubt as to whether the facility extended to Scotland for access to criminal records? - Well, I am sure of the situation as far as the Scout Association and a number of voluntary organisations are concerned in terms of access to criminal records in Scotland.

Well, can you tell me again what that is formally? - The Association has no access to Scottish Criminal Records.

And I think in fact you wrote to the Scottish Office about that some two years ago? - Yes, I did write some few years ago to the Scottish Office on that matter and asked particularly if there was a possibility of that happening.

I think in fact while you got a response acknowledging the letter you have heard nothing since? - I have had no direct communications but I do know that there has been discussion by the Scottish Office on this matter.

Is it your view that organisations such as the Scouts should be given a formal entitlement somehow to access criminal records? - I believe that that would be something that would provide another potential way of excluding from the Association any known abusers.

So far as non-recognised organisations are concerned, such as boys' clubs set up by an individual such as Hamilton, would you agree with the proposition that there should be a National Register kept of organisations which are not affiliated to any mainstream body? - Yes, this is a difficult question to answer because of the diverse nature of those working with young people. We have to bear in mind that there are independent local groups that have no affiliation to any organisation or parent body and yet there are others which are part of a wider structured system. If the intention of the register is to find a way to exclude people who have previously had unsuitable service in other agencies then the sharing of that information would be useful. If it is merely a question/question of access to criminal records then there may be other ways of approaching that.

Well, it might be suggested by others that it is appropriate that a National Register should be set up and that all members of these informal organisations should be subject to a similar Records Office check before they supervise children? - I am aware of that.

I think clearly if the purpose had been, as you said, to see if unsuitable people were running independent organisations, clearly Hamilton would have been picked up with hindsight by such a system? - If we, at the Scout Association, had had an opportunity for passing on information to a central agency then I think it would have raised concerns earlier on but there are a number of issues related to that that obviously need further discussion.

BY LORD CULLEN: In that connection, do you have any views as to how one might define activities which might bring somebody within the scope of the kind of thing that Mr. Gibb is putting to you? The question in my mind is where does it stop? Obviously outdoor activities might qualify but how much further does one go? - It is a question that ourselves are struggling with within the youth work sector, yes, the nature and scope of that. There is a difference between somebody who has already been convicted of a particular crime against young people which is on one record but all of our indications are that in trying to identify other unsuitable people one is having to look for trends or patterns of behaviour and that is not so easy to identify in terms of how you would report.

People might come into contact with children in quite a wide variety of ways. Anything from outdoor activities to giving piano lessons? - That is correct. The potential scope and the potential for an adult to abuse young children on a one-to-one situation is vastly wide and how one actually gets to a workable situation in that I think is something that we are all struggling to find a way to do.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. GIBB:
I quite understand Lord Cullen's point that someone who/

Shelmerdine

who takes half a dozen boys for football on a Sunday morning may fall into the category but how far does one take it. The other thing is we have talked about those who are convicted of an offence involving child abuse at its worst. Can I ask you to comment on the suggestion that the Courts could have power to make a disqualification order in respect of certain individuals which would prevent them having anything whatsoever to do with children in the future in a supervised fashion. Is that something that in your view is at all workable? - My understanding was that if an individual was convicted of an offence against children and that was known about then it would not require legislation to stop organisations appointing that person. However, it would have the additional advantage to these organisations of excluding that person if there was some legal framework in which they could do that.

Again, I accept here that Hamilton was not in this category but if he had been and had set up his own organisation after conviction he would have been on one scenario guilty of a criminal offence? - Yes.

Now, that is perhaps one possibility to look at? - That is correct, in a situation of a local independent unit and I have to say I don't know the exact details of the organisation of Mr. Hamilton's clubs but it appears that it was a one-man show and that there were no other criteria such as a local club having some sort of management committee on which there would be at least a second level of supervision of the activities.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: You said that you didn't have access to criminal records. When I was discussing with you earlier the confidential file you said that there may be informal information from the police? - Yes.

Can you give me an example of such information? What it might include and how it came to you? - I indicated previously that the Association from time to time receives information that is not in a structured or formal capacity but would lead us to suggest that we need to re-look at some person whom we might have already appointed because we did not have that information previously. I/

Shelmerdine

I can give you one example. Certainly in my time in Scotland it was brought to our attention, and I'm not sure exactly the route by which this information came to us, it could have come through two or three different places, but we had in fact appointed somebody that had previously been charged with an attempted murder offence and whilst the evidence had been such that that charge had not been..... the conviction had not gone through but there was sufficient evidence presented in that trial to raise a question mark as to the suitability of that person to be in a position of trust within the Association. So in that case I approached that individual and he resigned immediately from the Association, aware that with his previous history he could no longer command the trust of the Association.

11.40 a.m.

Some of that informal information may be of a police nature? - Yes, it could well be.

As a final matter is there anything you wish to say in relation to events, anything further you wish to say in relation to events that took place at Dunblane Primary School on the 13th March? - If I may, just in conclusion, say that Scout leaders who have been working with young people have all been deeply affected by this tragedy; those that work with young people feel very deeply about it and more than one Scout leader said to me that if Mr. Hamilton had a grudge against individuals within the Association why, oh why did he not kill me rather than those young children; we do not begin to understand what Hamilton was thinking about during the period leading up to that day but all of us within the youth sector working with and on behalf of young people want to continue to encourage adults to come forward and work with young people and would reassure the majority of them that their contribution is valued not only by the youth organisations and young people but by society at large. We are aware clearly that we want to find ways, more ways, to exclude these individuals that are actually unsuitable to work with young children. We are currently working on a submission to your office on behalf of a number of national youth organisations and agencies for your consideration and our thoughts and prayers will continue with those people who have been closely and deeply affected by these tragic events as we continue this work.

LORD CULLEN: Thank you, Mr. Shelmerdine, I am much obliged to you and I look forward to receiving your submission.

JOHN DAVID RITCHIE VASS, (59), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: You live in Dunblane? - That is correct.

What/

What age are you? - 59.

What is your occupation? - I am a consultant.

I understand that you are involved with the Scout Association? - Yes, for a long time.

When did you first have involvement with the Association? - As a boy and as a leader.

What was the nature of your association in 1973?
- I was District Commissioner for the Trossachs.

While you were District Commissioner was an offer made to you by Mr. Hamilton of his services as a Scout leader? - Yes, that offer was made I think in 1978.

When was that offer made? - I believe it was made in 1978.

How was that offer made to you? - He came to my door one evening, rang the bell, explained who he was and that he wished to offer his services as a Scout leader.

Was that a common way in which someone would offer their services as a Scout leader? - It is highly unusual, we usually have to coax people.

What was your reaction to Hamilton offering his services in this way? - I thanked him for his offer, took his name and he gave me an address which I can't recall now but I think it was the shop in Cowane Street and I told him that I would get back in touch with him because I would need to make some inquiries.

What inquiries did you wish to make? - I would normally go through the procedure of sending off an inquiry form to Headquarters but because he was local I also telephoned Brian Fairgrieve and asked him if he knew of Hamilton.

What did Mr. Fairgrieve say? - He indicated it would not be prudent for us to use his services.

Did/

Did he say why it wouldn't be prudent to use his services? - I have no recollection of that, I don't think he could have because in the intervening years I believe there was some financial reasons why he had been asked to leave but I didn't know until this year, I didn't need to know.

Did you pass this news back to Mr. Hamilton? - I wrote to him and explained that we wouldn't be able to make use of his services.

What was his response to that? - I don't recall receiving one.

Were you ever asked for information about Hamilton by other parties? - Yes, on several occasions, at social events in Dunblane people asked me if I knew about him; I can't recall what was actually said and I indicated that the Scout movement would not have wished to make use of his services.

Who was making these requests to you? - The only person I can actually remember asking on one occasion was Mrs. Sheena Davidson who was then a District or Regional councillor.

Were there other parties who requested information also apart from the councillors, from other youth groups? - They were not from other youth groups, they could conceivably have been from parents or from councillors; some of these conversations took place at social events associated with fund raising but I can't really remember after this time the individuals.

Were these formal inquiries? - No.

And no formal response was made to them? - No, I made the response I made to you just now.

Did you express your own view of Hamilton? - No, not to external people; I didn't have a very clear view.

Did you have any information on Hamilton at that time? - When he came to the house on that occasion in 1978 I recollect I said to my wife, I remarked that the chap was very odd.

Did/

Did you pass that impression on to anybody else?

- Not that I can recollect.

Do you recollect Hamilton ever coming to your house after his initial contact with you? - Very well.

When was this? - I think it was 1983 and in my statement.....I know that it was after the Ombudsman's report was published but at that time I hadn't seen the Ombudsman's report.

How did you know it was after the Ombudsman's report? - Because when he came to the house and requested entry which I rather reluctantly gave because it was round about Christmas and we had friends in, he appeared to be very concerned about the Ombudsman's report; it was largely the subject of the conversation that we had.

What did he say about the Ombudsman's report to you? - This was difficult to recollect accurately; he seemed to be convinced that as a Scout official.....he clearly believed it was me, that I in some way condemned him to the Ombudsman and nothing I could say could persuade him otherwise; he had a great advantage at that time because he had read the Ombudsman's report, I don't think I was even aware it had been published at that time.

So you assured him it wasn't you that had passed on any information? - Yes, the conversation became quite vigorous and I indicated that if he continued to make accusations of this nature he could make them to the leaders and not to myself because I was quite unable to satisfy his assertions.

Can you remember how long the conversation lasted? - No, it would be very difficult to recollect at this time.

Did you notice anything in particular about Hamilton's behaviour during the conversation? - I have indicated in my statement I was aware he was recording the conversation on a tape recorder -- at least, I assumed that is what it was in a small brown holdall which he had brought in with him which he reached into at the beginning of the conversation and/and at the end.

What impression did you form of Hamilton as a result of that meeting? - Very intense, a very difficult man to convince on the basis of being straightforward, he had made his mind up and that was the end of it.

At the end of last year and the start of this year did you receive copies of letters from Hamilton? - In August, 1995 along with a large number of people in Dunblane I received a circular through the door which had got, I think it was, a green sheet on the outside which advertised his club in Dunblane and a second typewritten sheet which I think extended to two sizes which consisted of a statement about the boys clubs and then went on to a declaration in which he asserted that certain individuals, particularly the Scout Association, had been responsible for disadvantaging him, I suppose is the best way of putting it, and I was quite surprised at that because I actually thought he wasn't operating in Dunblane any longer, mainly because I had heard nothing about the activities of the boys club and since he hadn't impinged directly on the Scout Association at any point, and our activities, there was no particular reason why I should. In my occupation I am away from Dunblane all week, so perhaps not present. I wasn't fully au fait with local affairs.

Could I ask you to look at Production DSA46 which is D48 in Volume 5; is that the letter which you received from Mr. Hamilton? - That is correct.

Could I ask you also to look at DSA47 which is D49 in the folders; do you recognise this letter? - Yes, I received this letter late January through the door and this caused me some personal concern.

Do you see on page 2 of that letter in the second paragraph down the page, five lines down reference to "This was prior to Mr. Ross further misleading councillors on Committee in August, 1983 which led to the termination of our lets at that time. As you know the matter was fully investigated and Mr. Ross and his reported source David Vass, being a member of a rival group, were fully/fully discredited and our use of schools was returned". Were you previously aware of these allegations being made against you? - No, I have no recollection of ever having had a conversation with Mr. Ross; he clearly believed that I had and I don't know the reason for it.

Well, did you take any action in response to either of these two letters? - In the case of the first letter I established with local Scout leaders in Dunblane that he was still functioning and after some consultation we decided there was no point in responding in any way to it, it was futile; in the case of the second letter I reflected on it for a couple of days and you will note that the circulation of this letter is to primary head teachers as well as to Councillor Ball and then I rang Councillor Ball and had a conversation with him which essentially consisted of me making it absolutely plain that at no time had I suggested that anything improper was taking place between Hamilton and the boys, I was unaware of any impropriety and secondly, I was not responsible for malicious gossip.

That is a conversation you had with Mr. Ball? - That is correct, that would be about the early days of February.

Could you look at document DSA48 which is D51 in the folders; you will see that is a letter dated the 7th March, 1996 from Hamilton to the Queen; did you receive a copy of that letter? - I did.

When did you receive a copy of that letter? - Round about the weekend before the incident.

The weekend before? - About the weekend before the incident, I think about the 10th or the 11th.

Were you aware that Hamilton owned and used guns? - No.

THOMAS/

12 noon

THOMAS ANGUS MACK, (63), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: Do you live in Menstrie?

- Beg your pardon?

Do you live in Menstrie? - I do.

What is your occupation? - I am a pharmacist.

I understand you had involvement with the Menstrie Scouts? - That is right.

And for a brief period Hamilton came and assisted you with the Menstrie Scouts? - Two evenings.

And that that involvement ceased when you indicated to him that you would be making checks? - Exactly.

What check did you propose to make? - The Scout Association have a system whereby we are required to find out why someone has not been allowed to continue, and since he came from another area I would be required to check with officials of that area his reason for no longer wanting to be in that particular district.

Did you carry out a check of Hamilton? - I didn't.

Are you aware whether or not Scout Headquarters maintained a file on Hamilton? - I was made aware later that there was a confidential report prepared on him.

When were you made aware of this confidential report? - I think I am talking -- my involvement when he came to Menstrie at that time, I am talking about 1972/1973 or thereabouts, I would think it would be the late 1970s or 1980, I think, that I was made aware of that. But I was only made aware. I hadn't seen any documents.

How were you made aware of the existence of that file? - It was just word of mouth by other Leaders.

That/

That is other Leaders within the Scouts? - Yes.

Were you made aware of the contents of the file? - Not at all. I have no knowledge of what the file contains.

So what did you know of the Scouts' position in relation to Hamilton? - Nothing other than that he is not a suitable candidate for Leadership.

Were you aware of any allegation as to Hamilton's sexual orientation? - None at all. No, I had no idea of what the content of any report contained.

You had no awareness of any question of homosexuality? - None at all.

Or of questions of paedophilia? - None at all.

Were you ever asked by any persons to give references in relation to Hamilton? - No.

Were you ever asked to provide information about Hamilton's background? - No. Mr. Watson once phoned me regarding Mr. Hamilton, and I said simply that he was the subject of a confidential report in the Scout Association, but I knew nothing about its contents.

Who was Mr. Watson? - He was a Regional Council Officer. I think he had an office in Dunblane -- the Central Regional Council.

And what was his enquiry in relation to Hamilton? What did he ask you? - He simply said "Can you give me a reference" -- as far as young people are concerned. I am going back about 20 years. It is very difficult, but I think it was of the order of the Scout Association weren't happy about him being appointed as a Leader.

And is that all you said to him? - More or less, yes.

Could I ask you to look please at a Production which is reference CLC/AL/B1/F1/1B? I understand/understand that copies of this have been handed round separately rather than included in the folder. Perhaps it would be easier if we could have this document put on the imager? If you could look firstly at the top of that document, do you see that bears to be a memorandum from Mr. Watson to a Mr. Collie, on Central Regional Council notepaper? - Yes.

And you see the heading "Subject", and beneath that "Dunblane Rover Group, T.W. Hamilton, Principal Leader"? - Yes, I do.

Could you look down that document a little bit to the fourth paragraph. Do you see there the fourth paragraph states "I checked with the Scouts' District Commissioner, Mr. Tom Mack"; do you see that? - Yes.

"I checked with the Scouts' District Commissioner, Mr. Tom Mack, and he has confirmed that the group is not affiliated in any way to the Scout Movement. Mr. Hamilton appears to be the subject of a confidential report at National level which shows him to be totally undesirable in relation to working for the Scout Movement. The report is based on his homosexual tendencies, and he was for obvious reasons discreetly removed from the Scout Movement". Did you mention to Mr. Watson that Hamilton was suspected of having homosexual tendencies? - I didn't say that.

Do you have any idea where Mr. Watson obtained this information? - No, none at all.

Were you aware of rumours circulating regarding Hamilton? - I think I was aware of them, yes.

What was the nature of those rumours? - That he was taking young people away camping, and that this was not considered a properly supervised event. That is really the sum total of it.

Was there any allegation in those rumours that Hamilton was suspected of sexual improprieties? - None that I was made aware of.

No cross-examination.

GARY/

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I live in Alloa.

And do you work as a window cleaner? - Yes.

You have known, or you knew, Thomas Hamilton, over a number of years? - Yes, that is right.

When did you first come across him? - When I was about nine years of age.

At that time had you and your family just moved to Dunblane? - Yes.

And how did you come across Mr. Hamilton? - I got a note through the door to tell me there was a club starting called "The Rovers".

And that would be what year, roughly? - I have no idea.

Well, you were -- what did you say -- nine? - I would be about nine or ten.

And you are now 29? - Yes.

So 1976, maybe, or 1977? - Yes.

Did you go to the Rovers? - Yes.

Were you in it long? - I was in it for about six months, five months.

And Mr. Hamilton ran it? - Yes.

Did he have any help to run it? - He had two boys maybe about 17/18 years of age.

And how many Rovers were there? - There was maybe 20, maybe slightly more.

Where did you meet? - We met down near the bowling club in Dunblane.

And what did you do? - Well, it was for shooting.

Now,/

Now, where was the shooting actually done? - Near the bowling green -- I've forgotten the name of the place.

Did some of your pals go to this? - Yes.

Did you actually do some shooting? - I did a wee bit of shooting -- not very much.

What did you use? - A .22 -- it was a .22 rifle, airgun rifle.

And who provided that for you? - That was Tom.

Now, was this a proper shooting range you were on? - Yes.

And do you know if it was normally used by a shooting club? - I think it was. In the gun box there was his guns, then there was other gun boxes.

Did the club ever do anything else apart from shooting? - It used to go away camping trips.

And did you go on these? - I went on two, two long weekends.

Did you enjoy it? - I enjoyed the first one.

What was wrong with the second one? - Well, I burned my foot and he wouldn't tell my parents. He took me to the hospital.

How did you burn it? - We were in the boat and some hot water fell -- two boys were mucking about with some hot water and it went down my leg.

And you were on a boat? - Yes.

Where was the camp? - On Loch Lomond, on one of the islands.

How did you get treatment? - I got taken by speedboat to -- I think it was one of the hospitals up that way.

And/

And who took you on the speedboat? - Two men.

Was Mr. Hamilton with you? - No.

Did he arrange that? - Yes. It was two men who worked with him. They were at the camp supervising us.

So they took you? - Yes.

And then did they bring you back? - Yes.

And when was it you actually got home? - I got home about five hours later.

And was that the end of your involvement with Mr. Hamilton's club? - That was me. My dad stopped me because he was annoyed they hadn't phoned and told him.

Was there any uniform worn in the course of the Rovers' activities? - What do you mean uniform? We used to wear -- it was dark trousers and black shoes, and it was like Army jumpers.

Were there patches on the shoulders? - Yes.

And who insisted on that? - It was Tom.

And what was his attitude to safety when you were shooting? - He was very strict on that. I think he only allowed three to shoot at a time, or four to shoot at a time, along this -- it was like a long tunnel, and only four was allowed to shoot at a time.

And how controlled was the shooting for the four doing it? - Well, you had to shoot, put your rifle down till everybody had shot and then reload, and do it again, but he had it locked -- it wasn't locked, it was just a thing that came down like a hatch, you weren't allowed to go by that till everybody had stopped shooting.

Did you have anything to do with cleaning the guns after you had used them? - No. He used to show us how to clean the guns properly, but he did most of the cleaning.

Did/

Did you ever see a handgun? - Yes.

Who had the handgun? - Tom.

And that could have been around 1977? - Yes.

That is when he first got a Firearms Certificate -- but it could have been around that time you saw a handgun? - Yes. It was like a cowboy gun.

A revolver? - Yes, like the ones you see in cowboy films which they can spin -- it was like that.

Did you also have any other activities in Dunblane like football or gymnastics? - Yes.

Where was that held? - We used to go to the Dunblane Primary School and play football, and we used to have gymnastics there.

Now, was it Dunblane Primary School? - Yes.

You may be the only witness we hear from saying that there were activities of the Rovers in Dunblane Primary School? - We used to play with the gymnastics there -- we used to bring all the stuff out.

What part of the school was that? - In the gym, in the gym itself.

Do you ever remember a row taking place with Mr. Hamilton and other people during one of the club meetings? - No.

There was never an occasion when there were other men there arguing with him about using the Scout name? - He did one time. He took us out somewhere -- I can't remember where it was -- and some folks came up to him and started arguing with him.

Do you know where you were at the time? - I can't remember.

Can you remember what the argument was about?/

about? - Well, when he came back in the van, there was only five or six of us in the van at the time, and when he came back in the van he said "That is them started rumours about me again".

And did he say what the rumours were about? - Not that time, but the next time somebody started to call him a name -- that is when we started going to Dunblane High School. At this time we started going there because he wasn't in the Primary any more, and somebody had called him a name or something at the school, and he said "That is a rumour saying I am touching kids".

What was the name he was called, do you remember? - It was pervert, queerie.

And was that an adult or some of the group that called him that? - It was an adult.

And that was in the school somewhere? - It was just going into the school, the High School.

And did he say anything to you or the group about what they had said about him? - He just said "That's rumours starting about me again". That is all he said.

Did he ever tell you anything about why he left the Scouts? - He told me just a few years ago that he had been put out of the Scouts because he slept in a van or something.

Because he slept in a van? - Yes, with kids.

Now, quite apart from the shooting, when you were doing these other activities, how strict was Mr. Hamilton? - He was very strict.

What happened if you misbehaved in any way? - He would slap you over the earhole.

Pardon? - He would slap you over the earhole.

That was common, was it? - Yes.

Apart from going to Loch Lomond, did you go any other places for outings? - We used to go to/

to a swimming pool in Edinburgh.

You did an awful lot in six months. Was it only six months you reckon you were involved? - I was only six months involved with the shooting.

How long do you think you were involved with the Rovers altogether? - Maybe about a year and a half at the most.

Apart from clipping somebody on the ear, did he ever hit anybody more severely than that? - I never seen it.

Were you ever clipped about the ear? - I was hit once, yes.

Sore? - Yes.

I mean, have you a recollection of it being sore? - I was upset -- a ten year old boy, or a nine year old boy, getting hit over the head is sore.

Would you have expected your own parents to do the same to you if you had misbehaved? - Yes.

In those days that would have been acceptable, would it? - Oh, yes.

Did you ever see him hitting anybody in a way which, at the time, and even looking back from now, you think was unacceptable? - I never saw anything like that.

Did he ever take photographs of you? - No.

Or any of the other kids in the group? - He didn't take photographs at that point.

Did he develop an interest in photography later? - Yes.

Did the uniform that was used ever involve stripping off part of your clothing? - When we played football we used to play a skin side.

So one side had tops on and one side had bare/bare buff? - Yes.

And it was only for identification purposes? - Yes.

It was never done in odd circumstances? - No.

If I can move away from the Rovers now, when did you next see Mr. Hamilton? - Well, I started to work for a company called R.L. Dobbies, and when I used to come home from work and go down, I sometimes used to see Tom in Dunblane putting leaflets through doors, and he used to say "Hello" as we met; and I hadn't seen him for a long time after that.

What age were you then? - About 18 or 19.

Did he ever ask you to help at his group? - Yes.

And did you? - No.

Had you no interest in that sort of thing? - I worked for the youth club, but my mum and dad, because of what happened when I burned my foot, wouldn't let me work with him.

Are you saying you used to work with some other youth club? - Yes. I used to work for Jim Gardiner and that.

Did your mum and dad have a Scout connection? - Yes, my mum and dad were Scouts in Glasgow.

But their reason for discouraging you from contact, or at least involvement with the clubs, was because of the scalding incident? - Yes.

Did you know him at the time he moved house from Riverside to Main Road? - Yes.

Did you help him with the move? - He came home one night and he asked if I would give him a wee hand, to help him to lift some heavy stuff.

Did you have a van that you could help? - No, he had his own van at that point.

Why/

Why did he come to you? - I don't know. I have no idea.

Had you been seeing him off and on at that time? - Not really.

Did you ever visit his house once he moved to Kent Road? - Yes.

How often have you been there? - I used to sometimes pop in, sometimes at the weekend, when I used to have the motorbike I used to pop in and see him. That is when I was 22.

When you were 22? - Yes. I used to pop in and see him, and then I hadn't seen him till my first boy was born, when I was 25 or 26.

So/

12.20 p.m.

So about three or four years ago? - Yes, I started seeing him again.

Did you actually assist him from 1991 to 1994? - I used to. For myself, I used to have a van and took his stuff to the High School when he had summer camp.

Over how many years did you do that? - I did it for four years. I didn't do last year.

Did you see what was going on at the summer camp?
- No.

You never saw any of the activities? - I only took the food and all the gear up. The balls and stuff that he had.

Did you do any transporting to his clubs during the winter? - No.

Apart from running him to summer camp activities at Dunblane High School that would have been, did you run him anywhere else on a fairly regular basis? - I ran him to Glasgow.

Did you also take him on occasions to the railway station at Stirling? - I just dropped him off.

So would that happen quite a lot? - Yes. Sometimes he used to be a lot at the Courtyard in Stirling. He used to do leaflets and take photographs of people. He done that for a while and I used to run him to the railway station or even run him home.

So you would see him actually doing that? - Yes.

And give him a lift? - Yes.

Was there anywhere in particular that he regularly went to? - What do mean? I don't understand.

I mean, if he went to the station, did he have a regular routine? - I've no idea. I never/never asked him.

Did Mr. Hamilton appear to you to be short of money at any stage? - He always seemed to have money when I seen him.

How recently did he offer to help you financially? - It was about last September. I was saving up for a car and he said "I'll help you out if you want".

Was there any sign then he had any money? - He had some money, yes. I couldn't tell you how much he had.

Just cash in his hand? - Yes.

Did it appear to be much? - Well, his wallet was full but that didn't mean anything really. It could be credit cards or anything.

Now, were you at his house when two men called at the door to enquire about his business, the DSS? - Was that about the selling? Yes.

When was that? - I have no idea but I just remember the two men coming.

Was it in the last year? - It was maybe two years ago.

And you were aware of two men being there and then speaking to Mr. Hamilton afterwards? - Well, they came to the door and said they wanted to talk to him and I just went away.

Did you find out later what they were there for? - Yes, he said because he was buying and selling cameras and he was on the dole that they were..... I don't know what the word is.

They were investigating it? - Yes.

Now, do you know how he went about buying and selling cameras? - He used to put it in the papers he was looking for cameras.

Do you know what paper he put it in? - Sorry.

I/

I mean, do you have experience of a magazine called the "Amateur Photographer"? - I used to see magazines in his sitting room but I couldn't tell you what they said. I am sorry.

Do you know if he was prevented from continuing with that business or not, with his camera business? - I don't know. In September he still had quite a lot of cameras but after that I hardly seen him.

After September you never saw much of him? - I never hardly seen him.

Between 1991 and 1995 when you did have dealings with him, did you see much camera equipment around the house or in his possession? - He had maybe about 60 or 70 cameras at one point.

Between 1991 and 1995 were you in his house from time to time? - Yes, I was in it.

How frequently roughly? - Maybe once every couple of months.

Did he have photographs on the wall? - Yes.

What were these of? - It was all of young boys with just their gym pants on or shorts.

Well, was it shorter than gym pants we are talking about? - Some were. Some were black trunks.

And were these individual photographs or group photographs? - Some were grouped and some were just one person, one boy.

And if it was one boy, what part of the body generally did it show? - It showed normally the chest and he was doing like gymnastics.

Would it show pants in the single photographs normally or would it simply be from the chest up? - Normally the whole body.

Did you notice anything or feel that there was anything odd about these photographs? - Not really.

Did/

Did he ever discuss them with you? - He used to say to me about..... I don't know anything about cameras but about different lenses and what they used to do and he used to show me that this lens does this and that lens does that.

What sort of features was he pointing to when he said that? - Well, he would say if he was taking them in the gym, he would just say if he was taking this lot you can take full lens, the high lens or something like that. If he was just taking one person he was trying to get the whole body in.

He would use different lenses if it was an individual than if it was a group for example? - Yes.

Did he say anything about how the lenses might show up features of a boy? - No.

So what did you make of the fact that he had all these pictures of boys from his boys' clubs on the wall? - I thought it was a bit funny but I didn't think anything bad about it.

Did he ever make any suggestions or say or do anything to you that might make you think he may be interested in a perverse way in children? - No.

Were you aware of the first time he had a video camera? - Yes.

When did he get that? - I think it was in 1989.

Did he have a video player? - Yes, he had a video player and he sold it I think about three years ago.

And how long did he keep the video camera for? - He sold the video camera about a year ago or a year and a half ago.

Were you ever in the house when he was destroying video tapes? - There was one time he was in the kitchen and he put some in the bin. He ripped them and said it was bad copies and I said "How do you not scrub them?" I said "I have a video recorder. I have a video machine as well and/

and you can play over them" and he said "Oh, I've used them so many times they are really finished".

And were you aware of a lot of letters around the house that he was typing or having typed? - Yes.

Would you see printed letters lying around? - Yes.

Did he engage in a lot of correspondence with people?
- What do you mean by that?

Well, did he write to a lot of people? - Yes, he used to write all the time. He used to write constantly.

When he had a video recorder was he keen on watching video films? That is the type you hire or buy? - He used to like war films and that. Like, what is it called "Soldier Blue" and stuff like that. You know, war films like that.

Did you meet other friends of his in the house on occasions? - Yes.

Who did you come across? - A landscape gardener guy. I met him a few times.

That is Gillespie I believe? - Yes.

Anyone else? - He had somebody else in the house who is a painter and decorator but I have no idea of his name.

Do you know anyone MacDonald like yourself who visited? - Yes, I knew David.

You knew David MacDonald? - David MacDonald, yes.

What about his father? - I met his father a couple of times. His father was in one time I was in getting a photograph Tom had taken of his son and he had got his grandson's, I think, photograph taken as well. I think it was his grandson.

Are you related in any way to these MacDonalds? -
No.

Not/

Not at all? - No.

Now, obviously there are people around the place from time to time but was Hamilton in your experience a sociable person or a loner? - He was a loner.

Did you know that he had guns? - Yes.

Did you ever see them around the house? - The only time I seen them..... I seen them in the Gun Club back then.

That is 20 years ago? - I think he had two then. About four years ago or five years ago he showed me his guns. He had four guns and he had a big like machine gun type of thing.

Were you interested in them? - No, I don't like guns at all.

Now, when did you last see him? - Last see Tom? I think it was in the..... I can't remember if it was the Wednesday or the Friday on the week before the.....

You reckon what, Wednesday or Friday? - It was the Wednesday or the Friday.

Did you go to see him? - I went to see him I think on the Saturday and the Sunday but he never answered the door to me if he was in.

So you didn't actually see him? Well, you saw him but.....? - I seen him on the Wednesday or the Friday and he seemed a bit down. I went on the Saturday because I was in Stirling on the Saturday and on the Sunday when I was collecting my money I went up to see if he was all right and he never answered the door to me.

That was on the Friday? - That was on the Sunday.

Had you been up on the Friday as well? - Yes, I met him I think. It was the Friday or the Wednesday I met him. I can't remember.

Were there not two occasions after that you went to the door and got no answer? - That is what/what I am saying. I went on the Saturday and I went on the Sunday.

And were you pretty sure he was in on both of those occasions? - On the Sunday definitely. On the Saturday I wasn't totally sure but on the Sunday he was definitely in.

Now, was there one stage in the weeks before the tragedy that he had a conversation with you and which you came to the conclusion that he was depressed? - Yes.

When was that? - He phoned me I think it was five weeks before or six weeks before that and he seemed awful down. He was on the phone for maybe 10 or 15 minutes.

Did you see him after that? - Yes, I seen him after that. As I said, I seen him on the Friday or the Wednesday.

That is immediately before. Did you not see him about three weeks say or so before the shooting? Do you remember seeing him outside Kwik Save? - I probably did, yes. I'm just not thinking here. I am sorry.

Did you ever meet him either outside Kwik Save or McDonald's in Stirling? - Yes.

Do you remember doing that in the weeks before this tragedy? - I think it was Kwik Save I met him.

Do you know how long it was before the incident? - I'm sorry.

Do you remember having a conversation in which he mentioned Dunblane? - He said..... I'm trying to get this right here. He said he had a wee bit of hassle in Dunblane. They told him he wasn't to come back to the club and that the club wasn't doing very well. He was lucky if he was getting two or three people coming at a time.

It was not going very well? - No.

Do you not remember actually having a conversation and actually running him home? - When/

When was that?

Well, that is what I am trying to establish from you, whether that did happen. If you tell me all you can remember about the occasion on the Wednesday beforehand, that is the week beforehand when you saw him, we may actually find we are talking about the same thing. What do you remember of that occasion? - I met him and ran him home. I met him that day but I couldn't tell you where I met him.

Do you remember anything of this conversation that day? - Well, he had a lot of letters. He had letters everywhere and he said he had been writing letters to different people. He never gave me the letters to read because I have dyslexia and I can't read so he never gave me the letters to read them.

Was that a different occasion from when he was saying something about getting hassle from people in Dunblane? - I am lost, sorry. I probably have said but I can't remember.

You can't remember that now? - No, sorry.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: You were telling us about Mr. Hamilton having a video recorder and watching video films? - Yes.

I think you mentioned war films? - Yes.

Any other kind of films that he would watch? - I didn't see any other films.

Did he watch violent films? - Oh, violent films. All war films are violent, yes.

You have told us that he was writing letters to lots of people. Did he appear to harbour, have, a grudge? - I would say yes, he had a slight grudge.

Against whom? - Just against the people who were slandering him.

No re-examination.

BRUCE/

BRUCE WILLIAM CARRUTHERS (28), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: You live in Bolton, is that correct? - Yes.

What is your occupation? - H.M. Forces.

Is it correct that you used to live in Dunblane? - Yes.

What age were you when you lived in Dunblane? -
From about the age of 7 through to 16.

12.40 p.m.

At that time were you at a boys club run in Dunblane?

- Yes.

Where was that club held? - At the Duckburn Centre opposite the chapel in Dunblane.

Do you remember what the club was called? - The Rovers.

How often was it held? - I believe it was a weekly club but it wasn't held throughout the year, it was just, like, part of the year.

Who ran the club? - Mr. Thomas Hamilton.

What age were you when you first attended the club?
- 12 years old approximately.

So that would be 1980? - 1979, 1980.

What activities did you do at that club? - I only went the one night; the first night I went down there was either snooker or a pool table and there was, like, a canteen and then he had an indoor range and a small bore .22 competition shooting.

Who was carrying out the shooting? - Mr. Tom Hamilton, he was the only adult at the club.

What weapons were you using? - The weapon that he allowed me to fire that night was a .22 competition rifle, small bore; that is the only weapon that I used.

Were you required to pay to this club? - There was no cost for either ammunition or the refreshments, drinks, crisps etc. that he had, it was totally free.

What was the age range of the boys attending the club? - They were all about my age group; I think probably the eldest may be about 14, perhaps 15 years old.

You/

You said you attended this club only once? - Yes.

Did you speak to Hamilton on this attendance? - Yes.

What did you discuss with him, what did he discuss with you? - Well, first of all he welcomed me into the club; there was only about eight other lads in that night and he chatted to me, he mentioned about a trip that he was possibly planning to Lochearnhead and asked would I like to go on it and we spoke about the weapons and then he took me through to the range where he allowed me, after a small bit of coaching, him acting as range officer, he allowed me to fire the .22 rifle; he showed me some pistols but at this time lapse I can't remember what calibres they were but they were automatic, they were not revolvers, it was definitely an automatic pistol.

This was not an air pistol? - No, but they could have been .22 calibre, 9 mm, I don't know.

Did he fire this? - Not in front of me and I never got allowed to have a shot.

Were you aware of him having fired it? - No.

Why did you not go back to the club? - After I had fired the weapon on the way out there was a bench at the inside door on the way out and he sat down beside me very close and he always spoke very quietly to anybody he spoke to and he put his hand on my leg, on the inside of my leg, and rubbed me just on the inside of my leg and he asked me something like "Why do you want to be one of my boys and to be in my club then, Bruce" and even at 12 years old I thought this wasn't right, I pulled away from him; I just said "I am just interested in firing weapons, Mr. Hamilton" and then he changed from being polite and being nice to me to sort of a stropmy attitude so after that, you know, it was time for us to leave and we left.

Did you tell anybody about what he had done? - Yes, I went home and told my dad; I didn't say anything like, you know, he molested me or/or anything as he hadn't, I said I didn't like the way he touched me, the way he spoke to me and his closeness, I felt uneasy with him but I wanted to go back to the club because of the trip he planned; it was a young boy's dream, everything was free, the canteen was free, the bullets were free, it was brilliant.

You didn't go back? - I did, I went back the next week and he opened the door and he said to me "What do you want?"; I said "I would like to come in, Mr. Hamilton" and he said "I don't think you are mature enough to be handling weapons and you are not the right calibre of lad I want in my club, goodbye" and he slammed the door in my face; with that I went up the road pretty upset.

After you had told your dad what happened on the first occasion did he report that to anyone? - No, my father just said "Just leave it, son, stay away"; I then went to, as a sort of compensation, my dad took me to Bridge of Allan small bore shooting club where I joined that for a few months before going into the Army Cadets.

COLIN ROBERT LOUDON (30), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: Do you live in Whins of Milton? - Yes.

What age are you? - 30.

What is your occupation? - Butcher.

When you were younger where did you live? - Dunblane.

Did you attend at youth clubs there? - Yes.

What is the name of the club you attended? - I attended the Rovers Youth Club and also a youth club at Dunblane High.

Who ran these clubs? - Thomas Hamilton/

Hamilton ran the one at the Rovers and it slips my mind who ran the Dunblane one, several people.

The one that was run by Hamilton, how many boys attended it? - I reckon there would be about 16 boys at that particular time.

What did you do at the club run by Hamilton? - Basically just used it as a form of entertainment, you know; we had little else to do, we just played pool and occasionally we were allowed to use the small range he had had at the rear of the building for firing guns.

Where was that range set up? - It is set up at the back of the building.

Where was the club being held? - At Duckburn at Dunblane.

Could you repeat that? - It was held at Duckburn area of Dunblane.

What weapons did you use at the range? - I used a range of air rifles and some air pistols, a .17 and .22.

Were these provided by Hamilton? - He brought a number of weapons but some of the boys had their own; I recall having my own .22 rifle.

Were all the boys allowed to use the guns on the range? - Yes.

Did Hamilton provide any tutoring on the use of the guns? - Yes, he took everybody that wanted into the range and gave them all help and assistance in how to use it and how to act with weapons, etc.

Did you consider there was anything improper about his behaviour at the club? - I felt personally that I didn't doubt him in any way in the way that he came close to us and showed us what to do but there was always a thought at the back of my mind that he may try to come too close at times when he was assisting us with the guns.

Did you consider he was coming too close? - Several times I felt he may have been marginally/marginally too close but I didn't give it much thought otherwise.

Did you report that to anybody? - No.

Why did you stop going to the club? - If I recall it was seasonal, I believe I just went for one season, as it were; I was 14 at the time and I felt I was probably getting a bit too mature for it as the boys that were coming were gradually getting slightly younger so I had enough and went on to better things.

At the time you stopped going to the club did you have any doubt about Hamilton's mental state? - I don't believe I did, no.

1.50 p.m.

After an adjournment for
lunch:

FRANCIS BAIRD CULLEN (36), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: You live in Stirling? - I
do.

And what is your occupation? - I am a nurse.

Do you recall meeting Thomas Hamilton? - I do, yes.

What age were you when you met Thomas Hamilton?
- 14.

That would have been about 1974? - Exactly.

How did you meet him? - He used to come to a neighbour's house about two doors away from me. They had a mutual interest in motorbikes.

Sorry, an interest in -- you had an interest in? - He and a neighbour had an interest in motorbikes, so I met him through the neighbour.

Were you aware that he owned the Woodcraft shop in Cowane Street? - Yes, I was aware.

Did you work in that shop? - I did, yes.

What age were you when you worked in that shop? - 14.

And how long did you work in that shop for? - Two years approximately.

How frequently did you work in the shop? - Every weekend, and occasional Thursday and Friday nights after school.

Did you notice anything in particular about Hamilton's behaviour within the shop? - Behaviour/

Behaviour in what way? He spoke strangely and he walked strangely, but behaviourwise, no.

What was your opinion of him? - He was a generous man to work with and a kind man.....

LORD CULLEN: I wonder if I could ask you to speak more slowly and clearly. The shorthand writer is having difficulty recording what you are saying. (Shorthand writer repeats part answer). What is the rest of it?

THE WITNESS: He was definitely a strange man in the way that he spoke and the way that he cut his hair and the way that he walked, his approach to people, and more importantly his nervousness among adult people.

Did he ever say why he was nervous in the presence of adults? - Yes. He felt very uncomfortable amongst females.

Amongst females? - Yes, in particular.

Did he have any female friends? - No, not that I know of.

Did you ever see any weapons whilst working in the shop? - Yes I did.

What weapon was that? - Air rifles and a crossbow.

Did he use these air rifles and crossbow? - In the back of the shop, yes. There was an extension at the back of the shop and he would fire into thick pieces of wood.

Did you use them? - No.

Did you see anybody else other than Hamilton use them? - No. There was never anybody else when I worked in the shop.

Did you ever report to anybody that you saw him using weapons in the back of the shop? - There were other people who worked there. They may have seen him fire into pieces of wood in the back of the shop, but I never used the weapons myself. I saw/saw him do it.

Who else worked there at the time you worked in the shop? - Two males that I can remember. One was Kieran MacKenzie.

Kieran MacKenzie? - Yes, his father -- I think his name was David MacKenzie, and Thomas Hughes.

And did you ever see them using the weapons? - No. As I said before, I didn't see anybody else using the weapons.

No cross-examination.

EWEN JAMES ELLIS ANDERSON (53), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: I live in Dunblane.

What is your occupation? - Fire Protection Consultant.

And what age are you? - 53.

Is shooting a hobby of yours? - It is.

What sort of weapons do you shoot? - A .22 target rifle. Nothing else.

For how long has shooting been your hobby? - 40 years.

And has it always been a .22 rifle that you have shot in that period? - Yes -- well, apart from on three occasions shooting some of the weapons that Hamilton owned.

What weapons were those? - A 5.56 mm rifle, a 9 mm pistol and a .357 Magnum revolver.

Did you ever fancy taking up shooting with weapons of both calibres? - I did, but I couldn't afford it.

Is/

Is it common throughout someone's shooting to remain on one calibre for as long as you have? - Yes, because our discipline is relatively inexpensive. I can buy 100 rounds of ammunition for £6.20. The heavier stuff, I believe, is somewhere in the region of 70p each.

Are you a member of any shooting clubs? - Yes, Bridge of Allan Rifle Club.

Where do you carry out your shooting? - Only on authorised rifle ranges.

Is that with the club? - With the club.

You have said you shot with Hamilton's guns. When did you first meet Hamilton? - I think somewhere about 1982.

Where did you meet him? - At the Dunblane Rifle Club.

Were you a member at the time? - Yes.

Was he a member at the time? - As far as I know he was a member, because he did attend for some years.

Was he shooting on his own or was he in company? - He did seem to shoot quite a lot of cards when nobody else was present, but he also attended on match nights, with other club members.

Did he ever bring guests on to the range? - He had the use of the range on a Friday night for teaching air rifle shooting to what I believe was then called the Dunblane Rover Group.

And who attended the Dunblane Rover Group? - Just boys from the school in Dunblane.

What age were the boys? - It is difficult -- I couldn't honestly say what age they were, whether they were Primary 7's, or Primary 1's (sic) at High School. I don't honestly know.

Would that put them around the age of 11 or 12? - Probably thereabouts.

What/

What did the boys who attended the range do? - They were simply being taught how to use an air rifle.

Did they use the rifles? - Yes.

Who supervised them when they were using the rifles? - Hamilton supervised them, and after I got to know him I went down on a Friday night from time to time as an extra supervisor.

What was your opinion of the way Hamilton ran the range with the boys there? - The discipline was excellent. They all called him "Sir", and there was no hijinks or anything wayward at all.

Did you see Hamilton at all outside the confines of the club? - He took to calling on my home several nights a week over a period of two or three years.

And when did this begin? - Just about the time when the boys club were using the rifle range.

What was the purpose of his visits to your house? - I just don't think he had anywhere to go.

Were these purely social visits? - Well, basically -- plus the fact that he did ask if I would become involved with helping in running the reconstituted club, which I believe he called the Dunblane Boys Club, and for about two years I acted as treasurer to that body.

When did you first have an association with the boys' club? - I think somewhere about 1983 or 1984. I couldn't date it any closer than that.

Can you remember where it was held? - It was held in the High School in Dunblane.

Did you know much about the club prior to being its treasurer? - No, apart from my association with the rifle shooting side, which as I say was on a Friday night in Dunblane.

When/

When you attended the club how many boys were there at the High School? - At its peak I think approximately 60.

How many adults were present to supervise? - Three or four.

How did the boys at the club behave? - Very well.

What did they wear? - Standard gym kit of shorts and sandshoes.

Did they wear anything on the upper half of their bodies? - No.

Did that strike you as odd? - Not in the least, because that was gym kit when I was at the High School in Stirling, for boys.

Did you take part in any club activities that were not held within the High School? - We once attended an outing to the Commonwealth Pool in Edinburgh, where a party of boys were taken by bus from Dunblane to the Commonwealth Pool, and I once paid an evening visit to a camp site during the annual camp.

Where was that camp held? - It was a caravan site on the east shore of Loch Lomond.

Can you remember what year that was you attended the camp site? - No, I can't.

But it was while you were treasurer of the club? - It was either while I was treasurer or just immediately after.

How was the management of the club organised? - There was a committee with Hamilton as chairman, my wife as secretary, myself as treasurer and several other members.

How many other members were there, even roughly? - Approximately four others.

And did they take part in all the decisions relating to the club? - Well, those who turned up at committee meetings, yes.

Did/

Did you have sole responsibility for the finance of the club? - Yes.

How was the club financed? - The boys paid a subscription of 50p per Thursday night, and that money was immediately placed in my hands and banked in the Trustee Savings Bank in Dunblane.

Did you deal with any of the finances for the summer camps? - Yes. One year we bought a boat, an outboard motor, life jackets, and I also paid the bills for food, etc. when he brought me the receipts. He would go out and purchase goods and bring me the receipts and I would then draw the money from the bank and pay him.

You have mentioned food there. What else was the club money spent on? - Well, just on running the club. The camp obviously was the major expenditure in the year. For most of the year the money was coming in from the subscriptions, and it went back out again prior to the summer camp.

Were you aware of rumours circulating in Dunblane about Hamilton? - Yes.

What were those rumours? - The rumours, as far as we could ascertain through the committee -- and there were as many parents for him as were against him -- somebody would always say "He did this", and you would then say "When and where?", and they would say, "Oh, I don't know" -- "Well, how do you know?" -- "I heard it".

What were they saying they had heard? - That he was queer, basically.

Is that just that he was homosexual, or that that involved the children in some way? - I assumed that is what they meant.

Did you ever discuss these things with Hamilton? - I did once say to him "Tom, I don't know why you bother. Why don't you just stop the clubs and just sit back and live your life". His reaction was that if he stopped people would immediately consider the rumours to be true.

What was your opinion of Hamilton? - I thought he was a very shy, lonely person.

You/

You said you were on the committee for -- was it three years? - Two years, perhaps three; certainly no longer.

Why did you stop being on the committee? - I didn't like the way I would suddenly be presented with a carrier bag full of receipts, some of which were just simply little till receipts with no details as to what had been bought -- you know, just an amount of money on them. Also I mean, I had no boys, no boys in the club, and lots of other things to do, basically.

Did your wife carry on on the committee after you left? - No, she actually resigned from the committee before I did due to a change in her working circumstances.

Were you aware that Hamilton continued to use your names as committee members after you had both resigned? - Not until recently. He did once put out a leaflet with my name on it, which I pulled him up about and told him never to use my name again without permission.

And what did he say to that? - Just that was it, he said no more about it.

You are aware that the let of the school was withdrawn by the Regional Council around the time you were on the committee? - Yes. That was just at the time we came on to the committee.

And how did you respond to that? - When we were told by him why, and what had happened, and he asked us if we would help in forming this new committee that the Council had asked for, we agreed.

BY/

BY LORD CULLEN: Was that what you call a reconstitution? - Yes.

I would just like to understand -- the reconstitution followed the resolution of the problems that there had been with the Regional Council? - Yes. As far as I know there was also some animosity from the Scout Group about the name he had used prior to that, where he called it the Dunblane Rover Group, and I believe there was also some problems about that, so it had to be altered as well.

Just remind me, what was the name of the reconstituted club -- what was it called? - Dunblane Boys' Club.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: Did he tell you why the let had been withdrawn? - Yes, just due, as far as we knew, to the rumours that were circulating. He also was quite honest with us at the start and told us why he had been put out of the Scouts.

What did he tell you about that? - Simply that he had organised two trips to Aviemore which had culminated in the boys sleeping in the van, and he had been asked to leave the Scouts after that.

Did he indicate his opinion of the Scouts, after having been, as you say, thrown out? - I think it hurt him.

Did he discuss it with you? - Not at any great length.

Did he appear to bear a grudge against the Scouting Movement? - I wouldn't have said it was obvious that he did.

Following withdrawal of the let did you write to the Regional Council in an attempt to have it reinstated? - Yes. I think it was to Councillor Buchanan, I believe.

Yes, it was. If I could ask you please to look at a copy of your letter. The reference is given as DCRC AL/B2/F1/54. In the second paragraph of that letter do you indicate that you regard Mr. Hamilton/

Hamilton as being entirely suitable to have custody of children? - There was nothing that I ever saw that would make me believe he wasn't. He did state on some occasions that he held qualifications through the Gymnastics Association, that he had Mountain Leadership Certificates, and things like that. As I say, he always came over to me as a very quiet, kind individual.

In the paragraph after that you refer to the discipline of the boys. Did you ever see Hamilton discipline any of the boys? - Only so far as raising his voice.

You never saw any of them hit any of them? - No.

And do you, in that letter, urge Mr. Buchanan to restore the let to Mr. Hamilton? - Yes.

Did you meet with Mr. Hamilton to discuss -- sorry, with Mr. Buchanan -- to discuss the restoration of the let? - The proposed Committee attended a meeting in Viewforth with Council members.

What was the outcome of that meeting? - The outcome was that as long as there was a properly constituted Committee, with helpers in attendance at the school, the let would be given back.

And was that the reason that the Committee you have referred to was set up? - That is correct.

Were you aware whether Hamilton had any adult friends, other than yourself? - I did hear him mentioning somebody called Clive on one occasion, but that is all, basically.

Did he have any female friends? - Not to my knowledge.

After you left the club did you continue to see him? - He continued to call at the house.

How often did he call at the house? - To the extent where he began to become a bit of a nuisance, like three to four nights a week.

Did/

Did you always allow him to come in? - Sometimes we weren't in -- you know, my daughter would be in, my daughter's boyfriend would be in, or whatever.

Did he ever bring any weapons to the house? - On about two occasions.

What weapons did he bring? - The first time he brought a 9 mm pistol and a .357 revolver, both correctly handled, wrapped in dusters in a leather carrying bag -- you know, they weren't ostentatiously carried from his transport or anything; and on another occasion a 5.56 mm assault rifle, which again was properly bagged and handled.

When were these weapons brought to your house? - I couldn't say now.

When did his visits to your house stop? - Somewhere about 1989.

Did you go shooting with him after you left the club? - I don't think so.

Did you ever see him shooting? - Yes, on three occasions.

Was that after the club, or while you were on the Committee? - That was I think while I was on the Committee.

What weapons did he use? - On one occasion we went to Dechmont, outside Cambuslang, and he used a 9 mm Browning pistol and the .357. On another occasion we went to the Clyde Valley Pistol Club -- the town where it is I can't remember. It is down off the A74, and we used the club's weapons. On another occasion we went to Whitestone and used the rifle.

The times that Hamilton brought weapons to your house, was that after you had been on these shoots? - No, I think that was before.

Did he say why he had brought the weapons to your house? - Well, he knew that I was also interested in shooting, and brought them just to let me see them, because I mean, I have books on firearms and things at home.

CROSS/

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: I would just like to ask you one question. You said that Mr. Hamilton told you why he had been put out of the Scouts? - That is correct.

And you also said that there had been a trip which had culminated in the boys sleeping in the van? - That is right.

Did he explain to you why the boys had had to sleep in the van? - I think he had said something about the bookings in the accommodation had gone wrong.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: Just one point that was raised with me, interestingly: is there any restriction on the method by which you transport a gun from your home to a gun club? - Well, they are always in a proper carrying case. I mean, you can't just walk out the house with ammunition and a rifle.

Yes, but from what you said Hamilton had it in a canvas case, so it is not as if you need to have it in a metal case or any particularly secure container? - No, not for transporting.

So if we have heard evidence Hamilton went on the bus or train to the gun club, he could be carrying these weapons in a canvas bag, possibly loaded, without restriction? - Well, he would be very foolish if he carried guns about loaded.

Yes, but no necessity in practice to keep them in a secure metal container, for instance, in transit between the home and the gun club? - No. Quite a lot of people -- I mean, there are special carrying cases you can buy which just look like white cases for rifles, or just small attache cases for handguns.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: Are you able to tell us what Mr. Hamilton's motive was in organising the boys' clubs? - I assumed that he just was interested in providing something in the way of sporting facilities for the boys.

No re-examination.

JAMES/

JAMES KINDNESS, (54), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: My occupation at present is that I am a security guard chargehand.

And you live in Stirling? - And I live in Stirling.

What was your employment prior to being a security chargehand? - I was a member of the Central Scotland Police.

When did you retire from Central Scotland Police? - In December, 1991.

And what was your rank at the time you retired? - I was then a Detective Sergeant.

Do you recall during your time with the Central Scotland Police investigating Thomas Hamilton? - As a member of Stirling CID between the years 1968 and 1981, and in that period, I believe the late 1980s (sic), although I can't be exact, I had occasion to investigate complaints from parents surrounding Thomas Hamilton.

You say that was in the late 1980s? - 1970s.

What were the complaints that had been made? - The complaints arose by a supposition by a number of parents whose boys were members of the Forth Valley Rover Scouts, a club operated by Hamilton at Stirling High School, the inference being that there was some odd behaviour which inferred, as far as the parents were concerned, possible indecency.

You mentioned Scouts in that. Was this a Scout Group, or a club run by Hamilton? - It was a boys' club operated by Hamilton at Stirling High School.

Did it have any connections with the Scout Association?
- I am sorry?

Did it have any connections with the Scout Association?
- I don't know, frankly.

Did/

Did you know of Hamilton prior to the complaints being made? - I had no previous dealings with Hamilton, and indeed that was the only dealings I had with him.

Can you recall how many complaints were made? - My impression is that perhaps two or three sets of parents -- I believe three sets of parents -- reported, in the context of what I have already mentioned, the possibility of indecency on the part of Hamilton towards the children.

So all the parents were concerned with possible indecency? - The concern was that there was a change of behaviour pattern that the parents couldn't explain, that the boys had been previously stable, and there was a sudden transition after having attended Hamilton's club. They couldn't put their finger on the reasons why, and the assumption was raised -- it was never a proven assumption, it was merely an assumption, that the possibility existed that there might be something involved.

And this is why they approached the police? - Yes.

What did you do in response to those complaints? - I believe the case was referred by the uniform branch to myself -- well, not to myself directly, to the CID, and I was delegated responsibility for the investigation.

What did you do to investigate it? - I can't recall interviewing the boys personally, but they were interviewed; but this disclosed no evidence whatsoever of indecency -- nothing in any context was disclosed to support the suspicion of the parents that any form of indecency was involved.

Would it have been you who interviewed them all, or would it have been someone else? - I can't remember, quite frankly. It may well have been someone else, and the information from that interview was passed on to me for further investigation.

Are you sure that nothing was raised in the course of these interviews to confirm allegations of indecency? - There was no corroboration whatsoever to support any allegation of/of indecency.

Having found that what did you do further in the investigation? - I felt it necessary to bring the matter to a proper conclusion one way or another.

Did you not consider the fact that the boys had said nothing had happened was a proper conclusion? - No, I wasn't totally satisfied.

Why were you not satisfied? - Well, there is always an inference that we might have missed something, and I felt it was imperative to conclude the matter by interviewing Hamilton, even although no information had been disclosed by the boys of any form of indecency.

At that time when you made the decision to interview Hamilton had you become aware by that time of his history with youth clubs? - At that particular stage I believe I had been in contact with Dunblane Police. He had previously been involved in operating a club which had folded, I think, in the Dunblane area. That is my recollection of events, and there had been some parental dissatisfaction with him in that previous club situation.

Where did you obtain that information? - From Dunblane Police. I had also to prepare a background enquiry report, so I required to contact Dunblane Police Office.

So this was part of your background enquiry? - Yes.

And was that a formal request for information to Dunblane Police, or an informal request? - It was simply done on the basis of trying to raise any information perhaps that might support indecent conduct.

Where else did you seek information about Hamilton? - I think that was the basis of my background enquiry, on purely the Dunblane situation; but of course this event took place almost 18 or 19 years ago, and my memory of the events is relatively dim.

Would/

Would you have carried out a check of the criminal intelligence system? - As it existed at that time, yes. He was not, to my knowledge, at that stage widely known in any context, as far as I could gather.

You say "the criminal intelligence system as it existed at that stage". In what form did it exist at that stage? - There was a criminal intelligence officer based at Police Headquarters, within Headquarters Criminal Investigation Department, at Police Headquarters, Stirling, with responsibility for collecting information and disseminating information about known or suspected criminals.

And if you had any enquiry to make, you would contact that officer and give the particular individual's name? - Yes. I can't remember doing so directly, to be quite honest with you.

Is that normally part of the procedure in such a situation? - That would be standard procedure.

Do you recall interviewing Hamilton? - I arranged for Hamilton to call at the police office. There was no question of arrest or detention, and he did so on a voluntary basis.

I appreciate it is a long time ago. Can you remember how long the interview took? - I have the impression it was a relatively, or comparatively extended interview, during which he denied, for example, being homosexual, and denied having any inclination sexually towards young boys; and that was really the sum total.

And these matters were put to him by you? - Yes.

Did you question him about the circumstances of the termination of the previous group in Dunblane? - I did not at that particular time.

What did you do following the interview with Hamilton?
- Obviously, in the context of the events as such, there was no evidence to substantiate or support any form of charge against Hamilton/

Hamilton. He had arrived freely and voluntarily at the CID office and he was discharged from the office. He was not arrested or detained. He was simply discharged from the office.

Did you do anything as a result of the information that you had obtained? - What I believe came through was that there was a form of subversion by Hamilton in terms of parental authority. It is difficult to explain. There had been a gross display, for example, of affluence by Hamilton.

Is that to the children? - To the boys concerned.

What form did that take? - There had been money -- I think gifts of money, lending bicycles, canoe trips -- this sort of thing. There was also evidence I believe, if I remember properly, of allowing truants to frequent his shop in Cowane Street, which he had at the time. But having said that, there was no evidence and there was no corroboration to support any form of indecency charges against him.

And/

G. Baxter

2.30 p.m.

And that information as to spending money on the boys and allowing them to play truant within his shop, that was information you gathered in the course of your investigation? - Yes.

What did you do with that information? - I don't recall specifically but I believe I may have or could have submitted that to the Crown Intelligence Officer for future reference if needed.

And that was the Intelligence Officer you referred earlier to? - I assume so.

Are you aware of what happened to the group in respect of which the complaints had been made? - I think through lack of support the group folded.

Did you become aware of any subsequent group set up by Hamilton? - I was told by some other officer or officers that Hamilton at some later stage was in fact endeavouring to recruit for a new boys club and was putting leaflets as such through letterboxes and this sort of thing.

Can you recall where that information came from? - No, I can't. I would be guessing, quite frankly. I don't know.

Was any police action taken as a result of that information? - I don't know. I wasn't involved in that context so I have no knowledge of it. It was an ongoing process.

Can I ask you please to look at Production D intel F1D2. You see what that is? It is also document D2 within Volume I(III). Perhaps that document can be placed on the imager. Do you see that document on the screen now? - Yes.

That appears to be a flier or a circular for the Dunblane Rover Group and you see there is a little bit typewritten beneath the name T.W. Hamilton, Principal Leader. Do you see the text there says that Hamilton is suspected homosexual and operates the above-mentioned youth club. Boys playing truant from school and being members of this group are found in Hamilton's shop. He would appear/appear to encourage these boys and is prone to influencing them against their parents? - I would certainly agree with most of that text, although not with the preamble.

The preamble being the first sentence? - Homosexual. I don't think that came out of my inquiry at all. That was never proven.

Was that note prepared by you? - I can't remember but quite frankly it is not a format I would present a criminal intelligence item on. It may have been prepared by another officer and submitted.

Do you know which officer prepared this? - I've no idea.

Would a submission to criminal intelligence take the form such as this where merely something is overtyped on an advertisement? - It is unusual. Nor is it an appropriate form for that type of submission.

If you could just move out on the imager there please. Zoom out to take in the whole page. It is dated 15th November, 1981. Does the date of that flier correspond to the time of your investigation into the boys complaints? - No. The complaint I dealt with was prior to that. Definitely in the 1970s. Not the 1980s. I can't remember the specific year but it was certainly before 1981.

Did you have responsibility for criminal intelligence in November, 1981? - I can't recall. I was in there briefly, yes, that department.

And if an officer was going to make a criminal intelligence submission, how would that be done? - In terms of the appropriate type of form, as regards the form of presentation. Often information was informed. Sometimes based on rumour. It was a very difficult issue to assess the level of reliability of intelligence. There is a system in operation since that time in terms of a grading system, grading in terms of reliability but in terms of my findings in respect of the single investigation I conducted, I would agree with the parental aspect, the fact that the boys were in his premises, / premises, there was no question of that but nevertheless I stressed the fact that any instance of indecency was never proven by me against Hamilton and no charge was ever raised against him.

Would you only submit things to a criminal intelligence officer where you suspected a crime had been proved or would it have been for other matters? - It would be recorded in the context of an individual who is worthy of possible interest. The situation as would apply in terms of Hamilton even at that time was such that he was worthy in my view of some form of reference and I think this just provided an informal reference rather than simply forgetting that anything happened in the context of that particular event I am referring to. Perhaps this just provided at least a small, albeit vague, reference rather than nothing at all.

What sort of possible future interest did you have in mind when making a submission such as this? - As I say, I can't lay claim to that submission.

A submission like this. What would you have in mind in making it? - I would expect it might support other collateral coming from other sources. Other police officers, multiple pieces of information, bits of intelligence which may be knitted together to form a picture worthy of reference, worthy of knowledge of an individual who is potentially suspect.

With a view to detecting further crimes? - Yes.

No cross-examination.

GEORGE BAXTER (60), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: I think you currently live in Dunfermline? - I currently live in Dunfermline, yes.

What is your occupation? - Head of Centre, /

G. Baxter

Centre, Woodmill High School, Dunfermline.

And your employers are Fife Regional Council? - Fife Council, yes.

You described your occupation as head of Centre. What is the Centre? - The Centre is actually the High School which is open seven days a week for the use of the actual public. The facilities of the school are available for community use.

Is that members of the public generally or for groups to use? - The members of the public generally.

Do you recall having involvement with Thomas Hamilton regarding the use of the Centre? - I do.

When did he first seek to use the Centre? - The actual date I can't remember now. It is quite a number of years. I think it is all documented but as far as my memory is concerned, I couldn't give you an exact date.

Would it be about February of 1985? - That is probably the right time, yes.

Can you remember why he wanted to use the Centre? - The first occasion he used the Centre was he arrived on a Monday evening, when I am not working actually, and he talked with my depute that evening and said that he had had a booking at the Carnegie Centre in Dunfermline and when he arrived there he found it was a double booking and therefore they had sent him down to our Centre to see if we had a vacancy. As it was, there was a vacancy. One of the gymnasiums was free. He had a group of boys which he had brought from Stirling and also a physical education teacher with them and they were looking for a facility for a class.

He had a physical education teacher with him at that time? - That is right.

What did they want to do within the Centre? - Well, it was gymnastics. Gymnastics within the gymnasium.

You/

G. Baxter

You said he was allowed to use the Centre when there was this double booking in Dunfermline? - That is correct.

Did his use of the Centre continue beyond that night? - After the evening was finished he made enquiries if he could actually come in a weekly situation. Now, the person who was in charge that evening is a qualified physical education teacher and he had monitored the situation that evening and saw no reason why it should not be continued. He said it was all very well organised and he agreed provided of course that it came back to me and I had no disagreement with it.

Are you aware what the club was called that was run within the Centre? - It was called the Lynburn Gymnastics Club.

How often did it meet? - At the start once a week, for a very short period twice a week and then back to once a week.

Can you remember how many boys attended? - Well, it was like everything else, it did vary. Usually at the start of the session there might be about 35 boys attending. As the session went on the numbers usually cut back. That was a normal situation.

And the purpose of this club was to carry out gymnastics? - It was a type of gymnastics. Anything that goes on within our Centre we monitor, no matter whether it would be a gymnastics club or a karate club and we have staff who monitor these things and the physical education teacher who I have in my staff described it as a gymnastics class from about 1945 or the 1950s. That was actually the type of gymnastics they were being taught there but he said the children enjoyed it. It was physically good for them and he couldn't actually say anything against it. It just wasn't the type of gymnastics they were being taught in the 1990s but there was nothing else wrong with it.

How was the club monitored by your staff? - Well, my staff, as I say, with all our clubs, at least once a fortnight they go in, maybe for just 10 minutes and just check the class and see that everything is going all right. As I say, at this/this time Mr. Hamilton wasn't teaching. It was actually a qualified teacher from I think Lothian Region he actually had teaching the class.

Did Hamilton take any part in teaching, were you aware? - Not at the start. He was just there organising and dividing the group up. They also actually had a session at swimming as well and numbers were so that the gymnasium couldn't hold all the numbers and they divided up between the gymnasium and the swimming pool.

Who supervised the swimming? - Well, we have proper qualified attendants in the swimming pool.

You said that Hamilton did not teach at the start. When did he start teaching? - Well, the teacher from Lothian decided it was too expensive for him to travel and then he came to me and asked me if I could get him a teacher and I actually then got one of the physical education teachers from the actual school and she actually did the class for quite a long time and then the numbers dropped, the money wasn't there to pay for the facilities and then for a while he took over but we did actually stipulate that if he wanted to take over he would have to have members of the children's parents involved and we actually had the parents come along and helped actually for a while.

These are parents of the children in the club? -
The parents of the children in the class.

How many of them would come along typically? -
Maybe two. You know, it had to be someone who was really interested in that sort of thing.

And you said they came along for a while? - That's right.

Do I take it from that after a while the parental support dropped off and it was just Hamilton on his own? - At the end of the period actually it was him on his own.

And what sort of period are we talking about when he was on his own? - Oh, about the last/

G. Baxter

last year he was with us.

When you say the last year, does that mean last year, 1995? - No, when did he finish with us? I think it was about two years ago he finished with us. So it would be about 1994.

Did Hamilton ever take photographs of the children while doing gymnastics? - We have a situation where all different things that are going on in the Centre are advertised to the public. For instance, if we have a computer class we take photographs of the computer class. It is part of the actual Centre and we put them on the noticeboard and let the public see what is going on. Mr. Hamilton had come to me and said would it be possible for me to display photographs of his class and I said well, I couldn't say anything else as all the other classes were on view and I did agree to him actually taking the photographs which was not the norm. He actually took them specially for us and supplied us with a large board for the photographs.

What did the photographs show? - Just the boys participating in gymnastics.

And these were to be displayed in a public area?
- They were displayed in the front area, the entrance hall area, beside the photographs of the other facilities.

Presumably you saw nothing unusual in the photographs? - Nothing unusual.

Did you have cause to have much discussion with Mr. Hamilton while he was carrying out the class within the Centre?
- Well, as I say, it was a normal situation. You tend to discuss with all teachers who are using the facility. We are open to the public and the public can come in and use the facilities and we also allow certain clubs to come and use the facilities and if they are using the facility as a club we make a stipulation that anybody wishing to use that club must be allowed to join it because they are getting the facility actually through the Region as it were.

You say you did discuss things with Hamilton from time to time? - Yes, we discussed things./

G. Baxter

things. We discussed things with all the people and we make sure that everything is going all right, the facilities were all right and anything we thought was dangerous to use in the gymnasium we would say "You are not allowed to use that". We stipulated which items of equipment he was not allowed to use.

Was there anything unusual in Mr. Hamilton's manner when you spoke to him? - The man was rather an unusual person to talk to.

Why? - Well, the only thing I can say is you would have to have spoken to him to understand that. He was a very unusual gentleman to talk to.

You can't say what made him unusual? - He didn't laugh at anything. He didn't joke at anything. He was far too polite. It was "Yes sir, no sir, three bags full sir" all the time which gets a little wearing. He never argued with something. If you stipulated something he said "Yes sir, yes sir, yes sir".

Did you ever get a chance to see him running his club? - Yes, I, as part of the management team actually took part in the monitoring. It is just something we all did and we all do still at the present.

That/

G. Baxter

2.50 p.m.

That is the dress we had at primary school, shorts and that and then if you talk about secondary school gymnastics that was the dress we actually would use.

I didn't think anything was wrong with the situation.

How were the children at the club dressed? - Gym shoes and shorts.

And that's all? - That's all.

During Hamilton's use of the facilities at the Centre I understand you had cause to investigate a number of complaints made by the parents of children who attended the class? - There was only one complaint of a parent of a child who was going to attend the club. The parents' complaints came not from the actual club that was being run within the Centre but from the holiday camp that he had, these are where the complaints came back from and this, of course, we had no control over. The only one complaint we had from the parent was because he brought his son along and Mr. Hamilton wouldn't let him join the class because he said he was too tall.

Perhaps if we look at the complaints in more detail and when you look at the complaints as far as possible would you attempt not to refer to the names of parents making the complaint and the names of children? - I wouldn't remember these now anyway.

If you look first at document DFRC1, that is D89 in the folder H(V)? - Yes.

Do you recognise that? - Yes.

You see it is a letter addressed to you from the Rights Office, Dunfermline and the opening paragraph is "I wish to bring to your attention the negligence and cruelty which was apparent on a recent holiday organised by the Lynburn Gymnastic Club's organiser, Mr. Thomas Hamilton. This organisation, as I am sure you know, uses the school as its address". The next paragraph refers to identifying the person making the complaints and the third paragraph returns to the complaint which was that "Hamilton left the boys on the island at night unsupervised,/" unsupervised, while he stayed on a barge with other boys. The boys were left with a rowing boat", and one of the boys, the youngest, could hardly swim, and it goes on, "The boys were hardly given anything to eat, and were denied wearing their warm clothes. Three boys were forced to collect wood for the fire". Do you see all these things in the letter? - Yes.

G. Baxter

The next paragraph states that one of the boys was picked on and assaulted by three other boys and that Hamilton watched without intervening; do you recall receiving that letter? - Yes, I do.

What did you do in response to that letter? - Well, first of all I sent it on to my superiors in Fife; the situation was that we had no control over what was happening outside the facility; what Mr. Hamilton was doing was actually hiring the facility from us and all the time he was using that facility we could actually monitor what was going on and this was something that was organised completely outside our facility and we had no knowledge of it. The first time we knew about this was when I received this letter; I didn't even know there was actual camps going on.

May I ask you to keep hold of that for the time being and also to look at document DFRC4 and there is no other reference to the document; do you see what that is, a specific memo to you from a Mr. Sommerville? - Yes.

And it concerns the letter which we have just referred to? - Yes.

And it suggests a meeting and discussion with the Rights Office? - Yes.

Did you discuss matters with people referred to in that note? - Yes, we had a meeting which was held in my school and we discussed the whole situation and Mr. Sommerville then took it on his responsibility to contact the Rights Office and have a talk with them.

Could I ask you to look at DFRC5, again there is no other reference to this document? - Yes.

At/

G. Baxter

At this point there was a short adjournment while Mr. Lake explained to parties concerned where the document that he was going to refer to could be found.

Do you have in front of you the document which has a reference DFRC5 on it? - Yes.

You see that is a memo from you to Mr. Joiner? - This is a memo from Mr. Sommerville to myself and Mr. Joiner.

And in the body of the memo it refers to a meeting you had with Mr. Hamilton? - This refers to a meeting that Mr. Sommerville had with Hamilton.

What did you understand the outcome of that meeting was? - He had a meeting with Mr. Hamilton and both he and Mr. Hamilton agreed that it would be a good idea to actually have a parents' committee and make up a proper Constitution of the club.

And that was the solution to the problem? - That was the suggested solution to the problem.

Did you take steps to help? - I had a meeting with Mr. Hamilton and we discussed the situation and I said that we would only continue his let if he actually followed these steps and he agreed he would actually call a meeting of the parents to form a parents' committee.

Could you look at document DFRC10; this document does have a D number which is D6 within volume D2, I don't think it is in H(V); I am corrected, it is in D92 in H(V); do you see that is a letter from you to Mr. Sommerville? - That's right.

In which you say you had a meeting with Mr. Hamilton to discuss his club? - Yes, that's right.

Can you tell me from that letter what he said to you about the suggestion for a committee? - He said that at present there was still no committee actually of parents but he had encouraged parents to participate/participate in the club itself and he now had actually two members who were taking an active part in the actual club, in the actual session within the gymnasium.

G. Baxter

Did you attend at the club and speak to Mr. Hamilton?
- I attended -- in this letter I attended on Friday, the 17th, was it, yes.

That/

3.10 p.m.

That would be in 1986? - That would be in 1986, yes.

Was there still a gym teacher at the club when you attended? - No, that had gone actually and the club had actually moved away from being a gymnastic style and it was more actually in the type of boys' club. From what I can remember there was indoor football and these sort of things which were mixed along with a certain amount of gymnastics.

Were you still quite happy at what you saw going on in the club? - I was. With the two parents along there actually taking an active part with Mr. Hamilton.

Can I ask you to look at document DFRC21? At the moment the only reference I have for that is D11 in J(II). Do you see that is a letter which does not appear to be dated addressed to Mr. Sommerville? In the top left-hand corner it has got Mr. Sommerville's name? - Yes, it is actually addressed to me. That was the situation I referred to earlier. The big boy syndrome where a boy arrived actually to take part in the club and was told he was too tall and he was barred from coming in and Mr. Hamilton saying it was a dangerous situation, that the boy might knock some of the smaller boys over.

And that was a parental complaint regarding that boy being excluded? - Yes, that was I think the only complaint that was ever received with regard to the club within the actual centre.

And did you investigate that complaint? - I investigated it and as you can probably see, I have one in front of me anyway, the letter which I actually wrote to Mr. Hamilton. I was completely surprised, having never heard anything in my life like a boy was too tall to participate in a boys' club. I emphasised the fact that Fife Region is an Equal Opportunities organisation and this policy we must follow both with our own organisation and independent organisations using our facilities. As it happened, the boy's age was just coming up to the time where he actually wasn't eligible for the club because/because of his age but Mr. Hamilton apologised and said he was only thinking of the safety of the other boys.

BY LORD CULLEN: Can I just ask you about that letter? I see it refers to the "Dunfermline Boys' Sports Club". Had the club changed its name in the process of things or what had happened? - No, it was still actually called The Lynburn Boys' Club. I think the gentleman who has written this has just.....

It is just a mistake, is it? - Made a mistake, yes.

So right through until quite recently was it still Lynburn Gymnastics Club? - Right up until the day when we actually closed his let off and said we were no longer accepting his let.

And when was that? - It must have been..... I am sorry, at my age of 60 my memory is not as good as it used to be.

We may come to that in due course but it is a matter of just a few years ago? - I think it is two years ago now since we actually closed the facility to him.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: Can I ask you now to look at Document DFRC24 and this is Reference D18 in J(II)? - (No answer).

LORD CULLEN: Mr. Lake, would you find it at all easier if some of these documents that are hard to get hold of are put on the imager? Would that be helpful?

MR. LAKE: I have no objection other than it might involve disclosing the name of the.....

LORD CULLEN: Oh, I see. Well, where there is no problem perhaps you might consider that.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: You see this is a letter written by you? - Yes.

And again it concerns a complaint made about Mr. Hamilton and Lynburn Gymnastics Club? - Well/

Well, it isn't actually about the Gymnastics Club as such. It is about his summer camp.

Can you recall what the complaint that parent made was? - It was with regard to her son having attended a summer camp and the conditions at the summer camp did not come up to what her expectations were.

What did you do in response to that? - Well, in the letter as you will see I asked the lady to come in and have a discussion with me. Unfortunately, although I phoned her twice and I wrote to her once she did not take this any further. I sent a copy of this letter to Mr. Sommerville.

MR. LAKE: I understand now that the only screens available are in the well of the court. Perhaps that document could be put on the imager.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE:
Perhaps that makes it clear that this is a letter from you to the parent concerned and makes reference to her letter of complaint and making the point there that they are a completely independent organisation and you did not have any influence over the affairs of the summer camp? - That is correct.

Did you consider withdrawing the let of the centre following on these complaints? - Well, we did actually. We had a long discussion with regard to that situation but again the situation was that there was nothing actually untoward happening within the centre. This was something that was happening without. It was not anything we advertised. If a parent had come along, we didn't encourage it, and was asking me if I would send my child to summer camp I would say No.

Did the parent who made that complaint provide you with any information regarding Hamilton? - The only information is in her letter that is actually there and as I say, I wrote to her and she didn't take up my offer.

Were you aware of any other boys' clubs being run by Hamilton in any other areas? - By that time I would say Yes. By that time I had phoned my colleagues in Lothian Region and I had information which had come from them which I again passed on to my/my superiors.

And what was that information? - Just the situation which had happened within Lothian Region and the difficulties they had had with him and how they had stopped the use of his lets and then he had actually got his lets back again because there was nothing to actually ban him. There was no reason. That was the great difficulty. He never did anything within the facility which would give us the right to say "Right, we can't accept you because you are not following our safety lines or you are not....." I mean, that is the situation.

But you were aware of two complaints by this time of mistreatment at the summer camps? - At summer camps, yes.

Can I ask you please to look at Document DRFC53? This is reference D46 in J(II). Again, perhaps for convenience this could be put on the imager. You see that is a memorandum from Mr. Sommerville to Mr. Welsh. Is that within Fife Region? - That is correct. Mr. Welsh was the Director of Education. Mr. Sommerville was the senior assistant in charge of recreation and leisure.

Perhaps we could move in in close up to the first few lines of the first paragraph. It says there "Mr. More received a telephone call from Chief Superintendent A. Elder on 23rd July 1992 to the effect that he wished to discuss concerns related to incidents which had happened involving Fife children at a camp run by the above organisation. Mr. More expressed his concern and asked me to meet with Chief Superintendent Elder. I subsequently rearranged my holiday dates and met with Chief Superintendent Elder and Mr. A. Kelly, Reporter to the Children's Panel". Were you aware of these discussions taking place? - When I received that letter I was, yes.

Look at the second page of that document and the third paragraph of it. You see there a paragraph beginning "I met....."? - Yes.

"I met with Mr. G. Baxter, head of Community Youth at 2.00 p.m. on Monday, 24th August 1992 to discuss background information on the club and/and its involvement with camps. Mr. Baxter said he had received a complaint..... about the camp held at Dunblane High School which her son had attended. He had received an earlier visit from W.P.C. Metcalfe asking him to inform her of any difficulties with this group. As a result, he suggested (to the complainer) that she should contact W.P.C. Metcalfe". Do you recall that discussion with Mr. Sommerville? - Yes.

And you passed on information about the complaint? - Yes.

Do you remember W.P.C. Metcalfe coming to talk to you about these matters? - Yes, very much so.

When was that? - What do you mean by.....?

Can you remember what sort of date she came to talk to you? - Not date-wise, no, I am sorry.

This memorandum is dated 27th August 1992. Was it shortly before that or a great deal of time before that? - I am sorry.

Can you remember what W.P.C. Metcalfe discussed with you? - She just asked about the situation with regard to Hamilton and with the running of the actual club within the centre and if there had been any complaints with regard to the club.

Was she investigating it in effect? - She wouldn't say to me. She just introduced herself, said who she was and showed me her warrant card and asked me to give details and that is what I did.

She didn't tell you.....? - She did not tell me what she was actually doing because I asked. Being who I was, I asked but she wouldn't give any details.

What information were you able to supply her with?
- Just the information that I could tell her about the actual club and the running of the club and how we actually monitored the situation and the/the complaints that had come in with regard to the summer camps.

Can I ask you please to look at Document DFRC72? The reference for this is D57 within J(II). Again, perhaps it would be convenient if this could be put on to the screen.

Do you see that this is a letter headed "Boys' Sports Club Group Committee" and it appears to be from Thomas Hamilton and is dated the 18th September 1992? - Yes.

Have you seen this letter previously? - Yes.

Could/

3.25 p.m.

Could you look at a passage on page 3 of that letter; would you start by looking towards the top of the page and you see Hamilton has made reference to forming a committee and proposing a standard type Constitution which was agreed and adopted and he says "I then left the Woodmill Club in favour of other commitments elsewhere. However, within a week a contingent of six parents representing the committee, visited me at the Dunblane Club to ask me if I would return to Woodmill to run the club under a new arrangement offered by Mr. Baxter". Are you aware of any of these events? - There was a meeting actually with the parents and Mr. Hamilton and the parents decided that Mr. Hamilton was no longer going to run the club and they suggested that he would be an active figurehead but wouldn't do any teaching. At this Mr. Hamilton walked out and the parents were then left and they decided they would run the club and as you can see as it says in the letter there the parents then decided that they couldn't run the club properly and they asked him to return but there was no suggestion I had made, no suggestion from me, to run the club; that was something that Mr. Hamilton had added in the letter.

So you are saying that the parents had asked him to return? - The parents had asked him to return.

So you are saying that the parents had asked him to return? - The parents had asked him to return.

You see, the paragraph goes on to suggest that the arrangements for a new club are that it would become part of the Woodmill Centre's community education programme and all weekly fees would be collected and handed into the office; are you aware of any arrangement being made? - No, that arrangement wasn't made.

Do you see in the second paragraph on the page there is reference to you finding a teacher to assist Hamilton in place of Mr. McIntosh? - That would be a school teacher, actually a PE teacher was actually.....

Did/

Did you make that arrangement? - I made an arrangement for one of the school PE teachers.

There is reference to you paying the wages of that teacher to assist him; do you have any recollection of that? - No, he had to pay the wages out of the income from the actual club.

In the next paragraph it is stated that you made no effort to maintain the committee or hold any AGM meetings; did you have any responsibility for maintaining the committee? - Again that was outside the club which we had no jurisdiction over therefore we wouldn't have anything to do with AGMs or committees or anything else.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Just briefly if I may, Mr. Baxter, would you accept that the fact the club was being held in a Regional Council facility such as your own would to an outsider bestow an air of respectability about it? - I should hope so.

So far as the club which was being run in your Centre is concerned we know that that was a means of recruiting boys for the camps that you have been discussing in your evidence? - Well, as I say we didn't know about the camps to start off with, it was something we didn't encourage; we keep records of everything that happened within the Centre.

You came to learn of the camps about which there were so many complaints and the camps were for boys in the club? - And other boys as well.

However, if it seems to have been the case that the complaints related to incidents at the camps rather than incidents at the club there would be no jurisdiction for you or the Council taking any action? - As I say Mr. Hamilton was collating the facility from us and during the let we were responsible for anything that went on within that building. As regards the camps, anything with regard to that I actually passed on to my seniors and this was a situation that they agreed with; providing everything was under control then the actual facility, we really didn't have any control over that.

So whatever Hamilton got up to in the camps/camps the clubs could continue? - This is a difficult one for me to answer; I have followed my orders from above.

Could you look please at a document which is B227, also D4B/I1; it is in the file I which is called Chapter I Continued although there is only one Chapter I.

LORD CULLEN: Can you give us the date of the document?

MR. CAMPBELL: The date of the document I wish to refer to is the 29th of July, 1992 although it is in the bundle which begins with a letter from the Procurator-Fiscal's Office from Detective Chief Superintendent Ogg, the 10th of April, 1996. I am sorry, I am corrected, it is from the Procurator-Fiscal to Chief Superintendent Ogg.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. CAMPBELL: This is a copy of a memorandum from the Fife Regional Reporter, Mr. Kelly dated the 29th of July, 1992 to the Director of Education and specifically for the attention of Mr. Sommerville which you have mentioned in your earlier evidence; have you seen this memorandum before? - I can't even read it, I am sorry.

Perhaps I could take you through it.

LORD CULLEN: If you have a point to make about it could you express what it is because I think the witness will have some difficulty following it on the imager.

MR. CAMPBELL: I think I will have to give a rough explanation to the witness.

LORD CULLEN: Perhaps if you could.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Perhaps if I could indicate to you before we read the specific points on this relating to the incident which was investigated by the police, an incident at Dunblane High School in the summer of 1992 when three young boys left that camp in the evening, do you remember that? - Yes, I do remember.

Do/

Do you remember being asked some questions about it; there is also reference to other concerns expressed by parents at the time but if we turn to the second page of the memorandum, particularly the first paragraph at the top of the second page. If you take it from me that reads as follows, the Regional Report Mr. Kelly said that "In the event the children came to no harm is no guarantee of children remaining unharmed should a similar event associated with this kind of summer camp managed in a light manner recur and I feel that the events of 29th June, 1992 in Dunblane in a sense serves a warning. If the kind of circumstances as described are allowed to continue without some kind of intervention, I consider that other children may be placed at risk. In like situations arising unchecked I fear that a tragedy to a child or children is almost waiting to happen" . Were you made aware by Mr. Sommerville of the Regional Reporter's concerns on this matter? - After this letter we actually closed the let of Mr. Hamilton, that was the finishing of his let, we told him that the let was no longer available, we felt we had reached the situation where we couldn't encourage him.

This was the last straw? - This is correct.

Just finally for the record do we see at the foot of that page that the memo was copied to Chief Superintendent Alexander Elder of Fife Constabulary, Western Division Headquarters, Dunfermine? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: When you had an opportunity to view the manner in which clubs were being operated by Mr. Hamilton did you form a view as to the discipline which he was able to exercise? - Discipline to me is actually something which should be happening whenever someone is teaching; everything went on very, very quickly, there was never any discipline required; if the children were kept busy that is the best way as far as there is any trouble, it just goes on. There didn't seem to me to be any strong discipline, it was just kept going.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: What options were open to you in your position in the Centre when you/you were given information such as that contained in Mr. Kelly's report? - Well, again I had discussions along with my seniors and we discussed the situation of who would give the go-ahead to close the facility off and tell him that the facility was no longer available. I think I wrote to him and said that he had the facility for a certain number of years and we felt that the facility was to be let in another area.

Were you able to take that decision on your own? - No, I got that from up top.

Who did you have to consult with? - Mr. Sommerville.

BY LORD CULLEN: Just one small point I think I asked you before about -- the name of the club. I think you said Lynburn went to the end? - Yes.

One of the letters we looked at dated the 18th September, 1992 and I won't ask for that to be shown anywhere but in the course of writing that Mr. Hamilton said that the club was later renamed as the Dunfermline Boys' Sports Club; is that a name that is known to you or not? - No, I always termed it Lynburn Gymnastics Club. Whether that was when he approached the parents but it was always known as Lynburn Gymnastics Club.

That letter was written after the let had come to an end? - Yes.

DEREK/

DEREK BAIN ANDERSON, Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: What is your occupation?

- Police Constable.

That is stationed at Linlithgow? - Yes.

What is your age? - 44.

For how long have you been a police officer? - 19 years.

You said that you were presently stationed at Linlithgow; were you stationed there between 1978 and 1990? - I was, yes.

During your time at Linlithgow did you come to know a Mrs. Haggar? - Yes, by neighbouring disputes, etc.

What sort of disputes? - Neighbouring disputes, that kind of thing.

Did you have cause to speak to her often? - Not myself often but officers at the station were regularly attending there.

Similarly while at Linlithgow did you have cause to deal with a Mrs. Janet Reilly? - Yes.

Why did you have cause to deal with her? - For a similar nature.

A neighbouring dispute? - Yes.

Did you have any dealings with either Mrs. Haggar or Mrs. Reilly in relation to Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

Are you aware of either Mrs. Haggar or Mrs. Reilly ever reporting a matter involving Thomas Hamilton and firearms? - Firearms -- I was aware of investigations, I think it involved Mrs. Haggar's son.

Can you say what that investigation was about? - Through our officers I believe it involved Mr. Hamilton but I had no actual dealings with/with the matter.

You didn't know of the subject matter that the complaint was about? - No.

And you didn't carry out any investigations? - No.

Did you have cause to deal with any other complaints against Mr. Hamilton? - No, apart from Mrs. Mowbray sent a letter to Mr. Dalziel which was forwarded.

Perhaps if you don't refer to names of anybody making a complaint; what was the nature of the complaint made on that occasion? - She was concerned about her boy attending a camp which was being held at Loch Lomond.

What was her concern? - I can't remember whether she had withdrawn the lad from the camp or had not let him go to the camp because she had heard stories about Mr. Hamilton.

Did she say what stories she had heard? - One story I can recall was that Mr. Hamilton had stood at the entrance to showers; I think this had been at Linlithgow Academy on the pretext that he was standing there to stop any trouble while the lads were having a shower.

Did the woman who made the complaint indicate where she had received this information? - I can't remember whether it was her son had been one of the youths or whether he had heard this amongst his friends.

Was that the whole nature of the complaint that was made? - Yes, because of the stories she was uneasy about sending her son to Loch Lomond and after having withdrawn the lad or not let him go she had been sent letters from Mr. Hamilton and I can recall being shown a letter from the Ombudsman.

Were/

3.50 p.m.

Were you aware of any other camps being run by Hamilton? - No.

What did you do in response to the complaints by this complainer? - Contacted initially Strathclyde. I thought Loch Lomond was covered by Strathclyde but I was informed that the island in question was just covered by Central Scotland and I telephoned Stirling Police who seemed to be well aware of the camp and well aware of Mr. Hamilton.

Did they say what they knew about Hamilton? - It is difficult thinking back but I am sure they said that the police were actually at the island at the time or had been at the island. The person I was talking to knew of the person and the camp.

Did you discuss with the police, Central Scotland Police, the complaint that had been made to you? - Yes, I passed on Mrs. Mowbray's concern and he seemed to be of the same opinion.

Did you take any further action in respect of the complaint? - Mrs. Mowbray's complaint was in letter form as far as I can remember which had been passed to Mr. Dalziel so I would have completed a memo to my senior officers with all the action taken after Mr. Dalziel informed of what action would be taken.

Did you speak to Mr. Hamilton? - No, Mr. Hamilton was at the camp at the time. Shortly after that the Academy Club got packed up. The Academy seemed to be aware and were trying to get Mr. Hamilton out of the Academy.

Just one last question. The complaint you referred to, can you remember when it was made? - Mrs. Mowbray's letter?

Yes? - I can't recall whether it was 1988 or 1989 but it was round about the May period, the start of the summer.

And how soon after that letter did you speak to Central Scotland Police? - The same day I think/think I spoke to Mrs. Mowbray.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: If I heard you correctly you told us you contacted Stirling Police about Hamilton after this particular complaint and they told you that they were well aware of Hamilton? - Yes.

What did you understand by that? - Of course I can't remember the exact words but I told him, it was a male, this person of Mrs. Mowbray's concern and also that specific item about standing at the entrance to the showers and also that generally Mrs. Mowbray had a bad feeling about Mr. Hamilton and the person seemed to back that up. Not by any specifics but seemed to be of the same opinion of Mr. Hamilton.

Who were you speaking to? - I can't recall. It was somebody at Stirling, Stirling Headquarters. I told them where the loch was and where the island was.

And the information you were giving came as no surprise to the person on the other end of the telephone? - Yes, the person seemed to be not at all surprised with this information.

The impression you had was that not only the person you were speaking to but the police in Stirling generally were well aware of Mr. Hamilton? - That was the impression I got from that individual. From that police officer.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: You indicated that Mrs. Haggar was a person who was known to you and also known to other officers in the Force. Can you indicate how it came about that you were aware of the involvement of her and other officers? - I really can't recall whether I am remembering this after the event or whether being aware of it at the time but thinking back there was something about an investigation with Mrs. Haggar that involved Mr. Hamilton. I am sorry, I can't be any more.....

Before that however I got the impression from the evidence which you gave in-chief that there was a certain knowledge of Mrs. Haggar amongst your colleagues? - Yes.

Can/

Can you tell us a little bit about the involvement which the police have had with Mrs. Haggar prior to this incident which we are looking at today? - In relation to this incident?

No, prior to? - Prior to? There was domestic matters. She stayed with, at one point.... do you want the name?

LORD CULLEN: Mr. Taylor, are we going into a string of events?

MR. TAYLOR: I don't wish to go into detail of any one occurrence. I would like the witness to tell me if he can generally comment.

LORD CULLEN: All right.

THE WITNESS: Okay. She stayed with a male on and off who would be occasionally put out of the house or would cause bother round about the place, trying to get back with her. I can remember that. Well, at least I had a couple of incidents like that. There seemed to be a continual..... I have dealt with several calls where she along with Janet Reilly would complain about another family who stayed above Janet Reilly when Mrs. Haggar used to visit Janet Reilly and also vice versa.

When you say vice versa, does that mean complaints from the other family about Mrs. Haggar and Mrs. Reilly? - Yes, they would complain about Mrs. Reilly and Mrs. Haggar causing an annoyance through drink, etc.

Was that drink on the part of Mrs. Haggar or drink on the part of the others? - Both Mrs. Haggar and Mrs. Reilly was drink related. The complaints against the person upstairs from Mrs. Reilly as far as I can recall were related to noise from children, etc. Household noise.

Are Mrs. Reilly and Mrs. Haggar reasonably well known to yourself and your colleagues? - Yes.

Moving on to one other topic. You indicated that the concern expressed by Mrs. Mowbray was that Mr. Hamilton had been standing at the entrance to the showers when children were having their/their showers. Is it possible that the concern was in relation to some other matter such as the removal or the requirement to have the children remove their tops while carrying on gymnastic exercises? - That may have been part of it. The thing that sticks in my memory was this standing at the showers which made the boys feel uneasy.

No re-examination.

DOUGLAS/

DOUGLAS GEORGE JEFFREY (40), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: Who do you work for? -
For the City of Edinburgh Council Community Education Service.

Where do you work for them? - In Edinburgh at 40
Torpichen Street.

What is involved in your employment as Community Education Officer? - My job title is Development Officer for Youth and Children's Work which requires me to work with voluntary organisations and youth work services in local government.

In the course of that work have you had cause to deal with voluntary organisations run by Thomas Hamilton? - I did.

When did you first have cause to deal with an organisation run by Hamilton? - In May of 1988.

In the course of some of the questions which I will be asking you that relate to complaints made by parents of children who attended these clubs, as far as possible if you could avoid using the names of the parents who made the complaints or the children to preserve their privacy? - Of course.

What was the nature of your involvement with the club run by Hamilton in 1988? - At that time I was the senior youth education worker in West Lothian in relation to youth and children's work development. My superior officer, Mr. David Sinclair, had received a complaint from a parent, I believe it was a phone call, and had also received a note of concern from a district councillor, Councillor James Clark. Mr. Sinclair asked me, in my capacity as worker working with youth work, to call in and visit the club that had recently become established in Linlithgow Academy.

Did he tell you who was running the club? - We just knew a single name, Mr. Hamilton. I was to ask for Mr. Hamilton when I visited the club.

Did/

Did you or the District Council, as they were then, have any information regarding Mr. Hamilton at that time? - None, apart from the material that he had circulated to the schools giving information about this new club that was being established in Linlithgow.

Did you have copies? - I did not at that time but I did very quickly after my visit.

When did you visit the club? - It was late May that year and it was a Tuesday evening because the club was only operating on Tuesdays.

Did you give Hamilton prior notice of your intention to attend? - No.

What did you see when you got there? - My recollection is somewhat.....it was eight years ago but I do recollect simply seeing Hamilton in a small school gym with about 30 young boys in what would be classified as PE kit.

What exactly were they wearing? - Shorts, I believe they had T shirts on and sandshoes.

What age were the boys? - Between 8 and 11.

What were they doing? - It was a football exercise in terms of running back and forward across the gym in terms of a training exercise.

Was there anything in what you saw that caused you concern? - Nothing outwardly in terms of what I saw caused me concern at that point.

What was the subject matter of the complaint you were investigating? - I was informed that the complaint was in relation to the summer camps that Hamilton was operating and the fact that a parent had signed up for that camp and had subsequently said to the son that he couldn't attend and that Mr. Hamilton was therefore seeking monies that were due to him in relation to the booking for this camp.

Did you discuss this with Hamilton when you/

you attended at this club on the 24th May? - I discussed with him the arrangement for the camps, the programme for the camps, the nature of the activities and the connection to parents at the camps.

And what response did he give in answer to your queries about how he ran his clubs? - The responses raised a question in my mind about the appropriateness for the age range of these boys.

When you say appropriateness, what do you mean by appropriateness? - In terms of it being offshore if you like, on an island on Loch Lomond with no access to parents and his only kind of connection would be telephone access to parents.

Did you form any impression of him when you spoke to him? - I was uneasy in his presence.

Why? - I have asked myself that question often since March of this year and I can only say it was some kind of hair tickling at the back of my neck as I have described it to colleagues since that point. It wasn't objective.

Was he hostile towards you when you attended at this club? - He was immediately defensive in relation to the fact that I was a representative of the Regional Council coming forward to ask questions about his club. He was immediately asking who had complained to me about him and whilst saying that he had no cause for concern about the Regional Council making an investigation, he was certainly defensive. I was a little taken aback.

Did you tell him who had complained? - Certainly not.

Did you tell him what the complaint was about? - Certainly not.

Were there any parents present at the club when you were there? - Not that I can recollect.

Were you aware of any parental involvement in the club in the Academy? - There was/was none. There was no indication of such when I visited and Mr. Hamilton indicated that it was his intention that there would be a parents committee formed because that was part of my questioning in relation to the overall management committee of such a club, the creation of a voluntary organisation.

So what were you asking him for? - Asking him about the details of his constitutional status, his involvement and the committee members of parents.

What did he say the constitution status was? - That he would be forming a committee because at that point in 1988 this was a club on a trial period basis as with other clubs in Central Scotland and that based on the success as he would determine at that point he would be moving forward to have a club committee established.

Why did you ask him about the constitution of the club? - Any organisation I deal with has charitable status and that is recognised by the Inland Revenue and it is that status that we recognise as a voluntary organisation within the local authority.

What is the significance of it being a voluntary organisation? - That it would have a constitution which indicated it was a democratic organisation and it involved more than one person and that it had connections perhaps to other national agencies, both in terms of boys clubs of Scotland or youth clubs or the national networks.

Did that make any difference in relation to getting lets of school premises? - Not at that time.

What was required in order to get a let of school premises at that time? - It was the authority's policy to make premises available as broadly as possible to the community and the only point of reference was a kind of register form which was signed to indicate that a certain proportion of members were under the age of 18.

Can I ask you please to look at document DLRC CE 62 which is document D1 within folder J(III). Have you seen this before? - Yes.

What/

What is it? - It is an application for use register and the terms for use of educational premises.

I see in the top left hand corner it has been date stamped as you see? - That is correct.

The date there is the 6th April, 1988? - Yes.

Is this all the information that someone requires to be registered as a youth group with the Regional Council as they then were? - Yes.

You see at the top there is a requirement to state the name of the applicant body and it has been filled in with "Linlithgow Boys Sports Club"? - Yes.

Do you investigate any of the clubs in respect of which a let is sought? - It was the practice of the Regional Council for lets to which no one had any prior knowledge of an applicant to make a visit in the same way as I did to Thomas Hamilton's club.

Was/

4.10 p.m.

Was it common for an application to be made in the name of the club rather than an individual? - Yes.

The second point is the aim of the body for the purpose of the let -- it is stated sports training; was that the kind of common purpose for which the let was sought? - Yes.

The next heading refers to officers of the applicant body; that is what you are referring to by the Constitution of the club? - The Constitution and its committee structure I was looking for information on.

Do you see that in reference to that? - It is said that the Chairman and the Secretary and Treasurer are to be quoted.

And the name given to the leader in charge is Thomas W. Hamilton? - Yes.

To whom would that form be sent? - At that time it would have been sent to the Letting Department of the Education Department in Edinburgh.

What would they do with it? - They would have approved the let and they would have sent that form for registration as a youth group to the Community Education Service who would have sent it out to the area office for approval by the local area or for a visitation to take place.

You said there "to get registration as a youth group"; is it necessary to be registered as a youth group to get the letting of local authority premises? - No, it is simply a means of getting cheaper, less costly access to educational premises.

What are the criteria for registration? - It is 75 per cent of the constituent members are under the age of 18.

You referred to approval or a visitation to be made; in what circumstances would simple approval be given? - If the applicant was already known to community education perhaps as an ordinary employee.

If/

If a visit was to be made when would that take place?
- Normally before it was signed as a registered youth organisation.

Would that be a visit to the club or a visit to the individual in charge of it? - Usually the club where we would expect to meet the individuals who were responsible for running the project.

Can you tell in this form whether or not a visit took place or whether it was approved? - In this particular situation an administrative hiccup had occurred and it had been sent before it had been seen by the West Lothian Office hence I was receiving a request to make a visit immediately on receipt of the application.

I think that the next page of that document is headed "Lothian Regional Council" and in the top right-hand corner "Permit 2358"? - Yes.

Is that what is granted in response to the first form? - That is correct.

Turning to the discussion with Mr. Hamilton when you visited him in May, 1988 did you discuss with him his activities with youth groups physically? - I think I got information from him about his other clubs; I had known that he was operating in Dunfermline, in Stirling.

Did he say whether he ran any summer camps? - Yes, he gave me information about summer camps as well.

After you had met him did you actually take any steps to verify what he told you about these clubs and summer camps? - Yes, I did indeed.

What did you do? - For the rest of that week I followed up the prospectus that he gave me and he subsequently sent me that week further information and he told me.....he had indicated he had been a warranted Scout Leader and I made contact with the Scout Association in Edinburgh.

Can you remember who you spoke to in the Scout Association? - Mr. Alan Willoughby.

What/

What did you ask him? - Whether or not Thomas Hamilton was a warranted Scout Leader.

Did the Scout Association provide you with that information? - He informed me that his warrant had been removed.

Did they say when? - No.

What inference did you draw from the fact the warrant had been withdrawn? - That an established organisation like the Scouts wouldn't remove a warrant for trivial reasons and the application was subsequently viewed with a degree of concern and it should be passed on to my superiors.

When did you make your enquiry of the Scout Association? - It was that week, the week of that visit in May, 1988.

Did you make any report of your findings after your visit? - I made a verbal report to my superior, Mr. David Sinclair, at the end of that week.

After your visit did you receive any correspondence from Hamilton? - I continued to receive correspondence from Mr. Hamilton. I received a bundle of payment papers almost within 24 hours of my visit which I found to be unusual in the circumstances. It was a very detailed letter indicating aspects of his programme and what he intended to be doing, photographs of the boys at the previous camps, a copy of a letter indicating that he had a let from Central Regional Council which hadn't been approved and he had appealed to the Ombudsman and the Ombudsman had found in his favour and also a copy of the letter to his local M.P.

Could you look at the document DMRC CE 31 which is D2 within folder J(III); is that the letter that you received? - It is indeed.

And you see in the third paragraph of that letter there is a reference to the formation of a committee? - Yes.

And/

And Hamilton states that he doesn't wish to rush forming a committee? - Yes.

Were you happy with that answer to your query? - No.

Why not? - I would expect that an organisation of this nature to be operational involving parents and the local community far before this point in its history.

Again you said that the letter goes on in some detail and raises various matters; were you aware of any letters sent by Hamilton as a result of your visit to the club? - Yes, there were subsequent letters came in which indicated that he found my visit peculiar and he subsequently talked about..... found out who had complained about him.

And I refer you to Document DMRC CE4 which is D3 within the folder J(III); do you recognise that letter? - Yes, I do indeed.

Did you receive that? - I did.

You see it is a letter dated the 26th May, 1988? - Yes.

You see in the third paragraph Hamilton states that he discovered that a complaint was made and he regards you as having him checked out? - No complaint had been made directly to me, I was investigating on behalf of the authority that had received the complaint.

And the complaint was what you referred to regarding financing? - Yes.

And payments? - Yes.

Did that complainer make any other complaints to you about the way that her child was treated? - No.

Did you draw any conclusions from the terms of this letter? - My conclusions were both based on correspondence so that I was being..... There was a force coming from this person that was trying to prevent my further involvement, letters from/

from the Ombudsman, letters from the MP, indicating that this person had been checked and was approved and was okay, his own checking out to find out who had been complaining about him and making subsequent comments about the complaints he was dealing with which I found out of the ordinary within my previous experience in working in the organisation.

Did you do anything as a result of that? - I completed my investigations that week having spoken to Mr. Baxter in Dunfermline; I spoke with Mr. Beaton of the Boys' Clubs of Scotland; again out of interest as I made telephone contact with these people they were saying "I would rather speak to you in person about this matter rather than over the phone".

Why do you think they were saying that? - They were preferring to say to me face-to-face their concerns about this man's clubs.

You said you made enquiries of the Boys' Clubs of Scotland; what information were they able to provide you with? - Certainly in my conversation with Mr. Hamilton that Tuesday night I asked him about insurance cover for the club operating there and he indicated that he didn't feel the need for insurance at that time and I asked him whether he was affiliated to a national agency which would potentially have given him a reduced insurance rate for the activities he described; he indicated he wasn't likely to have any affiliation to such a body which surprised me; as I was aware of the organisation, the Boys' Club of Scotland, and this was an organisation called the Boys' Sports Clubs I made contact with Mr. Les Beaton and asked about him and he invited me to meet with him face-to-face and gave me information that suggested that he had some concerns about an organisation calling themselves the Boys' Sports Club which was not, in actual fact, boys' clubs under this affiliated term.

What was his concern? - There seemed to be a range of concerns about the nature and range of activities that had gone on in the previous clubs and was not prepared to back this club to me in terms of his knowledge of it.

Could you be a bit more specific about what his concerns were? - Again it was not a specific/specific concern, it was more uneasiness in terms of the operation and in terms of his refusal to be connected to any organisation larger than the range of different clubs operated by Mr. Hamilton.

Did Mr. Beaton of the Boys' Clubs say that he had received intimation of any concerns regarding Hamilton? - I received a copy in that discussion of a letter which had been received from Mr. Phinn who, I believe, was involved with the Boys' Clubs of Scotland which gave again details of some uneasiness rather than specific concerns.

SIXTH DAY.

DOUGLAS GEORGE JEFFREY,

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: You said yesterday afternoon that you made enquiries of Mr. Beaton at the Boys' Club of Scotland. Did you make any other enquiries regarding Hamilton? - I spoke to Mr. Baxter of Fife Regional Council in Dunfermline.

What made you approach Mr. Baxter for information? - The fact that there was a club of a similar type in operation in Woodmill Centre.

How were you aware of that club's existence? - By information that Hamilton himself had supplied.

What was Mr. Baxter able to tell you? - Virtually it was exactly the same story as was emerging throughout the rest of that week when I was talking to people. It was a situation of unease about the approaches and activities with the fact that the person that I was told would be helping in the Linlithgow Club was no longer operating, the woman was no longer operating in the Dunfermline Club which raised my suspicions further.

Did Mr. Baxter indicate whether he had any complaints regarding Hamilton? - He indicated that there had been some complaints around aspects of a camp which had been investigated by our Rights Office in Dunfermline.

Were you aware prior to that that there had been camps run by Hamilton? - Oh, yes.

Did you make any other enquiries? - I believe I spoke on the phone..... my memory fails me in terms of the name of the person in Central Region's Youth and Community Service.

What were you asking them? - Basically their knowledge of Hamilton and his activities. Basically we had been given information about the Ombudsman's/

Ombudsman's investigation. That was another piece of information that I did go and get, a copy of the Ombudsman's final report into Central Regional Council's actions and findings.

What was the purpose in obtaining that report? - That it struck me that we were potentially going to be in a similar situation in that we had unsubstantiated to an extent innuendo and unhappiness rather than objective details that we could take action on and I felt it was important to get, in terms of the papers that I could hand on to my superiors, detail of the Ombudsman's findings.

Were these all the enquiries you made or were there others? - That was the extent in that week.

What did you do with the information you had obtained? - I met with my senior officer, Mr. David Sinclair, and went through in some detail my findings from discussions with colleagues in other Regions and indicated my professional concerns about the club and its operation. Mr. Sinclair then sent a note to the head of the Community Education Service in Lothian at that time.

What was the purpose of that note? - To inform the senior officer of our concerns and to raise with him the potential for ensuring that Hamilton would not operate further in Linlithgow Academy.

Can I ask you please to look at Document DLR3/CE/7/1. That is Document D5 in Volume J(III). Do you recognise that? - I do indeed. That is the document that was sent as a result of my detailed conversation with David Sinclair.

Do you see in the first paragraph there Mr. Sinclair narrates that you have inspected the club and then he goes on to make certain reports in respect of it? - Yes.

He first notes that he had no assistance in running the club. Do you see that? - Yes, I do.

Do you see over the page at Point 7 in sub-paragraph (a) there is reference to the fact that/that Hamilton's warrant had been withdrawn by the Scouts? - That is correct.

And that was on the basis of information which you had received from Mr. Willoughby? - That is correct.

And in sub-paragraph (c) there is a reference to the Ombudsman's report. Do you see that? - Yes, I do.

And the reference there is to the effect that Hamilton, as it is put, "survived the scrutiny" of the Ombudsman's report in that connection? - Yes, indeed. Certainly in my conversation with staff from Central Region certainly indicated that their Legal Department had a view that they could not make further comment but they had, as it says there, "severe reservation" and they would not recommend his clubs to me.

You see on the third page of that letter at the foot of the page there is a recommendation that the Boys' Club is deregistered forthwith. Do you see that? - Yes, indeed.

And I think there are four reasons given. The first is the ratio of leader to members and the second is that there was no Parental Committee? - Yes.

The third is that other Regions do not or cannot recommend Hamilton's clubs. The fourth is that Hamilton is not affiliated to the Boys' Club of Scotland and the fifth is that there is no insurance. Were these all matters that you discussed at your meeting with Mr. Sinclair? - They are indeed.

Were there any other reasons for you reaching the view that the let should be discontinued? - No, these were the reasons that we were putting forward.

I referred yesterday to correspondence you received from Hamilton regarding your investigations of the complaint that was made to you. Do you recall that? - I do indeed.

Do you recall Hamilton copying to you his correspondence/correspondence with the woman who had made the complaint? - No. Sorry, yes, he did copy a letter that he had sent in relation to that complainant.

Can I ask you please to look at Document D4 of Volume J(III) which is DLRC/CE/5. Do you recognise that? - This is the first letter that I received from Hamilton. It was just immediately after my visit to him.

Is that letter addressed to you? - It is indeed.

BY LORD CULLEN: What is the date of that letter please? - 25th May 1988.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: Can I ask you please to look at Document Reference DLRC/CE/5. The reference for that is D4 of J(III). Do you recognise that? - Yes.

Is the first page of that a handwritten letter to you from Mr. Hamilton? - No, the first page of this is a letter to the person who made the original complaint.

Perhaps I should have my copy put on to the imager to make it easier. The first page please? Can you see the top of the page? Do you recognise that document? - Yes, I do.

Is that a letter received by you? - It is indeed.

From Thomas Hamilton? - On the 31st May.

Can we see the second page of that document please? Was that a letter attached to the handwritten letter we have just seen? - It was.

And did you have a chance to consider that letter when you received it? - Yes.

And without going into the tone of that letter, the letter is sent to the woman who had complained objecting to the fact that she had complained? - That is correct.

I think if you look at the very foot of the/letter, the last paragraph, Hamilton threatened her there that he will seek recovery of costs from her? - It was in my view an intimidatory letter.

Did the fact that Hamilton had written such an intimidatory letter influence your deliberations on the question of whether he should have a let of the school? - It was my opinion that such an approach to parents was not warranted and certainly influenced me in my view of this person being an appropriate person to use school premises.

LORD CULLEN: Mr. Lake, can I be clear. You referred a moment ago to the letter from Mr. Hamilton which is supposed to be the first one after the visit and apparently dated the 25th May. What is the number of that letter?

MR. LAKE: The two references for that are D2 in Volume J(III) and the alternative reference is DLRC/CE/3/1.

LORD CULLEN: Thank you, yes.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: What action did you take in respect of Hamilton' let after your enquiries? - To an extent my actions were at a conclusion at that point. I had conducted the investigation as requested by Mr. Sinclair and reported to him.

Are you aware of what was done in relation to the let? - My understanding was that the decisions were that we were in a similar position potentially to Central Regional Council and whilst we had the concerns raised in the four points in David Sinclair's letter, we did not have enough hard evidence to move to making a withdrawal of the let. It was at that point only a matter of a couple of weeks before the end of the school term and we were of the opinion that we in the Community Education Service required full use of Linlithgow Academy for the term after that summer for our own Community Education Evening Class programme.

So what was the effect of that? - That there would not be available school gym accommodation for Mr. Hamilton's club.

And/

And that would be in the following year? - In the September of 1988.

So is it correct to say although you didn't cancel the let you were able to make sure he didn't gain a let for the next year? - At the point at the end of my investigations that was our intention.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: One of the remits of this Inquiry is in relation to the vetting of those involved in the supervision of under 18s. You have obviously worked in this area for most of your career presumably? - Entirely, yes.

Clearly you had a gut feeling about Hamilton and you took an individual initiative but am I right in thinking there was no protocol as such within the Region about vetting or going about checking of prospective applicants for let of school premises? - That is correct.

You will recall in evidence-in-chief it was suggested to you that the fact that someone was using school premises of itself gave them an aura of respectability which they might not otherwise have. Maybe it wasn't you. Maybe it was a previous witness. Is it perhaps the fact that if they are using local authority premises parents may have an understanding that such people have the approval of the local authority? Could that be a legitimate understanding of parents, do you think? - It would not be my interpretation, no.

I know but you could understand parents who felt that since it was in school premises it somehow had the imprimatur to some extent of the local authority? - I can see what you are saying but I would not necessarily accept it.

Oh, I know you wouldn't accept it. Even on the question of insurance, clearly in such clubs an accident could happen quite easily and at that time there was no requirement for those letting school premises to even exhibit a certificate to show that they had public liability insurance? - That is correct.

Indeed, there was no vetting process at all in place? - At that time.

Is/

Is there a vetting process in place now? - There are procedures which we have put in place but they are not detailed as of yet. There are detailed discussions ongoing at the present moment in Edinburgh and work on detailed procedures for working out use of educational premises, including school lets.

But/

10.20 a.m.

But there was no general protocol which had been put together for the assistance of local authorities? - No.

Do you think such a general protocol might be of use to local authorities? - I think it would be of certain use to local authorities and to volunteer organisations, legitimate volunteer organisations, all of whom wish to ensure that the best interests of children and young people who use the services are maintained.

Might it therefore be a possibility, as far as local authority premises are concerned for a recommendation to have a general protocol to assist local authorities? - It would indeed.

And that assistance, one of the requirements might be to exhibit, prior to the let, a certificate of insurance? - That would be an indication of an organisation prepared to offer protection to the staff and volunteers for young people.

You also mentioned concerns that there was no parent committee as such, no parental involvement; again would it be of use if that matter was investigated before a let was granted? - Yes, I think parents and interested adults in the community, not necessarily only parents.

I think as far as you were concerned there was no involvement of parents at all in the Linlithgow enterprise? - That is correct.

Mr. Jeffrey, you spoke in evidence- in-chief of your name coming up I understand, and your involvement in this Inquiry is looking into the whole matter; is there anything you wish to assist the Inquiry with in terms of vetting procedures other than what I have asked you? - Since my investigations, my job duties since I have been involved in the development of training in child protection procedures with the community education staff both full time and part-time, that work has led me to contribute to a major submission to Lord Cullen, a written/written submission based on national agencies and Scottish wide agencies and from ourselves in terms of the local authority we contribute a major written submission in terms of possible ways forward in working with children.

BY LORD CULLEN: In what particular name has that submission been made or has it to be made? - It has yet to be made, it is in the final stages of draft under the name of Scottish Education Council for Voluntary Youth Organisations.

You have been asked some questions about procedures for vetting arrangements being made for these lets; do I take it that local authorities such as those you have been involved with will have a procedure for vetting those who are employed or to be employed by them? - Every employee through a local authority who has substantial access to children is deemed to be, under terms of the guidance of the Scottish Office, under reference to the Scottish Crime Records Office checks. None of the volunteer organisation staff are covered by those and there are differences in approach between the Departments of the same authority because guidance comes from the Social Work group of the Social Work Department and the Scottish Office Education Department.

At the moment authorities have access to records which are not available to voluntary organisations? - That is correct.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. GIBB: In terms of interviewing someone before they take a let is that part of the consideration being given to the submission to the Inquiry as to a number of more detailed steps that could be taken to investigate someone's background and satisfy yourself? - Yes, the submission is looking at the more detailed use of volunteers in total to ensure that certain people who would have access to children would not have unsupervised access immediately; in order for there to be continual development someone could be monitored rather than go immediately unsupervised to have access to children.

Clearly you have concerns right from the outset but then you had your concern about the Ombudsman's involvement and you thought you might be going/going down the same route? - We had exactly the same concerns as Central Region and certainly from the correspondence from Mr. Hamilton it was likely he would take this to the Ombudsman which he did do eventually after his let was cancelled but the Ombudsman held in Lothian Region's favour at that time.

BY LORD CULLEN: Does your submission cover the situation where there is more than one local authority that might be involved; for example, a let is taken at Linlithgow Academy but the organisers have a trip to Loch Lomond where something is taking place, some excursion; is there some contemplation of co-ordination between different authorities where activities might take place in different areas? - In my opinion there should be some Scottish, if not UK wide, register of people involved with young people operating in transferring information across local authority boundaries; it was difficult enough before the 1st April but it is going to be more difficult now.

I was thinking in particular, for instance, monitoring where you have an activity of an organisation in more than one local authority area; you would need co-ordination of some sort so you are getting the full picture? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. GIBB: Is it contemplated at all, I appreciate I am pre-judging the submission which I have no involvement in, that the local authority might have any involvement in vetting those who will be involved with young people but not necessarily using local authority premises -- for instance, using church halls or premises which are not subject to the control of the local authority? - It would not be my view that the local authority had a role to play in that respect -- it is not local authority premises and a local authority service; I think that the view of the submission is that there are potential parent bodies or umbrella organisations within the voluntary sector that could have a part to play in such organisations; I wouldn't wish to be involved in discussions about either the Scouts group or the Boys Brigade company in the whole of the City of Edinburgh, I am one person.

It might be perhaps it is possible to distinguish what one might call a mainstream organisation/organisation but here we have a man who was certainly not a mainstream organisation; there must be people who are not under the Scottish Association of Boys Clubs and it might be if they had no mainstream organisation it would be difficult for them.....? - In every community in Scotland there are a number of adults who wish, for the best reasons, to give their services to support young people through very difficult times in view of their transition from childhood to adulthood; I wouldn't want these people, who give their time freely and to the benefit of the community, to be deterred from that work, that is a concern of mine, that we have an over-reaction with people serving young people being suitable rather than simply protecting them.

Had you any involvement at all with the question of school security, either in your present post or in another post? - None.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: You said that Hamilton made a complaint to the Ombudsman in relation to the cancellation of his let, of which you were responsible; when was that complaint made? - It is my understanding and I was peripherally involved -- this happened one year after I carried out the initial investigation into Hamilton's clubs in Linlithgow; despite our best efforts in June, 1988 Hamilton continued with that let at Linlithgow Academy into the next year, into 1989; by this time I had left my job at West Lothian and was now working in Headquarters of the Educational Department with a regional remit in respect of Bathgate Community Education Office and there was an incident report in 1989 where Hamilton had been technically, I believe, assaulted in terms of a concoction of suncream oil thrown at him; I received a report about Linlithgow Academy and I also received Press cuttings indicating that incident; in the Press cuttings it was acknowledged that there was a police investigation into the activities of the camps in Loch Lomond the previous summer; when passing that information on to my superiors within the Education Department a decision was taken to cancel the let at this point because there was a police investigation into Mr. Hamilton.

So the assault that you have been referring/referring to, that took place in the context of one of the clubs run within the local authority premises? - That took place in Linlithgow Academy almost one year on from when I conducted my initial investigation.

You said you carried out your initial investigation in about May? - May, 1988.

So this would have happened in May, 1989? - Yes, May, June, 1989.

So when you said that the community education programme had taken on the let of the school that wasn't that same time? - It was my understanding that at that time we had programmed Linlithgow Academy to the full; however, it would appear there was an hour left which was not programmed which Mr. Hamilton got and continued to operate his club from.

So he was operating the club continually up until May, 1989? - Presumably from August, September, 1988.

When was the decision actually taken to terminate the let? - In April, June 1989 when I received the information from the Press cuttings.

And there was information in the Press cuttings that led to the termination rather than what you had uncovered previously? - That is correct.

When did Hamilton make a complaint to the Ombudsman? - I understand it was thereafter in terms of his complaints about the authorities cancelling his let.

What was his complaint in relation to the cancellation? - That he had not had an opportunity to put forward his side of the case.

What did the Ombudsman do in relation to that complaint? - I didn't see any details of the Ombudsman's finding; my only understanding is that he found in Lothian's favour.

Was there any subsequent lettings to Hamilton? - No.

MARGARET/

MARGARET ALAND, Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: You are a Social Worker? - Yes.

You work within the Balfron office of Stirling Council?
- Yes.

Before the change in local government what authority did you work with? - Central Region.

In the same office? - Yes.

What age are you now? - 46.

How long have you been qualified in Social Work? -
16 years.

Have you been working as a social worker throughout that period? - Yes.

I think you became involved as one of the liaison teams to tell families of the deceased children about the death of their children? - Yes.

Were you teamed up with two police officers for that exercise? - Yes.

And did you deal with one family only? - Yes.

When were you first brought along to the school? - Before going into the school we were sent first of all to a house where the parents were and then we were told to go to the house on the other side of the road and I think it was about one o'clock we were taken up to the school.

So you must have been at one of the houses at 11 o'clock? - Yes, just after 11.

And then about one o'clock up to the school? - Yes.

While you were in the second of the houses was there a feeling of anxiety, of concern rather, that not enough information was being conveyed? - There was certain concern, I think there/there was a lot of anxiety and I think people were quite honestly stunned; I presume if the information was available we would be given it.

How long do you reckon it was that the group of Primary 1 families spent in the second house? - I can't say, I was aware when we were in the other house that we saw transport, minibuses, taking them up to the school.

Were you not actually in the second house? - When I arrived at the school my colleague and I went to the police cordon and we were directed to go into the white house which I think was called Rockvane; when we arrived there we met up with the rest of our team; I think it was Detective Sergeant Moffat advised us that the parents were in the house and directed us to go to the house on the other side of the road where we waited together with the nurses and psychologists there.

And then were a group of Primary 1 parents brought into that house? - No.

At no stage? - No, not that I am aware of.

So I had better go back to the starting point; when you arrived about 11 o'clock you are met by a number of colleagues, is that right, your own colleagues? - Well, I travelled with one colleague from Callander to Dunblane; when we arrived we walked up to the school, the cordon was there, there was a police on duty and we identified ourselves and he advised us to go to the white house which I think half the Primary 1 parents had been directed to.

Would you recognise the house in a photograph if you saw it? - Yes, I think so.

10.40 a.m.

I wonder if you would look at R3, which will be put on an imager and shown on a screen to you. Now, do you see in that photograph the house you went to when you first arrived? - It would be the house -- I can't see it entirely. It is the one in front of the janitor's house.

Can we come down that photograph a bit -- or is that it? Can you go over to the imager please and point to roughly where the house is that you were in? - It would be this house here.

So that is on the right-hand side of the road as you look at the photograph? - Yes.

And that was about 11 o'clock? - Just after 11.

Now, can you point to the house where you understand the parents were -- that is beside it? - No, the same house.

So that is the house you go to at first? - At first, but we were quickly redirected to the other house.

And which is the one you were redirected to? - That one there.

And when you went over there it was professional people and medical people that were there? - Yes.

Roughly what time was that? - I think it would be roughly about 12 o'clock.

Could you sit down again please? When did you first, or when were you first in the presence of parents of the children in that particular house? - I wasn't.

Not at any stage? - No.

So you were aware of parents being taken by bus up to the staff accomodation in the school? - Yes.

And where did you go at that stage? - We were/were escorted up into the school.

Now, what happened at the school? - When we arrived at the school we were shown into a classroom, and there were police officers and social workers present. And I think it was round about half past 1 or quarter to 2, or between that time, there was a briefing, and we were advised at that point there was 18 fatalities, and the parents at that point didn't know who had been killed, and that there had been problems with identification, and they were planning to draw up teams of three for each family.

And how long did it take to assemble the teams? - It didn't take very long at all, because we had given our names in. It was just a matter of matching up the names.

And is it after that you first meet the parents that you have to convey this information to? - Yes.

Now, what time was it that you first met the parents that you had to deal with? - To the best of my recollection it was 3.30.

Sorry? - 3.30.

Before you ever met them? - Yes.

Now, between 2 o'clock, say, just after the time you were briefed, and 3.30, what was happening? - I think it would be round about 2 o'clock the first teams were called out. The process seemed to go fairly quickly.

Round about what time, sorry -- I missed that? - It would be between quarter to 2 and 2 o'clock the first teams left to see the families. Initially it went quite quickly, but then it slowed down and I was -- our team was the last team to leave the room.

This is a classroom that all the professional people are sitting in -- or the police officers, rather, and the social workers? - Yes.

At any stage while you were there were you checking the time? - Yes.

By/

By your watch or clock or what? - I wasn't wearing a watch that day. There was a clock in the classroom, and my colleague in the office, Marie Sinclair, had the second-last family to be seen. So she and I naturally were together, and I can recall after 3 o'clock we were both sharing anxiety, naturally, about the task we had in hand, and also the fact that time was marching on.

She and the officer she was with left the room before you? - Yes.

Can you tell me what time that was? - It was a few minutes before we left.

And what time did you leave the room? - I can't be exact. I know that I saw the family at 3.30. I don't know whether that was because I looked at the clock in the classroom or I looked at the clock in the staff room when we arrived in the staff room; because our family was the last family we actually saw the family in the staff room, we didn't need to take them through to another room.

Were you aware, or are you aware now, of having checked the time at all on the clock? - Yes.

At what times did you do that? - I was aware at quarter to 2 we heard how many fatalities there had been, and the fact that the parents had not been told. That is fixed in my mind.

Did you check the clock at any other time between then and half past 3? - Yes, around -- it was after 3 o'clock my colleague Marie Sinclair and myself -- we talked and shared our anxieties about the fact it was now after 3 o'clock and we hadn't seen the families.

And that was after 3 on a clock in the classroom, was it? - Well, it was also by my colleague Marie Sinclair's watch.

But was there indeed a clock in the....?
- There was a clock in the classroom.

So you never actually had to leave the classroom to carry out the task you had, you did it in that classroom? - No, no, sorry. The other workers/workers had to leave the classroom, go to the staff room, ask the family to come with them, and then escort them to a private room where they could give them the news. Because our family was the last family we walked to the staff room and saw the family in the staff room.

In the staff room -- right. Now, who were the police officers who were with you? - P.C. Pearson and P.C. Clair.

How long do you reckon you spent in the staff room? - Not more than 20 minutes.

And where did you go to after that? - The family -- we separated, because the family had arrived in two separate cars. They did not wish to drive home and P.C. Pearson arranged for transport, and accompanied them home. On the way home he dropped P.C. Clair off to collect one of the cars, and he dropped myself off to get the other car, the family car, to drive up to the family house.

And who actually took both parents home? - P.C. Pearson.

So they remained in the same car as it left the school? - Yes.

And each of the other two of you drove their car? - Yes. We were dropped off by P.C. Pearson, who had the family in the car.

How far was it home? - I would say no more than five minutes, but in Dunblane at the moment there is roadworks over a bridge, and you can get held up at the traffic lights.

Do you know what time the family got home? - I couldn't be sure, but I know when I got into the family car the clock was round about 4 o'clock.

Are you conscious of any particular problem in locating the cars or making arrangements for getting the car home?
- I think there was a slight delay in getting the car. At that time P.C. Clair and myself, because we were in the staff room, we were able to make tea for the family, a cup of tea for the family. When they finished that we left.

So/

So when you say "difficulty", was that in relation to getting a car that would come to the staff room and take you home?
- Yes.

No problem in actually identifying or locating the other two cars or making any particular arrangements in regard to them?
- No. The parents were able to give us the exact location of them and the registration numbers.

And Pearson was able to drive to where these cars were? - Yes. It was on the way to the family's home.

And were the cars parked in Old Doune Road? - No.
One was parked -- I don't know the name of the road, but it is just off the main road near Tesco's, and the other car was parked in Tesco's car park.

Now, do you know why there was a delay in you being put in contact with the family you were to deal with? - I think there was four social workers left at half past 2. Two went between half past 2 and 20 to 3, which left two of us in the classroom. My recollection is that someone at some point went into the classroom and said words to the effect that there was a problem with accommodation, and they were trying to remedy it as soon as possible.

And that was at what time? - I can't really say. It was after the other two social workers left, and went to see their families, so it was after quarter to 3.

Once the other two social workers had gone and there were only two of you left would I be right in drawing a conclusion that there must have been two families in one staff room and two social workers in a classroom? - Yes.

And therefore two rooms available and two families to be told? - Yes -- I hadn't thought of that at the time.

But that is how you imagine, at least, or conclude the situation must have been by that time?

- Well, I know that the two families were sitting in the staff room and the two social workers were sitting/sitting in the classroom.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Is it Mrs. Aland or Alland? - Aland.

Since the events of that terrible day I think you have continued to be in contact with the family that you were assigned to? - Yes.

And without going into any details have you also had some contact and communication with the family groups as a whole? - Yes.

Can you help us with this: everybody appreciates that all of those involved on that day were operating under great strain in the most terrible circumstances, but have you become aware that the families were deeply unhappy about the way in which they were treated that day? - I can only speak about the family that I liaised with. They certainly have made it clear to myself and the police officers that they were very unhappy about the delay, and the reason for the delay in being told news of their child. The feedback I have had since then is that since being told they feel the level of support offered to them was appropriate.

Yes. I think there is no complaint in relation to support since then, nothing but praise, but so far as the events of the day themselves are concerned, do I understand, at least so far as the family you are concerned with, there is considerable concern about the delay in giving the information to that family about the death of their child? - Yes. I have been more aware of that since the Inquiry started.

Have you been made aware of any concern relating to the giving of information about what has happened to a child to persons other than the child's parents, in advance of giving that information to the parents themselves? - I am sorry, I don't understand the question.

It is a very bad question. I will try it again. Have you become aware of a deep unhappiness about the events of that day, and in particular the fact that information about a child was given to other persons before that information was given to the child's parents? - I have been aware of it in one/one case, but I think it happened more.

Are you aware of any concern relating to a delay in giving information to the parents of injured children, is that a matter really outwith your knowledge? - I couldn't comment on that. I only dealt with my own parents.

Given your participation in that day's events and your qualification as a social worker, can you help us with any lessons that might be learned should, heaven forbid, some similar tragedy occurred elsewhere -- I am thinking particularly in terms of how to deal with those most affected by the events? - I think if I do -- I wasn't involved in -- I didn't know what was happening, except from the briefing, but I think with hindsight an important factor is -- I think the setting up of the police and Social Work team is a positive thing. I feel that that worked well, and was able to cover a variety of issues for the parents; but I thought it would have been better had the parents been told earlier. I don't know whether that was possible or not, but they should be told as soon as possible.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: Can you tell me, was there an officer who appeared to be in charge of the line of communication to the parents, or was there anyone apparently with that specific task on the day? - I couldn't comment on that. We were waiting in the classroom and knew what our task was, and I wasn't aware of what other people were doing.

Who did the briefing, can you remember? - I honestly can't remember the name. I know that D.S. Moffat was there and Chief Inspector Hughes, and I think it was Superintendent Holden.

Yes, but did you have any further dealings with Superintendent Holden other than the briefing? - On the day?

On the day? - No.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: I take it that you would agree that breaking news about tragic death such as occurred on the 13th is a matter which requires a degree of sensitivity? - Yes.

And/

And would it be fair to say that some thought has to be given as to what is to be said to the parents, how it is to be said, and the circumstances in which -- sorry, the surroundings in which the news is to be broken? - Yes.

And it would be appropriate, would it not, for there to be appropriate support given to the parents? - Yes.

Would you agree with the proposition that the news ought to be broken to the parents as privately as is possible? - Yes.

It wouldn't be good practice, for example, to read out a list in a large assembled company? - No.

And is it also appropriate that some time must be spent with the parents after the news has been broken, in order to discuss the issues which arise with them? - Yes, if that is what the parents wish. I think it should be offered.

And on the occasion which you unfortunately had to deal with on the 13th March, you told us in your evidence-in-chief that a variety of issues had arisen with the parents which you were able to deal with because of the creation of the liaison teams. Approximately how long did it take to discuss these issues? - I think it was an ongoing process, and when we took the family home we spent some time with them in the house and then we left them, with the understanding we would be back later, and take them into the hospital to see their child; and then from then on we had daily contact, and it was an ongoing process.

And/

11.00 a.m.

And did that involve yourself and the police officers as well? - In the first day it was the three of us. Thereafter it was P.C. Pearson and myself.

And have you continued in contact with the parents up until the present time? - Yes.

I think on the day in question there was a bit of a delay in obtaining a car to take the parents home? - I was aware of P.C. Pearson leaving the room to get transport. P.C. Fair and myself made the family a cup of tea and I couldn't honestly say how long after that it was that the car was available.

If it was P.C. Pearson's recollection that it took him approximately 20 minutes to go and collect a car and come back, would you agree with that? - I wouldn't have thought it was as long as that.

Approximately how long would have elapsed before P.C. Pearson left to collect the car after you had broken the news to the parents? - It was quite quickly.

Would a period of time in the order of 20 or 25 minutes accord with your recollection? - It would be. On the day when we told the parents every minute seemed to be a long time and looking back probably he left after about five minutes to get the car and my recollection is that the interview didn't last more than 20 minutes so it was probably 15 or 20 minutes I would have said.

Do you recall the mother of the child at any point commenting that the time was now 3.30 and that she had been there since about 10.30 that morning? - They commented on the wait. I can't honestly say I remember her saying it was 3.30 but my recollection is that it was 3.30.

And am I right in thinking that all five of you as it would be travelled in the one car at first? - Yes.

Were there still people milling about the/

the school at that point? - Yes.

Did that cause any delay in exiting from the school? -
No.

And your recollection is that it was in the order of 4 o'clock when you reached the parents' house? - Yes.

Can you say when you left the house? - It would be an approximate figure. I think we were there about half an hour.

So that would be approximately 4.30 you would have left the house? - Approximately, yes.

Was there any particular reason why you left at about 4.30? - I think the team felt that the parents needed time to themselves. They were all so anxious to go to the hospital to see their child and we were returning to the primary school to find out what arrangements had been made. Before we left, P.C. Pearson telephoned the family GP and asked them to visit at the family's request.

Can you recall if the family was expecting a visit from relatives? - Yes, the grandparents were travelling from England.

And can you recall what time it was estimated that they might arrive? - They were expected to arrive around 5.30.

Is it a possibility that discussions which you had with the parents in the staffroom would have commenced at about 2.45 or 2.50 that day? - No.

You just don't admit to that possibility at all? - No, because I am aware of being in the classroom with my colleague, Marie Sinclair, and discussing the fact it was after 3 o'clock and we hadn't seen the families.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: After remarking on the time with your colleague, was there a significant lapse of time before you met the family? - It is hard to say what is significant. It seemed a long time.

What/

What I am trying to establish is how you are so confident about the 3.30 time? - I have a recollection of seeing a clock. Other times I can remember looking at the clock but I can't remember looking at the clock, whether it was in the classroom or the staffroom, but I am very certain in my own mind that I was with the family at 3.30.

I doubt if there will be any dispute about that but do you mean with the family in the staffroom? - Yes.

Commencing the job of telling them at 3.30? - I couldn't honestly say whether it was commenced or five or 10 minutes into the interview.

The other thing I want to ask you is this; you were asked and said you were aware of a complaint about information being given to other people? - Yes.

Before it was given to the families. Now, can you tell me the type of person or who the people were to whom information was being given before it was given to the families? - I understand it was a relative.

So that is the complaint that you have heard of and is that a complaint about a relative being told officially by police officers about the death before the family were told officially? - I understand that the relatives received information from the hospital. That is my understanding.

And do you know if that was about an injured or a dead child? - A dead child.

Now, can I take it so far as you are concerned the setting up of these teams, both for the purposes of conveying the dreadful news and then supporting the families afterwards, was a good idea? - I believe so.

And can I take it that to enable the team to work properly it was necessary for the team to be briefed with as much information as possible about the death of the family's child before speaking to the family? - Yes, the briefing did not take long. I think really we only needed to know the basic facts.

So/

So we have a short briefing telling you the basic facts about the death of the child? - Yes.

And were you told what you needed to know? - Yes.

And no more than that? - I think we were given sufficient evidence to see the parents. I don't know what other information could have been given at that stage.

Well, do you think it could be said you were given more information than you needed to have? - No.

So were you simply given what you needed? - We were simply told the number of children who had died and the fact that we were to be put into teams and that these teams would go to tell the family and continue to work together and support them.

GEORGE GUNN (39), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: Are you a Constable in Central Scotland Police? - Yes.

Are you still based at Dunblane? - Yes, I am.

Were you based in Dunblane on 13th March of this year? - That is correct.

Where were you based in 1988? - Balfour Police Office.

How long have you been with Central Scotland Police? - 15 years.

Now, I think that you have two boys at Dunblane Primary School? - That's correct, yes.

And you had been on the night shift on the 12th into the 13th and I think roused by a phone call from your wife? - That is correct, yes.

About/

About 10.15? - It would be round about that time.

And you were at the school? - That is correct.

I don't want to ask you about that beyond establishing that fact. What I would like to ask you about is your duties on the evening of the 17th July 1988 when you worked at Balfon? - Yes.

Do you remember that evening? - Yes.

And I think you got involved in the saga of Thomas Hamilton as a result of a telephone message to your police office? - That is correct.

Is that the first you had ever heard of Thomas Hamilton? - Yes, that is correct.

Who did the phone call come from? - I don't recall the name of the person but it was a parent whose child had been at a camp on one of the islands in Loch Lomond.

Well, was it a parent on the phone to Balfon or was it another policeman? - I believe it was actually another policeman. The parents had called at Drymen Police Office and he was relaying the message to ask us to call over at Drymen Police Office.

Did you go to Drymen? - Yes, we did.

When you got to Drymen what did you have to do? - I interviewed some families, some parents and children, and obtained statements from them relating to the camp which had been held on Loch Lomond.

How many families were there? - I don't recall.

Roughly? - Four or five or six. I'm not sure.

And was that parents of the children who had been at a camp of Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

Where had the camp been? - Inchmoan, Loch/

Loch Lomond.

And this was a Saturday night, was it? - I believe it might have been.

Was it at the end of one stage of the camp as it were?
- Yes, they had left the camp and that was them returning home.

And the parents would have to go and collect these children from the camp? - That is correct.

What was the gist of the complaint they were making about the camp? - They weren't happy regarding the conditions of the camp and in particular that some of the boys had been chastised by Hamilton.

In what way? - Smacked across the bottom with a table tennis bat.

So far as the conditions of the camp were concerned, were they more specific than simply bad conditions? - Just simply that it was untidy and bad conditions.

Did you take certain statements at that stage? - Yes, I obtained statements.

Have you been unable to locate these particular statements since? - Yes, unfortunately the notebooks from that period have been destroyed.

So these were statements written in a police notebook at the time? - That is correct.

Now, the camp had been on Inchmoan Island. In whose jurisdiction is Inchmoan? - It is within the Strathclyde Police area.

So effectively who had to carry out the investigation into this complaint? - The initial investigation, yes.

But who had to do that, though, thereafter? - I took the initial statements and contacted the police office at Dumbarton and they sent a Detective Constable through to Drymen to carry out enquiries.

Who/

Who was that Detective Constable? - I believe it was Detective Constable Harold.

And did you pass the statements you had got to him?
- Yes, I did.

You would keep your own notebook and write them out in some other form? - That is right, I wrote them out on a sheet of paper for him.

So you are out of it at that stage? - That is correct, yes.

But you are back in pretty quickly? - Yes.

What happened? - On the 20th July Chief Inspector Hay from Dumbarton CID contacted myself at the Police Office in Drymen and asked if I could attend at Inchmoan Island on their behalf to inspect it.

Why should they get you to go to Inchmoan and not do it themselves? - Chief Inspector Hay informed me that they had problems getting a boat to take them out to the island and believed it might be easier for myself because the Balmaha mailboat operates from Balmaha and does the rounds of the islands.

And that is in your jurisdiction? - That's correct, yes.

Did you go to the island? - Yes, I did.

When did you go? - Later on that afternoon. I can't remember exactly.

So that is Wednesday the 20th of July. Who did you go with? - Constable Sloan or Duncan as she was at that time. She is now married.

Is Inchmoan inhabited at all? - No.

Is it very big? - No, it is quite a small island.

Do you know roughly its dimensions? - Possibly half a mile to a mile by quarter of a mile to/to half a mile. It is not a particularly big island.

When you got there were there boys to be seen? - Yes, there were some small boys playing on the beach.

Ages? - Round about nine years of age.

Consistent with the ages of the children you had seen earlier? - That is correct, yes.

The week before. Now, what were these children doing? - Just playing on the beach as young boys do. Throwing stones into the water and just generally playing.

Were they in the water? - Paddling. Not swimming but they were in padding.

Were they dressed for the water? - They had swimming trunks on, yes.

Was that all they had on? - Some of them had T-shirts on.

How far from there was the camp? - Probably about 20 or 30 yards. It was more or less on the shore.

Could you see it when you landed? - Yes.

Did you find Mr. Hamilton? - Yes, I went to the camp. The boys took me.

Was he there? - Yes, he was within the camp.

Were there any other adults within the camp at that time? - No.

How many children were there? - 13 I believe.

Throughout the time you were there that day investigating, were there any other adults turned up? - There were some other adults camping on the island but they were not part of Mr. Hamilton's camp.

So/

So no other adult connected with this camp turned up?
- No.

How many tents were there? - Three tents.

Did he welcome you? - Yes.

Did he show you round? - Yes, he did.

Were you in all the tents? - Yes, I was.

Can you tell us the general state of the camp site around the tents and the general state of the tents themselves? - The camp site I found generally to be untidy. There were tables set up obviously where the boys ate and they were strewn with dirty dishes. The camp site was generally messy. The tents, again they were messy and the sleeping bags within the tents I found slightly damp to the touch and generally I just got the impression it was not a particularly well-run camp.

Were these three tents assigned to particular purposes? - Yes, Mr. Hamilton said they were.

Could you see that these were the purposes? - Yes.

Now, what were they? - One of the tents was used as a store tent where they kept their foodstuffs and another tent was what Mr. Hamilton called the mess tent which was used for general eating in if the weather was bad and the other one was sleeping tents. However there were sleeping bags in all the tents. All the tents were used for sleeping.

So it looked as though there was somebody sleeping in all of them? - They were all slept in. Hamilton said they had been using them all to sleep in.

Did you determine where he slept? - I can't recall specifically which tent but he said he did sleep in a tent with the boys.

What did you make of the foodstuffs that were/were available to the children? - I was not particularly impressed with it. It was all mainly dried foodstuffs. I couldn't see any fresh food at all.

When you say dry food, do you mean tins? - Yes, tins and powdered food. Sort of powdered milk. Just powdered foodstuff.

What about basic things like potatoes? - I didn't see anything like that.

Cereal? - There might have been something like cornflakes.

Did you speak to the children? - Yes, I spoke to them all.

How did you go about that? - It was just a general chat with them.

Was that apart from Hamilton? - Yes, it was.

When you were talking to them did you notice anything about the general state of them that concerned you? - They all appeared quite cold. It wasn't the warmest of weathers the day I arrived and they were all a bit chittery and cold. They were all dressed in what I would have said was not proper clothing for the weather conditions and they had scratches on their legs. Obviously they got them from having gone through the bracken on the island.

Did you ask them why they were dressed the way they were? - Yes, I did.

What reaction did you get? - They said Hamilton told them to dress that way.

Did you ask them about even putting on trousers? - Yes, I did.

What reaction did you get? - Hamilton said he didn't let the boys dress in trousers because if they were running in the bracken then the trousers or jeans would get wet and it would be harder to dry them than it would be to dry their legs.

Did/

Did you find out whether of the 13 boys any of them were enjoying themselves? - Yes, I asked them all if they were enjoying themselves and I think three said unreservedly that they were enjoying themselves and the rest of them were generally homesick and complaining about the food and lack of being able to contact home.

Were you able to establish how long they had been there? - If I recall it was two or three days.

Now, I suppose homesickness can take a number of forms and be to a number of degrees. In this case, could you tell whether any of them were particularly upset and wanted home? - I would say none of them were particularly upset. I did ask if anybody wanted to be taken home and none of them wanted home.

So they all chose to stay? - Yes, they did.

Were/

11.20 a.m.

Were there ever any complaints about communication home? - Yes, they said that Hamilton wouldn't allow them to telephone home on their trips to Luss.

How did they get to Luss? - On a boat, there was a boat on the island.

What kind of boat was it? - It was an old type rowing boat, sort of type lifeboat.

Did it have an outboard? - No.

How did they get to Luss? - Row.

Was it not a long way? - I am not exactly sure how far but it is fair distance.

Luss is on the Strathclyde side? - Yes, that is correct.

Were you concerned about the equipping of the boat with lifejackets? - Yes, I was.

Did you check on that? - Yes.

What did you discover? - I can't remember the exact number of lifejackets but there were not enough numbers for the children present.

How long were you on the camp site? - About two hours.

Was Hamilton pleasant or unpleasant to you? - He was pleasant enough.

And when you left what was your general view of the set up? - I didn't think the children were in any particular danger as such but I thought it was a particularly badly run camp and not of the standard that I would have liked any of my children to have gone to.

Were you concerned about him at all? - Yes and no, there was something about him I didn't particularly like but nothing that I could put my finger on.

Now, /

Now, on this occasion, this is the 20th July, did any of the children complain about being struck? - No.

The complaints that you had got on the previous Saturday night about being struck by a bat, did you discover where on the bodies these children had been hit? - They had been smacked across the bottom.

Did you regard that as an assault? - Yes.

Or did you regard that as a chastisement of a child that was reasonable? - No, I would say it was an assault on that occasion.

I think you went back to your own office at Balfron? - Yes.

Did you report that to Mr. Hay? - Yes, I did.

Did you send him a statement? - Yes, I did.

Could you look at Production D1K which is SPOL9; now, that is a substantial report, is that right? - Yes.

You have been given two documents; what is the one on the left? - The one on my left, that is a statement of mine.

That is your own statement? - Yes, but it is not in the form that I sent it to Strathclyde police so I haven't actually read this one.

Could you look at it just now and tell me if that is in the terms in which you reported? - Yes, I would say that is a fair assessment of my report.

You did mention that there was dried food but you also mentioned potatoes there in that particular report; you saw no fresh fruit, vegetables or meat? - Yes.

You also say that Hamilton told you that he/

he slept.....no, I am misleading you, I think he told you that there were sleeping bags on the floor and Hamilton said that some of the children also slept in the same tent as the mess tent? - Yes, that is correct.

You mentioned in the report on the third page about challenging Hamilton about the lack of lifejackets? - Yes.

And he agreed that was the case but he said that the boys were good swimmers and could do without? - Yes, the ones that were good swimmers didn't require them.

You also say "In your opinion the camp was in a dirty, untidy condition with inadequate drying and sleeping facilities for the children"? - Yes.

That was your view at the time? - Yes.

The food was unacceptable to young children spending their time out of doors all day? - Yes.

And then the last part, supervision of the children while at the lochside is inadequate; you mentioned that earlier; did you think it was inadequate that children were left at the lochside without supervision? - Yes, the children should be supervised at the side of the water.

He was 30 yards away? - Yes, he was in the main body of the camp.

You go on to make a remark "If a child of my own had been at this camp I would have no hesitation in taking him away"? - Yes.

Did that remark cause any difficulty at a later stage? - In what respect?

Was that regarded as a personal comment rather than.....? - Yes, that was a personal comment.

Rather than an investigation comment? - No, that was a personal comment.

You/

You didn't charge him with anything? - No.

No offence? - No.

Is it the case it wasn't really up to you? - Yes, that is correct, I was just asked to go and inspect the actual camp site.

If that had been up to you could you have put your finger on an offence that was being committed? - There may have been a contravention of Section 12 of the Protection of Young Persons Act.

In what respect? - Inadequate supervision and no proper foodstuffs.

Not giving proper care to children? - Yes.

Did you later learn that, in fact, the whole investigation became the subject of a report to the Procurator Fiscal in Dumbarton?
- Yes, I did.

And that was with a view to his considering whether there should be any proceedings taken in Court? - I understand that.

Did you also learn that the Procurator Fiscal in Dumbarton decided to take no proceedings in respect of that camp? - Yes.

I think that production should stay with you for the moment. Now, could you go to the first page of the Production D1K and is that the first page of the report that was prepared for the Procurator Fiscal? - I haven't seen this document before.

Could you look and see if it is, in fact, and if you go to the second page can you confirm to me that it is addressed to the Procurator Fiscal at Dumbarton? - Yes.

And it is compiled by Detective Sergeant McBain? - That is correct.

Were you aware of Detective Sergeant McBain's/

McBain's involvement in this investigation? - No.

He is a Strathclyde officer and not a Central police officer? - That would be correct, yes.

Now, could you just look at the first page of that and can you confirm to me that the second paragraph deals with Sunday evening, the 17th July, 1988? - Yes, that is correct.

And that indicates that the police at Alexandria were advised or were notified that a summer camp on Inchmoan was being run improperly? - Yes.

That is when you first became involved? - Yes.

I think the third paragraph mentions one particular set of parents being most vociferous in their criticism of the camp and demanding that the police take immediate action against their two sons who just arrived to go to the camp? - I am not aware of that.

But that is what the report says? - Yes, that is in the report.

I think that the next paragraph, No. 4, deals with the situation after you had reported back to Mr. Hay so we are at Thursday, 21st July? - Yes.

And does it say that after contacting 10 sets of parents I, that is McBain, arranged for them to meet their respective sons and judge for themselves first hand if anything untoward was taking place? - Yes.

Does it go on to say that only six sets of parents, including the ones that were mentioned in the previous paragraph, attended at Dumbarton Police Office and spoke with their respective sons? - Yes.

And then does it go on "Four boys, including one of the families, refused to leave the camp and had no complaint to make"? - That is correct./

correct.

So we have a family split at that stage? - Yes.

"Indeed none of the boys interviewed at this time made any complaint, but several felt homesick and were taken home, in some cases reluctantly, by their parents"? - Yes.

Does it go on to say "All the parents present spoke with Hamilton who was quite happy to speak with them"? - Yes.

Does it then say "None of the parents present were prepared to make any complaints or malign Hamilton in any way"? - Yes.

"Indeed, some praised him"? - Yes.

That wasn't the end of your involvement? - No.

What was the next you heard about the whole business? - My inspector informed me that Hamilton had made an informal complaint about my statement which I had submitted to Strathclyde Police.

Who was your inspector? - Michael Mill.

What was Hamilton's complaint about you? - I had basically told a pack of lies.

So you had to give an explanation to Mr. Mill, I take it?
- Yes, that is correct.

Did Hamilton go further than simply giving an oral complaint to Mill, did he start writing to the police? - Yes, he started writing numerous letters to Inspector Mill and to other officers at the Central Scotland Police.

What was the general tenor of the letter? - That I was an incompetent officer and told a pack of lies.

Did he also try to explain how he ran his camp and clubs? - Yes, he did.

Was/

Was any one of these letters circulated widely in your own area? - Numerous of these letters were circulated throughout Dunblane.

Mentioning you or just an incompetent officer? - No, mentioning me by name.

Did that correspondence get, to your knowledge, as far as his local MP? - Yes, I believe it did.

I think one of the senior officers in Central at that time was Chief Inspector Gunn? - Yes.

No relation of yours? - No.

Did he get involved? - Yes.

In what way? - He was the officer in charge of the division in which I worked at that time and Hamilton complained to him regarding my conduct and Mr. Gunn then carried out his own investigations regarding it.

So you could say that Mr. Hamilton tended to correspond with fairly senior officers or communicate with fairly senior officers in your Force? - Yes, he did.

Now, did he ever try to contact you? - Yes, he did.

When? - I can't remember the exact date but he called out at Balfron Police Office on one occasion.

Was that a reasonably short time after July? - Yes, within the month or so.

What was the purpose of his visit? - He wanted to discuss the statement which I had submitted to Strathclyde Police.

Did you discuss it with him? - No, I told him I was not in a position to do that.

Did you have any difficulty getting him to go? - Yes.

What/

What did you do? - He refused to go, I had to repeatedly tell him to go and eventually I told him if he didn't leave he might well be arrested and at that point he did leave.

Did he call on another occasion that you heard about when you were not there? - Yes.

What did he do that time? - He sat for three hours to wait to speak to Sergeant Moir.

Outside your office? - Balfron Office.

Was it outside or inside? - Outside.

Letters were continuing to be written? - He wrote numerous letters.

It got worse? - Yes, he seemed to get more and more obsessive about the incident.

It got worse for you? - Yes.

What was the next major thing that happened? - Regarding the complaint?

Yes? - He made it an official complaint.

What does that mean? - It then becomes an official complaint where it gets investigated by the Discipline Officer.

When did he make that complaint? - I believe it was December, 1988.

In February did you, in fact, get served with formal discipline papers at the instance of the Chief Constable? - That is correct.

I think that the man responsible for the complaints and discipline investigation matters would be the Deputy Chief Constable?
- That is correct.

He would have to assign an officer to look into Hamilton's complaints against you? - Yes.

Who/

Who was that officer? - At that time it was Inspector Keenan.

Can you tell me what the charges were against you?
- I believe there were three charges; one was that I had made a misleading statement to Strathclyde Police and the second charge, I can't remember the exact wording -- I had been uncivil towards him.

Is that just the two charges? - I think there were three.

What is the third? - I can't recall.

What was the uncivil remark? - I think it was along the lines about I had sworn at him and thrown him out of the office at Balfron.

Did you swear at him? - No.

Did you have to throw him out of the office? - I had to threaten him with being thrown out.

I think you were insistent that Mr. Keenan should speak to a wide range of witnesses in his investigations? - Yes, I was.

And as far as you were concerned did he do that? - I believe he did.

That would mean that Mr. Keenan would speak to all of the people that he could identify, I suppose, who had been involved in the complaints which were investigated back in July? - Yes, I gave him a note of all the children I had spoken to on the 17th July at Drymen Police Office and also the names of all the boys that were on the island on the 20th July.

It may be that I am guessing a little here but some of these represented parties here will want to know some of the details of these statements; I suppose Mr. Keenan would be the best person to ask about what was in the statements made in 1988, 1989? - Yes, he will; I would imagine they will be recorded where my own notebook at the time, we destroy notebooks after five years, it is not available.

You/

You only spoke to the witnesses that you have told us about so far? - Yes.

Whereas we have seen already McBain's report and he had been sent out to conduct a much wider investigation? - Yes.

I take it you would assume that Keenan would have access to Mr. McBain's report? - I would have thought so, yes.

Now, after February, 1989 when you got your papers served on you when was the next time you encountered Hamilton? - There was a time when I was off duty I encountered him at Stirling; I was off duty with my wife and my young children in Stirling and I can't be specific of the dates but I had called in to Burger King within Stirling Town Centre; seated in there there was Hamilton.

What happened? - I didn't know he was actually there; I was sitting with my wife and family and we were having burgers and my wife looked uneasy; I didn't think much about it at the time but as we were leaving I noticed Hamilton sitting behind me and when I actually asked my wife what was wrong with her she said that the man behind had been sitting staring at her and made her feel uneasy; knowing Hamilton I turned to speak to him and to ask him what he was playing at but he had left the shop.

Did you retain any further interests in Hamilton's activities after that? - Yes, I was still working out at Balfron and I became aware he was running camps at Milarrochy Bay caravan site.

What did you do about that? - I made him aware of the fact that I knew he was running these camps, I would go into the camp site and drive around.

That one isn't on an island? - No, it is not.

Was it on your patch? - Yes, it was.

And in 1989 did you do that? - Yes, I did.

How many times did you do that? - I am not/not sure, maybe once or twice a week.

Off your own bat did you do it? - I was not ordered to do that, no.

Your own initiative then? - Yes.

Can/

11.40 a.m.

Can I take it that in 1989 his camp was of a similar style -- let's take the word "style" for a moment -- to 1988? - In some respects. It was actually within a proper caravan site on this occasion.

But I take it it was still in tents? - But there was still two or three tents, and young boys. We never actually spoke to Hamilton or inspected the camp. I just drove around the caravan park, which I would do in any event -- we were often invited in, and asked to patrol the caravan park by the owners at that time.

Was one of the things you had in mind to let him see you were maintaining an interest? - Yes, to make him aware the police were still around.

And was one of the other things you had in mind to see what the conditions were like? - Yes and no. I was never that close to see within the tents or anything, so I wasn't inspecting it as such. I was just driving by to make him aware the police were around.

By that time were you aware that there were no proceedings in relation to the year before? - I can't recall if I knew then or not.

I mean, was it a surprise to you, for example, that he was still running camps, and can you explain why? - I was surprised he was running camps at all, to be honest.

Why? - Because the state of the camp, I felt that there should have been some form of governing body to run boys' clubs, and there didn't appear to be one at that time.

And yet some parents who went to the camp sites, from what we have just read, seemed to leave their children there? - Yes.

Even after they had seen them? - Yes.

Over what period in 1989 did he run the camp at Milarrochy Bay? - It was in the summer, the closed school term, the summer months.

For/

For the whole summer holidays? - Yes, I believe he was probably there for about eight weeks or so -- maybe slightly less.

Was the 1988 camp as long as that? - I don't know how long it went on for.

Can I take it the boys went and stayed for maybe a week and then another lot came? - Yes. I remember from what Hamilton said the children paid for one week and they could have the second week free, or some kind of deal along those lines.

Did he do the same thing in 1990? - Yes. No, I am not sure if he was there the following year. He may have been, but I can't recall.

So, so far as Loch Lomond was concerned, do we stop at 1989? - Yes, I think possibly.

But you have come across his activities once more? - That is correct.

When was that? - That would be 1991 I think it was in Dunblane.

I take it that you are going to tell me about something that you first came across -- a boy you first came across in Old Doune Road in Dunblane? - That is correct.

Could that have been in 1992? - It may have been. I didn't actually record it, so I don't remember.

Can you take a minute just to think about that because there is evidence before the Inquiry about events that sound very similar to what you are going to tell us about in 1992 rather than 1991? - I can't think of a way of pinning it down.

Even in relation to the ages of your own kids at the time you discovered it, or some stupid, some silly way of working out the time? - I have thought about this previously, obviously, before coming today.

So we are not going to improve on 1991 or 1992? - No, I'm afraid not. It could have been 1991 or 1992.

When, /

When, in whatever year it was, did this happen? -
Pardon?

When did this happen? - I think it was 1991.

Yes, but what time of year, sorry? - Sorry, the summer. I can't remember when.

Were you on duty? - Yes, I was.

And by that time were you based in Dunblane? - That is correct.

The time of the day? - It was the evening, possibly 8/9 o'clock at night.

And what did you encounter? - Two young boys walking down Old Doune Road in their pyjamas.

Only two boys? - Yes, only two.

Again we have a report of an incident with three boys, but this is only two? - Definitely only two.

Walking along the road in their pyjamas? - That is correct.

Anything on their feet? - I think they were barefooted from memory, yes.

Not an everyday occurrence in Dunblane? - No.

What did you do about it? - Obviously I stopped and approached the boys and asked what they were doing, and they informed me they had been at a boys' camp being held at the Dunblane High School and that they were wanting to go home, basically, and they were making their way down to the phone box to try and contact their parents.

Apart from the way they were dressed, did they look as though they were upset? - Not particularly. They weren't in tears or anything.

Were you on your own? - At that time, yes.

What/

What did you do about it? - Obviously I placed the boys within the police vehicle and took them up to Dunblane Police Office and made arrangements to contact their parents.

Did you find out from talking to the boys why they wanted to go home? - Yes. They were generally homesick and they didn't like the discipline that was being imposed upon them at the camp they were at.

Did the parents come and collect them? - Well, I believe they did.

Was that done at the school? - I think they came to Dunblane Police Office. I am not sure. Once I heard Hamilton was involved I passed it on to another officer to deal with. I felt it best if I didn't become involved with Hamilton.

Who was the other officer? - That evening? Constable Jack McGregor.

Now, could you answer this yes or no for the moment. Do you remember the names of these boys? - No.

Do you remember where their parents had come from? - I believe it was possibly the Dunfermline area.

Did either of them make any complaint to you about any form of violence towards them? - No.

Did they mention anything that you could formulate as a sort of criminal charge? - No.

BY LORD CULLEN: Can you tell us what time of year it was you met these boys? - It was summer.

Just summer -- you can't go any further than that? -
No, just summer -- June or July.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: If I could go back to the beginning, you were telling us about your investigation of the camp at Inchmoan in Loch Lomond? - Yes.

Thereafter/

Thereafter you submitted a report and in due course you were the subject of a complaint and then an official complaint by Hamilton? - That is correct.

And if I have understood your evidence correctly, the gist of that complaint by Hamilton was that you had told a pack of lies about him? - That is correct.

And that you were incompetent? - Yes, that is correct.

Now that complaint I think was subsequently fully investigated and you were wholly exonerated? - That is correct.

What does the fact that Hamilton made this complaint about you tell us about his character? - I don't know what it tells you, but it tells me that he is a liar.

Would you agree that it tells us he was an untrustworthy individual? - In my opinion, yes.

That he was vindictive? - Yes.

Wholly unreasonable? - Totally.

Malicious? - Yes.

And obsessive? - Yes.

A few points of detail, if I may. What was the name of the Deputy Chief Constable who was involved in serving the disciplinary papers in early 1989? - McMurdo.

When you were investigating the camp at Inchmoan -- this is not an easy matter -- I am not here talking about any sexual impropriety or anything of that nature, but did Hamilton appear to display any natural affection or kindness towards the boys in his care? - I don't know, because I never actually saw him with the boys as such.

The complaints that were made in relation to the punishment on the bottom -- can you remember, did those complaints relate to hitting on the bare bottom or just the bottom with trousers on? - The bare/bare bottom was never mentioned, so I assumed it was on top of the trousers.

Did you, or were you aware, of anybody else, ever giving consideration to whether what was reported amounted to a breach of the peace on the part of Hamilton? - At that time, or later on?

Well, I am thinking particularly of at that time at the moment? - No, not really, no.

Subsequently? - I believe the Deputy Chief Constable took the investigations made against myself -- I believe he took that down to the Fiscal at Dumbarton with a view to having proceedings re-instituted against Hamilton.

When was that? - I'm not exactly sure.

This is after the.....? - After the investigation had commenced, yes.

So Mr. McMurdo took the matter back to the Fiscal at Dumbarton for a reconsideration? - Yes.

And was breach of the peace mentioned at that time? - I don't know the charges.

And the outcome of that request? - I believe the Fiscal again said no.

So on two occasions the police placed a report before the Fiscal relating to the events at Inchmoan? - I believe that, yes.

Could you look again please at the front page of D1K, which was the report to the Fiscal from Strathclyde Police? - Yes.

We can read this for ourselves, but if we turn the page, could you possibly read out please the paragraphs seven and eight? - "Although many of the complaints are non-criminal in themselves, it does seem that the camp conditions are extremely primitive, with the lack of ease of access and communication being a prime concern. In this respect it could be argued there is serious concern for the boys' moral and physical wellbeing. As yet no charges have been preferred". Paragraph eight: "I respectfully request that this report, together with/

with the attached statements and accompanying leaflets in connection with the summer camp, be forwarded to the Procurator-Fiscal, 3 High Street, Dumbarton, and the Reporter to the Children's Panel, McLean Place, Dumbarton, for their information and any further action they may deem necessary."

The view from that: "It may be argued that there is serious concern for the boys' physical and moral wellbeing" -- would you quarrel with that as an assessment? - Well, I didn't actually fully investigate that aspect of things, so I don't think I could possibly comment on that fairly.

Reverting to the statement which you did provide to Strathclyde Police? - Yes.

Which my learned friend Mr. Bonomy asked you to look at earlier, could you have that in front of you again please? - Yes.

Just before I go on to that, I am sorry, there is something I meant to pick up when we were in the context of the previous document -- has it been taken away from you? - Yes.

D1K again, and paragraph eight, the last paragraph that you read out? - Yes.

Do you see there that in addition to the matter being reported to the Procurator-Fiscal, I think the matter was also reported to the Reporter to the Children's Panel in Dumbarton? - That is correct.

Now, this may be something which you are unable to help me with, and if so please just let me know, but would it be normal practice if there is complaints relating to the care given by a non-parent to a child -- somebody like Hamilton towards the young people in his care -- for that complaint to be brought to the attention of the Reporter to the Children's Panel? - I don't know.

Would it be standard practice to do that if there was a concern or a complaint relating to the conduct of a parent towards his or her child? - If there was a report being submitted, if there were offences, yes -- and likewise if there were offences by a non-parent, it would be to the Reporter; but I don't/don't know if there were no offences, if it was just for information -- I don't know if that would be done to the Reporter.

Are you aware as to whether or not the Reporter makes a difference, or distinguishes in some way between complaints, on the one hand, of parental abuse, if I could put it that way, and on the other hand complaints relating to third parties such as Hamilton? - I have no idea.

So if, for example, Hamilton had had children, and if one of his children had been a member of the camp, you are unaware as to whether that would have made any difference to how the Reporter would have responded? - I have no idea how the Reporter would have responded.

Well, that is obviously a matter we can pursue with others, but thank you for your help with that. Can I turn again please to the witness statement which you provided to Strathclyde Police in connection with the Inchmoan Island episode -- I take it you simply prepared this yourself and sent it through? - Yes, although as I say this is not the statement I sent, but it is a copy.

Is it an accurate copy of what you sent, the best of your recollection? - Yes, I think so.

It purports to be your witness statement? - Yes. I mean, it is accurate.

It has simply been transposed on to a Strathclyde Police Witness Statement Form; is that right? - Yes.

If we turn to -- again we can read this for ourselves to a large extent, but if we turn to the bottom of the second page, do you say that you spoke to the children that were at the camp? -

Yes.

All were dressed in black swimming trunks supplied by Hamilton? - Yes.

Some of them also wore tee shirts? - Yes.

You then say they all looked extremely cold/cold and wet? - Yes.

And you were told that Hamilton had indicated that they were not allowed to put on trousers? - That is correct.

He said because their trousers would get wet? - Yes.

You obviously investigated the state of mind of the children, and you tell us that of the 13 children only three said that they were enjoying the camp? - That is correct.

And most of them, you tell us -- the words you used were "were extremely homesick"? - Yes.

So far as food is concerned, my learned friend Mr. Bonomy has taken this from you in the main, but we do see that they had no supper or warm drink prior to retiring for the evening? - That is correct.

And a number of the children complained of feeling cold and wet all the time, and had not been allowed to phone home or write postcards on their visits to Luss? - That is correct.

Did that cause you any concern, that the children were being prevented from making contact with their parents? - Yes, and I challenged Mr. Hamilton about that. He said if the children phoned home it made their homesickness worse, so he felt it best not to allow them to phone home till towards the end of their stay.

You/

12 noon

You tell us towards the foot of that page that in your opinion the camp was in a dirty untidy condition with inadequate drying and sleeping facilities for the children? - Yes.

Did you investigate the toilet facilities? - I was aware that there was a chemical toilet but I didn't actually go into it.

What was the position so far as drinking water was concerned? - I don't recall.

The episode in Burger King, did that disturb you? - Not so much disturb but annoy.

How did Hamilton behave on that occasion? - Well, he was sitting behind me so I don't know what he did actually at first-hand but my wife told me he was just sitting staring intently at her and my children.

And that was after the complaints and the investigation? - That's correct, yes.

You were asked certain questions relating to the events in Old Doune Road in Dunblane when children were found wanting to make contact with their parents and the parents came to collect them. Were you made aware at this time that the camp they came from was being run by Thomas Hamilton? - Yes, the children told me it was Hamilton who was running the camp.

What happened about this? - I don't know. As I say, I passed this on to Constable Jack McGregor I believe and then I went off duty. I think I was on backshift or whatever. I went off duty and the next morning I was aware that the Sergeant had gone up to the camp site or the school and had spoken to Hamilton regarding how to look after the children. You know, how could two young children get out of the school without him knowing it and I'm not exactly sure what was said obviously but I believe it was along the lines of he can't have eyes in the back of his head or something like that. I don't know what the Sergeant said to that. I'm not aware.

So/

So was there any follow up investigation or any action taken as a result of this episode? - As I say, I believe the Sergeant went up the next morning to speak to him but as regards any further action after that, I don't know.

LORD CULLEN: Mr. Campbell, it may be, I don't know, there will be other evidence about this. I don't know if you can pursue it much further with this witness if it is out of his ken.

MR. CAMPBELL: I am simply taking up the point as there is some dubiety I think as to whether this was the same incident that was mentioned.

LORD CULLEN: Oh, I see. Yes.

THE WITNESS: I don't believe a report went in if that is what you are getting at. I don't believe there was any formal report.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. CAMPBELL: You knew Hamilton? - Yes.

Well by this time? - I wouldn't say well. I didn't have many conversations with him.

I don't mean it that way but you were well aware of Hamilton and what type of person he was, is that correct? - Yes.

There was the incident when three young boys were wandering about.....? - There were only two boys the night I saw them.

Two boys wandering about the street from one of these camps at night. Now, I take it that was a matter of concern for you? - Yes.

So did you make it your business to find out what, if anything, was done as a result of this incident? - Yes, as I said, I spoke to the Sergeant the next day and he told me he had gone up to see Hamilton. I then left it to the Sergeant to deal with it. I didn't check up on him as such so I don't know what was said to Hamilton.

But leaving aside your ignorance of what was said to Hamilton, do you know what happened in general/general terms as a result? Was any action taken to your knowledge?

- Not that I am aware of.

Would you have expected to have known or to have been informed if any action was being taken? - Not necessarily, no.

Not even although you were the officer who found the children in the first place? - Had there been action taken I dare say I would have been told about it but, as I say, I don't know the extent of what action the Sergeant took. I don't believe a report was submitted if that is what you are getting at. I don't think there were any charges preferred against Hamilton. I am sure I would have been aware if there had been.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: As I understand it, after you had made your visit to Inchmoan in 1988 you passed the papers on to Strathclyde Police Force? - That is correct.

And at the time you passed the papers to them you believed that there was a possibility of some charge being made under the Children and Young Persons (Scotland) Act? - Yes, I would assume there would be.

And presumably that would have required some investigation before a final view could be taken? - Yes.

But that investigation was undertaken by Strathclyde Police? - That is correct.

And they then, if I have understood your evidence correctly, submitted a report to the Procurator-Fiscal at Dumbarton, is that correct? - Yes, I believe that is correct.

And the Procurator-Fiscal's decision was to take no proceedings? - I believe that was the case, yes.

And following that, Mr. Hamilton took issue with the manner in which you had investigated the incident? - He took issue prior to no proceedings being taken.

Prior to the investigation which Inspector/

Inspector Keenan conducted, and which you have told us about, was there any informal investigation undertaken by Central Scotland Police? - Yes, there was.

Can you tell us just a little about that? - Well, Inspector Mill informally investigated it by obviously asking myself and Constable Sloan what had taken place.

Constable Sloan who was at that time Constable Duncan? - Duncan, that is correct. Thereafter Chief Inspector Gunn also questioned myself and Constable Sloan regarding the incident on the island and again that was if you like an informal investigation.

And then there was an investigation by Inspector Keenan, is that correct? - Yes, that is correct.

And presumably you had to be interviewed by Inspector Keenan in the course of that investigation? - That is correct, yes.

Was there any further complaint to your knowledge made by Mr. Hamilton in relation to the conduct of Central Scotland Police Force? - Yes.

Can you tell us what that was? - I believe he complained that Inspector Keenan's investigation was a whitewash and was not getting to the truth.

And I think Mr. Moulson then investigated the matter on behalf of the Inspector? - Yes, I believe that is correct.

Did that involve you being interviewed by Mr. Moulson? - No, I was not interviewed.

Following the circulation of the letter by Mr. Hamilton in which your name appeared, did you contemplate any action on your part? - Yes, I did.

Can you tell us what action you had in mind? - I had a view on possibly pursuing Mr. Hamilton through the Courts for defamation of my character.

And/

And did you take such a course of action? - No, I did not.

Can you say why you didn't take such a course? - Yes, I requested an interview with the Depute Chief Constable obviously to explain my feelings regarding the matter and we discussed it at length and we formed the opinion that there would not be much point.

And you were happy with that decision or you accepted it? - I was prepared to accept it, yes.

So by this time would it be fair to say that Mr. Hamilton had become what might be described as a bit of a thorn in your flesh? - Yes and No. His actions were becoming a pest by the circulation of his letters. I mean, I have no personal dealings with the man, just the fact he was putting these letters around and just wouldn't seem to let go.

Might it be that you would not be able to take the most objective view of the man's character given his activities? - Yes, I would say that is fair.

Now, if I can ask you a question about the incident at Dunblane in 1992. If a report had been sent to the Reporter to the Children's Panel following that incident in Dunblane in 1992, might that have happened without your knowledge? - It may have done but I would have thought had a report been submitted I would have been asked to submit a statement regarding my part in it.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: You said something about one matter being sent back to the Procurator-Fiscal to reconsider? - Yes.

And that was by whom? - The Depute Chief Constable, Mr. McMurdo, I believe took the investigation which Inspector Keenan had done against myself down to the Procurator-Fiscal because obviously he had re-interviewed all the witnesses concerned.

And that would be the Dumbarton Procurator-Fiscal still? - That is correct, yes.

Now/

Now, if you could look again at DIK which is that report by Mr. McBain and can you look at the second page and the last paragraph and can you confirm that it does say that it should be submitted to the Reporter to the Children's Panel? - Yes.

As well as the Fiscal? - Yes, it does.

Now, the Burger King incident you referred to, did you report that to anyone? - No, I never.

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, there is being circulated just now a document which has the number D4/I(I) and on the backing is the number DFRC/3I. You will not find it in any of the volumes. A copy is hopefully coming to you, sir, to try and clarify the position about the Dunblane High School camp.

RE-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:
Now, will be put in front of you and you will see that that is dated the 3rd July 1992 and is a Central Scotland Police document from Sergeant Fleming at Dunblane to the Chief Superintendent of 'A' Division. Was Sergeant Fleming the Sergeant you were referring to?
- That is correct.

You will see the second paragraph says "About 10.15 p.m. on Monday, 29th June, 1992, Constable 340 Gunn, Dunblane, came across three young boys dressed in pyjamas sitting on the pavement in Old Doune Road at its junction with Doune Road, Dunblane. The officer stopped to investigate". Is Constable 340 Gunn you? - That's correct, yes.

Do you think you might be wrong about the number of boys? - Yes, I might well be.

Because we also have three names as well and that they all came from Inverkeithing so this must be the same situation but it is not as I recall it.

It does say that one was barefoot and the other two were wearing shoes? - Yes, that would be fair.

Does that ring any bells? - I still recall/recall it as I have said but I wouldn't argue that is more accurate.

It also says that one was clutching a tube of toothpaste? - I don't remember that.

And it also says "They had already telephoned their parents and were waiting outside the telephone box for them to arrive"? - No, they had not contacted their parents.

That is wrong, is it? - Yes, I believed we phoned them from the police office.

Then I think it says in the next paragraph "Contact was made with Force Control Room and it was established that the boys' parents had left for Dunblane"? - Again, it may well be the case, yes, but as I recall it either myself or Constable McGregor telephoned.

In any event, if we move on you will see a large paragraph which says "About 11.30 a.m. the following day, Tuesday, 30th June, 1992, accompanied by Constable Smith, I called at Dunblane High School and spoke to Mr. Hamilton"? - Yes.

That is Sergeant Fleming reporting to the Chief Superintendent? - Yes.

He then goes on to say that he, that is Hamilton, "informed me that he had spoken to the parents the previous evening and the three boys would not be returning"? - That is correct.

And then he goes on "On enquiring about supervision, Mr. Hamilton said that all the boys slept in sleeping bags on the floor of the dining hall and that he slept on chairs in the corner. After a head count all the boys were seen to be in bed and instructed that they could not go anywhere without his permission except to the toilets which were in the hall immediately outside the dining room"? - Yes.

Does it also go on to say "Mr. Hamilton explained that the three boys had gone to the toilet together and had probably left the building by the fire exit next to the toilets"? - That is correct.

What/

What does Sergeant Fleming then say? - "At that time I was satisfied by the explanation given by Mr. Hamilton. Constable Gunn did express the opinion that he thought the boys were homesick. Taking this into account and the fact that the camp only commenced the previous Sunday, I took no further action".

So we have there an indication of no further action at that stage, is that right? - Yes.

Can you then read the last paragraph? - "On Thursday, 2nd July, 1992, Constable Metcalfe from the Child Unit, Dunfermline, reported that she had received a complaint....."

Don't give me the name of the next person. Just read past that? - "That she had received a complaint (from a person) regarding her son who had been attending the camp at Dunblane High School. (The person) had removed her son, complaining about the regimentation and lack of supervision. Constable Metcalfe was informed of the incident involving the three boys as described above and is making arrangements to have statements obtained from them."

Does it go on to say "The Child Protection Unit at Bannockburn have been informed and they are in contact with their counterparts in Fife"? - That is correct, yes.

Do you know who was in the Child Protection Unit at Bannockburn at that time? - No, I can't recall. I can see by obviously the handwriting down below it says D.C. Brown and I am aware D.C. Brown would have been in it round about that time.

I think at the very bottom there is a note by a Detective Sergeant and Detective Chief Inspector Hughes which says "Copy to Mr. Harris, Reporter, for information"? - Yes, that is correct.

So does that sound like the same incident? - I would say almost certainly.

As the one you were speaking about? - Yes/

Yes.

BY LORD CULLEN: Just for the notes, I think there is a stamp on the front page showing that the Reporter received that on the 10th August? - Yes, that is correct.

That is the Reporter for Fife Region? - Fife Region, yes.

DOREEN/

12.20 p.m.

DOREEN HAGGAR, Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you now 46 years of age? - Yes.

I think you stay in Aberdeen? - Yes.

When did you first ever hear of the name of the person, Thomas Hamilton? - It was 1988 when my son went to one of his boys clubs.

Where was that club? - Linlithgow.

As a result of your son being at the boys club did your son also go to a summer camp? - He had only been at the boys club a couple of weeks when he got a form stipulating that to remain in the boys club he had to go to this adventure camp.

Did you allow him to go to the camp? - Yes.

What age was your son then? - 10½.

What was the price? - It cost altogether £110 for two weeks.

Did you meet Mr. Hamilton before the camp took place? - Yes.

Where did you meet him? - At the gym hall.

That is where the club was taking place? - Yes.

That is at Linlithgow Academy? - Yes.

Did you watch any of the activities? - Well, you went up to collect them and we saw them through a glass door just throwing a ball about and running about.

On any of these occasions when you went to collect your son did you speak to Hamilton? - Yes.

How/

How did he appear to you at that time, was he pleasant? - He was quite jolly, yes, the kids were all excited about the camp.

Did you inquire of him what the camp would be like? - Yes.

What did he tell you about it? - He told me that it was on an island, they had indoor facilities if it rained for the boys, they had radio contact off the island in case of emergencies, he said there was showers and indoor cooking facilities if it rained, it seemed okay.

Did you know or did you get at that time a name for the island, where it would be? - No, it was just an island on Loch Lomond.

Did you take your son to the camp? - No -- well, we had to take him to Balmaha boatyard.

Was Mr. Hamilton there? - Yes, with a boat.

Did he take all the kids away over to the island on the boat? - He took all the children who were allowed on the boat, you had to say goodbye to them at Balmaha.

That was about when -- the beginning of July, 1988? - Yes.

He was supposed to be away for two weeks? - Yes.

Was he? - No.

When did he come back? - Less than a week.

How did he get back? - I never met the person who brought them back, I wasn't at home when he was brought home; it was a female that brought him home and left him with Uncle Jimmy and Uncle Jimmy had spoken to the police officer on the telephone that said that he would be coming home.

Sorry, Uncle Jimmy spoke to? - A police officer when he telephoned he told him that he would be coming home.

So/

So he got a warning he was coming? - Yes.

Now, did you see your son as soon as you got home?
- He was at home when I got home, it was later I got home.

What state was he in when you saw him? - Tired, he looked very agitated.

Did he say anything about the camp? - It was horrible.

Anything more specific than that? - He said that they had been in a cinema and the police came into the cinema and took them all out and asked the boys names and if they wanted to go home they could go home.

Was he able to tell you how many of them went home?
- No.

The following day did you get any more information out of your son? - Sorry?

The following day did you get any more information out of your son? - I waited till he had a sleep and then he told me about thrown off a boat into the loch; when they arrived on the island Hamilton made him take all his clothes off, took off all their kit and their money and they put shorts on.

What kind of shorts? - Skinny things like swimming shorts.

Did he say whether he was able to wear anything on his upper body? - No, just his shorts, they were told to strip completely naked and that is all they got back was a pair of shorts.

Did you find out whether any of the boys had been hit at all by Hamilton, according to your son? - Yes, he told me that if they didn't eat the slop they were being fed they were hit with a wooden spoon.

Did he say where they were hit with the wooden spoon? - The legs.

Did/

Did he ever get that done to him? - He said he got hit once when he refused to eat smash.

Did he tell you about something that had happened with a boat and been thrown into the water? - Yes, they had to go on the boat with their shorts on and there was one towel between them all and they were given a lifejacket and they had to stand on the edge of the boat and jump in and I said to Andrew.....he said "I was terrified" and I said "But didn't you tell him you were terrified?" and he said "I was trying, mum, I told him and he pushed me off the boat with his foot into the water"; my son has a great fear of water.

How did he get him back on the boat? - Just pulled him.

With what? - Just lifted him in; they were all frozen he said.

Now, we are now at the day after your son comes home; at that stage did you do anything about this? - Well, at first I thought Andrew never had been away from home, I put some of it down that he might be over-reacting, a bit homesick; he didn't tend to go out of the house a lot anyway, he didn't have many friends, he didn't know any of the boys at the camp and I thought maybe he was blowing it up a bit in case he had to go back.

Were any of his belongings missing when he returned? - Yes, he didn't have his own clothes, somebody else had his jumper and that and I said to him "Where are your clothes?" and he said "Hamilton has got them all, he took them all off us" and he didn't get anything back.

Did you not do anything about that? - Well, I couldn't get hold of Hamilton; Hamilton phoned the next day and said that if I wished to go out to collect my son's stuff he would explain about the place, about what happened, explain it all to me.

And did you go? - I made an arrangement, he said he would take the boy's stuff to Balmaha so we went down; Andrew wouldn't go, Andrew flatly refused to go with us; I got there and Mr. Hamilton didn't have his stuff; he then said/said to us "Look, all the stuff is out on the island, if you come out we can have a cup of tea and I will explain in detail what has been going on".

Were you on your own? - No.

Who was with you? - My daughter and Mr. Sam Davie.

Did all of you go over to the island? - Yes, we went on to the island.

When you got there was Hamilton the only adult there or were there any others? - Yes, except for a young teenager.

Aged about what? - 16, 17.

Did you ask him at all about the incident involving your son in the water? - He said it was necessary for lifesaving drill, they had to be able to fit a lifejacket, know how to use it; I had told him I didn't think that was necessary to push somebody into the water.

What was Hamilton's reaction to that? - It was necessary, everybody had to do it.

Did he not say anything about it being a stupid thing to do in hindsight? - I told him that Andrew had nearly drowned when he was little, he had an absolute terror of water because he fell into a harbour and he said it might help him to recover and I said to him that he was terrified.

So he didn't accept that he had made a mistake? - No, I asked him about where the showers were and where the chalet buildings were supposed to be and he said oh, he was supposed to get another island but at the last minute somebody had let him down.

So there were no showers? - There was nothing.

What was the state of the camp? - There was a couple of tents, a wooden fire, a railway sleeper and a couple of boxes and where the boat came in it was filthy with rubbish.

Did/

Did you offer to do something to help him? - No, he said to me.....I asked him about food, you know, and he said that somebody was supposed to come with him but his foot or his leg got broken and he let him down at the last minute; he said that the police had raided his camp, he was really uptight about that, he kept going on about it; he needed some adult help in case the police came back; he offered myself and my daughter and my son a holiday and the whole camp would be free and everything would be provided if I would help him with the cooking.

Did you do that? - I said to him I would think about it because I hadn't been too well myself, I wouldn't manage it all myself; I told him I would go and discuss it with my friend, Janet, and if she was willing to come I would come, I didn't want to be the only female with all his boys and that so when I went back -- I left the island, I went back and I said to Janet.....Hamilton had already said that Janet's son could come but Janet didn't want to bring her boy.

So did you go back with Janet, did you and Janet go back? - We went back.

Who all else went with you? - Mr. Davie, my daughter and my son.

What age was your daughter? - 7, she was 7.

And your son at that time? - 10½.

How many days after you had left the island was it you went back? - I am sorry?

How many days after you left the island was it you went back? - About three, three I think.

How long did you stay? - Quite a few weeks, four or five weeks.

How did you get on over that period of time with Hamilton? - I didn't.

Why did you stay? - I am a mother, I couldn't leave these kids.

Did/

Did you stay till the end of the camp? - No.

What made you leave? - He threatened me once too often.

What was the threat? - I told him I wanted off the island first thing in the morning, there was no discussion this time, I wanted off, I was going to the local authority, the police, anybody else that would listen and tell them what he was doing to these children and he just calmly turned round and said the very words "I hope your tent doesn't catch fire tonight" and that was it.

Where did you go to when you left the camp? - I asked the boy to take us away in the early hours of the morning, he took us across to Balmaha in a boat to the boatyard.

Where did you go from there? - To the car, it was locked so we had to stay there all night and then drive to Alexandria.

Was that the police office? - Yes.

Did you speak to Sergeant McBain? - I can't tell you the man's name -- yes, I did speak to a policeman.

Did you also, once you got home, get a phone call from the police to get more information from you? - I am sorry, I have to see your face.

When you got home did you get a phone call from the police for more information? - From Alexandria?

Yes? - They told me it was being looked into; I phoned Alexandria several times and I began to feel a nuisance.

Do you remember when you actually got to the Alexandria Police Office and you were looking for a Detective Sergeant McBain? - Yes, because I think that is the one Hamilton kept ranting and raving about.

And did you find him? - No.

Did/

Did you speak to another policeman? - I spoke to a policeman.

Do you remember McBain phoning you later when he came on duty? - I think it was Detective Inspector Hay I spoke to.

What was it you were reporting to the police? - The condition of the camp; when the children found out.....they had heard me saying I was going and the children wasn't to go too, they didn't want to be left on the island with Hamilton; some of them were crying, the youngest ones were upset, they wanted me to take them with me which I couldn't do; I told the kids, I said "I can't take you but I will go straight to the police station and I will tell the police officer you want to come home and they will come for you and take you home".

So/

12.40 p.m.

So what was the general nature of the complaint you were making to the police at that time? - His thumping kids.

Thumping the kids -- you saw that happen? - Yes.

Whereabouts did he hit them, whereabouts on the body? - One boy got a right slap on his leg with his hand, and another one got punched between his shoulder blades, because his fingernails were dirty.

Did you ever see him slap anyone on the face? - Yes. It was at the top of the camp by the water.

Sorry? - He was at the top of the camp, he was away from the fire and he started roaring and shouting at the top of his voice at these boys for speaking. He didn't like the children speaking.

And did he strike any of them on the face? - Yes, he slapped that boy.

One boy? - Yes.

Have I rightly noted you as saying that he, Hamilton, was the person who threatened you before you left the camp? - Yes.

And he threatened you that you should watch out in case your tent was burned? - Sorry?

Did you say he told you to watch out in case your tent was burned? - Yes.

Now then, after you went to the police did he contact you? - He was at the camp.

Did he phone you at all? - There was a phone call.

What was that about? - I really can't remember, it is that long ago. A couple of times when the man phoned I told Uncle Jimmy "Just tell him I am not here".

Did/

Did you get the impression that Hamilton felt victimised by Detective Sergeant McBain? - No. He was sitting laughing about it. He said "Aye, the clod came, but they went away with their tail between their legs". He said "I outsmarted him".

I am reading at the moment from a statement which McBain took from you -- this is a note of your statement on the 26th of August, 1988 when he phoned you to take the statement. Now, do you remember McBain taking a statement from you then? - Over the telephone?

Yes? - No. I remember discussing with one policeman certain aspects of the camp.

One of the things that it says in this statement is that "During my ten-day stay". That suggests you were ten days at the camp? - Sorry?

Do you think you were longer than ten days at the camp? - I was longer.

Well, the statement says "During my ten-day stay I only saw one child being chastised by Hamilton, and in my opinion the boy deserved punishment as he had been bullying other children"? - No. What I have told him was he wasn't bullying other children. He was Hamilton's friend.

The statement also says that you left at 4 a.m. on Sunday, 6th August. Now, 4 a.m. would be the time when you actually left the camp site; is that correct? - During the night.

Just as it got daylight? - Sorry?

Just as it got daylight? - It was pretty dark when I left.

And the reason you gave to the police for leaving was that two other people, not Hamilton, but Williams -- somebody called Williams or William -- Davie and Willie sat drinking cans of beer, and Davie came into our tent very drunk and tried to pull Janet's sleeping bag off her camp bed as he couldn't find his sleeping bag", and that it was Davie that threatened Janet that he would put an axe in her head. Now, did you report that to the police?/

police? - That was part of a statement. That isn't my reason for leaving camp. That was part of a statement, and that concerned the drunken barbeque party that Hamilton and his friends had on the island.

You see, the statement went on to say "Williams" -- this is a person called Steven Williams -- "said he would sit up all night and make sure that Davie wouldn't harm us"? - No. That is for Janet. Janet used to speak a lot to Steven. It was him that we persuaded to take us over on the boat.

Yes. "At 4 a.m. Steven Williams took Janet and I and our children off the island" -- so that bit is right, but was the nature of the complaint you were making.....? - He wouldn't take us earlier, he said he was waiting to make sure Hamilton was sleeping.

So your fear wasn't of Davie, it was of Hamilton? - It was of both of them.

Is it possible you didn't mention the Hamilton threat to the police? - I am sure I did. I don't remember making a statement over the telephone. I do remember going into a room at Alexandria and making a statement.

This statement also makes it clear that you were disgusted by the camp -- would that be right, you were disgusted by the camp? - Yes.

And that you did intend to go -- you told Hamilton you did intend to go and report him -- that is right? - I told him when I left the island I would report him, and that is when he said about my tent getting fired. I had a few stand-up fights with the man concerning plasters for the children's feet, etc.

After you got back from Inchmoan Island you were at home. When was the next time you saw Thomas Hamilton? - I don't know if it was a week or a couple of weeks after we left the camp.

Where did you see him? - He came to my house.

Why did he come? - To tell me he didn't like people talking to the police about him, making statements/statements to the police.

Did he say anything else? - He said he had friends that didn't like people doing that.

And who were the friends he was referring to? - I don't know.

And what else did he say? - He told us he had guns.

Was that the first you had heard about guns from him?
- No.

You had heard before? - Well, he used to rattle on at the camp fire about a lot of things, and I just thought he was a windbag.

On this occasion what did he say about guns? - Just that his friends didn't like people talking about him.

And who did you think he was referring to as "his friends"? - His guns, because he told us at camp the guns were his friends.

Did he frighten you at that stage? - No.

What did you do? - I told him I had nothing more to say to him.....

BY LORD CULLEN: I am sorry, we are missing that. The shorthand writer has got to hear clearly what you are saying, so could you repeat yourself and try to speak as slowly and distinctly as you can. (Shorthand writer repeats uncompleted answer). What did you say after that? -and he had better leave.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: I think that you do have an illness that makes it difficult for you to communicate; is that right? - Yes, my hearing.

And also to speak very clearly? - Yes.

What was the next time after that that you saw Hamilton? - After I had a visit from Inspector Keenan.

Now, /

Now, when was it that you reckon Inspector Keenan came to see you? - January, 1989.

And what was his reason for coming? - He was investigating complaints.

Against whom? - Mr. Hamilton.

Yes. Who had Hamilton complained about? - No. People had made complaints against Mr. Hamilton.

That is how you understand it -- you didn't realise he was investigating a complaint against a policeman? - No.

Or in fact against two police officers -- you didn't get that impression? - I didn't know that.

What people in your family did Mr. Keenan interview? - Myself and my son.

Now, in the course of interviewing your son, did things emerge that you hadn't heard about before? - Yes.

What things emerged? - Well, what he had asked the boys to do.

Well, can you tell us what it was he had asked the boys to do, please? - Rub suntan oil all over him.

And was that something you were hearing about then for the first time? - Yes.

Now, in all the weeks that you were at the camp did you see that happening? - No. Our tent was a good bit down from his. He slept in the same tent as the boys.

After the visit of Mr. Keenan you say that you had another encounter with Hamilton? - Yes.

Where was that? - Bridgend.

And where is Bridgend? - Linlithgow, West Lothian.

What/

What happened then? - Janet Reilly and me were coming back from the shops and we were just getting into my gate when a van slammed up at the pavement and I turned round and it was him, Mr. Hamilton.

What kind of van was it? - A big van -- a Transit.

Do you remember the colour? - No. I know it was light-coloured.

And it was Hamilton that was in it? - Yes.

What happened then? - He rolled the window down and he said "I hear you have been making statements about me to Keenan?". I said "That's right". I said "I just told him about the state of the camp, how you treated the kids, and my own personal opinion of you". And at that he leaned forward, his face was all puffy. When he used to get in a rage his face would go puffy, would blow up and really bulge.

And then what did he do? - He leant forward and I thought he was away to start the engine up, after the mouthful I gave him, and the next thing I heard a click of metal hitting glass, and I looked down and there was a bit of metal there. It didn't register with me right away, and I just looked at him and he said "My friends don't like it".

And then what did you realise? - I looked again and that is when I realised that was a barrel, and I said "Dinnae point that f'n thing at me. I will ram it down your throat". And he just got really bulging and never said a word, off he went.

His face was bulging; is that what you are saying? - Yes. When he got in a temper his face would blow up and he would stare at you -- not stare -- like his eyes coming together, you know.

How long after Mr. Keenan saw you was this? - I can't pinpoint the exact date on that, because Uncle Jimmy died in April, and I went through a distressing time and didn't go anywhere, and I can't really pinpoint the time.

Well, /

Well, was it before or after Uncle Jimmy died? - I think it must have been after.

Do you know the date of his death? - April the 1st.

1989? - Yes.

Was it long after that? - I can't even say truthfully if it was before or after. I can't remember, because Uncle Jimmy took a stroke in the middle of February and I was virtually nursing him 24 hours a day.

What time of the day was it? - It would be between half 2 and 3 o'clock, because we picked Vicky up -- the school bus used to drop Vicky in the main road of the village, and I used to meet her.

And what time did the bus drop her off? - She would be in the village about quarter to 3, 10 to 3.

And she was with you at the time? - Janet?

Yes. Was Vicky with you when it happened too? - Yes. When we came back we picked her up.

And was Janet beside you? - Janet was standing -- she would be at the back of me nearer the gate than I was.

And was that the gate to? - To the house.

So this is right outside your own door? - Sorry?

Right outside your own door? - Yes.

BY LORD CULLEN: What age was Vicky? - Sorry?

What age was she at the time? - Seven.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMY:

Now, do you know what day of the week it was? - Sorry?

Do/

Do you know what day of the week it was? - I can't -- I have a feeling it would be the beginning of the week.

Was there any other reason for you being in the street other than to pick up your daughter? - No.

When Hamilton's van drew up, was it on the same side of the street as your own house? - Yes.

Which window of the van did he open? - The driver's side -- he was driving the van and I was here and he was there.

Was the driver's side right beside you? - Yes. His van was facing up the way, up the crescent.

So it would be on the wrong side of the road then, so that the driver's door was at the pavement? - It would have come up the way, up from the bottom of the crescent towards my house.

But was the driver's door at the pavement side of the road? - Yes.

And this all happened at the driver's window? - Yes.

Now, what did you think he was doing with whatever it was that you saw? - I didn't think anything. I thought the man was a complete idiot. He didn't bother me. We treated him as a joke, a pathetic joke, a bully.

Did you do anything about this incident? - Sorry?

Did you do anything about the incident? - I went into the house.

Yes? - And I said to Janet -- I says "That's not legal. He shouldn't be running about with a gun in his van". And I said "I don't know much about gun laws or that, or anything about guns", but I said "I don't think you can go about, driving about pointing guns"; and we both agreed that we call the law, phone the police station.

And/

And did you? - Yes.

Now, what was the result of phoning the police station? - We got a visit.

Who came to see you -- who came? - Police officers.

In/

1 p.m.

In uniform? - Yes.

More than one officer? - There was a couple of them.

More than one officer came? - Yes.

And do you know the names of these officers? - No.

Which police office had you phoned? - It would be Linlithgow.

Well, was it? It is important to be clear about this. Was it Linlithgow? - I'm sure it would be Linlithgow unless it was unmanned and I couldn't get an answer which it often used to be so we would either have phoned Falkirk or Livingston. I really can't remember which office we phoned.

And you don't know the names of the officers who came from wherever they came? - No.

Can you give me any description of them that would help identify them? - Just police officers. One of them was taller than the other.

Significantly? I mean, was there something significant about the height of either officer? - Not really, no.

What did you tell the police? - I told them about this chap Hamilton. I told them that he had just been up at Bridgend and he had a gun in his van. I said he pointed it out the window. The police officer asked me what kind of van it was. You know, the colour. He asked me why I thought it was a gun, what colour it was, what length it was and did I see the handle. What kind of gun. I couldn't tell him. I don't know one gun from another. I knew it wasn't a rifle because they are big. I told him it was a darkish grey and I told him it was round and he said "That's fine, we'll go and check it out". He asked me if I felt threatened and I said "No, I didn't because he never scared me".

Did he also ask if he had threatened to shoot/shoot you? - I said no he hadn't.

So as far as you were concerned, this was not a threat? - Hamilton just put a bit of metal there. He never said to me "I'm going to shoot you" so he didn't threaten to shoot me but I took it that I was meant to be a bit worried about him.

Just lastly for the moment, I will continue after lunchtime, did the police come back? - Yes, I am sure it was either the next day or the day after that.

What did they tell you? - They told us that they had looked into it and that he was going to a gun club and he was moving the gun from A to B and didn't mean to scare us.

LORD CULLEN: Mrs. Haggar, we are going to break now and resume at 2 o'clock. You must be sure you are back in time to resume your evidence at 2 o'clock.

THE WITNESS: 2 o'clock, yes.

After an adjournment for lunch:

2 p.m.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: If we can now move on from the incident that we were discussing. Can you tell me when you next after that had dealings with Mr. Hamilton? - Sorry, can you say that again?

Yes, what was the next occasion on which you had dealings with Mr. Hamilton? - When I went after him at Linlithgow Academy.

Do you know when that was? - It must have been in May.

In May of 1989? - Yes.

So does that mean that the incident we have just been dealing with was between the 2nd April and the date on which you went after Mr. Hamilton at Linlithgow Academy? - Yes.

So/

So the incident when he turned up at your house in the van must have been some time between these two dates? - Yes. It wasn't the last two weeks in February and it wasn't on to April.

Could it have been in March? - It could have been. No, sorry, it would not have been because Uncle Jimmy took the stroke the third week in February and I was constantly nursing him. I never saw anybody.

Could it have been before the third week in March? - Yes.

Well, if we can now turn to the incident at Linlithgow Academy which was on the 16th May. Now, why were you going after Mr. Hamilton at the Academy? - Because I had been told he had organised another boys camp.

That would be for the summer of 1989? - Yes.

What were you trying to do about that? - Stop him because he was going to get his hands on them.

How were you going to stop him by going after him? - Trying to expose him.

What did you think would happen as a result of what you intended to do that night? - I was told by doing that I would end up in Court and a judge would listen to what I had to say and a proper investigation would be ordered.

What was it you did? - I threw buckets of stuff over him.

What was in the bucket? - Sun tan oil, liquid manure, vinegar, flour and fish manure. Any rubbish stinking stuff I could put my hands on.

Who was with you? - Janet Reilly.

Did you have more than one bucket? - We had a bucket each.

Did you both hit him? - I went after him/him first and I let him have most of mine and then Janet let him have hers and then I emptied the rest of mine on him and kicked him up the backside.

Did he report it to the police? - I didn't. I believe the school janitor did. He phoned the police.

What did Mr. Hamilton do when the police contacted him? - Sorry?

Do you know what Hamilton did when the police contacted him? - No, I just drove home with Janet and waited to see if the policemen came and they did come and they said they had spent more than half an hour with Hamilton and asked him to charge us and he wouldn't so we weren't being charged. I said "Well, that's ridiculous" and Janet said "Are we not even getting cautioned?" and he said no and that was it.

Did the camps go ahead in the summer? - Not that I know of. They withdrew his.....he wasn't allowed to have his boys club in Linlithgow Academy.

Do you know what happened about the camp? - No.

Do you know if by that time people were taking their children out of the club anyway at the Academy? - I don't know because after we hadn't been charged we didn't know anywhere else to go to get him. I had done all I could.

Now, I would like if possible to avoid getting into names of other people involved but I think you were aware of Hamilton having his guns in another family's home in Linlithgow, is that right? - Mrs. Smith was on the phone to me and told me that she had been out somewhere, come back and Hamilton was in the house with her sons and he had either two or three guns.

Can I ask you not to name names now please. Can we avoid if possible disclosing the names of anybody involved in this?

- Yes.

No. The lady in question, was she a friend of yours? -

How/

How did you find out about it? - Her son was at the boys camp.

In 1988? - Yes.

And how did you get to know about Hamilton visiting the house with his guns? - She phoned my house and I told her to report it to the police.

Do you know if she did? - No.

Did you not actually report it to the police? - No, I couldn't. I didn't know where the woman stayed.

After the incident at Linlithgow Academy did you see Hamilton again? - No.

Did you ever hear anything of his activities again? - No, just that some authorities had taken away his lease, you know, for the schools.

LORD CULLEN: Yes, Dean of Faculty?

THE DEAN OF FACULTY: My lord, in the light of the evidence-in-chief I would ask to become a party at this stage in respect of this particular matter. I should advise your lordship that those instructing me have this morning received instructions on behalf of Lothian & Borders Police and they are satisfied that as far as this particular matter is concerned there is no conflict between the police force and those for whom I was originally instructed and I have been instructed to represent both interests in this matter. The nature of the evidence, my lord, does tend to indicate that there may as a result of this evidence be criticism either of officers or the police.

LORD CULLEN: Is this purely for the purposes of putting questions to this witness or is it for some further purpose as well?

THE DEAN OF FACULTY: Well, my lord, at this stage it is for the purposes of cross-examining this witness and depending on what transpires as a result of cross-examination, consideration may require to be given to see whether further evidence should/should be led through the Crown.

LORD CULLEN: So for the time being are you content that it be limited to your role in putting questions to this witness on behalf of the interest that you have explained to me?

THE DEAN OF FACULTY: Yes, my lord.

LORD CULLEN: Yes, I'm quite happy that you should proceed, Dean of Faculty. Would you prefer to take some other seat? There is a space over here which has been vacated, if you would like to have that, and bring whatever papers you have with you. Now, are you ready, Dean?

THE DEAN OF FACULTY: Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY THE DEAN OF FACULTY:
Can you hear me all right? - Yes.

Can I just be quite clear; you have told the Inquiry about the incident when Mr. Hamilton came in his van and had a gun. Do you remember that? - Yes.

Was there only one incident where a gun was produced? - Janet said that the first time he came to the door she thought he had a gun in his pocket, in his anorak pocket, but I didn't see that.

Well, I think that is quite important. What I am interested to know is what you yourself saw? - I didn't see it.

So the only occasion on which you saw a gun was in the van, is that right? - That is right, except at the camp he had a rifle.

Sorry? - Except for at the camp he had a rifle.

At the camp he had a rifle? - Yes, at the camp.

Now, was there an occasion when Mr. Hamilton came to your door, actually on the doorstep of your house, and you sent someone to go for Janet? - I sent one of the children to go down for Janet because I saw him coming.

And/

And is that the occasion that you say that Janet mentioned some time afterwards that there was a gun? - Yes.

Or she thought there was. Can we go back then to the van incident? - Sorry?

Can we go back to the incident where he is in his van. You have told us that your Uncle Jimmy died on the 1st April of 1989? - Yes.

And for some time before that you were nursing your Uncle Jimmy and really were not out of the house, is that right? - To the supermarket and that, yes.

Now, can you think back and can you remember whether your Uncle Jimmy was alive at the time that the van came to the house? - I'm sorry, I can't. He was alive the first time Hamilton came.

This was when he was on the doorstep, was it? - That's right.

What I'm interested in is the time he came in his van and sat in his van that you have told us about. Was your Uncle Jimmy still alive then or had he died? - I couldn't say for certain.

Have you been asked about this by other people, by police officers? - Yes.

Can you remember what you told them as far as the date is concerned? - No, we tried to work the dates through but we still weren't satisfied. The officer said somewhere about then and I said it could have been.

And was the best that you could do that it was probably after your Uncle Jimmy had died? Was that the best that you could do at that time? - As I told the officer, I couldn't tell him.

At any rate, you are quite clear that it was before the incident in Linlithgow Academy? - Oh, yes, because I never saw him after that.

And was it some time before that? - Yes.

A/

A good few weeks? - Yes, it would have been.

Now, thinking to the incident at Linlithgow Academy and trying to work back to the time that the van came to your house, are you able to say that we are talking about weeks rather than months? - Well, when he came I know it was after Inspector Keenan had been because he said he knew we had been talking to Keenan. I think it must have been before Jimmy took the stroke which would have been at the end of February.

So we are talking now about a time span of somewhere between February and the 16th May if that was the date of the Linlithgow Academy incident? - It would have been weeks before Linlithgow. It would have been because after Uncle Jimmy died I was emotionally upset because he was like my father and I rarely ventured out anywhere.

Now, as far as the time of day is concerned that this van came to your door, you have told us that it was in the afternoon after you had collected your daughter from the bus, is that right? - Yes, that is right.

Was that always your recollection or did you ever think it was a different time of day? - No, because the bus used to come an hour later and Vicky's school finished and she would be home just before three.

No, I don't think that we are thinking about the same point. You have given a statement about this matter to other people, is that right? Police officers? - Yes, I have.

And when you gave a statement to the police officers did you think that it was in the morning or the afternoon? - No, the only reason I might have said it was in the morning was if Vicky had not been at school, if she was off unwell then she would have been with me but otherwise, to come back from the bus at that time, it would have been when I picked her up from the bus.

So there is no doubt in your mind that it was the afternoon that this incident took place. If anyone else suggested that it was the morning that/that the van was there, would that be wrong? - I couldn't truthfully answer that yes or no.

Have you spoken to Janet about this incident since it happened? - There was a woman from London actually badgering me to go on a programme and I wouldn't. She got somebody down there to get Janet to phone me to try and persuade me. That was the first time I knew she had heard from Janet. I wouldn't.

You say that after this incident you contacted the police, is that right? - Yes.

Was it you who telephoned the police? - It would have been me that phoned. Janet didn't have a phone.

Was Janet present when you telephoned the police? - Janet was in the house, yes.

Before you went back into the house you say that Janet was standing nearer the gate than you, is that right? - She was standing with my daughter. She would be back from me.

And would your daughter and Janet be able to see the van window? - If they were looking at him, yes.

So if they were looking they should have been able to see the gun as well? - They would have seen the bit of metal in the window, in the glass.

A bit of metal in the shape of the barrel of the gun? - That is right.

BY LORD CULLEN: Just to be clear; where was this bit of metal inside the van? - It was about that much just hanging over, you know, the window. The window was wound down and there was about that much of glass still up and the metal was resting on the window.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY THE DEAN OF FACULTY: So the metal would be partly inside and partly outside? - Most of it was inside.

But it would be just sticking out? - About/

About that sticking past the glass on the outside.

Indicating what, about 2 inches or something? - A couple of inches, yes.

Yes, so it was clearly visible to you? - The metal was, yes.

And it would be quite clearly visible to Janet and your daughter if they were looking at the driver, is that right? - Yes.

Would it surprise you that Janet does not appear to have any recollection of seeing a piece of metal although she does speak about looking into the van? - No, it wouldn't surprise me.

Why not? - Janet and I had a conversation on the telephone about that.

When did you have a conversation on the telephone about that? - A week ago.

Now, how did you know that there was a difference in the story that you were giving and that Janet was giving about this piece of metal? - Because the policeman from Stirling told me.

And when you were told that, did you telephone Janet? - No, I can't telephone Janet.

Well, how did you come to speak to her on the telephone? - She always phones on a Monday from the pub and I said to her what the Stirling policeman had said to me and she said "That's a load of f---ing rubbish" and I said "Well, you better phone Stirling and get it sorted then and if they are telling lies or is it just the fact that you are doing the same as you did before".

What/

2.25 p.m.

What do you mean by that? - Well, there was a big case in England where Janet changed her testimony at the last minute but when she went into Court she admitted that the statement that she gave, chopping and changing, was because she was frightened of people.

Well, Mrs. Haggar, why did you think it necessary to mention this difference in your evidence when Janet telephoned you? - I just wanted to hear why she did it, that's all.

Apart from speaking with Janet about this matter have you spoken to anybody else? - I spoke to Steve about it.

Who is Steve? - A friend of the family.

As far as you know is he on the List of Witnesses for this Inquiry? - No.

Anyone else? - Netta.

Who is Netta? - My friend.

As far as you know is she on the List of Witnesses for this Inquiry? - No.

And just for the record are you aware that Janet is on the List of Witnesses? - She phoned me up on Friday telling me she wasn't f'ing going, she said the only reason she told Stirling or she said that she would go was she wanted no part of this.

Can you answer the question; are you aware that Janet is on the list of witnesses whether she is coming or not? - Yes, I am.

Have you spoken to anyone else who is on the list of witnesses about this matter? - No.

What about your daughter? - No, well, she would hear the conversation in the kitchen and on the telephone.

So apart from hearing the conversation between/between..... is that a conversation between you and Janet? - Yes.

Is that a conversation that you say took place last Monday? - Last Monday?

Yes? - It was either last Monday or the Monday before.

Is your daughter always in the kitchen when you were on the telephone with Janet? - Well, my daughter usually answers the telephone or Steve -- in fact, it was Steve that answered the phone on Friday.

Let me just concentrate on the telephone conversation that you were telling us about that you had with Janet; was your daughter in the kitchen when you had that conversation with Janet? - The kitchen or the dining room.

What I want to know is have you spoken to your daughter about the evidence that you are going to give at this Inquiry about that incident in the van? - My daughter and I rarely speak.

Would you like to answer the question? - No, I didn't.

Have you spoken with your daughter about the incident, about the evidence that you were going to give relating to the incident in the van? - No.

Are you aware that your daughter gave a statement to police officers? - Yes.

How old is your daughter now? - 15.

Are you aware that a statement was taken from your daughter at your home by Detective Constable Mitchell on the 11th April 1996? - By whom?

By Detective Constable Mitchell, a police officer? - Is that from Stirling?

Yes? - Yes.

Are you aware that your daughter said that she didn't remember ever seeing the incident in relation/relation to the van but depended upon what you had told her? - No.

Well, did you tell your daughter about Mr. Hamilton coming to the house in a van on the occasion you have spoken about? - No.

Did you tell your daughter that Mr. Hamilton had a gun? - No.

So are you saying that at no time between 1989 and the present day did you tell your daughter that Mr. Hamilton had come in a van and had had a gun? - My daughter was there.

Well, listen to the question and remember at the beginning you took a.....? - She would have heard me saying.....

Could you let me finish please; can you remember that you took an oath to tell the truth today; did you between 1989 and today at any stage tell your daughter about Mr. Hamilton coming to the house in a van? - My daughter was there when he came in the van, I didn't have to tell her.

Do you understand the question, Mrs. Haggar? - No.

Can I repeat it and could you answer it Yes or No please; did you at any stage between 1989 and today tell your daughter that Mr. Hamilton had come to your house in a van? - No.

Would you answer this question Yes or No please; did you at any stage between 1989 and today tell your daughter that Mr. Hamilton had a gun when he was in the van? - No.

Before asking you more questions about the van incident could I ask you about one or two other matters. Was your house one which was frequently visited by police officers following upon requests made by you for the police to attend? - Yes.

And in case anything wrong is read into that did that mostly relate to difficulties with neighbours that you had? - Yes and No.

Well/

Well, let us leave that then; can you give the Inquiry some indication of the frequency of attendances of police officers at your house? - When Uncle Jimmy was..... that is the man I looked after, I got the police then, when Uncle Jimmy crashed his car, when the hunt got my cat, when Janet was on a bender, when the windows..... when Janet's windows were smashed and my windows were smashed, when the next door had a broken greenhouse, a fire, I had a fire, when I got my bench and table stolen out of the back garden, my son had a motor bike thing, a scrambler he shouldn't have been on, my daughter being on a digger which she shouldn't have been, when a police officer got attacked and Mr. Davie, when I phoned the police about him when he assaulted my son -- that is about it.

And is it fair to say that you got to know the local police officers quite well as a result of their not infrequent visits to your house? - I knew some of them by sight, Janet knew them all by name, she would tell me which one was which.

And once you had been involved in an incident of whatever type was it your practice to phone up to find out how things were going? - Yes, when Davie was badly kicked when he was burning his stuff out the back because the man was taunting us all the time and I asked one of the police officers could he put a stop to it.

No, what I am suggesting to you is that once you made a complaint or asked the police to come to the house you then phoned up for a progress report to find out how things were getting on as far as the police were concerned? - No, not always I didn't.

But that happened quite frequently, didn't it? - When I wanted to find out what was going to happen to Uncle Jimmy because he had a stroke seemingly when he was driving I had to phone them then because police officers told me if I hadn't approached them to let them know I had the hassle with David getting taunted and I wanted to know what they were going to do about it; the police came to my house when my son was attacked at the Youth Centre; I told a boy off and I was charged with it, my nails caught his neck so I was charged/charged.

I don't want to go into that but as far as Mr. Hamilton is concerned did you contact Inspector Keenan at Stirling Police Station after you had been at the camp? - Would that be Central?

Central, yes? - Yes, I did.

And you wanted to find out what progress was being made about your concerns about the camp? - No, I wanted to find out what was happening.

About Mr. Hamilton's behaviour at the camp? - That's right.

Is that right? - Yes.

Now, that was after the incident involving the van that you have told us about? - Sorry?

That was after the incident involving the van? - Yes, it would have been.

When you spoke to Mr. Keenan to get progress did you mention to him that you had been threatened? - I actually couldn't tell you.

So just to be quite clear, did you mention to him that Mr. Hamilton had had a gun in the van outside your house? - I may have done, I couldn't tell you.

Well, after the incident that you have told us about with the van there was an incident at Linlithgow Academy, is that right? - Yes.

And before that incident, between the incident of the van and the Linlithgow Academy incident, you contacted a reporter, is that right? - I had spoken to someone who told me that he had another camp organised and it was suggested that he should expose.....

He should what? - It was suggested he should be exposed to try and stop the camps.

Well/

2.40 p.m.

Well, I wonder, Mrs. Haggar, if you can just listen to the question, and if possible answer it yes or no, subject to any explanation you feel necessary. Before the Linlithgow Academy incident but after the incident you have told us about with the van you contacted a reporter at the Lothian Courier newspaper; is that correct? - Yes.

Was that someone called Butterwick? - It may have been.

Was it a man or a lady? - A woman.

And when you spoke to that lady did you tell her about Mr. Hamilton's camps and your concerns about the camps? - Yes.

Did you tell her about Mr. Hamilton having a gun outside your house in the van? - No.

Why not? - Because I wanted the woman to come to Linlithgow when we went and threw that stuff so that she would put it in the paper and parents would see it, read it and make up their own minds whether to send their children there any more.

But if Mr. Hamilton had pointed a gun at you, do you not think this is something that parents would have been concerned about and would have stopped their children from having anything to do with him? - The time that was taken for investigations -- time was running out, to stop the camp.

Mrs. Haggar, because time was running out presumably you would be anxious to tell the reporter about all the bad things that Mr. Hamilton was doing and why parents should not send their children to his camp? - I would tell the woman about his treatment of the children. They were my main concern.

But didn't you think that his having a gun and pointing it at you was also a matter of concern which parents might take on board? - No, because to molest a child is worse.

Very well. At any rate, after you had contacted/contacted Miss Butterwick at the Lothian Courier you explained to her on the telephone your concerns and then she came to see you; is that right? - No. We met -- yes, she did come.

She came to your house? - Yes.

So there were two opportunities, there was a telephone call and then there was a detailed interview at the house, before Linlithgow Academy? - She didn't stay long.

But there was an opportunity for you to say what you wanted? - About the children, yes.

About anything you wanted? - No. My concern was the children.

But if you had wanted to you could have said about the gun? - I could have, but the children was my main concern.

Well, when you went to the Academy the Press were there and took photographs of the incident; is that correct? - I didn't see anybody taking photographs.

Were you annoyed when the police decided not to take any proceedings against you? - Yes.

Was that because you were anxious to have a platform from which you could decry Mr. Hamilton? - Yes. I wanted to be arrested. I was told if it was brought into court I could say what I knew and what I had heard my son say and that somebody, the judge, would order an investigation. That is what I was told, and that is the reason I did it.

And when you discovered that you were not to be prosecuted and that you didn't have this opportunity, did you speak to Miss Butterwick again with a view to getting a further article in the newspaper? - I don't remember. I think I asked her why it hadn't appeared in the paper.

And is it fair to say that you have never mentioned to Miss Butterwick in any of your interviews or conversations with her about this incident in the van? - This incident?

In/

In the van? - No, I didn't.

And the first time that you mentioned this alleged incident in the van was on Friday or Thursday, rather, the 14th of March of this year, and a report of your allegation appeared in the popular Press on Friday the 15th of March; isn't that correct? - It was my daughter that said first.

Well, Mrs. Haggar, the first time that you mentioned to the Press about this allegation relating to the van was the day after this tragedy, the disaster that we are enquiring into; isn't that right? - Yes.

And it appeared in the popular Press on Friday 15th March of this year; is that right? - Yes.

And in one newspaper you were quoted as having said that the gun was held to your head? - That is right.

Now, was that true? - No.

I want you to think carefully about this, Mrs. Haggar. As far as the alleged incident involving the van is concerned, you have told us that that was some time in the afternoon, and certainly after 3 o'clock because that is when you picked up your daughter, at quarter to 3; is that right? - If she was at school, yes.

Yes. And as far as the time is concerned, are you talking about somewhere between 3 and half past 3 or what? - At quarter to 3 -- well, the bus would have got to the village at quarter to 3. It could have been 3 or just after.

Just after 3 o'clock? - 3.

And this incident at the gate wouldn't take very long, would it? - No.

A matter of a few minutes? - Yes.

And then did you go straight into the house? - Yes.

And/

And did you phone immediately to the police? - No. I think I talked -- I was a bit thingummied and I talked it with Janet.

You were a bit what? - Fed up, annoyed at him.

And how long did you talk with Janet about it? - About five minutes.

So that you would telephone the police what -- certainly before half past 3, on that time scale? - About half past 3.

And do I understand that you would normally phone Linlithgow Police Station? - That is right.

If you ever had any complaints to make? - Yes.

So your recollection would be that some time about half past 3 you phoned Linlithgow Police Station? - Yes.

You see, you mentioned other police stations in your evidence-in-chief? - Sorry?

When you were giving evidence this morning you mentioned the names of other police stations -- Falkirk and Livingston? - No. If Linlithgow Police Station -- if you couldn't get through, you phoned Livingston.

And can you remember if you could get through that afternoon? - No.

Do you know whether Linlithgow was usually manned in an afternoon because it was linked to the Sheriff Court? - Sorry?

Did you know whether Linlithgow Police Station? - Yes.

Was the office which dealt with the local Sheriff Court? - They are next to one another.

Next to one another? - Yes.

And do you know that the Linlithgow Station/

Station is usually manned during the week in an afternoon? - No, I don't know.

So that if it was manned and you phoned Linlithgow at 3.30 then the likelihood would be that you would speak to someone at Linlithgow? - Yes.

Are you aware that there was a system of logging calls at Linlithgow at that time? - I don't know the procedure.

Would it surprise you that there is no record of any call having been received from you relating to an incident at a van? - No.

Why not? - Because I have already been told there isn't.

Well, doesn't that suggest to you that there wasn't any such call made? - There was a call made.

You see, might it be with your frequent involvement with making calls to the police about different matters, that you are confusing this with some other incident? - No.

And that in fact at no time have you reported to the police in Lothian and Borders that Mr. Hamilton had a gun or anything that looked like a gun and pointed it at you from his van -- you just never reported that at all, did you? - I did phone.

Would you accept that if you made such a report, that that is something which would be -- which should be taken seriously by police officers anywhere? - Sorry?

Would you accept that the pointing of a gun at someone is something which should be taken seriously by police officers? - Yes.

Would you accept that in the context of Linlithgow it is an event which would probably stand out in the memory of police officers, the use of a gun? - Yes.

Would it not therefore surprise you that there is no record of any such incident having been reported?/

reported? - No.

Why not? - Because I have been told there isn't.

Is that the only reason why it wouldn't surprise you? - Yes.

So when you were told that there was no record of this call or this complaint by you, were you surprised? - Yes.

Did it occur to you that you might be confused with the passage of time and the distress caused by the report of the incident at Dunblane? - Could you say that last bit again?

Were you distressed when you heard about the incident at Dunblane Primary School? Were you upset? - Yes.

And did it occur to you that this upset might have caused you to think that you may have reported an incident relating to Mr. Hamilton when you hadn't? - No.

I think I put it to you earlier that you spoke to Inspector Keenan at Central Police Office. Was that in early May, before the Linlithgow incident, before the Academy incident? - He came to my house at the end of January.

Yes, but you also telephoned him about May shortly before the incident at Linlithgow Academy; is that right? - The last time I spoke to him, he phoned me.

Well, there was a telephone conversation between you and him sometime at the beginning of May shortly before the Academy incident? - That is right.

And in the course of that conversation did you ask him how investigations were going into the complaints about the camps?

- Yes.

And is it also the case that you never, at that stage, made any mention of the van incident? - I didn't.

I/

I think my learned friend Mr. Bonomy, the first gentleman who asked you questions, asked about the identity of the officers that you say came to your house about the van incident. Now, can I ask you a few more questions about that? You knew many of the officers from Linlithgow; is that right? - By sight.

By sight. And isn't it also the case that on occasions if you didn't get a satisfactory answer when you phoned up about one of your outstanding complaints, you would ask to speak to another officer by name? - The one that I knew was dealing with it, yes.

But if he didn't give you the right answer would you not also ask to speak to someone else, by name? - No. He wouldn't know what I was talking about.

Do you know a Sergeant Lynch? - Yes.

What is his first name? - I don't know. I know him by his face.

What about his face? - It is like burned.

He has got a burn mark on his face? - I think it is burned.

Was/

3.00 p.m.

Was he one of the officers who came? - No.

Are you quite sure about that? - Yes.

If anyone else was to suggest that the officer with the burn mark came to the house that would be a mistake? - It wasn't Lynch.

Now, you were asked this this afternoon about a telephone call made to Central Scotland Police about Mr. Hamilton having taken a gun to somebody else's house; I don't want you to name names but do you remember being asked about that? - Yes.

Was that about the 20th May, 1989? - I couldn't tell you.

Wasn't it you who made that telephone call? - No.

If the caller gave the name, Mrs. Haggar, can you explain that? - No.

If the caller said that she was concerned that Mr. Hamilton was in Linlithgow with a gun and would use the gun against her, that is the caller, having given the name Mrs. Haggar can you explain that? - No, I would have to give an address and I didn't know the person's concerned address.

What about Janet Reilly, would she know the address of the person concerned? - No, Janet didn't really know people outside the village.

Did it surprise you, having reported this matter as you say, that is the matter about the van, to the police, did it surprise you that you didn't hear of any action apparently being taken? - I told the officers, it was a couple of days later, there was two officers came back to the house and said they had looked into the matter and he was a gun club member and he was transporting the gun and it wasn't meant to frighten anybody.

Did that surprise you, that explanation, that/that no action was being taken? - No, because he never threatened me with a gun.

Well, he pointed it at you, according to you? - But he didn't say he would shoot me and he was laughable anyway.

Are you saying that you didn't treat it seriously? - No.

Just to be quite clear, did you treat it seriously? - No.

Well, I have to suggest to you that whatever happened outside your house in relation to the van incident, if anything happened, that there was no report ever made by you to officers of Lothian and Borders Police; that is what I am suggesting to you? - Well, you are free to do that.

And for whatever reason you have decided to come forward after the tragedy at Dunblane and disclose this matter to the National Press? - It wouldn't have been brought out if it hadn't been for my daughter saying it first.

And if your daughter has no recollection or didn't see any such gun or anything of that sort and is basing her version of events entirely on what you have told her.....? - My daughter made a complaint about the way the first statement was taken from her by Stirling Police.

And that Janet Reilly has indicated that she didn't see any gun on the occasion that the van was there and certainly not any gun being pointed at you? - Janet Reilly spoke about the gun on the programme..... to a World in Action reporter.

Have you received any benefit as a result of your statement to the Press? - Sorry?

Have you received any benefit as a result of your statement to the Press? - I was offered several sums of money; the photographs that first came out in the newspaper without my permission, I came to an arrangement with the newspapers that all the money that came from that was to go to the Dunblane Fund and I haven't received/received one penny and I don't want any money.

There was an offer of money? - I was offered money.

And something was published without your permission, is that right? - That's right.

It was in that context of the publication of something without your permission that you secured an arrangement that the money would be paid to the Dunblane Fund? - That is correct, everything.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Without going into the details of this I understand that you are suffering from quite a serious illness, is that right? - It is multiple sclerosis.

That has affected your hearing? - It has affected my sight a bit and my legs and my arms and I have accidents now and again and my waterworks.

Just to let you know I understand that this isn't an easy experience for you and if you don't hear anything I am saying or understand what I am saying please just take your time and I will repeat matters for you -- okay? - Yes.

Could we go back to the camp on Inchmoan Island at Loch Lomond; I think that you were asked some questions earlier on today in connection with a statement that you gave to Strathclyde Police, Alexandria, about your experiences and about Hamilton at the camp? - Inspector Hay.

No, I am going back to the Alexandria Police, back to the camp, the summer camp, that you attended with Hamilton and the boys; you will be provided with a copy of that statement which is in KI; now, we can read this? - Yes.

If you take it from me this is a statement that is prepared by the police in Alexandria after their conversation with you and if you look please at the fourth page of that document, the top of the page there, it is recorded that you make reference to drinking water facilities that were on the island? - Yes, fresh water.

You/

You say there that "There was no fresh water on the island. A bucket of water was drawn from the loch and this was used for washing and cleaning teeth. Another bucket was used for drinking water, but the water wasn't boiled first and one cup was shared by everyone when they wanted a drink"? - When they were cleaning their teeth they had to pass the cup along.

And is that an accurate summary of the arrangements on the island for drinking water? - Drinking water, he just took the bucket out of the loch.

What were the toilet arrangements? - They had to go to the woods until Mr. Davie dug a hole.

There is reference in your statement here to a dry chemical toilet in a filthy-smelly condition? - Yes, that is correct, Mr. Davie fixed that.

If we turn on to the next page of your statement please towards the bottom of the page, do you see it? - Yes.

There is a reference to some alcohol drinks being brought to the island; do you see that, just look at the statement with me; there is a reference to bottles of Bacardi, Vodka, a bottle of Martini, 15 to 20 cans of beer and they offered a drink but you refused because you don't drink -- do you see that? - I do drink Bacardi but they only had beer and spirits.

What I want to ask you is whether Hamilton or others would bring drinks on to the island? - They used to go off at night; it was a laugh, they used to say they were away for dry firewood but they were away to the hotel for a drink; the only night there were boxes of drink brought on was that night when there was a barbecue when strangers were there.

You then became concerned about what was happening in the camp when Andrew was sent home and told you what was happening? - Yes.

And then at a later stage Inspector Keenan/

Keenan was in your house asking Andrew some questions about his experience at the camp, do you remember that, do you remember Inspector Keenan coming to your house? - I remember I got a shock today when he told me why he was there, that is not what he told me.

You remember you told us that one of the things that Andrew said happened was that Mr. Hamilton would ask the boys to rub suntan lotion over his body? - Yes.

What clothes did Hamilton have on when this was being done, according to Andrew's recollection? - Pants.

I am sorry? - Pants, underpants.

So Hamilton had some clothing on when this was being done? - Sometimes not.

Sometimes not -- so sometimes are we to understand that according to Andrew's recollection Hamilton sometimes asked the boys to rub suntan lotion on his body when he was naked? - Yes.

Whereabouts on his body? - All over.

I am not talking about anything improper here but did Hamilton appear to have any natural affection or show any kindness towards the boys; what was the general attitude towards the boys, as you saw it? - He had affection for two, the rest he bullied, made their lives a misery.

You have been asked a lot of questions about an incident when Hamilton had a gun in his van and I think you told us that you saw the barrel of the gun? - Yes.

I want you to think very carefully, can you remember anything else about the barrel of the gun; was there anything about it in particular that you remember? - It had a bit sticking up at the end of it.

Well/

3.15 p.m.

Well, you are indicating -- how big was this thing sticking up? - It was small.

Was it on top of the barrel? - Yes, at the end of it.

At the end of the barrel? - Yes, because at first I thought it was just a bit of metal.

What did it look like to you? - It was round.

How big was it? Can you give us any indication how big it was -- I know it is difficult after this long time? - About that length.

Are you referring there to the piece of metal on top of the barrel, or the length of the barrel itself? - No, sorry, the length of metal that I could see.

I just want to be clear about this. There are two things we are talking about. One is the barrel of the gun itself and the other is the piece of metal on top of the barrel. How big was the piece of metal on top of the barrel? - About that.

About half an inch? - Just sticking up.

How long was that piece that was sticking up, can you remember, roughly? - Just about that.

About the same again. You remember you were asked certain questions about the occasion when a lady made mention of Hamilton taking his gun to her house. Perhaps trying to measure it by reference to the Linlithgow Academy incident, how long before -- this was before the Linlithgow Academy incident; am I right? - I think it was.

How long before? - I couldn't tell you.

Was it a long time before, or was it round about the same time as the Linlithgow incident? - I really can't remember.

Could you look please at Production D76L? - Sorry?

The/

The Production will be given to you -- D76L, which is in Volume L(iii). Now, this is a copy from an incident log of Central Scotland Police, and you will see in the top right-hand corner it is dated the 20th May, 1989 and it bears to be from Doreen Haggar, 57 Auldhill Crescent, Bridgend, Linlithgow -- do you see that, in the top left-hand corner? - Yes.

And then there is a telephone number there? - Yes.

If you look over that document, does this help you at all -- do you have any recollection of this? - Can I read it?

Yes, take your time? - No. This doesn't mean anything.

There is a reference at the bottom of that document to an incident that happened in October, 1988; do you see that -- it just says at the bottom "Incident happened October, 1988". You may be unable to help us with this, but now can you recollect what that is a reference to? Can you help us with that at all? - Sorry?

Can you help us -- what is that referring to. If you can't help us, just say, but there is a reference there in this log dated 20th May, 1989 at the bottom of the page to an incident that happened in October, 1988. Now, the main comment relates to the lady who had the visit from Mr. Hamilton bringing the guns -- do you see that, in the main body of the document, and then at the bottom of the page do you see the words "Incident happened October, 1988". If you can't help us, please just say, but do you know what that is a reference to? - No.

Did you ever know what kind of guns Mr. Hamilton had? - No. I am reading this here, but I couldn't tell you one from the other. All the woman said to me was he had three guns in her house -- two or three.

You see the document says again, just towards the bottom of the main paragraph, just about halfway down: "Mrs. Haggar thinks Hamilton could become violent and use weapons against her as she was/was involved in reporting Hamilton for complaints involving children"; do you see that? - Yes, I see it.

Now, is that something which you said to the police, or has somebody else told the police this? - When the woman phoned me, I advised her to contact the police.

I am sorry? - When the woman phoned me and told me about these things I advised her to contact the police. She said she would discuss it with her husband, and that is the last time I heard about it. I don't know where that woman stayed. I knew she was from Glasgow, but I didn't know -- all I know is it is one of the better areas.

Again I know it is very difficult at this long remove in time? - Sorry?

I know it is difficult because these are events a long time ago we are talking about. Can you help us with this: the document says "Mrs. Haggar thinks Hamilton could become violent and use weapons against her as she was involved in reporting Hamilton for complaints involving children". Now, we can read that on the document. It would appear the police officer has written that down as a result of the report which was made to the officer. What I am wondering is: do you recollect ever saying that to a police officer at that time, May, 1989, in a report relating to this lady? - No.

I think you told the learned Dean of Faculty earlier that you don't recall contacting the police at all about this incident when the lady had a visit from Hamilton with the guns? - I couldn't, because I couldn't tell anybody where she stayed. All I had was the woman's phone number.

So if that is right, it must follow that somebody else made this report and said what we read here; is that right? - The man from Stirling told me.

You have told us about the time when you decided to take action yourself and throw unpleasant material over Mr. Hamilton. At that time did you have a concern that nothing was being done about Hamilton? - I was told by Keenan that he had 40 statements/statements taken from boys. By the time they got to his superior and then to the CPS, if they were going to prosecute him, it would be too late to stop the camp, and I said "Well, you have got to do something".

We heard this morning that as a direct result of your action Lothian Region decided to stop Hamilton from using their premises? - Yes.

Were you aware of that? - Not till later. I had phoned Melville Gray before that, and I told him what I had heard by son say, and Melville Gray said to me "We had heard something like that, along the lines, before" -- about Mr. Hamilton, but he hadn't any proof.

Now, going back to the incident at the van when you saw the gun, I think you have told us that you yourself didn't feel threatened -- in fact, I think you told us you said something like you would ram the gun down Hamilton's throat if he didn't stop pointing it at you? - I said "pointing that thing at me".

Now, after the terrible events of the 13th of March this year did this incident seem to be more important than it was before? - No, because it was always a threat to children. You haven't been there and seen him. He was in his glory when he got a child crying. I had many a stand-up fight with him.

You have told us that you didn't tell the Linlithgow Academy incident reporter about the time when Hamilton pointed the gun at you? - That is right.

I think you have told us that at that time your main concern related to his conduct towards young boys? - Sorry?

I think you have told us that at that time your main concern was his conduct towards young boys? - What I heard my son say.

But after the terrible events of the 13th March did you think back about the time when he pointed the gun at you? - No, I thought about the camp, those kids at the camp.

When/

When you were being asked questions by the learned Dean of Faculty, he reminded you I think about a quote in the newspaper after the events of the 13th March, when a newspaper quoted you as saying that Hamilton had held a gun to your head? - That is right.

That was quoted in the newspaper? - Yes, that is right.

Did you say that to the newspaper reporter? - No. I phoned him up and asked him why he had printed the rubbish. I even consulted a lawyer about the Sun, the P. & J. and the Record - the Press and Journal.

The officers who came to see you about the incident with the gun in the van, do you know whether they came from Lothian and Borders Police or from Central Scotland Police? - That is what I have been trying to rack my brain, but at the time -- are you referring to at the time?

Yes, you had the incident, the gun was pointed at you. You saw the gun in the van, you reported it to the police. Police officers came responding to your call. Did you know at the time whether they came from Lothian and Borders or from Central Scotland Police? - I said to the chap at Stirling "It bugs me because that is why I can't remember the names, because I should have remembered the names".

What I am wondering is whether at the time you knew which police force they came from? - I took it it would be Linlithgow, if I phoned Linlithgow.

I think you have told us that you told them you didn't feel threatened by this incident? - No.

And I think you have told us today that you didn't treat it as a particularly serious matter yourself? - No.

Did you gain any impression as to whether the police officers were treating it seriously -- did they regard it as a serious matter? - They did ask questions about it, yes.

Did they seem to be -- if you can't remember, please just say, but did they seem to you to be regarding this as a serious incident? - I can't remember.

Can/

3.30 p.m.

Can you remember how your son found out about the boys club at Linlithgow? - It was a leaflet, there was lots of leaflets put in the primary school, someone was handing them round.

And you allowed him to go? - There was nothing else for him to do and I thought it would be good for him.

Did you think because it was being held in the school premises that it had been checked? - At first I thought it was to do with the school because he had brought it home from school; it wasn't until the next week that I found out that it was not anything to do with the school, it was a private run thing.

Did you think at that time because it was in the school that someone would have checked it out before it was allowed to happen? - Yes.

LORD CULLEN: Now, Mr. Taylor, this witness has already been cross-examined fairly thoroughly.

MR. TAYLOR: Yes, my lord.

LORD CULLEN: Are there any questions that you wish to put particularly directed to Central Scotland Police.

MR. TAYLOR: Yes my lord but I don't wish to trample over ground already covered.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: Mr. Haggar, can you tell us why it was you sent your son to the camp in the first place? - It was an adventure, he liked being out in the country, it was a holiday and other boys there, you know.

Did you think that the camp might toughen him up a bit? - Well, it is an experience for him, hiking and making him stronger, keeping them away from t.v. and that.

Did you consider that at the time before your son was sent that he might be in need of a bit of toughening up? - Yes.

And/

And when your son returned am I right in thinking that his principal complaint was one of homesickness? - I thought it was because it was the first time he had been away from home.

You have told us you then visited the camp and had spoken to Mr. Hamilton and agreed that you would return some days later? - I am sorry?

You have told us after your son's return to home you then visited the camp and at Mr. Hamilton's request agreed to go back to help out? - Yes, I went over there to pick up my son's stuff.

And you agreed after that to go back and stay for a period of time at the camp? - Yes.

When you visited the camp for the first time to see Mr. Hamilton and collect your son's stuff did you form an adverse view of it? - I asked him where all the stuff was and he said it was on the island and I asked him about throwing him off the boat and I asked him about the food he was giving them and that is when he told me he had been let down, the person who normally does the cooking wasn't there and he couldn't get the bit he was supposed to go to with the buildings, the indoor facilities; I believed him.

And you then returned presumably to help him, is that right? - Yes.

And you spent, as you told us this morning, some four to five weeks at the camp and you told us again today and to a question put to you by Mr. Campbell a few moments ago that the camp was, in your view, not a very hygienic place; is that a reasonable way of putting it? - When we first arrived the boys clothes and everything was dumped lying on the ground.

Did the camp improve when you were there? - Yes.

Was your son pleased to return to the camp? - He would only go back with me on the condition that he wouldn't have to go anywhere with Hamilton, he wouldn't have to sleep in Hamilton's tent.

You/

You were accompanied by Mr. Davie? - Yes.

Who is he? - Mr. Davie?

Why did he accompany you? - He and I had a friendship for a while, he drove us there.

Mr. Campbell asked you if you would read part of the statement which you had given to Strathclyde Police; I wonder if you could have before you, I think one finds it in D1K, I think we see on the third page which in my copy is 61 at the top right hand corner there is a reference to there having been no food and no fresh fruit or vegetables, do you see that?

LORD CULLEN: What it says is "Hardly any food".

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

TAYLOR: Sorry, there was hardly any food, no fresh fruit or vegetables, do you see that? - I am sorry.

LORD CULLEN: I think the witness's eyesight is not very good; could you put the point without forcing her to read.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

TAYLOR: I have just realised that, my lord. I think when you visited the camp you formed the view that there wasn't a great deal of fresh fruit or vegetables, is that correct? - That is correct.

And one of the conditions which you stipulated for you to remain on the camp was that fresh fruit and vegetables were purchased? - If I made a list he would get them.

By virtue of the fact you remained such fruit and vegetables were obtained? - Yes.

LORD CULLEN: I am not sure what your interest in this, Mr. Taylor; are you protecting Central Scotland Police Force by asking questions about food.

MR. TAYLOR: Perhaps I was taking it slightly longer than I needed to.

LORD/

LORD CULLEN: It did strike me that way.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

TAYLOR: When you were at the camp what was it that the boys were wearing when you were at the camp? - Like swimming trunk things.

And that is what you had been told by your son I think and when you were there that persisted, that they were wearing swimming trunks and not much else? - Nothing else.

Now, it was also suggested to you that there was some drink taken on to the island? - It wasn't suggested, I saw it.

Am I right in thinking that Mr. Hamilton didn't consume that alcohol to any extent? - No, he didn't.

It was others who consumed the alcohol? - Yes.

Did you say to the person who took the statement from you that the only occasion on which you saw a child being chastised by Hamilton was on one occasion and that he deserved the punishment, that he had been bullying other children? - No, I told him about a boy getting his face slapped when they were talking, he didn't like them talking together and I told him about seeing that boy in the tent getting hit with a hairbrush.

Were these two incidents which you have referred to incidents which shows that these children were, to some extent, misbehaving? - Talking together is not misbehaving, he didn't even allow them to talk to each other at the table.

Put it this way, for breaking his rules? - Yes.

And these were the two incidents which you told Inspector Keenan of, you say? - Yes.

Was it Inspector Keenan or was it Sergeant McBain you told that? - Inspector Keenan in January I told and I told, I couldn't tell you who it was in Alexandria about his bullying and ill-treating/treating the kids and I wanted him off the island, the kids wanted the police to come and get them.

When you met with Inspector Keenan you told him about there having been two boxes of suntan oil which were kept by Mr. Hamilton? - There was suntan oil in his tent and in the box outside his tent.

Did you tell Inspector Keenan that Mr. Hamilton used to rub that suntan oil on all the boys and they in turn had to rub suntan oil on to Mr. Hamilton's back? - My son made a statement about suntan oil, he had rubbed suntan oil on the boys.

Did they then have to rub suntan oil on his back? - No, I never saw them rub suntan oil.

Now, you will remember that you have been asked some questions today about an article which appeared in the National Press which had headlines to the effect that a gun was pointed at your head and you have told us you made a telephone call to the reporter after that article had been published? - Yes, that's right.

Can you remember the name of the reporter to whom you spoke? - Sandy Gall.

In the course of the conversation you had with Mr. Gall what did you say to him? - I said "What is the big idea printing that rubbish in the headlines" and he said that he wasn't responsible for the headlines, somebody in Glasgow does the headlines.

Did you say to Mr. Gall in the course of that telephone conversation that Hamilton had, in fact, been across the street from you? - No.

At the time when the gun was allegedly shown to you?
- No.

You didn't say that to him at all? - No, I did not.

Now, you have informed us today of an incident in which you threw some flour, etc. over Mr. Hamilton? - Yes.

Am/

Am I right in thinking that this incident was on the 16th May, 1989? - Yes.

And from the evidence you have given I understand that to be after the event which you say took place at Bridgend in relation to the van and the gun being shown to you by Mr. Hamilton; were you there at Bridgend? - Sorry, could you repeat that?

The incident involving the flour, am I right in thinking that was after the incident when Mr. Hamilton showed you a gun? - Yes.

I think you were visited by the police sergeant that evening, is that right? - I think so, I can't be certain who came to the house.

Could it be the case you were visited.....? - I think there were two.

There may well have been two and I think you were in the company of Mrs. Reilly at the time? - Yes, Janet Reilly.

And it was on that occasion that you were informed that Mr. Hamilton was not to make a formal complaint? - That's right.

How did you react when you were told that there was to be no complaint? - I was really annoyed because it was like banging a head off a brick wall.

Did you start to tell the police sergeant at the time about the manner in which Mr. Hamilton ran his clubs? - Yes.

And generally you attempted to blacken Mr. Hamilton's name, if I could put it that way? - No, I tried to explain to the police officer why I did it and why I wanted charged, I broke the law.

You didn't mention to Sergeant Carson at the time anything to do with the incident at Bridgend, about being shown a gun? - No.

D. ~~760~~ggar

That would have been an opportunity for you to do so if you had chosen? - If I thought it was important enough, yes.

Could/

3.45 p.m.

Could you have Production D76L in front of you again? - Sorry?

D76L. It is a Production which will be shown to you. That is a document which was shown to you when Mr. Campbell was asking you some questions a few moments ago, and we see in that document in the top left-hand corner your name, and I think that is also your address, is it not? - That is right.

And then we see what would appear to be a telephone number? - Yes.

Is that your telephone number? - I couldn't tell you.

LORD CULLEN: Read the number out if you want to put this point.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. TAYLOR: Well, can you tell us what your telephone number is.....

LORD CULLEN: Is there any difficulty about that?

MR. CAMPBELL: It is actually her former address. The witness now lives in Aberdeen.

LORD CULLEN: Perhaps it is of no moment -- do you want to read out the number?

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. TAYLOR: The number which would appear there is 0506 834996. Is that your telephone number when you stayed at Bridgend? - It might have been.

But you can't recall? - No, I can't remember.

On hearing the evidence, it would appear that there are two incidents, one of which you say you reported to the police, but no record can be found of it, namely the incident at Bridgend in relation to the van, and the other incident is in relation to Mrs. S. whose children were shown some guns, which you say you didn't report -- is that the sum and substance of it? - I would have have to know/know what is written here. I didn't know all these names of guns and I didn't know where the woman stayed. All I know, she stayed in Linlithgow, but not the street. I only ever went to Linlithgow to the supermarket in the Centre and to the school.

Could it be that you are confusing which of the two incidents you reported to the police? - No, because I did not have anything to do with this.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Two points only. First of all, while you were at the camp was there any illness? - Sorry?

While you were at the camp was there any illness? - Any?

Illness? Was anyone unwell? - Just boys' blistered feet and that, and cuts -- and I had a bad bout of 'flu. That is all.

That is all? - That is all, except for the odd upset stomach.

Well, that is really what I was wondering. Was there no outbreak of upset stomachs? - No, it was just the odd one.

And the only other matter I want to ask you is: you mentioned that the person who first told the Press about the gun incident was your daughter? - Sitting in the living room, yes.

Were you there? - I was sitting there.

What did she say? - She said "Do you remember he pointed a gun at you".

That is what brought it up? - It was her.

JAMES KEENAN, (45), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I am a Superintendent with Central Scotland Police based in Clackmannan.

How long have you been in Central Scotland Police? - 24 years.

Prior/

Prior to December, 1988 had you heard of Thomas Hamilton? - No.

How did you first come to hear about him? - When I was spoken to by then Chief Superintendent Mr. Gunn at Stirling.

And what did he say to you about him? - He told me that there had been an ongoing informal complaint for some months made by Mr. Hamilton against officers of Central Scotland Police, and he requested that I contact Mr. Hamilton and take a formal statement off him.

Did you do that? - I did.

Where did you contact him? - I contacted him at his home address in Kent Road, Stirling.

Do you remember when that was? - It was I think the first week in December, 1988.

And what did you do with the statement? - I submitted the statement through Mr. Gunn for the information of the Deputy Chief Constable.

And following on that did you get further instructions?
- I did.

What were they? - On the 13th December I was advised that I had been appointed investigating officer into the complaints made by Mr. Hamilton.

Against whom? - Against two officers, Constable
George Gunn and Constable Donna Duncan, both of Balfron.

And can you summarise the complaints for us? - The complaint basically from Mr. Hamilton was that both these officers, at the request of Strathclyde Police, had called on the Island of Inchmoan in Loch Lomond on the 20th of July, 1988 to make observations on the conditions of the camp, and to report these back to Strathclyde Police.

But what was it alleged they had done wrong? - Mr.
Hamilton alleged that they had used unlawful and unnecessary exercise of their authority in the investigation of his camp.

By/

By doing what? - Basically by speaking to boys outwith his presence and the presence of other leaders, and going round the camp observing conditions.

What other complaints were made? - That he alleged they had made a false, misleading and inaccurate statement regarding their observations on the camp to Strathclyde Police.

And then there was another one tagged on the end? - Yes. When I was given correspondence relating to the complaint, there was a further complaint made by Mr. Hamilton to Mr. Forsyth, M.P.

What was that one? - That Constable Gunn had been uncivil towards Mr. Hamilton in September, 1988 at Balfron Police Office.

Did you have occasion to interview Hamilton again in the course of your investigations? - No. I was aware that he wished to see me on a number of occasions throughout my enquiry but on the advice of my Deputy Chief Constable I had no further contact with him.

And the Deputy Chief at that time was Mr. McMurdo?
- It was.

On the occasion you did interview Hamilton how did you get on? - I had been given quite strict guidance on how to deal with Mr. Hamilton by Mr. Gunn, and my instructions were that I was not to enter into any conversation or discussion, or pass any views or opinions to him, but merely to take a statement of his complaints from him. So I had no conversation with Mr. Hamilton.

And was that an easy exercise? - Mr. Hamilton appeared to know exactly what he wished to say, and spent about three hours telling me it.

Now, as a result of your investigations were there grounds established for disciplining either of the two officers? - No.

Was it a narrow decision? - That decision ultimately was taken by the Deputy Chief Constable. My opinion was there was insufficient grounds to justify the complaint.

And/

And was that clear, in your view? - It was, in my view.

Who were the two officers? - Constable George Gunn and Constable Donna Duncan.

And can I take it that following your report to the Deputy Chief Constable the complaint was dismissed? - Yes it was.

Did it get any further than him -- for example, to the Fiscal? - The Deputy Chief Constable, in view of my report, advised me that he would be submitting it to the Procurator-Fiscal at Dumbarton.

Who actually made the decision on it, do you know? - To send it to the Procurator-Fiscal?

No, no, to dismiss it? - The discipline complaint?

Yes? - The Deputy Chief Constable.

He made that decision? - Yes.

And as far as you are aware he then submitted the papers to the Fiscal? - He told me he did.

Could you now have a large bundle of papers in front of you called D2/K? Are these the papers relating to your investigation of the complaint? - They are, yes.

Now, a lot of them have a number at the top right-hand corner? - Yes.

And these numbers run from 1 to 275? - Yes.

And these are statements? - Yes.

So you have got 275 pages of statements; is that right? - That is right.

Before that there is an index, there is lists of witnesses, there is a summarised version, and there is some odd, or there are odd bits of paper and correspondence? - Yes.

And/

And that all goes to the Deputy Chief Constable for him to make a decision? - Yes. There was three files -- statements, and two documentary Production files.

And this is the lot there? - No, it is just the complaint, not the documentary Production files.

What else did you have? - Two documentary Production files.

What did they include? - Various letters and correspondence from Mr. Hamilton to various people.

How long did the investigation take? - As I say, I was appointed in December, 1988, but I then became involved in a major enquiry, and it wasn't until February, 1989 that I commenced enquiries, and I concluded these in May, 1989.

Now, would I be right in thinking that the result of your investigation was submitted to the Deputy Chief Constable on the 14th of May? - The 22nd of May is the date of my report.

That is the final date? - Yes.

Right. Before you submitted the report did you have a telephone conversation with a lady called Doreen Haggar? - I did.

Had you interviewed her in connection with the investigation? - I interviewed her and her son.

And did you interview her on only one occasion? - Yes, that is correct.

Did you interview her daughter at all? - No.

Was the daughter in the house when you interviewed her and her son? - I am not sure. There was a family friend there.

So can I take it it is subsequent to that interview of her that you spoke to her on the telephone? - She spoke with me, yes.

Well, /

Well, who contacted whom? - She phoned me.

Now she has told us that you phoned her? - No.

Any doubt about that? - None at all.

Do you remember the date of that call? - Not exactly, but within two or three days prior to the 16th of May, 1989.

What happened on the 16th of May? - Well, if I could take you to the telephone conversation, I will explain the basis of what happened on the 16th of May.

Well, we have heard something of that. I take it you are referring to the incident when she threw stuff at Hamilton? - That is correct.

That is 16th May? - That is correct.

Right. Tell us about the telephone conversation? - She telephoned me, as I say, three days before that, asking on the progress of my enquiry and my view of whether there would be any criminal proceedings against Mr. Hamilton. I had explained at the time I took the statement from Mrs. Haggart that it was a discipline enquiry I was conducting and not a criminal inquiry against Mr. Hamilton, and so any evidence of criminal conduct would be a matter for the Deputy Chief Constable to send to the Procurator-Fiscal. I told her my enquiry was reaching a conclusion. She was concerned that Mr. Hamilton was still running his boys' club at Linlithgow Academy, that we were nearing the summer for the 1989 camp, and she felt that if the various authorities could not prevent Mr. Hamilton running his club and camp, that she would do something about it personally. She told me that "If he likes suntan cream that much, I will show him exactly what I think about him and his suntan cream at his next club at Linlithgow Academy", which she told me was to be the 16th of May. She left me in no doubt that she would be attending that meeting, and that basically was the end of the conversation. I tried to counsel her, obviously, that that conduct could get herself into trouble, but she seemed to believe that if that was the/

the only way that she could bring Mr. Hamilton to the attention of the court, that she was prepared to do so.

Was any arrangement made for a police presence at the club? - Following my conversation with Mrs. Haggar I was in no doubt, as I have said, that she was capable of attending that club to disrupt it, and I contacted the duty inspector at -- I am not sure, I think it was Livingston Police Office that day, and gave him the background to my enquiry and the content of the conversation I had just had with Mrs. Haggar. I suggested that it may be appropriate if there were a couple of police officers available, that they attend the club meeting at Linlithgow Academy on Tuesday 16th May; and he said he would put a note in the log book at Linlithgow Police Office to that effect.

Did/

4.05 p.m.

Did you follow the matter up later? - Yes, again I am not very sure of the exact date but it would be days after the 16th May, I didn't hear anything back and I contacted the same inspector again and asked him if there had been any incident at the club and he was able to advise me that there had been an incident involving Mrs. Haggar and another female with Mr. Hamilton.

Do I take it you didn't follow this up at all by contacting Hamilton? - No.

Now, had the question of suntan oil arisen earlier in the course of your investigations? - Yes, it had.

Did it arise in the context of speaking to Mrs. Haggar and her son? - When I spoke to her son, yes.

He said something about Hamilton and suntan oil? - Yes.

Can you remember what that is? - Yes, I can.

Can you tell us? - During the taking of the statement from Mrs. Haggar's son he said to me that when we were talking about the sleeping arrangements at the camp he said the majority of boys slept with Mr. Hamilton in one of the bigger tents in the camp and most evenings in his presence and in the presence of other boys there one of the boys in particular had been asked most evenings by Mr. Hamilton who was lying on his cot bed to rub suntan cream into Mr. Hamilton's head and shoulders for about 15 to 20 minutes each evening.

Was that a reference to other boys rather than him doing it? - It wasn't him, no -- it was another boy in particular.

This was done by, was it one boy in particular did it most often? - That is correct.

Did you form the impression that there was something indecent about that? - Suntan oil was only the head and arms, it was a question of interpretation, / interpretation, there was nothing other than that.

At what time of day did he say it was being done? - It was in the evening when they were all bedding down for the night.

When the sun doesn't shine in Loch Lomond? - That is exactly what Mrs. Haggart said.

Could I now ask you to look at the AD2A form which is your report of 22nd May, 1989; now, is this the summary of the results of the 275 pages? - Yes, it is.

We will do our best not to get to the 275 pages and to look at the summary and hopefully if there is something you think is in the list you can interject to tell me? - I will do my best.

I think that as part of the background here we had a record that Mr. Hamilton was in charge of the boys sports clubs in Dunblane, Linlithgow and Dunfermline at that time? - Yes.

In that he was also reported to be operating in Falkirk?
- Yes.

I think you also record information that you were getting from Hamilton about the purpose of his camps? - Yes.

What did he tell you the purpose of these were? - Basically to develop independence in boys, to organise boat trips, outings to the mainland, character forming.

I think on the second page you indicate that the camp was for 12 boys a week supervised by three leaders? - Yes.

And are for sports training and leisure time activities as well as an adventure holiday camp? - Yes.

Now, did you ever establish in this Inquiry whether there were other leaders in the true sense of the word involved? - There were two teenage boys assisting Mr. Hamilton with his camp at the time that I was involved in when Constables Gunn and Duncan called at the camp.

You/

You then refer to the complaints that the parents made on the 17th July, 1988 which was in fact a Sunday, is that right? - That is right.

And by this time you have established that there were actually six boys who had just come back off the camp whose parents were making complaints, is that right? - You say I established that.

No, by the time you got to your investigations you were able from all the material before you to conclude that there was six complainers? - Yes.

And they were complaining about the organisation of Mr. Hamilton and they were alleging assaults by him? - Yes.

And the refusal to allow the boys to phone home or send postcards? - Yes.

They were complaining of the general condition of the camp and the poor food? - Yes.

And also concerns that came from the parents that the boys were issued with black swimming trunks and were expected to wear these at all times in the camp? - Yes.

Now, can you tell us and we may need to look at the details but if we can avoid it it would be helpful, can you tell us the nature of the assaults that you discovered had been complained to you? - These assaults, basically, as I understand it related to slaps on the side of the face for not standing to attention or standing in line, for being cheeky, again slaps on the backs of the legs and there was a suggestion that a wooden spoon was used as well to hit some of the boys.

You discovered that the matter had been investigated under the supervision.....well, by effectively Strathclyde Police and you had all the papers from that investigation? - I asked for these and they were sent to me, yes.

Now, can you go towards the foot of page 3 and we will try to fill in the gaps that Constable Gunn hasn't already told us about; you record at the/

the foot of that page Sergeant Moir instructed Constables Gunn and Duncan to go to Inchmoan on Wednesday, 20th July? - Yes.

And he briefed him to interview all the boys at the camp and to check the condition and facilities at the camp? - Yes.

What was the other thing or things that Sergeant Moir emphasised? - Sergeant Moir said to the officers that if they thought any of the boys were in immediate or physical moral danger to contact him direct and he would make arrangements to have the CID at Dumbarton informed and the boys removed from the island.

Following the report back by Gunn and Duncan what steps did Sergeant Moir take? - He instructed these officers to report their findings to Detective Chief Inspector Hay.

Was he the man who had decided what to do? - Yes, that is correct.

I think just after halfway down page 4 we get the result of their investigations into that? - Yes.

What do you describe? - Constables Gunn and Duncan were asked to prepare statements regarding their visit to the camp and these were submitted to Strathclyde Police.

Was it Hay.....? - Chief Inspector Hay subsequently requested that Detective Sergeant McBain contact the parents of the children that had gone over to the island basically to explain that there was concern about the running of the camp and to make them aware of it and to go with the Strathclyde officers to the camp to inspect it for themselves.

Sorry, tell me that again, what exactly were Hay's instructions to McBain? - Well, Chief Inspector Hay's instructions to Sergeant McBain were to contact as many of the parents of the boys on the island and invite them to go with the Strathclyde police detectives over to the island to see their sons.

You/

You see in the next paragraph "Detective Sergeant McBain advises that none of the boys interviewed that day had any complaints to make"; how did the boys get to Dumbarton Police Office? - The Strathclyde detectives and a number of the parents attended at Balmaha Boatyard to be ferried across to the island only to find out, I think it was, from one of the youth leaders at the camp that the boys had been taken by Mr. Hamilton to the pictures in Alexandria.

What did the police do? - There were a number of anxious parents by this time so they decided to take everyone to Dumbarton Police Office and to make arrangements to have Mr. Hamilton and the boys taken from the cinema to Dumbarton Police Office.

Did they find them in the cinema? - Yes.

In Alexandria? - Yes.

Where had they been before they went to the cinema?
- I think they had been to the swimming pool.

Now, the boys were taken to Dumbarton Police Office?
- Yes.

And were they interviewed? - Yes.

Now, did any of them make a complaint about Hamilton's conduct? - No.

Did any of them want to go home because they were homesick? - Quite a number of them, I think nine of the 13.

Was Hamilton at the police station? - Yes.

Were the parents able to speak to him? - Yes.

Did any of them make complaints about him? - No, I think they had a lot of questions to ask of him.

If you go to the last three lines on page/page 4; what you have recorded there is the report you got from Strathclyde Police? - The report from Strathclyde Police is that "None of the parents present were prepared to make any complaints or malign Hamilton in any way. Indeed, some parents praised Hamilton and his running of the camp."

Now, I think McBain then gets information from Hamilton himself about what he was doing at that stage in the way of running clubs, is that correct? - Yes.

You have already told us that at one of the points Hamilton said that the club in Dunblane had been in existence for almost 15 years? - Yes.

Now, if you could turn to the second paragraph on that page, at the bottom, can you read out what you established where McBain's conclusions at that time? - "Detective Sergeant McBain concluded that although he felt many of the complaints were non-criminal in themselves that the camp conditions were extremely primitive with the obvious lack of ease of access and communication being a primary concern as it could be argued in this respect that there was a serious concern for the boys' moral and physical wellbeing".

Now, did he submit the report to the Fiscal at Dumbarton? - Yes, he did.

And that had the statements from the boys who came off the camp on the 17th July? - It did, yes.

What action did the Fiscal take? - I was advised that the Fiscal took no proceedings.

Now, you then on page 7 record the enquiry you made initially, interviewing people whose names had been given to you by Hamilton? - Not directly by Mr. Hamilton but they were in correspondence that he had previously submitted to our Force.

These were people who largely camped in the same area as he had his camps, is that right? - That is correct, and I think somebody who had a cruiser on the loch as well who visited the camps from time to time.

In/

In general terms what was their view of his camp, of his conduct of his camps? - They spoke highly of his organisation, food and equipment in the camp and of his capabilities as a leader.

Now, I think thereafter you have summarised a number of statements, many of which have complaints to make about Hamilton's conduct on his camps and his conduct towards the boys? - Yes.

And in these do we find evidence of the assaults, for example, that you have referred to? - Yes.

And do you have a view yourself about whether these assaults were simply a reasonable chastisement of children misbehaving or whether there was more to them than that? - My personal opinion that there was more to them than that.

It went beyond the point of reasonable chastisement? - My boys at that time were nine and 10 and I didn't smack them.

At all -- here we are talking about smacking them on the face and using something against them like a wooden spoon? - Yes.

I wonder if you could now have a brief look at DIK which is a report by Mr. McBain of his original investigations; do you see there that report is dated 30th August, 1988? - Yes.

And is headed "Complaints received by Police in relation to Summer Camp held on Island of Inchmoan on Loch Lomond"? - Yes.

Signed by McBain and sent to the Sub-Divisional Officer but for the Procurator-Fiscal? - Yes.

Now, can you just confirm to me that in the course of that investigation at the foot of the page McBain recorded that Hamilton did not deny striking some of the children maintaining that he had only enforced discipline in the absence of the boys' parents? - Yes, he told the parents that as well.

And did he also go on to say why he had to/to discipline these boys? - Yes.

Why was that? - Because they were being disruptive, bullying and being cheeky.

Now, there were allegations of indecency made in the course of that investigation; is that right? - Yes.

Can you confirm that these allegations were not made against Hamilton? - They were against the two youth leaders.

And these were never established, were they? - No.

SEVENTH DAY.

JAMES KEENAN,

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMY: Good morning, Mr. Keenan, you had yesterday before you a document which I think is best simply described as D2/K and it would be helpful if you had that document again in front of you. One of the things I asked you yesterday was whether there was some supporters for Mr. Hamilton and you told me the supporters were other people camping in the same area? - Yes.

I think if we turn to page 7 of your summary of the evidence of the witnesses we will see that these were adult witnesses whom you interviewed largely aged in their twenties and thirties although one gentleman who was a boatyard manager at Balmaha was 57? - Yes, there are some pages missing from this report.

Which pages do you have? - 8 to 16.

I am told there has been a copying problem, it might be if you just go forward a few more pages you will come to the ones which are numbered 7 to 16 which seem to have got out of place. There is another copy winging its way and if you could just check it please? - Yes, that is the original.

It is in the right order? - Yes.

You understanding was there were witnesses camping in the area, largely adults in their twenties and thirties and in addition you interviewed a boatyard manager at Balmaha who was 57? - Yes.

These witnesses were largely supportive? - Yes.

And they were, for example, a motor mechanic, a product specialist, a quality control inspector, a company director and this boatyard manager? - Yes.

Now,/

Now, I think that you interviewed a good number of witnesses that Mr. McBain and his team hadn't interviewed? - Yes, that is correct.

And you, in fact, had got some specific allegations from the children that you interviewed? - I had.

And again if we just look very quickly at your summary I think you can confirm that this was the first time that allegations of rubbing suntan oil had come out? - Yes.

And there were specific allegations of boys, not necessarily identified boys, but boys having been slapped on the face? - Yes.

There was more than one witness who told you about that? - Yes.

There were also two boys who made claims about being slapped on the legs very severely? - Yes.

And there was also evidence of the use of a wooden spoon I think described by the boys, is that right? - Yes.

So there was material indicating, I suppose, fairly rough handling of the boys in certain circumstances in the course of the camp? - I considered so, yes.

Now, could you please look at page 70 of the report, this is all the numbered witness statements, and confirm to me that that and the subsequent pages are the statement you took from Mrs. Haggar? - Yes.

And you took that statement at 4.55 on Tuesday, 14th February, 1989? - Yes, I did.

That was in Bridgend near Linlithgow? - That is correct.

Could you just look at pages 73 and 74 of that; at the foot of page 73 are we on page 4 of the statement? - Yes.

And does it say or did Mrs. Haggar say to/to you about the boys being mistreated and "I only saw Mr. Hamilton striking one boy while I was there"? - Yes.

She then names the boy? - Yes.

And that boy is linked or is in the family of the lady about whom a claim is later made on a document apparently by Mrs. Hagggar that Hamilton had taken guns to that family's home in Linlithgow? - Yes.

It is the same family? - Yes.

Does it go on to say "He had been cheeky and abusive to Janet and I"? - Yes, she did.

"I expected Mr. Hamilton to reprimand him at the time but Mr. Hamilton did nothing that day until about 11 p.m. at night"? - Yes.

And she goes on to say in the statement that "He woke the boy up, took his trousers down and put him across his knee and forcefully slapped him six times on the bum"? - Yes.

Did she go on to say "I believe in discipline but that was over the score. It happened well after the incident"? - Yes.

Can you then go to, please, page 166 of the same series of statements and is that page 2 of the statement that you took from the boy? - Yes, that is correct.

Was that statement taken at 4.50 p.m. on Monday, 13th February, 1989? - Yes, it was.

At his home? - Yes.

Did he say in the statement to you towards the foot again "I was slapped once on the holiday on the leg by Mr. Hamilton because it was said by Mrs. Hagggar that I had been cheeky to her"? - Yes.

"It was a sore slap"? - Yes.

Does he go on to talk about "Seeing a couple of other boys when we first arrived in the camp/camp being slapped by Hamilton"? - Yes.

Now, did he tell you about being put over Hamilton's knee and slapped six times severely on the bum? - No.

This report at the beginning also contains some correspondence and if you could find, I think it is before even the summary we were looking at, a letter from the Deputy Chief Constable of Strathclyde and the Deputy Chief Constable of Central dated 24th October, 1989? - I would need to look for that in another file.

We have copies all under the one reference at the moment; have you got that one? - Yes.

That is a letter from the Deputy Chief of one Force, Strathclyde, to Central dated 24th October, 1989 and the heading is "Complaint against police -- Thomas Watt Hamilton? - Yes.

That is what you were investigating? - Yes.

Your report was to McMurdo to whom this letter is also addressed? - Yes.

And does it say "I refer to your report dated 22nd May, 1989 in the above regard and have to advise that the circumstances of this complaint were reported to (1) Mr. James Cardle, Procurator Fiscal at Dumbarton", does it say that? - Yes.

And does it go on to say "who advised that no criminal proceedings would be taken in respect of Thomas Watt Hamilton"? - Yes.

That indicates that your material was considered by the Fiscal in the context of a complaint against Hamilton, albeit you had been investigating a complaint against two police officers? - Yes.

This was the Fiscal taking a second look at the circumstances of the camp, is that right? - A different set of boys.

But McBain had reported it to the Fiscal?/

Fiscal? - Yes, but boys from a previous camp.

The same summer camp but boys at a later stage in the camp? - Yes.

And secondly does it go on to say that it was reported to Mr. Robert Lees, Regional Procurator Fiscal at Paisley who decided that no proceedings would be taken against the police officers concerned? - Yes.

Does it enclose a copy of the letter intimating Mr. Lees' decision? - Yes.

Is that the copy over the page? - Yes, it is.

In Mr. Lees' letter does it say "I confirm that in my view there is nothing of a criminal nature brought out in the report and I have accordingly marked the papers 'No Proceedings'"? - Yes.

He is talking about nothing of a criminal nature in the conduct of the two police officers? - This is my first sight of this letter.

If you just look at the heading you will see that is what he is dealing with? - That is correct.

Now, this all didn't end there, you got reported? - I did, yes.

Who were you reported to? - Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary.

Was the Chief Inspector investigating your conduct of the investigation of complaints of Hamilton against the police? - Yes, I think a superintendent.

A superintendent from one of his staff? - Yes, a staff officer.

What was his name? - I think Superintendent Molson.

Did he interview you in the course of his/his investigations? - No.

What did he do then? - From my understanding all I was told was that there was an investigation into my inquiry and I presume he reviewed all the papers.

That is your assumption? - Yes, that is my assumption.

Can I take it he was satisfied of the way in which that investigation had been carried out? - I believe so.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Inspector Keenan, you may not be able to help me with this in which case please just say so but I am interested in any potential role of the Reporter to the Children's Panel in relation to allegations against Hamilton which you, albeit, indirectly investigated. If Hamilton had had children and if one of his children had been on the island subjected to the treatment which you investigated would you then have been obliged to report that matter to the Reporter to the Children's Panel? - Yes.

An incident of parental abuse? - Yes, I would.

And does the Reporter to the Children's Panel have access, to your knowledge, to any general file of information which would have details of any previous incidents of parental abuse by the same person? - I don't know.

We are dealing with another Force area here, Strathclyde, maybe it is outwith your experience; anyway, you can confirm it would be the practice in the case of parental abuse to report the matter to the Reporter? - Yes.

Does the same apply to the type of alleged abuse with which we are concerned here, namely by a third party towards another person's child? - Yes.

And are you aware of any difference in approach which would then be taken by the Reporter to such an incident -- namely, a distinction drawn by that Reporter of parental abuse and third party abuse?/

abuse? - It depends on the age of the abuse but I think it would be wise to investigate it.

On a separate matter do I understand correctly that you were investigating complaints by Hamilton against two police officers and the outcome of that complaint was that the police officers were exonerated? - Yes.

And then there was a subsequent complaint by Hamilton to a further authority about your inquiry? - Yes.

I think to Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary? - Yes.

And so there was then a further investigation by somebody else into your inquiry and in due course you were exonerated? - Yes.

At any time during your investigations were you aware of the fact that Hamilton possessed a firearms certificate? - Yes.

Did you consider whether in the light of your findings or the result of your investigations you should make any recommendation in relation to Mr. Hamilton's firearms certificate? - No, not in connection with the inquiry I was conducting.

Why not? - As I said mine was a discipline inquiry, not a criminal inquiry against Mr. Hamilton and what I was concerned with was Mr. Hamilton's fitness and propriety to be in charge of a boys camp.

How did you come to be aware of the fact that Mr. Hamilton had a firearms certificate? - I think it is in one of the correspondence documentary production files where he puts a PS regarding something to do with his certificate to the Chief Constable.

But it never occurred to you to consider your findings in relation to whether or not Mr. Hamilton was a fit and proper person to possess a firearms certificate? - No, it was his fitness and propriety to run boys clubs that I was concerned with.

If/

If someone has a firearms certificate is there a special file relating to that person? - There will be.

What is the purpose of that file? - To record all information relative to the firearms certificate holder and information about him.

BY LORD CULLEN: Just to be clear about that point, is that a file that is held by a particular branch of the police? - Yes, my lord, there is a Firearms Administration Department in each Force including our own.

Have you experience of working in that particular branch or not? - Yes.

So what you are describing to Mr. Campbell is your understanding of how that branch works? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINATION/

10.20 a.m.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: Presumably it would be helpful, to put it at the very least, if that file contained all relevant information which the police had ingathered about the relevant person -- take Hamilton in this case. It would be helpful if that file contained all relevant information relating to Hamilton as a person who might be an unsuitable person. Would you agree with that? - I think somebody should have access to all information about a Firearms Certificate holder, yes.

Did it occur to you at any time to pass on the information which you had ingathered to whoever had responsibility for that firearms file relating to Hamilton? - My file goes to the Deputy Chief Constable, who I worked with in connection with that enquiry, so he would have that information.

Is that Mr. McMurdo? - Yes.

BY LORD CULLEN: Just to be quite clear about that point, you have described to us what you were doing, what your function was, but supposing you had come across a piece of information that might at least raise a question as to the suitability of Hamilton to hold a Firearms Certificate, would you have considered it, in certain circumstances anyway, to be your responsibility to draw that to the attention of the officer to whom you were making your report? - Yes.

So does it really depend then on whether you come across a piece of information which does raise a question? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: Did you apply your mind to the question as to whether or not the information which you had investigated did or did not raise a question as to Hamilton's suitability? - It did not raise a question in my mind at that time regarding his Firearms Certificate. It raised a question in my mind, as I have said, about this fitness and propriety to run a boys' camp.

The question I asked you was whether or not/not you specifically asked yourself the question at the time. Did you consider specifically whether or not you should pass on your information in the context of Hamilton's Firearms Certificate? - No.

No? Was there any standing instruction or training or procedure requiring officers investigating a matter in the knowledge that the subject held a Firearms Certificate, to consider whether or not the result of that investigation raised questionmarks as to the suitability of the holder of the Firearms Certificate? - Yes, if I thought that was a relevant issue I would have recorded it.

LORD CULLEN: I think actually that wasn't the question you were asked. I think it was: was there an instruction, a training to that effect? I think Mr. Campbell is looking at it as a matter of routine.

MR. CAMPBELL: Yes. I am obliged.

THE WITNESS: I am trying to think of any formal training. It would be my understanding if it was an issue relevant to the Firearms Certificate then I would know I would have to report that -- so, yes.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. CAMPBELL: So the answer is yes? - Yes.

What form did this instruction or training take? - I think it is basically your training and experience in the various roles you have been in, that if there is something you are concerned about, you would report it.

So it was really left to your discretion? - I think so, yes.

Whether or not to consider the matter or not? - Yes.

Sorry? - Yes.

But if I understand the main gist of your answers to my questions, you considered the primary issue which you were investigating was the complaints against the officers, and the events in the/the camp? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: Do you still have the report which you made in front of you? - Yes.

Just for the avoidance of any doubt, I wonder if you could tell us precisely the nature of the complaint which was made by Mr. Hamilton against the police officers? - Yes. Mr. Hamilton basically complained that two police officers from Central Scotland Police had visited his camp on behalf of Strathclyde Police, and during their visit they had used unlawful and unnecessary exercise of their authority, and disrupted his camp; had then submitted a false, misleading and inaccurate statement regarding conditions in the camp to Strathclyde Police; and there was a further complaint in a letter to Mr. Forsyth, M.P., that one of the officers had been uncivil to Mr. Hamilton at Balfron Police Office in September, 1988. That was the nature of my investigation.

There was no suggestion of incompetence on the part of the officers? - No.

Now, you told my learned friend, Mr. Bonomy, that in the course of your investigations you went further than the investigation which had been undertaken by Strathclyde Police Force; is that correct? - Yes.

And I think in regard to that you made a recommendation in your report which we find at page 17; is that right? - Yes.

Can you tell us what that recommendation was -- page 17 of your summary? - 17?

Yes -- we find at the top of that page in the second paragraph you saying that "In the event numerous points have been elicited which may be worthy of consideration by officers in Strathclyde Police"? - Yes, that is correct.

So that was really a suggestion that your report should be remitted back to Strathclyde Police? - Yes. I think I say that again somewhere else.

You/

You were making this report to the Deputy Chief Constable, Mr. McMurdo? - I was.

Do you know who it is in Central Scotland Police who is responsible for signing Firearms Certificates on application and on renewal? - The Deputy Chief Constable.

So in making this report to the Deputy Chief Constable you would be aware that its content would also be going to the person who had responsibility for the issuing of Firearms Certificates? - Yes I did.

And in the course of your investigation had you found anything which would have reflected on whether Mr. McMurdo should have revoked or failed to renew his certificate you would have included it in your report; is that right? - If I thought it was relevant I would have included it, yes.

And in the course of your investigation, in your opinion did you find anything that you considered to be relevant in that regard? - No.

No re-examination.

EDWARD McGRANE, (46), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I am a Sergeant with Lothian and Borders Police now based at West Calder.

How long have you been with Lothian and Borders Police? - I have been with Lothian and Borders 24 years.

Now, I think in 1989 you were stationed elsewhere? -

That is correct.

Where were you in April, May and June, 1989? - In 1989 I was stationed at Bathgate.

Did the office at Bathgate at that time have any general operational responsibilities for Linlithgow? - Bathgate was a larger station. The Division is divided into sub-divisions and I would say Bathgate was the sub-divisional headquarters at that time, and Linlithgow was contained within that sub-sub-division.

Was Bathgate an office manned 24 hours a day? - The office wasn't manned 24 hours a day, but the town was staffed 24 hours a day.

What about the office at Linlithgow? - It also was staffed 24 hours a day, but the office itself was not manned.

Can you tell me, what were the manned hours of the Linlithgow Office around that time? - Linlithgow around that time was I think 9 a.m. till 10 p.m.; and we also were -- I think we were about 8 a.m. till 10 p.m.

Now, in the course of the present investigation you were interviewed as a witness? - That is correct.

You were shown a number of documents? - That is correct, yes.

And it is, I take it you agree, fairly clear from looking at these documents that you had some involvement in the subject matter of these documents? - Yes, I did.

Have you any personal direct recollection of the investigation that they relate to? - My recollection is very, very vague.

Well, that is something. You do remember something of it, do you? - Yes.

I think the best thing then is to ask you to look first of all at a document to which I will give two references for the scholars among us. First of all DCD275, which is also known as D80L. Now, that should be an AD2a; is that right -- have you got that? - Oh, yes I have got AD2a.

Now, you will see that it is dated the 30th of June, 1989, and it is an internal document from an inspector at Stirling to the Chief Superintendent of Central Police 'A' Division? - That is correct.

And it mentions you? - Yes.

In/

In the third paragraph it says that Inspector Nimmo contacted Sergeant McGrane, Bathgate, and requested he visit a family and obtain statements regarding Mrs. Haggart's allegation? - That is correct.

And you will see it is dated the 30th June? - Yes.

And it then refers to "Attached statements and photographs", and they are forwarded for information; is that right? - That is correct, yes.

Now, are the photographs and the statements attached to what you have been given? You have these, do you? - Yes, that is correct.

Now, there are two statements there; is that right? - That is correct.

Now, for those with the volumes that we are following, they are D77L and D78L, and I think you have got a set of photographs, which we have as D77L. Now, do you remember taking these two statements? - Yes, I do.

Do you remember getting an instruction to go and take them? - The instruction I think came by way of a fax message.

And that was presumably from Inspector Nimmo? -

That is right.

Now, the statements record that they were taken at 7 p.m. on the 20th of May? - That is correct.

1989. Now, in the course of interviewing the lady and gentleman in that household in Linlithgow were they able to tell you about Thomas Hamilton bringing guns to their house? - That is correct.

Around December, 1988 or January, 1989? - That is correct.

Now, the guns were described to you by name? - That is correct.

What/

What were the descriptions you got? - May I refer to the statements?

Yes, please? - The guns were a Magnum revolver, a Browning FN revolver, and a Beretta semi-automatic machine gun.

Do you know what "FN" means? - I am sorry, I do not.

Now, if you look at the photographs, can you confirm that you took these photographs from the family at the time? - Yes, I did.

And what do they depict? - They depict the children of the household holding, one, a pistol and the other child is holding what I presume is an automatic rifle. It is a rifle with a magazine on the bottom.

Who took the pictures? - I believe Thomas Hamilton took the pictures.

Now, if you look at the statement of the lady, and look at the bottom of the first page.....? - My apologies.

Does that not describe differently? - My apologies. That is my mistake.

Who took them? - It was Mr. Smith.

The man of the house? - The man of the house.

"My husband took six photographs of my children and I with the guns"? - Yes -- my apologies.

And did the lady go on to say "At no time was I concerned or distressed by Hamilton's behaviour"? - That is correct.

Did she or her husband indicate whether either of them had actually made a complaint to Central Scotland Police? - Neither Mr. nor Mrs. Smith had made any complaint to the police at all.

And were they making a complaint to you?
- No.

Was/

Was there any discussion at all about how on earth you came to be knocking at their door investigating this? - Yes.

What was the sum and substance of that discussion?
- I think I told them that I had been informed by Mrs. Haggart that she had become aware that he had taken these guns to Linlithgow.

You had been informed? - No, that the police had been informed -- if I use "police" to cover both Lothian and Borders and Central Scotland -- had been informed that Mr. Hamilton had taken these guns to Linlithgow.

What was your understanding then of how the police had got that information? - Mrs. Haggart had reported the matter to Central Scotland Police.

Where did you learn that? - From Central Scotland Police, from Inspector Nimmo.

And you didn't speak to Mrs. Haggar? - No.

So I take it having taken the statements and the photos, you sent them back to Central Scotland Police? - That is correct.

And you were sending them back on the basis that nobody was actually making a complaint?

- Yes, that is correct, yes.

Well, at least the householders there weren't? - The householders there weren't making any complaint, yes.

They/

10.40 a.m.

They were obviously happy to take photos of their kids with the gun? - Yes.

Am I putting words into your mouth? Please tell me if that is not the position? - From what I recollect, and I think the husband took the photographs, my recollection was that they were making no complaint regarding Hamilton coming to the house and while they posed for the photographs, they were not at home with someone bringing guns to the house, albeit just to take photographs. They were not at ease with him.

Now, I wonder if you would look at the statement which you took from the man that he didn't know the exact names of the guns but he did describe one as a semi-automatic machine gun and he said "He allowed my children and my wife to handle these weapons but he did not bring ammunition with the weapons. He allowed me to photograph the wife and kids holding these weapons. I was not worried or concerned by Hamilton's behaviour during this visit". Did he say that to you? - Yes, he did. It was still my impression that they were not at home with him bringing these guns to the house.

Can you also have before you DCD275 which is also D76L? - I am sorry, can you tell me what it is without the numbers.

Sorry, it is an incident log headed "Central Scotland Police". Have you got it? - Yes, I do.

And does that bear to be an entry in a Central Scotland Police incident log indicating that a Doreen Haggar with her proper address and telephone number made the report which led to your investigation? - Yes.

There is something written at the bottom you will see?
- Yes.

Which is "Incident happened October 1988". That is not the result of your investigation? Your investigation was it was December 1988 or January 1989? - That is correct, yes.

Apart/

Apart from this investigation, had you ever heard the name Mrs. Haggart? - No.

You had no dealings with her in the course of your work at Bathgate? - No.

Did you know anything of an incident only a few days before the date of this log you are looking at where I think two ladies had doused Thomas Hamilton with offensive material at Linlithgow Academy? - No, I have no knowledge of that at all.

So it wasn't even widely known in West Lothian at that time? - It wasn't known to me at that time, no.

Can you now have quite a separate Production? I think this time FA53 which is also D75L? - Yes, I have that.

Now, that is not your writing either, is it? - No.

In fact we have not seen anything that is your writing so far, is that correct? - That is correct.

But your name is on this one as well? - Yes.

And it is a note of you communicating with Central Scotland Police apparently? - That's correct, yes.

And it has got the name Thomas Watt Hamilton, is that right? - That is correct, yes.

It has got a date of birth for him, is that right? - Yes.

A place of birth at Glasgow? - Yes.

And an address? - That is correct, yes.

And the query seems to be whether he is the older of a firearms certificate? - That is correct.

Issued/

Issued by CSP which I assume is Central Scotland Police? - That is correct.

And it looks as if it has been sent by someone then to the Firearms Department so that they can advise Sergeant McGrane what weapons Hamilton is authorised to possess? - Yes.

Now, do you remember making that query? - No.

You will see the date is the 19th May? - That's correct, yes.

Which is the day before the incident log we were looking at a moment ago? - Yes.

Which led to your other investigation? - Yes.

So have you any recollection of having to check up on Hamilton before, immediately before, you were asked to go and visit the family in Linlithgow? - No.

So on this one you don't even have a vague recollection? - None at all, no.

Following the investigations then at the family at Linlithgow, did you have reason to try to get firm information about Hamilton's firearms status? - I can't recall. I might well have contacted Central Scotland Police after having obtained the statements from Mr. and Mrs. Smith.

But that would not be consistent with the date on this because your statements from Smith were..... remind me of the date? - 20th May.

So can I take it you can shed no more light on this entry? - No, I am sorry, I can't.

Can you look now please at FAE97 and that we don't have another reference for because it is a police notebook? Is that your notebook for the time? - Yes.

Is there an entry for the 20th May when you were carrying out the investigation at the home in/in Linlithgow? It is the 20th May we are looking for, 1989? - Would you bear with me a few moments?

Certainly? - I have found it. Thank you.

Now, do you record in there the taking of the statements from the family? - From Stanley Smith.....

Well.....? - Yes, from the family.

Can you tell me if there is anything in your notes that prompts any further recollection of what went on in the course of your investigation? - No.

Nothing beyond what you have told me so far? - No.

Is there an entry on the 19th at all that might explain the other note we have seen about Hamilton's firearms? - No.

You are going back through a number of pages there?
- Yes.

It was a busy time, was it? - I wanted to make sure but there is nothing else there.

Can you go right back to the 16th I think which was the date of the mud-slinging? - Yes.

Anything there? - Nothing there at all.

So you have no entries in your notebook that would help you to remember something that might explain all this? - I do not.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Look again at D75L, the note for your attention from the Firearms Department. The copy we have is a poor one. It is the 19th May 1989, a memo. Who has signed that? - I am sorry, I don't know.

Can you make out the signature? - I don't know who that is.

It/

It has come from a Firearms Department? - It has not come from Lothian and Borders Firearms Department.

It has not come from Lothian and Borders? - No, I don't think so.

You really know nothing about this document? - No.

You were telling us about the investigations which you carried out with the family concerned? - Yes.

In your view so far as Hamilton's conduct here was concerned, is that kind of behaviour acceptable conduct by the holder of a firearms certificate? - The same circumstances occurring within my Force area I would report to our Firearms Department.

For what reason? - Just to seek their opinion or their advice as to if that is correct procedure.

What would your view be? - It is not..... I would not consider it to be normal behaviour.

Acceptable behaviour? - Yes, perhaps.

By the holder of a firearms certificate? - I find it quite difficult to answer that question.

You are taking a long time to think about it? - Well, I have difficulty trying to divorce what has happened and remaining objective. Could you repeat the question? My apologies.

Would you try to divorce the details but just look at it in the generality to help you. Is it in your view acceptable for the holder of a firearms certificate to behave in the way Hamilton did on this occasion? - I don't think he should have behaved like that. I don't think a firearms certificate holder should do that.

And if Hamilton had held a firearms certificate in Lothian and Borders Police you would have/have reported the matter to the responsible authority? - Yes.

Did at that time Lothian and Borders Police have any laid-down system for the reporting of information relevant to the holder of firearms certificates? - If a firearms certificate holder comes to the attention of Lothian and Borders Police in unusual circumstances or breaks the law then automatically a copy of whichever report is sent to our Firearms Department. As standard, whatever report you have it is sent and the standard was in force at that time.

Did you receive instructions in such a system? - That system has been in force almost as long as I can recall.

And during your training would you receive instructions in the operation of that system? - Yes.

You would be informed that it existed? - That is correct.

Would there be any laid-down orders? - Yes.

Standing Orders to that effect? - Yes.

So to see if I understand the matter in the generality; if a Lothian and Borders police officer comes across information in whatever circumstances which raises a question as to the suitability of a firearms certificate holder to possess such a certificate, that officer would be required to make an appropriate report to the responsible authority? - That is correct.

Would the matter be left to you as the officer who discovered this information to decide whether or not any action should be taken about the firearms certificate in the light of that information? - No, it would be the Firearms Department who would decide what action, if any, would be required to be taken.

Would there be a system or was there a system in Lothian and Borders Police where all such information would be kept on a central register or file/file relating to that firearms holder? - Each firearms holder I believe, and this is not my area of specialist knowledge, each firearms holder would have a file on them and if there were any reports they would be filed with that individual licenceholder.

BY LORD CULLEN: Can I perhaps just take that questioning a little further? In this particular case you were looking into an alleged incident which did concern firearms? - Yes.

And therefore you might want to find out what the position was, if that person did or did not have a certificate. You have agreed I think that you would pass on any information that raised a question as to the person's suitability? - That is correct.

But if you were investigating an incident which has nothing to do with firearms, might there be a situation in which you would want to find out if that person had a firearms certificate or would that not arise really in the normal way? - In the run-of-the-mill thing, something very, very minor, it is perhaps possible that you could..... I am thinking of a minor breach of the law in some form, that you could submit a report unaware that the person holds a firearms certificate. Yes, I think that is possible.

I am sorry? - You would submit a report. If I am interpreting what you are saying, you could submit a report perhaps to the Fiscal unaware that the person had a firearms certificate.

And you would not as a matter of routine ask for information as to whether that person did or did not have a firearms certificate? - I personally wouldn't but again there is a possibility that there is maybe a check in our system that I am not aware of. I know that all other reports go through our Court and Records Branch which have some form of computer system but whether they do individual checks or not I am not sure.

So far as somebody in your position is concerned where an incident does not have anything to do with firearms you yourself would not ask for a check/check and it would follow from that presumably that you would not make any suggestion as to whether any question was raised as to fitness? That wouldn't arise? - That wouldn't arise.

But there might be somewhere else within the Force or a level at which some investigation is carried out? - There may be an area of the Department I have never worked in. There may well be.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

CAMPBELL: Can I develop this just a little further. Let's suppose you are investigating an incident relating to a person and you are aware that he is a firearms certificate holder. Although the purpose of the investigation by yourself may not be directly related to that, if you know the person is a firearms certificate holder, are you required to send a copy of your report to the Firearms Department? - Yes, that is correct.

Whatever the subject matter of the report? - Perhaps a minor traffic offence would not be sent but any of the type of things..... even traffic offences that would affect them, if they were drunk driving, that would be a factor. If there was violence, if they were poaching offences, gun offences, these would all very very high in order of preference. The Licensing Department must be notified.

Suppose/

11.00 a.m.

Suppose you investigate a matter of that nature, drunk driving, poaching, that kind of thing, but you were unaware of the fact that the person possesses a firearms certificate would the system pick up the fact that this investigation had taken place and ensure that the Firearms Department were aware of it? - I have to go back -- I am not 100% sure whether that Records Department have a system to pick that up; drunk driving, I wouldn't see me personally checking to see whether the person held a firearms certificate.

Your feeling is that when you stop somebody for drunk driving you wouldn't, as a matter of routine, ask him whether or not he holds a firearms certificate? - No.

And you are unaware as to whether or not there would be any procedure in place to ensure that somebody notices that a report had been made about a firearms certificate holder? - Yes.

In that connection? - Yes, I am aware of that.

Clearly it would be desirable if such a system were in place? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: On that point it seemed to me perhaps quite remarkable that if a motor vehicle is stopped that the police quite often have information about the registered keeper of that vehicle before they have even got out of their motor vehicle and approached the driver but there doesn't appear to be any central record that can enable a check to be made of a firearms certificate holder; it wouldn't appear to be difficult to put that in place?
- My experience in computer and computer systems is not very good but I do believe the Force computer does contain that and could be accessed by our police room at Force Headquarters.

That wouldn't have helped here whether the firearms certificate holder was resident in another Force district? - Yes.

Perhaps there is something to be said of a/

a central register? - A central computer firearms register.

For firearm certificate holders? - There might be merit in that.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: Do you still have Production D27/L in front of you; this is the statement you took from the mother of the child or children? - Yes, I did.

And in the first paragraph of that statement you record that Mr. Hamilton visited the house or the family on occasions? - Yes.

Do we then see in the final sentence of the first paragraph that it is stated that "During these visits he mentioned his interest in guns and when our children showed an interest in them he offered to bring some to our house and show them"? - Yes.

Is it reasonable to imply that having made that offer the offer was accepted? - Yes.

And we find in the next paragraph it recorded that this event had taken place some months earlier? - Yes, five or six months earlier.

So given the frailty of human recollection it wouldn't be beyond the point of possibility that the incident which is referred to in D76/L -- do you have D76/L before you?

LORD CULLEN: It is the handwritten log.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. TAYLOR: It is the handwritten log, you have referred to it already? - Is that it?

Yes, you see D76/L records at the bottom, I think it is something like "The event happened October, 1988 or the incident happened October, 1988"? - Yes, that is correct.

And the incident which you were investigating when you visited the house at Linlithgow was said to be December, 1988 or January, 1989? - That is correct.

They/

They are not that far apart in the time frame? -
No.

So is it possible they are one and the same incident which is being referred to? - Yes.

I think we see in D76/L that there is a reference to somebody taking guns to an address in Linlithgow? - Yes.

We see the name in brackets? - Yes.

I think that name is the same person as you were interviewing when you attended at Linlithgow on the 20th May? - That is correct.

And the address is the same? - Yes.

When you had concluded your investigations what did you then do? - I sent the statement and photographs to the Central Scotland Police.

THE DEAN OF FACULTY: I wonder if I may clarify two points with this witness, my lord?

LORD CULLEN: I was just wondering what points you are wishing to make and how far it goes.

THE DEAN OF FACULTY: I am representing the interests of Lothian and Borders Police and there may be some discrepancy between the two documents that have been put to the witness and I wonder if I could seek to assist the Inquiry hopefully by asking one question to see if I can clarify that discrepancy and secondly, another matter has been raised by Mr. Campbell about the question of what the officer did or might have done or should do in connection with firearms and reporting firearms.

LORD CULLEN: I think there might be some usefulness in some of that as far as the Inquiry is concerned. I will give you that opportunity.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY THE DEAN OF FACULTY:
Sergeant, can I ask you to have in front of you again D76/L and D80/L which are both within file DCD275, do you still have these in front of you; D80/L/

D80/L is a memo from Central Scotland Police, Inspector Nimmo?
- I have D80/L.

D75/L is a handwritten note dated 19th May? - Yes, I have both.

Can I ask you, before you were contacted by Central Scotland Police in May of 1989 had you heard of Mr.
Hamilton? - No, I hadn't.

Had you had any dealings with Mr. Hamilton? -
None at all.

In particular did you know anything about Mr.
Hamilton, whether he possessed a firearms certificate or not? -
No, I didn't.

When you went to the house in Linlithgow and spoke to the householders there was it apparent from their statements that guns had been brought to the house by Mr.
Hamilton? - That is correct, yes.

If Mr. Hamilton's firearms certificate didn't authorise possession of this particular gun would that be an offence? - Yes, that would be an offence.

Would that offence have been committed within your jurisdiction? - That is correct.

Would you have an interest therefore in knowing whether a gun in the house at Linlithgow was actually covered by Mr. Hamilton's certificate, whatever the reason for them being there? - Yes.

In that regard would the only way in which you could find out that information be by making contact to the licensing authority, namely Central Scotland Police? - That is correct.

So if one looks at the dates on these two documents, given that the date on your notebook discloses that 20th May is the date on which you spoke to the householders and coincides with the memo, the internal memo, of Central Scotland Police suggesting that you had contact or that Mrs. Haggart had contact would it appear that this document is incorrect as far as the date is concerned? - It would appear that an error in the date would explain it/it to me.

LORD CULLEN: I thought you were going to open up another topic; have you had second thoughts?

THE DEAN OF FACULTY: Perhaps I can take one thing from the witness. I have had second thoughts.

LORD CULLEN: I thought it was a rather promising avenue that you were going to explore.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY THE DEAN OF FACULTY: Sergeant, as far as the question of firearms was concerned have you had any direct involvement with the licensing procedures of firearms in your own Force? - No, none at all.

In so far as you have expressed a view in your evidence about firearms are these personal views as a police officer? - These are my own personal views.

And are there particular officers within Lothian and Borders who would be better qualified to explain to this Inquiry about the procedures within the Firearms Department and about the computerisation of records? - Yes, there certainly would be.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: If that was the inquiry you were making about Mr. Hamilton's authority to hold these weapons have you any idea where you get an answer? - I can't recollect this but I can see this as being a natural thing for me to do in these circumstances, given the gentleman had been at the house in Linlithgow with this gun and with people in the house I would contact the Central Scotland Police to see if he was authorised to have this weapon.

But the note doesn't reflect the identity of the weapon, it is simply a general request to know what weapons Hamilton was authorised to hold? - That is correct.

You did indicate that, and I may have misunderstood this and that is why I want to be clear, that if someone was behaving in this way, that/that is the way that Hamilton was behaving in your area was the way you put it you would draw that to the attention of the Firearms Department? - Yes.

If it was not your area? - No, if a person was resident.....if a person resident had a licence issued in our Force area and was behaving in such a manner I would notify the Firearms Licensing Department of that.

Do you think it is possible he was committing an offence? - I don't know about an offence, just a concern for public safety and the use of firearms.

Is there an organisation or an object known as the Police National Computer? - Yes.

What is it? - It is a computer that holds information on criminals, stolen vehicles, etc.

When you do a stolen vehicle check or indeed a check of someone's licensed status in a road traffic inquiry do you regularly contact or get in touch with the police national computer?
- Yes, we regularly use the police national computer.

Does it record whether or not the person holds a firearms certificate? - I don't know.

Well, have you ever yourself contacted the computer? - No, not at all.

How do you make this check? - By contacting the individual Force itself.

But if you had stopped someone on drunk driving as you have described -- --? - Yes.

And you want to check the licence? - Yes, the driving licence.

Would you contact the police national computer? - No.

Who does that? - For a driving licence we contact the DVLC in Swansea.

In what circumstances would you get in touch/touch with the police national computer? - More or less for stolen vehicles, checking out persons if they are wanted or warranted.

So you would check if people have a warrant through that system? - Yes.

Can you tell me whether the system records whether or not a person holds a firearms certificate? - No.

It doesn't or you don't know? - I don't know.

FIONA KIRKPATRICK (36), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: You are a Constable in Central Scotland Police? - Yes.

Based in Alloa? - Now based at Stirling.

How long in Central Scotland Police? - 18 years.

Could you look at a document which is No. FA53, also D75; whose handwriting is on that document? -

That is my handwriting.

Are you good on dates? - In what respects?

When you record a date do you usually get it right?
- Usually.

I suppose police officers should? - They should,
yes.

You have written a date on this document? - Yes,
I have.

What is it? - 19/5/89.

You then sent the document somewhere? - Yes, I have.

Where? - To the Firearms Department in/

in our Police Headquarters in Stirling.

You have asked them to advise Sergeant McGrane what weapons Hamilton, Thomas Watt Hamilton, is authorised to possess? - Yes.

You record at the top that the inquiry came from Sergeant McGrane of Lothian and Borders? Yes, that is correct.

Do you remember this? - I am afraid I don't.

Absolutely nothing about it? - Nothing at all.

In/

11.20 a.m.

In May, 1989 where were you based? - I was station officer at Stirling Police Office on that date.

So it would make sense for you to have got the message and sent it to the Firearms Department? - Yes, that is correct.

Were you also the station officer on the 20th? - I can only assume I would be.

That was your regular duty around that time? - Yes, that is correct.

Have you actually checked up that you were on duty on the 19th? - No.

You just know that was a duty you did at that time? - Yes, that is right.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: What is today's date? - 5th June?

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: Is the Firearms Department open seven days a week? - No, it is not. It is 9 to 5, Monday to Friday, closed at the weekends.

If a phone call came in regarding an enquiry as to somebody's Firearms Certificate, would you normally make a note of it if the Firearms Department was open? - If the Firearms Department was open, I would not normally receive the call at the extension that I was working at.

So if this call which you have recorded on D75L was made on a Saturday, the call would come through to you? - Yes.

If it was made Monday to Friday, it would go to the Firearms Department? - Yes, that is right.

And would it therefore suggest that perhaps this call was made on a Saturday or perhaps a Sunday? - Perhaps, but also it could have been made in the evening after the Firearms Department were closed.

Could/

Could you have a look please at Production 78L? Do you find there a statement of an individual -- you don't need to mention the individual's name? - Yes, I do.

And we see that the date is Saturday 20th May, 1989; is that right? - Yes, that is correct.

I think it would reasonably be implied that the memo bears to record it as being 19th, and that that would be a Friday? - That is right.

And if the call therefore was made during normal working hours on the 19th you wouldn't have received it? - No, that is correct.

No re-examination.

IAN McBAIN, (44), Sworn,

Are you a Detective Sergeant with Strathclyde Police?
- I am now a Detective Inspector with Strathclyde Police.

Sorry, Detective Inspector. Where are you based? - I am presently based at Dumbarton Police Office.

How long have you been with Strathclyde Police? - 25 years' service.

Would you look please at Production D1K? Do you recognise that as your report into complaints about Thomas Hamilton's summer camp at Inchmoan in July, 1988? - I do.

And is the report dated the 30th of August, 1988? - It is indeed.

Now, if you go to the second page can you confirm that it was a report to your superiors destined for the Procurator-Fiscal at Dumbarton? - That is correct.

Now, I think you have recorded on the first page of that that following events which we have heard about already, arrangements were made for parents to come to collect children on Thursday the 21st July, 1988? - It was a case of contacting parents/parents to allow them access to their children, to make up their own mind. It wasn't necessarily a case of collecting their children.

A number came, though? - They did indeed, yes.

And the children were located at a cinema; is that right? - They were indeed.

And they were taken to a police station? - Brought to Dumbarton Police Office.

And I think in paragraph four, towards the end, you have recorded "All the parents present spoke with Hamilton, who was quite happy to speak with them"? - That is correct.

"None of the parents present were prepared to make any complaints or malign Hamilton in any way"? - That is correct.

"Indeed, some praised him"? - That is correct.

Nevertheless, your investigation threw up some material that you thought the Procurator-Fiscal should look at? - Correct.

Can you tell us the general nature of that? - In relation to the condition of the camp on the Island of Inchmoan. The conditions were extremely basic, to say the least. There was also one or two allegations in relation to children being slapped by Hamilton, and there was I believe one or possibly two allegations, where he had I think touched himself or rubbed himself.

Well, was that not in fact an allegation to other people in the camp, not him -- I think you reflect that on the second page in paragraph six? - Yes, that is correct.

It wasn't him at all? - It wasn't him.

Would it be fair to say that anyone viewing this might have seen certain problems about corroboration for any specific incident? - That is correct.

That/

That is not to say there isn't any, but that would have been a problem that someone looking at this carefully would have to consider? - Correct.

In the course of this Inquiry I think you took a statement from Doreen Haggar? - I did.

Can you try and find it -- are your pages numbered? - No, they aren't. I beg your pardon, some are numbered and some are not.

Well, it is towards the back of the statements. I have got a No. 59 at the top that someone has written on mine? - Yes, I have just found it, No. 59, yes.

Now, is that the start of a statement that you took from Doreen Haggar on Friday the 26th of August, 1988? - That is correct.

Do you remember how you took it? - I took it by telephone. I had previously called at her address through in Linlithgow without success, and as I said I took it subsequently by telephone.

Now, could you go to the page numbered 65? Is that a continuation of the statement? - It is indeed.

Now, do you actually remember the statement being taken? - I took the statement, yes.

And you remember doing it, do you? - I do, yes.

I think on that page, from just about halfway down, she is dealing with the circumstances in which she left the camp on Sunday the 6th of August? - Yes.

And I think that she told you that there had been bother and someone was behaving in a threatening manner -- if you go to two lines from the foot, can you confirm that? - Yes, that is correct.

Now, just read through that paragraph quickly to refresh your memory and then tell me what you/

you remember she was telling you was the nature of the threatening behaviour, who was making it, and whom it was directed to -- can you tell me? - It refers to a man "Davie".

And do you remember being told about this? - I do, yes.

Was there any allegation made by Mrs. Hagger that she had been threatened by Hamilton? - At that time, no.

Does this account relate to a threat by a person Davie towards Mrs. Hagger's friend Janet? - Correct.

Have you any recollection of her telling you that she left because Hamilton had threatened to set fire to her tent? - I have no recollection of that, no.

If you go further up the page, the immediately preceding paragraph says "During my ten-day stay I only saw one child being chastised by Hamilton, and in my opinion the boy deserved punishment as he had been bullying other children"? - That is correct.

Is that what she told you? - Yes.

You can part with that document now, and could you look at a document which is DINTEL F1 D4, which is an intelligence log entry which has been copied for everyone this morning. At the top it says "D4 I(iii)". Now, this appears to be a document completed by you in your previous life as a detective sergeant dated the 18th of July, 1988? - Correct.

Do you remember this? - I don't remember that actual form, but I remember the basic content of the information.

You were actually based at Alexandria then? - I was.

There is no doubt it is you that this relates to? - Correct.

And it is an intelligence log input form/form -- is that a fair description? - That would be a fair description.

Now, who would you send this intelligence to? - My Divisional -- first of all I would send it to my Divisional Intelligence Officer and he in turn would obviously then liaise with our Force Criminal Intelligence Officer who in turn then would liaise with his counterpart in Central Scotland Police area.

Is there a backing, a documentary Production backing sheet? - I only have the one sheet of paper here, sir.

All right. There is a file I think from which this comes, and you are now being given the file from which that was extracted. Can you tell me where these documents were found? - They were found at Police Headquarters, Randolphfield, Stirling.

Which would suggest that the system worked and that the intelligence got through to Central Police? - Correct.

Now, can you read out the intelligence entry please? - It is submitted by myself, D.S. McBain, stationed at Alexandria: "I have received complaints from a series of boys' parents whose sons were camping on a Loch Lomond island under the auspices of an organisation run for boys by Thomas Hamilton, 7 Kent Road, Stirling. Nothing sexual took place, although Hamilton ran a very authoritarian regime and assaulted the boys by punching and slapping them for misdemeanours. He seemed to enjoy pushing the boys about. Parents have complained to the police and I noted statements from eight boys describing the events, although it is my opinion that some may be exaggerating. Do you have anything recorded against Hamilton?" -- and an answer which replies "Information passed".

And what does that mean? - I take it from that that I received a reply from Central Scotland Police.

"Anything recorded against Hamilton" would be an enquiry about what? - In relation to -- well, the boys' club and anything known about his past/past history.

Yes, recorded where? - In Central Scotland Police area.

So we are not just talking about Scottish Criminal Records here? - We are not, no.

We are looking for an intelligence reply, I suppose? - We are indeed, yes.

You are looking for such intelligence as Central have on Hamilton? - Correct.

Now, that document is dated 18th July, which is actually before you speak to a number of witnesses; is that correct?
- Yes. It is only my assumption, but 18th July was the date I first became aware of this enquiry, and that may be one explanation as to why it is dated 18th July.

Well, could it possibly be something you did at the very early stages of the enquiry to find out if indeed something was recorded against Hamilton? - That is also possible, yes.

Have you any recollection of what information if any came back to you? - From memory I don't think there was anything came back to me at all about Thomas Hamilton.

Well, that could be "We have nothing", because that would be something, or it could be that you heard nothing. Have you any recollection of which it was? - No. I think what it was was that they certainly were aware of the gentleman, but they had nothing, you know, recorded either by way of convictions against the man or information against the man.

No cross-examination.

EILEEN NIMMO, (51), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY BONOMOY: I think you are now retired from the Force, but were an Inspector latterly with Central Scotland Police? - That is correct.

And/

And how long were you actually a serving police officer?
- 30 years.

I think you now stay in Dunblane? - Yes.

Could you look please at a document -- you will be given all the documents just now, and I will identify them in a moment: DCD275 -- if you can look at the one which is D76L, which I think is the one with your handwriting on it? Is there a handwritten document you have there -- in fact it may not be yours, it may be someone else's handwriting. If you can just find the handwritten document. Do you have that? - Yes, I have the handwritten document.

And does it have the name "Doreen Haggart" at the top?
- That is correct.

And is it an incident log recording a report to the police at Stirling? - That is correct.

And it suggests that the complaint is made by Doreen Haggart? - Yes.

Now, is that in fact your handwriting? - No.

Have you any idea whose it is? - It is Officer -- I see here it is Officer 436.

So if we identify who No. 436 was we will have the writer of the document? - Yes.

Do you happen to know who it was? - No, I am sorry, I don't.

But it was sent to you, I think? - Yes.

It is dated the 20th of May; is that right? - That is correct.

And have you any direct recollection of this? - Not particularly, no.

Well, any at all? - I remember it now that I see it in front of me.

Now, there is writing also at the bottom. Is/

Is that the same handwriting, do you think -- and if that is an impossible question, please say so? - I couldn't definitely say.

Is it your handwriting? - No.

11.40 a.m.

Now, do you have any recollection of receiving this incident log and doing anything about it? - Yes, I contacted a Sergeant at Bathgate and requested him to make enquiries with the Smiths regarding this incident.

Now, can you look at AD2A which is part of that bundle? Is that in fact your report dated 30th June 1989 to your Chief Superintendent? - Yes.

What was his name? - Malcolm Gunn.

Now, you report here to Mr. Gunn that you have got statements back from Sergeant McGrane? - That is correct.

Statements and photographs and you are sending all these papers to the Chief Superintendent? - Yes.

Was it for you to give any detailed consideration of this or were you just passing it on to him? - Yes, I was passing it on to him.

Without really considering the circumstances yourself? - That is correct.

Now, there is then handwriting on the memo. Is that your handwriting? - It is my signature above the words "Inspector" but none of the other writing is my writing, no.

The handwriting there starts DCC as if it is addressed to a person known as DCC? - That is correct.

Who is that? - The Depute Chief Constable.

Do you recognise the writing after that? - Yes.

Whose is it? - It appears to me to be Malcolm Gunn's.

And what was he writing to the Depute Chief Constable? - "May be quite a harmless display/display of weapons but nevertheless an action which leaves a lot to be desired".

Now, why would something like that be submitted to a Depute Chief Constable? - I would consider it would be up to him to decide what action, if any, to be taken.

Why him? - Because he was a Depute Chief Constable.

Yes, but was this an area that he in particular had responsibility for? - Yes, he had to do with the issuing of firearms certificates.

You see, the word "harmless" is used in that note and I would not imagine that harmless actions would normally be the subject of reports to the Depute Chief Constable. Now, why should the action of the type described in the report go to the Depute Chief Constable? - I am sorry, I can't answer that. I don't know what was in Mr. Gunn's mind at that time.

Was it not because he had a particular responsibility for firearms? - Mr. Gunn or the Depute Chief Constable?

No, the Depute Chief Constable. Is that not the reason why it would go to the Depute Chief Constable? - I am sorry, can you repeat that?

Would the reason why it went to the Depute Chief Constable be that he had special responsibility for firearms certificates? - I would imagine so, yes.

But you don't know that that would be the reason? - I don't know that that would be the reason.

Why then did you send it to the Chief Superintendent? - It was for his information and attention as to whatever further action he required to take on it.

Well, the Inquiry here will wish to try and establish what hierarchy within the police authority deals with the types of complaint that are relevant to this case and here we have something being/being described as harmless and going up through the chain of command to the Depute Chief Constable. Now, you must have had something in particular in your mind when you sent it up the chain to the Chief Superintendent. Why did you send a complaint of this type or an investigation report of this types to the Chief Superintendent? - It was for his information and, as I say, for any further action he wished to take on the matter.

And what action did you envisage might be taken? - I have no idea what action he might want to take.

You held a fairly senior rank at that stage as an Inspector. Did you not apply your mind to something like that when it came across your desk? - yes.

Well, what thought did you give to this report before deciding it should go to the Chief Superintendent? - Well, I was looking for directions, if he wanted any further action taken.

Did you think further action should be taken? - It wasn't up to me to say whether further action should be taken, if any.

Well, who was it up to? - My superior officer.

So why is it that this type of complaint, and I am really back to the same question, why is it that this type of subject matter was up to your superior officer and not up to you? - Well, I think in view of the fact..... in my opinion, in view of the fact that there was already enquiries ongoing, that is why I submitted this report in the way I did.

Well, now we are maybe making some progress. What enquiries were ongoing? - I understood that Inspector Keenan was making enquiries regarding Hamilton.

So you were aware of that at that time? That is the 30th June 1989? - Yes.

Now, we have already seen Keenan's report which is dated May of 1989? - Yes.

So/

So were enquiries still ongoing? - I have no idea.

So are you really unable to help me by telling me what was in your mind and what were your reasons for sending this report to the Chief Superintendent? - Well, as I say, having in mind the enquiries that were already ongoing, I felt it my duty to report the matter to the Superintendent for his information and attention.

Can you tell me if there was anything in the content of the report you got that you were particularly concerned about? - Just the fact that he had taken these weapons and shown them to the children.

What was your concern about that? - I felt it really wasn't a very wise thing to have done.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: What it comes to is that the reason that you reported this matter to Mr. Gunn was because it concerned a gentleman who was at that time making a complaint about the police? - Oh, I didn't know if he was making a complaint about the police.

Well, if you look at your memo again to the Chief Superintendent of the 30th June 1989 at the second paragraph. "I was aware that Inspector Keenan, Stirling was investigating a complaint against the police made by Hamilton in which Mrs. Haggart was a witness"? - I beg your pardon. I was thinking about another matter.

And if I have understood the thrust of your evidence so far, it is to the effect that the reason why you reported this matter up the chain to the Chief Superintendent was because it concerned a gentleman who was making a complaint against the police? - That is correct.

It might be thought that the fact that this report concerned a man with a gun and children should in itself have been sufficient to require a report to a superior officer? - That is what I did.

Whether or not the gentleman was making a complaint against the police, this is something which/which should be reported to a superior officer? - That is correct.

However, the reason why you reported it was nothing to do with the fact that it was a man with a gun and children but because Hamilton was in the course of making a complaint? - No, it would have been reported in any case.

Why did you tell my learned friend, Mr. Bonomy, that the reason why you reported this up the chain was because of the complaint made by Mr. Hamilton against the police? - It would have been reported in any case, whether Mr. Hamilton had made a complaint or not.

You see, one might think that the fact that Mr. Hamilton is making a complaint against the police should really be neither here nor there in the context of a report such as this? - That is correct.

What did you understand your role and function in this matter to be? - To report this matter to my superior officer.

Did you consider that it was any part of your function to think about this report? - I did think about it.

Prior to this had you received any training from your employers in firearms licensing procedures? - No.

No re-examination.

ARCHIBALD CARSON (53), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you still a Sergeant with Lothian and Borders? - I am.

How long in the police? - 24 years.

And are you still based at Livingston? - I am.
Now, you spent a period in Linlithgow? - Yes.

When/

When was that? - From approximately September 1988 until 1994.

Can you tell me roughly how many officers were at any given time based at Linlithgow during that period? - Approximately it varied between 10 and 12 officers I would say.

And who would be in charge of that station? - There were two sergeants and an inspector in charge.

And the rest constables? - Yes.

Any CID officers? - Not directly based at Linlithgow, no.

All uniform? Every one a uniformed officer? - That is correct, yes.

Can you tell me what the manned hours of the police office were during that period? - We were normally covered from half-past 8 in the morning until 9 o'clock in the evening. There were two civilians worked alternate shifts, day shift and back shift, Monday to Friday.

Let me get that. Half-past 8 in the morning until.....?
- 9 p.m. in the evening.

Manned by civilians? - Two civilians normally on duty, yes.

But Linlithgow itself as a community would be manned 24 hours? - Yes, there was a police presence in Linlithgow 24 hours a day.

Now, were you a sergeant between 1988 and 1994? - Yes.

Can you look please at your own notebook which is LBSAI08? Is that one of your police notebooks? - Yes.

Which period of time does it cover? - It covers from March 1989 until September of 1989.

During that period did you receive any complaint from Doreen Haggart that a firearm had been presented to her out of a van by a person called Thomas Hamilton? - No.

Did/

Did you hear of any such complaint being made during that period? - No.

Is that sort of complaint one that a sergeant at Linlithgow was likely to hear about if the incident took place in Linlithgow and was reported to a Linlithgow officer? - Yes, it most certainly would be.

Would you be surprised not to hear about it? If it happened and had been reported and you did not hear about it, would that be unusual? - Yes, it would.

Do you know Doreen Haggar? - I do.

Was there one particular incident around that time that you were involved in which Hamilton was involved in? - Yes.

What was that incident? - This was an incident that occurred at Linlithgow Academy.

We have heard about something on the 16th May when noxious liquid was tossed over Hamilton. Is that the incident you are talking about? - Yes.

And that happened at Linlithgow Academy? - Yes.

Were you one of the officers who investigated the incident? - I was.

Were you there when it happened? - No, I arrived shortly after it had happened.

Did you speak to Hamilton? - Yes, I did.

Did he want to make a complaint? - No, he refused pointblank to make a complaint.

Did you tell Mrs. Haggar and Janet Reilly about that? - Yes, they were both made aware of that.

And their reaction? - They were surprised. They were all for a complaint being made. They wanted a complaint to be made.

DOUGLAS/

12.00

DOUGLAS LYNCH, Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you a Sergeant with Lothian and Borders Police? - That is correct.

Based at West End in Edinburgh? - That is correct.

What age are you? - 33.

How long with Lothian and Borders Police? - 10 years' police service.

I think that you spent some time at Linlithgow? - That is correct.

When was that? - It would have been the period from December of 1987 to approximately December, 1990.

Was your whole time throughout that period spent at Linlithgow? - Yes, it would have been.

Did you on any occasion during that period of service get a complaint from either Doreen Haggar or Janet Reilly to the effect that they had been subjected to threats or anything that happened in relation to a firearm in the hands of a man called Thomas Hamilton? - No.

Did you know Doreen Haggar? - Yes, I did.

Did you know Janet Reilly? - Yes, I did.

Were you aware of an incident at Linlithgow Academy on the 16th May, 1989 when material was thrown over Thomas Hamilton? - Yes, I would have been aware at that time.

If you could concentrate on that period of time; in the few months around that time was any complaint that you recollect made by either of these woman about Hamilton's behaviour with a firearm? - No, nothing.

Could/

Could you have in front of you a notebook LBFA90H and 107; now, are both of these your notebooks? - Yes, they are.

What period of time do they cover? - One note book covers from the 31st January, 1989 to Sunday 19th January, 1990 -- '89, I beg your pardon -- and the second notebook was the 14th June, 1989 to the 28th August, 1989.

So there is a gap there between March and June? - That is correct.

Do you know where the notebook is for the intervening period? - I have no idea.

No. 106, is that it? - From 19th March to the 12th May.

So we have now a gap of from the 12th May to when? - The 12th May to the 14th June.

You don't know where the one for that period is? - No, all these notebooks were submitted by me after I had completed them.

How many did you submit? - Approximately it would be once every six weeks I would get a new notebook.

When you finish you put your notebook in? - Yes, once you have completed using that for any statement purposes or inquiry you just submit your notebook.

In connection with Central Scotland police inquiries in this case were you interviewed? - Yes.

Were you shown your books? - I was shown a number of notebooks.

Do you remember how many? - No, I can't remember.

Did you look through the books you were shown to see if there was a record of a complaint of a firearm by either of these ladies? - Yes.

Was there one? - No, there wasn't.

There/

There has been reference in the statements and indeed in the questions put in the inquiry of a Linlithgow officer with a mark on the side of his face like a burn; is that you? - Yes, I would think that would be me.

You have no recollection of any complaint by either lady to you? - No, I never received any complaint.

Made by a phone call resulting in a visit to Mrs. Haggar's house or Mrs. Reilly's house? - No.

Are you quite sure about that? - Definitely.

In the books that you did go through with a Central Scotland police officer were there entries relating to Mrs. Haggar? - Yes, there was a number of entries.

Were there any in relation to Mrs. Reilly? - Yes, I believe there was, Mrs. Reilly's details were also noted.

But nothing to do with presenting a firearm? - No, there was a number of complaints that I had dealt with from Mrs. Haggar, none in relation to a firearm.

CHARLES MITCHELL (26), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you a Detective Constable with Central Scotland Police? - Yes.

Based in Stirling? - That is correct.

How long in Central Scotland Police? - Seven years.

When did you first become involved in this Inquiry? -

On the 13th March.

I think on the 18th March you were given the/

the role of part of the team investigating Hamilton's background in relation to the possession of firearms? - Yes, I was instructed to assist in that regard.

Your inquiries were directed in that direction thereafter? - That is correct, yes.

I think on Wednesday, 20th March you learned of an allegation that appeared in national newspapers made by Doreen Haggar about an incident in 1989 involving Thomas Hamilton? - That is correct, yes.

As a result of getting that information what was the first inquiry you made? - I was briefed on the newspaper articles and I travelled to Aberdeen to interview Mrs. Haggar.

Did you interview her on more than one occasion? - I did, I interviewed her twice.

When was the second time? - The second time was about a fortnight later after I interviewed an associate of hers, Janet Reilly, who had apparently witnessed the incident referred to by Mrs. Haggar.

Did you examine log books kept at Linlithgow Police Office? - Yes, I did, I initially examined two log books that had been retained by a colleague; latterly with the assistance of Lothian and Borders Police we recovered the remaining log books which span the period of June, 1988 to late 1989.

Were examination of the log books carried out in the full knowledge of the allegation that Mrs. Haggar and the allegation Mrs. Reilly was making? - Yes, that is correct.

Could you find anything recorded in the station log book relating to this? - Nothing at all, no.

What sort of things were recorded in these log books?
- In relation to Mrs. Haggar?

In general? - In general -- a wide variety of calls, incidents relating to thefts, road accidents, / accidents, disturbances reported to Linlithgow police and also calls which had gone to Livingston Police Office but which required to be attended by Linlithgow officers.

Was it the system that if the station at Linlithgow was unmanned the call was made to Livingston? - It is my understanding Linlithgow was covered 24 hours a day but there was not always a person present in the office; however, the text was directed to Linlithgow office which would have been entered in the book prior to attendance there or retrospectively.

If we look at log book LB FA 109, is that an example of a log book? - That is correct.

What period does that one cover? - The 11th April, 1989 to the 16th May, 1989.

Perhaps you could also have 110 as another example; what period does that one cover? - This is the period immediately following the 16th May, 1989 to the 26th June, 1989.

And in these are there apparently complaints recording phone calls made to the Linlithgow Police Office? - Yes, that is correct, there is notes, the text of calls made there and also the action taken in respect of these calls.

Are there also signs of entries that have gone to Livingston and been relative to Linlithgow? - Yes, I believe on checking these these are marked with the letters from DHQ.

Was there any sign of complaints of the type that Mrs. Haggar was relating to? - No, not in relation to a firearm.

I think that you also tried, as far as you could, to check the available police notebooks of officers who were serving at Linlithgow during the period you were interested in? - Yes, that is correct.

Was there any obvious policy being operated in relation to the retention or destruction of/of notebooks? - I believe in general there's a five year destruction policy; we were fortunate at Linlithgow that there were boxes containing notebooks that were due for destruction prior to that period and this hadn't been carried out.

Is it fair to say you have recovered a number of notebooks from a number of police officers at Linlithgow but not all of them? - That is correct.

Could you have in front of you a series of notebooks that you did recover -- that is LBFA running from 98 through to 108; are these the notebooks of the Linlithgow officers in the following order and if you can check them off with me -- Lynch? - Yes.

Anderson? - Yes.

McArthur? - Yes.

Hamilton? - Yes.

Hamilton again? - Yes, that is correct.

And Hamilton, a third one? - Yes.

McKenzie? - Yes.

Carrol? - Yes.

Two more for Lynch? - Yes.

And one for Sergeant Carson? - Yes.

First of all, do these cover the period around May, 1989? - Yes, some were earlier that covered a longer period but they did generally cover that period.

In any of these was there an entry reflecting the complaint Mrs. Haggar was now making to you? - No, none of them contained such an entry.

Now, we have heard from some of these officers already but one of them and I refer you to Hamilton who is a constable and his books are 101, 102/

102 and 103 -- can you tell me the period covered by these books in particular? - Yes, the first one covers the 21st February, 1989 to the 18th April, 1989, we have the 18th April, 1989 to the 1st August, 1989 and we have the 2nd August, 1989 to the 11th September, 1989.

Do any of these contain any entry that remotely resemble the one you were looking for? - Nothing -- some of them did contain entries in which Mrs. Haggar featured; however, they were minor complaints which bore no relevance to Thomas Hamilton or anything to do with a firearm.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Did I understand you correctly that as far as the log book entries are concerned the system, as explained to you, was that the entries would be completed either in advance or retrospectively? - If they had come from Divisional Headquarters; if the officer was able to he would record it in advance of attending the call; however, if this wasn't possible, after attending the call they would appear to have fully updated the log book and with the text of the call and the action they had taken.

I understand the exercise you had carried out was simply to look through the various log books in looking to discover whether or not any entries relating to this matter existed? - That is correct.

And if it was to be suggested that the conclusion to be drawn from your investigation was that no visit or no report was made as suggested by Mrs. Haggar that would depend upon those log books being a comprehensive record of everything that the policemen did? - As I say we were obviously aware of the fact that this might not be totally comprehensive, yes.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: Did you interview any of the Linlithgow officers? - I was involved in interviewing some of them, yes.

Can you remember which ones? - Lynch -- I believe I interviewed P.C. Lynch -- if I could check there.

Are any of these books not there? - Yes, /

Yes, there were officers whose books were not present; P.C. Anderson I was going to say but I see his books were present; we interviewed all the officers who we could find were at the station at that time but I wasn't responsible for interviewing all of them.

From what you know did any of them recollect this incident? - None of them, no.

SUSAN JANE OVENSTONE, (40), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: I think you are a Journalist? - Yes.

You work with an agency in Aberdeen? - Yes.

You interviewed a lady called Doreen Haggar? - Yes.

When was that? - The day following the Dunblane tragedy.

What was it that alerted you to the fact that she had information? - It came by two sources -- one was that there was a small article in the Press & Journal newspaper in the morning relating to Mrs. Haggar and a Glasgow based newspaper newsdesk phoned me up and asked me to go to her house and interview her.

And/

12.20 p.m.

And did you read the Press & Journal afterwards? -
Yes.

Did it say anything about a firearm? - No.

Do you remember what time of the day it was you spoke to Mrs. Haggar? - I got to her house about half past 8 in the morning.

Was there anyone apart from her in the house? - There was her daughter Vicky, two younger children and a man.

Was she the only person you interviewed? - For most of the time, yes. Her daughter Vicky came through towards the end of the time that I was there.

Did you regard her as contributing any significant material to the piece you were doing? - Vicky?

Yes? - Not a lot, no.

How did you go about interviewing Mr. Haggar? - I went to her house, asked to speak to her, went through to her lounge, and the two of us just sat.

Was it a question-and-answer session, or did she tell you a story, or what? - I think she told me -- mainly a question-and-answer.

Now so far as the subject matter is concerned, it would be easy for you to state the basic reason for being there, but did you leave it to her just to tell you in general terms, or did you focus on any particular angle from the outset of the interview? - No. I just asked her what her experience and acquaintance and knowledge of Mr. Hamilton had been, and it sort of developed from there.

And what sort of things did she concentrate on? - The episode which involved her son at camp, the episode outside Linlithgow Academy where she and her friend had thrown items over him, and/

and a gun-related incident outside her house at Bridgend.

And what did she tell you about the gun-related incident? - She said that after the camps she had made various complaints to the police and had been speaking about Mr. Hamilton to people and he had come outside -- as she and her friend were coming out of her house one day he had pulled up in a van and had said "I hear you are bad-mouthing me?" -- something to that effect -- and she had said her reasons why she had been doing that. And she said that he then leant under the driver's seat of the van and pulled out a gun and pointed it at her, and had said something along the lines of "It's amazing how people change their minds when one of these is pointed at them", and made it clear to her that it was loaded; and she had responded that he could shove it, she wasn't frightened by him.

So she said to you -- and this is clear in your recollection -- that Hamilton made it clear to her that the gun was loaded? - Yes.

What part was her daughter playing in the interview at that stage? - She wasn't there at that stage.

Were any other journalists there? - When I arrived at her house at 8.30 I was there on my own, and I was with her for about an hour when another journalist from another newspaper and a photographer turned up. Now, she had gone through the whole story with me once, and I was nearly on the point of leaving when he turned up; and I wasn't going to leave whilst he was there, so I sat with him till he left; and she went through the whole thing twice. I really got two bites of the cherry, as it were.

Was your story published? - Yes.

Who by? - The Daily Star, the Sun, the Herald, the Daily Mail and the Daily Express.

Was there any payment involved for her? - No.

Are you likely to know that that is the case, or could that have happened outwith your knowledge?/

knowledge? - I would be fairly certain in saying that no payment was made to her through any of the papers I represented. When I went to her house in the morning I was acting for the Daily Star initially only. By the time I left her house other papers had expressed an interest, and it changed.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: The incident concerning the gun -- did she tell you whether she had reported it to the police? - Yes, she said she had.

She said she had reported it to the police? - Yes.

No re-examination.

MARGARET THOMSON LAIRD BUTTERWICK, (41), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: Do you still work as a reporter with the Lothian Courier? - Yes, I do.

How long have you been with them? - I have been with them over 16 years, and I am Chief Reporter.

Have you a recollection of the incident on the 16th of

May at Linlithgow Academy, when a lady, a Doreen Haggar, and her friend Janet Reilly threw material over Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

Did you report it? - What do you mean did I report it?
Oh, in the paper?

Sorry, yes? - Yes, I did.

And did you know it was going to happen before it happened? - Yes, I did.

How did you know? - I knew because Mrs. Haggar had phoned me the previous week.

And were you there with a photographer? - I was there with a photographer.

And he got the action shots, did he? - Well, he was less accurate than Mrs. Haggar! We didn't/didn't use the photographs.

Now, what did you anticipate might happen as the result of the publicity this incident got? - I don't fully understand your question, what did I anticipate would result?

Well, perhaps I should put it in an entirely different way. Did you get the impression Mrs. Haggar was hoping things would develop as a result of the publicity? - Yes, I certainly did.

What did you think that she was hoping for? - I think she was hoping that our publicity of the event, the throwing of the bucket of gunge over Mr. Hamilton, would persuade the education authorities to revoke his lease of the facilities at the academy.

Well that worked okay? - It certainly did.

What about her expectations for other parental support for her campaign? - Yes. She certainly said that she hoped it would bring her fears about Mr. Hamilton's suitability to lead a boys' club to the attention of other mothers who had boys at the Linlithgow club.

Did that happen? - I am not sure, because I was never approached by any other mother.

When your office actually learned that the incident was going to happen did you tell the police? - No, I did not.

Was the information at no stage relayed? - Yes. I spoke to Mrs. Haggart at her home following the telephone conversation, in the next day or so, and in order to check whether what she was saying had any foundation I spoke to three police forces before we reported the story. We carried some information, some statements from I think at least one of the officers I spoke to.

So you were just checking the accuracy of what she was telling you? - That is right.

After the incident did you speak to Thomas Hamilton? - Yes I did.

And/

And what was his reaction to it? - He was very calm for a man who had been covered in some substance. He spoke quite politely and very coolly to me about his intentions for the future regarding boys' clubs.

What were the intentions? - Well, he maintained that he had no intention of stopping the club at Linlithgow, and in fact had plans for a boys' club, he hoped, in somewhere like South Queensferry or Bo'ness.

Anything you can tell us now, without -- or excluding the benefit of hindsight -- about your impression of him as a person at that time? - Not really. I spoke very briefly to him, and he followed up our newspaper story with a letter to our office, again maintaining his innocence of the allegations, except for the fact that he was very calm for a man in his situation.

Did you form the impression he was a particularly effeminate type of individual? - Softly spoken.

That is as far as it struck you? - That is as far as I would go.

Now, after the Dunblane tragedy did you become aware of information Mrs. Haggart had imparted to other newspapers? - Yes, I did.

Did reading that information surprise you at all? - Yes, it did.

Why? - Because she had never mentioned any of her statements about guns and Thomas Hamilton to me at all at the time when she called us out to cover the gunge-throwing incident.

How many times did you speak to her? - I spoke to Mrs. Haggart three times, once by telephone, once when I called at her house after the telephone conversation to get more information, and the third time at the academy, on the evening of the incident.

And the two earlier occasions by phone and visit were how long before 16th May? - Within a week. I think she phoned me on the Wednesday morning and I went to her house either the Thursday or/or the Friday, and the incident took place on the Tuesday, the Tuesday evening.

Now, in the conversations was she simply telling you about her plans for throwing gunge, or did she tell you anything about the reasons why she was doing this? - Oh no, we went into the reasons for why she was throwing the gunge.

Did she make specific allegations against Hamilton? - She made allegations against him, yes.

Can you tell me what these were, in general terms, now? - Yes, that she felt he was not a suitable person to be running a boys' club, because her son had returned from the summer camp that Mr. Hamilton had run on one of the islands on Loch Lomond -- Inchmurrin or Inchmoan, I think it was, and she had reason to report certain things that the boy had told her had happened on the island to the local police.

I don't want you necessarily to tell me now, but did she tell you what these were? - Yes.

Did she say anything about getting any hassle from Hamilton afterwards? - No, not at all.

In any form or at any time? - No, not at all.

Did you get the impression from your conversations with her about a strength of feeling about Hamilton? - Yes.

How strong were her feelings, and what were her feelings? - Oh, I think she felt very strongly that Mr. Hamilton should not be running clubs; that he had in some way harmed her child; and that she feared that other children may be put, at the very least, in a compromising position if they were to go on the summer camps planned by Mr. Hamilton for the summer -- 1989 in the summer.

Did she say anything about feeling the authorities -- either local or police -- were failing her in some ways? - She felt definitely that her complaints to the police -- and this was before I had spoken to the police myself -- she felt that they had been unable, for some reason, to take her/her complaint forward, and that this, going to the newspapers, was the only way left to her to bring her complaints about Mr. Hamilton to the public, to tell mothers.

But in that connection did she make any mention of the failure of the police at Linlithgow to take forwards any complaints she had made? - Well, other than answering my question had she reported, or had she made a complaint to the local police, no, she didn't make any further complaint.

And what was the answer to the question had she made any complaint to the local police? - She told me she had.

And did she say what it was about? - Well, it was in connection with statements her son had been making following his time at the camp.

But she indicated that was her complaint to the local police? - To the local police.

Local to where? - Well, Lothian and Borders, but I started checking it out at Linlithgow.

But you found that the complaint was made elsewhere, did you? - Well, I didn't find out where the complaint had been made to, but I was told that a complaint had been made.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Was it quite clear to you that at this time Mrs. Haggar's main concern related to Hamilton's running of clubs and camps? - Yes.

You told us that you spoke to three police forces? - Yes.

Which police forces? - Lothian and Borders, which is the local one for the area; to Strathclyde Police, that is their Press Office in Pitt Street; and to Central Scotland Police in Stirling.

Was this after the incident when material was thrown on Hamilton? - No, it was between the telephone call from Mrs. Haggar and the incident taking place.

What/

What was your purpose in contacting the police? - We were about to report an incident, and as I say, we would have used a photograph of it, had they been suitable, in which one woman, who I had no previous experience of, was making fairly serious allegations about a man running boys' clubs, and I felt that it was necessary to try and check out, to try and find out if there was a foundation for her concern about Mr. Hamilton. And since she had told me that she had reported an incident involving her son and Mr. Hamilton to the police, that is where I started.

So you spoke to all three police forces before the incident when material was thrown? - Yes.

Did you tell them the reason for your investigation of them? - I don't think I did. I told them I had spoken to Mrs. Haggar and that I was following up statements made to us by Mrs. Haggar, but I don't believe I told them what she was about to do that night.

Now, your main purpose, you have told us, in contacting the police, was to find out something about Hamilton? - Yes.

Did you get the same story from each police force? - Obviously, the stories -- the connections or the knowledge of Mr. Hamilton differed, but yes, I drew enough information from the police to realise that Mrs. Haggar had a foundation, let us say, for her concerns.

Was/

12.40 p.m.

Was the information generally the same from all Police Forces or did it differ? - All Police Forces knew of Mr. Hamilton. All police officers were aware of complaints of a sexual nature, of Mr. Hamilton dealing with boys, whether at the club or whether at summer camp. All three had knowledge of that. Each Police Force passed me on to the other, suggesting that they may have more information for me. All of my information was off the record.

But you obtained enough to come to the view that there was maybe some substance in Mrs. Haggard's complaints? - Yes, I did. That is why we used the story.

Can you remember who it was that you spoke to in the Police Forces? - As I say, all the information was off the record. I did not take names. The only person I could go part-way to identifying is a sergeant at Alexandria Police Station. It was one of the Strathclyde officers I spoke to. I spoke to a Press spokesman in their Pitt Street Press Office and then I spoke to a sergeant at Alexandria who told me that at least some of his men had to take boats across to the island to collect boys after complaints had been received from parents or concerns had been expressed by parents. That would be the 1988 summer camp.

Do you remember I think a Detective Constable Mitchell coming to take a statement from you in April of this year? - I do.

Did you tell him about your contact with the Police Forces? - I can't remember if that cropped up at all or not but I am perfectly sure I would have done.

No re-examination.

CHARLES ALEXANDER GALL (35), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you a Daily Record reporter? - Yes.

Based/

Based in Aberdeen? - Yes.

A story recording an interview with Doreen Haggar appeared in the Daily Record on the 15th March and I think you were responsible for the reporting of that story? - That is correct.

On the 14th you interviewed Mrs. Haggar at her home?
- Yes.

Can I take it that there was another reporter there before you got there? - Yes.

Who was that? - Susan Lumsden. Her married name is Ovenstone.

Apart from her, who else was present in the house when you got there? - When we arrived there there was a gentleman in the kitchen. I couldn't tell you who he was. Mrs. Doreen Haggar was in the living room already being interviewed by Susan Lumsden and Mrs. Haggar's daughter Vicky was present and I was accompanied by my photographer colleague, Robert Paterson.

Did the daughter contribute anything to the subject matter of the interview? - Yes, but she wasn't in the room for the duration of the interview. She was coming in and out and occasionally we were asking her some questions.

And did these questions that she was asked relate at all to seeing a firearm? - No, that is not my recollection.

So so far as the firearm is concerned, the interview was confined to Mrs. Haggar? - Yes.

Now, what can you recollect being told by Mrs. Haggar about the possession by Thomas Hamilton of a firearm in her presence? - Well, it followed a visit by Mrs. Haggar to one of these camps where she had sort of virtually gone over and rescued her son and she had come back to the Dunblane area. She lived in Bridgend in fact in Lothian. She came back with some pictorial evidence of what she had seen there and handed this over to the police. So some weeks later Hamilton, she said, had drawn up alongside her in a van, reached under the seat of the van and presented a gun at her/her.

Did she say what type of gun it was? - No, she wasn't clear on the gun at all. I recollect she did say a handgun but I wasn't convinced that she knew really what type of weapon she might be talking about but she certainly knew it was a gun.

Did she say to you whether she understood it to be loaded or not? - He told her it was loaded.

Did she tell you of her reaction? - She told him to F-off or she would ram it down his throat.

Were you able to form any impression from what Mrs. Haggar said of whether her daughter was there when this happened? - Not really. I got the impression that she was with a friend, Janet Reilly.

But not her daughter? - I wasn't sure that the daughter was there, to be honest, but she may have been.

Now, the headline in the Daily Record the following day was "Killer Held Gun To My Head"? - Yes.

Did she tell you that? - I didn't have a direct quote as such but the conversation and the way the interview went and the circumstances as she described them left me in no doubt that he was pointing or holding a gun towards her head, yes.

Did the headline prompt a reaction from Mrs. Haggar? - Yes, it did.

Did you, as a result of her trying to get in touch, go back and speak to her again? - No, I telephoned her. I have only been in her house once and that was the day the interview was conducted. I was off duty the day after. The day that the article appeared I was off duty so when I returned to work on the following Monday there was a message for me to phone Doreen Haggar which I did. I think possibly she may have phoned me but I think I phoned her.

And/

And what went on in that conversation? - She said something like "What about the article?" and I said "What do you mean?" She mentioned the headline and as reporters tend to say, we often say "We don't do the headlines" which is true. I said "What about the text?" and she appeared okay about the text and we went on to talk about other things generally. She didn't sound like a woman who was going to pursue a complaint.

Did she not on that occasion say something to you though about where she had been in relation to Hamilton at the time of the incident? - Yes, she then sort of I think indicated that there was a bit more distance. It wasn't as close an encounter as she had earlier related but that was as far as it went. There was no sort of further mention of the thing and I have spoken to her several times since.

Did she not give you some indication of where he had been? A specific indication? In other words, how far away he had been? - Not really, no, but she certainly was indicating that the gun was not right up in her face.

And did she not indicate that he had in fact been across the street? - Well, I am aware that she is now saying that.

But that is not something that was said to you? I just want to be clear about that? - I am not sure if she said he was across the street but I was certainly clear after speaking to her that he certainly was not alongside her as she had indicated earlier.

But it would be wrong to say that the impression you got was that he was across the street? It was nothing like that? - The impression at the time of the interview?

No, at the time of the phone call? - At the time of the phone call I was pretty clear that he was not as close to her as she had suggested. There were yards between them. He wasn't on the kerb beside her.

At either the interview or the telephone conversation did the question arise of whether she had/had reported the matter to the police? - Yes, she said she reported the matter.

Was that during your initial interview with her? - Yes.

Were you able to establish when this had happened?
- When she had actually reported it? Whether she had reported it that day?

No, were you able to establish when the incident itself had actually happened? - Oh, yes. Well, in my notes she said it happened around August of 1989, shortly after she had returned from this camp.

Well, the evidence we have heard in the Inquiry so far is that the camp was in July 1988 or possibly maybe August 1988? - Well, 1989 is what I had noted.

What about the month? - August seemed to be the month in my notes.

ROBERT McMILLAN (40), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: Are you a Sergeant with Lothian and Borders Police? - Yes.

Where are you now based? - I am stationed at Bathgate.

How long with the police? - 21 years.

Can you look please at the notebook LBFA100? Is that your police notebook? - No, that is Sergeant McArthur's notebook.

Oh, sorry. My mistake. I don't have one relating to you. You spent a period of your service at Linlithgow? - That's correct, yes. When was that period? - June 1989 to February 1991.

In/

In the course of this present Inquiry, were you interviewed by a Central Scotland police officer? - Yes, I was.

And were you asked to think back to your period in Linlithgow? - Yes, I was.

Were you asked about whether you had dealt with a complaint from either Doreen Haggart or Janet Reilly about being approached by Thomas Hamilton when he was in possession of a firearm? - I was asked that question, yes.

Was any such complaint brought to your attention? - No.

Did you hear of any complaint remotely resembling that while you were at Linlithgow? - No.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Were you asked to produce your notebook for the period 1988 and 1989? - No, I was not.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: What happens to the notebook when you are finished with it? - They are stored at Divisional Headquarters but I don't know what the period of retention is.

So production would be a matter for others, would it? - Yes, it would be.

Do you know what the policy is at Linlithgow about keeping notebooks for a period of time? - The notebooks are held at the officer's station for two years and they are then forwarded to Divisional Headquarters for retention.

Do you know whether in this case efforts were made to find your notebook over that period? - I have no idea at all.

DUNCAN CAMERON McARTHUR (60), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I think you are a retired police officer? - That is correct.

And you actually live in Bridgend? - I do/

do.

By Linlithgow? - Yes.

Did you spend the whole of your police career with Lothian and Borders? - Yes.

How long did it last? - 30 years.

During that career were you stationed at Linlithgow for part of the time? - Yes.

When was that? - Part of it was 1969 to 1973 and then 1985 to 1990.

Now, I wonder if you could look at a notebook please which is No. 100. Is that your police notebook? - Yes.

What period does it cover? - 29th September 1989 to 31/12/89.

September of 1989 to December of 1989? - Yes.

Did you see it in the course of the current investigation or are you seeing it for the first time since you handed it in? - The first time.

In the course of the present investigation were you interviewed by a Central police officer? - Yes.

And was he concerned to find out if you knew of a complaint made by either Doreen Haggart or Janet Reilly about Thomas Hamilton being in possession of a firearm? - Yes.

First of all can I ask you if you know either of these women? - Yes, I do.

Both of them? - Yes.

And did you have dealings with both of them in the course of your service in Linlithgow? - Yes.

Did both of them on occasions make complaints to you as a police officer? - Well, not entirely/entirely to me but I had attended complaints involving them.

Both of them? - Yes.

Did you ever hear of any complaint by either about Hamilton or any other man having a firearm? - Not to my knowledge can I remember that.

What was the first you knew that there was any connection between Doreen Haggart and Thomas Hamilton? - I couldn't really recall. I can remember, and this is very vague, an officer in Linlithgow when the Loch Lomond incident occurred came to me and I don't even remember which officer it was and I said "Well, whatever information you do have you will have to pass it on to the area concerned".

1.00 p.m.

When you were in Linlithgow the second time, that is 1985 to 1990, were you a sergeant? - Yes.

If there was a complaint about a firearm being pointed in Mrs. Haggart's direction are you likely as a sergeant to have learned about it? - I would think so -- either me or the other sergeant.

Who was the other sergeant? - Sergeant Carson.

We have heard from him? - Yes.

BY LORD CULLEN: Do I take it that Sergeant Carson was the only other sergeant? - During my period there from 1985 to 1990 there were other sergeants there, Sergeant Wilson, Sergeant Purdie, Sergeant Carson and myself.

Were Wilson and Purdie there at the same period or was it simply according to the shifts that were worked? - Sergeant Wilson was there in 1985 because he was there when I arrived and Sergeant Purdie came after that.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Just as a matter of procedure in a generality, if there had been a complaint against Hamilton for carrying a gun and pointing it at somebody and that matter was reported to Lothian and Borders Police, given that Hamilton resided in Stirling and if there was a view that he should be interviewed who would carry out that interview; would it be an officer from Lothian and Borders Police or an officer of Central Scotland Police? - The procedure I would think would happen, we would immediately pass a matter of that nature to our CID and they would make that decision, whether they would go through or pass it on to Stirling; I would imagine they would go through.

After an adjournment for
lunch:

JOHN WILLIAM RICE (41), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you a Constable with Lothian Borders Police based now in Bathgate? - I am based now at Armadale.

How long in the police? - 12 years.

I think for part of your service you were based at Linlithgow? - Yes, that is correct.

During what period? - Approximately 1986 to 1989.

Was there any part of that period that you were actually moved elsewhere or were you there throughout that period? - I could be moved for short periods of time to other stations just to assist with cover.

When did you move from Linlithgow? - As far as I remember it would be March, 1989.

In the period around the time you were moving or in the few months before that did you receive a note about a complaint by Doreen Haggar or Janet Reilly that Thomas Hamilton had presented a firearm at either of them? - No.

You have never heard of such a complaint during your service? - No, I haven't.

Have you heard either of these names in the course of your period in Linlithgow? - Yes, I had.

Of any kind connected with a complaint about a firearm? - No.

No cross-examination.

PAUL CARROL (33), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you a Constable with Lothian and Borders Police? - Yes.

Where are you now? - Whitburn.

How/

How long have you been with the police? - Nine years.

Look at notebook, Production 105; is that one of your police notebooks? - Yes.

What period does it cover? - From the 11th April, 1989 to the 1st June, 1989.

During that period where were you based? - At Linlithgow.

In all how long were you based at Linlithgow? - For four years.

From when till when? - From 1987 till September, 1990.

Did you know or come to know during that period of service a person called Doreen Haggar? - Yes.

Did you know a lady called Janet Reilly? - Yes.

Did either of these ladies make a complaint to you about a person called Thomas Hamilton having a firearm and presenting it at either of them? - No.

Did you hear of such a complaint during your period of service there? - No, I didn't.

No cross-examination.

ALISTAIR McKENZIE (34), Affirmed:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: You are a Constable with Lothian and Borders Police? - That is correct.

Where are you now based? - Dryloan, Edinburgh.

How long have you been in the police? - Nine years.

During part of the nine years were you based/based at Linlithgow? - Yes.

When was that? - From 1989 to 1991.

From when in 1989? - The summer of 1989.

Would you look at notebook No. 104, is that your police notebook? - Yes, that is correct.

What period does it refer to? - From 15/5/89 to the 31st December, 1989.

So it covers part of the period before you were at Linlithgow? - No, I started my service in Linlithgow.

On what date? - I started my first shift at Linlithgow on the 15th May, 1989.

So you were in Linlithgow from the 15th May? - That is correct.

Around that time do you have a recollection of a complaint made by Doreen Haggar or Janet Reilly about a person called Thomas Hamilton presenting a firearm at either of them? - No.

Is that something you have ever heard anything of? - No.

No cross-examination.

CALUM ROSS (33), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: You are a Constable in Lothian and Borders Police? - Yes.

Still based at Livingston? - I am in Edinburgh at the moment.

How long in the police? - 10 years' service.

For part of your service were you based at Linlithgow? - Yes.

What/

What period? - From 1986 until 1992.

During that period did you come across the names Doreen Haggar and Janet Reilly? - Yes.

Were you ever aware of complaints made by either about a man called Thomas Hamilton presenting a firearm? - No.

No cross-examination.

RANALD ROSS-WATT (50), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you a Company Director? - Yes, that is correct.

Do you live in Dunblane? - Yes, I do.

You knew Thomas Hamilton over a period; what period? - It was a very brief period, I would say a period of perhaps three to four months and it is about 10 years ago.

About 1986? - Yes, that is correct, 1985 or 1986.

And at that time did you have a son who was in Dunblane Boys Club? - That is correct -- well, he was in the club for part of that period.

And that club was run by Hamilton? - It was.

Generally speaking how did your son get on at the club? - No problem.

That was the case throughout his period of interest in the club? - That is correct.

How did you come to get to know Hamilton? - Well, my son came home one day and said that Hamilton had been asking questions of, you know, who we were and all that sort of thing because my son was quite a new member of the club, I suppose he wanted to find out who the lads were and what the parents did and so on and I had recently.....well, for a few years I had been in the Royal Naval Reserve and once that came to light then/

then Hamilton wanted to know if I had done any shooting which I had done a very small amount of rifle shooting; that is basically it, but he then asked my son or asked me through my son if I would be interested in taking up pistol shooting; as a result of this I actually went to a gun club with him, I drove him to this club, it was in the Larkhall area about six or seven times over a period of three or four months.

At that time where was the boys club being held? - Dunblane High School.

Was your son ever involved in going to any camps? -
No, he wasn't.

Were you at that time interested in shooting? - No,
not really.

Did you have any weapons? - No.

And even since then have you had any weapons? -
Well, no, because certainly what happened after I had been to that club a few times I thought well, you know, if I was going to become any good I would have to have my own weapon and ammunition and my wife was extremely apprehensive about having a weapon in the house and we discussed it and we decided I wouldn't have a weapon and as such I decided to leave the club.

Had you actually joined the club? - No, I was taken in as a guest.

You didn't apply to join? - No.

Was/

Was Hamilton a member? - Yes.

What was the name of the club? - I can't remember, it is on the A71 near Larkhall to the east of the M74, I can't remember the name of it. There was some kind of Army connection in that it was supervised by the Army.

Did he say why he went there? - He said something about he couldn't get on with the people in the Stirling club.

His going there had nothing to do with the availability of full bore shooting? - I can't say; he did shoot full bore, I didn't shoot full bore; you had to gain a certain score in small bore before you were allowed to shoot full bore; I managed to achieve that score on the first night but I didn't think I was good enough to spend the sort of money on full bore ammunition so I never shot full bore.

Was Hamilton any good as a shot? - Yes, but there were others who were just as good.

Were you able to form an impression of how careful he was? - Very careful.

Did you get any impression of his sociability? - I would say that he was on polite terms with the other members of the club but he wasn't one of the lads, he wasn't really accepted but having said that he was coming from some distance away so I didn't see any particular significance in that at the time.

How did you get on with him? - Okay, I think we chatted about business in the car; I don't know what business he was involved in, that was about it really.

Did you learn from him whether he was a member of any other rifle club or gun club? - As far as I knew he wasn't a member of any other club.

Did he mention any of the clubs locally to you? - He mentioned something about Stirling and he didn't get on with them;

I presumed because he was travelling as far as Larkhall he didn't go to a local club.

What/

What guns do you remember him having? - He had a .357 Magnum revolver, he had at least one automatic weapon, I mean an automatic pistol.

Is that a self-loading pistol? - Well, I mean the type that has a magazine that goes on the stock.

There are some that you pull the trigger once and they continue firing? - As far as I know it didn't do that.

Did he ever bring any of the weapons to your house?
- Yes.

On more than once? - One occasion.

What was the reason for that? - Well, it is hard to say; it came through my son; again he asked the lad would he be interested in seeing these weapons, that sort of thing and, you know, kids are interested in that type of thing and we said "Fair enough" and he brought them along and it was conducted in a safe manner. Although I have done hardly any shooting at all when I was in the Cadets at school I used to be in the RNR and you learn on these military ranges that safety is of the utmost importance and there is a lot of trouble given to making sure that there was no accidents. He seemed to have that approach to the whole thing, it was exactly as I had seen on the military ranges.

No cross-examination.

JOSEPH HOLDEN, (Recalled),

LORD CULLEN: You are still on oath, of course.

EXAMINATED BY MR. BONOMOY: We have heard from you before and we already know that you are a Superintendent with Central Scotland Police; can you now tell me the general nature of the duty that you would normally be carrying out as Superintendent but for the intervention of the Dunblane incident and enquiry? - Yes, I am part of what Central Scotland Police call the Operations Division which really means the uniformed section of Central Scotland Police. I am termed the Local Unit Commander for the Stirling Police area and I oversee/oversee the policing activity or policing enforcement of the Stirling area. Simply put I am in charge of the Uniform Section of Stirling.

Is your office in the Police Headquarters? - Yes.

But you are not part of the Headquarters itself, you are part of the Unit in there that deals with Stirling? - Yes, it is Stirling Police Office within the Headquarters.

In 1991 what rank did you hold? - I was Detective Chief Inspector.

Whereabouts in 1991? - I was based within Headquarters, Criminal Investigation Department.

Who was your immediate superior then? - Detective Superintendent John Miller.

And had you any responsibility for the Child Protection Unit? - Yes, my post at that time covered all of the Specialist Units within the Criminal Investigation Department and one of these was the Child Protection Unit.

What name is now given to that Unit? - The Family Unit.

In 1991 who was in charge of it? - Detective Sergeant Paul Hughes.

Did he report directly to you? - Yes, he did.

Now, we have heard evidence in this Inquiry already from a Chief Inspector Hughes; is that the same person? - Yes.

So he was a detective sergeant in 1991? - Yes.

In 1991 what was, in general terms, the function of the Child Protection Unit? - It was a Unit that had been created two years before and was responsible for the joint investigation of all child protection matters, joint investigations with the Social Work Department and the then Central Regional Council.

In/

In 1991 did Hughes get involved in an investigation which involved Thomas Hamilton? - Yes, he did.

And did that investigation stem from a complaint by a parent about the activities of Hamilton at one of his camps at Loch Lomond? - Yes.

And that was a camp during the summer of 1991? - Yes.

Is that right? - Yes.

Could you now have before you the Production D3/K which is a substantial bundle of papers relating to that investigation; now, is that Hughes' report following his investigation? - Yes, it is.

And was that destined for the Procurator-Fiscal at Stirling? - Yes, it was.

We have heard already of a report relating to the 1988 camp going to the Fiscal at Dumbarton; why did this one go to the Fiscal at Stirling? - Because the locus of the offence within this report was at Milarrochy Bay at Loch Lomond which fell within the Central Scotland Police area.

We will hear from Hughes in due course about this and about it in some more detail but for present purposes can you confirm that one of the things Hughes did was compile a list of all charges that he thought the Procurator-Fiscal might consider preferring against Thomas Hamilton? - Yes, that is correct.

I think that it was ten in number? - Yes, it was.

Can/

Can I take it Hamilton was not actually charged by the police with any offences? - No, he was interviewed but not charged.

Now, before that report went to the Procurator-Fiscal did you read it? - Yes, I did.

It is fairly substantial; did you read it all? - Yes.

In fact, I think the statement pages are..... maybe they are not all numbered but is there a number at the top of all the statement pages? - Yes, it starts with page 13.

And goes to? - 144.

What was your view about whether that should go to the Procurator-Fiscal? - I felt the substance of it was enough that it should go to the Procurator-Fiscal.

Did you give any instructions about how it should actually be delivered to the Fiscal? - Yes, slightly out of the normal Detective Sergeant Hughes had had previous discussions with the Procurator-Fiscal in regard to this case and I felt that the case was sufficiently complicated enough to warrant a personal visit to the Procurator-Fiscal to present and explain to him the officers' in charge of the enquiries feelings.

Did that visit result in further action being taken? - Yes.

What was that action? - I recollect that the Fiscal at that time asked for Hamilton to be interviewed but only on a voluntary basis.

And was an attempt made to interview him on a voluntary basis? - Yes, there was.

And did he agree to that? - No, he made it clear by telephone to Detective Sergeant Hughes that he didn't wish to be interviewed.

You may have said earlier in your evidence that Hamilton was interviewed in the course of this investigation; was he at any time? - Yes, my recollection was he was spoken to and interviewed at/at the camp during the course of Detective Sergeant Hughes's visit there.

Do you know what the Procurator-Fiscal's decision was about the proceedings? - Yes.

What was it? - That no further proceedings could be taken.

Do you know when that decision was made? - Only very roughly -- I think it was in October of that year.

Now, would you look at another document which I think has been circulated, it is DFU3A; it may also be D82/L; now, do you recognise that document? - Yes, I do.

It is dated 11th November, 1991? - Yes.

And it is a report internally from Hughes to Detective Superintendent, CID; who was that? - That was Detective Superintendent John Miller.

Did this pass through your hands? - Yes.

Is that normal? - Yes.

Why would Hughes choose to refer it to Detective Superintendent? - Detective Sergeant Hughes would refer it to me and I would refer it to my immediate supervisor.

Why would Hughes address it to Detective Superintendent? - It is very normal practice within the Department within the police.

The date of 11th November, does that indicate to us whether the Fiscal has already dealt with it or not? - It does indicate from Mr. Miller's notation what he believes the decision was but I am not sure.

I think if you go to the second page, I think in the second-last paragraph it says "The Procurator-Fiscal at Stirling has not yet decided on whether or not he will proceed with the case against Hamilton/Hamilton but at the moment it appears in all likelihood that he will not"?

- Yes.

That is the 11th November so it may have been into November before you actually knew the Fiscal's final decision? - Yes, it may have been.

Now, can you read the heading first of all of this? - Yes. "Firearms Certificate - Thomas Watt Hamilton born 10/5/52, 7 Kent Road, Stirling".

Would you then read the text of what Hughes reported to you for onward transmission to the Superintendent? - "I refer to the above and have to report as follows. On Tuesday, 23rd July, 1991 the Child Protection Unit, Bannockburn, became involved in an investigation surrounding allegations regarding the above-named's treatment of a group of children whom he had taken on a summer holiday camp to Loch Lomond. Hamilton is a self-styled 'youth leader' and as such runs boys' clubs in Dunblane, Stirling and Dunfermline. During the course of my investigation I discovered that Hamilton was no stranger to controversy and similar investigations had been undertaken by this and Strathclyde Police Forces in the past. Hamilton also features in local criminal Intelligence files. Throughout my investigation I met and spoke with Hamilton on a number of occasions. It is as a result of the impressions left with me by this man that I feel compelled to make this report. I have recently discovered that Hamilton possesses a firearms certificate which indicates that he owns a 9mm Browning pistol and a .357 Smith and Wesson revolver. He also has permission to acquire a .22 rifle and a 7.62 rifle. This concerns me. I am firmly of the opinion that Hamilton is an unsavoury character and an unstable personality. It emerged from enquiries that he, during the course of the first week of camp, seemed to become increasingly stressed and had difficulty managing the group. It was during one such moment that he became extremely angry and assaulted one of the boys. This particular child was in fact assaulted three times by Hamilton during the first few days of the holiday and was eventually removed by his parents. Furthermore, allegations were made, albeit uncorroborated, by one of the children that Hamilton induced the child to pose in various compromising positions, scantily clad in extremely ill-fitting swimming/swimming trunks for photographs. To date these photographs have not been recovered but neither I nor the officer who interviewed the child have any reason to disbelieve that the allegations are in fact wholly true. Convincing corroborated evidence was uncovered which confirms that two boxes containing approximately 36 slides each have not been recovered by the police despite Hamilton's claims that he handed over all of the photographs taken. Mr. Hamilton has been reported to the Procurator-Fiscal in this regard for obstructing the police. The foregoing report, in part, conveys some of the concerns which I harbour about this man. I firmly believe that he has an extremely unhealthy interest in young boys which to a degree appears to have been controlled to date. It is his ploy, whenever challenged, to engage in 'smokescreen' tactics which divert attention from the focal issue and this is the purpose for the profusion of correspondence to MPs, Procurator-Fiscal, the Chief Constable and the like. I would contend that Mr. Hamilton will be a risk to children whenever he has access to them and that he appears to me to be an unsuitable person to possess a firearms certificate in view of the number of occasions he has come to the adverse attention of the police and his apparent instability. The Procurator-Fiscal at Stirling has not yet decided on whether or not he will proceed with the case against Hamilton but at the moment it appears in all likelihood that he will not. I respectfully request that serious consideration is given to withdrawing this man's firearms certificate as a precautionary measure as it is my opinion that he is a scheming, devious and deceitful individual who is not to be trusted" and it is signed Paul Hughes, Detective Sergeant.

Now/

2.25 p.m.

Now, you then added your own view and signed it on the same day, 11th November, 1991?

- Yes.

And what did you say? - My notation says, "Sir, a difficult situation. I do agree with D.S. Hughes' appraisal of Mr. Hamilton. Do we have any latitude for progress in respect of the revocation of his Certificate?"

And of course "revocation" is the right expression to use in this context; is that correct? - Yes.

You then passed that to "Sir", who was Mr. Miller? - Yes.

And Mr. Miller has added his views before sending it to the DCC, the Deputy Chief Constable? - Yes.

What did Mr. Miller say? - "DCC, while appreciating D.S. Hughes' concern I cannot recommend the action proposed for obvious reasons, i.e. Hamilton has not been convicted of crime, and it seems the PF is likely to 'no pro' the recently reported case".

We will hear from the Deputy Chief Constable in due course, but can you tell us what decision he made in relation to this? - The report was later returned with that no action would be taken.

Do you remember when that was, or does it tell us on the report? - It tells me. There is a Deputy Chief Constable's stamp with "No Action" on it, signed by him, and although it is a bit faded I think it is on the 19th of November.

This is on the front of the Production? - Yes.

In general terms what were your responsibilities at that time in relation to firearms -- that is you personally? - Only really in the investigation of firearms offences, not in firearm certification.

And/

And did Hughes have any responsibilities in relation to firearms? - None at all, other than in investigating crime.

And what about Miller? - The same. He was head of the Criminal Investigation Department.

So this is an example of an investigation into something which is not directly a firearms matter, leading to a report to the officer responsible for firearms matters? - Yes.

Asking him to look at a Firearms Certificate? - Yes.

Now, in what circumstances, in general terms, would a report be made to the Deputy Chief Constable of something that is not, on the face of it, a firearms matter, inviting him to consider it in a firearms context? - If I understand the question, the circumstances where we would have a concern in a matter that was outwith our field of expertise, and that we would pass it to him, as his area of expertise or responsibility.

Let us assume I am driving along and you catch me with a lot of drink in my system when I am driving, and I am convicted, and you know I have got a Firearms Certificate. Would you bother telling the firearms officers or those responsible for firearms about that? - If I was the officer concerned in reporting that case, that type of offence would go to our SCRO office, who conduct a safety check, and it would eventually find its way to the firearms file, as I understand it.

So your understanding is that a firearms investigation would throw up anything that was recorded in criminal records? - Yes.

But let's look at it from the revocation point of view for the moment, where something has to be initiated by the police rather than simply renewal of an application, which has to be initiated by the applicant. In that connection would your knowledge of my conviction for drink driving go to the firearms officers automatically for them to look at, or would it simply get to them by chance if they happened to check criminal records? - Not by chance. The system should ensure that if you have a/a Firearms Certificate and you are convicted of such an offence, the system will ensure that it gets to the Firearms Department and the firearms file.

Well, can you tell me how that would happen? - As I understand it -- it is not my area of expertise till the last seven months -- that the report would be submitted on what we would call an RS2A, which is a blue form which goes with the report to the Procurator-Fiscal. It would go to our SCRO, our Scottish Criminal Records Office within Headquarters, and that SCRO record would be updated within the Scottish Criminal Records file for that person -- it has a chapter which refers to whether he is a firearms holder or not, so the system should come together at that point.

And it would then be up to whoever is keeping the criminal records to notify the Firearms Department? - Yes.

And are these criminal records kept in your own office, or are these centralised? - It is a national computer system, which is updated.

And you have someone in your own office who deals with the updating and passing on of information to Firearms? - Yes, within police Headquarters.

And was that the position in 1991? - I believe so, yes.

Now did you have a particular view of the basis -- and by that I mean the statutory basis -- on which it might be open to the Deputy Chief Constable to consider revoking Hamilton's Firearms Certificate in light of this report? - In 1991 I was very unsure of the criteria for revocation. I shared somewhat the concern of D.S. Hughes in his report to me, but to be frank, in 1991 I was not aware of the revocation criteria.

So you weren't endorsing this report on the basis that you could see yourself a statutory basis on which the certificate could be revoked? - No, I didn't have the knowledge for that.

Whose job was it to consider whether there was such a basis in this case? - I feel it is the Firearms/

Firearms Department along with the Deputy Chief.

Were you still in the same position in September, 1993? - Yes.

And at that stage who was in charge of the Child Protection Unit or Family Unit? - An officer by the name of Detective Sergeant Allan Moffat.

Were you alerted to a complaint from a family in 1993 about Hamilton's behaviour in another summer camp? - Yes.

And did you learn of that from Detective Sergeant Moffat? - Yes.

Where was that camp? - Dunblane High School.

And what was the nature of the complaint? - The nature was similar in terms in many respects to Detective Sergeant Hughes' report, which was children wearing -- being scantily clad with black swimming trunks, as well as photography which appeared to be inappropriate, to the parents.

What did you do about that complaint? - I asked Detective Sergeant Moffat to investigate it and to make preliminary enquiry and report back to me.

Did he do that? - Yes, he did.

What did you then do? - I reported back to the Deputy Chief Constable, who was aware of that complaint at that time.

And what did he decide? - He asked me to go with Detective Sergeant Moffat and interview Mr. Hamilton on two main areas, one being the organisation of his committee, and the composition of that committee, and also to make him aware of the complaint that had been received.

And when did you have that interview with Hamilton?
- In October of 1993.

And can you tell us what happened in the course of that conversation? - Yes. We called at his/his home and it was late afternoon of that day, and I conducted an interview with Mr. Hamilton in the living room of his home.

And can you tell us the general terms of the interview?
- Yes. I followed the remit given by the Deputy Chief Constable and I spoke to him first of all about the complaint, which brought us on to the method that he ran the club, and the photography sections, and then we went on to the organisation of his committee, which I requested that he supply us with details of people who were on that committee.

And did you get them? - No.

How much time did you allow for him to produce that information? - My recollection was two weeks, but perhaps three weeks, this process went on, with various phone calls to Detective Sergeant Moffat.

And no list of committee members was forthcoming? -
No. He eventually said that he didn't see why he should, and he didn't.

So you didn't get one single name? - No.

What impression did you form of Hamilton during that conversation? - It was my first time speaking to him. I formed the impression that the boys' club organisation that we were talking about filled most of his life, and he was quite obsessive about his methods and his manner or his method of organising the exercises within his club, and he was quite persuasive, although I didn't agree with the methods -- he was quite articulate. He was calm, he was extremely evasive when he got to the boys' club committee members, and I felt he was lying at that point.

Did/

2.40 p.m.

Did he make any concessions, accept any criticisms being advanced of the conduct of his clubs? - Not at all.

Of the dress of the boys? - No.

And did you thereafter make a further report to the Depute Chief Constable explaining what you have told us here? - Yes, Detective Sergeant Murphy prepared a memorandum, a record of the enquiry plus the interview and I reported back to the Depute Chief Constable with that report.

On a quite separate matter; you continued to have a senior role in the enquiry into Hamilton's conduct on the 13th March? - Yes.

In that connection you will be familiar with all the efforts that are being made by your officers to unearth information that might be relevant to the enquiry? - Yes.

One of the areas of enquiry has been centred on Linlithgow Police Office to establish whether or not a complaint was made by either Doreen Haggart or Janet Reilly of an incident where Hamilton may have presented a firearm? - Yes.

Do you know whether that enquiry has managed to identify all the Lothian and Borders officers who served at Linlithgow at the time that this incident may have taken place? - Yes, I believe it has.

And have they all been interviewed? - Yes.

Does any of them as far as you can ascertain remember anything of this incident? - No.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Can we go back please to D82L which is the document of 11th November 1991 that you were asked certain questions about from Detective Sergeant Hughes. I wonder if I could just try to summarise some of the main features of Detective Sergeant Hughes's assessment of Hamilton. Looking at the first page we see that the/

the author was firmly of the opinion that Hamilton was an unsavoury character and an unstable personality, is that correct? - That is correct.

And then at the foot of that page we see that he was the subject of various allegations relating to inducing children to pose in compromising positions when scantily clad in extremely ill-fitting swimming trunks for photographs, which allegations the officer had no reason to believe were untrue? - Yes.

And then over the page did Detective Sergeant Hughes record that he firmly believes that Hamilton has an extremely unhealthy interest in young boys, is that correct? - Yes.

And that he engages, whenever challenged, in smokescreen tactics which divert attention from the focal issue, is that correct? - Yes.

He expresses the view that he contends that Mr. Hamilton will be a risk to children whenever he has access to them and that he appears to Detective Sergeant Hughes to be an unsuitable person to possess a firearms certificate. Do you see that? - Yes.

Now, would you agree with me that whatever else it is a matter of commonsense that a person such as this should not be permitted lawfully to possess firearms? - I don't know if I can give you a Yes or a No to that. There was only one point of the bullet points you have taken out of that report that I particularly explored in depth with Detective Sergeant Hughes. We discussed the whole of the document and it was felt where..... I am just trying to look for it. The unstable..... where he refers to Hamilton as being unstable, an unstable personality, we did discuss that at length and Detective Sergeant Hughes, who is a very able officer, explained to me that that was based on the activities or actions by Hamilton at the camp at Milarrochy Bay and he was describing at that point his reaction to dealing with a number of children which he couldn't cope with the number and that had in his view then resulted in him assaulting the child concerned. That is his understanding or that was my understanding of my conversation on unstable. At/

At that point I agreed with his concerns and I supported him in the report to pass it on to our Detective Superintendent and then to the Depute Chief Constable and quite rightly the question whether Hamilton was fit and proper to have a firearms certificate.

What I am asking you is this; would you agree with me that if this assessment of Hamilton is accurate it is quite clear that Hamilton was a person who should not have been permitted lawful possession of firearms? - No, I am afraid I would not agree. I would agree that the question had to be asked.

What is your view? Was it your view that he was a suitable person to have lawful possession of firearms notwithstanding this assessment? - No, I was concerned that there was a question about his fit and proper authority to have a firearm. I was concerned that the question had to be asked and further enquiry had to be made.

I am asking you what your view, your view, was given this assessment as to whether or not Hamilton was a fit and proper person to have a firearm? - I can't give you a view on Hamilton being fit and proper because in 1991 I am depending on Detective Sergeant Hughes's report and his report to me and the best I can do and say to you is that in his report to me I could find no reason why he was not right but I can't say that Hamilton was not fit and proper.

Come now. This is not a difficult matter. We have just been through the various elements of his character assessment with which you tell us you agree. That he was an unsavoury character, that he had an unstable personality, that he was the subject of complaints about indecent behaviour towards children which appear to be well-founded, that he had an unhealthy interest in boys and that he was a risk to children whenever he had access to them and he was, you are also told, scheming, devious and deceitful. It is not a particularly difficult matter, is it? In your view is such a person suitable to be given lawful possession of firearms? - No, I would agree with you, that if he was an unstable personality I would agree with that, that he was not fit and proper but I/

I can't say he was of unstable personality. I had no connection with Hamilton at that time. I had never spoken to him personally. It was second opinion or second-hand information from Detective Sergeant Hughes.

So can you at least agree with this; that if Detective Sergeant Hughes's assessment was accurate then Hamilton should not have been permitted lawful possession of firearms? - If Detective Sergeant Hughes is correct in saying he is an unstable personality, yes, I do agree.

What about being a risk to children whenever he has access to them? - I know this is maybe an unpopular viewpoint but it depends what the risk to the children is and that is the problem for me in 1991 to make that decision because I was not aware and I had no experience in the field of firearms certification.

Well, what about the last line, scheming, devious and deceitful individual. In your view, is this the kind of person who should be given firearms? - In my view?

Yes? - It is where he is a risk to public safety or he is a danger to the public.

Yes? - I know numerous people who are scheming, devious and deceitful, but I don't know if that allows us to revoke firearms certificates and I certainly don't know that in 1991.

Do you know many scheming, devious and deceitful people who have firearms certificates? - Not that I can think of, no.

You were asked about the statutory basis but would you not agree with me that this is just a matter of commonsense? The essence of it is to make a judgment as to whether a person is or is not the kind of person who should be given firearms on a lawful basis? - As I understand it, it is people of unsound mind, prohibited persons and intemperate people that form the basis of people who should not have firearms certificates under the legislation. It may be commonsense as well but there is the legislative side of it as I understand it.

If/

If a person is a liar is he a fit and proper person to have firearms? - I don't think that if a person is a liar that is the one and only basis for taking a firearms certificate off someone.

Well, it will give you a very serious question mark as to the extent to which you can trust anything he says, wouldn't it? - Absolutely and that is what I was saying about Hamilton in 1991. I shared the concerns.

Is it not a feature of our licensing regime that there is a degree of trust, that when people make a declaration they are telling the truth? - Yes.

So if somebody is a proven liar why should you trust what he says when applying for a firearms certificate? - The question you asked me is if a man is a liar or a person is a liar should he have a firearms certificate.

Yes, what is your view on that? - Well, I would contend that numerous people, perhaps the majority of people in their lives become a liar at some point in time.

Yes, let's assume I have become a liar and I applied for a firearms certificate and you know I am a liar. Would it be your view that I should get one? - I would report that I thought you to be deceitful and it would be part of the reason why you should not get a firearms certificate.

So if I was applying to you for a firearms certificate and you knew that I was a deceitful liar, your view would be that I should not get a firearms certificate? Am I right? - It would be part of the reason I would argue that you should not, yes.

Now, in 1993 when you investigated another complaint against Mr. Hamilton you came to the view that he was being extremely evasive and he was lying to you? - Yes.

What action, if any, did you take in relation to his firearms certificate after that? - None.

To/

To your knowledge was any action taken in relation to his firearms certificate after the 1993 investigation? - To my knowledge, no.

Was any report or recommendation made in the context of his firearms certificate? - No.

Going back to Detective Sergeant Hughes's memo, would you agree that it is a very clear and unequivocal recommendation that for the reasons set out Hamilton's firearms certificate should be withdrawn? - Yes, he says that he requests serious consideration to that.

And anybody reading that memorandum could be in no doubt as to Detective Sergeant Hughes's view on the matter? - That is correct.

Would you agree that ultimately and tragically Detective Sergeant Hughes was proved to be correct? - That he should not have had a firearms certificate?

Yes? - I don't think anybody could say that or speak against that now.

Just very briefly on the matter of the summer camp in 1991. There is an earlier report to the Fiscal in Dumbarton, D4K. I think you indicated to the learned Advocate Depute that you had had previous discussions with the Fiscal about the case before the report was submitted? - It was a report to the Procurator-Fiscal at Stirling rather than Dumbarton.

I do beg your pardon. That is entirely my fault. I apologise. The Fiscal at Stirling? - Stirling and Detective Sergeant Hughes had had previous conversations and we had had previous contact with the Fiscal.

2.55 p.m.

I noted you as saying "We had had previous discussions". Had you been involved in those discussions? - No. By "we" I meant D.S. Hughes and Central Scotland Police.

Well, no doubt we can ask D.S. Hughes as to what those discussions were about? - Yes.

But the result was, if I followed you, that you felt that, I think abnormally, the report should be accompanied by a personal visit to the Fiscal? - Yes.

And did you make that visit? - No, Detective Sergeant Hughes made that visit as the officer in charge of the case.

Why was it felt that a personal visit was required? - It is not a common occurrence, but it is not uncommon. But I felt that the report was of -- not complexity or sufficient complexity, but it was a report that was better handed over and discussed in regard to the charges. Mr. Hamilton had not been charged. He had been interviewed earlier, and that was always a question that would have to be asked, and I thought it was sufficiently voluminous to be accompanied by a verbal summary; and certainly it was what the Procurator-Fiscal wanted as well.

What was the context of the earlier discussions with the Fiscal; do you know? - Yes. The context was Mr. Hamilton had been investigated before, and that some of the allegations were repeats of allegations which had been made before, and that there was an allegation of assault, which he was alleging was in the form of chastisement for misbehaviour by the child, and that is what he had said in his interview at the camp that particular day. And I felt that was enough -- that was the context of the previous discussions. It then was produced in a report and it was logical to follow it up with a visit.

The opinion that was taken by the Fiscal was that Hamilton should be interviewed? - Yes.

But only on a voluntary basis? - Yes.

Why/

Why only on a voluntary basis? - I don't know.

You didn't receive any explanation for that? - No.

Because the consequence of that was when he refused interview, then you had no authority to compel him? - No.

And did you tell the Fiscal that Hamilton had refused to attend for interview? - Yes, Detective Sergeant Hughes did.

And what was his reaction to that? - I can only assume -- I don't know, but I can only assume that that was the end of the matter and that he had the report, and it was a question of he would deliberate on the matter.

Did it occur to you that if the Fiscal thought it important that Hamilton be interviewed, powers were available to compel Hamilton to attend? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: Officer, I do appreciate that we all sit here with a degree of hindsight. Was the Procurator-Fiscal told, as far as you are aware, when Detective Sergeant Hughes submitted his report, that there was a concern about Hamilton's Firearms Certificate and that this prosecution might be a means to an end to get a conviction so that something could be done about the Firearms Certificate? - No, I can't say that. I am almost sure that he wouldn't be aware of that.

He would be? - He wouldn't.

He wouldn't. Do you not think it might have been an idea to say to the Procurator-Fiscal "This man is a concern to us" -- indeed, could he not have seen a copy of your colleague's memo of 11th November -- and he might have formed a different view as to prosecution? - I don't know if he has seen a copy. I don't think he saw a copy of that report, and I am not sure if that would have been part of his decision-making process anyway.

But here we have a man who is a menace, according to your colleague, he is dangerous; but there/there has never been a conviction, and of course Hamilton is well aware of that. I do appreciate the concern of the Crown about a prosecution here when there was such a plethora of evidence to get through, but do you think perhaps if the Procurator-Fiscal had been advised of the police force's concern about the firearms issue, that there might have been a decision to run a prosecution and see how it went? - As I say, I can only repeat I don't know if that type of thinking would have been part of a reason to proceed against a person. I am not so sure that, according to Detective Superintendent Miller's viewpoint, that a conviction was necessary to get revocation.

But you were concerned -- certainly your note indicates that you were concerned about the issue of revocation without a conviction, obviously? - No, not to my mind.

I thought that was your note? - No. I thought the circumstances were not comprehensive enough but we did not have the knowledge -- meaning I felt Detective Sergeant Hughes and I didn't have the knowledge of firearms revocation, or the criteria for revocation.

And that would be for firearms officers? - Yes.

We will no doubt hear later on as to whether this may be a matter which is taken into consideration by the Procurator-Fiscal, but you are not aware as to whether that might have made any difference or not? - I can't say.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY TAYLOR: I take it you still have B82L in front of you, Sergeant Hughes' memo? - Yes.

To be grammatically correct would it be right that there should be a questionmark at the end of your manuscript note? - Yes.

So you are really posing a question for those senior to you? - Yes, I am.

And with more experience in this field than you? - Yes.

At/

At the time when this report was put up to your superior officers did you have any feel for what the likely outcome was going to be in relation to the firearms issue? - Yes. I spoke with Detective Superintendent Miller, who occupies the next office to me -- or did at that time -- and handed it to him and explained our views, our concern, and he felt that it was unlikely that the Deputy Chief Constable would support any revocation, given the information that we had given to Detective Superintendent Miller at that point.

And did that expression of view surprise you when you heard it? - No, it didn't.

And can you say why it didn't? - From my limited knowledge -- and it was very limited knowledge -- of firearms certification, and of people having, or observing people having their certificates revoked -- that the likely answer was going to be that there wasn't enough information there, or enough evidence.

And have I understood you correctly that the aspect of Sergeant Hughes' report which caused you concern in relation to the firearms was the unstable personality statement? - Yes, I felt that -- I mean, I don't want to say it was over-stated, but what I felt was that his description of unstable personality was based on the assumed circumstances within the summer camp, and it made me question how could he come to that. I fully supported him in his question of the situation, and in my personal opinion he should have questioned it -- I fully supported that 100 per cent. I just felt that we probably did not have enough at that point in time.

You have told us that you subsequently met with Mr. Hamilton at his house. Can you describe his house to us? - Yes. It was in 1993. It was probably a touch tidier than we found it on the 13th of March, 1996. It was more of a lived-in type of house, whereas on the 13th it was quite a cold house with no ornaments or pictures on the walls. It looked very tidy. It looked like he kept the domestic side of his life intact. I think in fact he offered us tea at the time, although we refused it. I felt there was nothing abnormal about the house.

How/

How long did you stay there? - It was quite a tedious interview. It was well over two hours, probably nearer two and a half hours.

How did Mr. Hamilton react to the interview which you had with him? - He was very calm, very composed, given the nature of the complaint, or what I would have thought would have been a reaction of being quite nervous. He sat in an armchair and was questioned by me and Detective Sergeant Moffat for two and a half hours, and never moved out the armchair -- but very calm, very polite.

What were the allegations which you were putting to him? - That there was some sort of impropriety or inappropriate behaviour towards young boys in the camp; that he had taken photographs which were inappropriate; and the underlying, I would have thought clear intention of our question was perhaps some sort of sexual illegality.

And when you put to him the concerns which you had about his camp, how did he respond to these? - He was very articulate. If I asked him a short question he would spend the next two or three minutes answering it, and I would get a litany of why it was good for the boys to undergo these methods of training. And even when I said "Well, if it was children of my own I would see that as not the type of method I would like my children to undergo", he would try and then persuade me otherwise, and although I didn't agree with him, he was actually quite persuasive in his argument. I got the feeling that he had argued very many times about the same question.

If Sergeant Hughes' memo had been presented to you in 1993 after you had had your meeting with Mr. Hamilton, as opposed to in 1991, would the manuscript note which you have appended to the 1991 memo be any different in 1993? - No.

After the interview which you conducted with Mr. Hamilton did you have to report back to Mr. McMurdo? - Yes, I did. He had specifically asked for me to come back and brief him on the conduct of the interview and the result of the interview. I did that later on.

And/

And did you convey to Mr. McMurdo any view about Mr. Hamilton perhaps different from that which had been expressed in the past? - No. In fact, when I described the interview with Mr. Hamilton Mr. McMurdo commented that it was the same opinion that he had had of him in an interview that he had had in the past.

You have told us I think that for the past seven months you have had some experience in firearms certification; is that correct? - Yes.

If you were now asked whether you considered the behaviour of Mr. Hamilton at the 1991 summer camp to justify revocation, what would your view be? - It is very difficult. I think my view would still be that given Detective Sergeant Hughes' report, and given my notation at the end of it, I think it would still have been very problematic to revoke the certificate.

After having met with him were you more inclined to consider a revocation than before you had met with him? - After I spoke to him, having had personal experience of him I would have had to question the phrase of "unstable". He was evasive, he obviously didn't want to tell us who his committee members were. I am firmly of the opinion there was no committee members, so he was lying, and I thought at that time in 1993 that perhaps he was still a risk to children in regard to the methods he used, and a potential that there may have been some sort of illegality, but it was very difficult to come to an opinion on this man.

From the discussions which you had with him in 1993 did you form the view that he was unstable? - No.

You were asked some questions in relation to whether a liar ought to be somebody who is entitled to have a Firearms Certificate. Can I just explore that with you a little bit. When an applicant puts in an application either for a Firearms Certificate to be awarded for the first time, or for renewal of the Firearms Certificate, do the police just take it at face value what is stated in the application form? - No, not at all.

So if somebody was trying to pull the wool over/over your eyes in completing the application form and being untruthful, would you expect the Police Force to be able to uncover that untruth? - Yes. The protective measures within the system should uncover that.

And you were also asked some questions in relation to the 1993 interview, and as to whether you had made a report in relation to firearms. Can you tell me who it was in 1993 had the responsibility for firearms within Central Scotland Police Force? - Ultimately the Deputy Chief Constable.

And he was fully aware, as I understand it, from your evidence, of the investigations which you were undertaking at that time? - Yes, he was.

We have heard at this Inquiry of the considerable police effort which has gone into the investigation of the events of the 13th. Would it be fair to say that you have been involved in a central role in these investigations? - Yes, I have assisted the senior investigating officer.

And have these investigations centred largely upon trying to uncover the background of Mr. Hamilton and his conduct in the events leading up to the 13th? - Yes.

Over what sort of period have you investigated? - We have looked at the whole of his lifetime, and certainly in very fine detail from his leaving school to the 13th of March.

And having carried out such an investigation are you able to say what conclusion you drew in relation to Mr. Hamilton's criminality or sexuality prior to the 13th? - Yes. My opinion from the investigation that is still ongoing is that clearly we can find no -- other than the common law assault case of slapping, no corroborated, or even uncorroborated acts of violence. The sexuality of Mr. Hamilton, it appears that we cannot find any evidence of whether his own sexuality was of homosexuality, or heterosexuality. We have interviewed very many people in regard to the running of the boys' clubs. We have, other than I think it is two isolated statements many years ago -- and I think the Inquiry has already heard from them -- we cannot find any person or persons who can give us a statement of, or describe, acts of sexuality against young boys or children. We do believe that there has been innuendo and rumour about Mr. Hamilton, principally because of his own odd method of running, and his inappropriate method and inappropriate photography. That would be my opinion of Mr. Hamilton at this moment of time.

3.15 p.m.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: When you visited Hamilton's house were there any pictures on the walls showing young boys? - Not in 1993.

You were asked some questions there about revocation and you indicated current experience in firearms. What is your position in relation to firearms experience now? - Since August of 1995 it is still limited experience. I described, in relation to the post of local unit commander at Stirling and superintendent experience of renewals and grants, the system of the inquiry also went into grant or renewal and comes up through the supervisor. The paperwork will then reach my desk and I will process it to the firearms authority with out recommendation.

That would include revocation then as well as renewal and grant, does it? - Yes.

If something came to the attention of the Stirling unit it would come up through you for onwards transmission to the Firearms Department, would it? - Yes.

Now, the basis on which a firearms certificate might be revoked is what? - As I understand it it would be a person who is prohibited from obtaining or possessing a firearm. Revocation would probably come in the terms of unsound mind or intemperate habits or that type of circumstances or the conviction of a crime.

The section actually includes provision "Or is otherwise unfitted to be entrusted with such a firearm"? - Yes.

Is that not a very general provision? - It certainly sounds and reads very general.

Taking these words, "otherwise unfitted to be entrusted with such a firearm", and thinking back to the question Mr. Taylor put to you about the position by 1993, would you say it was still problematic in 1993? - Yes, I still think the position in 1991 where we questioned his fitness and quite rightly so and in 1993 the Depute Chief Constable was aware of the inquiry ongoing.

But/

But your word was "problematic". Is that a word you say still applied to the situation by 1993? - I'm sorry. Yes, it would be.

That word can be applied to determining the question whether you can be satisfied that Hamilton was of intemperate habit or unsound mind or otherwise unfitted to be entrusted with a firearm, is that right? - Yes.

Now, if the situation is problematic, your expression, which way do you go? Do you revoke it or do you refrain from revoking it? - Certainly at my level and my position in the police, I would question it and I would leave it to the officer in charge of the Firearms Department to revoke it or to go for it.

So that means we are putting the question to the wrong person? - Yes.

You have also been asked a lot of questions since I sat down about the circumstances or at least the view you formed following on Hughes report. You have provided a statement to your own officers who were investigating the case because you had played this role in the past? - Yes.

And therefore you were a witness, not just a senior investigating officer? - Yes.

Can I take it you are familiar with the terms of your statement and would have seen it fairly recently, have you? - Yes.

One of the things you say in the statement is that you believed our recommendation, and you are referring to Hughes and yourself, was based on Hamilton not being a fit and proper person to hold firearms authority? - Yes.

Well, was that your belief? - Yes, I was questioning whether he was a fit and proper person.

These are two separate concepts I think, a belief and a question. Now, which was it? Were you questioning it, his fitness, or did you believe he was unfit? - No, I was questioning it.

So/

So the statement is inaccurate? - It may be badly written but the intent of that statement is that I was questioning the man's authority to have a firearm.

So your expression "I believed our recommendation was based on Hamilton not being a fit and proper person to hold firearms authority", is that an inaccurate record of what you actually felt? - I wrote the statement and certainly what I meant by writing that statement is that I was questioning his being fit and proper.

PAUL HUGHES (Recalled),

LORD CULLEN: You are still on oath.

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: When you were last here you were dealing with Hamilton's financial position? - That is correct, yes.

And before I go any further, can I ask you if you have further information as yet about the money Hamilton got from selling his business, Woodcraft, and the money he got from an insurance claim for his boat at Loch Lomond? - Yes, some further inquiry was carried out in regard to that and a subsequent report was sent to the Fiscal. I believe at the time that the business was sold Hamilton was some £16,000 in overdraft at that time. I would have to refresh my memory.

Do you remember whether the net effect was that he got about £11,000 from selling the business? - Yes, I think that is correct.

When he had paid his debts he was £11,000 richer?
- That is correct, yes.

And do you remember he got about £26,000 for the insurance claim? - Yes.

Now, has anything been done yet or is it still being done to try and establish how that money disappeared? - In order for the bank, as I understand/understand it, to examine individual transactions, it will take some time for us to get access to the individual transactions and that is an inquiry that we are awaiting the result from the Fiscal about.

So that may be updated in due course and is an ongoing investigation? - Yes.

But is it fair to say that he would appear in the mid 1980s to have had an amount, a fairly substantial amount, of capital and by the 13th March he had nothing more or less? - That is correct.

Now, can I turn to other matters. I think that you are now a Chief Inspector? - Yes.

And you are based at Police Headquarters? - Yes.

What are your particular responsibilities there? - I am currently head of the Community Safety Department which is based in Police Headquarters.

Is that a Headquarters unit rather than the sort of Stirling local unit? - Yes, that is a Headquarters function.

In 1991, 1992 and 1993 what was your position? - I was a Detective Sergeant in charge of the Force Child Protection Unit at Bannockburn.

That is now called the Family Unit? - That is correct.

Since when? - Since I think 1994 or 1995. I think it was 1995.

In that connection, on the 23rd July, 1991 you became aware of a complaint made by one parent in particular about Hamilton's camp at Milarrochy Bay? - That is correct.

And that was a camp which he was running between the 14th and the 28th July? - Yes.

Had you heard of Hamilton by that time? - I didn't know him.

You/

You were in the Family Unit or the Child Protection Unit, is that right? - Yes.

But you didn't actually know of him? - I didn't know him at that time, no.

You will appreciate I am just trying to get the facts of the matter at the moment before we look more deeply at it. Can I take it that means that if there was any intelligence circulating somewhere within Central about him, it never came to you? - I never saw any intelligence prior to that.

Would it be appropriate for you to go looking for intelligence or is there a system whereby it is supposed to come to you as the person in charge of such a unit? - There is a unit which deals with crime intelligence and criminal intelligence. If it is historical information it is on file within that department. If it is new information and if it is felt appropriate to circulate to the Force then it can be done by way of internal bulletin.

And would the trigger for you looking at criminal intelligence files be a name into whom you are investigating? - Yes.

So you would have no reason to go checking generally until a name cropped up and was the subject of one of your investigations? - Something would bring a matter to my attention and I would then perhaps look for information regarding it.

If, however, during your period in charge, another office in your Force or in an outside Force had occasion to report intelligence relating to a potential child abuse, would that automatically come to you as head of the Child Protection Unit? - In all probability it would come to me.

In carrying out investigations in 1991 did the police normally enlist the assistance of any other agency? - The Social Work Department at that time.

Was that a matter of policy? - That was/was a policy matter.

Is that still a matter of policy? - Yes.

Who did you assign to the task of investigating the complaint about the camp? - One of the detective constables, Detective Constable Grant Kirk, was instructed initially along with a Social Work colleague. The Social Work colleague who was allocated it was Ron Keenan who was based at Stirling.

What did their investigation turn up in relation to the complaints? What was the nature of the complaint as they established it? - Apparently the complaint which was known at that time was an assault. There was also concern about some video material that Hamilton had been taking although that was not the principal complaint of the mother. The police officer and social worker attended at the camp and interviewed Hamilton regarding the allegation of assault under caution and he made a statement effectively admitting the assault.

Now, apart from these elements of the complaint, can you remember whether the issue of the wearing of small black swimming trunks arose? - Yes, that was mentioned at the time as well.

Did anything arise about suntan oil? - My recollection is that it did at some point during the course of the investigation but I can't recall quite whether it did at that time or not.

Now, you became directly involved in the investigation yourself? - I did, yes.

What triggered that? - It was a peculiar case. I felt that Detective Constable Kirk would require some assistance with the matter and I was a bit concerned about some of the allegations and as time went on I began to learn a bit more about Hamilton and that the case might be a problematic one to deal with given the previous involvement he had had with the police.

What did you learn? - I learned that he was likely to complain about the police, that he was/was likely to pay close attention to everything that the police were likely to do in the course of the investigation and that he would in all probability be a difficult character to deal with. So I decided to become involved myself.

Did anyone actually go to the camp? - On day one?

Yes? - Yes, D.C. Kirk.

That was the 23rd July? - Yes.

Did you go at any stage? - Yes, I returned to the camp I think on the Thursday which was the 25th July.

Do you mean returned? Was that your first visit? - That was my first visit. I went with D.C. Kirk at that time.

Was D.C. Kirk first of all able to establish whether there was any other assistance for Hamilton running the camp? - He was able to establish that a man by the name of William Brown had arrived the day before D.C. Kirk's initial attendance but he had only arrived on the Monday, the day before.

I think he is now dead? - That is correct, yes.

By the time D.C. Kirk had completed his investigations at the camp, did he have information in relation to a number of potential offences, what might be viewed as offences? - Yes.

Can you tell us what these were? - Well, there were concerns about the assault, there were concerns raised about the nature of photographs that had been taken and there was also concern about a trip that had been taken during the course of the same camp where the children had been taken to an island and had been forced to take part in making a video film which was to have a theme along the lines of "Lord of the Flies". One child in particular was forced to lie in cold water against his wishes at that time and there were also some concerns about the fact that a rain shower had made the children feel rather cold and they were only dressed in swimming/swimming trunks at the time and Hamilton prevented them from putting their clothes on.

And you have told us that D.C. Kirk actually interviewed Mr. Hamilton under caution? - Yes, initially in regard to the initial complaint regarding the assault.

Is it right to say that Hamilton admitted slapping the child who was the subject of the original complaint across the face? - Yes.

Did he try to justify that? - He did.

By saying what? - He maintained that the boy was disruptive, that he was a bully, that he had assaulted another child and he had thrown a stone which had struck another child in the eye and the child basically required chastisement.

Did he also admit slapping the same child across the back of the leg? - That is correct.

How did he try to justify that? - By having already administered chastisement to the child, he returned to the football park at that point and did the same thing again so he felt that he required further chastisement.

Did he also admit that he had grabbed that boy and shaken him? - I think he denied that actually. He admitted grabbing the boy but denied shaking him.

Once the statement was taken did Hamilton sign it? - He refused to sign it.

When you went on the 25th July, what was your principal reason for going? - Hamilton had been asked to surrender at that time photographic equipment and photographs, negatives, that he had taken but obviously.....he had ultimately agreed to this although he was a bit obstructive initially and camera equipment was taken possession of.

Was that by D.C. Kirk? - Yes. I went along to return the camera equipment and also to meet Hamilton and have a look for myself at the circumstances of the camp.

Had/

Had the camera equipment been taken with Hamilton's permission? - Yes.

And had he been asked to provide or produce photographs which he had taken? - Yes.

What was his attitude to the request to produce photographs? - He denied that there had been any photographs, still photographs, taken.

Did he deny that to you as well as to D.C. Kirk? - He did, yes.

When you were there was there anything about the way the camp was being run that caused you concern? - Yes, I immediately became concerned about the levels of supervision at the camp. I think there was about a dozen boys there at the time but when I arrived at the actual camp area there were possibly five or six laddies running around in the camp area. There were others who were not within the line of sight of the camp and I asked where they were and Hamilton didn't know at that time. I questioned some of the other children that were running about at the time and they said some of the boys were down at the jetty which was some 400 or 500 yards away from where the camp was situated. It was not in clear view of the camp and it took me three or four minutes to walk from the camp site down to the jetty and when I got there I was concerned that a number of these laddies were playing on the boat, Hamilton's boat, jumping from the jetty into the boat and back out again. Clearly they were not being supervised. There was deep water there and none of them were wearing life jackets and I think the youngest child was just six years of age. When I questioned Hamilton, obviously he didn't know the children were there. If anything had happened at the jetty it would have been some time before he would have been able to react to it or find out about it in the first place and then be able to react to it and I pointed these matters out to him and I rounded up the boys and took them back to the camp site.

What was Hamilton's reaction when you pointed out these things? - He was of the view at the time that everything was okay, that the children were capable of looking after themselves and he would have been able to provide any assistance/assistance had any accident occurred. He maintained he was experienced in these matters.

Did you take action that day at all? - In regard to.....?

The camp and Hamilton. Did you take any action? - We had already contacted the parents and made them aware of our concerns and the allegations that had been made. That was done on the first day. Given the position on the Tuesday when D.C. Kirk had attended, we advised the parents of our concerns and basically left the decision to the parents on whether or not they felt it was appropriate for their child to stay there.

And/

3.40 p.m.

And did any of them remove their children? - I believe some did, yes.

Now, you interviewed these boys in due course? - Well, I interviewed some of them.

When was that done? - That was Monday, 29th July.

And was that in the presence of their parents? - Yes.

Arising out of these interviews was there any particular concern you had about the photography? - Yes.

What was that? - There was one boy in particular who maintained that he had been taken alone to an individual tent by Hamilton and had been photographed within the tent. This was the one and only mention of any child having been asked to wear red-coloured swimming trunks, and it was the contents of this boys statement that I found particularly concerning about the motives for the photographs.

And in the course of your work did you have some training in trying to detect signs of particular tendencies among adults that were the subject of complaints to you? - Some training, but mainly experience, I think.

And what did you make of this particular episode in indicating Hamilton's character? - I felt at the time that this boy had been singled out for special treatment and was perhaps being groomed for future abuse.

Did you quiz Hamilton about this? - Yes.

What was his explanation? - He denied it.

Did he deny taking the photographs? - He denied taking the photographs, yes.

Now, did you ever get any photographs off/off Hamilton? - Yes.

When? - On Tuesday, 30th July Hamilton came to Bannockburn Police Office to see me.

And what did he hand in? - He handed me six boxes of slides and a packet of photographs, and he told me at that time that there was one other box of slides in for processing at that time, which he was still awaiting.

So how many photos did you get? - I think at that time there was about 150 still photographs.

And did you get the other box that was in for processing? - Eventually Hamilton came back to me and handed that one in as well.

Were there many photographs of the boy you have mentioned? - Yes, there was a great deal of photographs of the one boy.

Were any of the photographs indecent? - No.

Can you tell us what they were like generally? - The majority of the photographs -- they were quite varied, but there were a great number of the one boy in particular, and it was clear that this particular laddie was a favourite. He seemed to get a lot of plum jobs on the camp, he got to drive the boat, and he was the one who was selected I think by Hamilton as one of his leaders, the boys' clubs leaders. There were a number of photographs, group photographs and individual photographs -- some children obviously wearing suntan lotion, beach photographs, photographs of camp fires, and there were a good deal of close-up type photographs of just head shots of children as well.

Did you try to find out more about the question whether there were other photographs that hadn't been handed over to you? - Yes.

Who did you go to? - I went to the local shop in Stirling, Kilpatrick's.

Is/

Is that where Hamilton got his photographs developed? - Well, I didn't know that at the time. I just guessed he perhaps had put them there, and I went to make some enquiry and established he had in fact put photographs in there for processing.

How many? - Well, the day he had come to me and handed over six boxes of slides, he had actually been given eight boxes of slides from Kilpatrick that morning.

And did Kilpatrick also confirm that a further box had just arrived for Hamilton? - That is correct.

And did you get that box? - I didn't take possession of it at that time. Hamilton later gave it to me.

So that is the other one Hamilton was talking about?
- Yes.

But there were two boxes you never got? - Yes.

Did you also find out a little more from Kilpatrick about concern elsewhere about some of Hamilton's photographs? - I did.

What did you learn from him? - Mr. Kilpatrick told me that he had been contacted by a female at the processing laboratory, the Colour Care processing laboratory in Livingston. The female had contacted him quite unsolicitedly and had expressed concern about the contents of some of the photographs that had been submitted for processing.

Presumably that was in relation to some of the photographs of the eight boxes altogether? - Yes.

And it may or may not be some that you have seen? - Yes.

Can I take it that it was also confirmed that although there were various different poses by boys in black swimming trunks, there were none explicitly indecent, according to the report? - No.

Was/

Was there also an expression of concern made to Strathclyde Police from staff in a shop in Glasgow about some photographs that had gone there for processing? - That is right.

And again were these not overtly obscene? - That is correct.

Again these were photographs that you were not told about in spite of asking Hamilton? - That is correct.

In total how many slides and photographs did you get?
- I think there were 279 still -- sorry, 279 slides and 72 photographs in total that I eventually had access to.

Were any of them of the youngster wearing red swimming trunks? - No.

So you never saw any of those? - No.

Was there also contact -- this may be the same incident -- but was there contact from a constable in Strathclyde Police concerned about photographs which were being enlarged -- or is that the same.....? - That is the same incident.

That is the Glasgow one? - Yes. It was quite coincidental.

Now, around this time did you become the target of complaints by Hamilton? - Yes I did.

To whom were these complaints made? - I understood at the time he was writing to the Chief Constable, the Deputy Chief Constable, the MP, the Fiscal, and people like that.

Did you continue with your investigation? - I did.

Did it extend beyond simply investigating the camp? - Yes, it did.

How widely did it go? - I took the opportunity of interviewing some parents of children who attended some of the boys' clubs, just to see if I could unearth any other concerns about Hamilton, but that was largely fruitless.

Did/

Did you thereafter have any contact with Hamilton? - Yes, I had contact with Hamilton on a number of occasions during the course of the investigation. He would telephone me regularly, and he wrote to me regularly as well.

What about interviewing him? - Only on the 30th July at the police office at Bannockburn, when I actually interviewed him. He did call at the police office on one or two occasions beyond that.

Did you, however, in the course of the investigation, want to interview him formally? - Yes I did.

And what arrangement was made for that? - I discussed the matter -- when I was in a position to have all the information regarding my investigation to hand, I was at the stage where it would have been appropriate or desirable to interview Hamilton regarding the full circumstances, but because I was the subject of a complaint myself at the time I chose to seek some advice on the matter as to how I should approach it, and I discussed it with my colleagues at the time, and I also discussed it with the Fiscal at Stirling.

So when you went to see the Fiscal how much material did you give him? - It was discussed at that particular time.

You didn't have your report? - I hadn't completed my report at that time.

So what was the Fiscal's position about interviewing Hamilton? - That I should invite him to the police office on a voluntary basis, and if he chose to be interviewed then I could interview him, under caution.

What if he didn't? - Then I would submit my report to the Fiscal with all the facts as they were then known.

Are you aware of the reason behind confining interview to interview voluntarily? - Well, no, I am not aware of the reason. I could second-guess that it was perhaps on account of the nature of the report and the fact that I was under the/

the clear impression at the time that it was unlikely that the report would be proceeded with, and I think perhaps that was the reason for the advice that was given to me.

What do you think would be the purpose of any interview? - That I could put the allegations that were being made against Hamilton to him, and give him an opportunity to respond, and interview him under caution, and question him further regarding the missing photographs and the like.

Did you think it would be appropriate in all the circumstances to detain him for that purpose? - Probably under normal circumstances that is exactly how I would have gone about it.

So what was abnormal, apart from the fact that you were the subject of investigation? - That was the.....

That was the abnormality? - That was the abnormality as far as I was concerned. I was a bit guarded, to be perfectly honest, about my contact with him.

Hamilton refused to be interviewed; is that right? - That is correct.

Who was the Fiscal you actually dealt with? - I can't be sure who I spoke to on that occasion. I think it was Mr. Valentine, but I can't be sure. I did have subsequent contact with Mr. Valentine.

In what connection did you speak to Mr. Valentine? - In connection with the issue of whether or not Hamilton should be interviewed at the police office on a basis other than voluntarily.

So was that a second occasion when interview is being considered? - No. I actually had quite a lot of contact with the Fiscal over the course of that investigation, and I spoke with different people. I spoke with Mr. Valentine at some stage, and I spoke, I am sure, with Mr. Gallagher at another stage; and I also spoke with Mr. Coyne, another Depute Fiscal, towards the end of the matter, and I am just not sure who it was I spoke/spoke to with regard to the issue of the interviewing of Hamilton.

But was it only once you spoke to someone in the Fiscal's office about interviewing Hamilton? - Yes, only once.

And that was before your written support was submitted to the Fiscal's office? - Yes.

And you didn't manage to interview Hamilton? - That is correct.

So you were then in a position to complete your report? - Yes.

Now, would you look at D3K please, which is a large bundle which will be given to you? Is that the report? - Yes, that is correct.

It includes 10 charges that have been drafted against Hamilton? - Yes.

Whose idea was that? - It was my idea.

Was that discussed at all with the Fiscal before you submitted these charges? - I can't recall if it was or not. That is how I would normally prepare a report for the Fiscal.

Including charges? - Yes.

But you hadn't actually charged Hamilton with any of these offences? - No.

When did you discover the Fiscal's decision? - Which decision would that be?

Not to proceed? - That was in November some time -- late November.

Would you just look at the charges please. The first one was a charge relating to all the children in the camp, that they were exposed in a manner likely to cause unnecessary suffering or injury to health? - Yes.

The second, third and fourth charges are charges of assault in relation to the child whose parent/parent initially complained? - That is correct.

And the fifth one is a breach of the peace. What were the circumstances of that alleged breach of the peace? - Shouting and swearing at the children.

In what sort of way, though -- what had you made of the information you got? - When the children were asking to put their clothes on, and when things weren't going Mr. Hamilton's way with the children, he would resort to shouting at the children and swearing at them.

There are then two more cases or charges of contravening the Children and Young Persons Act, similar to the first charge, one of them relating to all the children being out in their swimming trunks in a rain shower and being extremely cold and upset; is that right? - That is correct.

And the seventh charge is one of assault or ill-treatment under the same Act, in a manner likely to cause unnecessary suffering, by forcing one boy to lie down in cold water on the shores of the island; is that right? - That is correct.

And then there are three charges, to finish, relating to Hamilton's obstruction of your investigation by failing to hand over the photographs? - Yes.

So these are the 10 charges? - Yes.

And then there is a summary of your investigation in there as well; is that correct? - That is correct.

And you I think in there summarise the various things you have been telling us you found out in the course of your investigation; is that right? - Yes.

You also submitted a report relating to Mr. Hamilton's firearms certificate? - Yes.

When did you discover he had a firearms certificate? - I can't be sure about that. It was at some point during the course of my research.

Well, /

Well, could you now have that document, DFU3A, which is also D82L in front of you? Is that the report that you submitted? - That is correct.

And why did you send that in? - Because I was concerned about the fact that Hamilton had a firearms certificate, in view of the feelings that I was left with following my investigation of him.

And what did you hope would happen as a result of that? - The purpose of the report was to bring the matter to the attention of the people in the organisation who deal with firearms certification, to make them aware of the concerns that I certainly felt were about, regarding this man, and that consideration would be given to the revocation of his certificate.

Did you yourself believe it should be revoked? - I think I have said that within the report, yes, on the second page, that I felt that consideration should be given to withdrawing his certificate.

What was your view at that stage about Hamilton's sexual proclivities towards young boys? - I felt that he had -- I suspected, I strongly suspected at the time, that I was dealing with a paedophile, and I suspected that to a degree his tendencies had been controlled, because there was no evidence forthcoming that he had actually physically abused any of the children; but I was concerned at that time that there was perhaps some other children that we didn't know about, or that at some point in the future the tendencies would manifest themselves and there would be physical abuse or sexual abuse in the future.

And what was the pattern you in fact saw from your investigation? - I certainly believed that he had singled one child out. What the reason would be for that I was only able to speculate upon, but it would certainly add to Hamilton's credibility if an allegation was made against him, that out of 25 or so boys only one had made any such allegation against him; and the fact that this child was being singled out for better treatment than some of the other children seemed to me to be an effort on his part to engage the boy's interest.

What/

4.00 p.m.

What did you make of the violence he had demonstrated according to the information you had got? - I felt that the violence was a reaction during the course of the week. I felt that he had left himself short of staff and was having difficulty controlling the boys in the course of the week and as time went by he became increasingly more stressed and ultimately resulted in resorting to physical assaults.

Losing control of himself? - That is how it appeared.

Did you have any views about whether either sexual tendencies or these indications of violence were likely to go further if left unchecked? - That is a difficult question to answer.

Well, was that in your mind at the time? - It was in my mind at the time, yes, that certainly the sexual aspect I was concerned would develop into some form of actual abuse if it was not already occurring. In regard to the violence aspect, in the context of the assaults that I was dealing with, I didn't consider him at that time to be a particular threat, to be honest. More of a bully I think.

In the statement you provided here you do say that you believed that there was a darker side of his personality and in layman's terms I would have described him then as schizophrenic? - Yes.

"I had strong feelings at that time he was quite capable of violence and did not cope particularly well with stressful situations"? - Yes.

That sound a bit different from what you are saying at the moment? - No, not at all. I did feel that he was capable of violence. I had evidence of it. The use of the word "schizophrenic" in layman's terms was how I saw it. I think that if I could describe it; he presented as the type of person who I would have described to be as like trying to talk to a brick wall to be honest. He had no/no intention of listening to reason. He had very much his own agenda and I was quite convinced at the time when I was speaking to him that he firmly believed that he was an upstanding pillar of the community and all the investigations and contact that he had in the past before were all designed to undermine him. I also was of the view that what I was dealing with was a paedophile and that somewhere within himself he must have recognised that he was not a pillar of the community and that he was something quite different from that and that is really how I would like to see the word "schizophrenic" seen in that context.

The word paedophile I don't think appears in your report to your senior officers. Did you discuss Hamilton in these terms with them? - I did discuss with DCI Holden regarding that report at the time.

Did you use to him the expression paedophile? - I can't recall if I did or not.

You have already told us that Hamilton was complaining about you. Did that complaint become a formal complaint? - Yes, eventually I think a senior officer was appointed to investigate me.

What were the terms of the complaint? - From memory..... I can't rightly recall. I think he was concerned that I had been spreading gossip and innuendo about him and that I had gone about my business in an unprofessional manner.

Was that investigated by Mr. Ferguson, an Inspector?
- Yes, he was a Chief Inspector at that time.

A Chief Inspector, sorry? - Yes.

And were you exonerated from that complaint? - Yes, I was.

Did Hamilton complain about the way Mr. Ferguson carried out the investigation, do you know? - I believe he did, yes.

Do I take it nothing came of that and you remained exonerated? - Yes.

Was/

Was there any justification for any criticism of the way you carried out this investigation or your conduct thereafter? - No, there was not.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. CAMPBELL: Can we just look again briefly at the memorandum you have just been looking at D82L, the memorandum of the 11th November 1991? Now, we can read this for ourselves of course but do we see that on the second page, towards the bottom of the large paragraph on that page, you express the view that Hamilton appears to yourself to be an unsuitable person to possess a firearms certificate for the reasons which you set out? - Yes.

And your principal concern was to bring that to the attention of the responsible officers in Central Scotland Police? - Yes.

You have told us that you had discussed the terms of your report with DCI Holden? - Yes.

Did he share your view as to Hamilton's suitability to possess a firearms certificate? - Yes.

Now, in due course, the memorandum having gone up the chain if I can put it that way, according to the memorandum on the front page, the document is stamped I think by the Depute Chief Constable, Mr. McMurdo, "No Action". Do you see that on the front page? - Yes, that is correct.

At any time before that was done did any of your senior officers come to you and ask you to elaborate upon the terms of your report? - No.

I take it that if Mr. McMurdo or anyone else had asked you questions about this you would have expanded upon your report as you have done for us today? - Yes.

Did you receive any explanation from anybody as to why no action was to be taken? - No.

Did you ask for an explanation? - I think I did discuss with DCI Holden about it but he was not aware of the reason behind it either. I was left to assume that a considerable amount was already/already known about Hamilton and Mr. McMurdo knew Hamilton fairly well with the dealings he had had with him in the past and I assumed with all the circumstances and all the information that was known that that had been taken into account when the decision had been made.

That is an assumption on your part? - That is an assumption on my part, yes.

We know I think that Mr. Hamilton's firearms certificate was renewed the following year in 1992. Were you aware of that? - No.

Before that certificate was renewed did anybody come to you and ask you about this report? - No.

Are you aware as to whether this report was placed upon Mr. Hamilton's firearms file? - I wasn't aware.

You don't know one way or the other? - I don't know.

Do I understand correctly that you were prepared to write this report notwithstanding the fact that Hamilton was making some form of complaint against you? - That is correct.

Am I right in thinking that we don't see on the report anywhere "Copy to Firearms File" or anything of that nature? - The word "File" is written on the top right-hand corner. I think I recognise that as Mr. Millar's writing.

To your knowledge, was the Procurator-Fiscal's office in Stirling aware that Hamilton had a firearms certificate? - I have no knowledge of whether they knew that.

Because all of this is going on round about the same time, am I correct, as the discussions with the Fiscal as to the Milarrochy Bay investigation or have I got that wrong? Remember we were talking earlier on about your discussions with the Fiscal following upon your investigations into the Milarrochy Bay camp and eventually that was marked "No Proceedings"? - Yes, I know now that the date that the Fiscal took no proceedings was the 18th/18th November. My investigation was complete and my report was delivered to the Fiscal on the 6th September and it was obviously some time after that that I wrote this letter.

Did you say the 18th November was the decision to mark the matter "No proceedings"? - Yes.

That is a week after the date of your memorandum? - Yes.

Would you agree in general terms when we look at this memo that you have set out your views quite clearly in the typescript and we then have two manuscript notes below that on the second page? - Yes.

Would you agree with me that the recommendation appears to be becoming progressively diluted? Just take a moment to read what is said in the two manuscript notes? - My understanding of the comment which is appended by Chief Inspector Holden was that he agreed with my appraisal. I think he knew Hamilton before I did. Certainly nothing indicated to me at the time that he had any disagreement with my appraisal of the situation and he was basically passing it up the line for consideration.

So you didn't understand Chief Inspector Holden to be sounding a cautionary note or anything of that nature? - No, I didn't have that feeling at the time.

Did you have any discussions with Mr. Millar before he wrote the manuscript note at the foot of the page? - No, I don't recall having any discussion. I think perhaps Mr. Holden spoke to him but I didn't.

You see, there is a reference in Mr. Millar's note to what is regarded to be the likelihood that the Procurator-Fiscal would mark the recently reported case "No Proceedings"? - Yes.

Am I correct in understanding that you can't help me as to whether the Fiscal was aware of these parallel procedures relating to the firearms certificate? - I don't know that. I can't help you/

you with that. I am sorry.

You would not know whether anybody further up the chain spoke to the Fiscal about this matter? - No, I would have communicated to Mr. Holden that I was under the impression from the Fiscal that the matter was likely to be not proceeded with and it may be that in fact it probably was the case, although this is an assumption on my part again, that if Mr. Holden had discussed with Mr. Millar regarding that matter he would have told me.

Now, so far as the report to the Fiscal is concerned, was it or did it become apparent in the course of the proceedings that there was a degree of reluctance on the part of the Fiscal to prosecute? - Yes.

When/

4.15 p.m.

When in the investigation did that become apparent?

- I think it was towards the end of August that I first had a conversation with the Fiscal regarding the case, and at that time I became aware that Mr. Hamilton was not a stranger to the Fiscal. He seemed to know him at that stage. And I had a discussion with the Fiscal, when I explained the nature of the investigation and the evidence that I had at that time. I can't really remember the exact terms of the conversation, but I remember having a clear impression at the time that it was unlikely that the case would be proceeded with -- I don't know if that answers your question or not?

Well, perhaps I can just follow it up in this way: why did the fact that Hamilton was known to the Fiscal's Service -- why was that relevant to a reluctance to prosecute? - I don't know if that was relevant to the reluctance or not. I merely commented on the fact that the Fiscal seemed to know the person that we were dealing with, and I don't know whether that influenced the decision ultimately or not.

Were you told as to why it was, in all the circumstances, the Fiscal had become wary? - Not in detail -- not in detail, no.

Was this Mr. Valentine? - To the best of my recollection it was, but I can't be certain about that. I know that I had conversations with Mr. Valentine regarding this case.

At any time, either past or -- well, it would have to be thereafter -- but at any time did you receive any explanation as to why the report was being marked "No Proceedings"? - Yes I did.

What was that explanation? - I can't recall again the exact terms of it, but Mr. Coyne, the Fiscal Depute at the time, spoke to me some time after I think the case had been precognosced, and he took the time to read over to me what he had written in regard to the reason for no proceedings being taken, and it was really, I think from memory, that it wasn't felt that it was a particularly serious case or that the charges were a bit -- I don't know -- a bit sort of contrived, perhaps.

Did/

Did you agree with that view? - No, no.

Did you tell the Fiscal that you didn't agree? - I think I had made my feelings about Hamilton known during the course of my investigation, and I think everybody knew how I felt.

You told us towards the end of your evidence to the learned Advocate Depute that talking to Mr. Hamilton was a little bit like talking to a brick wall; that he seemed to be somebody who could lose control of himself was something I think you said at one point? - Well, that was based on the evidence of the assault.

Did he appear to be somebody who was able to cope with a stressful situation? - I got the impression on dealing with him on a number of occasions that he was actually quite angry when I was speaking to him, but he came across as quite calm underneath (sic), so in that respect I suppose he was coping; and I don't underestimate the job of having to look after so many boys on his own. At one point during the course of the week he evidently lost control to a degree, but I mean I don't know, he would maintain that he was acting in loco parentis, and that he was administering discipline and chastisement which was necessary to control a group of children such as the one he was having to care for. And it may well be the case, and obviously was the case, that he was maintaining at that time that he was exercising control and not in effect losing control.

In your statement that was mentioned by the learned Advocate Depute, on the last page you say that you had strong feelings at that time that Hamilton was quite capable of violence? - Yes.

And you go on to say that you felt that he tried to be intimidating in a veiled sort of fashion, and it was perhaps this that gave you most cause for concern on his possession of a Firearms Certificate? - Yes.

If anybody had asked you at the time whether you were concerned about the possibility that Hamilton might become violent, then I take it you would have readily explained this to a superior officer?/

officer? - Yes, in the context of the events that I was dealing with. I never imagined at all that anybody would have been capable of what happened on the 13th of March, and I would like that to be seen in that context.

But whatever else, you did recognise that Hamilton was an unsuitable person to possess a Firearms Certificate? - Yes.

FRIDAY, 7th JUNE, 1996.

EIGHTH DAY.

MR. BONOMY: Sir, I appreciate it is for

Mr. Taylor to cross-examine now, but overnight two matters have come to my attention on which I think the Inquiry could be assisted by a little further evidence from Mr. Hughes, and I would be grateful I think if I could have the opportunity of asking these questions now so that anyone else can cross-examine on them.

LORD CULLEN: Certainly.

PAUL HUGHES,

FURTHER EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: Just two matters I want to ask you about. The first of these is this: when you presented the actual report to the Procurator-Fiscal once you had completed the enquiry in 1991 did you actually hand-deliver it to the Fiscal's Office? - Yes.

And that was on the 6th September, 1991? - That is correct.

Did you discuss it with a Fiscal at that stage? - Briefly, yes.

Who was that? - Mr. Valentine, I believe.

Mr.? - Valentine.

And the second matter is this: could you have a Production before you which is D24J(ii)? Now, copies have actually been provided, I hope, for everyone of this document. Now, what is that document? - This is an internal police memorandum dated the 3rd of July, 1992 regarding a youth camp at Dunblane High School run by Thomas Hamilton.

Now it is from one of your officers; is that right? - It is from a uniform sergeant who was at that time stationed at Dunblane. He wasn't one of my officers at the time.

Now, /

Now, that is Sergeant Fleming? - Yes, that is right.

And who did he send it to? - He sent it to the Chief Superintendent at Stirling at the time.

And he was reporting on the findings in relation to the boys who had run away from the camp at Dunblane High School? - That is correct.

And he gives an account of going up to the school himself; is that right? - Yes, that is correct.

And at the foot of the page he says he was satisfied by the explanation given by Mr. Hamilton? - Yes.

And the Inquiry has already heard about that explanation. Now, on the second page does it say that on the 2nd of July Constable Metcalfe from the Dunfermline Child Unit reported getting a complaint from another parent whose child had gone home from the camp? - Yes, that is correct.

And that Constable Metcalfe already knew about three boys who had run away? - Yes.

Can you also have in front of you D23J(ii)? A copy will be given over to you just now. Now, that has been recovered from, as you will see, the office of the Regional Reporter in Fife Region, whose stamp is on it, is it a report from Fife Constabulary by Constable Metcalfe? - Yes, that is correct.

And at the bottom does it say "Forwarded to the Officer in Charge", Central Scotland Police Child Protection Unit? - Yes, that is correct.

Do you know if that arrived in the Child Protection Unit? - I believe it did.

And I think it has statements from various witnesses attached to it? - Yes.

And it also has some of the correspondence and flyers that Hamilton circulated attached to it? - Yes, that is correct.

Now, /

Now, could you go back to the first document I gave you, which is the D24J(ii)? I think some of your handwriting appears on that document?

- Yes, that is correct.

Could you go to the second page please where it says "Copy to Mr. Harris, Reporter, for information", signed Paul Hughes? - Yes.

So you wrote that? - Yes.

And sent it to the Reporter for Central Region? - Yes.

On the front of that at the top there is handwriting that looks similar to the handwriting with your signature on the second page; is that also your handwriting? - Yes, that is correct.

And the words there are "Copy to PF"? - Yes.

Did you send it to the Procurator-Fiscal? - Yes.

And did that include the various statements and flyers and so on we have just seen, or was it just the note from Sergeant Fleming? - At that time it would probably be the note from Sergeant Fleming that went to the Fiscal. I would have to see the file copy from the Family Unit. I would have endorsed it if it had gone to the Procurator-Fiscal.

Well, I can't help you on that at the moment. So your recollection is not clear enough to answer that question? - No.

Could I ask you to do one thing -- or at least ask the Bar Officer to do one thing, and that is swap the copy I have given you of D24J(ii) for this one, since I have written some things on the one you have got. They wouldn't be of any assistance to you in answering the question, though, I don't think? - (No answer).

BY LORD CULLEN: Just one question perhaps I could ask about D24. Can you just remind me, in case I have missed this -- who was the Chief Superintendent in 'A' Division to whom that particular/particular memorandum was addressed? - I can't recall who was in post at that time, but he is the officer in charge of the uniformed personnel. At that time the Force was divided into two Divisions, 'A' Division and 'B' Division. 'A' Division was Stirling and the north end of the Force, and 'B' Division was the Falkirk area, and there was a Chief Superintendent in charge of the operational personnel. This report came from a sergeant of the Operational Division and was sent up the line to the Chief Superintendent in charge of that area.

LORD CULLEN: Any further questions before we come back to Mr. Taylor?

MR. GIBB: Sir, can I simply make the comment that I am satisfied that my matters of concern have already been raised in examination-in-chief and cross-examination by Mr. Campbell. I adopt these concerns. I have no further need to cross-examine.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: In 1991 when you prepared the memorandum which we looked at yesterday can you tell the Inquiry your experience in the field of firearms legislation? - It was very limited at that stage.

Did you have a knowledge of the relevant Statutes involving certification of firearms' holders? - Very limited.

Your concerns arose from a camp which was held at Milarrochy in 1991? - That is correct.

And can you tell us how many boys attended that camp? - Over the course of the fortnight I think there were in the region of 20 boys expected to attend. When I arrived on the 25th of July there were about a dozen. I think the arrangement was that boys could attend for part of the time and didn't require to stay for the whole fortnight, so the numbers would have fluctuated over the course of that.

So there would be somewhere between a dozen and at the most 20 if all had turned up? - Yes.

And the ages of the children were what? - I/

I think the oldest boy was about ten or 11 and the youngest was six.

I think in your evidence yesterday you indicated that another helper had come to assist Mr. Hamilton at some point? - Yes.

Up until the arrival of that person had anybody been helping Mr. Hamilton? - Hamilton alleged when I spoke to him that he did have help from other residents on the camp site, and some of the staff who were employed nearby, but he couldn't provide names of the people, nor identify anybody to me.

So until the arrival of this other gentleman he had been on his own so far as you could ascertain? - Yes.

And that other person arrived to assist just before you became involved; is that correct? - Yes, 22nd July. It was the day before my colleague Constable Kirk had gone out. He went out on Tuesday 23rd, and Mr. Brown had arrived on the Monday, the day before.

And if I have understood the evidence you have given correctly, your principal concern related to the chastisement of children and the taking of photographs which may have had children in compromising positions, but which you never had sight of? - Yes, and the apparent lack of supervision.

And the lack of supervision. If we can look at the issue of the chastisement of the children first, would it be correct to say that the statements which you were able to take disclosed that only one child had been chastised, physically? - Yes.

And am I correct in thinking that that child had, according to the statement, thrown a stone at another child in the camp and hit that other child in the eye? - Yes, that is correct.

Now, would you accept that such behaviour couldn't be allowed to go unchecked? - Yes.

It would require a response of some sort from/from the person in charge of the camp? - Yes.

And the other incident which, I seemed to note again involved that child, was that he had kicked and punched another child on the football pitch? - Yes, that is correct.

And he had been chastised by Mr. Hamilton following upon that incident occurring? - Yes.

And the child had then gone straight back on to the football pitch and kicked and punched the same child again whom he had previously assaulted? - Yes.

And would it also be the case that that behaviour could not be allowed to go unchecked by the leader of the camp? - Yes.

The question of disciplining children is one which is the subject of some debate; is that fair to say? - Yes.

And there are differing views as to whether corporal punishment, physical punishment, is appropriate or not? - That is correct, yes.

And some people take one view and others take a different view; is that a fair position to take up? - Yes.

And looked at objectively, would it be reasonable to say that one view, perhaps not your view, but another view, might be that the responses from the leader of the camp on the two occasions we have talked about fell within the band of responses which might be expected of an adult? - Objectively speaking, yes, I would agree.

You framed sample complaints on the basis that there had been an assault? - Yes.

And that was passed to the Procurator-Fiscal who said what, can you recall? - I can't recall the exact terms of the conversation. I recall that Mr. Coyne, the Fiscal Depute, had written a fairly length explanation in the papers at the Fiscal's Office which basically outlined his reasons for taking no proceedings in the case, and I think from memory -- I wouldn't like to say without seeing/seeing the notes. I think from memory he was of the view that it was a grey area and there was some doubt as to whether there was a viable case of assault.

As I understand it -- and you are probably more skilled in this area than I am -- that when decisions are taken as to whether proceedings should go ahead it can often be that it is not in the public interest, or it may be on the basis that there has been no crime committed. Which of the two do you understand that this situation fell into? - Probably a bit of both I think.

Now, of the photographs which you were able to recover, were any of them indecent in your view? - No, none were explicit.

Your concern centred on the fact that you hadn't seen all the photographs which you believed to have been taken? - Yes.

And if that was so that would be evidence, would it not, of Mr. Hamilton being untruthful to you? - Yes.

It wouldn't form any basis of evidence that there had been any indecent behaviour towards the children? - Well, not directly.

Looked at in that light, do you consider that it would be possible to examine the facts which are contained within the statement and come to the view that what was being undertaken by Mr. Hamilton at the time was simply exercising a degree of control over those who were in his charge at the camp? - Yes, I knew that would be a consideration when I reported it, but the fact of the matter was that I had received a complaint of assault from one of the parents and I felt duty-bound to investigate that and report it to the Fiscal.

Indeed, you had to? - Yes.

But looked at from the point of view of exercising control, one rational way of looking at it might be that there was control being exercised, rather than a lack of control being shown? - Yes.

You indicated in your memo that you considered/considered Mr. Hamilton to be an unstable personality? - Yes.

And can you remind us just what you based that view upon? - I felt that he had, during the course of the week, shown an ability to lose control. That was my personal opinion. I had a clear impression on speaking to him that he was outwardly projecting as very calm about things, when underneath he was perhaps very angry. I was concerned -- I had no reason to disbelieve the evidence that had been given by one of the children in regard to the nature of the photographs that had been taken.

Would the taking of photographs indicate an unstable personality? - The nature of the photographs made me concerned about the stability of his personality.

Might/

10.20 a.m.

Might it be viewed that the taking of the photographs, if they be as was said by one of the children, more towards him being an unsavoury character than to him being an unstable personality? - It depends on how you look at it. Yes, I suppose that in terms of the use of the word instability it may be interpreted that this did not indicate any element of instability about his personality but these were the words I chose to use at the time because that is how I felt.

What did you understand you were conveying when you used the word unstable? - That he was a difficult person to reason with, that he very much had his own agenda, that he had an unhealthy interest in children and that he was an abnormal type of person.

You mentioned there difficulty in reasoning with him. You had an interview with him at the camp site, is that correct? - Yes, that is correct.

In the course of that interview presumably you were putting to him various faults and complaints which you had seen and heard? - Yes.

What was he saying in response to that? - He was maintaining the position that he needed to exercise control because he was looking after so many boys and their behaviour on occasions was difficult to cope with and in particular the one boy whose parent had made a complaint was a particularly disruptive child within the camp and needed discipline.

So he was putting his side of the story if you like? Is that fair to say? - Yes.

Did you consider that it was unreasonable of him to be putting his side of the story in the circumstances? - No, not at all.

Might it be one view, and a legitimately held view, that taken in the round and given the evidence you have given this morning that whilst he may be thought to be an unsavoury character it would be/be quite legitimate to hold the view that he was not of an unstable personality? - I know that when I was dealing with Hamilton there was considerable support for him amongst the families who were involved with his boys' clubs. I can only say that I tried to convey my own opinion which may or may not have been accurate.

At the time when you prepared the memorandum which we have been looking at I think a complaint had been made against you by Hamilton to the police and that complaint was of a formal nature, is that correct? - Yes.

I take it the making of a complaint against you would not be a frequent occurrence? - No.

I don't mean to embarrass you but was this a unique situation for you to have a complaint being made? - No, it wasn't unique but uncommon.

How did you feel when you were informed that a complaint of a formal nature had been made against you? - I wasn't surprised because at the time the complaint had been made I expected a complaint to be forthcoming. The nature of the contacts that I had with Hamilton led me to believe that he would make a complaint against me and added to this I also had the knowledge of how he had responded to previous contacts with the police and that he had complained about everything basically in the past before, so I was guarded in terms of my dealings with him but nonetheless I felt that it was a bit unjustified certainly.

Would it be fair to say that if you felt that it was unjustified that you were a little aggrieved by Hamilton's actions in making such a complaint? - Yes, I think that would be fair.

How do you think that might have affected your views of Hamilton when you came to write your memorandum? - I think I said in my precognition that I wondered at the time about how my objectivity would be viewed in view of the fact I had just investigated this man and I had made my feelings about him clear. He had made a complaint about me. He was a very obstructive and difficult person to deal with. It was in my mind it might be viewed/viewed as something less than an objective viewpoint and I wondered how that would be viewed by others who would ultimately take decisions.

Did you think that the fact that a complaint had been made against you might have affected the manner in which you framed your complaint and the objectivity which you took to the framing of that complaint? - I would like to think that it didn't.

But do you admit to the possibility that it might have done? - I admit to being subject to the same human failings as everybody else I think.

Do you accept that looking after some 12 to 20 children, however many it was, for a period of six days or so on your own would be a fairly daunting task for most people? - Absolutely, yes.

Would the children who were attending the camp be the easiest children to control, do you think? - I don't think they would be any different from an ordinary gathering of children. They were just normal kids.

I think we have identified that there were really only two incidents where the leader of the camp sought to chastise a child by the use of physical means, is that correct, in that period? - Yes, there were three allegations of assault, in particular two of slaps and one of grabbing the child and shaking him.

And that related to the incident on the boat, is that correct? The latter incident? The shaking incident? - Yes, it related to the trip to the island.

And again it involved the same individual child? - Yes.

And I think again on that occasion he had been doing something on the boat? It is unclear from the statement but something which he ought not to have been doing? - Yes, I think he had been speaking out of turn.

But that is the sum and substance, isn't it, of the physical means by which Mr. Hamilton sought/sought to exercise control over those within his charge? - Yes.

I mean, would one legitimate view be that such amounts to nothing like loss of self control on the part of Hamilton? - Yes, one view might be.

I appreciate it is not your view but you would accept that another view, equally legitimate, might be to the contrary of your view? - Yes.

You clearly had an opportunity in the course of your interview which you had to form a view of Mr. Hamilton. To what extent did your view of him as you have described in the memo rely upon your intuition as a police officer? - I think almost entirely.

Did you accept it might be difficult to put one's finger on hard and fast evidence to support the view? It comes down to gut feel at the end of the day, is that fair? - Yes.

Now, at the time when you prepared your report you were involved with the Child Protection Unit? - Yes, that is correct.

And would your concern about Hamilton therefore have to be looked at in the context of your concerns about child care? - Yes.

Now, in the memorandum, apart from referring to the camp, I think in fairness to yourself one has to look at the fact that you also make reference to Mr. Hamilton having come to the adverse attention of the police on more than one occasion. Can you recall what these occasions were? - I think the principal episode that I was referring to was the investigation in 1988.

That is the one at Inchmoan? - Yes, and the fact that intelligence submissions had been made in regard to him.

What was it that these intelligence submissions amounted to? Can you recall? - Suspicions basically about his motives for being involved with young boys.

Perhaps we should have a look at what the/the intelligence actually amounted to. Can you have before you Chapter I and Document D3 I(III)? - I think I am on different reference numbers from you. Can you tell me what the document actually is and I will find it for you?

The other document is DIntel-F1-D3? - Yes, this is an intelligence letter submitted by Sergeant Low from British Transport Police?

That is the same one, yes. Can you recall, and I appreciate this is maybe a tall order, if that was one of the pieces of intelligence which you were able to access? - Yes, it would have been. I can't recall it but it would have been.

I think from that document we see in the conclusion perhaps in the last sentence that Sergeant Low says "I am unhappy and generally suspicious of this organisation and Hamilton"? - Yes.

And that this suspicion has arisen because of the difficulty in the Sergeant being able to get £70 back which his wife had paid for one of his children to attend a camp, is that right? - Yes. The intelligence report relates to that, yes.

Perhaps not the most objective of views? Would you accept that? - If that is why the suspicion has arisen, yes, I would say it is less than objective.

Can you just have a look at a document which on one version is known as D4 I(III) and is also known as DIntel-FI-D4? - Yes, that is the report from D.S. McBain at Alexandria.

And again this piece of intelligence we are looking at finishes with a question in the form "Do you have anything recorded against Hamilton?" Is that the same? - Yes.

And again in the intelligence it states that nothing sexual took place although Hamilton apparently runs a very authoritarian regime and assaulted boys by punching and slapping them for misdemeanours? - Yes.

And that relates to the incident at the Loch Lomond Island, Inchmoan? - Yes.

Now/

Now, you would have known about the Inchmoan incident from sources other than criminal intelligence, is that correct? - Yes.

That would be from Central Scotland Police's own records? - Yes, I think my knowledge principally came about from discussions with colleagues who had more knowledge of it.

So you would not have been relying to any extent upon this document in relation to Inchmoan? - No.

The next item of intelligence would appear to be D5 I(III), also known as DIntel-FI-D5? - Yes, it is a newspaper clipping of September 1988.

Which appeared in the Falkirk Herald by the look of it, is that correct? - Yes.

And the headline is "Youth Leader In Police Quiz"? - Yes.

And again this is in relation to Inchmoan? - Yes.

If we move on to Document D6 I(III), also known as DIntel-FI-D6, I think that is another Press clipping, is that right? - Yes.

And this comes from the Falkirk Herald of the 14th October 1988? - Yes.

And the headline is "Leader Denies Cruelty Claims"? - Yes.

And again this is him giving his view of matters, this time relating to the running of Falkirk Boys' Club, is that right? I think you will find that in the fourth paragraph in the first column? - Yes.

So when you read it more fully it again relates to Inchmoan Island because I think it says in the paragraph "Some of the parents even travelled to Inchmoan Island in Loch Lomond"? - That is correct.

So again that is a reference to that particular camp? - Yes.

I/

10.40 a.m.

I think if you go to the next column you will find a reference to what we previously knew about £70 not being returned?
- Yes.

And the next item is document D7/1(V) also known as intel F1/D7, it is a cutting from the Falkirk Herald on the 20th January, 1989; again that relates to him fighting a ban which was imposed upon him by the local authority? - Yes.

This refers to the letting of schools? - Yes, that is correct.

And if we move on to the next item which is document D11/3, intel 51/08 which is another Press clipping from the Falkirk Herald of the 31st March, 1989? - Yes.

Is that right? - That is correct.

Again this is in relation to the withdrawing of the let for the Falkirk Boys Club? - Yes, that is correct.

And this was a second probe into his activities and again this comes from complaints from anxious parents? - Yes.

It would appear to deal, in the second paragraph of the cutting, with the wearing of swimming trunks, the camp being pathetic, the children being cold, toilet facilities not being appropriate - in fact, it all relates to the Inchmoan Island incident really? - Yes, again.

Again -- moving on to the next document we find which is D9/1(III), otherwise known as intel F1/D9 can you tell us what this was? - This is an intelligence information form from Constable Parker who was, at that time, stationed in Bridge of Allan on the 12th May, 1989 and it relates to Hamilton who is suspected of being involved in indecent practices with young boys, starting a boys club which he ran on a Wednesday evening from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. in the sports complex at the Wallace High School.

And if we move on to the next item which is/

is D10/1(III), intel F1/1/D10 can you tell me the date of that one? - It is 1993, the 25th January, 1993 I think -- yes, I think it is 1993.

Could it be 1995? - Yes, it is 1995.

So that wouldn't be one which you had before you when you were looking to prepare your report of the 11th November, 1991? - No.

Was there anything material in these reports which you relied upon, these intelligence reports which you relied upon, when preparing the memorandum which we see in D82L? - There probably was some influence brought to bear in the fact that he was suspected of involvement in indecent practices with young boys and the controversy which had been caused regarding the 1988 investigations; I don't recall just how much importance I placed on the intelligence that was available at the time but I know that I did look to see what was known about him.

Most of it just relates to the 1988 Inchmoan Island incident? - Yes.

I think the only one that might not is D/9/1(III)? - Yes.

Might it be reasonable to infer you wouldn't have put too much weight on what was contained in the intelligence reports standing your own knowledge of Inchmoan Island, speaking to officers first hand? - Yes, I am well aware of the nature of the intelligence; there may often be suspicions unsubstantiated.

Does it come to this, that the principal basis for the report which you prepared for the 11th November was the happenings at Inchmoan Island and Milarrochy camp? - Yes.

Now, yesterday when giving your evidence you indicated that when you went to see the Fiscal it appeared that he was already privy to Mr. Hamilton and his reputation, is that right, or have I misunderstood you? - No, I am not clear about the question, to be honest.

I apologise, I will put it a better way. When/

When you went to see the Fiscal at Stirling in relation to the Milarrochy incident did you form the impression that he was already familiar with Mr. Hamilton? - Yes, I did.

Did you know how Mr. Hamilton had come to the attention of the Fiscal? - No, I didn't.

In your precognition you made reference to the view that Mr. Hamilton was schizophrenic, do you remember that? - Yes, I do.

I think that the way you explained yourself in your evidence-in-chief was that you saw on the one hand Mr. Hamilton holding himself out as a pillar of the community but on the other hand you believed there was a darker side to his personality of which he must be aware, is that roughly what you said? - Yes.

Is that a proper representation of your view? - Yes.

Would it be just as easy to categorise Mr. Hamilton as being hypocritical as that of being schizophrenic? - Yes, perhaps -- I did try to qualify the use of the word by prefixing it with layman's terms.

You don't hold out to have any qualifications in psychiatry or similar sciences? -No.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: It was suggested that a gut feeling had something to do with the way in which you wrote that report; did gut feeling have anything to do with the fact that you drafted 10 charges? - No.

If you could just have your report back in front of you, that is D3/K; if you go to the first page of the summary, the foot of the page and there you record "The camp was to last for a period of two weeks and it was the understanding of the parents of the children that the level of supervision would be approximately four to six adults"? - Yes, that is correct.

You found that there were not four to six adults? - That is correct.

A/

A number of times here you refer to assaults on a boy? - Yes.

At the foot of the second page you refer to Hamilton cursing and swearing at this same boy? - Yes.

Using such words as "fuck, cunt and bastard"? - Yes.

Would that provide a charge of breach of the peace? - Yes.

And then in relation to another boy you refer to Hamilton saying to him "We're no fucking going to get this film done"? - Yes.

Was there supporting evidence for this? - Yes, there was.

Is that or is that not a breach of the peace? - In my view, sir, yes, it is.

Hamilton was alleged to have slapped a boy on the face? - Yes.

And admitted it? - Yes.

In 1991 was that an assault? - In my view, sir, yes.

The other thing that has been suggested to you, I suppose may be that you over-reacted when you drafted the report and I suppose that could also be said to be acting unprofessionally as a policeman; do you think the report you gave to the Chief Constable was a sign of acting unprofessionally? - No, I don't.

JANET REILLY (4I), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Do you now live in Stoke on Trent? - Yes.

Prior to moving to Stoke did you stay in Bridgend near Linlithgow? - Yes.

Could/

Could you give me the address you stayed at? - 21 Oldhill Avenue.

How close was that to the home of Dorren Haggart?
- About four doors away.

The same street or round the corner? - She was in Auldhill Crescent.

Were you friendly with her? - Yes.

Closely? - Yes.

Over what period of time? - It was for quite a few number of years.

When did you move to Stoke? - Six years ago.

Before you moved to Stoke had you fallen out with her? - Oh, sometimes we had arguments.

After you moved to Stoke did you come up and stay with her from time to time? - No.

Now, in 1988 were you, for a period, at a camp run by a man called Thomas Hamilton on one of the islands in Loch Lomond? - Yes.

Whose idea was it that you should go to the camp?
- Mrs. Haggart asked me to go with her.

And you agreed? - Yes.

Did any of your own family go with you? - No.

How long did you spend there? - I think it was nearly two weeks.

Might it have been just under two weeks? - Yes.

There is a suggestion that it was quite a deal longer than that? - No.

Is your recollection of the period clear? - Yes, I think so.

What was the role you played at the camp?/

camp? - She just asked me if I would go along with her for company.

What did you do when you were there? - Just helped her to cook meals and things for the kids.

Why was it you left the camp? - Because Mr. Hamilton had threatened Mrs. Haggar.

What was the threat? - Because she had asked him for more money to buy more food for the kids.

What was the nature of the threat? - He threatened.....he had a gun in his hand when he came back when I was coming down from the woods.

This is at the camp? - Yes.

So at the camp Mr. Hamilton threatened Mrs. Haggar with a gun? - Yes.

I suppose she would be frightened by that? - She was.

What did she do? - She had an argument with him.

Yes? - I can't remember the rest.

Now, there are a number of types of guns? - I can't remember what kind of gun it was.

Was it a long gun or a short gun? - I can't remember.

A handgun or a rifle? - I can't remember.

A shotgun? - I don't know.

This is at Loch Lomond? - Yes.

On Inchmoan Island? - Yes.

Something Mrs. Haggar is not likely to have forgotten about? - I don't think so.

Is that the only threats that you recollect/recollect being the reason for leaving the camp site? - Yes.

I am going to ask you a specific question in a moment about threats but I would like to give you every opportunity because I do want to make it clear whether there were any other threats made to either you or Mrs. Haggar at the camp site? - I can't remember.

Just have a minute -- anything else before I ask you? (No answer).

Nothing else -- you don't remember Hamilton threatening to burn Mrs. Haggar's tent down? - No.

You don't remember Davie threatening to hit you with an axe? - Who was that?

Davie? - Mr. Davie?

Yes? - I remember that but I thought you meant Hamilton.

What did Davie do with the axe? - He said he was going to kill Mrs. Haggar with it, he said he was going to set fire to the tent that night while we went in with the kids.

That is Davie? - Yes.

But not Hamilton? - No.

Who was Davie going to attack with the axe? - Mrs. Haggar.

Not you? - No.

Now, you have been interviewed a number of times in connection with the police investigation surrounding the camp at Inchmoan Island, is that correct? - Yes.

You were interviewed by Sergeant McBain? - I don't know what the name is.

Inspector Keenan, do you remember him? - I spoke to him once on the phone.

On/

On any of these occasions had you said that Hamilton threatened Mrs. Haggar with a gun at Loch Lomond? - I told them that when we went off the island, we went to the first police station and told them.

What about Mr. Keenan on the phone, did you tell him that? - Yes.

Now, I have seen a lot of papers in this case, no doubt somebody could be hiding something, and we have heard quite a lot of evidence including Mrs. Haggart's and this is the first suggestion there has ever been of Hamilton having a gun on Inchmoan Island and threatening somebody with it; can you explain that? - No.

After that camp was over did you encounter Hamilton on any other occasion? - We went to see him once at Linlithgow Academy.

What did you do then? - We just put gunge and everything on him.

Between leaving the camp site and going to that incident at Linlithgow Academy did you ever meet him? - He came to Mrs. Haggart's once.

When was that? - I don't know what date it was.

Were/

11.00 a.m.

Were you there at the time? - No, I was coming up from the shop at the time.

And what happened? - Well, he was just ready for driving away by the time I got up to Mrs. Haggar's gate.

What vehicle was he in? - He was in a van but I don't know what colour it was or what kind.

Where was he sitting? - He was in the driver's seat.

Where was the van sitting? - Outside Mrs. Haggar's gate.

Anyone else around apart from you and Mrs. Haggar?
- Mrs. Haggar's daughter.

Her name? - Vicky.

Time of day? - Oh, I cannae remember -- in the afternoon sometime.

Time of year? - I don't know.

What did you see? - Mr. Hamilton had something on the passenger's seat covered up -- Mrs. Haggar said to me it was a gun.

Did you actually see the gun? - No.

You have no idea what it was that was on the passenger's seat? - No.

Did Hamilton say anything? - I don't think so -- I don't know what he said to her, because he was ready to drive away by the time I got there.

Did you see him on any other occasion? - I don't think so.

Now, a statement was taken from you by Detective Constable Mitchell on the 5th of April of this year at Longton Police Office in Stoke? - Yes.

You/

You were in a police office giving him a statement? -
Yes.

It was 9 o'clock in the morning? - Yes.

Do you agree that in that statement you said to Detective Constable Mitchell "We left the camp because the way Hamilton treated the boys there was terrible. I would say he was cruel to them. When we left the island we went to the police at Alexandria and told a uniform policeman there about the camp before we went back to Bridgend"?
- Yes.

Do you agree you said nothing to him about a gun at Inchmoan Island? - I can't remember. It is nearly eight years ago.

But do you remember that is what you did say to the policeman in April of this year? - I think so.

And now all of a sudden you remember that there was a gun on Inchmoan Island? - Mrs. Haggart said he had a gun.

You didn't actually see it? - No, because I was too far away.

When did she tell you this? - After he moved away.

That day, on the island? - Yes.

Did you also say to Detective Constable Mitchell when he was asking you about the occasion you had seen Hamilton after that: "The first time would be about the end of the summer I would guess. I was sitting in my house, and I am sure it was in the afternoon near tea time. I think it was Doreen's daughter Vicky who came to the door. She was about seven at the time. She told me her mum wanted me as Thomas Hamilton was at their door threatening her mum with a gun. I didn't believe her at first as she used to tell stories, but when she started crying I thought it might be true. I went to Doreen's, and Thomas Hamilton -- he was standing on the doorstep. Doreen only had one door at the side of the house. He had his hand in his right pocket of the jerkin he was wearing. He was a three/three-quarter length thing with big pockets. He didn't move his hand when I saw him. It was just straight down as if he was holding something. I didn't see anything in the pocket or any shape. I don't recall him saying anything. When I got there he was just ready to leave", and then "When I went into Doreen's she told he had threatened her with a gun". Did you tell the police that? - Yes.

Now, it is a bit different from coming along and seeing something on the seat of the car -- of the van -- and indeed you were telling the police constable that there were two separate occasions when you saw him at Doreen Haggar's house? - Yes.

Now, why did you only tell us -- why did you tell us there was only one such occasion? - I didn't know you wanted to know about two occasions, did I?

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: The episode on the island, did you hear anything said by either Mrs. Haggar or Mr. Hamilton? - What about?

Well, when you were coming down from the woods you say you saw Mr. Hamilton with a gun? - Yes.

And Mrs. Haggar was beside him; is that right? - Yes.

Did you hear either of them say anything? - No.

And what did Mrs. Haggar say to you immediately afterwards? - Just said that he had threatened her with a gun, because she had an argument with him about food for the kids.

The incident where Mr. Hamilton was in a van outside Mrs. Haggar's house -- you walked up the road and saw the two of them there; is that right? - Mrs. Haggar was at the gate and he was inside his van.

You told us you didn't hear Mr. Hamilton say anything. Did you hear Mrs. Haggar say anything? - No.

In relation to the question of whether you have/have mentioned the incident on the island before, did you mention it in the World-in-Action programme in which you took part? - What about?

The incident on the island with the gun, did you mention that in the World-in-Action programme? - No.

Can you remember when that programme was made -- was it very soon after the incident in March? - I think so.

Can you be any more specific about time? Was it a week after, two weeks after? - I can't remember.

No re-examination.

JOHN PATERSON MILLAR, (57), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I am a retired police officer and I stay in Dunblane.

When you retired, what rank did you hold with Central Scotland Police? - Detective Superintendent.

How long had you served with the police force? - 33½ years.

And when did you retire? - Officially on 31st December, 1991, but I didn't work very much in December. I had accumulated leave.

In the course of your service with Central Scotland Police Force did you become aware of the existence of a man called Thomas Hamilton? - I did.

Do you remember when you first heard of him? - It was some considerable years prior to me leaving the police, but the exact year I can't say.

And is it fair to say you were not directly involved in any investigation involving him? - I was never involved in an investigation involving him.

Did you ever speak to him? - Once, on the telephone, just prior to me leaving the office, when/when he phoned asking for Productions which the police held to be returned to him.

What were these? - Photographic material, cameras and such.

And were you able to do anything about this? - I passed it down the line, and it must have been returned, because I heard no more about it.

Now, could you look at a document D5I(i) or D82L or DFU3A, which is, you will see, a memo from Sergeant Hughes, addressed to "Detective Superintendent" -- that would be you? - Yes.

And it is dated 11th November, 1991? - That is correct.

We have heard lots of evidence so far about this, and we have already been told that your input on to this memo is the handwriting at the end of the second page? - It is, yes.

And your position in passing this to the Deputy Chief Constable was: "While appreciating Detective Sergeant Hughes' concern, I cannot recommend the action proposed, for obvious reasons", and then you specify these, that "Hamilton has not been convicted of a crime and it seems the Fiscal is likely to 'no pro' the recently reported case"; is that right? - That is correct.

Now, at that time did you have any experience of administering the Firearms Department, or the work that uniformed officers had to do to service the Firearms Department? - Yes. Since joining the police in 1958 I had handled very many applications for Firearms Certificates and Shotgun Certificates, and also as a Sub-Divisional Inspector I had recommended whether or not in my view they should be granted. I never personally had to make a decision as to whether a Firearms Certificate should be refused.

And had you ever had to consider a report on the question of whether a Firearms Certificate should be revoked? - I was involved in one case while I was serving with Perth and Kinross Constabulary. We took possession of a firearm, and that/that request was put in, and it was accepted.

And that was a recommendation to revoke? - Yes.

On what basis? - On the basis of his misuse of the firearm.

Was he convicted? - He was convicted -- I beg your pardon, no -- mental grounds, he wasn't taken to court.

But there was clear evidence, irrefutable evidence, that the firearm had been misused? - There certainly was.

However, here in the memo you seem to be expressing a view that before the police could do anything about Hamilton, who possessed a Firearms Certificate then, he would have to be convicted; is that right? - The word "convicted" is used to cover quite a wide meaning in this memo. I am aware that there is no need for a conviction, but there is a need for evidence of unsuitability, and I did not think on the basis of the information supplied to me that there was sufficient evidence -- there was no guns or involvement in guns in the enquiry, as far as I know.

So that was a crucial element of your -- or a crucial element in your deciding to advise the Deputy Chief Constable this way? - Yes. Well, I recommended that my view was that there was no grounds that would stand up in court. I was aware that it is very difficult to get Firearms Certificates revoked.

Were you clear in your mind at the time what the grounds for revocation are? - Yes.

What is your understanding of that? - That the person should be fit and proper to hold a Firearms Certificate, and not be a danger to any other person because of his holding or possessing a Firearms Certificate.

The actual wording of the provision is that the Chief Officer has to be satisfied that the holder is either prohibited -- well, we are not dealing with a prohibited person -- or is of intemperate/intemperate habits or unsound mind, or is otherwise unfitted to be entrusted with a firearm? - Yes.

Which is a bit different from being a fit and proper person, although you may see it differently? - Well, a fit and proper person covers exactly what you have said.

"Intemperate habits", though, doesn't on the face of it appear to relate specifically to how he behaves with a firearm? - No. I never, ever heard that he was of intemperate habits. He had often been described as an oddball, and there was innuendo that he had a particular liking for young boys, but there had never been any proceedings taken against him because there was never enough evidence.

Well, Mr. Hughes of course was convinced there was evidence in this case for proceedings to be taken in spite of the Fiscal's view? - Yes.

That didn't weigh with you? - No.

As far as you were concerned if the Fiscal said there were to be no proceedings, that was it? - Well, I did in fact speak to the Fiscal. I either phoned him, or he phoned me, about another matter, and I suggested that as there had been quite a few complaints against Hamilton and those had never gone to court, I suggested that it may be possible to take a new look at the thing, and whereas one case didn't stand up, adding them together they may have been able to get a case.

But did you speak to the Fiscal on more than one occasion in these terms? - No.

Who was it you actually spoke to? - Mr. Valentine.

And what you were asking him to do was not just look at the Stirling case, but to look at the Dumbarton case as well? - Any cases he had on file at all.

And was the word you used "Look at it on a Moorov basis"? - Yes, to see if we could in fact -- because this man was particularly coming to our notice for one thing or another, and it was in our interest to see if there was a case which could be proved.

And/

And Moorov would mean looking at it on the basis that different incidents might corroborate each other? - Yes.

BY THE COURT: So the problem he was saying was not so much the nature of the conduct but whether there was enough to corroborate it? - Yes, looking for corroboration, where one case may have corroborated another, where standing alone neither had enough evidence to go to court.

So was that in your mind when you wrote the note that you have just been referred to, that it was the lack of corroboration you had in mind? - Well, that was obviously the Procurator-Fiscal's reason for not taking.....

No, no, I am not concerned with that. I am concerned with what your view was. Did you see the problem as one of corroboration? - Not when I wrote this note.

Well, I want to be quite clear. What was it you had in mind when you wrote the note? - That there was no evidence of him being unfit to hold a Firearms Certificate. Firearms had never been mentioned, in my knowledge, in regard to any of the complaints.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: We may learn, though, in due course that when the Fiscal marked his papers in this particular case, one thing he didn't write was "insufficient evidence". Two things were written on it. One was "No crime"? - Yes.

And the other was "Not in the public interest". Now, neither of these reflects an insufficiency of evidence, except in the sense that the evidence didn't amount to a crime? - I didn't know what he had written.

So was your understanding though that the Fiscal accepted there was a crime there? - No. I just asked that all the reports should be looked at together to see if one helped substantiate another.

But of course before that could begin each one on its own would have to amount to a crime? - Yes.

And/

And you didn't get the impression the Fiscal's view was that there wasn't a crime in there? - No.

Well, can you remember what Mr. Valentine did say to you was his reason for being reluctant to prosecute? - No, I didn't question his reasons. He is the Fiscal, and he made the decision.

BY LORD CULLEN: What was his reason? - Pardon?

What was his reason? - I didn't ask him. He had marked it "No pro".

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: It would indeed be unusual for him to tell you his reason, wouldn't it? - Yes. I wouldn't have expected him to.

And policemen would not normally ask? - No, we certainly wouldn't.

Have you any idea when that conversation was? - It must have been in November some time, and probably very close to the date I received this memorandum.

Did he tell you what he would do with your suggestion? - No.

And can I take it you never heard any more? - I never heard any more.

Now, when you passed the memo with your comments to the Deputy Chief Constable did he discuss it with you at all? - No. He was au fait with the case reported to the Fiscal -- he had been brought up to date on that by then DCI Holden, and he knew all about the case. He knew all about Hamilton, and this was left with him on the morning of the 11th and it came back down later on with his stamp on it saying "No Action".

BY/

11.20 a.m.

BY LORD CULLEN: Perhaps you could help me with one other matter; when you wrote the note we have been looking at, had you had any discussions at all with the Procurator-Fiscal? - No.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: When you had your conversation with the Fiscal did you say anything to the Fiscal about the fact that Mr. Hamilton had a firearms certificate? - No, I didn't.

When you wrote your note, your handwritten note, in which you say "I could not recommend the action proposed", was it part of your duty to make a recommendation Yes or No on what was in the report? - The memorandum had been directed to me and I could have left it at that but because I knew the Depute Chief Constable had ongoing correspondence with Mr. Hamilton and secondly that he was responsible for the issuing of firearms certificates within the force, I took this up to him.

In practice did the Depute Chief Constable tend to follow whatever course of action was recommended by the person below him? - No, he had a mind of his own and he always exercised it.

So why did you decide in this case to make a recommendation? - Because the request by Detective Sergeant Hughes was that we should take steps..... "consideration is given to withdrawing this man's firearms certificate as a precautionary measure as it is my opinion that he is a scheming, devious and deceitful individual who is not to be trusted". That was something that the Firearms Department and finally the Depute Chief Constable would wish to know. That is the reason it went upstairs.

But you told us that you hadn't met Hamilton at that point? - No, I hadn't. I had never met him.

Now, obviously Detective Sergeant Hughes had had considerable experience, recent experience, of Mr. Hamilton? - Yes.

Do/

Do you accept that Detective Sergeant Hughes would be in a position to make an accurate assessment of Hamilton? - I accepted that he was able to make an assessment, yes, but in my view there was nothing there in the report or the summary I had been given of the report to suggest that he was unfit. I will accept that he was known as odd but nothing and no evidence ever came to me that he was acting improperly with a firearm.

But I am still interested in this question of why you chose actively to intervene and write a recommendation contrary to what Detective Sergeant Hughes was suggesting? - Because that was my feelings on the evidence of the enquiry that Detective Sergeant Hughes had done. I didn't think there was evidence to substantiate the request for revocation of Hamilton's gun licence, his firearms certificate.

But you could have just left the memorandum and written nothing and left it to the Depute Chief Constable to decide? - Well, it would have been very unusual for me not to put some comment on. After all, the report was sent to me.

Now, the question of fitness to hold a firearms certificate; would you accept that the police will be concerned to know what sort of person it is who is applying for or holding a firearms certificate? - Yes, that is what the police enquiry is about.

And how that person behaves? - Yes.

If a person appears to be untrustworthy would you think that such a person should have a firearms certificate? - I certainly did at that time.

You thought at that time that an untrustworthy person would still be.....? - No, I didn't think Hamilton came into the category of being one who could not hold a firearms certificate.

Yes, but I am asking you a more general question. At that time, if a person had been shown to be untrustworthy, would you consider that that would make them not fit to hold a firearms certificate/certificate? - No. Where is the proof that Hamilton is untrustworthy at the time I got this report?

That is not actually what I am asking you. I am asking you at that time if a person had been shown to be untrustworthy would you have thought that such a person should not have a firearms certificate? - Untrustworthy can cover quite a lot of ground.

What about lying to the police? - Well, that would be seen as being untrustworthy.

Would that be something that might at least suggest to you that the person was not a proper person to have a firearms certificate? - Not in these circumstances, no, I don't think so.

What about a person who was capable of violence? - Extreme violence, yes.

But not somebody who assaulted a child? - It would depend on the severity of the assault.

What about somebody who appeared obsessive in relation to the prosecution of his complaints? Would that cause you any concern? - He would obviously be feeling he was in the right and had a right to complain and we had the right to look into any complaint that is given to us.

I am really still asking you more general questions about what sort of things might have triggered some concerns on your part about the holding of a firearms certificate? - Being a drunkard, being a violent criminal who would use firearms in the commission of a crime or had used firearms in the commission of a crime. Instances along these lines or someone who had a proven mental disability.

You are using the word "proven", was there any room in your view for preventative measures? - In hindsight there possibly should have been. There was not at the time.

You didn't consider that the legislation gave you any scope for intervening in a preventative manner? - Well, it does of course but there is a case/case where if the police think a man is a danger and unstable and unsuitable to hold, that they have the right to object but I don't know of any cases which have proved where the Sheriff has upheld a police complaint when it was put down to them for a decision.

Well, when you were looking at this particular memorandum, did you take any steps to get some legal advice about cases where an attempt had been made to revoke a firearms licence? - It was passed up to the Depute Chief Constable who had far more knowledge of firearms procedure than I had and who was dealing with them day in and day out.

So when you made your recommendation you didn't have any particular working knowledge of case law in this area? - No.

What were you concerned about if the firearms certificate had been revoked? What did you think might happen that would be something to be avoided? - The fact that had we gone or had I recommended and it had been accepted to go for revocation that it would not have held up in front of the Sheriff with the evidence that was presented.

What would have been bad about that? - We would have gained nothing.

Well, what loss would it have been to have taken the certificate and then perhaps not have won a battle in Court? - I didn't see that there was grounds that would have stood up and therefore I didn't see it would do any good. My suggestion at the bottom of this, it was a suggestion. The man who made the decision and who had to make the decision was the Depute Chief Constable.

Yes, but the worst that could have happened if the firearms certificate had been revoked would have been a red face for the police in Court? That is the worst thing that could have happened, isn't it? - The police lose many cases in Court.

So it would not have been so bad? - No.

And if Detective Sergeant Hughes was right/right and this person should not have continued to have a firearms certificate then an outcome considerably worse could ensue if that was correct and the certificate was not revoked, couldn't it? - Yes. Then again, if his certificate had been refused and his guns were taken away from him and he still felt the way he did at the time of this terrible tragedy, there is no doubt in my mind that he could still have got possession of firearms.

BY LORD CULLEN: Perhaps I could just ask you a few questions on this point to clarify one or two things in my mind. You said to Miss Dunlop a short while ago that there was nothing in the report to suggest that he was unfit? - To hold a firearms certificate.

To hold a firearms certificate. Now, was that the reason why you made the recommendation that you did? - That plus my knowledge of Mr. Hamilton himself, although I had never interviewed him, and the complaints that had been made against him. It was innuendo more than anything else.

In other words, you thought that if there was an appeal against revocation it could not be established that the man was unfit? - Yes.

Now, if you look at your note it seems to be directed to possible prosecution and conviction of a criminal offence or offences, is that right? - I'm sorry?

If you look at the note which you have written, it appears to be directed to prosecution and possible conviction of criminal offences, is that right? - Yes, it does.

Because it says at the end that he has not been convicted of crime? - Yes.

"And it seems the PF is likely to 'no pro'" so that must be all to do with prosecution and conviction of crime, is that right? - It reads like that, yes.

And you say these are the obvious reasons why you made the recommendation you did. That is what you have said? - Yes, I have said that.

So/

So does it follow from that then that your view at the time was it would be essential for a criminal conviction to be secured?
- No, I also knew that the police had the right to object to the person on the grounds of the applicant being unfit.

I understand that but what is puzzling me is that you have said that this is all to do, as I understand it, with prosecution and conviction of a criminal offence and that is why I am not quite sure I understand. There seems to be now an additional reason that is not actually stated here? - I probably worded this not in a very clear manner.

So you really mean to approach the matter in a broader way than merely looking at prosecution and conviction of a criminal offence? - That is correct.

Now, one other comment you made again in answer to Miss Dunlop was you said "What was the proof that Mr. Hamilton was untrustworthy?"? - Yes.

Does that mean that you took the view also that you disagreed with the Detective Sergeant's assessment that Hamilton was a man who was not to be trusted? - As I read it, I took Detective Sergeant Hughes's comments to mean he was not to be trusted with children.

Well, look at the last paragraph which says "I respectfully request that serious consideration is given to withdrawing this man's firearms certificate as a precautionary measure and it is my opinion that he is a scheming, devious and deceitful individual who is not to be trusted"? - Yes.

I want to be quite clear. Did you take at the time a view that at least some of that paragraph was not well founded as a conclusion or did you accept that conclusion? - I accepted his view.

You accepted what is said in that paragraph? - I accepted his view, albeit that I didn't think that from what he had said to me and what was told to me about his enquiry that all of the/the adjectives could have applied. I accept that Hamilton was an odd fellow. I accept he was probably scheming and devious. Deceitful, many persons tell the police lies when they are being interviewed. I just felt at the time that I penned this, and I must say until I was shown the memo when I was interviewed at the end of last month, I had no recollection of the matter at all.

It is just I want to get it clear in my mind? - Yes, I understand.

As to whether there was any part of the conclusion reached by the Detective Sergeant that you yourself did not subscribe to. If that is the case I want to know? - Yes. No, I thought that the wording from Sergeant Hughes possibly was exaggerated from the evidence that he had. I think that is the answer.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: We know that Hamilton's shotgun certificate, his firearms certificate, was renewed at a date a long time before the tragedy? - Yes.

I think you are aware that a renewal is treated in the same way as a new application? - Yes.

Would it surprise you that no consideration was given to Detective Sergeant Hughes's memorandum at the time of renewal or did you have nothing to do with it? - I was off the job within a month of receiving this memo. I was retired and away.

Would you have anticipated that this memorandum would have been an element of consideration at the time of renewal of Hamilton's certificate? - I would have expected a copy of it to be in the firearms file.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: What was your knowledge of Mr. Hamilton at the time when you made the note on the then Sergeant Hughes's memo? - Purely hearsay.

And how would that have been formed? Who had you spoken to? - I had overheard words about Hamilton and his running of clubs and DCI Holden had/had discussed the case as it went along and the evidence that had been gathered. I knew Hamilton ran clubs in Dunblane and in fact.....

Can I just stop you there and examine what you have told us today? We will come on to the clubs in a moment perhaps. You said you had overheard conversations? - Yes.

Now, can you tell me whose conversations was it you had overheard? - Other enquiry officers.

So that is other police officers? - Other police officers, yes.

Can you say or can you remember what these police officers had been enquiring into at the time? - No. I am sorry, I can't.

Can you tell me what the sum and substance of what you learned was? - That Hamilton was an oddball but he wasn't described as I have seen in the Press lately as a paedophile or of having assaulted children in a sexual nature.

Are you able to say how many times you overheard such discussions or is that testing your memory too much? - Far too much, I am afraid.

You/

11.40 a.m.

You then told us about a discussion which you had with Mr. Holden? - Yes.

How intimately did you get to know the case from Mr. Holden? - I got a very comprehensive briefing on it.

Was that in relation to the Milarrochy incident? - In relation to the inquiry that he was doing at the time.

Were you aware that there had been any complaints made against the then Detective Sergeant Hughes? - No.

Had you had any discussion with any other officers like Mr. McMurdo in relation to the investigation which was being undertaken by Detective Sergeant Hughes? - No, Mr. McMurdo often mentioned that he had a letter from Hamilton complaining about this and that but it was just a mention in the passing.

Were you aware of any prior involvement of Mr. Hamilton and Mr. McMurdo, any prior interface between the two of them? - No, only that there was ongoing correspondence.

But you didn't know the nature of that correspondence? - I didn't.

You also were about to tell us something about your knowledge of Mr. Hamilton's boys clubs before I interrupted you? - Yes, I knew he ran boys clubs in Dunblane and that he seemed to have a good attendance at the clubs; some children who I know had been at the club for a week or two after it started and then hadn't gone back, but very many of them continued and he seemed to have quite a good support.

Were you aware of any adverse comment which had been made of Hamilton in relation to the manner in which he ran the clubs? - The only thing I had heard about him was that he was a bit of a disciplinarian, nothing else, certainly nothing of an adverse nature.

Did/

Did you know anything else of Hamilton from any other source? - Other than the fact that he had a shop at one time, no, I knew nothing else.

When you came to write your note did you make use of any of the information which you had or did you rely entirely upon the terms of the report which you obtained with the papers? - It is obvious what I knew about the man was in my mind at the time I wrote it.

Apart from the memo which you have before you can you remember what else was provided for your assistance? - I had a briefing about the case by D.C. Holden, now Superintendent Holden.

Did that take the form of a summary? - Yes.

Did you actually see the statements? - No.

You were asked some questions by my learned friend, Miss Dunlop, sitting at the other end of the table in relation to just revoking and letting the Sheriff come to a view on it; what did you consider the responsibilities of a police officer are in relation to the issuing of firearms certificates? - If he has any doubt on a man's fitness it should be reported and it is up to the granting officer to decide whether or not he will do anything about it.

The granting officer then requires to assess the whole position and come to a view? - Yes, exactly, he has to take everything into consideration.

Is it appropriate in your view if the granting officer has the slightest doubt he should then revoke and leave it to the Sheriff, is that a proper exercise of his discretion? - Yes.

You think that is appropriate? - If he thinks there is a doubt he would put it forward.

That is the reporting officer? - Yes.

I/

I have moved on a little bit from that? - Right.

We are now looking at the granting officer, the person who has signed the firearms certificate? - Yes.

It is he who has exercised some judgment, is that correct? - Of course.

And he has to form a view taking into account all the information before him? - Yes, correct.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: The question that was being put to you and departed from there was whether if, and I think you called him the ranking officer, who would be the Deputy Chief Constable? - Yes.

Was simply in doubt about a person's fitness what decision do you consider it would be appropriate for him to make? - He would make inquiries of the people who had put in the various reports and make a decision as to whether he would look for a revocation or not.

Was that an appropriate exercise of his discretion in view that he simply felt there were doubts about the man's fitness having made all these inquiries to then revoke his certificate? - That would be his decision.

And that would be an appropriate exercise of discretion? - Yes.

In your view? - Yes.

Now, you were asked about the circumstances in which it would be appropriate to revoke and the type of conduct that should be taken into account and you have talked about people who were drunkards, violent criminals using firearms for the commission of crime. What would your position be about recommending the revocation to the Deputy Chief Constable where a person was convicted of drunk driving, for example, and failing to stop? - This would be mentioned in the report from the original inquiry officer and go to a file and again it is up to the granting officer to make his decision./

decision.

If you learned of such a conviction for drunk driving and failing to stop would you write a memo to the Deputy Chief Constable asking him to consider revocation or wouldn't you consider it appropriate to do so? - I never have had to think about that until you brought it up just now.

Give it a little thought? - It depends on the circumstances -- if it is a one-off slip up by the person you are theorising on, or was he known as a drunkard -- if he was known as a drunkard and an irresponsible person, yes, I would suggest that would be grounds.

So he would have to have previous for this before you would consider it appropriate? - Previous knowledge of his sobriety or otherwise.

You would have to have more than one conviction? - I would think it would be someone up the tree that had to make the decision.

At the end of the day your position is whether the Deputy Chief Constable was aware, it has to be given careful consideration? - Yes, I would think so.

You would anticipate that all the officers who are commenting on the memo and passing it up the tree would be relying on the Deputy Chief Constable being the one who had to give the most careful consideration? - He on behalf of the Chief Constable is the person who signs the final certificate.

Well, signing is one thing but giving consideration to it is quite another. The question I am asking you is what your anticipation was of the extent to which consideration would be given by the Deputy Chief Constable in terms of the memo? - I am quite sure he would give it the fullest consideration.

Were you aware in the historical knowledge that you had of Hamilton of his earlier battle with the Ombudsman? (No answer).

That is badly put, his battle with Central/

Central Region in which the Ombudsman became involved? - Yes, since the tragedy I have learned of this.

But you didn't know as a serving police officer? -
No.

Did you know as a serving police officer of the internal investigation by Mr. Keenan into complaints by Hamilton against Constables Gunn and Duncan? - I have no recollection of it.

So was it not common knowledge in the Force? - It possibly was, I was out of the Force for three years on central service and if it happened when I was away I wouldn't have known about it.

What were these three years? - 1985 to 1988.

When in 1988? - May, 1988.

The camp in July, 1988 was the one that gave rise to the investigation of the complaint by Hamilton against Gunn and Duncan but that doesn't mean anything to you? - No.

MICHAEL MILL (52), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: You are a former police officer with Central Scotland Police? - That is correct.

Now retired? - Yes, I am.

And you live in Stirling? - Yes, I do.

For how many years were you a serving police officer?
- 21½ years.

When did you first encounter Thomas Hamilton? - I first encountered Thomas Hamilton when I was stationed at Stirling about 1981, 1980, 1981.

In/

In what connection? - He had a Do It Yourself shop in Cowane Street, Stirling.

Were you a customer? - Yes, I was.

Now, you knew him as a customer to speak to, I suppose, if you met him in the street? - Yes, I did.

Did you know something of his ownership and use of boats on Loch Lomond? - Yes, I did.

How was it you came to know about that? - I was a member of Central Scotland Police Force Underwater Unit and we trained up at Loch Lomond on training exercises on a weekly basis.

Can you tell us how many boats over the years Hamilton had at Loch Lomond? - I was first aware he had one, a speed boat, it was a small boat and it was called The Lady Sheila and he then purchased another boat which was a large cabin cruiser and that was called Tropical Winter.

What happened to it? - It caught fire and sank.

Do you know when that was? - About 1982, 1983, about that time, I am not just quite sure.

As a result of that sinking of the boat did the underwater unit have to do something about it? - The boat caught fire on Loch Lomond, on the Strathclyde side of Loch Lomond just opposite Luss; after the fire the boat drifted over towards Balmaha Bay and sank just off the island; it sank in shallow water and the boatyard or the boatman at the yard asked us if we would move the boat into deeper water because it was causing an obstruction.

Were you involved in doing that? - Yes, I was.

Were you aware that Hamilton had summer camps in that area? - Yes.

When were you first aware of this? - Probably about 1980, 1981; as I say we visited Loch Lomond on a weekly basis, we knew of the person at/

at the boatyard and they knew Hamilton as well.

In 1988 there was a police investigation into one of the camps and then an investigation into the police officers. Is it a fair summary of the position that Hamilton on a number of occasions tried to plead with you to say something, I suppose in his favour, in the course of this investigation? - I don't know if he was pleading with me to say something in his favour, he certainly initially came to see me in relation to the procedural side of it, thereafter it then became a bit more than that.

Did he visit you regularly? - Yes, he did.

Was he pleading his case? - Yes, he was.

Did you get the impression he hoped it would filter through from you into other police officers' ears? - Yes.

In 1988 were you involved at all directly in the investigations, for example, going to the camp site and seeing the state of the camp? - No, in view of Hamilton's letters to the Chief Constable I was directed to do a preliminary investigation just into events but not to go to the camp.

Was that in connection with complaints against Gunn and Duncan? - Yes, it was.

Did you speak to Hamilton in that connection? - Yes, I did.

Now, following that particular camp did you in later years at all go to the site to see what the camp was like? - Yes, I did.

When did you first do that? - After the 1988 camp he made a point of coming to see me to inform me of where he was having the camp and inviting police officers, if they wanted, to visit his camp; I went, I think, to the 1990 camp at Milarrochy Bay which was on the site of the caravan club at Loch Lomond.

Is that the first time you had actually gone/gone on to one of the camp sites? - Yes.

What did you make of the camp in 1990? - As far as I was aware it was quite well run, the boys were all happy; I spoke to quite a few boys, I spoke to the warden at the site and I spoke to Hamilton; he showed me the layout of the site and also the food that was available for the boys.

Did he have any adult assistance? - Yes, he did.

How many people were there? - As far as I was aware there was one male person.

How many boys were there? - I am not sure -- possibly about a dozen.

Did you visit any other camp? - No, I didn't.

Was the visit you have just described the subject of any police intelligence input into the system? - Not that I am aware of; I probably would have spoken with my Chief Superintendent but on an informal basis.

CROSS-EXAMINED/

12 noon

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: When you met with Hamilton as you have described were you able to form a view of him? - In the early years?

Yes? - He certainly was maybe I would say a bit unusual, possibly in appearance, but that was basically it.

Did you find him an interesting person? - Not possibly a very forthright person. When he spoke to you on occasions, and basically when he spoke to me, if I can use the word, a very boring person.

How did he speak? - It was always very monotone, with virtually no expression at all in it.

Did he appear a happy person? - No, he didn't, no.

Did you at some time move to Dunblane as the Sub-Divisional Officer there? - Yes I did.

Can you say when that was? - I moved to Dunblane in 1987 -- 1987 or the early part of 1988. I think it was 1987.

In 1988 did you become aware of complaint against Mr. Hamilton in relation to the running of the camp at Inchmoan Island? - Yes, I did.

And did you become aware that he was unhappy with the treatment that he had received at the hands of Central Scotland Police? - Yes, he was.

How did you come to have knowledge of his dissatisfaction? - He visited me at Dunblane Police Office about the middle of August when the camp had finished and made references to the officers who had visited his camp at Inchmoan.

Did you become aware that he had taken matters up with the Deputy Chief Constable? - Not at that particular time. That was the early stages. At that particular time I didn't think he had spoken with the Deputy Chief Constable or the Chief/

Chief Constable.

And can you tell us just a little bit more of your dialogue with him at this early stage? - I was on leave and came back at the beginning of August, and because I was responsible for that particular area I was briefed by the officers, and my sergeants, and they informed me that there had been a complaint made against Hamilton by boys at the camp. The complaint was generally just the living conditions at the camp, and there was nothing of a physical nature against Hamilton. He came to my office probably the week after that and asked me if I knew of the incident, and at that time I was only aware of just generalisations and I said no, I didn't know of it, and I would find out, which I then made more enquiry into.

And you eventually became aware of some communication from Hamilton to the Deputy Chief Constable; is that right? - Yes, I did. He started showing a lot of concern about the way the police officers had handled their visit to the island. He started off, and then sent letters to me, indicating the type of things that he was doing at the camp. He sent receipts to me to show the type of food that he was buying. In the initial times he said he was making no complaint at all other than the fact he didn't feel the police officers were qualified to make a judgment. At that time I was aware also it was Strathclyde Police area, and the Strathclyde Police were dealing with the matter.

Did you have contact with anybody in Strathclyde Police? - Yes, I did. I spoke with the person who was in charge of the investigation. It was a Detective Chief Inspector Hay.

Can you tell the Inquiry the nature of any discussion you had with him? - I asked him if there was anything other than what I had heard in relation to the complaint of the conditions, the conditions of the clothing that the boys were wearing, and he informed me that there was nothing further other than that, other than the living conditions, there was no complaints of abuse of any nature.

Eventually the Fiscal at Dumbarton marked the papers with the comment "No Proceedings". From your own information did that surprise you or not? - No, /

No, it didn't surprise me at all. I think the Detective Chief Inspector prior to it going felt that there would be no proceedings taken.

Were you eventually asked by the Deputy Chief Constable to perform any form of enquiry in relation to Mr. Hamilton? - Yes, I was.

Can you tell us about that please? - He had written a letter to the Chief Constable making complaints against the two officers. The letter in itself indicated that he was not making a complaint against the police officers, but the Deputy Chief Constable then directed me to make a preliminary investigation into the officers who had visited the island.

And did you have further cause to interview Hamilton in the course of that enquiry? - I spoke with the officers, I spoke with Chief Inspector Hay. I then spoke with Hamilton, who was visiting me almost on a daily basis and sending letters.

And I wonder if you could have before you document D11K, which is otherwise known as DCD11.

MR. TAYLOR: It would appear, sir, that the Production is not readily to hand. I think the officer has just gone for it.

LORD CULLEN: I think it is there now.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. TAYLOR: I think this is a report dated the 11th of October, 1988 and it appears to be from yourself to the Chief Superintendent of 'A' Division; is that right? - Yes, it was.

And is this the report which you prepared following the investigation you had carried out at the request of the Deputy Chief Constable? - Yes, it was.

And I think you concluded that there was nothing amiss in the manner in which Constables Gunn and Duncan had gone about their enquiries? - That is correct.

Now, I don't think the explanation and your/your informal report were acceptable to Mr. Hamilton, and he subsequently went on to make a formal complaint; isn't that correct? - The day before I put the report in I spoke to Hamilton again about the camp, the actions of the police officers involved, and he at that particular time again still wished to make no formal complaint, and I reported that as well, in my report.

I think also at some point you were shown some photographs by Hamilton; isn't that correct? - Yes.

Can you recall when that was? - Probably two or three years later, probably about 1992.

Do you know what prompted him to send these to you? - Since this particular camp in 1988 Hamilton started off sending letters, and then there was copies of letters. He sent to me any particular letter he sent to any person, whether it was a Chief Constable or a Member of Parliament, he would send me a copy of it. Primarily they were informative letters. He also gave me photographs that he had taken of the camps.

I think you also became aware of an incident in 1992 at Dunblane High School; is that right? - Yes, that is correct.

And that was a situation where I think two or three children were found in Dunblane in the evening; is that correct? - That is correct, yes.

Were you aware of there having been complaints made about the manner in which Mr. Hamilton took other photographs, apart from the ones which you have referred to? - I was aware that there was an investigation by the Family Unit -- the Family Unit were investigating complaints with regard to photographs.

And I think your name also appeared at some point in a memorandum which was circulated by Mr. Hamilton; is that right? - Yes it did.

Can you tell us the circumstances of that? - It was a circulation concerning the starting up of a boys' club, and apart from the normal invitation/invitation to parents, on the back he had put contacts of persons concerning his club, and my name, along with I think the House of Commons, appeared on it, and also the Central Region.

And were you happy that your name appear on that form? - I was unaware it was on that.

How did you learn it was appearing in such a way? - Mr. Flett from the Legal and Admin. at Central Region contacted me, phoned me up about it.

And once you found out what steps did you take? - It was to have it removed.

And did you speak to Mr. Hamilton in that regard? - Yes, I did. I asked him why he had used it, and he said it was only meant as a contact, and it wasn't there to show approval of his camp, his boys' camp.

Over the period it would appear you have had quite a lot of contact with Mr. Hamilton; is that fair to say? - Yes, I have.

Were you aware Mr. Hamilton was the holder of a Firearms Certificate? - Yes, I was.

Did you at any time in the course of your conversations with Hamilton and your interaction with him have any grounds for concern that he should be the holder of a Firearms Certificate? - None at all.

No re-examination.

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, I hope that the Press will respect the privacy of the next witness, whose evidence will be helpful to the Inquiry, who has volunteered to give evidence, but who still has children under 12 about whom some of this evidence -- about one of whom this evidence will be given. It would be I think unfortunate if her name were revealed publicly, widely, following her evidence today. But I do propose to call her nevertheless since I do think her evidence will be of assistance. She is Sandra McNally.

LORD CULLEN: Well, I hope that what you have said will be taken account of by the members of the/the Press.

MR. BONOMOY: It will take a moment for arrangements to be made for her to come in.

SANDRA McNALLY, (38), Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I think you live in Stirling? - Yes.

In 1991 I think one of your family, a son, went to a boys' club? - That is correct.

Where did that take place? - It took place in Stirling High School gymnasium.

How did you find out about it? - From a friend of my son's at school who had asked him if he would like to go.

Do you know how the friend found out about it? - Word of mouth, I believe.

And was your son keen to go? - Yes, very keen.

The very first night he was there did you go to collect him? - Yes, I did. I dropped him off and picked him up.

And what time were you there to pick him up? - I can't recall the exact time, but it would be 7.30-ish or quarter to 8.

What age was he at this time? - He was seven.

Were there other people there picking up their children? - There were a few other mothers there, yes.

Could you tell how many people were in charge of the club? - No. I could see one man, and I assumed he had taken it.

And did you see him talking to other parents who were there? - Yes.

Did you speak to him? - Yes, I did.

And/

And what was the subject of the conversation? - I asked him who he was working for, if he was employed by Central Regional Council, and who he was affiliated to, because I didn't like the look of him.

Did you get satisfactory answers to these questions? - He explained who he was and what he did, but I wasn't satisfied with his answers.

Well, first of all, who did he say he was? - Well, he said he was Thomas Hamilton and that he had been running boys' clubs in the area for over 20 years, and had lots of experience of this type of work.

And did he say how these clubs -- rather did he say what sort of activities the clubs went in for? - Yes. We had a conversation about the type of games and exercises, and what the 'ethos' was, as he put it, of his clubs, and what his plans were, and what he wanted to do with the children when he had them there.

And what was the ethos of his clubs? - They did gymnastics and games in a disciplined environment.

And was this conversation at Stirling High School? - Yes. Actually we walked from Stirling High School across a park near the school towards my home, and the conversation took place during that time.

And did you part company with him at your home? - Well, I actually walked past my home because I was a bit worried that he would know where I stayed, because he just made me feel so uncomfortable; and I had two children with me.

Was the other child even younger? - Yes.

Did he give you something? - Yes, he gave me a video.

Did you play it? - Yes, I did. I played it almost as soon as I got in.

What/

12.20 p.m.

What did you make of it? - I was quite disturbed by the content of the video and it didn't seem to me to be a normal type of video at all. It was unnatural. It wasn't what one would have expected to see I don't think of children's activities, especially sporting activities in a club.

Can you be a bit more specific about what you saw in it that disturbed you? - I last saw the video four years ago.

I appreciate that. The reason I am asking you, if I can help you, is that I am going to invite Lord Cullen to look at some extracts from videos and I would like to see if they were similar to the sort of thing you saw on the video? - Right. The video was taken in a school or I thought perhaps it was the University actually but I am not sure and it alternated between boys playing football and boys having lunch and taking part in other sporting activities. The boys in the video all had shorts on at the start of the video and at the end of the video they had trunks on and they were all topless. The video camera itself concentrated for long spells of time on the boys between their waist and their knees and the boys were lined up as for a picture that would be taken for a football team and the camera moved along the row of the boys' shorts basically and back again and seemed to linger. The children towards the end of the video to me appeared to be doing exercises, physical exercises, that were way beyond the capabilities of six and seven year olds and they looked exhausted.

What sort of exercises? - They were hanging from ropes with rings on the end. It was an old-fashioned type, well I would say old-fashioned type, of..... I forget what they are called but they were hanging from these ropes and rings by their arms and they had to pull themselves up and I think it was clear that they just were not capable of it and they were being made to go on.

Was some of the video shot outdoors? - yes, bits of it were.

And that is the part you first told us about/about where they were running about and then having a picnic or something? - No, they seemed to sort of stop for lunch. I think the video was taken at one of the summer camps or summer schools and during lunch the children were all extremely quiet, didn't speak to each other. They seemed to be just eating and drinking and at parts of the video it was like Mark Bolan or T-Rex music in the background. There was no other noise, just normal conversation or the buzz you would expect from children who were having lunch together.

Did Mr. Hamilton say anything in his conversation with you about your own boy? - Yes, he said to me that from his first meeting with Dominic he was very good at sports and had been very good in the class that evening. He asked me if Dominic would like to go to one of his summer camps and he also said that if I was working he would be more than happy to come and pick my child up and take my child to whatever venue he was going to. I just think he had sort of..... he was more interested than he should have been in my son after having met him for like an hour.

The parts of the video that showed the children eating, were they eating indoors? - Yes, it was like a dining hall.

And you referred to them as being silent. Did they appear to be sort of strictly disciplined or.....? - Yes, I would have said that they were possibly frightened.

Now, having seen the video, what did you decide to do? - Well, I decided to phone, well, a member of the family to come round and have a look at the video as well because my husband wasn't in and I was concerned about the content and I also didn't want to sort of over-react to something if there was nothing really there and I wanted to be sure that my gut feeling was correct and I was sure at the time it was. My sister-in-law came round to watch the video.

Did she agree with you? - Well, yes, I think she felt the same way.

Now, what did you then do about it? - I had a friend who had a friend who was in the police/police force and I phoned her up and asked if she would take the video and have a look at it.

Who was the police officer? - I can't honestly remember her name. I don't know.

First name? - I think it was Elaine.

Do you know if she was a sergeant or a constable? - I don't know. She was just an acquaintance.

Did she take the video? - Yes, she did.

Did she bring it back to you? - Yes, it was returned.

What was her reaction to it? - Well, she advised me not to send my child back to the club and I think from what she said there was nothing illegal in the video.

Did you send him back? - No, he didn't go back at all.

What did you do with the video? - I got my husband to return it to Mr. Hamilton at Stirling High approximately a week or two weeks later.

Did you have any further contact with the police? - Yes, I think at that time I did actually get the police out but I can't be 100 per cent sure because the police have been up more recently when I had received some correspondence from him but I am sure I did report it at the time and I also wrote a letter to the Education Department of Stirling Council.

It has not been possible to trace the police officers that you spoke to. Are you confident you did speak to police about this? - Well, I am confident that I spoke to the police in 1995. They were actually at the house.

I will come to that but at the time we are talking about, 1991? - Well, I was sure that I had or I feel sure that I did at the time.

For/

For example, did the police come and speak to Dominic, do you remember? - Yes, Dominic was questioned. He was asked if anything had happened and if he had been touched.

What did he say? - He said No, he hadn't been.

Now, you said you wrote to Central Regional Council?
- Yes.

What was the subject of your correspondence? - My main area of concern was that since the evening that my son had attended the club I had found out that there was quite a lot known about this man and I was writing to ask why, if they knew so much about him and were concerned about his behaviour, they were allowing him to obtain lets to run boys' clubs.

Now, did you get a reply to that letter? - I didn't get a reply. I didn't get a written reply. I received a phone call.

From whom? - I don't know who it was from. I think it might have been from someone in the Legal Department.

And what was the subject of the phone call? - It was that no offence had been committed and there were some concerns and there had been numerous complaints and really just advising me not to let my son go back.

So that was the advice the Council gave you? - Yes, as well.

Did you hear from Mr. Hamilton at that time? - I did. I received a letter from him. I am not sure of the time span but it was after I had written to complain and also in the letter I had complained about my son being photographed with his top off without parental consent or knowledge.

That was the complaint to the Council? - Yes, that was all contained in my letter.

You then got a letter from Hamilton? - I did. I got a letter. Now, it was probably three or four weeks later.

What/

What did it say? - It said that I could have access to any photographic material that had been taken of my son.

And did that letter concern you at all? - Well, I just didn't want anything else to do with him and I didn't want to receive any more correspondence from him and I just put it away with everything else. I kept the letters because I thought there might be a problem and, you know, I would have them to refer to.

And do you still have them? - No, I destroyed them all last November.

Well, were you concerned at all by the thought that Hamilton knew about your complaint? - Yes, I was because I thought "Well, who has told him that I have complained?".

Now, have you heard from Hamilton since? - By letter again.

How often? - I have had several letters over the years.

What has been the subject of these letters? - Just that he has been running boys' clubs in the area for 20 years and would my son like to go back.

So they were specifically directed to you? - Yes.

They were not circular letters that we have heard so much about in the Inquiry? - Well, I don't know if they were circular letters or not.

Well, were they "Dear Mrs. McNally" for example? - I can't remember exactly. The most recent letter stated that there was a lot of rumour and innuendo about him and it said that we as parents must stamp out this type of false rumour and allegation. That was the vein that the letter ran in. It went on for a full page.

When was the last one? - It was in 1995.

Do you know when in 1995? - Roughly after/after the summer.

Did you contact the police? - Yes, I did.

Did you show them the letter? - Yes, I did.

Did they tell you the situation? - Yes, they took the letter away with them.

Did they come back again? - No.

Did they say anything to you about whether any offence had been committed? - No. Well, no offence had been committed. I was just concerned about the content of the letter and that this man was still writing this sort of thing to people.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. JONES: I wonder if you would look at a document please which I think is the letter that you wrote to the Council. It is DCRC-AL-FI. It will be given to you. It is in Folder H(V) Continued and it is not separately numbered? - (No answer).

MR. JONES: Sir, these letters are not in any intelligible order in the folder and therefore I have arranged to have a photo-copy shown to Mrs. McNally.

LORD CULLEN: Yes, is that the letter of the 6th December 1992?

MR. JONES: Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. JONES: Do you recognise this as a photo-copy of the letter you wrote to the Council? - Yes. Well, I can't remember the exact content but.....

Do you recognise your writing? - Yes, I do.

And do you recognise your signature at the end? - Yes.

And it has your address at the time? - Yes.

And/

And the letter is dated 6th December 1992? - Yes.

So does that refresh your memory about the date of this incident? I think you said earlier it was 1991 according to your recollection? - Sorry. When your son is seven you think "What school year is it?" really.

It doesn't matter at all but the letter will show the correct date presumably? - Yes, I agree with that.

I think that if you just read it for yourself, you set out in the first paragraph the background to this letter which you have already explained to us in your evidence. You need not read it out. If you read it for yourself you will see that and do you then go on to say in the second paragraph, just over half-way down the page, "Parents naturally think that there could be nowhere safer for their child than a club which meets in a legitimate venue like a school and I am concerned that young children as young as P3 are being exposed to possible risk from this man". Then you go on to say "However, I have discovered from Dominic, and this is my main complaint, that he had been told to remove his top and was in this vulnerable state of undress when this man video filmed him for several minutes without my consent or knowledge. I strongly object to this and wish my complaint to be recorded officially." Do you see that? - Yes.

And I think you say a little more about that but that was clearly why you had written to the Council? - Yes.

Did you make the same complaint as you have stated here when you contacted the police? - That would have been my complaint but I am now wondering if I have actually contacted the police at that point or if I have spoken, if you can't find any record of it. I am unsure about that.

You say as a result of this letter somebody from you think the Legal Department in the Council contacted you? - Yes, by phone.

And do you see looking at the top of the letter towards the left there is a handwritten note "Tel'd"?

"Tel'd", presumably telephoned, "and discussed. Please file". Do you see that? - Yes, I do.

So that seems to be a record of that telephone conversation having taken place? - Yes.

Now, do you have any way of knowing what was then done by the Council following upon your telephone call? - No, as far as I am aware there was nothing else done. There was no more contact with myself. I just stopped my son going.

That is really what I mean. There was no contact with you but you have no way of knowing what the Council did? - No, I didn't receive any more correspondence.

There was no correspondence with you? - No.

But what they may have then done internally or in relation to this complaint, you don't know? - No, I don't know what the outcome was at all.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: When the video was given to you by Mr. Hamilton, was it done quite openly? - Yes.

Did you form the impression that he expected you to be impressed by what you saw in the video? - Did I form that impression?

Yes? - Yes, I did.

Do you still have the letter in front of you which you wrote to the Council? - Yes.

I think we see in the first paragraph you say that you thought it "questionable". Maybe about 12 lines down? - Yes.

That is how you described it at the time? - Yes.

And the police officer to whom you gave the video to view, this was a police officer who was a friend of a friend? - Yes, it was done informally, the handing over of the video.

This/

This was not an official complaint? - No, it wasn't. I just asked her could she have a look at it.

In her private capacity? - Yes.

Not as a police officer? - Yes.

No re-examination.

12.40 p.m.

WILLIAM DRUMMOND (32), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: You are a Constable with Central Scotland Police? - That is correct.

Based at Tullibody? - Yes, that is correct.

How long in the police? - 18 years.

In March, April and indeed right up until now have you been part of the major incident inquiry team? - Yes, I have.

I think that you were asked to consider a number of video tapes recovered from Mr. Hamilton's house? - Yes, that is correct.

I think there were in total 37 of these videos recovered? - Yes, that is correct.

I can simply give a reference, sir -- DHE/44; I think they all have numbers? - They were individually numbered.

What was the range of numbers? - From 8 up to and including No. 44.

So no numbers 1 to 7? - No numbers 1 to 7, no.

Was there anything with each tape to indicate what was on it? - Yes, there was a piece of card, paper, which I presumed to be in Hamilton's handwriting which indicated the possible contents of each tape.

Did each tape have its own individual cardboard box?
- Yes.

Just like any video has? - Just like any small video cassette tape.

Were they all VHS tapes? - Yes, they were Sony Hi-8.

Small tapes? - Yes.

They/

They were for home videos therefore? - Yes.

At least home videos in the sense that they were done by an individual on a camcorder and were not commercially produced?
- Yes, that is correct.

Did you look through all of them? - Every single one, yes.

Did you then try to identify a part from each that would be representative of what would be on the rest of the video tape? - Yes, I did that later on.

Did you make up one compilation showing little more than snippets from each one? - Yes, that is correct.

Would you look at the video tape which is beside you, DHE57; is that the synopsis tape? - Yes, it is.

I think it runs for just over an hour, an hour and two minutes? - Approximately an hour and two minutes.

I think there is a feature that comes on the screen at the end of the snippet from each video to indicate that it is moving on to the next one? - Yes, to distinguish each snip.

MR. BONOMY: Now, sir, I am going to ask that this be played but the tapes contain film which identifies or from which individual children could be identified and it is not in the public interest that these need to be seen openly by members of the public attending the Inquiry. However, it is appropriate that representatives of the parties with an interest ought to see the material which you are being invited to consider. I also don't think it necessary that the whole of this be viewed by you, sir, in the public context of the Inquiry Hearings and I think it may not be necessary for you to view any more than is going to be shown just now but it is intended to lead more evidence from expert witnesses in due course who will have been invited to view this video -- for example, psychiatrists and psychologists and therefore it is appropriate/appropriate that the subject matter that they will consider should be seen by the representatives of the parties to the Inquiry. The other problem that presents itself is that there is sound on it and the sound could be distressing to persons involved in this Inquiry so in my submission it is inappropriate that the sound should be played publicly when it is being considered by you just now, sir. What I am going to invite you to do is consider the film for the balance of this morning's hearing, decide whether you have seen enough and while it is being played I invite you to order that the larger screens round the larger hall should be turned off and the sound also turned off.

LORD CULLEN: Has anyone got any representation about that, does anyone want to say anything about that?

MISS DUNLOP: I think the only question I have which my learned friend may be able to answer is whether a copy of this would be available to be looked at by representatives; I am thinking of hearing what had been said to the children.

MR. BONOMY: I agree it is necessary for parties representing to see the whole film and to listen to it or at least to see at least part of it and to listen to it and I think the same applies to you, sir. I consider that you should also hear more of it in private at a later stage.

LORD CULLEN: Does that meet your concern?

MISS DUNLOP: Yes sir.

LORD CULLEN: I am content to accept what you suggest, Mr. Bonomy, so we will proceed on that basis and perhaps the necessary arrangements can now be made with regard to the sight and sound.

At this point the video tape was part played.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMY:
Could you just stop it there. How much of the tapes have we seen so far; is that just one tape? - That is just one tape.

Can/

Can you confirm to me that that shows a number of locations, in fact, and a number of different occasions? - Yes, that is correct.

But certainly some of that can be identified as the Queen Anne School in Dunfermline? - That is correct.

Can you confirm that these extracts are showing young boys in a gymnasium much of the time? - That is correct.

In groups carrying out exercises also? - Yes.

And in many instances standing in a pose with the chest out, hands on the hips and really forcing their chest out and their shoulders back? - Yes, very much so.

Looking very tense? - Yes.

And latterly as we watched it the camera was concentrating on two boys carrying out an exercise? - Yes.

And one of the boys seemed to be attracting the cameraman's attention? - Yes.

He was focussing on him carrying out the exercises from a number of different angles? - Yes.

Focussing on various parts of the body? - Yes.

The boys, however, did appear to be doing legitimate gymnastic exercises? - Yes.

They were not doing anything that you would describe as improper in any of the snippets we have seen? - No.

And a number of them were wearing trunks? - Yes.

If we were to view right through this would we see a whole series of similar film? - Yes.

In/

In some instances would we even see boys with bathing trunks running about outside? - Yes.

At a summer camp in Dunblane High School? - Yes.

I think in one instance would we see some concentration on the back of a young boy who was more or less just standing extending his arms? - Yes.

With the camera concentrating for a considerable period on his back? - Yes.

Is it also fair to say that a number of these extracts show boys engaged in events like relay races and games in the gymnasium where they are tussling for things, running from one corner of the gym to another? - Yes, that is correct.

And indeed some show them playing football? - Yes.

And you also see boys exercising on rings and indeed doing somersaults and supporting themselves by their hands and arms on a pair of rings? - Yes.

Did these exercises appear to you to be within the capabilities of the boys doing them or was it actually difficult to tell? - I would say it was difficult to tell; however, it was quite strenuous to myself to have boys of that age doing that but I couldn't really say for certain.

Can you tell me how many hours of film you actually had to watch to compile the extract? - Approximately over 80.

Is there any way of telling the period over which this was shot? - Only from each cassette box.

What was the period? - Approximately from 1991 up to and including I think 1993, the end of 1993.

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, obviously if it is felt necessary you would be able to continue now to view this but you may also consider that in so far as/

as it is necessary for your determination of the issue in this Inquiry any further viewing might be done privately and equally the parties here will have an opportunity whenever they wish to view and listen to the rest of that tape.

LORD CULLEN: Thank you. Are there any questions that any party wants to ask of this witness.

No cross-examination.

LORD CULLEN: Are there any applications that any party wants to make in regard to this tape? Perhaps that could be discussed if necessary with Mr. Bonomy over lunch if it is necessary. Do I take it you want to display any more of the tape at this stage or do you wish to wait until the afternoon?

MR. BONOMOY: Even in the afternoon I wasn't intending to unless you felt it was necessary to do so, sir.

LORD CULLEN: I don't think it is necessary for the time being but if any of the parties wanted to have anything shown after lunch perhaps they would let Mr. Bonomy know that is the position.

The witness was asked to remain until after lunch.

After/

After an adjournment for lunch.

1.50 p.m.

LORD CULLEN: I understand that none of the parties want any more of that tape played at this stage; is that right? Very well, we can release the officer and proceed to the next witness.

ALISTAIR FRANCIS KELLY, Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: I live in St. Andrews.

What is your occupation? - I am now retired. I was until the end of March Regional Reporter to the Children's Panel for Fife Regional Council, and since I have been retired I am a writer.

For how long had you been the Reporter to the Children's Panel before retiral? - Since 1975 reorganisation; and could I say at the time of my retiral I was the longest-serving Reporter to the Children's Panel, having been a Reporter since 1970.

I understand you had some involvement with details arising out of a summer camp held at Dunblane High School by Thomas Hamilton in 1992? - That is correct.

Can I ask you please to have in front of you document DET2-2, which in folders is D23J(ii)?

- Yes, I already have this report actually in front of me.

So I take it you recognise that report, then? - Yes. I obtained a copy of the report when I heard of the incident in Dunblane.

Sorry. When you say you heard of the incident, you mean the incident this year? - Yes.

When did you first receive that report that you have in front of you? - I received the report -- and it has, as you will see, on the bottom right-hand of the first page "Received 17th July, 1992". That would be the date I received it.

And who did you receive it from? - I received it direct from Policewoman Connie Metcalfe, from/from the Child Protection Unit in Dunfermline. What is the subject matter of the report? - The subject matter of the report, as you can see in the first paragraph of the first page, was regarding children that attended a summer camp at Dunblane High School, Dunblane, commencing on the 28th of June, 1992, and run by Thomas Hamilton.

Now, the report refers in particular to an incident on the evening of Monday the 29th of June, 1992 in respect of three boys.

And without giving names, what had occurred in respect of those three boys? - The three boys concerned had in fact left Dunblane High School in the evening without permission, as it were -- had absconded or run away.

And what were they doing there in the evening -- you said the boys left the school in the evening. Why were the boys at the school in the evening? - They were attending the summer camp run by Hamilton. They had arrived, because the camp commenced, on I think it would be the Sunday, 28th June.

And what time do you say they left the camp? - If I could simply refer -- it must be in the late evening they left the camp. I am looking at one of the statements.

Could you indicate which statement you are looking at please? Perhaps by the page number would be the easiest, to avoid giving the name? - Sorry, I am looking at my own particular copy.....

Perhaps the easiest thing would be if I could refer you to, of all the statements in there, that from the reporting policewoman, Policewoman Metcalfe? - Yes. I was looking through a child's statement, but I could have a look at Policewoman Metcalfe's statement, if you just give me a second or two -- do you mean her actual statement?

Yes. I think it is the last of all the statements? - Yes. I have it here in front of me. I am just trying to find a time.

I was more concerned with the date on which it occurred? - Sorry, my understanding is it occurred on the 29th June, 1992.

And/

And looking at the second page there of Police Constable Metcalfe's statement, in the third paragraph, she states that a police officer on patrol in Dunblane had come across the three nine-year old boys dressed in their night clothes seated beside a public call box, and the boys explained to the police officers that they had contacted their parents, and they were on their way to uplift them; do you see that? - I am looking at the third paragraph, and as far as I can see the third paragraph begins with the child's name.

That is the third paragraph of the second page of the statement? Is that the copy that has been put in front of you in court today or your own copy that you are looking at? - It is my own copy.

Just in case there is any difference....? - Yes, I have got it now, sorry, I beg your pardon.

And you see there the paragraph I have referred to, which records about the three nine-year old boys, dressed in their night clothes, having made a call to their parents? - That is right, I see that.

And you see that three paragraphs down below that P.C. Metcalfe says that she contacted the witnesses, and one of the parents had expressed her worries about the running of the summer camp, the lack of supervision, and the circumstances surrounding her son's absconding from the camp? - I would agree with that, yes.

Looking at the next page and the fifth paragraph, do you see there that Police Constable Metcalfe has said "It is also clear that any contact by telephone, and parental access, is discouraged, and there has been a lack of supervision. Mr. Hamilton, it would appear, was the only adult with 18 children, nine years and under"? - Yes.

And the paragraph commencing at the foot of the page, she says "It is also disconcerting that young boys, dressed in night clothes, have been wandering in a strange town, with Hamilton either failing to report them running away, or having been unable to do so because that would mean leaving the other/other boys totally unsupervised"? - That is correct.

What did you do, having received the report? - If I can simply explain why I received the report, in the first instance, and then explain what I did thereafter, it might be helpful to the Inquiry?

Right. Tell me why did you receive the report in the first place? - I received the report because I was the Regional Reporter to the Children's Panel, and in my duties as the Reporter to the Children's Panel I do receive reports concerning children who are thought to require compulsory care. Now, in this particular instance the children concerned, I felt, were certainly not requiring compulsory care, and indeed I considered that they should not even be considered as having been referred to me on that kind of matter, because of the particular situation as described in the report; because the report in essence focussed on what had occurred in the summer camp and focussed on a complaint, as it were, in relation to Thomas Hamilton's activities. Now, this particular report -- if I may continue -- this particular report would be described in essence as a plain paper report, to use the jargon that was used within the Children's Panel system as far as the functioning of Reporters is concerned. In the role of the Reporter, if I may describe it that way, the Reporter receives reports regarding children requiring perhaps care and attention, perhaps due to other needs, such as children committing offences. Now, plain paper reports in the context of care and attention often were reports where the offence as such was considered not to constitute a crime, as it were, or was something less than a crime, because one of the categories dealt with by the Reporter is a category which is defined in the Social Work (Scotland) Act, Section 32(2)(c), and talks about lack of parental control likely to cause unnecessary suffering. So that is a little less than child abuse as described in Section 12 of the Children and Young Persons' (Scotland) Act, 1937. So I received this report in the context that police officers -- that there was an agreement in Fife that police officers would forward to me any report regarding any child where there was an issue of either child abuse or perhaps less -- neglect or something less than criminal neglect, / neglect, lack of parental care. And the particular section of the police which Policewoman Connie Metcalfe was attached to was the Child Protection Unit at Dunfermline, which had a specialised interest in the concerns of children. Now, having decided that in no way could this report be described as reflecting on the care of the children as far as their parents were concerned -- in no way could they be considered really, in essence, as being referred; and the report in essence was reported to me for information purposes. Now, I felt that in the circumstances the normal reaction to receiving such a report is simply to say "Interesting, I will put it aside, but there is nothing more that I can do". Now, in a sense I stepped out of my role as a Reporter to the Children's Panel -- if I could describe the functions of the Reporter very briefly in terms of using the Kilbrandon description of the Reporter as someone having similarities to a public prosecutor. So stepping out of that kind of role I decided that I couldn't set aside this report, that I was so concerned regarding what had been described -- and you have read to me passages from Policewoman Metcalfe's statement on that, which is particularly concerning -- that I stepped out of role, and I contacted initially the police in Dunfermline at a pretty high level, Chief Superintendent Elder, and I also contacted ultimately, or quite quickly, the Education Department, and spoke to the person who had responsibility principally for school lets and general surveillance of youth work in out-of-school hours.

Well,/

Well, that is quite a long answer. Can I deal with things one bit at a time now? - Right.

What was it in that report which gave you cause for concern to take it out of the ordinary? - I was concerned initially that three young boys were found in the streets of Dunfermline (sic), attired only in night clothing and in some distress.

In what way did that give you cause for concern? - In a strange town these children could have been placed at risk. I am not suggesting that Dunblane is the kind of place that children would be at risk, but what I am suggesting is a lot of traffic goes through Dunblane, and I was concerned that these children might have been at some kind of risk.

Is that risk from Hamilton or risk from someone else? - Risk from someone else, in the circumstances of their being on the streets. But I was also concerned at why they had run away, and the circumstances as described to me that were occurring at the summer camp, and these circumstances were (1), the lack of supervision, and someone in charge of 18 children overnight -- in charge alone. I was also concerned, on the same theme, of lack of supervision, that Hamilton was also responsible for doing the cooking for the camp, albeit that he had help during the day from, I understand, a Mr. Brown. I was concerned also at the arrangements for the showers, and perhaps as a reporter one has a rather suspicious mind. I was concerned regarding that. And I think reading through the children's statements, there was a little unease amongst the children regarding these kind of arrangements. I was very concerned at the discouragement of the parents from contact with their children, taking into account these children were 9 or 10 years of age, during a 10-day period in a camp. For example, they were discouraged from telephone contact -- either the parents contacting them by telephone or the children contacting their parents by telephone.

Now, one of the matters you mentioned when you were explaining the scope of your authority was the consideration that children might be harmed by lack of parental care. This incident occurred while/while the children were in the care of someone other than their parents. Did that impinge upon the power that you had? - Yes, of course it did.

In what way? - Hamilton claimed to have the children in loco parentis. I have in my folder here a circular which Hamilton had circulated to the families prior to the camp in which he explicitly claims to be acting -- and I am not quoting him verbatim -- acting as a good father, and I think he used the phrase "in loco parentis".

But in what way was the fact that he wasn't their parent -- in what way did that affect your powers in relation to the incident? - Because in a strict legal sense they could have been considered as lacking parental care.

Well, they were in the custody of a third party? - They were in the custody of a third party. For example, another analogy would be that if a child were in the care of a foster carer, the foster carer is acting in loco parentis, and if the child were out of the control of that particular person they would be in the condition of being beyond parental control; or if the foster carer lacked proper care of the child, suffering lack of parental care.

Would that help you to approach the situation, to say this might be viewed as a lack of parental care? - In the particular circumstances of this particular case and how I treated these particular children, I thought it was unfair that these particular children should be categorised as having been referred to me. However I wanted to focus on the activities of Hamilton himself.

Turning to those activities, you have mentioned that the showers were one area where you thought the children were concerned? - Yes.

Overall was the concern arising from the children or from the parents? - I think one particular statement, not from one of the boys who ran away, but a fourth boy -- and I am speaking from memory -- of an expression of unease. Can you give me a minute whilst I try to trace it?

I think I may be able to help you find that/that statement if you use the copy that has been put in front of you. It may be a statement beginning on the eighth page? - The copy I have been given doesn't seem to have numbers on it.

No, it doesn't. They just have to be counted? - I beg your pardon.

Without giving the name, perhaps the easiest way to say it is: is that the statement of a boy whose date of birth is 10th August, 1982? - Yes.

And this boy, who is not one of the three that ran away from the summer camp.....? - That is the one who wasn't one of the three.

And is that the boy that you considered was the one that was concerned by what was happening? - Could I read it to you, the actual page?

Yes, please? - Now, I am not sure of the page -- it must be the next page, page 9, perhaps -- "We had to shower twice a day in the morning and at night. We went into a changing room. There was nowhere private to get undressed. Mr. Hamilton came to the showers to give us shampoo, and made sure everyone washed themselves. Then he would watch us dry and make sure that we had done that properly". I was reading into that particular statement -- and this is how I read it at the time -- that there was some concern expressed by the child, reading between the lines. That was my interpretation.

Now, in your earlier answer you said that although you did not treat this as a referral, there was matters within it that put it out of the ordinary, as far as you were concerned? - Absolutely.

Were these matters the ones that you have already referred to? - Yes.

Are you able to say what your underlying concern was arising out of this report? - My underlying concern was that children were being placed at risk unnecessarily by someone who was organising a summer camp and running a boys' club in Dunfermline./

Dunfermline.

And what sort of risk did you consider they were at? -
The risk related principally to a lack of proper supervision of the boys. That is the first point. The second point, of the attitude of the person running the camp to his charges -- an attitude of a lack of proper responsibility and care. For example, one of the parents, I recollect in a statement made by the parent, suggested that Hamilton was neither up nor down regarding the three boys who had been missing on the evening of the 29th June, 1992. I was concerned regarding -- and this was a feature both at the camp and the boys' club -- I was concerned that there was discouragement from parental involvement and participation, if I can put it that way, or even parental interest in what was actually going on, which aroused my suspicions. I was also rather concerned, as I have just indicated, regarding the arrangements for the showers.

Now, you said earlier that following your consideration of this report you had a meeting? - Yes.

And that meeting I think you said was attended by Chief Superintendent Elder? - And.....

And also the Director of Education? - No. It was Mr. David Somerville, the Senior Assistant Director of Education.

And what was the purpose of that meeting? - I can't remember whether I actually saw them both individually first, and then the meeting was the culmination of my seeing them individually, or if I simply contacted them by telephone and we arranged to have the meeting. The purpose of the meeting was to consider in detail, and principally to alert Mr. David Somerville, to the concerns expressed in Policewoman Metcalfe's report. In fact, the meeting discussed in quite a lot of detail the content of the report. I needed the police's co-operation in order to make these facts known to the education authority.

And/

And that was one of the purposes of your meeting? - Yes. Now, why I can't recollect as to whether I actually had a meeting with Chief Superintendent Elder first was that I haven't available to me my diary of 1992. I kept a strict log book of what I did, and that would have recorded whether I had had a meeting or not prior to that meeting; but I certainly spoke to them both prior to the meeting, expressing concern, so that there was a bit of preparation before the meeting.

And this meeting was in the context where you were not treating the matter as an official referral? - That is correct. I wanted to concentrate on the activities of Thomas Hamilton, his summer camp and his boys' clubs.

Could I ask you to have in front of you please Document DFRC34, which also has the reference D65 in Volume H(v)? - If it might save you time, I do have possibly the document you are referring to in front of me, my own copies -- but I don't have them with your numbers.

Perhaps just for the avoidance of doubt we can wait till we get our one. Do you recognise that document? - Yes. That is the letter or the memorandum I wrote to the Director of Education, and it is "For the attention of Mr. David Sommerville, Senior Assistant Director of Education".

And in the first paragraph you refer to the meeting which you have already discussed? - That is correct.

And the further paragraphs give initially a brief summary of the event that had led to your concern? - Yes. It is in essence a brief summary of Police Woman Metcalfe's report.

You see at the top of the second page you have stated that the fact the children came to no harm is no guarantee of children remaining unharmed if a similar event associated with this kind of summer camp, managed in like manner, re-occurred. "I feel that the events of 29/6/92 in Dunblane in a sense serve as a warning. If the kind of circumstances as described are allowed to continue without some kind of intervention, I consider that other children may be placed at risk. In/

In like situations arising unchecked, I fear that a tragedy to a child or children is almost waiting to happen". Was that a view you had expressed at the meeting that took place? - Yes, because essentially this particular memorandum -- I think I agreed to write the memorandum at the conclusion of the meeting, to summarise what was indicated in the discussion at our meeting.

Now, towards the end of that paragraph you have referred to other children being placed at risk. What was the risk that you envisaged in writing this memorandum? - The risk was in the context of what had been described in Police Woman Metcalfe's report, and the risk principally related to Thomas Hamilton running camps or boys' clubs where there was manifestly, if we were to take what was described in the police report as typical, a lack of supervision which could lead to children being injured, as it were inadvertently, because of that lack of supervision. It also, if I may say so, included what I have referred to previously in my evidence.

And can I ask you now please to look at Document DFRC37, which in the folders is referred to as D32 in J(ii)? Do you recognise this letter? - Sorry, I haven't got it yet -- I possibly have it in my file, but..... Yes, there are two documents -- are you referring to a letter from Gillian Short, Principal Reporter, Central Regional Council?

Yes. Now, that is a letter to you, is it? - Yes, it is a letter really to one of my district reporters, but most of these letters came through me in any case.

And that letter is dated 6th August? - That is correct.

And attached to that letter is a second document which is a police report in respect of the items we have already discussed? - Yes. I should mention that my "Received" stamp is rather obliterated on the left, but it is associated with the document, and I am assuming that since the obliteration on the letter appears to have two numbers in the date, that in fact it was received on the 10th August.

You/

You have added a handwritten note at the foot of that letter on the first page? - That is correct.

If I can read it, indicating the action you have taken in regard to this matter about the summer camp? - That is correct. I say "Tuesday 11th August 1992 at 1105 hrs. Gillian Short -- indicated what action I had taken in Fife regarding concerns highlighted" -- about the summer camp for Dunfermline children at Dunblane High School, and Dunfermline Youth or Boys' Clubs run by Thomas Hamilton. "The children are not being referred, so that there will be no return to Central regarding any disposal".

Were you aware of clubs run by Hamilton in other areas? - I was made aware of these clubs I think at the meeting which was held with Mr. David Sommerville and Chief Superintendent Elder. That was the first occasion I was made aware of it, I think.

And were you aware.....? - Although I should say in the opening -- returning to the report made by Police Woman Connie Metcalfe, in the second paragraph on the first page it says: "In view of previous concerns concerning Hamilton and his running of such a camp", so I obviously was made aware that there had been previous concerns.

Were you aware that Thomas Hamilton held a firearms licence? - No.

No cross-examination.

ALAN/

2.30 p.m.

ALAN MOFFAT, Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: What is your occupation?
- A Detective Sergeant in Central Scotland Police.

How many years' service do you have? - 12 years.

Where are you presently stationed? - Central Scotland at the Family Unit at Bannockburn Police Office.

How long have you been stationed there? - Since February of 1993.

I understand that in the course of being stationed at Bannockburn Family Unit you had cause to investigate the activities of Thomas Hamilton? - That is correct.

I would like to refer you to certain of the complaints that have been made to you. For the purposes of preserving privacy I will refer you merely to Productions and not mention the names. Can I ask you firstly to look at Document DFU13. Its other reference is D3 in Volume I(I). Do you recognise that? - I do, yes.

Now, it is not either to you or from you. How did you come to be aware of that? - This report was produced by Detective Constable Taylor who was under my direct supervision at the time of the investigation.

We see in that report under the heading "Antecedent History" there are details given of Thomas Hamilton and a reference to his activities running boys' clubs. Do you see that? - Yes.

About half-way down that paragraph it says "Although Hamilton does not have any previous convictions recorded against him, on at least two previous occasions he has been reported to the Procurator-Fiscal service in both Dumbarton and Stirling, the latter case having been reported by Detective Sergeant Hughes then of the Child Protection Unit, Bannockburn". Do you see that? - Yes/

Yes.

At the end of that paragraph do you see reference to Hamilton holding a firearms certificate? - That is correct.

Do you see then under the heading "Summary of Events" there are details of particular matters which have given cause for concern and in particular on the second page it is stated "On the 26th May 1993, a complaint was made concerning Mr. Hamilton's behaviour by (a parent) which gave cause for concern. (The parent's) complaint surrounds the fact that her nine year old son, had been attending on Wednesday evenings at Stirling High School with Mr. Hamilton on the pretext of five-a-side football having been arranged by him. (The parent) learned from her son that, in fact, on the occasions when he had attended no football had ever taken place. Mr. Hamilton had caused her son to change into ill-fitting trunks or similar garment and perform gymnastic exercises"? - That is correct.

In the next paragraph there is a reference to that parent having attended at Stirling High School and having seen another boy there in a locked gym on his own with Hamilton. Do you see that? - Yes, I do.

Were you aware of how these complaints were made to the Family Unit? - One of the parents had contacted the Unit and DC Taylor subsequently made arrangements to interview the parents and the children involved.

Did you attend those interviews? - Personally, no. I was kept fully aware of the contents of the interviews by DC Taylor who was coming back to my office and briefing me.

Having obtained the statements what was done? - At the time of the statements coming in I then looked at the previous report of Sergeant Hughes. We decided to compile all of the known information which we had at that particular point and to summarise it and to put it to the Procurator-Fiscal for consideration.

Well, you said the previous report by Hughes/

Hughes. What was that in respect of? - That was the 1991 investigation.

That is the summer camp in 1991. You said you had decided you were going to draw that together with all other information that you had? - That is correct.

What sources of information did you look for? - I did checks on our criminal intelligence system. I also made checks with the Metropolitan Police as they have a record of paedophile activities.

Is that a record kept by the Metropolitan Police for the whole of Great Britain? - It was the record which I thought would be the most complete data for that type of activity and decided to target that area.

Even in respect of activities in Scotland? - Yes.

Were there any other sources of information for you? - The local criminal intelligence on which there was no other information other than that which was already known to myself having been passed on to me by Detective Sergeant Hughes at the time of taking over at the Unit from him.

Were you aware of Hamilton's involvement with any other clubs? - I made enquiry at this point with Central Regional Council and I learned Mr. Hamilton was obtaining lets on a regular basis through the Region. He was planning well in advance a schedule of activities for boys and had clubs throughout Central Region.

And did that give you any cause for concern? - Yes, in particular with what I had learned from the report of 1991 and his access to children, I felt that the access to children was giving him the opportunity to be nearer to the children, particularly the vulnerable ones which he might be able to select and then engage in activities with.

Did you receive any other complaints about this time? - Yes, there was a Mrs. Allan from/from Doune who came forward with a very similar complaint in relation to Mr. Hamilton. The main difference being that her child who had been photographed was attending a club along with others. He wasn't selected on his own and taken to premises. He was within a group and taken individually to be photographed by Mr. Hamilton.

And do we see a reference to that on the third page of the report from DC Taylor? - Yes, we do.

You see there in the second full paragraph on that page there was particular concern about some of the exercises that were being carried out on that occasion? - Yes, the exercise which was being described struck me as being an unusual exercise to have children perform, particularly if they are going to be photographed.

LORD CULLEN: I think we have been following the practice of not mentioning surnames so if you could avoid that.

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: You said earlier that you prepared a report to go to the Procurator-Fiscal? - This is the report which is in front of us.

This is the report? - This is the report, yes.

And that was to be submitted presumably by DC Taylor to the Procurator-Fiscal? - In the event what happened was that as soon as the report was completed we were conscious that more people were likely to become aware of the details of Hamilton and his photographic activities and as soon as the report was typed DC Taylor personally took it to the Procurator-Fiscal in order that he could discuss the circumstances with him and seek a decision as to whether proceedings would be instigated on this and also to clarify whether we would be able to obtain a warrant to attend at Mr. Hamilton's house as I suspected that if he was photographing children there may be some material there which would assist me in producing evidence for a prosecution.

Is/

Is that the purpose of the report? - It is a joint purpose within the report. I certainly did hope to gain a warrant in order to access his house and see if there was material there which would be of use but we mention within the report these activities, particularly the way in which he had taken the boy to Stirling High School on his own, isolated, that there may be grounds there for a prosecution.

Now, you didn't attend the meeting with the Procurator-Fiscal? - Not that particular meeting, no.

Did DC Taylor come back to you and tell you what the Procurator-Fiscal had said? - That is correct.

What did he say that the Procurator-Fiscal had said? - On return to my office I was made aware that the Fiscal had viewed the report and felt that he also had concerns regarding Mr. Hamilton but did not feel that in consideration of the circumstances which had been presented to him at that time that a crime had been committed on which he could take action.

In the light of that, what did you do? - From that..... I should add I was also aware that we were made aware that the circumstances would have to be slightly more than we had in the content of that report in order for action to be taken. I felt it was essential for the police to be negotiating with other agencies who were involved with Hamilton.

You were made aware that more would be required. Who were you made aware by? - Discussions we had with the Procurator-Fiscal was that the circumstances contained within this report were insufficient in order to proceed. It would have required different circumstances on these in order to secure a prosecution.

What circumstances? - Something more which would have led to a crime that the Fiscal could proceed on.

What other agencies did you plan to exchange information with? - My first point of contact/contact was Central Regional Council. In particular, the Legal and Admin. Department and the Sports Development Department, both of whom I felt were most involved. Firstly in the letting of premises to Mr. Hamilton and secondly the fact that he was involved with children with sports.

And what information were you seeking from them? - Anything that I could find which might assist not just the police but the Region as a whole to prevent Hamilton from gaining access to premises. I felt quite strongly that he, without the availability of premises, would not have been able to have access to children. He required the premises in order for the children to be drawn to him.

You have said you contacted the Region with a view to getting information? - That is correct.

Are you now suggesting that there was another purpose for contacting the Region? - I wished to discuss with them the actions taken by the Region and also to look at ways in which the Region could perhaps effectively deal with Hamilton in order to prevent the lets from being granted.

Can you recall when your discussions with the Region took place? - They began very shortly after the report was submitted by DC Taylor but the exact date is unknown to me.

Can you recall who you had your discussions with? - In particular it was Mr. Flett from the Legal and Admin. Department and Mrs. Chillas from the Sports Department.

Were they able to give you any information? - Yes, Mr. Flett had quite extensive knowledge of Mr. Hamilton and his involvement with Central Regional Council over a number of years. It was then I first became aware of the involvement of Hamilton with the Ombudsman and the previous removal of lets by the Council. Mrs. Chillas was able to very quickly provide me with a copy of the report that she had compiled as a result of having a video which had been given in. It somehow got into her possession from Hamilton.

Can/

Can you recall what that report said in summary? - Yes, it covered some 15 to 20 points regarding the ways in which Hamilton had been dealing with children and the activities that he engaged in and the concerns raised by Mrs. Chillas that they were not perhaps the ways in which she would have seen sports coaching effectively done.

You said Mr. Flett provided you with information about his involvement with Hamilton. What was the nature of his involvement with Hamilton? - I think Mr. Flett was slightly wary. The Region had dealt with Hamilton before and lets had been removed and had been investigated by the Ombudsman who found the reasons for the removal of let were not sufficient. As a result of that Hamilton had regained his access to Council premises and I think the Council did not want to find themselves in that position again. They couldn't understand it.

Did you make enquiries of any other agencies or bodies? - Again, contained in the Region, I spoke to members of Education services.

Within the Region? - Yes.

Were they able to provide you with any information? - Nothing other than that which I had already begun to learn.

Were you able to provide them with any information? - I certainly spoke to Mr. Flett because obviously had there been anything which I could have given him which may have assisted him in the removal of these lets then I would have tried to do that but I did not feel that there was anything which could have done that. I felt..... well, it looked to me that Hamilton was in fact making an occupation for himself out of letting Council premises and therefore bringing boys to the clubs and gaining or receiving financial payment from the boys in order to go there. I felt there could be some type of fraudulent activity or that he may have been profiting from his access to Council premises and I questioned whether that was in fact part of the remit in which he would have given concern.

Were you able to do anything further with the information you had obtained? - At this particular/particular time, no.

Were you able to obtain any further information as to Hamilton's activities whilst at the clubs? - Well, the more I began to look at Mr. Hamilton it was simply I was realising that the way in which he dealt with children was very regimented, very strict. I had strong questions to be asked which I feel in a lot of ways comes to a personal value judgment. I personally felt that the way in which he dealt with children was not appropriate but looking at it from a slightly different perspective it was difficult to say that it was lewd but they certainly raised questions within my own mind.

You said one of the reasons you sought a warrant from the Procurator-Fiscal was to obtain photographs that you considered may exist of the children. Were you able to obtain photographs in any way? - Subsequently, within a few weeks of this report being submitted, a batch of photographs were found having been either lost or dropped or deposited in Stirling Town Centre and these photographs were handed in to the police.

What/

What do the photographs show? - They show young boys dressed in trunks and obviously similar to the description of children who had been attending Hamilton's clubs and I took possession of the photographs which I held and subsequently took them to the Fiscal's office in Stirling in order for further discussion with D.C. Taylor and also to add that we had photographic evidence of that.

Did you consider that the photographs disclosed a crime been committed? - I think it was a personal judgment; I certainly found the contents of them quite strange, unnatural; I think I would have difficulty in saying that there was actually lewd contents amongst them.

Who did you discuss the photographs with? - It was the Fiscal at Stirling himself.

What was the nature of the discussion with him? - It was again to try further.....to continue our discussions that D.C. Taylor had regarding Hamilton's activities and his access to the boys; I felt that should there be grounds in order to obtain some form of complaint which may classify him as a Schedule 1 offender.

What was the outcome of your discussions with the Procurator Fiscal? - Again the decision was the same as had been known to Detective Constable Taylor.

Did you receive any further complaint regarding Mr. Hamilton? - Sporadic complaints were coming in but the clubs were ongoing; I believe about this time Mr. Hamilton had clubs running in different schools on almost every day of the week throughout Central Scotland; the complaints were intermittent but as they came in I decided that rather than interview the individual children who had been going to these clubs that I should speak to the parents concerned who had been made aware of.....bring concern to the parents or to the Region to ascertain from them what was being said and obviously what I was hoping -- perhaps hoping is the wrong word -- I was looking to secure some information or evidence which had been slightly more than I had previously found that would have given grounds to secure a form of prosecution of Mr. Hamilton.

If/

If I just refer you to some documents referring to the complaints; D CRC AL F142 and that is referred to as D176 in Volume J1; you will see the front page of that is a letter to Mr. Flett with Central Regional Council and attached to it there is a note or a letter from a parent; have you ever seen that letter from the parent? - Yes, I have.

Again without mentioning any names do you see it refers to a parent's son having attended a club run by Hamilton and concerns having arisen as a result of the son's reluctance to attend? - Yes, that is correct.

On the second page of that there are three points to the letter, A, B and C giving the nature of the parent's concern and these were in respect of the child being topless, the child having to change into black shorts and photographic activity; were these concerns made known to you? - As a result of that letter being drafted, a copy was subsequently passed to the police and I attended at the home address of the parent and spent some considerable amount of time discussing the contents of the letter with them; I informed them of the involvement I had with Mr. Hamilton and the decision of the ways in which I was now dealing with the complaints in that respect; I was hoping that I may be learning something which was going to add to the circumstances which had been reviewed to me previously but there was nothing in the contents of this letter which wasn't already known to myself or which had been reported to the Procurator Fiscal and I explained that to the parents.

The parents were not able to provide you with any information? - No.

What did you say to the parents? - I informed them, as I was speaking to the parents, I continued to go over the concerned points in discussion with Mr. Taylor and indeed with the Procurator Fiscal that any concerns should be put on paper, they should be put forward to the Director of Education, to the headmaster of schools where the children were attending at the boys sports clubs and that the complaints should be formally made in order that hopefully sufficient parental concerns would be found/found and that the Region would be able to justify stopping the lets in respect of Mr. Hamilton without him having cause for complaint.

Could I ask you to look next at document reference DCD 243 which has an alternative reference of D198 within Volume J1; have you ever seen this letter previously? - I have seen this letter from my investigations into this particular inquiry; I am aware of the subject of the letter having been involved with this particular family and myself.

So you are aware of the family making complaints in that instance? - Yes.

And perhaps I could turn to letter DFU 54 and that I haven't been able to find another reference for; a copy has been passed round this morning; you will see once again the front page is a handwritten letter dated the 16th March, 1996 but on the front page there is a letter once again relating to complaints in respect of a child? - Yes.

Have you ever seen that letter on the front page? - Yes, I have.

The complaint was that the boys were required to remove their clothing and change into black swimming briefs and photographs were taken of them? - Prior to that letter being written the mother of the child had telephoned my office and spoken to me at length on that; I subsequently advised her of the involvement which we had had and I spent a long time discussing with her what had been said to her by her son and again I found that the circumstances were very very similar to those which I had been previously made aware of; as a result I suggested to the mother that she should put her concerns on paper, they should be directed to other people that had involvement with Hamilton and his access to premises.

Is the next page a memorandum prepared by you? - That is correct.

And that was addressed to Detective Superintendent Ogg? - Yes, that is correct.

And in that second paragraph you say you have/have relayed your findings in this inquiry to the Procurator Fiscal who said he didn't regard them as sufficient to enable him to instigate proceedings? - The findings in this particular complaint was a matter which I passed to the Procurator Fiscal at Stirling; the circumstances of the previous complaints had been passed to the Procurator Fiscal and a decision at that time had been that that in itself was insufficient and in consequence of that I was looking for additional circumstances which I could report to him regarding this type of information; I had already an internal record which I could use at a future time to add to any new information.

So the complaints from these parents referred to here were not passed on to the Procurator Fiscal? - No, the decision that had been made by the Procurator Fiscal in June of 1993 were such that unless the circumstances were different to those which had been reported he would not take further action in respect of Mr. Hamilton.

But that was something that was said to Mr. Taylor rather than yourself? - No, it was said to Mr. Taylor but it was repeated to myself when I spoke to the Procurator Fiscal having attended at his office a short time later.

He said he would require additional information? - What was being said was that the circumstances which were being reported at that time didn't amount to grounds for prosecution and it would require different circumstances to these.

Just to be quite clear, was what was said that it didn't amount to prosecution or they didn't amount to a crime? - A crime.

Was any indication given on the basis of which it was concerned that it didn't amount to a crime? - Not that I can recollect; it was said that the information we had had was very close but was not crossing the borders which would be leading to criminal activity but it was concerning.

Could I ask you to look at document D CRC ES F8; and that has the reference D199A within Volume J1; do you have there a handwritten letter dated the 13th December, 1994? - I am sorry,/ sorry, could you repeat the number?

D CRC ES F8? - This is a large folder which I have.

The backing sheet doesn't contain any other page reference but another copy is available; do you have a copy of the letter now? - Yes.

Could that be on the screen only in the well of the Court; have you seen this letter previously? - I have, yes.

Was that sent to you by the writer of the letter or was it passed to you by another party? - The author of the letter spoke to me personally at my office in Bannockburn; in addition to writing the letter she came to visit my office which is in the same village as she stays where I personally met her; again the advice was given by me that a letter should be written and sent to the people who were involved with letting of premises to Mr. Hamilton; again the circumstances which were explained to me by the author didn't vary from the circumstances which had been previously reported.

You see the circumstances referred to there on the first page, towards the foot of the page, are that Hamilton instructed the boys to fully strip and change into black swimming trunks and this took place in the gymnasium and on the second page it says that there was no attempt to provide privacy while apparently the leader prepared to take photographs and at the foot of that page it says "When the boys were dressed in swimming trunks the leader then proceeded to photograph them in various poses"; did you investigate that? - Yes, on speaking to the author of the letter.

Was any statement taken from the complainer's child?

- No.

Was this matter referred to the Procurator Fiscal? -

No.

Was that on the basis that you have previously explained? - Yes, as a result of the first of the attendances at the Fiscal's office by both myself and D.C. Taylor we were looking for additional information and certainly this information/information was investigated but we were looking for additional information in order to submit further reports to the Fiscal; I think on the last page of this letter you will see that the letter has also been sent to the Director of Education and the legal and admin. at Central Regional which is a direct result of a conversation I had with the author prior to the letter being written.

Could you look at document D CRC ES F8 11 and that has the reference D200 within folder JI; you will see that is a letter, although it has not copied terribly well, on the top left hand corner addressed to Mr. Sinclair, the Chief Executive of Central Regional Council? - Yes.

On the third paragraph of that it is stated that the author did forward a copy of the complaint to the Child Protection Unit at Bannockburn and a response received but that there was insufficient evidence to persuade the police that it is likely that the Procurator Fiscal would agree to proceedings? - At that stage I was involved with quite a number of conversations with either Mr. Young or Mr. Flett; in effect, people were going to the police and I was advising people to contact the Region and the Region in turn were coming back to the parents; it became a circle of events and where the same information was being passed on more than one occasion to my office; at the time of this information coming to me or this letter being eventually made known to me I had discussed these concerns with Dr. Young and also I had personally spoken to the parents of the children concerned and that in no circumstances had events changed in any way from matters which had previously been reported to the Procurator Fiscal and they had been advised by me that he wasn't prepared to take action in the circumstances.

Could I ask you now to look at document DFU 53/5 which is D202 within Volume J1; you see that as a letter from you to Dr. Young dated 29th December, 1994? - That is correct.

In that you refer to two parents; do you see their names? - Sorry, is that the first document?

It is a letter from you dated the 29th December, /

December, 1994, a very short letter? - There are two parents referred to between 5 and 5A.

Had you spoken to both of these parents? - I had, yes; Mr. Young asked me if I would provide written confirmation to him on the outcome of this discussion and I made this brief reply to him.

In that reply you said "There is no police inquiry to be made in respect of these incidents"? - It could have been worded to say there was no further police inquiry to be made in respect of this incident; as I said this letter was formal confirmation to Dr. Young that I had received this correspondence and investigated the matter.

Could you look at D CRC ES F86 which is within the folder as D197 JI, No. 6 I think in that folder and it is slightly out of chronology; do you see that as a letter by you dated the 2nd December, 1994? - Yes, it is.

In that you say in the second paragraph that there is reference to the parents making a complaint which is already being considered in earlier correspondence? - Once again I spoke personally to these parents within my office at Bannockburn; I shared these concerns which were identical to those of other parents I had already spoken over the previous year and a half, perhaps more.

In that letter you see there is a name and address of a further parent who had made a complaint? - Yes, this parent was also spoken to by the police again within my office at Bannockburn.

And/

3.10 p.m.

And did you obtain full details of the complaints made by that parent? - Yes.

Can I ask you please to look at document reference DCRC-SW-F3-1. Within the folders it is D212 in J(I). You will see that is a memorandum headed "Social Work Department" sent by Pam Gillespie to Ron Keilloh and it is dated 24th March, 1995. Do you see that? - Yes.

And in the head section again there is a reference to the person making the complaint and their address? - Yes.

In the final paragraph of that letter it says that Ron Keilloh contacted yourself and that a joint investigation would take place. Do you recall such contact being made in respect of this complaint? - The Social Work Department and the police have, since 1989, jointly investigated all allegations of child concerns within the Region. The name of this particular child does not immediately spring to my memory. However, the author of this is somebody who I have contact with very, very frequently and with this coming in I have no doubt that this would be an investigation allocated to one of the staff in my office to go and pursue with the Social Work Department.

But you can't recall any details of the investigation yourself? - In particular, this is not one which is immediately.....I certainly have not personally spoken to the parents of this child or I would have recollected that.

If you could have in front of you DCRC-AL-S2-25. That is D229 in J(I). Now, this is a Minute of a meeting which took place on the 21st August of last year and I think you are named as one of the persons present. Were you at that meeting? - I was, yes.

Can you recall the discussion which took place? - The meeting was basically a culmination of a lot of concerns which were held by many people in respect of Mr. Hamilton. I had been speaking on a frequent basis with members of the Region individually and they in turn had been speaking/speaking to members of their own department individually and we felt it was appropriate that we should come collectively together to pool our ideas and see if there was anything on which we could form or arrive at any decisions we could arrive at which would effectively give us a course of action to deal with Hamilton and I think I should say that people were guarded in how they dealt with him. The local authority did not wish to find themselves again the subject of complaint and I think to the best of my belief there was nothing which was new or different in the circumstances to that which I had previously reported and I felt that we had effectively to deal with him in a different way and prevent his access to children.

Did you discuss these various complaints to which we have just referred? - Individually I would say they were not discussed to do with naming individual children but generally concerns themselves were certainly discussed in that the concerns were consistently the same.

And at the foot of that Minute of the meeting, at the end of the second paragraph, it says "It was confirmed that the Procurator Fiscal was not taking action on the reports sent to him because there was not a crime being committed. There was nothing of value in relation to Hamilton's criminal record". Was it you that had provided that information? - No. I would disagree with the wording of that part of the report. It was compiled by Mr. Steele who himself will not directly have any contact with the Procurator Fiscal and I think that he has perhaps put it in a way I would not have worded it.

In what way do you consider it is inaccurate? - It is not in itself inaccurate. The Procurator Fiscal had been made aware of the concerns known to me and he had told me he was not prepared to pursue a prosecution on the basis of that information.

That was the information up to the date on which you went to see him with a bag of photographs? - That is correct.

One last production to refer to I think which is in the same folder, No. DCRC-AL-F2-30. Within/

Within the other folder it is D232 in J(I). You see the first page of this is a memorandum? - I'm sorry, I'm having difficulty finding this particular document.

I think the reference is DCRC-AL-F2-30? - Yes.

Do you have there a memorandum to David Cobb from Alan Steele? - I have, yes.

Again it refers to an attached letter from a parent. Is a letter attached to what you have in front of you? - It is, yes.

And that is a letter from a parent addressed to Mr. Steele dated the 28th August, 1995. Have you seen that letter previously? - I may have seen this letter at some point throughout my involvement in collating material for this Inquiry but I don't believe I saw this letter as part of my duties prior to the event occurring.

Can I refer you now to your involvement in the events of the 13th March and in particular your attendance at Dunblane Primary School. Were you on duty that day? - I was, yes.

Do I take it you were in attendance at the school? - Yes.

What time did you get there? - I would estimate about 10.30.

What was your responsibility? - Prior to arrival.....being within the unit that I am, I was initially aware officers from the Family Unit who deal with children and families on a day-to-day basis, I knew we would be required but I was unsure whether it would be at the hospital or at the school itself. Having eventually been advised to make our way to the school, I in particular found myself working within one of the houses at the entrance to the school where the parents of the children from Mrs. Mayer's class were being assembled.

Whilst on duty at the school on that day, do you recall speaking to Mr. Mayer? - I did, yes.

In/

In what circumstances and at what time did you speak to him? - I think about one o'clock. 1 p.m.

Were you aware of when he had arrived at the school? - I was simply advised that Mr. Mayer had arrived at the school and was advised..... the information as I recall it, which appeared to come through a number of different officers, was that he had arrived at either the entrance gate or the vicinity of the school and was gradually being brought from that area to the school reception area and I was one of the officers there and as he was making his way I was told to meet him at his entrance.

Who told you that? - I believe it was Superintendent Holden.

Were you told to meet him at the entrance? - At this stage I was simply to secure Mr. Mayer and comfort him in any way that I could. Having met him, I decided to take him to a room where there would be some privacy in order to remove him from the bustle and the movement which was ongoing at the school.

Where did you take him? - The library which was in a corridor leading to the Primary 4 classes.

Was there anybody else with you when you took him to the library? - No.

Was he aware at that time of what had happened? - I think Mr. Mayer.....well, I have since learned Mr. Mayer had travelled from his place of employment and I am conscious he had been receiving updates from the media, from which source of the media I don't know but on arriving at the school he certainly was understandably upset and suspected that his wife was in fact one of those who had been killed.

Was that information he had obtained from the media prior to his arrival at the school or at the school? - I believe it was prior to meeting me. Whether it was in fact from the media or something on the way into the school, I don't know. I do suspect it was the media.

Did/

Did he ask you anything in relation to his wife when you first met him? - Yes, understandably Mr. Mayer was very, very keen to know if his wife was one of those who had been killed.

Were you able to tell him? - At that time, no.

Are you aware of when he was told? - Mr. Mayer was told by myself. I would estimate, having met Mr. Mayer and taken him to the library and sat some time with him, I would think perhaps 5 or 10 minutes, by that time I was aware that the liaison teams were being formed and each individual parents had been allocated two or three workers to be with them and hopefully to break any news which there was in a sympathetic way. I knew that a team would be allocated to Mr. Mayer and I told him that this would occur. Personally I knew that a teacher had been killed. I did not know which teacher had been killed. Mr. Mayer was desperately seeking that information but I felt it would have been wrong for me to have answered yes or no because I wasn't 100% sure of the information.

Did you provide information to Mr. Mayer? - I did, yes.

At what time was that? - Mr. Mayer was very upset and insisting that I give him information. I told him I would go and find out the information accurately. I then sought out Superintendent Holden and advised him that Mr. Mayer was very keen to know and he had heard in the media certain informations. I then learned that Mrs. Mayer was in fact the teacher who had been killed and I went back to the library. My method of telling Mr. Mayer was not to sit him down and formally say to him that his wife was dead. It was more confirming his suspicions, that what he suspected was in fact the case.

When you told him this, how much time had elapsed since his arriving at the school? - I was with him perhaps 10 minutes initially. It took me a further 10 or 15 minutes to find Superintendent Holden who was busy receiving official confirmation. I could have spoken to other persons but in order to get the accurate information which I required to speak to Mr. Mayer I needed to speak to one of the senior officers in charge of the case who were, in my opinion, the only ones who had the full and accurate information.

When you went away you say to find information, was anybody there with Mr. Mayer? - At this time Mr. Mayer was very very keen to contact his daughter. He had a mobile phone with him which he was attempting to use with some difficulty, I'm not sure if it was to do with the battery or just the sheer volume of communications which were ongoing at that time. I found a telephone within the library which I offered to Mr. Mayer to use but I think again he had difficulty in gaining a line with the telephone as there were very few lines into Dunblane Primary School.

Did Mr. Mayer ever say to you that if you didn't give him information he would go out and get it from members of the media? - He did, yes. That was prior to me leaving him in order to go and seek out Superintendent Holden.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: You have given evidence about a number of different parents/parents making complaints which came to your ears about children at Hamilton's boys' clubs? - Yes.

But is it fair to say that although these complaints were coming from different parents they were to the same or similar effect? - Consistently. I would have liked..... again, I do not like the thought of children having been abused or assaulted or hurt in any way but eventually it struck me that the only way in which I was going to be able to deal with Hamilton was to obtain information or evidence in some way which would enable me to pursue him through the people to whom the police reported, either the Fiscal or the Reporter.

It is fair to say, isn't it, that the basis of these complaints by parents was that they were sending their sons to clubs run by Hamilton expecting some type of activity to take place and then later learning that really very different things were happening? Is that a fair way of putting it? - Well, I think that some of the things the parents expected to happen in fact took place but mixed with them were activities which the parents were not aware of and which they did not give their consent or permission for.

Can I perhaps take you back to the memorandum? I am afraid the only number I have retained for it is D3/I(I). That is the memorandum written by Detective Constable Taylor. If I can just ask you to look at page 2 of that where some of the complaints made in May 1993 are summarised. If we look at the first full paragraph on page 2 we see there that one mother complained because her son had attended on the pretext that he would be playing five-a-side football but in fact no football had ever taken place and when at Stirling High School the child had to change into ill-fitting trunks and then perform exercises and be photographed. That is a fairly typical complaint in that paragraph, isn't it? - Well, it was different in that this particular child was on his own. He had been isolated and was not amongst others which was the general pattern involving Mr. Hamilton.

Well, in fact in the second paragraph there is reference to this same mother attending and finding another child on his own with Hamilton and the/the mother of that other child again did not expect that something like that would be happening? - Yes, I am sorry. I may have misinterpreted the first paragraph there. It is the second one that is in isolation.

So what we have here is firstly a parent sending a child expecting he is going to be playing football and he does not play football. He does gym exercises and is photographed. Secondly, another parent sending a child in the expectation that there would be a number of children but in fact Hamilton is alone with her son and at the end of that paragraph there is a reference to these parents being misinformed. Now, that is presumably by Hamilton? -

3.30 p.m.

I think that is a failure to supply full information rather than misinformed.

Well, would you agree with me that, in fact, these are examples of deceitful conduct by Hamilton? - I think Mr. Hamilton is a deceitful man, he provided the information that he wishes you to know.

Again the same is true when one reads it at the top of page 2 and on to page 3 that the justification given by Hamilton for the children wearing swimming trunks was that they were to have access to the swimming pool but enquiry reveals that wouldn't have been the case? - We discussed with the janitor of the school who was responsible for letting people into the premises and the gym hall was unsuitable for football. There is a games hall within the same school which would have been allocated for football and the swimming pool is a separate hall which is provided by the authority.

But you have already agreed with me that this conduct was deceitful; would you agree with the description of devious? - I think it depends on an individual's interpretation of the words; I think Mr. Hamilton provided people with information in order that he could be with the children and then use them in the way that he chose to use them. Devious is a word that could fit that.

Or possibly scheming would be another word that could fit that, would you agree? - He certainly created situations in order to have children in the way in which he would photograph them.

That would be described by some people as scheming? - Yes, by some people.

Would you? - I think he managed to manufacture situations, that is the way I would put it.

Now, you did note that the then Detective Sergeant Hughes had prepared a very substantial report in 1991 about Hamilton and the summer camps? - I was aware of that; in fact, I put a copy of the summary report from Sergeant Hughes along with Constable Taylor's memorandum to the Fiscal.

Were/

Were you aware that Hamilton had a Firearms Certificate? - It is mentioned in the paragraph in front of the report that he had a Firearms Certificate.

What, if any, action did you take in relation to drawing this sequence of events to the attention of those responsible for Firearms Certificates? - At the time of this report being compiled I had looked at the previous report which had been submitted by the then Detective Sergeant Hughes; within the file I held at the office was that report and attached to it was a copy of the report submitted by Mr. Hughes in relation to concerns he had; I read that report and considered it and I felt that the complaints I had were perhaps to a lesser degree than those which had previously been submitted. I was aware of the result of that report and I felt that there was no need for me to reinforce that as it was to a lesser degree than I was involved with at the time.

Just so we can be completely clear, the memorandum to which you are referring is a two-page memorandum by Sergeant Hughes at the end of which he notes the revocation of the Firearms Certificate? - Yes, it had been held in a file in my office.

You saw that complete with the handwritten notes at the time? - I would have looked at the handwritten notes, yes, I see it here.

Is it fair to assume when you saw it on your handwritten notes an accurate summary of your position in relation to the Firearms Certificate would be somewhat similar to how you felt about the Fiscal, that you would really have to come up with something a bit better and not more of the same? - No, I felt it was my position as a detective to investigate all the incidents reported to me and where there were grounds which varied from those previously to report them. I didn't feel at that particular time that the circumstances we had were significantly different from that which had previously been reported leading to the result they had had.

In so far as the Firearms Certificate was concerned you mean? - Yes.

You/

You must have been influenced by the knowledge that similar circumstances had been drawn to the attention of superior officers before and nothing had followed in relation to the Firearms Certificate? - No, the same sort of attention was being drawn again, my report was submitted internally and.....

But presumably your expectations, in light of what had happened the last time, would be that nothing would happen about his Firearms Certificate? - If I had felt that the circumstances were substantially different or that the information I had been given was such that I should have been asking for revocation at that time I would have submitted a further report.

For example, this report from Detective Constable Taylor.....? - A submission of a report within the police is such that we supply copies and they will go through the channels to our immediate superiors; the firearms file is not one which I would be personally involved in, it would be a decision taken by somebody else.

Higher up? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: In your memorandum D31 in folder I to which you have just been making reference to speaking to a summary of events and you have spoken earlier of various letters from parents and all the letters use the word "concern" at least? - Yes.

Did you think any of the parents were alarmed at what was happening? - Certain parents that I spoke to were alarmed within themselves, they were most agitated at the conduct of Hamilton towards the children.

Were you aware that it would be a breach of the peace to do something to A which caused fear and alarm to B; in other words, if someone did someone to children which caused fear and alarm to them at least that could be a breach of the peace.

MR. TAYLOR: I don't think that is an appropriate question for the witness.

LORD CULLEN: Why not?

MR./

MR. TAYLOR: I think first of all it would be better if the witness gives a definition of a breach of the peace.

LORD CULLEN: Perhaps he could give an assumption, an accurate assumption.

MR. TAYLOR: If it was an accurate assumption.

LORD CULLEN: What do you say to that, Mr. Gibb?

MR. GIBB: I don't think it is a valid objection but I will re-frame my question.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. GIBB:
Assuming you received information that something has been done to A which caused alarm to B, someone else, in your view could that constitute the crime of a breach of the peace? - I think what you are referring to is the knock-on effect of the behaviour towards the children perhaps, did it affect the public in general in the way that somebody behaves; I don't feel it is for me as a Detective Sergeant personally to make that decision; I think it is my job to gather and present that information and tell people who are properly appointed to make the decision.

Did you discuss with the Procurator-Fiscal at all the possibility that this conduct in itself might constitute a breach of the peace? - If you are asking me a question -- the decision taken by the Fiscal?

I am asking whether you discussed it, was that subject discussed? - No, the discussion that was held with the Fiscal was to do with the contents of this report; the Fiscal considered the contents of the report and provided a decision; I am not in a position whether I would then discuss that with the Fiscal. The Fiscal makes his decision.

What I am trying to get is that the Fiscal had indicated to you he didn't think a crime had been committed and did you discuss the possibility of this conduct amounting to a breach of the peace or did you not discuss it; if you didn't discuss it I am quite happy at that reply? - The Fiscal didn't/didn't discount that that was being put across; he was most concerned but didn't feel the behaviour towards the children.....the children were not then alarmed by the behaviour shown by

Hamilton. I believe that the children themselves were not unduly alarmed there because the club they were attending run by Hamilton was probably the first club that they had ever gone to; it was an age when boys would be going to Beavers, the first part of the Scout Group, and they had no knowledge of what behaviour they should be expecting of the persons organising and running the club, they simply did what they were told by Hamilton therefore in effect the children themselves were not alarmed.

But you didn't discuss the knock-on effect that they may be alarmed; clearly the parents were alarmed? - I think in themselves but I didn't put any emphasis on that, it is not my decision.

Can I deal briefly with the events of the 13th of March and I do appreciate that the events of that day were extremely traumatic for all concerned. Can I just indicate to you that my information is that Mr. Mayor did not have a mobile phone that day and also that were you aware that his daughter Esther was in the staff room? - I did subsequently learn that his daughter was brought to the staff room; in that respect I did what I felt was best for Mr. Mayer and I took him to a room which wasn't part of the mayhem involved with all the other people and I thought in his best interests he should be taken to a room with some privacy where he was told, informed what had happened to his wife.

Your impression was that he had suspicions then when he arrived that his wife was involved? - I think within himself he felt that the worst was about to be told to him.

But it was half past 1 before that information was communicated or thereabouts? - Yes, it was 1 p.m. before I met him; however quickly I got back to him it certainly would have been no more than half past 1.

I think you are aware he met with his daughter at quarter to 3? - I have subsequently learned that; following my dealing with Mr. Mayor I was allocated one of the other families to deal with.

CROSS/

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. JONES: I would like to ask you one or two questions about the contact you had with the Regional Council from the start of your investigations in 1993 and the beginning of 1995; you mentioned that you went to see, I think,

Mr. Flett early on in about May, 1993 and he let you see a report by Mrs. Chillis of some videos that they had seen, is that an accurate reflection of your evidence? - I would report to Mr. Flett's office there where a copy was subsequently passed to me by Mrs. Chillis.

I am unclear, I certainly did have a copy of the report within my file at Bannockburn but that may have been as a consequence of me actually meeting with Mrs. Chillis and inviting her to meet at Bannockburn where we discussed concerns. Would you look please at DSU10 which we have as D137 in J(i).

Now, this appears to be a report by Mrs. Chillis dated the 25th of February, 1993 to Mr. Watson in the Chief Executive's Office and this is entitled "Mr. T. Hamilton, Videos"; is that a report which you saw? - It is.

And it relates to Mrs. Chillis having watched a copy for three hours and then making a number of observations, is that right? - Correct.

She makes observations firstly on the gymnastic exercises and then trampolining and general observations? - Yes.

Can I ask you to go on from that, it is to a document which I don't think had a number but there was a letter from two parents to Mrs. Gibbon; could you have that in front of you. We have it in D176, D CRC A1 F1 42; I think you saw the hand-written letter earlier this afternoon; that is a letter dated the 26th of September, 1993 addressing or raising various concerns about Hamilton's boys' sports clubs. If you look at the first sheet in that document that bears to be a letter from a team leader in the Central Regional Council to Mr. Flett? - That is correct.

It is dated the 11th of October, 1993 and it is drawing a handwritten letter to his attention; what I would like to know is this, did the hand-written letter, the copy letter you have told us about, come to you from the Regional Council or somebody/somebody in the Regional Council? - I would have to check the documents but I believe a copy of this letter also went to Mr. Forsyth.

It is addressed to Mrs. Gibbons? - Yes, the same letter went to various different people; I think you will find that letter or a copy..... it says "Dear" and different names were appended and it was sent to whoever the author chose to send it to.

Could you look again at D CRC ES F8 11; again this is a letter you looked at a little earlier? - Yes.

This is a letter from Dr. Young, the head of Resource Services in the Regional Council to the Chief Executive's Office? - That is correct.

In December, 1994 and do we see from the second and third paragraphs that it talks about what is described as a flurry of complaints from parents of which copies were forwarded to the Child Protection Unit in Bannockburn. Do you see that?

- Yes, I see the paragraph.

Is that consistent with your recollection of what happened at that time? - No, I disagree with the word "flurry" because flurry would tend to indicate a number; depending on who has received that -- I think at that time it was two or three from the Regional Council.

I think it is made clear it is three? - Yes.

This letter goes on to say in the third-last paragraph "You will note that the previous decision of a similar nature led to the authorities being taken to the Ombudsman by Mr. Hamilton"? - Yes.

Does this reflect on what you have told us, that one of the concerns of the Regional Council was if you stopped the lets that could lead to them being in the same position? - I think they felt they were leaving themselves open to some form of complaint.

Could you have DFU53/5 and D CRC AL F1 63 and we have these as D201 and 202; you have already looked at DFU53; is that your letter dated the 29th of December, 1994 to Dr. Young at the Region? - It has not a reference to it here but it is the letter.

An/

3.50 p.m.

And you have explained that a decision by this stage had been taken I think that there would be no prosecution, is that right? - By this time I had spoken to the individual parents who had written letters and I had fully discussed with each of them the circumstances which had been described to them by their children and these circumstances were identical in nature to the previous reports which had been submitted to the Procurator Fiscal.

I think you are agreeing with me? There had already been a decision taken about certain complaints that there would be no prosecution? - Yes.

And we have got to the stage where you don't feel there was anything new in these complaints, is that right? - I had been told that the circumstances which were repeatedly being reported to me were not such that would be taken up.

Now, if we look at the other document you have, DCRA-AL-F1-63. Is that a communication dated 20th December, 1994 from Dr. Young to the Rector of Dunblane High School? - I am sorry, No. 63 I have is from Dr. Young to Mr. Sinclair.

Have you got a backing sheet with a reference DCRC-AL-F1-63? - I have DCRC-AL-F1 and document 63 within the file is not the one to which you are referring.

I will give you another copy. In our bundle it is D201. Now, looking at the second paragraph, is there a reference to "A letter from Central Scotland Police on this issue" and the heading is "Thomas Hamilton-Boys Clubs"? - There is, yes.

"Indicating to me that they are of a mind that the Procurator Fiscal would be unlikely to agree to prosecution on the basis of the evidence received to date" so that is prior to the 20th December? - Yes.

And then the letter goes on "As also discussed with you, I have forwarded two other letters/of complaint of a broadly similar nature to Central Scotland Police and await their verdicts on those ones". So those are the complaints which you later referred to in your letter of the 29th December, is that right? - It would appear to be, yes.

And does Dr. Young go on "I also indicated to you, however, that I would wish to discuss the matter in early course with the Chief Executive to determine whether or not the Regional Council should take action on its own right regardless of the police position"? - That is correct.

Now, can I just be clear about this; is my understanding correct that up until this time there had been a frequent and full exchange of information between you and the Regional Council about Mr. Hamilton and his activities? - There had been many discussions between myself and Mr. Flett either by telephone or visits.

Now, finally I think can you look again at a letter dated 1st September, 1995 from Mr. Steele in the Regional Council to Mr. Hamilton. The reference I have for it is DDH 356. If you could also have DCRC-AL-F2-30. In our bundle it is D232 and 233. You were asked about the handwritten letter which is attached to AL-F2-30. That is the letter which bears the date the 28th August, 1985. Have you got that? - I have that, yes.

And you were asked if you had seen this and you said you didn't have a recollection of having seen it before the 13th March, is that right? - Not that I can clearly recall in my mind.

I am not in any sense disputing your recollection. I am just seeing if my recollection of your evidence is correct? - Yes, that is what I said.

You see from the first sheet that this was forwarded from somebody in the Regional Council Education Services to somebody in Administration and Legal Services on the 30th August, 1995. Do you see that? - Yes.

Now, if you look at the other document you have, DDH 356. That is a letter of the 1st September, September, 1995 from Mr. Steele to Mr. Hamilton at Kent Road. Have you got that? - I have, yes.

Does that appear to take up the points that are raised in the handwritten letter of the 28th August, 1995? - Again, I would have to look at the dates but the letter which went to Mr. Hamilton from Mr. Steele was something that was discussed at the meeting which was held by the people who came together and we closely wished to look at methods of closing in on Mr. Hamilton. He had a habit of responding to letters by slightly varying his answers and deflecting what he had previously said and changing things.

That is no doubt correct but what I am really getting at is that in the letter of the 28th August to the Council a number of questions about Mr. Hamilton's activities are put to the Council. All I want from you is confirmation that in the letter of the 1st September, 1995 those questions are then put directly to Mr. Hamilton? - That is correct, they were.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: You were asked one or two questions in relation to what happened on the day of the 13th. Am I right in thinking that after your involvement with Mr. Mayer was concluded you went on to do other duties that day at the school? - That is correct.

Can you tell us what these duties consisted of? - After, before or during?

Sorry, after you had looked after Mr. Mayer? - Immediately on leaving Mr. Mayer I was conscious that the briefing teams or liaising teams were being put together. The briefing had in fact commenced and I was aware of the content of the briefing because I was a part of having attempted to facilitate putting that together so I made my way to the briefing room where a team was being allocated to individual families with whom they were to deal. I was given a particular family.

Can you recall approximately what time that was? - Yes, my recollection of going to meet this individual family was about 1.45.

And how long after the briefing was it that/that you met with that family? - My time in the briefing was very short. I would estimate meeting the family at 1.45, having left Mr. Mayer. I was in the briefing only for a very short period, towards the end of it, and then immediately allocated the family with whom I was to deal.

And how long after you had broken the news to the parents was it before you left the school with them, if indeed you did leave the school with them? - Yes, we went from the staff room area to a medical room which was situated in a different part of the building.

Having been in that room and discussing the situation, the parent I had was very clearminded and wished to be told as much as I could tell her at that particular time. She was a very positive person and we sat for quite a while and I answered questions for her. One of the things which was available was the opportunity to speak to a counsellor or a psychologist so I obtained a psychologist and came back to the room and spent some time there discussing things again and then I would think probably about one hour later we would have left that area.

Were there enough rooms to go round at that stage?

- I was in the first party of people to leave the school. I was conscious that at the time I was making my way to pick up the family I was dealing with there was a room available. However, I was also aware there were two or three people, we had managed to gain members of staff who were desperately searching through the school in order to find rooms to which we could take individual families in order to break the news but how well that progress after I left is difficult to say.

Can/

Can I take you back to the evidence you were giving in relation to the various complaints and if you could have before you the Production which was No. DFU22. I think that was the one which was given no other number. It should be a memorandum from yourself to Detective Superintendent Ogg. Do you have that before you? - I do, yes.

Do you have not just your memorandum but also at the very back a manuscript letter from the parents addressed to Inspector Mill headed "Boys' Sports Club"? It is a letter I think we have looked at already? - Balfron Boys' Sports Club? Sorry, this is one from Chief Inspector Mill.

It is right at the back and should be in manuscript. Your documents are perhaps organised slightly differently from the way I have them. In any event, perhaps it might not be necessary to identify that particular letter. Do you see that there was something from Inspector Mill attached to DFU22? - In this respect, this letter had come to the police and I believe Chief Inspector Mill had sought advice on how to respond to the matter and it was subsequently passed to my own office to investigate and deal with, leading to my going to see the family.

Do you have a memo there from Chief Inspector Mill to the Chief Superintendent of 'A' Division? - Yes, this is his memo seeking advice.

And that is the one which is headed up "Balfron Boys' Sports Club"? - Yes.

If you go to the bottom of that where there is a stamp which bears to be a Chief Superintendent's stamp, just above it there is the initials DCC. Do you know what that means? - Yes, that is terminology for Depute Chief Constable.

What do you take this document to have done? Do you think it would have gone to the Depute Chief Constable? - My interpretation of it would be that it is passed from the Chief Superintendent to the Depute Chief Constable.

Now, in the course of your evidence you indicated that you carried out certain investigations in relation to the complaints which were/were being made to you, amongst which was speaking to the Procurators Fiscal and also to at least some of the parents who had been making the complaints? - That is correct.

And I think you have also told us that you had discussions on an ongoing basis with the local authority? - That is correct.

We heard yesterday that there was a visit made by Chief Superintendent Holden to Mr. Hamilton. Were you aware of that? - Yes, I was present with the then Detective Chief Inspector Holden when he went by pre-arranged appointment to see Hamilton at his home.

And that would be another aspect of the investigation which was taken by you in relation to these complaints? - It was very much a case of Hamilton had been interviewed by the police before and when Hamilton felt he was under suspicion he was unlikely to provide any information. We hoped by speaking to him and going to his home we could elicit information from him regarding these boys' clubs, his committee members, the other people who were involved with him in order that we could gain as much information as was available regarding him and his activities and we had a number of questions for him. We were hoping that he would identify his alleged committee members and colleagues to us. Hamilton was obviously very reluctant to supply this information and became suspicious of our reasons for asking and began again to go over all the previous involvement he had had with the police, the Council and others.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: What was your impression of Hamilton on the home visit? - I think in one of the memos I actually wrote I say that he was a man who was obsessed with his boys' clubs. He appears to have no friends, no close family with which he was seen on a regular basis, that was on my information, and his whole life centred around the boys' club and his camera activities.

Considering again the events of the 13th of March, you said you met Mr. Mayer at approximately 1 o'clock. Are you aware even roughly of how many people were in the school by that/that time? - Just prior to meeting Mr. Mayer I had come up from the house where the parents had been and spent time going over the children themselves. I was then out from the school back down to the main area in order to bring up the social workers who were to form part of the teams to deal with the families and I remember having great difficulty in making my way through the crowds. I would estimate by that time there were certainly over a thousand people. There was great difficulty in getting through the crowds.

That was the cordon around the school? - Yes. Within the school itself there was tremendous activity of people coming and going.

Was there any person monitoring who was coming and going out of the school? - Yes, there were officers on the entrance doorway and identifications were being sought from anyone who was making their way in or out from the school.

ISOBEL MARTIN, Sworn,

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: Do you live in Drymen? - Croftamie, yes.

What is your occupation? - I'm a head teacher at a primary school.

How long have you held that post? - Seven years.

In the course of your employment have you become aware of Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

How did you first hear of him? - He sent a covering letter and some leaflets to the school at the start of the letting season for the evening lets at Thomas Muir High School.

Were you aware whether or not he ran any other boys' clubs? - I think from memory from the letter that he sent he said that he had established similar clubs in the Stirling area but that is all I can remember. He certainly didn't have any in the local area. That was the first contact I had had from him.

What/

What ages were the children at which the club was aimed? - It was from our Primary 4 to Primary 7 which is about eight to 11.

Were you aware that that club started up in your area? - Yes, there was a problem at the beginning. He sent the first set of leaflets and then myself and other head teachers received a letter from him saying that there had been a problem with accommodation. He had been promised a large gym and had been then subsequently given a smaller gym which he didn't find suitable and he apologised for the delay in the start and asked if he could send out a further leaflet to the children.

In considering the next part of evidence asking about any correspondence you had, if I can ask you not to identify the persons who sent you any correspondence so as to preserve the privacy of the people involved? - Yes.

Did/

4.10 p.m.

Did you receive any further correspondence following on your starting of the club? - No.

Did any parents of children at your school contact you regarding the club? - Yes.

When was that? - On the 1st March, 1996.

What were they saying to you? - The parent who came to see me had concerns about Mr. Hamilton's dealings with her son.

What was the concern? - She felt that his behaviour towards her child wasn't appropriate and I agreed with her.

What had he done? - He appeared to be taking an exceptional interest in her son and also in one of his friends but more particularly her son; he had telephoned her and offered to pick up the child before he was taking him on to the Thursday Club which was not a club that he had advertised with us which was on Monday in the local High School; this was an extra club he was taking them to in Stirling somewhere.

Is that all the parent was concerned about? - She was concerned about the fact that he had shown the boys photographs of wild animals, he had shown them a gun which he had kept in the mini-bus that he transported the boys in and he had been lengthening the amount of time that was involved between the pick-up time between the boy's house to the time he was collecting the other children at the Thomas Muir High School and this was working out initially from 15 minutes and it was extending to 30, 35 minutes ahead of the time that he was collecting the other children at Thomas Muir which meant he spent that time sitting in the mini-bus with her son. He had also asked her son if he liked the film "Alien" and offered to give him a video of it to take home to watch; he had offered..... he said to her son that he went shooting and he offered to take the boy with him.

You/

You mentioned a video there; are you aware of what Certificate "Alien" is? - I believe when it was originally in the cinema it was an 18, it is at least 15; I know it was shown on television after the watershed of 9 o'clock and it is not a film that I would consider suitable for a child of this particular boy's age.

What is that age? - 11.

What did you do with the information contained in the complaint? - I made notes over a period of an hour with the mother concerned on the afternoon of the 1st March and I put these into..... first of all on that morning I was given part of the information and I contacted the Education Officers in Dumbarton for some advice because it didn't really appear to me a straightforward case of looking at child protection as such within the standard circular we had at the time in Strathclyde Region which was Standard Circular 57; after getting some advice from the Education Officer in the Divisional Office in Dumbarton I took notes from the parents and put these in the form of a letter to the Social Work Department which was based in Balmuildy Road in Bishopbriggs; I wasn't able to contact the Social Work by telephone on that afternoon.

Did you have further contact with the Social Work Department? - Not for some time.

When did you next have contact with the Social Work Department on this matter? - I think Monday..... no, it was Tuesday, 12th March.

What was that contact you had with them? - It was initially a phone call to the receptionist at that office to check that the letter I had sent on the afternoon of the 1st had actually been received and I later had a telephone call from the senior social worker to tell me about what they had actually found out about Thomas Hamilton.

Did you receive any response to your letter prior to that date? - No.

What did they tell you they had found out about Hamilton? - The senior social worker said that they had been in contact with Central Region/

Region Social Work Department and that the Central Region Social Work Department and the Education Department in Central Region was aware of Mr. Hamilton and that he was..... I am trying to remember, I wrote it down in a report that I sent to my office; I think you may have a copy of that, I have one here.

The copy of that report isn't to hand.

LORD CULLEN: If it is your own note please take it out to refer to; it may be easier to find than anything else.

THE WITNESS: She said that he was an awkward person to deal with, he had been making similar moves with children in Central Region and they had already tried to do certain things about him but he was someone who knew his rights and we must be very careful not to defame his character.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: Had any action been taken in respect of Hamilton by the 12th March by Strathclyde Region? - Apart from myself I don't know about the Social Work Department but I sent off my covering letter which I am supposed to send under terms of the Standard Circular 57; I had sent a letter to the Director of Education, to the Psychological Services and a copy to the Area Reporter to the Children's Panel but as far as the Social Work Department is concerned I don't know what was done there at all; the only contact I had was that social worker in the afternoon and she said she would send a social worker to visit that particular mother who had been in touch with me; the reason I did try to get in touch was the Mum came back to me by telephone on the 11th March and was wondering why no one had been in touch with her from the Social Work Department because when I had interviewed the mother on the afternoon of the 1st March I had said they probably would be in touch with her because she was willing to give her home phone number and they would probably be in touch quite quickly because that was my experience in the past.

All the other activities of the Social Work Department were after the events for the 13th March? - I don't know about that, all I do know/know is that they contacted me on the 12th; I was contacted at home on the night of the 13th before the announcement was made in the Press; a member of the Social Work Department told me it was Mr. Hamilton.

No cross-examination.

NINTH DAY.

ELIZABETH ANNE SHARON WATT (42), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: Do you live in Alva? - I do.

What is your occupation? - I am an accounts clerkess.

I understand that you are on the Parent Teachers Association of Alva Primary School? - Not any more.

When did you cease being on the Association? - About two years ago.

For how long had you been on the Association? - Seven years.

I understand that at some time some parents contacted you regarding concerns about Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

When did those parents contact you? - As near as possible I think it was a year past February. Near the end of February 1995.

What did those parents say was concerning them? - They thought he was odd. He seemed to prefer children that we might have said were vulnerable children.

In what way? - Not very streetwise. They might have let people do things and said nothing. They were needing some attention. Maybe one-parent families.

Were there any concerns as to what Hamilton was doing with the children? - Yes. Wanting them to strip to the waist was a big concern and that he was very often on his own was a big concern to the parents.

Did/

Did they mention any photography? - Yes, a video cameras and photographs.

What were the photographs of? - They said it was the children stripped to the waist and that is what they didn't like, couldn't understand.

Did the parents say they were angry about this or concerned or.....? - Concerned.

What did you do in response to their concerns? - I phoned Central Region at one point and they told me, whoever I spoke to in Mrs. Challis' office said they would not send any of their children to one of his clubs. I phoned Mr. Hamilton. He sounded odd. That is all I can say. He wasn't very forthcoming.

What did you discuss with him on the telephone? - Just what went on at his sports club.

Did you ask him anything in particular? - I did when I met him. I also went and saw him at one of the clubs.

When was that? - It would have been about the same time. Maybe February or March of 1995.

What did you see at the clubs? - I saw some boys. When I went into the gym hall Mr. Hamilton was in the boys' changing room. I maybe should have checked but.....

Were the boys in there at that time? - I don't know. That is why I think with hindsight I maybe should have checked. There were some boys in the gym and I had to wait some time for him to come out of the boys' changing room. He wasn't even dressed.

Sorry, Hamilton wasn't dressed? - No, he wasn't dressed in the way, you know, that somebody taking a sports club would be.

Do you mean he wasn't in sports clothes? - He had hard-soled shoes on which wasn't actually allowed in the gym hall.

But he was fully dressed? - Yes.

Did/

Did you ask him about the clubs on that occasion? -
Yes.

What did he say about them? - He was very forthcoming, you know, he was a great sort of chap, he done all these things for young boys, because I told him I was going to send my son if it was a good enough club. I didn't actually have a son of that age group. But when I questioned him he was completely different.

In what way? - He became quite aggressive in a way and he didn't want to answer questions. I questioned him about being there himself, why he was on his own with these boys and he said he was allowed to be with 28 to 30 boys, he could be on his own and I said that wasn't right. My husband was a Cub leader and he could not be on his own with one boy and didn't want to be. You know, he just got quite angry.

Did you form any opinion of Hamilton at that time? -
Yes.

What was that? - I wouldn't have sent any child there. He was really odd.

Did you do anything with your concern after you had met Hamilton? - Yes.

What did you do? - I phoned the police.

Where did you phone the police? - Tillicoultry.

Can you remember who you spoke to? - No.

What did you tell them? - I told them..... I actually phoned the police at Tillicoultry before I met Hamilton as well to ask them about him and they said that he was known to them.

Did they say in what way he was known to them? - Just with the same things, these boys' clubs. He was known to them for that. They weren't very forthcoming about it.

Did/

Did they say what they would do with the information you gave them? - They would look into it. That was all I got. I phoned quite a few times.

Did you hear anything further from the police? - No, the last phone call that I made when I asked them what was happening, they said to me that I would hear sooner rather than later and there was nothing they could tell me.

When was that last phone call you made to them? - I can't really remember.

Was it shortly after the first one or had a long time elapsed? - No, I would think maybe two or three months later at least.

So this may be into the late Spring of 1995? - Yes.
Oh, yes.

Did you take any further action after you heard nothing from the police? - No.

No cross-examination.

RONALD MERCER (42), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: Do you live in Menstrie?
- Yes.

What is your occupation? - I am a caretaker steward.

Where are you a caretaker? - Now at the Dalmore Centre in Alva.

How long have you been there? - About three months.

Where were you before that? - Menstrie Community Centre.

While you were at Menstrie Community Centre, did you have any dealings with Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

How/

How did you come to have dealings with him? - I was the mini-bus administrator at that time and he came to me for the mini-bus.

When did he come to you for the mini-bus? - It was always a Thursday. I can't remember the dates.

Can you remember when he first came to you? - No.

Even roughly month-wise? - No, I can't remember.

Was it this year or last year or the year before that? - It was last year going into this year I think.

Last year going into this year? - Yes.

And how often did he hire the mini-bus? - About six or seven times I think.

Did he ever tell you what the hire was for? - It was apparently for his Dunblane Boys' Club.

Did you ever hear any rumours regarding Hamilton? - Yes, there appeared to be rumours flying about at one point.

What were these rumours about? - Well, he wasn't to get the mini-bus, I don't know the reasons why. He just wasn't to get the bus so when he came to get the bus I told him he couldn't get it but he went to my superiors and the next thing I knew he had to get the bus again.

So who told you he wasn't to get the bus? - My line manager. I don't know what was said but he told me that he wasn't to get the bus. I didn't know the reason.

And so when Hamilton asked you you just told him it wasn't available? - I told him it wasn't available.

Can you remember when you first told him it wasn't available? - I don't know the date.

Roughly/

Roughly? - At the back end of the year I think.

And how long was it before you had to start giving him the mini-bus again? - I think it was only two or three weeks and then he had to start getting it again.

Can you remember who told you you had to start giving him the mini-bus once again? - That would be my line manager. Apparently he went to see him or something.

Was the mini-bus returned to you in good condition after it had been hired? - Yes, he was the only person who would clean it out. He washed it and cleaned it.

Were there ever any items left in the mini-bus? - Yes, on one occasion there was a tin of gun oil.

Can you remember when that was? - I can't.

Did you speak to Hamilton about the gun oil? - Yes, the following week.

What did he say about it? - He said he needed it to oil some hinges on the bonnet or something of the bus.

Would the bonnet be needing oiled in a mini-bus? - It was stiff but I never thought anything of it, you know.

Did you ever discuss guns with Hamilton? - Well, he talked to me about guns.

What did he say about them? - He asked me if I had ever had guns or fired guns and I said I had had an air rifle when I was younger. That was about it.

Did he say anything more about them? - He said "Would you like to see some magazines of guns?"

Is that magazines as in journals? - Yes, and the following Thursday..... it was always/always a Thursday afternoon he came for the bus. The following Thursday he brought in a bag of magazines, books and stuff, and the following Thursday after that he actually brought a handgun.

Dealing with the magazines first of all, were these all about guns? - Yes, it was like buying and selling guns and stuff like that.

And he just brought them for you to take a look at? - Yes.

You said after that he actually brought a gun? - He brought a handgun in, yes.

Where did he bring it to? - He brought it to the Centre when he came to pick up the bus.

And this was one of the normal Thursday evenings he picked it up? - Well, it was a Thursday afternoon. I don't actually work on a Thursday evening so if he was using the bus in the evening he had to pick it up in the afternoon because there would be nobody there at night. He just handed me a grey money bag and it was really quite heavy and when I opened it up there was a handgun in it.

Where were you when he showed you this? - In the office at my work.

Did he do anything with the gun? - No.

Just showed you it? - Just showed me it and he wrapped it up and put it back.

Was it loaded? - No.

Was there any ammunition with it? - No.

Did he discuss ammunition with you at all? - Yes, he said he had thousands of rounds of ammunition in his house.

Did you tell anybody about him having shown the gun to you? - Not really, no. I didn't think anything of it. He assured me at the time that he had all the relevant certificates and stuff for it.

Did/

Did he say why he had a gun with him at the Centre on that day? - No. I assumed it was to show me.

Did you form any opinion of Hamilton in your dealings with him? - If anything, I would have said he was gay. I thought he looked gay.

Why was that? - Just the wee squeaky voice. A funny wee guy.

Was he intimidating at all? - No, not at all.

Did he ever threaten you in any way? - No.

Did he ever show you anything else when he came to collect the mini-bus? - On one occasion he came for the bus he had a briefcase with him which he opened and there was a full-sized photograph, a blown-up photograph, of a football team. A boys football team.

How were the boys in the photograph dressed? - They were dressed in football strips. It was a pretty smart photograph actually. There was nothing untoward about it. It was very well done.

Was that the only photograph he showed you? - That was the only one he had in the case.

He didn't show you any other photographs of boys doing gymnastics? - No.

Did he ever discuss with you rumours that were circulating about him? - Yes, he said there was rumours circulating and he said that people thought he was a pervert but he assured me that that was not the case.

Did he say why he thought people were.....? - No, he didn't elaborate on that. He seemed to think that I knew, he seemed to think I had been told, but I knew nothing about this until he told me.

What did he say about the rumours? - He just said that there were rumours flying around that/that he was unsuitable to work with children and stuff and he just said "I can assure you that is not the case".

I appreciate it is difficult with the lapse of time but can you remember when Hamilton showed you the photograph? - No. It was one of the occasions when he came to pick up the bus. I don't know which one.

When did you last speak to Hamilton? - I think it was the day before.

The day before what? - Before he done what he done.

So that would be the 12th March? - I think so, yes. On the telephone.

What was he saying on the telephone? - He wanted the mini-bus.

When did he want the mini-bus for? - He wanted it for the Thursday.

That would be the 14th March? - That would be the 14th, yes, and I told him it wasn't available because genuinely it wasn't available. It had already been booked. So he asked for it the following Tuesday and it was also booked that day as well so I told him he couldn't have it and then that was it. He just generally passed the time of day and then hung up.

Did he talk to you about anything else that day? - No.

How did he sound to you on the phone? - He didn't sound any different than he normally sounded. There was nothing.

He didn't sound angry in any way? - No, not at all.

No cross-examination.

KENNETH McLEAN (46) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: What is your occupation? - Presently a police sergeant.

How long have you been in the police service? - 26 years.

I think you are currently stationed at Falkirk; is that correct? - I am.

How long have you been at the Police Office in Falkirk? - In this current posting 18 months.

Where were you prior to that? - I was a detective constable stationed at various places within the Force.

In 1988 where were you stationed? - Criminal Intelligence, Police Headquarters.

What were your responsibilities within Criminal Intelligence at Headquarters? - To receive and disseminate Criminal Intelligence submitted by police officers.

Who did you receive such information from? - From a multitude of sources, particularly serving police officers.

They just contacted you whenever they thought they had something of interest for you? - There was a paper system at the time, and they would perhaps type an entry into a paper log and submit it through to my office.

What did you do with the paper entry? - Either form a file, mark it out for review by operational detectives, or it could form part of an inquiry, you could get asked for Criminal Intelligence. It would also be reviewed by supervisory detective officers.

What was the purpose of that review? - It may form part of an ongoing inquiry. It may form the start of an inquiry. It may be thought worthy of/of further investigation. The officer who submitted it need not necessarily be the investigating police officer.

If it wasn't part of an actual inquiry or wasn't used for an existing inquiry what would happen to the information? - It would be held on file for review perhaps in the future. If another piece of information came in about the same person it may continue to form a picture of that person.

How was the information categorised when it was stored? - In what respect?

How was it filed? - Under the name of the person.

So there would just be a large alphabetical list of all the information that had come to you? - Say there was a file for a particular person, it would be filed usually by date order.

And the names of each person would be filed alphabetically? - Yes.

Was there any review conducted of the information after it had been there for a period of time? - Yes, there was. Three years was the recommended weeding-out period when it would be reviewed by a detective constable in Criminal Intelligence and the supervisory officer.

What was the purpose of that review? - To weed out superfluous or outdated information.

Was that the only Intelligence system at the time? - Yes, it was.

For how long were you in the Intelligence Section at Headquarters? - Approximately a year.

So you had left by 1989? - Yes.

Was there any other system introduced while you were there? - No. I was part of the proposals and I know there was a stand-alone computer system introduced in either late 1989 or early 1990.

Perhaps we can hear about that from a later/later witness. Do you recall receiving Intelligence information regarding Thomas Hamilton in June, 1988? - Yes, I do.

Can I ask you please to look at Production DIntel F1D3? - Yes, I have it in front of me.

Do you recognise that document? - Yes, I do.

Who completed that? - I did.

You see there it refers to information regarding the Falkirk Boys Sports Club? - Yes.

And the difficulty with having money repaid? - Yes.

And at the end it says "Are you unhappy and generally suspicious of this organisation"? - Yes.

Where did you get the information to complete that? - Sergeant Low. You would see at the top of the form although it is marked as officer submitting, it was Sergeant Low from the British Transport Police who had telephoned me at Criminal Intelligence Office at Police Headquarters and that is the source of the information.

At the top right-hand corner there is a telephone number? - Yes.

Whose telephone number is that? - Sergeant Low's.

Towards the middle of the form on the right-hand side there is a box saying "Evaluation" and it has got A in one box and the figure 1 in the other. What is the significance of that? - There is a common grading system for Intelligence. A the letter refers to the source of the information and it is graded A, B, C and X. A is a person who is regarded as trustworthy and capable of giving accurate information. The numbers 1, 2, 3, 4 is the grading of the information itself. One would be believed to be true by the person submitting it to the best of their knowledge, and it could go to -- well, A1 in this instance is Sergeant Low who has telephoned/telephoned the information which he believed to be true and accurate and he himself is believed to be a responsible person. It can go to X4 which would be an anonymous telephone call. By looking at the evaluation you can form a judgement as to whether the Intelligence has accuracy or weight.

Again looking at the form, above that box there is a line marked date, and the date given is 22nd June, 1988? - Yes.

What is that the date of? - The date I received the information and physically typed that on the form.

Would that be the day when you typed the entry into the log or shortly after? - I can't be 100 per cent accurate but it would be on that day I received the information.

In the lower half of the form there is a number of different boxes and headings in which little is written. What is the purpose of that part of the form? - These relate to an administrative documentary system for further disseminating the information.

What do you mean by further disseminating? - It may be, as an example, some person in Stirling gave the police information about a person in Glasgow. This is of no relevance to the police in Stirling and we would transfer that information to the police at Glasgow albeit keeping a copy in our own area: or it may be mentioned in publications, and it may be of sufficient interest to go to a national police publication for relevant consideration by investigating police officers elsewhere.

In what circumstances would you tell another Force about information you received? - When an officer from another Force phoned to see what information we had on any person, the officer phoning would get the information: or if we had information that I described coming in from a local as to a person living in another area, they would routinely get that information on that person: or if his alleged criminal activity was taking place in another police area they would get that information.

In/

In what circumstances would the information be published in a police publication? - In terms of Intelligence appearing in such publications, it would be done through Intelligence circles. I don't recall any current example of where an Intelligence entry would be publicised about an individual. It may be Intelligence came in about a criminal modus operandi, something of that nature would be published, or a novel type of local criminal activity that was worth sharing with colleagues elsewhere.

So there was no particular category of information which in particular would be set aside for publication? - No, there wasn't that I am aware of.

You mentioned police from other Forces would be able to contact you to obtain information? - Yes.

Would any other person be able to obtain information from you at that time? - No, I don't believe so. I can't think of an example, sir.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: I wonder if I can just ask you about the dissemination within your own Force. This type of entry, for example, which relates to children, would be any part of your job to transmit information to perhaps the Family Unit? - At the present time that would be the case, but in 1988 we had no specific Family Unit or Child Investigatory Agency, we had none whatsoever. In that instance I would suggest I would direct it to the Divisional Detective Inspector at Falkirk for him to review, make a decision as to whether it was worthy of further investigation.

But if you could apply your mind to a statement such as this which mentioned a firearm, would it be any part of your job then to transmit the information contained to a Firearms Unit? - I'm sorry, I'm not -- the information about a firearm?

I am just envisaging a log such as this in which a firearm is mentioned, perhaps just the display of a firearm to somebody in slightly dubious circumstances: was there an automatic procedure whereby you would have referred that information to the Firearms Department? - It wasn't automatic, it is/

is a matter of judgement. In such a situation you describe, it would go to a senior detective officer for review and it may well have gone to the Firearms Department but I can't say that with certainty.

No re-examination.

DOUGLAS HAMILTON (37) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: I understand you are a detective constable stationed at Stirling? - Correct.

How many years police service have you? - 11 years' police service.

What is your role within the Police Headquarters at Stirling? - I am a crime analyst in the Criminal Management Unit at Police Headquarters.

Does that involve consideration of Intelligence submissions? - Part of my duties is that.

What are your duties in relation to Intelligence submissions? - Basically my duties are to take any information that relates to the area I cover for the Criminal Management Unit. The Intelligence officer's desk is opposite mine and if he is not there I will do his job if necessary for Criminal Intelligence.

What Criminal Intelligence systems are presently available to the police? - A Memex system on computer. It is a computer system.

Is that the only system available? - That is the only system available to me.

Are there any other systems available to any other persons? - Not that I know of, no.

Are you aware there used to be a paper system for making submissions? - Yes.

Has/

Has the information on the paper system been transferred to the computer? - I believe so.

Who within the Force has access to the computer information? - Everybody in the Force.

Anyone who has access to a terminal....? - Anyone who has access to a terminal can access the information.

Do you recall in January, 1995 enquiry being made of you regarding Thomas Hamilton? - I don't remember January but I remember some time in early 1995 an enquiry made about Thomas Hamilton.

Who made that enquiry? - P.C. Anne Anderson.

What was the nature of the enquiry? - It was renewal of a Firearms Certificate for Thomas Hamilton. She came up to me regarding Criminal Intelligence regarding that renewal.

What information was she looking for? - Anything in Criminal Intelligence that we had.

Anything in particular? - Not that I recall.

Was there any need to seek that information from you? - No.

What did you do in response to the enquiry? - I interrogated the machine on what is called Textrack, which is a way of interrogating the information put on by officers in the Memex system.

How does that search for information? - I don't know the technicalities, but in the system there is four processors throughout the Force operational system and when someone puts an entry in one entry goes to that processor and a duplicate entry goes on Archive. And Textrack, which is a way of interrogating the machine, if you go to Archive, and if you had all four processors had any information on it, that is the system you use.

So you are able to get information from the whole of Central Scotland Police? - From the whole of Central Scotland Police Criminal Intelligence system.

Does/

10.40 a.m.

Does it have any means of gathering information from other forces? - No. Any information that would come in from other forces would come in normally by paper or by telephone to the Criminal Intelligence Officer who would put it on to the machine himself.

How is information put on to the machine when that information is generated within Central Scotland Police? - The officers put it on themselves, and save it so it can go to the processing.

Is there any review carried out of information put on to the system? - The information that is on it is reviewed by the Criminal Intelligence Officer or myself, normally on a daily basis.

And what does that review consist of? - Checking entries that are on to see if there is anything that should be maybe put on a bulletin, that is of importance, or to give to other forces.

And is that information being reviewed as it is put on? - It may be a couple of days later, depending on when there is somebody to do it.

Is any subsequent review carried out of the information, or does it accumulate? - It accumulates.

If a search is being made of the system, by what category is that search made? - I don't understand that.

Is the information filed by surname or by the type of information? - No, it is not filed by anything. It is a big pool of information, and depending on how you interrogate, what the query is that goes in will depend on what comes out. Once an office has put it in I don't do anything else with it. I just read what is on the screen by interrogating it by putting in the name and address, car registration, or whatever I am looking for, and it will give it back to me.

It will throw anything that matches back?/

back? - It will throw anything it matches back.

Is the information contained within that system notified in particular to any other parts of the Central Scotland Police? - Not as such. Because every officer, or civilians who have access to the machine have access to any information that is on it, from Criminal Intelligence. There is nothing hidden on it.

For example if something went on regarding children, and possible crimes against children, is that specifically brought to the attention of the Family Unit? - It may be. The Criminal Intelligence Officer may contact them and tell them to look at that entry.

Who is the Criminal Intelligence Officer? - Detective Constable David Plain.

Similarly if there was any intelligence held regarding firearms, would that be notified to the persons dealing with the renewal of firearms certificates? - It if was of importance. Criminal Intelligence can be a lot of hearsay evidence, it can be a lot of third-hand information, so it depends on what the information was, and it depends who it was given to.

Do the persons dealing with firearms certificates have access to the information system? - Yes.

Do you have any way of ranking the reliability of the information put on to the intelligence system? - Yes.

And what is that? - It is put on by numbers and letters. A1 is the best information. X4 means you don't really know if it is reliable or not, and it comes down the scale.

You said you carried out an inquiry in response to the request by Miss Anderson. Did that provide any information about Hamilton? - It didn't. As far as I can recall it didn't give anything on Thomas Hamilton, who was applying for renewal of his firearms certificate.

Is that no information at all at that time?/

time? - Not that I can recall.

Have you subsequently checked the system for information about Thomas Hamilton? - I have.

And were you able to find any information on that occasion? - Yes.

Could I ask you please to look at some Productions. They are D INTEL F1, D10, 11 and 12, and they are respectively D10, 11 and 12 within Volume I(iii).

Can I ask you please firstly to look at the document D10 INTEL. Do you see what that is? - A Criminal Intelligence submission which has been printed off from the machine.

And is that something that would be printed out from the Textrack system? - No. This is from the normal system. Textrack prints it off differently, but the same information -- but that has been taken from the normal database, not Textrack.

Just to be clear about this, what is the difference between Textrack and the normal system? - Textrack -- when I print out on my machine it is a tractafed paper -- and not as neat as that.

But both systems have the same information? - Both systems have the same information. And if I was printing off for somebody who came up and asked me, I would normally print off that way, that information there, I would go back into the normal database and print that off.

Which system do the majority of people have access to? - For printing purpose? As far as I am aware only the Trace team, Detective Constable David Plain and myself, can print from this system.

So other people in the force can screen access only? - They can print from Textrack, but as far as I am aware not many people will know how to print from Textrack.

So if they want information, they can call it up on the screen, and would just have to rely/rely on it in that form? - Yes.

Looking at document D10, are you aware when that submission was put on to the system? - The 25th January 1995.

Is that the date towards the top right-hand corner? - Yes.

It hasn't copied terribly well on the copies. And you will see that the subject matter of that is regarding complaints relating to Hamilton at Lornshill Academy in Alloa? Do you see that in the second paragraph? - Yes.

And there are comments there about Hamilton requiring the children to undress and taking photographs? - Yes.

In the paragraph at the foot of the page there is a reference to Hamilton being considered a suspicious youth worker? - Yes.

On the second page of that there is a note that Hamilton has been the subject of police interest in the past, but has not been charged with any crime; do you see that? - Yes, I see that.

And then perhaps it is a paragraph relating to the reliability -- it states "This information was received third-hand", and that the parent didn't wish to be identified; do you see that also? - Yes, I see that.

Would any action be taken in respect of this after it was put on to the system? - Not by myself, no.

Had your search for Miss Anderson been carried out before or after that information was placed on to the system? - I can't remember. I don't know the dates she asked for for the search.

Could I ask you to look then at document D11, and what is that? - Again it is a Criminal Intelligence submission that has been printed from the database.

The date of printing -- that is the one in the top left-hand corner, is it? - Yes, that is the/

the date this actual physical one I have here in front of me has been printed off.

But again you see the date it has been submitted? - 13th February 1985.

Do you see there is a reference there to the officer who submitted the information, DF10191, and that is just the number of -- the police number of the person submitting the information? - Yes.

I think that number -- well, a different number, but a number was given on document D10 also? - Yes, another officer.

BY LORD CULLEN: Does "Entry Classification" refer to the grading of reliability? - Yes.

If you just look back at D10, the one you were looking at before, there doesn't appear to be any grading, it is blank; is that right? - That is correct.

Is that normal? - Yes. Quite often officers don't know what to grade it, so they just leave it blank.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: And do you see the subject matter of this complaint is similar to the other one, in that children are being required to wear swimming trunks when attending Clubs run by Hamilton? - Yes.

And the informant, who is unnamed, has expressed his concern for the safety of the boys attending the Club? - Yes.

And it is also recorded that the informant had been asked to contact Inspector Ross and/or the Family Unit so that further inquiry can be made into the allegation immediately? - Yes.

The name given at the bottom of the form there is PC D. Forbes. Would that be him that had instructed the informant to contact Inspector Ross, or would it be the person dealing with the information? - No, it would be Constable Forbes.

Would any further action be taken in respect/respect of this submission? - Not by myself, no.

BY LORD CULLEN: What is an MO? - "Modus Operandi".

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: Could I ask you now please to look at document D12. Do you see that is another Criminal Intelligence submission? - Yes.

In the top left-hand corner it has got the same printing date of 10th April 1996? - Yes.

What date was this submission made? - The 1st September, 1995.

And on this, once again, there is no entry classification given for it? - No.

And the subject matter in that inquiry is that a reporter with the Daily Record had contacted the police to inquire about the above-mentioned? - Yes.

Is it common to insert inquiries for information as intelligence submissions into the system? - As an example like this?

Yes? - Entries like this are put on, yes.

Would any information be provided to the journalist seeking details? - I can't comment. I wasn't the officer putting it on, so I certainly didn't give him information.

Was information ever made available to persons such as journalists seeking it? - Not by myself, no.

Would information be available to other police forces? - Yes.

Would it be available to local authorities? - Not by myself. I am not saying it wouldn't be. As far as I am concerned I have never given it to other people.

Are you aware of any policy regarding giving the information to bodies such as local authorities?/

authorities? - I would have to check with a senior officer before I gave information like that out.

What is the name of the officer you would go to check with? - I would go through my sergeant, Detective Sergeant Munro, who would possibly go above himself; but I certainly wouldn't give information to non-police persons without first checking.

You have said that you can't recall clearly when Constable Anderson first requested information from you. Could it have been after 25th January 1995? - It may have been.

And yet you said you found no information when you carried out the inquiry? - That is correct.

Are you aware why nothing would show up in response to that search? - No.

BY LORD CULLEN: Is it possible that there were earlier entries on the file which have been cleared off at some later stage? - No. The system has never been cleared. It only started in November 1993 and as far as I am aware no entries have ever been taken from it.

So there is no process, as far as this process is concerned, of weeding out has ever been put into operation? - No, not that I am aware of.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. LAKE: Are you aware of prior entries being made to the system on the old paper method? - I am aware of it, that there was entries made on the paper system earlier in the service. I may not have done it myself.

And if there had been a paper entry made in respect of Thomas Hamilton would you have expected that to show up on the Textrack search? - Some of the old system was put on to the new system, but what I don't know, and I wouldn't have expected anything to come up. If there was nothing there there was nothing there. I wouldn't have thought "Oh, there should be", or anything like that.

Are the paper records still available for search? - Not to me.

Are/

Are they available to anybody? - No -- do you mean are they available to the whole of the force, or to anybody in particular?

Well, is a search ever carried out on the paper records in addition to the search carried out on the computer records? - No, not by myself.

So you wouldn't ever have had cause to consider the entries that might have existed within the paper records? - No.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: You have said that everybody in the force had access to what is on the system -- right? - Yes.

Does that extent to a civilian employee, for example a civilian firearms examiner? - Yes.

Is there any weeding-out before information is put on to the system? Is it ever the case that someone will read a submission and say, "This is not important enough"? - No -- it would never come through to Criminal Intelligence. I am not saying someone might not ask their sergeant: "Is this worth putting on?", and he would say "No", but I would never -- Criminal Intelligence, by its very nature, is a lot of hearsay -- as one entry says, it is third-hand, some of it -- so there isn't very much that wouldn't go into Criminal Intelligence. If there is any information at all, it can be put on Criminal Intelligence.

And that is presumably because it is recognised that it is important to put together as full a picture of somebody as possible, and so one can never tell what information might be relevant? - That is correct.

BY LORD CULLEN: I want to be a bit clearer about this business of transfer of information. You have said that there was a paper system, and that some part of that paper system was put on to the computer; is that right? - I believe so, yes.

But you are not able to tell me what types of information or what criteria were used? - No, I had no part of that at all.

And/

And that would be happening, if it did happen, at the time the new system came into operation, which was, remind me when? - November 1993 I think.

So from that point onwards you would have entries coming into the new system that were fresh entries plus a certain amount, you can't tell us what, from the old? - Yes.

All available on a single system? - All available on a single system.

Now, you said that the old paper system was no longer referred to? - That is correct.

I am not quite sure I understand that. The paper system was in existence and it contained entries made previously, and these were not all being put on to the new system. Wouldn't the paper system still be of some use? - I have no idea. There was no access to me to the paper system. I would never refer to it.

Can you tell us who would be able to answer these questions? - Possibly the Force Criminal Intelligence Officer.

Who is that? - Detective Constable David Plain.

No re-examination.

DONALD/

11.00 a.m.

DONALD WOOLLHEAD (48), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: Are you a Police Sergeant stationed at Falkirk? - That is correct.

How many years' police service do you have? - I have 28½ years' service.

Although you presently work in Falkirk, is it the case in January 1995 you were working at Stirling? - That is correct.

While you were situated at Stirling, do you recall making a criminal intelligence submission in relation to Thomas Hamilton? - Yes, I do. Can I clarify that I made two, if not three, submissions over a period of 10 years.

Is that 10 years prior to 1995? - That is prior to this date.

Do you recall in particular a submission made in 1995? - Yes, I do.

What were the circumstances of receiving information to make the submission? - I received a telephone call from a gentleman, a relative of whom lived in the Alloa area. The relative, who was a female, had a son who was attending at a boys' club in one of the schools in Alloa. This club was run by a party named Thomas Hamilton. Through the phone call I learned that the woman was not happy with the activities of the club, although she could offer no concrete evidence as to why this should be. However, she was unhappy with the person running the club and I was asked whether this person was a genuine person, if I knew the person and whether I had had dealings with that party in the past. I was unable to answer these questions because of the information I held and the source from where that information had come. All I could say was that I knew Thomas Hamilton and I personally would not be happy for any child of mine to attend one of the clubs.

And that is the information you gave to your informant? - That is the information I passed on to be passed further.

What/

What did you do with the concerns that had been expressed to you by the informant? - The informant, his concerns I put on to a criminal intelligence submission.

Can I ask you to have in front of you please Document DIntel FI DI0 which is document DI0 of I(III)? - Yes, that is a copy of the document which I put on the trace computer.

Do you see towards the top on the right-hand side, it is perhaps not copied well, "Date submitted" and then a date? Can you make out the date? - That appears to be 1995. 25/1/95.

Does that match your recollection of when you made the submission? - My recollection was that I made the submission more towards the end of 1995 but I made a submission. Having read the contents of this document, having scanned through the contents of the document, that is certainly the document that I submitted in respect of the call that I got.

And we have already heard reference to the third paragraph relating to concerns regarding photographs being taken of children who had been asked to strip for the purpose? - That's correct, yes. Can I say that the lady was concerned for her child but she was also aware that Thomas Hamilton, as she knew the person running the boys' club, had other outlets at other schools in Central Region. That is he was not only operating the boys' club in Alloa School.

You put this information into the computer yourself, is that correct? - Yes, that is correct.

Did you do anything else with the information? - I did nothing at all with the information apart from submit it on to the computer and thereafter it would be taken by a Department beyond myself.

When you say it would be taken by a Department, which Department is that? - It would go to the Criminal Intelligence Section who would I assume weed out what information they thought was of relevance and add it to anything that was current or live/live within the system regarding the particular person or activities.

So if that information was together and if anyone had a particular concern regarding the welfare of children that would be available by persons other than yourself? - That's correct, yes.

Now, you said you made certain other intelligence submissions? - Yes.

What I would like to do is refer you to the contents of the Intelligence file to see if you recall having made any of the submissions contained there. If you could have in front of you Document DIntel FI, the contents of which I think form various items contained with I(III). Now, do you see I think it will be the second page within that is a copy of a flyer headed "Dunblane Rover Group"? Have you got that? - Yes, I have.

That is Document D2 within Folder I(III)? - Yes.

Do you recognise that? - I have seen such a document but I don't recall whether I submitted it or whether I saw it in the passing. I have seen such a document.

Have you had cause to look through this file previously? - No, I had no reason to look through..... I take it you mean the computer file?

Or this paper file? - No, I had no reason. I have not seen this computer file or this document file in the past at all.

But you might have seen this particular document? - That document. To let you understand, I knew Thomas Hamilton in the early 1970s.

How did you know him? - I was involved with the Boy Scout Association in Bannockburn in the early 1970s. Thomas Hamilton at that time was involved with the Boy Scout Association in Stirling. We met in passing. I knew that Thomas Hamilton had left the Boy Scout Association under a cloud. I was aware of that and I was also aware that he thereafter/thereafter began to start up what he termed a group in opposition to the Scout Association and that was known as the Rovers. I know in particular that he involved parties, boys, from the Fallin area in his Rover Group. I know in particular that I typed out..... at that time it was a typewritten submission that was submitted in connection with criminal intelligence and I know I typed out and referred such a submission to my senior management in respect of the Dunblane Rover Group and in particular in connection with Fallin boys.

Can I ask you to look through that folder in front of you please and see if you can identify the submissions made by you? - No, there are no submissions that I can find, typewritten or otherwise, which were submitted by me within that folder.

They may have been submissions that were weeded out as part of the ongoing review of intelligence information? - Yes, they could well have been. They went back several years.

Can you recall when you made these two submissions? - The submission regarding the Rover Group was made just after the Rover Group started and I know that that, according to the flyer, is 1981.

What was the subject matter of that submission? - The subject matter was purely that Thomas Hamilton had started up a group known as the Rovers in opposition to the Scout Association and that he had in fact influenced some boys from Fallin to join that group. The influence was in the way of transport to the group, camps which were largely paid for by Hamilton and on occasions he would take boys in his vehicle and buy them chips, sweets or whatever on the road back from camp or from a meeting. There were only certain boys apparently received this treatment and these were the favourites.

And why was that submission made? - The submission was made because I had known Thomas Hamilton in the 1970s and I disliked Thomas Hamilton. I knew him through the Scout Association and I knew how the Scout Association finished with him. I did not like what I had heard in the background/background regarding Thomas Hamilton's Rover Group, nor the activities to which he put boys in the Rover Group. I had no evidence whatsoever to suggest there was any criminal intention but my own thoughts, even in the 1970s, were that Thomas Hamilton was just not quite kosher. He was not one I particularly liked and I would certainly steer clear of him and that was in relation to the activities with camps and visits and with transport in connection with the young lads.

When did you make the second submission which you referred to? - I'm not certain about that but I certainly made one submission in connection with the Rover Group which to me was the first submission. The second one was when he gave up the Rover Group and began to take a school let. I think there was only one school let in Stirling of which I am aware. This was on a similar basis to the latter school lets which were reported by me to Criminal Intelligence. My information was that he had taken a school let in a school in Stirling with the intention of starting a boys' club. That is when the Rover Group folded. The Rover Group, as a matter of interest, folded I think because of local gossip regarding Hamilton.

So your concerns in the second submission would be broadly as those in relation to the first submission? - That is correct. The second submission referred to one school and then it became quiet for a while when that boys' club in the school folded and then this again came to light in 1995 when Hamilton re-appeared on the scene. I am not saying he has not been on the scene in between times but he became visible on the boys' club scene.

Were you ever asked for information about Hamilton by another police force? - Yes, I would imagine this to be the late 1970s or the early 1980s. I'm not aware of the exact year even. I received a phone call from an officer at Dumbarton, which when verified was certainly the Police Station at Dumbarton, regarding an incident at Loch Lomond where Thomas Hamilton's boat had gone on fire. According to the officer, there had been a camp with lads at Loch Lomond and during some activity the boat had been burned so severely that the boat was written off. I was asked by the officer for a background on Hamilton and was there any reason why the/

the boat should go up in flames. In other words, did I know of any reason why he should burn his own boat as it were. I explained that Hamilton had been the subject of a submission by me but that I had no reason whatsoever to consider that Hamilton was criminal, was up to any particular criminal activity or had any criminal intentions. I knew Hamilton as I made the officer aware but I could give no reason why he would deliberately set a boat on fire if that is what the officer meant. I was able to give him purely a scanty background but certainly without any concrete evidence of any criminal activity.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: There is really just one matter I would like to ask you about. If I can take you back to your submission dated 25th January 1995? - Yes, I have it here.

Do we see from that that you have recorded at that time boys were being encouraged to strip in order that photographs could be taken to show the shape of their bodies? - Yes, that is correct.

And that they were being told by Hamilton that the photographs would be sent on to other parties involved in professional football? - That is correct.

And that that could lead to careers as professional footballers for the children concerned? - Yes, that is correct.

Would it be fair to say that what you are recording here is a deception by Hamilton of the children? - I think deception conjures up some form of criminal offence and I am really not aware that I could agree with you on that.

I am not actually suggesting a criminal offence. I am just suggesting that he was encouraging them to submit to this activity without in fact honouring the promise or perhaps had no intention of carrying out what he had undertaken to do? - I would agree that as far as I am concerned I know of no outlet between Hamilton and any professional footballer that would allow Hamilton more access to boys being presented at a football club than any other source. I would agree there. Probably/

Probably, yes, I will say that Hamilton gave them a goal but it was a goal that as far as I was concerned he could not keep with the boys.

Yes, I quite understand what you say, that that may not be a criminal offence, but it would be deceitful conduct, wouldn't it?
- It is very difficult to say. I think schools pupils are given goals. "If you do this then perhaps you will receive some form of accolade" or "If you keep to this you will be physically fit" but really it is left to the boys. Certainly there was no medal, there was no merit at the end because the merit didn't exist. He didn't have the contacts.

No re-examination.

SCOTT THOMAS DEWAR (24), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: What is your occupation?

- I am Computer Services Manager for Central Scotland Police.

Is that within their Headquarters in Stirling? - I am based in Alloa.

For how long have you worked as Computer Services Manager for the Police? - For three years now.

What are your responsibilities as Computer Services Manager in relation to intelligence gathering? - Just the day-to-day maintenance of all the databases, including intelligence and the associated network.

You say maintenance of databases? - Crime reports, vehicle offences, intelligence, they are all databases.

Do you compile information? - No, I don't.

You merely manage the computer system that contains them? - Yes.

We/

We have heard already this morning that there are four computers which all link into an archive, a central archive containing information? - Yes.

Do you deal with all of these matters? - Yes.

We/

11.20 a.m.

We have heard the system this morning referred to as the Memex. Is that the one dealt with by you? - Yes, it is.

And searches being made on that system by way of Textrack? - Yes.

Do you also deal with a system called Trace? - Yes.

Is that the same system? - Yes, it is.

It is really a third method of getting the same set of information? - Criminal Intelligence is part of the Trace system. They all run on the Memex information engine which maintains the databases.

Are you aware of any difficulties that arose about last year with the transfer of information from local stations to the Archives? - Yes, I am.

What was the nature of that problem? - The problem was that entries on the Alloa machine were generating numbers which should have been unique to entries for Stirling. As a result when they were sent to Archive they were over-writing the Stirling entries. For example, if there was an Intelligence entry 10 for Alloa when it was saved it was over-writing the Intelligence entry 10 for Stirling.

What should have happened to the Alloa entry? - The Alloa entry should have had a unique number. The numbers are formed in such a way to establish which station the entry was made, and the numbers started with 0 originating from Stirling to 2 for Alloa, and the entries for Alloa were coming with a 0 at the start which indicated it was a Stirling entry, and that is how they are identified.

What would the effect of that be for someone interrogating the system? - If somebody interrogated the system locally like on Alloa they would see all the entries on that particular Intelligence entry 10, and if somebody interrogated Stirling they would see Intelligence entry 10 which should/should be different, and when they interrogated the Archive machine they would see whichever was the last saved. If the last saved was Alloa or Stirling they would see Intelligence entry 10.

If someone was merely interrogating the system within their local office they would purely provide local information? - Yes.

If someone wants information of other entries they have to go to the Archive system? - They don't physically go there. They can interrogate this on a remote database.

And which area was over-writing according to you.....? - On the Archive the Alloa entry was over-writing the Stirling one.

Are you aware of when this problem first started? - I think it was in July of this year, about the middle of the year.

When did it come to light? - Towards the end of 1995 or perhaps the start of this year -- it was December or January.

During the time in which the problem existed and had not been detected what would the effect be for somebody interrogating the Archive system for information which should have been under a Stirling reference and had been affected by the Alloa submission? - They would see the Alloa version with the same unique reference number. They would actually see what had been saved in Alloa as opposed to Stirling.

So someone interrogating the Archive would not find the information which was contained within the Stirling local computer? - After the problem had started, yes.

After the problem was discovered was it possible to restore that information? - Yes. Basically it involved re-numbering the Alloa entries which had been given Stirling numbers.

For a period someone interrogating the Archive system would have an incomplete picture of the Intelligence submissions that were available? - Sorry.....? Could you say that again?

Someone/

Someone interrogating the archive would have an incomplete picture of the Intelligence submissions available? - Yes.

I would like to refer you to three Intelligence submissions and ask you to indicate whether you are able to say whether these were affected by the problem. The three submissions are DIntel F1, D10, 11 and 12 which are documents D10, 11 and 12 in Volume I(iii). You will see first this is a submission created on 25th January, 1995 and appears to be in respect of Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

As regard the unique code number, is that the one at the top left-hand reference CIURN? - That is correct.

Are you able to tell from that number which local computer this information came from? - That would indicate it was a Stirling entry.

Are you able to tell whether this entry would have been affected by the problem which arose which you say was in mid-1995? - After investigating, yes, I can tell it was affected.

So someone searching the Archive system while the problem existed would then have found this submission? - Yes.

Can I ask you to look at D11. Are you able to tell from CIURN where that entry came from? - Yes, that was a Stirling entry also.

Would that have been affected by the problem that existed? - Yes.

Can I ask you to look at D12. Again does the reference there tell you which office created that submission? - Yes, again it is Stirling.

And would that have been affected by the problem? - No.

Why was that? - As I explained, the Alloa machine was generating Stirling numbers, and there are not as many entries in general from Alloa, and it is basically a counter which operates, and Alloa has never actually reached 1498 yet. So the Stirling entry was still entered in the Archive.

Has/

Has the information contained in D10 and D11 been restored to the Archive system? - Has it been?

Has it been? - Yes.

Are you able to tell on what date these two entries would have been over-written by the Alloa entries? - Yes, I can tell.

Can you say when each of these are over-written? - Entry 654 was over-written on 18th September, 1995, and entry 728 was over-written on 9th December, 1995.

So the first one D10, what was the date of that, when it was over-written? - 18th September, 1995.

And the second of the set, D11, was over-written on.....? - 9th December 1995.

So that would have been available on the Archive system for inquiry prior to these dates? - Yes.

Are you able to tell by means of the system when particular entries have been thrown up for searches? - I can tell when searches have been made. For example, a query on Thomas Hamilton, it doesn't actually tell you what that returned, and I would then have to go and investigate and look at the dates of the submissions to see Yes, that entry would have been there. For example, if there was a search on the 5th of May I would see that in the entries but I wouldn't see the date when the entries returned. I would then have to perform the query myself and infer which records were available.

Have you been able to find whether any inquiries were made of the system regarding Thomas Hamilton as from March, 1995? - Yes. As I recall there was an entry I think the first week in February, perhaps the 8th, there was a query regarding Thomas Hamilton, and that was a query that was supplied by the user.

The system did provide information in relation to Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

You/

You said that would be the first week in February? - I think it would be 8th of February. I would need to check my records to be sure.

Are you able to say what was being thrown up by that search on the 8th February? - I couldn't tell you just now. I would need to check that to see what was done. But there was an entry regarding Thomas Hamilton.

Can I ask you to look at D10 again please. That was one which we have heard evidence was submitted on 25th January, 1995. Would that have been available when the search was made on 8th February? - That should have been available, yes.

Are you able to say whether any other entries would have shown up in the search on 8th February? - I think there may have been other entries but not in relation to Thomas Hamilton the deceased.

It may be another Thomas Hamilton? - When we perform a search, if they state "Thomas Hamilton", the way the Intelligence works it will return all the entries containing "Thomas or Hamilton" or if there was reference to "Hamilton Street" or also someone called Thomas, it would also return that. You would then have to look through the entry itself to see why it has been returned to you.

In your capacity as the person responsible for maintenance of the computer databases, have you had responsibility for considering the transfer of paper entries to entries held on computer? - No.

No cross-examination.

MR. LAKE: My lord, the next matter is a letter which has been submitted to yourself regarding a parent's misgivings about clubs run by Hamilton. A copy of that letter has this morning been supplied to all the other parties and with permission I would now propose to read this letter out rather than call the person as a witness to give evidence.

LORD CULLEN: Has this person been told this/this is to be.....

MR. LAKE: No, they have not been told. I would propose not to identify the person.

LORD CULLEN: That was my other question. My first question was whether contact had been made with this person to find out.

MR. LAKE: As I understand it has not.

LORD CULLEN: I just wondered whether this would be preferable.

MR. LAKE: In those circumstances contact will be made.

LORD CULLEN: I think I would be happier if contact was made. I appreciate you do not want to identify, but I think -- I am obviously interested in what is contained in the letter otherwise I don't think you would be dealing with the matter in this way, but I think in fairness to the person that person ought to be informed what is proposed.

MR. LAKE: Efforts will be made to contact that person. In those circumstances the next witness is Mr. Mather who will be examined by Mr. Bonomy.

COLIN MATHER (38) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I think you hold the rank of Chief Inspector in Central Scotland Police? - That is correct.

That is at Police Headquarters in Stirling? - That is correct.

How long have you been in the police force? - 19 years.

What is your present role at Police Headquarters? - I am officer in charge of the Chief Constable's staff office, which is my most primary role in relation to the Chief Constable and Deputy Chief Constable. I also have responsibility for the Firearms/

Firearms Licensing Department, the Resource Unit and Research and Development.

So your role in relation to firearms is distinct from your role as Chief Inspector, as part of the staff office of the Chief Constable? - Yes. Firearms is only a small part of my responsibility.

Can I ask you what is your current role in relation to firearms? - I am the officer who is in overall charge. However, I don't have -- I have very little day-to-day dealing with firearms, that is performed in the Firearms Department by civilians. If there is any problem attached to any particular application this is dealt with by the Inspector who is my second in charge.

Who is the Inspector who holds that post at present? - Inspector Jill Dewar.

That is a post you previously held? - Yes.

Until when? - Until August of last year.

In August of 1995 was the current system for dealing with firearms applications already in force? - Yes. It was a system which changed since I joined the Department in 1994, and there was a gradual process over that period of time, so it actually changed between March 1994 and August, 1995. It is now completely civilianised, apart from where there is a problem in which case they go to the officer in charge.

Hamilton's certificate was last renewed in February, 1995? - That is correct.

At that time was the system currently in operation then in operation? - No, it was slightly different then. Now it is dealt with, it is purely civilianised, and unless there is a problem it goes to the Inspector. At that time we were in the process of completely civilianising, and what happened then was the file came through to the Inspector, which should be myself, and what I would do about it, if there was a typed certificate that the Deputy Chief Constable would sign and the RL3A form -- if it is recommended by the local Unit Commander that the firearms certificate should be granted/granted all I would do then is simply check the LR3A form to ensure in fact it was recommended by the local Unit Commander and thereafter sign it and place the certificate for the Deputy Chief Constable. I wouldn't actually go through the files or the information in the files unless some problem was brought to my attention.

Now, /

11.40 a.m.

Now, by "complete civilianisation", do you mean that both the administration within the office and the interviewing and inspections that need to be done outwith the office are all done by civilians employed by the Police Force? - No. The administration is all done by civilians. However, one of the civilian members -- I said there are two -- is actually a firearms examiner. He not only has an administrative role, but he also is a field officer; but by virtue of the fact there is only one, he can't cover the whole force, so he takes on board some firearms inquiries in the field for the renewal of firearms certificates. The rest of the force, the inquiries are carried out by operational police officers.

So it really is wrong to describe this as "completely civilianised"? - No. The administration is heading for, that is the way this has to go, it is to be completely civilianised. However, the actual inquiries, that is not civilianised, because this is carried out by police officers in the main, since we only have one firearms examiner. The administration is all civilianised in respect that now they deal with the applications; if there are no problems, the certificate is printed out and the civilian members of staff place these certificates in the Deputy Chief Constable's basket for signing. There is no involvement after that administration.

If there are problems, where is it that they are likely to be identified? - Well, there may be a number of ways. The first one is to receive a report from the Operations Division, or from any other member of the force. It is part of the Standing Orders that any member of the force who comes across information which may have a bearing on the suitability of a person to hold firearms, must notify headquarters of that. It could be picked up from a person receiving a conviction, or through the SCRO system. If a pending case is notified to our SCRO bureau, then that should be notified to the firearms administration. On SCRO there is an indicator which tells the operator that the person is the holder of a firearms certificate.

So what you are saying is that material information/information gathered by police officers has got to be communicated to the Firearms Department if it relates to the holder of a firearms certificate and his behaviour with a firearm, or any other behaviour relative to the holding of the firearms certificate? - That is correct, only if it is relevant to the holding of the firearm.

And when the renewal is dealt with the civilian staff in the Renewals Office ought to pick up that information? - Yes, and they would automatically bring that then to the attention of the inspector.

And that information will be contained in a separate file for each firearms certificate holder? - Yes, each firearms certificate holder have their own file, and that information would be placed in that file.

That is one area in which problems may arise or be discovered? - Yes.

Where else might one expect problems to be discovered? - Well, as I say, from the SCRO, if a person is charged with a crime we don't need to wait till there is a conviction, because that is automatically notified to the SCRO bureau.

So can I take it the civilian staff are bound to check SCRO for information on the application for renewal? - No. They receive that from the SCRO bureau automatically, because when the pending case comes in they automatically notify us if there is an indicator on the SCRO that the person is a firearms certificate holder.

So this is another way whereby information should get on to the firearms file? - Yes.

When a renewal is being dealt with is there this duty then to double-check SCRO? - No, because there are far too many -- certainly not in the Firearms Department.

You assume the information will already be on the file? - Yes, or at renewal time the inquiry officer must check SCRO and PNC, just to double-check, but when it comes into the Firearms Department/

Department we don't double-check what the inquiry officer has already done.

What about Criminal Intelligence? Do you check that? - No. That is the job of the inquiry officer, to check that.

That means that one of the areas in which a problem can be thrown up is by a double-check, as you call it, of SCRO? - Yes.

Another is a double-check, or a check by your inquiry officer of your Criminal Intelligence file? - Yes.

So we are relying in this area on the inquiry officer, who is a policeman? - That is correct.

Not a civilian? - Well, the firearms examiner is a civilian. He covers part of the force.

And at the moment he is working in which area? - In the Falkirk area.

How many other areas are there? - Well, there are three local authority areas. He has already covered Clackmannan and part of Stirling. He hasn't covered Dunblane and Callander areas and what have you, but is purely renewals he deals with, not the grants.

But at the moment while he is dealing with renewals for Falkirk, are there renewals coming through for Stirling? - Yes, numerous.

And they have got to be dealt with by ordinary police officers? - Yes that is correct.

And inquiries have to be dealt with by ordinary police officers? - Yes, that is correct.

So we are relying on them to do the SCRO check and the intelligence file check? - Yes.

We are also in these areas relying on them to carry out the other necessary inquiries relating to checking up on a person who is applying for renewal of a certificate? - That is the inquiry/inquiry officer?

Yes? - Yes, that is correct.

And that may throw up a problem? - Yes, that could throw up a problem.

Now, can we look at what happened in relation to Hamilton's last renewal and see if we can then get some context for this evidence from that? Could you look please first of all at his application form which is -- well, in the Volumes it is D91L, FA61. Now, is that the application form? - Yes, that is correct.

Now, you have been given just a form I think, and probably a letter from Central Scotland Police to Mr. Hamilton; is that right? - That is correct, yes.

And that is the letter reminding him that his firearms certificate is due for renewal? - That is correct, yes.

The letter has the renewal date, 14th February 1995 on it? - That is correct.

When would that be sent out? - That would be sent out at least a month before, probably at the beginning of January.

And the form would go with it? - Yes, the form should go with it.

Now, you have been handed it as a loose piece of paper, a form and a loose piece of paper. When the investigating officers in the present inquiry went looking for this where would they find it? - That should be in his Firearms File.

Is this a big file? - Fairly, yes.

And it would include all material relevant to his Firearms Certificate? - Yes, a history, his Firearms Certificate history.

The form we now see, is that the current style of form? - Yes.

It is accompanied by photographs? - Yes./

Yes.

He is bound on renewal to provide? - Photographs.

How many? - Four.

Anything to be done in relation to any of these? - The person countersigning the form should also sign one of the photographs to say that it is a true likeness of the person.

One of the photographs then goes on to the actual Firearms Certificate? - Yes.

Because we have only got three here? - Yes.

The person who countersigned this form, you will see, was Robert Oliver Campbell? - Yes.

From Stirling? - Yes.

He has to fit into one of a number of categories of suitable people to sign such forms? - Yes, that is correct.

What are these categories? - Just that they are reputable people. The categories have actually been extended. There is a list provided -- for example, members of Parliament, doctors, clergy, etc., but because of people living in rural areas where they might see these people not very often, then as long as it is a reputable person, then that can be extended.

If you go to the back of the form I think there is some guidance for completion of the form? - Yes.

And No. 6 is guidance in relation to the countersignatory? - That is right, yes.

Could you read that please? - "When you have completed the form, it must be countersigned in ink (in respect of an application made for the grant or renewal of a firearms certificate) by someone who is resident in Great Britain and who has known you personally for at least two years. A relative must not countersign. The/

The countersignatory must also be a member of Parliament, Justice of the Peace, Minister of Religion, doctor, lawyer, established civil servant, bank officer or person of similar standing. The countersignatory must also endorse in ink the back of one of the four photographs submitted with any application for the grant or renewal of a firearms certificate by writing the words 'I certify that this is a current true likeness of Mr., Mrs., Miss or title.....' and signing it with his usual signature and the date the likeness was compared. The applicant should also sign in ink the back of one of the photographs. A countersignature is not required in respect of an application made for a variation of a firearms certificate".

And I think if you just read the last part, Part 7, rather? - "The person who countersigns the application is required by the Firearms Rules 1989 to declare that he knows of no reason why the applicant should not be permitted to possess a firearm. The countersignatory should therefore be aware that the Firearms Act 1968 requires a Chief Officer to be satisfied that an applicant can be permitted to possess a firearm or ammunition without danger to public safety or the peace, and that the Act prohibits the grant of a certificate to any person whom the Chief Officer has reason to believe to be prohibited from possessing a firearm, or to be of intemperate habits or unsound mind, or to be for any reason unfitted to be entrusted with a firearm. Countersignatories should bear in mind the character, conduct and mental condition of the applicant in so far as they are relevant to these matters".

Now, if you go back to No. 6 there, you will see the list of people ended with the words "or person of similar standing"? - Yes.

Now, are you saying for rural areas in Central these words are interpreted loosely, or are subject to some other qualification? - Well, they would be subject to qualification in that if somebody was a countersignatory who didn't fall into that, there would have to be some good reason. Provided the person is an upstanding citizen, then that may be allowed, but each case would be taken on its own merits. I mean, there could be a good reason why a person here can't sign; but generally speaking/speaking these are the professions that we would look for on a certificate.

If a school teacher for example signed it, would that be acceptable? - Yes I think it would.

And that would be generally acceptable, not just in rural areas? - No, that would be general.

Now, if we go back to the beginning, to the front of the form, that is taken up with personal particulars of Hamilton; is that right? - That is correct, yes.

And that includes address, phone number and business. In his case he was asked to say what his occupation was, and in 1995 he gave what occupation? - Photographer.

Just to confirm the date on which he signed the application form, was 15th January 1995? - That is correct, yes.

And indeed Mr. Campbell signed it that day as well? - That is correct.

Going back then to the front, I think question 14 is: "Have you now or have you ever had epilepsy, and (b) -- (a) was epilepsy, and (b) was "any form of mental disorder"? - That is correct, yes.

And Hamilton answered no to both of these? - Yes.

And question 15 I think is: "Have you been convicted of any offence"? - That is correct.

And he answered no to that? - That is correct.

Over the page we then get details of the firearms and ammunition in his possession; is that correct? - That is correct.

And what were the firearms he had at the date of the application? - He had a 9 mm Browning pistol/pistol and a .357 Smith and Wesson revolver.

Can you just give the serial number of the Browning first of all? - The Browning was 245 PZ69756.

And the revolver? - And the revolver was 48 K8754.

I think question 17 then seeks details of firearms which you are authorised to purchase or acquire by your current certificate and which do not appear above"? - That is correct, yes.

Now, he listed four? - Yes.

Can you read out what these were? - Yes. A 7.62 mm rifle, a .22 rifle, a .375 revolver and a 9 mm pistol.

Now, could you also have in front of you D87L, which is, or may be, Form 192MD -- does that mean anything to you? 102MD? Sorry, it is FA57. Now, is that Hamilton's Firearms Certificate for the period February 1992 to February 1995? - That is correct, yes.

So that would be issued to him when he applied for the renewal before the one we are dealing with at present? - Yes.

Just look at the weapons he had at that time. Did he have the same two weapons? - Yes, 9 mm Browning pistol and a .357 revolver.

And just look at the weapons he wanted to have. Did he want to have the same additional four weapons? - Yes, he did.

So three years later in 1995 that is still the position? - Yes, that is correct.

I think that question 19 then relates to the amount of ammunition in his possession at the date of the application? - That is correct, yes.

Now, he lists 9 mm, 643 -- presumably that is rounds? - Yes.

.357, 203? - Yes.

Now,/

Now, these are both the calibres of weapons he possessed at that time? - That is correct, yes.

The next one is .38 Special, and he has 11 of them? - That is correct.

Would they fit a .357 revolver? - They would fit a .357 revolver, yes.

So they could go with the Smith and Wesson revolver? - Yes, that is correct.

He then says he has no .22 ammunition, but then he says he has 100 7.62 mm; is that right? - Yes, that is correct.

Now, he doesn't at that stage have a weapon 7.62 mm? - That is correct.

Would you go back to the Firearms Certificate that you had in front of you a moment ago. That won't tell you what he possessed at the time, but it does say he had authority to purchase 7.62 ammunition? - That is correct, yes.

Now, I think he also had to state at No. 20 the amount of ammunition he wished to have in his possession at any one time? - That is correct, yes.

Did he list the same five categories of ammunition? - Yes, that is correct.

How much of each did he want to possess? - 1,500.

A total of 7,500 rounds of ammunition? - That is correct, yes.

Did he also at 21 have to say how much he wanted to purchased at any time? - Yes, that is correct.

For the same five categories? - Yes.

And what did he say? - 1,000.

Now, in the period while you were administering the Firearms Department as the inspector/inspector with more hands-on -- a greater hands-on role than you now have? - Yes.

Were these sorts of figures common in applications for firearms certificates? - Yes, because the Guidance stipulates that there should be no arbitrary limits placed on ammunition or firearms.

That is Home Office Guidance to the police? - That is Home Office Guidance to the police.

But/

12 noon

But my question is were these figures common? - Yes, I think they would be. I should say that this particular point I would not go into any detail to check that. That would be available purely for administration but I know that these types of amounts would probably be common, yes.

Do you know whether there were examples at that time, February of 1995, of applicants to your Police Force being authorised to hold more than 1,500 of any particular type of ammunition? - I couldn't answer that. I don't know. That would be available in the Firearms Administration Office itself.

Now, No. 22 is the question "Give the reasons for requiring each of the firearms and ammunition listed at 16 to 21"? - Yes.

What is the answer to that? - "Target shooting."

And nothing more? - Yes.

That is all? - Yes.

And then at 23 "Where do you intend to use each of the firearms listed"? - "At ranges as per Condition 5 on Firearms Certificate 4588".

What is Condition 5? - Do you want me to read it out?

Yes? - "The firearms and ammunition to which this certificate relates shall be used only on ranges in respect of which a safety certificate for that class of weapon has been issued by the competent military authorities and has not been revoked or on ranges controlled by the Ministry of Defence if permission to use the range for that class of weapon has been given and has not been revoked".

Now, I think the next question, 24, is "Where will each of the firearms listed or ammunition listed be kept when not in use and what arrangements have been made for their safe custody"? - Yes.

And/

And the answer is? - "7 Kent Road/as previous".

So he must have given previous information? - Yes, it would be in his previous application forms.

And it is clear from the rest that he is applying for a renewal of Certificate No. 4588, is that right? - That is correct.

Now, you mentioned that this would come to you accompanied by a particular form completed by other people within Central Police? - That is correct. An RL3A form.

Would you look please at DI06 which is FA63? Is that the RL3A that relates to this application? - Yes, that is correct.

And we see that it has been completed by a reporting officer called Anderson? - That's correct, yes.

That is a Woman Police Constable? - That is correct. Diane Anderson.

It has then been signed by a number of other people. Who are they? - First of all by her Sergeant, Sergeant Donald Cowan and then her Inspector, Inspector Ian Cameron. Then if you look a wee bit further down where the stamp is, where it is marked "Recommended by", Superintendent, now Chief Superintendent, Jim Moffat who was at that time the local unit commander at Stirling.

And then if we go further down? - And then it has my signature at the bottom.

It is stamped there as well the 1st March 1995? - That is correct.

Is that when you put the signature on? - Yes, that would be.

Can you tell us what you were doing by applying that signature to the form? - Well, basically I was checking that there was..... that would be about the only form I would check. I would be looking to see if there was any information that/that was being brought to my attention as regards the suitability of the applicant. If I received the file through with the certificate they are ready for signature and I checked that particular one was "Yes", that was the suitability of the person, that there was no trace on the PNC or the SCRO computer, that he was a member of a gun club and that was all verified and the guns and probably most importantly at the very end that the local unit Commander had recommended that it should be accepted then that is basically my checks.

Now, can we look then at the various questions and how they were dealt with. Looking at Question I, that is "Is the applicant a suitable person to hold a firearms certificate?" and the answer was? - Yes.

And that is the answer given by Constable Anderson?
- That's correct, yes.

She is also obliged to check the PNC and SCRO? -
yes.

Which is the Police National Computer and the Scottish Criminal Records Office Computer? - That is correct.

What would the Police National Computer tell her of relevance to this enquiry? - Well, it would tell her that there was perhaps a warrant in force for that person or perhaps convictions in England. That is basically the main function of the PNC. To check the person isn't wanted.

Will the SCRO throw up more than convictions? -
Yes, it will throw up that the person is a holder of a firearms or shotgun certificate. There is an indicator on that.

Will it throw up pending cases? - Yes, it does.

Or if someone is on bail for example? - Yes, bail, it would. They don't have to be on bail.

But if they were on bail for a pending trial for something, that would come up on SCRO? - That is correct.

If/

If there was a pending case at all where the police had charged someone and it was simply awaiting processing by the Procurator-Fiscal? - Yes.

That would show up? - That would show up, yes.
That is correct.

Or should show up? - Should, yes.

But there is nothing in relation to Hamilton on that score anyway? - No.

Is it also one of the Standing Orders now of the Central Force that a check should be done with Criminal Intelligence? - That's correct, yes. There was an Order released about 1990 to that effect.

So there is no sign there that Constable Anderson has done anything wrong on the face of it? - No.

Question 2 was "What are the applicant's reasons for requiring the firearm or ammunition for which application is made? If for competition, applicant must be a member of a club. If for sport, applicant must have land permission. Specify reasons for each firearm"? - Yes.

Now, what is the information that Constable Anderson got on that? - "Competition and target practice with Stirling Shooting and Pistol Club".

What check would you expect to be made on that information? - To confirm that he was a member of a club?

Yes? - Well, we have a list of the members of some of the gun clubs. That one we do have a list. I would also expect an enquiry officer to ask the applicant for confirmation by membership card or some other means that he was in fact a member of the club. In any case, to confirm that he was definitely a member. At the last resort presumably, and certainly if it was myself, if there was no forthcoming membership card or some other means of confirming, I would check with the Secretary of the club.

That/

That is if you were the enquiry officer? - Yes, if I was. That is what I would expect the enquiry officer to do, though.

Well, there is in fact an indication on this form that any of that has been done. All we simply have is a statement which could be no more than a declaration given to the enquiry officer by the applicant? - Yes, it could be, but the basic training of the police officer and the Standing Orders, I would expect it would be basic police work if the person says he is a member of a club that they could confirm that.

Is any effort made to check up on how regularly the applicant is shooting at the club? - No, not to my knowledge. Certainly again I would expect the enquiry officer to at least check with the applicant and speak with the applicant regarding shooting arrangements and how often they go but other than that, no.

Well, is that right? Would you expect the officer to ask how often? - Well, I would expect them to enter into some kind of conversation but I would not expect them to sit down and ask them "When did you last go? How many times?" or even get in touch with the club to see how often they go because their evidence they are a member of a club is enough to satisfy under the current guidelines.

BY LORD CULLEN: Does that mean also you would not expect the enquiry officer to ask these questions firearm by firearm? - Is that No. 3?

No, I am looking at the reasons? - Yes.

You were saying there might be a limited amount of enquiry made as to whether a person was attending a club and putting firearms into use but would you expect the question to be put as to the particular firearms? - Yes, the good reason must be for every individual firearm.

Well, I know that but would the questions be directed to each? - They should be, yes.

So/

So you might expect the enquiry officer to find out whether the existing holder is making regular use of each individual firearm? - Well, I would expect the officer to check the firearms the person has or has asked to be allowed to acquire or purchase and if these fall within the criteria for target shooting and pistol shooting then all I would expect him to do is to ensure that the guns that the person has can be used at the pistol club and he is in fact a member.

So you would not expect the question to be put directly to asking whether each individual weapon had in fact been used? - No.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: But that may happen in the course of what I think you are really describing as a casual conversation? - Well, it is part of the enquiry. I would describe it more as an interview rather than a casual conversation.

Now, would the officer who carried out the enquiry have the existing firearms certificate with her? - No, the applicant would have that.

He never returns his firearms certificate? - No, because he needs it if he is wanting to purchase anything.

Is it part of her routine to check his existing firearms certificate? - No, I would not expect her to do that particularly.

One of the oddities in this case is of course that Hamilton does not appear to buy ammunition commercially for a long time? - Yes.

So can I take it that enquiry would not in fact reveal that? - No, I don't think so.

Now, the third question is in relation to the firearms held and it does say "must be physically checked by enquiry officer"? - Yes.

And you do have full details of each of the two firearms which he held typed into the form? - Yes, that is correct.

So there is nothing on the face of it wrong/wrong with the way Constable Anderson did that? - Not on the face of it, no.

And we then have the question "If the applicant holds or seeks to hold duplicate calibre firearms, state reason below:"? - Yes.

She has got information on that also typed in? - Yes.

What was the information? - "The applicant requires duplicate calibre firearms V12, two 9mm pistols and two .357 revolvers for the different disciplines in which he participates in his gun club".

Now, there is no specification in there of what these different disciplines are. Would you expect that? - Not particularly, no. Not under the current guidance. The good reason for having duplicate calibres could be, as it is at the moment anyway, that they need a spare weapon.

Well, a spare weapon would not relate to different disciplines. That would presumably be a spare for the same discipline? - Yes. Well, I would not expect..... because what happened is the form comes into the Firearms Department and the firearms examiner who is the expert in the different disciplines would tell us that these guns could be used for different types of target shooting and what have you but there is no stipulation to my knowledge, provided these guns are able to be fired at a gun club, which prohibits them from getting duplicate calibre weapons as long as they are for the discipline.

When you sit down afterwards, though, and begin to analyse this and you look at an answer like that, you can see that there is an element of confusion in it, that you have got a man seeking to have authority for two 9mm weapons and two .357 revolvers? - Yes.

Now, they might individually be for different disciplines, in other words, there might be four different disciplines or there might be a 9mm discipline and a .357 revolver discipline but you don't get the answer to that by looking at what has been typed on this form? - No. Perhaps it could/could be worded a little bit better but, as I say, the fact is that there is very little reason required for having a second or duplicate calibre weapon. Merely, as I say, it can be the simple fact that they need a spare and that is why I would not read into that when I would be checking the form in great depth.

We have had one witness in this Inquiry, I think it is Mr. Moffat, who told us that he thought it was difficult to get permission to have two weapons of the same calibre but that is inconsistent with your understanding of how Central Police operated at the time? - Yes, my assertion would be it is very easy to get two duplicate weapons because the guidance does not allow you to prohibit any person from having more than one calibre of a particular weapon. As I say, it could be a simple reason as simple as he needs a spare gun and there is no way you can prevent him getting that.

If we turn over the page to Question 5, that deals with the locations that were put into the application form and that is approved gun ranges and the question is whether they are suitable for the use of the firearms held or to be acquired? - Yes.

What is the answer to that? - "Member of the Stirling Rifle and Pistol Club, which meets and shoots at various military ranges in the area. The applicant has been a member of this club for some 18 years."

So on the face of it enough information to satisfy the enquiry officer? - Yes, the fact he has confirmed he is in fact a member.

And then the Question 6 was "What arrangements has the applicant made for the security of his firearms?"? - Yes.

What is the answer to that? - Firearms kept within lockfast cupboard within hallway. Thereafter within lockfast cabinet which is secured to wall. Ammunition kept within separate lockfast cabinet within another room".

On the face of it, satisfactory? - Yes.

So/

So as a result of studying that form it would appear every officer, and ultimately yourself, have signed it with approval? - That is correct. There is no information there at all to indicate that he was unsuitable to have his firearms certificate renewed.

And from you, where did the form go? - Well, the form goes for the final signing to the Deputy Chief Constable.

He does not actually sign this? He signs something else? - He signs the certificate.

The officer who carries out the enquiries, does she, when she enters the Police Force, get training on how to go about this? - Yes, she is trained at the Scottish Police College. Now the members of our Firearms Administration Office now also give local training. However, that is a fairly new phenomenon in the last year or so but certainly she is trained at the Scottish Police College when you first join the police.

What about internally in Central Scotland? - Well, internally at the moment the Firearms Administration Team give lectures and familiarisation courses on guns to new recruits or people who are not long in the police. I can't state what training was available when P.C. Anderson was at that stage.

What is the state of play at the moment then? - The Scottish Police College and also local training which is undertaken by our Training Department and assisted by the Firearms Officers in the Firearms Administration Department.

Now, can you have FA62 which is D92. That is described as a mailtab? - That is correct.

What is a mailtab? - I don't know. I didn't write it. I assume it is a piece of paper which would be attached to correspondence really as it is circulated and it gave an indication as to what action was to be taken. That is really all.....

The form that we have just been looking at, that is RL3A, is dated when? - When the enquiry/enquiry officer dated it?

Yes? - 13th February 1995.

You will see that one of the two documents..... in fact, I better check with you; have you been given two documents there as part of that Production? - No, just the mailtab.

FA62, at one stage of it is it addressed to the Chief Superintendent of 'A' Division? - That is correct, yes.

And is there an instruction to him to submit the RL3A?
- That is correct, yes.

And it is signed M. Johnson? - Yes.

And it has got a stamp on it? - Yes.

What is the date of that? - 16th January.

It is then signed at the bottom, is that correct? -
That's correct, yes.

"Officer" and that is Anderson's name? - That is correct.

Is that a signature or has it just been written in? - No, it looks as though it has been written in.

And that is the enquiry completed? That is the 13th February? - Yes, that is correct.

Which is the same date as the LR3A? - Yes, that is correct.

Now, there is some handwriting on this document, is that correct? - That is correct.

What does that say? - It is addressed and dated to PC660 Anderson. "With regard to pre-cons could you oblige and check that this is a definite no. I have a feeling he has or at very least is on CI", which is crime intelligence, and it is initialled by DC P317 which presumably is Donald Cowan, the Sergeant.

So/

12.20 p.m.

So he has asked Anderson to check the criminal record; is that right? - Yes.

This is because he thinks she may have had the wrong answer? - Yes, that is the indication anyway from that, yes.

She has answered him? - Yes.

What is the answer? - The answer is "No trace PNC, Criminal Intelligence, on Hamilton" signed, and underneath that "Nothing to stop firearms application going through".

That may be different handwriting at the bottom from Constable Anderson's handwriting? - I am not sure. It is certainly under her signature anyway.

And above her signature she has got "No trace PNC, Criminal Intelligence on Hamilton"? - Yes, that is correct.

So all the signs are that she has done all the appropriate checks? - That is correct.

And Hamilton's certificate was renewed; is that right? - That is correct, yes.

If you just look at FA57 which is D87, can you confirm that is the renewed firearms certificate. Have I got the wrong one? - That is the previous one which expired in 1995.

D101 which is FA64. Is that the renewed certificate?
- Yes, that is a copy of the certificate.

At the time did you have any suspicion that there may be Criminal Intelligence on Hamilton? - No. In fact, I probably didn't even see that mail tab because that would be in the file which I wouldn't have any reason to check at that time.

Had you ever heard of Hamilton before that? - No.

Now, what are the crucial elements on the RL3A/

RL3A that leads one to telling the Deputy Chief Constable an application should be granted? - Really every section has its importance but the one important section on this, when I used to check them and return them, if the local Unit Commander had not signed it either to recommend or not to recommend, because we as Headquarters administration have to rely on any available information on the applicant coming to us from Operations, and I have to be sure that the Operations Division are in fact recommending that this certificate should be granted before I can take it any further.

Then the Superintendent, he has signed it? - He has initialled it and stamped it. Certainly if the information is correct, and the local Unit Commander should also check it and be satisfied, and if it is not signed or initialled by the local Unit Commander we check up on that and I would return it.

The two civilian firearms officers you have are Miss Johnson? - That is correct.

Who is an administrator? - An administrator.

And Mr. Lynch, an examiner? - That is correct, but he doubles up and assists with administration as well.

He at present is on the beat, as it were, in the Falkirk area for renewals? - That is correct.

So if Hamilton applied today from his Stirling address for renewal of his certificate Lynch would have nothing to do with that? - That is correct.

Tell us what difference there is in today's system for Stirling from the system we have been looking at in relation to the last renewal? - Well, really there is no difference because -- well, there is a slight difference at Headquarters. The inquiry officer's procedures would be exactly the same as it was then because it goes to a police officer at Stirling to carry out these inquiries. The difference now is when that is received at Headquarters the Inspector no longer sees any of these/

these -- the firearms examiners -- sorry, the firearms administrators deal with these entirely unless there is a problem identified, if the local Unit Commander were not to recommend granting or there was a report submitted -- in fact, that holds good for any time -- if a report is submitted which casts doubt on the suitability this would be brought to the attention of the Inspector.

So Inspector Dewar would not actually have seen it?

- No.

Even allowing for the mail tab? - That is correct, because that particular item to do with Criminal Intelligence and previous convictions is dealt with entirely by Operations unless, as I described earlier, you have got notification of an SCRO input.

And the Sergeant has signed? - Yes.

And the Superintendent has signed? - Yes.

Would either Lynch or Johnson write anything on the form before that went to the Deputy Chief Constable? - Yes, she would -- any of the two, whichever -- would sign where I have signed the previous one.

That is the only change made? - That is the only change in administration at Headquarters. We are moving towards civilianisation completely.

Do you have the available information -- I can get it elsewhere if you are not able to tell me -- do you have information about the current number of firearms certificates in Central Police Force? - No, I don't have the exact figure. It is around 3,500 firearms and 1200 or 1300 shotguns.

Is it not the other way round? - Sorry, yes, the other way round. It is 3,500 shotguns and 1200 or 1300 firearms.

You have been referred to guidance as you have gone along. Can I now have D1, which is -- I don't think it is a separate number but it is a document headed on the front "Firearms log -- guidance to police". Do you have that?

MR./

MR. BONOMY: Sir, I am sorry for this, I have already asked that we have a back-up set identical to the ones we have in case the Production can't be found.

LORD CULLEN: Do we have a spare copy?

MR. BONOMY: I'm trying to get one. There may be one upstairs.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMY:
Are you familiar with that document? - Yes.

What is it? - It is the Home Office guidance to police on firearms legislation which is used regularly in the Firearms Administration Department.

Could you go to the preface which is on page three and the middle paragraph there says, "In accordance with Home Office and the Association of Chief Police Offices Working Party's recommendations this revised guidance is being made available publicly for the first time"? - Yes.

"It is not intended to be an exhaustive account of the law relating to firearms and ammunition or to make it unnecessary to refer to the Statute"? - Yes.

Then if you go to the last paragraph, "Because of the need to make this available to Police Forces well in advance of the coming into force of the Firearms (Amendment) Act, 1988 it has not been possible to undertake a comprehensive revision of the original memorandum beyond ensuring that offers an accurate guide to the legislation in force"? - Yes, that is correct.

I think it goes on also to say, "It may be necessary in due course to publish further revision". Do you know if there has been a revision? - I am not 100 per cent sure. I know in fact amendments are stuck into the book backwards and forwards but whether there has been a full revised book.....

You are not familiar with the revised book? - No.

I/

I think this is supplemented by your own Force's Standing Orders? - Yes.

This is memoranda which are sent out by the Chief Constable from time to time? - Yes, Force Orders.

And your own Standing Orders were last revised in 1990? - Yes.

Can you go to paragraph 6.8 please. Now, you will see this is guidance given to the police in considering applications? - Yes, that is correct.

And the following points should be borne in mind -- you have got that? - Yes.

If you go to paragraph (d) could you read that out please? - "It should also be established that the land areas over which an applicant intends to shoot are suitable from a safety point of view for the class of weapon which it is proposed to use".

And (e)? - "A certificate for a handgun with ammunition should not be granted (except in very rare cases) unless the applicant has regular and legitimate opportunity of using the weapon e.g. for target practice as a member of a pistol shooting club. Certificates should not, however, be issued for "fast draw" competitions for which adequate non-convertible imitation firearms are readily available".

So this is guidance really from the Home Office checking out on how applicants actually use the handgun? - Yes.

Could you go slightly earlier in paragraph 6 to 6.2 and confirm that deals with checking out whether an applicant is a suitable person for a firearms certificate? - Yes.

Could you read 6.2? - "Before issuing or renewing a firearms certificate, the Chief Officer must satisfy himself that the applicant can be permitted to have the firearm (S)/ammunition in his possession without danger to the public safety or to the peace. This may necessitate an interview and consideration of his security arrangements. Where/

Where a visit to the applicant's home is considered necessary, this should, whenever possible, be made by prior appointment. Applicants usually provide a telephone number where they can be contacted for this purpose. This information is requested on form 101".

Is it fair to say this is consistent with the general tenor of this document so far as approaching an individual applicant for a firearm certificate is concerned, that the officers should be doing this by arrangement rather than by surprise? - Yes, normally that is the case.

And the form tends to view the holding of firearms certificates as something that people are generally entitled to as long as they qualify? - That is correct, yes.

It is a positive rather than a negative approach to the holding of a firearm certificate? - That is correct.

Would you expect your officers, if checking up on an applicant for renewal, always to have made an appointment to see him? - I didn't check that, but normally, yes, that would be the case. Basically they are asked to take along the letter and leave the letter with the applicant and ask the applicant to get in touch with them after that, complete the application form, and the police officers will go back or the person go to the police station, go over the form, pay the fee, and thereafter the inquiry is begun.

There is never any attempt to take an applicant by surprise? - No. Not unless there is some good reason why that should be the case.

So any applicant who is going to be interviewed by police officers in the ordinary course in connection with a renewal application can expect plenty of warning to get his house in order? - Yes.

You mentioned the arbitrary limits in the course of your evidence. Would you look at 6.36 in the guidance given there? - "Each case should be dealt with on its merits and, provided the good reason requirement is met, no general arbitrary limit/limit should be applied in considering any of the following: (a) number of rounds of ammunition to be held; (b) total number of firearms to be held; (c) number of firearms per calibre; and (d) time by which firearms should be purchased".

BY LORD CULLEN: Just for the notes, this is in the context of an application for variation, isn't it? - I think it actually covers renewal as well, in each case.

Does the same apply in the other direction like a renewal or original application? - Yes, because they can vary their reason over a length of time as well.

EXAMINATION/

12.40 a.m.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:

Yes. I think possibly the way to view this is that any renewal application is really supposed to be viewed as a new application -- the same criteria apply? - Yes.

And therefore the applicant can insert different weapons and different amounts of ammunition, really inviting the police to consider the application afresh? - Yes.

Varying the weapons and the ammunition? - Yes. Well, it is cheaper to do it at renewal time than it is to add additional weapons midway through.

Are the fees different? - No -- not for renewal. I think from memory the renewal fee is the same, and they can vary it at that particular time. However, midway through or part of the way through they would be charged a fee for adding guns to the list on their certificate.

Could you now look please at Paragraph 14.3, which is under the heading "Security of Firearms and Ammunition held on Certificate"? - Yes.

Now, could you read the Guidance given at 14.3 please? - "Storage under Paragraph (a) should be in a locked gun cabinet or other similarly secure container. However, in deciding on the appropriate level of security, Chief Officers will wish to have regard to the individual circumstances in each case. In some cases, removal and secure storage of firing mechanisms, for example in a safe, will be an acceptable alternative to use of a gun cabinet. Where a cabinet is used, it should be in a protected part of the premises, not in a garage or outhouse, out of sight of casual visitors and securely fixed to the fabric of the building. A gun room offering a comparable level of security, or a cellar with a lockable steel door, would be satisfactory alternatives".

Yes. Just finally, would you look please at Paragraph 6.7, back to the chapter you looked at earlier? I missed this one at the time?/

time? - 6.7, yes.

I think if you just go back to 6.6, you will see that sets out the circumstances in which a person should be refused a certificate? - Yes.

Now, could you read the Guidance given at 6.7? - "If the grant of the certificate is not so precluded, the Chief Officer of Police has to satisfy himself on two points: that the applicant (a), has a good reason for requiring the firearm or ammunition in respect of which the application is made; and (b) can be permitted to have the firearm or ammunition without danger to public safety or to the peace. Forces will normally be expected to give reasons for their decision to refuse an application for a firearms certificate".

BY LORD CULLEN: Just one other point. If you would look at 6.8, and turn on to little i? - Yes.

I think you will find in the middle of that there is a bit about good reason there, and also it says there that "No arbitrary limit should be applied to the number of firearms which may be held"? - Yes.

So that is in the context of an application for a firearms certificate, and presumably also for renewal? - For renewal, yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: You explained that material information gathered by police officer would be communicated to the Firearms Department? - Yes.

That is perhaps more general information about a holder of a Firearms Certificate? - No, only relevant information -- not every piece of information.

Yes. I was just coming on to that. The qualifying criterion is that it is relevant information? - Yes.

Is there any more specific guidance to police officers about what is or may be relevant? - No. Basically the guidance, which is contained within Force Standing Orders is that anything which the/

the officer would feel is relevant regarding the suitability of an applicant to hold firearms -- in other words, if they feel this has a bearing on that person's suitability, then it is incumbent on them to notify headquarters in order that the matter can be considered further.

So they are not told, for example, that information which reflected adversely on an applicant's character should be communicated? - Well, I don't know if it says that in those specific words, but obviously if the character of an applicant is called in to doubt then I would expect them to communicate that to headquarters for us to consider whether there should be further action taken.

And that calling in to question of an applicant's character might or might not relate to any incident involving a firearm? - Yes.

Indeed I think if we look at Paragraph 6.9 of the Home Office Guidance, which is still open in front of you, it does say there: "In deciding whether a person can be permitted to have a firearm or ammunition without danger to public safety or to the peace, the main consideration is his character"? - Yes.

Well, that is fairly general? - Yes.

Now, it was drawn to your attention that in 1995 Mr. Hamilton was applying for authority to acquire four new firearms, and those were the same four firearms as those for which he had sought authority in 1992; do you remember that? - Yes.

Would that be queried by anyone, that he had gained the authority three years before and hasn't used it? - No, there is no reason. If he still has the good reason he had when he was given authority, then there would be no reason to doubt that, and that should be answered when the officer is checking that he is still a member of a gun Club.

But do you accept that it might at least raise a question about the veracity of the good reason that had been given last time round? - Not really, no, but in actual fact the shooting organisations advise their members to look five years or more ahead, because it costs them more to vary/vary a certificate at a later date. So provided they are given -- and the only guidance there is with regard to this, as far as the good reason is concerned -- if they have met that criteria at the time, and that good reason is still there, then there should be no reason to take the authority off; and in actual fact on the application form for the renewal the applicant is asked to say whether he still wants to retain the authority to acquire these weapons, and as far as I am aware there is nowhere there that allows us to take that from him without the fact that the good reason has been taken away.

BY LORD CULLEN: That advice you have referred to -- where can one read that, the advice from the shooting organisations? - It is actually in a booklet they provide. I just can't remember the organisation. There is a small booklet I think in the office, and what they advise, if I can remember correctly, is to look five years ahead -- on renewals, and over the five years, to what amounts of ammunition and firearms they may wish within that period of time.

So that means an applicant has got to look ahead for a period of five years and to ask himself, before he has got the certificate, whether he is likely to require to acquire firearms say four to five years ahead? - Yes, if he wants to cut down the cost.

If he wants to cut down the cost. And he is supposed to have that good reason at the time he is making the application? - Yes. When he applies for it and asks to purchase or acquire two weapons, he must have the same good reason for these two.....

It does seem rather curious -- you project five years ahead to save costs for reasons you have which are good reasons? Does this work in practice this way, that people try to anticipate what they might need? - Yes, because at renewal time or at grant time they can have it done there and then. During the period of the certificate, if they apply for it, then there is two aspects to it. They can either take one gun off because they want to transfer it or sell it, and put another one on, which is actually free. But if they wish to add a gun to the list on their certificate, then there/there is a fee for that.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MISS

DUNLOP: To pursue that a little further, I understand that the current advice from a shooting organisation might be "project ahead five years"? - Yes.

Because that is the period of time till the next renewal? - Yes.

And you save yourself the cost of a variation during those five years? - Yes.

But the equivalent advice in 1992 would therefore have been "Project ahead three years, because it will be three years until the next renewal". Does that not take us back to the same question, that if the reason in 1992 had been that he was going to be using those four new firearms for target shooting, by 1995 he obviously hadn't? - Yes.

Following through what had been said in 1992? - Well, basically all he has to say is that he wants to purchase or acquire, and give the reason why. There is nothing to force him into telling us when, and there is nothing that forces him to buy these guns within that period. The only stipulation it gives is that there must be the good reason, and that good reason must hold good in 1995 as it did in 1992, and therefore on his application form if he still wishes to purchase or acquire these weapons, then providing he still has that good reason there is nothing we can do to force him to take that off.

But the good reason in 1992 was at some point in 1992? - No, the good reason is "At some time I would want to purchase these weapons", and then that is looked at again, and he may decide in three years or five years, now, time that he does not want to, or he does want to retain that authority to purchase or acquire weapons.

BY LORD CULLEN: So it is not limited to within the period of the certificate? - No, that can go on.

But supposing you have a man of 20 who wants/wants -- or say 25 who wants to apply for a firearms certificate, and he is thinking when he gets to retire at the age of 60 plus he will buy a firearm. Does he put that in his application, and it stays there as each period comes and goes? Is that right? - Well, as far as I am aware, there is nothing to stop him doing that.

But surely one would have thought what he puts in is relevant to the period in question? - Yes, but he is also reapplying for the "purchase or acquire", and the good reason still applies as it did in the first application, because he is still a member of a Club. If he ceases to be a member of a Club we would have to look at it again.

But I thought you were telling me his good reason relates to him wanting to acquire a firearm, whenever that acquisition is intended to take place? - Yes. It doesn't matter when it is. So if he applies at the grant time for permission to purchase or acquire weapons, we have to satisfy ourselves if he has good reason for that during the next.....

Supposing the officer said to him "I understand you want to acquire this gun. Can you tell me when you propose to do this?", would that be the kind of question that might be asked? - Well, I would expect the question to be asked: "Do you still wish permission to do that?" They may well ask "When do you intend to buy it?".

And supposing he said "Well, perhaps 10/15 years from now", what would the reporting officer make of that? Would that be of any significance or not? - I don't think it would be of major significance.

Would it be of any significance? - I don't think so, because the good reason would still apply.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MISS DUNLOP: Moving on to the question about a second gun the same as one you already have? - Yes.

You have referred to good reason for that being that the second one is a spare? - Yes.

The/

The only circumstances I can think of in which a spare might be necessary would be if your number one gun was broken or not functioning in some way; is that what you have in mind? - Or is being adjusted.

So in theory, since this is a very general happening, in theory anybody could have a second gun, because that could happen to anybody, that their number one gun could break or need adjusting? - Yes, providing they could give good reason; and that is where the firearms examiner comes in, where he could advise me as to whether that is good reason -- for example, with a rifle, it could be the weights are slightly different, the sights are slightly different, or very technical reasons, and I would therefore consult the firearms examiner for his views on that.

So that question of adjustment would have to be more specific, the applicant would have to say what adjustment was required? - Well, if he was putting it to a firearms dealer to have the gun -- I don't know the technical details of the gun, but if it was being cleaned or adjusted in some way then he would need another firearm to carry out his hobby or his sport.

Right. So when the applicant says that he wishes to acquire a second gun the same as one he already has, to say "I want a spare" is not good enough, he has to say why specifically he needs a spare, does he? - Yes. Well, we would ask "Why do you need a spare?" and that would be considered. But that is about all.

But if he said "Because the first one might break", or "Might at some point in the future require adjustment", would that be a good enough reason? - Yes, because he might be involved in competition shooting or what have you that he would then need a gun as a back-up, and that is acceptable under the guidelines, as far as I am aware.

You explained to us that there is no check, and you didn't think that any requirement existed for there to be a check, on the frequency of someone's attendance at a gun Club? - No.

Does it also follow that there is no inquiry/inquiry made as to the nature of the person's shooting, if and when they do attend at the gun Club? - No.

So nobody asks whether they are competing? - No.

You were also asked about I think it is the mail tab -- I think it is described as that? - Yes.

The handwritten entries from WPC Anderson? - Yes.

Now, she has looked at the Intelligence File on Mr. Hamilton; is that correct? - I presume so, yes.

And she appeared to have recorded that there was nothing to stop the certificate going through? - Well, there is certainly a bit at the bottom, but I don't know whether she has written that. It is under her signature, but somebody, yes, has written that there is no reason for it not to go through.

So it presumably follows that whoever the writer of that comment is is making a judgment purely on his or her own about the nature of the information in the Intelligence File? - Yes.

After/

1.50 p.m.

After an adjournment for lunch.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: You are well aware in the firearms legislation that reference is made to good reason? - Yes.

There is no definition of that anywhere, is there? - Not to my knowledge but the good reason certainly as far as I am concerned is the fact of the gun club and I think there is mention in the guidance regarding gun clubs.

Yes, but I'm thinking particularly about the point that Lord Cullen made to you before lunch time about wanting to purchase for instance a weapon, that good reason simply needs to be "At some time, some day, I want one"? - Yes.

And there is no assistance at all to you as a Force as to the amount of either ammunition or the number of weapons that may be possessed? - No.

And basically you said that if someone says that they might want something that is a good reason for you? - Yes, a good reason in terms of the guidelines.

But the guidelines give you nothing about good reason? - Yes.

They don't help you at all, do they? - Not very much, no.

In fact, it is fair to say on the question of good reason and on the question of volume that they are worse than useless? - Well, they are certainly very open.

And similarly, on the question of checking we know that Mr. Hamilton between 1988 and 1992 did not make any commercial purchases of ammunition? - Yes.

But you don't check the present certificate to see what has been purchased in the previous period? - That is correct.

Well,/

Well, why not? - Well, because he doesn't have to give any reason why he is not shooting his gun. Provided he is a member of a gun club that would be a good enough reason to retain the ammunition and the guns.

But I have to say that the general perception I have, perhaps of the guidelines more than anything else with the existing tenor of the guidance, is that someone has a right to things as opposed to a privilege? - Very much so.

So in fact those who have those weapons which are capable of horrendous consequences have at the present time a right, almost unlimited? - Almost, yes.

Indeed, is it limited at all? - It is limited to some extent but you are right on good reason and other aspects. There is very, very little guidance and very little in the way of limits as to when we can prohibit somebody from getting those weapons.

Have you ever been involved in shooting yourself? - At one time a number of years ago. In the police as opposed to in a private capacity.

I mean, we heard some evidence that at a shoot for instance, we heard from an earlier witness, a member of a gun club, that to fire 200 rounds of ammunition was probably as much as he would have anticipated ever using? - Yes.

How then can you justify someone such as Hamilton holding or having authority to hold 7,500? - By the different calibres. There is 1500 for each calibre.

How even can you justify 1500 of each calibre? - I can't answer that one. That is something which has been there since whenever, 1500 is a common amount.

But going back to an earlier point; if as a matter of routine you and other Police Forces checked an existing certificate to see the use made of the weapon before renewing, that would at least have alerted your Firearms Department to the fact that for a period of some six years Hamilton had not/not used these guns at all? - No, that does not portray that to us because he could get his ammunition from the club. He could make it himself. There is no prohibition on making ammunition provided you have authority to possess the ammunition under Section 1 and you could buy it or get it gifted to you by some other person.

But to make his own ammunition he would at least need cartridges? - Yes.

I accept that the recording only relates to commercial purchases? - Yes.

But wouldn't it in fact ring a warning bell if in fact there had been no commercial purchases whatever of cartridges or anything else? - Not necessarily because he could shoot the cartridges off at the range.

The other point is that my understanding is that he had the authority to possess up to 1500 rounds of each type? - Yes.

But had authority to purchase up to 1,000? - Yes.

There is no way that you or anyone else would check what use had been made of the 1500 held before another 1,000 were purchased? - No, there is no way of checking. When the officer calls at his door, short of searching his house and checking every round he has, there is no way of checking that. We have to go on the good faith and the goodwill of the applicant.

So Hamilton could go 10 days in a row and purchase 1,000 rounds of each type of ammunition? - Well, not if it is commercial premises. That should be entered into his certificate and therefore he could only be allowed to possess up to what is stipulated but again there is no way of checking that he has not got more stashed away somewhere else.

We heard from a representative from a gun firm that there is no check made and if someone comes in and asks to purchase 1,000 rounds, no questions are asked as to what you have done with the 1,000 you purchased yesterday? - Yes, I don't think/think there is any obligation on them to do that.

Now, so far as gun clubs are concerned, membership is sufficient and there is no check made on the actual participation? - No, as long as they have regular and legitimate access to the gun club to shoot if they so wish there is nothing that I'm aware of to prevent them keeping good reason or keeping guns just in case one time they decide they do want to go and shoot them.

Well, I have to suggest to you that good reason means something better than reason and it seems to me that the general tenor of your evidence is that as long as they can justify their position they don't need to provide a good reason to you. All they needed to provide was a reason? - Well, my interpretation of being a member of a gun club is a good reason.

But it is the membership alone and no steps were ever taken by your Department to check on the attendance at gun clubs? - No.

Or the use of the guns? - No, there is nothing that I know of that states that they have to shoot the guns.

Is there something to be said for a system perhaps whereby if someone attends a gun club they get a card stamped that they have attended, the date and fired rounds of ammunition? - That might be one option, yes. It would supervise it a lot better.

So that when it comes to renewal, the person holding the certificate has got to provide satisfactory evidence of the use of their guns and the use of the ammunition? - Well, I can't say no to that. Obviously that is one suggestion that would certainly be worthwhile.

BY LORD CULLEN: You say worthwhile. Worthwhile for what object? - Well, to ensure that they do need the weapon and that it is being fired because it is our interpretation that they don't need to fire the weapons at the gun club. They only need to be a member of it. The regulations obviously would need to be tightened up I suppose and we would be advised that unless they are actually/actually firing the guns they longer have good reason and the only way you could check that is if they got some kind of document stamped.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. GIBB:

The other thing is, I have to say, you have been questioned on this at some length but it appears really going right back on Hamilton's record that even away back in 1983 and 1989 and in 1984, on each occasion there is certainly a .22 rifle appears throughout as something that he does not have but intends to purchase or acquire? - Yes.

So we have a .22 rifle on four applications where he does not hold it but intends to acquire it? - Yes.

But you indicated to Lord Cullen that they could have 20 such applications and it would not necessarily ring any warning bells? - No, I have no knowledge of anything that.....I mean, the guidance states that there should be no arbitrary limit on the number of guns that someone should have so provided they meet the guidance good reason criteria then there could not be any reason why we could legally prevent that.

You may not know this but what is the purchase price of a .22 rifle? - I couldn't tell you.

What is the cost of a variation in terms of police fees? - I can't remember the fees offhand.

Do you know roughly? - No, I would be guessing because it is not something that I have to take into consideration at all, the fee.

But the cost of renewal is? Do you know how much that is? - No, I don't keep that information in my head.

Can I suggest to you in any event that the cost of the fee for variation as opposed to the cost of a weapon itself must bear no relation one to the other? - No.

And indeed there is nothing whatever to prevent someone who is going to go to the significant/significant expense of purchasing a weapon from requiring at that point to seek a variation instead to hold that weapon? - No, there is nothing to stop them but it is obviously easier for them unless inconvenient and cheaper.

Well, I'm really not particularly interested in convenience which you will appreciate, nor are many of the people who are represented at this Inquiry. Is there any reason why the provision that there is allowance for firearms to be purchased or acquired should simply be removed? - Sorry, can you repeat that again please?

Is there any good reason why in fact the provision that allows entry for firearms to be purchased or acquired should simply not be removed from firearm certificates and anyone wishing to purchase or acquire a weapon could seek a variation? - Yes, I would agree with that. I would agree with that, that that is what it should be, yes.

BY/

BY LORD CULLEN: But then this is quite common, isn't it, for somebody to make an application for the first time before acquiring a weapon? - That is correct.

He can't acquire a weapon in advance? - No.

So something has to be done in anticipation? - Yes.

And when the weapon is acquired then it is entered in the certificate? - That is correct.

So that is certainly one situation in which there cannot be a variation because there is nothing to vary until you get the application through? - Yes, and very often you find requests come in first because people are looking for bargains and when a bargain comes up, if they have that authority on their certificate they can purchase at the time and that is often given as a reason why they must retain authority.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. GIBB:
Finally, I think in fact if you could look at D82L. That is the memo from Detective Sergeant Hughes. Had you ever seen that document prior to these proceedings? - Yes, I have been shown it once.

Are you aware of whether the document or a copy of that document was with the Central Region Firearms file for Mr. Hamilton? - No, as far as I am aware it was not.

Have you had an opportunity to study that document before today? - Yes, I have read it before.

What is your view as to how that document might have affected your personal view when it came to Hamilton's renewal in either 1992 or 1995? - I would certainly have taken it into consideration but without further information on this, this document alone does not provide enough evidence to substantiate any allegations that have been made. The document has in fact been put in in good faith by the officer and in fact in terms of the Force Standing Orders he has been obliged to put that information into Headquarters. Having read it/it, I would find it difficult on that alone to say that under the current guidance and the current legislation that there are grounds for revocation on that document alone.

Well, that is one thing, revocation, but this is another question, renewal? - Yes.

And I think as you are aware, Section 30 of the Act provides amongst other things that if a person is otherwise unfitted to be entrusted with a firearm then renewal will not take place and I think you indicated earlier that the same criteria apply for renewal as for new applications? - Yes.

Are you suggesting that does not ring very serious warning bells as to Hamilton's fitness to be entrusted with a firearm? - Well, what it does is it tells me that there have been allegations made but his unfitness has to be proved. I need some evidence that he has in fact committed the offences that he is alleged to have committed.

With respect, you don't need any evidence that offences have been committed? - Well, I am sorry, as far as I am concerned I need evidence that this person has committed or done some action, not specifically committed a crime but has done some action which would make him unfit. I mean, it is all right to put forward a case as far as the allegations are made but what would immediately happen as far as this was concerned, a revocation on that document, would be an appeal and I would be most surprised if it was not upheld.

Would that memo not put you on serious guard at renewal, if not on revocation to very carefully consider Hamilton's application for renewal? - Well, I would want to look, yes, at a lot more information than that memo.

So in fact if that memo had been on file it would have prompted you at least to carry out further detailed investigations before Hamilton's renewal was granted? - I would call for more details to see if there was anything to substantiate the allegations that are in the document.

But this is a senior officer in your Force who has got these concerns. is that not a matter/matter of some consequence to you? - Well, it doesn't really matter, with respect, it doesn't really matter what rank they are. We still have to abide by the law and the guidance as it pertains at that particular time, whether we agree with it or not, and we have to look at it to see if there is any evidence to substantiate the allegations that are made. When I look at the words there, "scheming, devious and deceitful", that at the moment is one person's view of this particular person and there is nothing that I know of in the guidance which would allow me to revoke or fail to renew somebody's certificate on that.

But if you had seen that memo you could at least have looked up the papers which were put together following on the Milarrochy enquiry? - Yes, I could have looked at the operational report giving the full details to substantiate that.

Have you seen these precognitions since? - No. This is the only thing I have seen as regards this document.

BY LORD CULLEN: Perhaps I could ask you about this document, D82L. Are you familiar with the kind of documents that are in the firearms files? - Yes. This is just at our Headquarters?

Yes? - Basically the application forms and if a document such as that was received that would be filed in the document and a photo-copy of his previous certificate.

So is this the kind of document that you would expect to find in a firearms file relating to the person concerned? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. GIBB:
But you have obviously no knowledge as to why this document did not reach the file? - No, I do not.

Just to put it in its entirety, can I suggest the Home Office guidelines really don't assist you as a Force very much at all in terms of what number of weapons or volume of ammunition or in fact what does or does not amount to good reason? - They are very, very open and very difficult. It is so open that it is very often up to the discretion of the Chief Officer to try and make a considered judgment/judgment in conjunction with the guidance but there are other sections which tie us to a certain extent.

You talk about discretion of officers with regard to the renewal or grant of the certificate. Similarly, you will be aware when it comes to appeal it is a matter for the discretion of the Sheriff? - That's correct, yes.

And clearly if anyone exercises their discretion reasonably that cannot be challenged? - That is correct.

But despite that you took the view that this was not a case and you still take the view that this was not a case where you would have felt any degree of confidence in refusing the renewal? - No, that is correct because it is the job of the Chief Officer to take the responsibility of making that decision rather than abrogating it to the Sheriff and therefore that is the kind of decision that a Chief Officer would have to take.

I have to suggest indeed it would be appropriate to refuse renewal at the very least or to get a revocation and put all the information, including D.S. Hughes' memorandum and all the precognitions before the Court? - Well, I can only reiterate what I have said. These of course are basic details and I don't have the background to it but on that alone I couldn't, if I was asked, revoke or ask somebody or recommend that revocation under the current guidelines and the current law.

BY LORD CULLEN: I take it within your work you have been responsible for considering cases where you had to consider whether or not to recommend revocation, is that right? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: Just going back to your evidence I think for the moment. Can you tell us the practice of Central Scotland Police Force in relation to making visits to an applicant at the time when they first apply for a firearms certificate? - Yes, when they apply for the grant of a certificate an officer will be sent to carry out an enquiry and go over the form. They would be asked to check the Scottish Criminal Records Office and Police National Computers to establish whether the person has any previous convictions and should also check that the counter-signatory/signatory is a bona fide person.

When it comes to renewal, can you tell us if that practice remains? - Yes.

Is that a matter which is required by law or.....? - No, there is no law to force a Police Force to carry out visits. In fact, it is recommended in various quarters that there should be renewals by post but our Force has resisted that and we now still carry out visits during renewals.

And where has the impetus come from for the suggestion that renewals should be done by post? - That is a recommendation by Her Majesty's Inspectorate.

Have you had experience of dealing with the Inspectorate? - Yes.

Is there anything which you have learned from your discussions with the Inspectorate which may be of relevance and interest to this Inquiry in relation to the administration of firearms? - Well, only that last year there was a thematic inspection carried out by the Inspectorate.

Perhaps you could tell the Inquiry what a thematic inspection is? - Sorry. The Inspectorate of Constabulary carries out inspections of other police forces. However, they also carry out what are called thematic inspections on a particular topic and that is done on a Scottish-wide basis. Last year there was an inspection carried out in all Scottish Forces with regard to firearms licences and that was carried out round about September time. As I say, that is dealt with on a national basis as opposed to individual Forces being inspected.

Was there anything arising from that inspection? - Yes, very much the H.M. Inspectorate are of the view that firearms licences should be civilianised completely. In fact, I was asked why an Inspector and Chief Inspector should be involved in the process at all and why not submit documentation, whether it be for revocation or otherwise, from the civilian firearms officer to the Deputy Chief Constable.

Is/

2.25 p.m.

Is that a step which you think is in the right direction?

- I don't see any reason why not, no. Firearms officers are, if you like, experts in that they deal with it every day, and the firearms examiner was appointed for the very reason, for his expertise. I don't see any reason, given the staff, why there shouldn't be direct access from the civilians to the Deputy Chief Constable and why there needs to be a police officer involved.

This morning you made reference to some advice which you believed was issued by an organisation to its members. Could it have been the document you were referring to is entitled "Sporting documentation and the law" published by the British Field Sports Society? - Yes.

Was the particular passage which you had in mind that which one finds on page 16 where it is said that "A certificate to obtain extra weapons is expensive..... Approval to purchase remains valid for the life of the certificate"? - That is it.

The last sentence there says the approval remains valid for the life of the certificate. I think you accept that? - Yes.

In answering some questions put to you by Mr. Gibb you gave an example of the sort of situation which might arise where an applicant may want to acquire a particular weapon second-hand if it comes up for sale? - Yes.

Can you think of any other examples where people might make an application for a particular calibre of weapon to be entered on to their licence but yet not make use of it in the period of three or five years that now is? - I think this is the main reason, if for any reason they happen to see a bargain, whether it be a private or commercial deal, they can take the opportunity of that without having to have to attempt to vary their certificate. I think these are the main reasons. There may well be others but I can't think of any offhand.

Would I be right in thinking that the permission to acquire lasts only the life of the certificate?/

certificate? - Yes.

If they felt they didn't have a need for the particular weapon within the life of the certificate it would be inappropriate to make application for it? - It would be inappropriate to make -- at the renewal time?

Yes? - No, not necessarily, because they may well still wish to purchase the weapon at some other time in the future, and provided they have the good reason to acquire the gun.

Would the future not extend then beyond the life of the certificate? - Yes, but then it would be re-examined during the renewal and if the good reason was there it would be renewed again on that basis.

At the time of making an application would an applicant require to have it within his contemplation that in the course of the life of the certificate he would be acquiring the gun? - Not to my knowledge, no, because he may only be considering the possibility.

You were asked some questions in relation to paragraph 6.9 of the guidance which has been issued. That deals with the main consideration being the character of the applicant? - Yes sir.

In your view does any blemish on the character of an applicant result in him being unsuitable to hold a firearms certificate? - No. Each case has to be taken on its own merits.

Are you able to indicate roughly what sort of character deficiencies would require to exist before there would be cause to refuse a renewal or refuse a grant? - Yes. There would need to be evidence of deficiencies of character, for example intemperate habits, where it was proved the person was a drunk and therefore could use a firearm when they were under the influence of drink. If there was any evidence to show they were receiving treatment, for example, for a mental health illness, or if for some other reason -- in other words, if they were convicted or charged with a serious violent offence where they may be wanting to use a firearm in the commission of another offence./

offence. But basically if there is any danger to public safety and the peace.

Would that danger have to arise in any shape or form or would it have to arise specifically in relation to the use of a handgun? - No, it can arise through any shape or form.

Would it follow that any situation giving rise to a breach of the peace would necessarily result in replication or refusal? - No, not necessarily.

BY LORD CULLEN: Two points before you are re-examined: do I understand from what you said earlier that at the time for renewal it would not be expected of a reporting officer that he or she would as a matter of routine get in touch with the club of which the holder was apparently a member? - That is correct, not as a matter of routine.

There may, of course, be some particular reason for that in a particular case but not as a matter of routine? - Not as a matter of routine, no.

The second question was to do with the function of the administrators or the administration department. What exactly, in a few words if you can, what is their function? - In the process?

Yes? - Theirs is purely administrative. The documentation, information comes into them, and they are then responsible for administering that and producing the new certificate. If there are any grounds that they consider a person is unsuitable they would then bring that to the attention of the Inspector who would then look at that in the light of the information that is available to him.

Would they have anything to do with the amount of ammunition which a person was authorised to hold or acquire? - Yes, they deal with that.

In what sense do they deal with it? - They would agree the amount provided it is within reasonable limits. The firearm examiner, as I said earlier, is somebody who has expertise in shooting and he would be able to tell us that the amount that was asked for was not over the top so far as the particular/particular shooting is concerned.

How does the examining officer do that? - From experience.

No, by what method. What documentation -- how does he do that? - He states it in the certificate, the number of rounds that the person is allowed to acquire.

That's not what I mean. You said you get a view expressed by the examining officer? - No, the firearm examiner.

That is within the administration? - Yes.

How does that person get the necessary expertise to deal with a point of that sort? - Just that he has been working there for quite a number of years, the procedures have grown up with him. At one time he was under the supervision of other people when these decisions, in regard to what is acceptable and what is not acceptable, were decided, and thereafter this has gone on. He has also worked as a gunsmith and he is a shooter himself. He has a tremendous amount of experience with regard to shooting, types of weapons which are necessary for different disciplines, and the amount of ammunition which a person could go through if they are involved in competition shooting or gun shooting, an amount which is not over and above what may be required.

He really proceeds on the basis of the category or type of weapon that he is considering? - Yes. Very often when I was Inspector I would seek his advice as to whether the ammunition, there was too much ammunition or whether he felt it was a reasonable amount to ask for.

There may be occasions you may get a request that appears on the face of it to be questionable? - Yes.

In size? - Yes, and the person may wish to carry out certain functions and the firearms examiner would advise me on that.

Provided the application is in respect of a quantity which is regarded as normally acceptable then/then it will be passed as a matter of course; is that right? - Yes.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Now, Mr. Mather, many of these questions have been concerned with the issue of what is called a good reason for allowing the inclusion of a particular firearm in the certificate. Can I just quote to you Section 27 of the Firearms Act, 1968, "A chief officer of police has to be satisfied that the applicant has a good reason for having in his possession or for purchase or acquiring a firearm". Now, do you not accept that that must have some relationship either to the current position when the applicant makes his application or to his immediate intention to purchase or acquire? - Well, as I said, at the renewal time, that is when we would re-assess whether that person has still got a good reason. If he still has a good reason I know of no reason why we do not grant or remove that permission to purchase or acquire.

But if he has had authority for a number of years to acquire a particular weapon and hasn't done so how can it be said that when he renews his certificate he still has good reason for purchasing or acquiring that firearm? - Because the good reason is that he is a member of a club and that he is still a member of that gun club where he is able to fire that weapon, and this is taken as the good reason for that renewal, for being allowed to purchase or acquire if he subsequently wishes.

That good reason has to be for purchasing or acquiring the firearm -- and that would be plural if appropriate -- in respect of which the application is made. It is not just firearms but "the" firearm? - Yes. He has to show good reason for every individual firearm, but provided that firearm, provided he has good reason for having that firearm such as a member of a gun club, or a duplicate calibre or for some other reasons, such as a different discipline or a spare weapon, that would be deemed as enough.

Even though he has no immediate intention to acquire such an additional weapon? - Well, I am not aware of anything that says he does have to.

You are looking at it from the prohibitive/prohibitive point of view, from the point of view of someone saying he can't, but this is worded in the positive way that the chief officer of police has to be satisfied that he has a good reason. How can you say there is a good reason, a positive good reason for acquiring a weapon when he may not have an immediate intention of acquiring that weapon? - Because he may wish to do it at some other stage during that time if he doesn't decide at the time when he is changing the certificate.

But/

2.40 p.m.

But that I suggest to you doesn't amount to having, at the time of the application, in fact, a good reason for acquiring the weapon? - Well, certainly that is the interpretation we have taken for a number of years.

Well, can I suggest that since the law has not yet been changed, and remains as it was at the time of the Dunblane incident, that you should think carefully about renewals meanwhile and about how willing you are to allow people to have added to their certificates weapons that they have no immediate intention of acquiring. It is simply something I suggest you ought now to consider. Are you prepared to do that? - Well, there is a section in the Guidance here that states about the good reason, and the gun Clubs I think at some stage -- I just can't remember the exact bit.

Are you going back to the Guidance? - Yes.

Well, if you look at 6.8, and at (e) and then at (i), first of all does it not say there that "A certificate for a handgun with ammunition should not be granted, except in very rare cases, unless the applicant has regular and legitimate opportunity of using the weapon"? - Yes, but that is what he did have. He had regular and legitimate opportunity to use the weapon.

Well, he may have had legitimate opportunity. Are you saying he had regular opportunity of using the weapon? - Yes. He was the member of a gun Club, so he had regular opportunity to use the weapon.

And that is it? Do you think that is what "regular" means there? - Well, the Guidance is open to the interpretation of the Chief Officers, and this certainly was our interpretation for quite a number of years.

And where then would you stop at deciding how many guns he should have? - Well, as far as the duplicate calibres are concerned, I would take advice from my firearms examiner, who has his expertise/expertise in types of weapon, and when they should and shouldn't be used, because guns -- they are different sights, different weights and what have you, and I don't have the expertise to decide that on my own.

Well, who were you relying on in February 1995, when you didn't have the examiner dealing with this case? - Well, the examiner still takes part in the application process.

In February 1995 did Mr. Lynch have something to do with this case? - Not that particular one, but he is still.....

That is what I am asking. What did you do in 1995? - Well, I didn't check that at all because it was not within the procedure at that time. It would come to me within the Firearms Administration Department and all I would check was the RL3a form.

If you look over the page at Paragraph (i), and about five lines down, does it not say that "The good reason requirement will need to be satisfactorily demonstrated in respect of each firearm"? - That is correct, yes.

"Thorough enquiries must be undertaken regardless of whether this involves making enquiries outside the applicant's police area"? - Yes.

And you think that simply means "If he says he'll need another one in the next five years he can have it"? - Well, as I say, that is the interpretation that has been taken from the Guidance notes over the years.

Now, you were asked some questions about Production D82, that is Mr. Hughes' memo. Can you please have that in front of you again. In that memo in the second-last paragraph on the first page it says: "It emerged from inquiries that he, during the course of the first week of camp, seemed to become increasingly stressed and had difficulty managing the group. It was during one such moment that he became extremely angry and assaulted one of the boys. This particular child was in fact assaulted three times by Hamilton during the first few days of the holiday, and was eventually removed by/by his parents". Now, that is not rumour or innuendo, that is a statement of fact? - Yes.

Is that a basis for considering revocation of a firearms certificate? - Well, it would very much depend on the severity of the case. I would need to see what the full information on the case was. Was there anybody injured? How serious was the assault? Was it a clip round the back of the ear, or what exactly it was. I would need more information before I could consider that.

So the fact that there was an assault three times during the first few days is not of itself enough? - Not from the information there, no.

LORD CULLEN: Mr. Taylor, as you have access to that document which you have read, could you possibly make arrangements for me to have a copy?

MR. TAYLOR: I shall do.

ROBERT ALLAN (65), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I am a retired police officer and I live in Falkirk.

When did you retire? - 1984.

What rank did you hold? - Chief Superintendent.

And was that with Central Scotland Police? - That was with Central Scotland Police, yes.

In February 1977 were you a Chief Inspector? - Yes, at Stirling.

And did that involve you in some sort of supervisory role in relation to firearms certificate applications? - Yes, indeed.

As/

As a result did you have at least a part to play in considering the application of Thomas Hamilton for his original grant of a firearm certificate? - Yes, on the basis of the report submitted I had to decide whether or not an applicant was or was not a suitable person to be the holder of a firearm certificate.

Could you please have before you FA1, which is D22? Is that Hamilton's original application for a firearm certificate? - Yes it is.

Dated the 5th February 1977? - Yes.

And in those days there was no requirement for a countersignatory on the form; is that right? - No, there was -- on the form itself, no.

What were you going to say? - A pro forma report would be submitted along with the application itself.

And that is an RL3a? - Yes.

And that is a form regarding the inquiry made by the officer who was allocated that duty? - Yes indeed.

Now, could you look please at FA2, which is D23? Is that the inquiry form that came to you along with the application form? - Yes it is.

So the inquiries have been done before you were actually presented with the application form, to play your part? - Yes indeed.

And do we see your signature somewhere on the document 23? - Yes. This bears my signature and a note to the Chief Superintendent of the Division at that time, and I indicated that I had no objection to offer to the application.

On the form I am looking at there are six questions completed; is that right? - Yes, that is correct.

And the answer to each of these questions was "Yes"? - That is correct.

The/

The questions are listed, three on the left hand and three on the right-hand side of the page? - Yes.

And above them it says, "If the answer to any of the following questions is no, give details at 7 below"? - Yes.

If we just look at these questions, the first of them is "Is the applicant a suitable person to hold a firearm certificate?". That is answered "Yes"; is that right? - That is correct.

But then the next one "Does the applicant have a good reason for requiring the firearm or ammunition for which application is made"? - That is correct.

It simply says "Yes", there is no other information; isn't that right? - There is no other information on that form, no.

And the way it is worded is "Does the applicant have a good reason for requiring the firearm"; is that right? - Yes.

And then each of the other questions is just answered "Yes", with no other information about where the shooting is to be done. It is just said that the places are suitable, and where the ammunition and firearms are to be kept, it just says again "Yes, they are suitable" -- there is no additional information? - Yes, but the pro forma report relates to the application form for the grant of a certificate.

Yes, and you have got that in front of you? - Yes indeed.

And if we look back at it in relation to these various questions, do we see that the application was for one firearm, .22 target pistol? - That is correct.

That the applicant didn't possess any ammunition, but he wanted to be able to possess 1,000 .22 rounds and to purchase 500 at any one time? - Yes, that is correct.

On the second page, question 14, did he give/give the reason for requiring the firearm? - Yes, indeed.

What was the reason? - And this is marked "Target Shooting".

And if you go back to the questions on the RL3a form, that is question 2? - Yes.

We don't get any more information on that? - No.

So the good reason being "Target Shooting"? - Yes.

If we go to question 15, he was asked where he intended to use the firearm and he said "Callander Rifle & Pistol Club, or other suitable Clubs and ranges"? - Yes, that is correct.

And that was accepted -- these were accepted as suitable places; is that right? - Yes.

So we really don't have much in the way of additional information when we go back to the application form itself? - No.

Now, where is your signature on the RL3a? - My signature, as I said, refers to a note to the Chief Superintendent, at that time, the Divisional Commander, and I indicated that I had no objections to offer to the application.

So you just say "I have no objections", and you sign it, and it is dated the 9th February? - Yes, that is correct.

What was the extent of your checking of the material that was being presented to you before you said that you had no objection?
- On the basis of the report submitted, the inquiring officer would be entrusted to carry out proper inquiry, and perhaps liaise with their immediate superior officer who at that stage would be a sergeant, and once it had reached that stage there would have to be something which was amiss or remiss in connection with the application for my attention to be drawn to it.

And/

And is it right to say that the sergeant had signed the form? - Yes.

And is there an inspector's signature there as well? - And an inspector.

Before it ever gets to you? - Yes.

Now, I think in August 1977 you were still at Stirling; is that right? - Yes.

And again you dealt with an application from Hamilton; is that right? - Yes -- but could I perhaps have the form?

Yes, if you look first of all at FA9, I hope is a good guess. It is D29. Is that an application for variation? - Yes it is.

And is it dated the 19th August 1977? - Yes.

And if you look at FA10 which is D30, can you confirm that that is the corresponding RL3a form? - Yes, it is.

And we have your signature, do we, on that one? - Yes -- it bears my signature on a comment to the Chief Constable, at that time at Superintendent rank, that I recommended the variation.

And that is dated the 29th August? - Yes.

1977? - Yes.

Now, the variation was to change the weapon I think; is that right? - That is correct.

And it is now a .22 Smith and Wesson revolver that is sought? - Yes. At this stage I refer to a .22 automatic pistol, without specifying the actual make, and it also referred to a .22 rifle to be added to the certificate.

And I think the reason given again this time is "Target Practice"; is that right, Page 2, question 14? - Yes.

And/

And in fact this is an identical application form to the one that you looked at a moment ago, the only difference being that the applicant scores out the words "grant and renewal" at the top of the first page, to leave in the word "variation"? - That is correct.

If we can turn then to the investigation that was carried out, am I right in saying that each of the six questions was again answered "Yes"? - That is correct.

But No. 7, which is the blank space for "comment" was completed? - There is an entry there, yes.

And is that by Inspector Wisdom? - Yes.

Now, what has he written in at 7? - It says: "Hamilton seen and warned verbally by me on 26th August 1977 that he should not have acquired the .22 Smith & Wesson revolver without firstly applying for variation of certificate. Hamilton fully accepted responsibility and states he was misinformed by the Firearms Dealer in Glasgow regarding proper procedure. Existing certificate will now require variation deleting all reference to .22 Vostok pistol number K3573P? This matter was reported on by Constable Anderson, Stirling, at which time, on 6th April 1977, the necessary amendment should have been made to his certificate".

So having got that explanation you were happy to allow the variation to go to the Chief Constable with the recommendation that it should be granted? - Yes.

1979 I think you were still at Stirling, but now Superintendent? - Yes.

1979? - Yes.

Sorry, yes, you were also a Superintendent at Stage 2? - Yes.

Sorry, my mistake. Now, in November 1979, in relation to that period could you look at FA12 which is D32? - Yes.

Is/

Is that another application that came through your hands? - Yes.

Look at FA13 please as well, which is D33, and is that the form with the sixth question answered as usual? - Yes, exactly the same form and answered in the same fashion.

And this is for the renewal -- sorry, this is for another variation, rather, of the licence? - A variation, yes.

And you again recommended the grant of this to the Chief Constable? - Yes I did.

Now, I think this time there are additional weapons added -- the Smith and Wesson revolver is still there but there is a .22 Anschutz rifle and a .22 Browning pistol added? - Yes.

There is also another addition which this inquiry will find of some significance at question 5. What is the addition there? - Yes. This is for a variation to increase the number of firearms by adding one .357 revolver and a .270 rifle.

And that is a reference to weapons to be acquired? - Yes.

So it is in relation to these two that this application has been lodged; is that correct? - Yes, that is correct.

Now, the application also deals with the question of ammunition? - Yes.

And you will see there that he claims to possess 850 rounds of .22 ammunition? - Yes.

And then on the question "The maximum amount desired to be possessed at any time", how does he answer that? - At that question he required 1,000 rounds of .22, 100 rounds of .357 and 100 rounds of .270.

And the amount he desired to be able to purchase at one time was half that? - Was 500 .22, 50 .357 and 50 .270.

Now, over the page at 14 he is asked to give/give a reason for requiring each of the firearms. What reason did he give? - It is written "I want to shoot full board target shooting".

And that would explain these weapons? - The calibre, yes.

Would that explain the .270 rifle? - Yes.

And at 15 I think he says where he is going to do that? - Yes.

Where? - At -- in quotes -- "At full bore ranges, Dunblane, and range under Hamilton Police Office", as he refers to it there. That is the Clyde Valley Rifle Club, is my understanding.

Now, at that time the reference to Dunblane would be a range called Whitestone? - Yes, that is correct.

And at that time he could shoot full bore at Whitestone? - Yes.

So he, on the face of it, is demonstrating a legitimate place to carry out the activity he intends to carry out? - Yes.

Now, all the questions were answered in the same way as, before, "yes"? - Yes, that is correct.

But then there is a comment at 7 again has been added by the inquiry officer; is that right? - Yes, at number 7, yes.

And that inquiry officer was Constable McLay? - Yes.

What was the comment? - "Hamilton is at present a member of Dunblane Rifle Club, and is at the moment awaiting notification of his membership if the Clyde Valley Rifle Club, whose ranges are situated underneath Hamilton Police Office. The Clyde Valley Rifle Club is a full bore Club".

So there was a basis for granting the application? - Yes.

In

3 p.m.

In 1980 I think you were still Superintendent in Stirling; is that correct? - Yes.

Look at FA16 which is D38? - Yes.

This is an application for renewal? - Yes.

And that application is dated 13th January, 1980? - Yes.

Could you also look at RL3A which is FA17 and D39. Can you confirm to me by this time Hamilton according to the application possessed a .22 revolver, a .22 rifle and a .22 pistol? - Yes.

He also possessed now a .357 revolver and a .270 rifle? - Yes.

His ammunition requirements were the same as before? - Yes.

Nothing on the face of the application is really significantly different from any of the others? - No different, no.

The six questions on the RL3A are exactly the same way? - Yes indeed.

And you recommended grant of the application? - Yes.

There was nothing on the face of it that made you do otherwise? - No.

Lastly can I ask you about 1984. I think you had been promoted by then? - Yes.

And were Chief Superintendent? - Yes.

Would you look please at FA29 which is D46. Is this another application by Hamilton dated 27th October, 1984? - Yes.

What is this application for? - This is for a renewal and a variation of the firearms certificate.

He/

He wouldn't actually be due to renew his certificate, was he? - Yes.

Well, we know that he had been granted one originally in 1977; is that right? - Yes.

And then 1980. Was he due to have a renewal at the end of 1984-beginning of 1985? - Yes.

If you go to the last page where he has actually signed it with the date, does he also score out "renewal" there so that this is only an application for variation in fact? - I beg your pardon, yes, indeed.

I think I see where the problem is, he has left "renewal" on the front page? - Yes.

I think you can take it from me this is only an application for variation. Can you tell us from the form what the variation was? - Yes, the variation was to delete certain of the firearms and to acquire further firearms.

As a result of the application would he be left with a .22 rifle and a .357 revolver? - Yes.

And permission to acquire a 9mm pistol? - That is correct.

And a .223 rifle? - Yes.

This is 27th October, 1984? - Yes.

Is there also there a letter, in fact more than one letter, about the disposal of some of the firearms? - Yes.

To say he is in fact disposing altogether or four firearms? - That is correct.

Otherwise, does the form follow the usual pattern? - Yes indeed.

If you look at the RL3A which is FA30 (D46A) all the questions answered in the usual way? - Yes.

And/

And a comment there. What is the comment this time? - It is endorsed "Hamilton has disposed of the following four weapons, a .22 Browning pistol, a .22 Smith and Wesson revolver, a .22 Browning rifle and a .70 Sako rifle" and the numbers of each, they are also quoted.

There is a further note? - "He wishes to obtain the following two weapons -- a 9mm pistol and a .223 rifle".

And as Chief Superintendent you recommended to the Chief Constable that this should be granted? - Yes.

Who actually has signed the very bottom of the document? - This is someone who has signed on behalf of the Chief Constable.

And I take it that throughout dealing with this application your role was simply that of checking that on the face of the application form and the RL3A form everything looked in order? - Yes indeed.

And on the assumption that the enquiring officer would make enquiries that he or she had been trained to make? - Yes indeed, due and diligent inquiry.

No cross-examination.

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, we do our best to present the evidence in a coherent and logical form but occasionally the best intentions are disrupted. At this stage, while I appreciate it does interrupt the flow of evidence about licensing, it would be convenient to complete the evidence, this morning's evidence on intelligence information in the possession of the police, and it may be appropriate to some of the later questions on certificate procedure. So to complete that chapter I have two witnesses and the first of these will be David Plain and Mr. Lake will take his evidence.

DAVID PLAIN (36) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: What is your present/present occupation? - Detective Constable.

How many years police service do you have? - 18.

Which office are you stationed at? - Currently the Crime Management Unit at Police HQ.

I understand you are presently Force Intelligence Officer for Central Police? - Yes.

How long have you held that post? - Three years.

I understand you are aware of the means by which Criminal Intelligence was managed prior to you taking up your post as Force Intelligence Officer? - Yes, I understand it.

Prior to considering the detail of the ways in which intelligence is used I would like to look at the way in which intelligence information is stored with Central Scotland Police? - Yes.

I understand it has been stored in three different ways at different periods? - That is correct.

Prior to 1990 by what method was intelligence information stored? - Purely manually, by paper submission and a manual card index.

Who would make the paper submission? - Any officer of the Force.

Who would they make it to? - To the Force Intelligence Officer.

What did he do with it? - He would then look to see if there was a nominal card or a reference card in respect of the information concerning the individual, and raise a nominal card if there wasn't.

What is a nominal card? - It is a brief card with the first name, the surname, the occupation, any other characteristics he would need to add.

If there was an intelligence submission information/information would be transferred from it to the nominal card? - Yes.

Would the nominal card relate to purely persons? - No, it could be a vehicle or a place.

How would the nominal card be stored -- in what order? - They would be alphabetical I would imagine.

How were the intelligence submissions stored? - They would be by year, number and the particular year, so that basically the card would have a brief part of the submission -- say this person was a housebreaker, for example, and you would have the reference number, and the year to have the full information.

So it would be necessary to cross-reference to the intelligence submission? - Yes.

Was there any other means of storing information with the paper based method? - Yes. There was a main file index on more serious criminals.

What was that? - Basically that was -- where you have a nominal card it was just like a bigger nominal card where it became a larger file, and prolific criminals were kept apart, so to speak, and when it comes to the main file index it operated exactly the same way.

For the avoidance of doubt, can I ask you to look please at a document DIntel FID3. Is that an example of a manual submission to the paper system? - That is exactly one that would be filled in by the Criminal Intelligence Officer, and you will see at the top right OP782. The one the police officer would fill in would be OP781.

And OP781 would be sent to the Intelligence officer who would complete this form OP782? - Yes.

And intimation from the body would also -- a summary of it would be transferred to the nominal file for that particular person? - Yes.

When did that system last until? - Approximately/Approximately 1990.

What happened in 1990? - The Force introduced a stand alone computer system.

Where was that based? - At the Criminal Intelligence Office.

In? - Police HQ.

In Stirling? - Yes.

How was information entered into that system? - Basically that system mirrored exactly our manual system. Basically you had a computerised card. You still received form OP781, which is the Intelligence submission by police officers, the difference being before it was filed it was typed on to a text file on the computerised system. The cards were cross-referenced exactly the same way, and if you updated your card in respect of everything on the computer path above it, you then have the actual text typed on the computer.

Was the nominal card also contained within the computer? - Yes.

What happened to the pre-1990 records once the computer system was set up? - I believe the majority of it was back-converted on to the computer. Whether they were all done I don't know.

Does that mean they were written on to the computer system manually? - Yes.

If anyone had wanted to consult the pre-1990 paper system how would they have made an inquiry? - By phoning up the Criminal Intelligence Officer who would check the new system on the computer system. With regard to previous cards I have no idea what happened; they weren't there when I was there.

If someone say in 1989 wanted to make an inquiry regarding Intelligence on the new computer system how would they have done that? - By asking the Intelligence Office to check the card. They gave the Intelligence out.

After 1990 when that information was on the/

the computer how would that be done? - Exactly the same way. The computer was stand-alone and only the Criminal Intelligence Officer had access to it.

How long did that system last, the stand-alone system? - Until 1993.

What happened in 1993? - The Force in April 1993 had went Force-wide with computerisation for crime reports etc., and in September of that year went live with the Criminal Intelligence submission system.

How did someone put that system in? - Instead of raising a manual form OP781 they typed automatically on the computer. Everybody in the Force had access to it.

What happened to the information contained in the stand-alone system when the Force-wide system was introduced? - The stand-alone system remained until October, 1994 when the Criminal Intelligence Office stopped -- or we stopped -- at the time of the setting up of the Criminal Management Unit I believe the stuff was taken from -- all the Intelligence information was taken from the stand-alone computer and put on to the new computerised system on a separate path so that the Force could have access to it all.

So all the information which had originally been on the paper system ought to have been carried through the stand-alone system on to the Force-wide system? - That is correct.

Are you able to suggest the circumstances that would have meant that didn't happen and information was lost? - If it hadn't been back-converted on to the Paradox in the first place it wouldn't be replicated on the Trace.

What was the criteria for deciding which information was converted from the stand-alone system? - I wasn't there when that was done. Any back-conversion would really be on active criminals or -- if it was older material it may not necessarily be back-converted.

Are you aware there was information on the paper system which was not converted on to the computer/computer system? - I am.

What happened to the paper records? - All the main files still exist. With regard to the older documentation, I believe from about 1988 or 1989 the old paper forms were destroyed.

This is prior to 1989? - Yes.

You have given the date 1988. Was it information after that was destroyed or information before that was destroyed? - Before that.

So that in what circumstances would a check still be made of the paper records that are available? - If a person was -- if someone was phoning up from another Force looking for information on somebody and the information existed on the main file index -- it may be a serious murder or something like that -- all that information is I imagine antiquated, it is not current stuff, and these are old files. Everything that is on Trace has been running for three years and it is the up-to-date system now.

You have seen the document in front of you which is DIntel F1D3. It is an Intelligence log dated 23rd June, 1988. That paper record has obviously still been available for production to the Inquiry? - Yes.

If someone had wanted to check that information on Hamilton would they have been able to refer back to that? - Yes.

You are not aware of what circumstances a paper check like that would have been made? - No.

You mentioned earlier that you provided information when inquiries were made of you. Who was permitted to receive information from the Force Intelligence system? - Well, the current system, any police officer has access to it.

Are any parties outside Central Scotland Police able to gain access to it? - Not directly.

Who must they go through? - Well, they come to me first -- well, prisons etc., they ask for information, and obviously that would have to be agreed/agreed they would get that information.

Would other police forces be able to get information?

- Yes, other police forces.

Would Local Authorities be able to get information? -

I have never been asked for information from Local Authorities, and I think they would have to seek permission to release that, and I would go to someone above me.

Who would you seek permission from? - My line manager.

Who is he? - A Detective Chief Inspector.

On the current Force-wide system is the information contained on that available to civilian employees of Central Scotland Police? - I believe so, yes.

The previous systems, either the stand-alone or the paper based system, was that information available to civilian employees? - Well, like all police officers, they would have to phone up and ask the information. As to whether they would get it I don't know. I have never been asked by a civilian for that information.

Can I ask you to look at DIntel FD1 which is a folder D1 Chapter I(iii). What does that refer to? This is a single sheet. Can you tell us what that document is please? - Yes, this is an extract from a nominal card referring to Thomas Watt Hamilton, and this is taken from the dump on the current system or the stand-alone system.

This information has been accessed from the current Force-wide system? - Yes. It is basically the nominal card that appeared in the stand-alone system.

If someone were now to contact and inquire of the Force-wide system Trace using the inquiry "Thomas" and "Hamilton" would they expect to find this entry thrown up? - No.

How would they find this entry? - Through myself or through the Criminal Management Unit./

Unit.

They would need to specifically ask? - Yes, because the majority of this -- the Criminal Intelligence System operates on active information, and a lot of the stuff held on the Paradox and other information, some of the dates 1988, '87, I think it got weeded out eventually, and this is on a separate path so it is not actively kept recently.

The stuff that was formerly held on the Paradox system is not available Force-wide? - No.

Looking at this form, we see a list of headings including the address, and there is a heading "Comment"? - Yes.

In fact there are two abbreviations, one is "Homo" and one is "Ind/ch"? - Yes.

What do these two summaries stand for? - "Homo" stands for homosexual, and "Ind/ch" stands for indecency to children.

On what basis would that entry be made? - This is the nominal card, and you would have a card created and processed by Intelligence that indicates these comments are applicable. There is obviously something in the machine to suggest the person may be involved in this type of activity.

If someone had spoken to you and obtained this information from the Trace system how would they go about finding the paper records on which that comment entry had been made? - As far as Trace is concerned any information that was looked for clearly could still be traced because the text copied across. I have checked this since and there is no text; for some reason this has never been back-converted. I have no idea how you would get the paper documentation. When the documents from Paradox were carried across into Trace whenever we got a submission it was typed on manually by the Force Intelligence Officer on the Paradox system and that information was transferred to Trace. In respect of this nominal there should be files on Trace but there isn't so I can only imagine they have never been on the Paradox.

The computer entries weren't transferred during/during the transition on to the Paradox system? - Only the nominal card.

Are you aware of any difficulty which arose in relation to the Trace system during 1995? - Yes, I am.

We have heard that difficulty resulted in certain entries being over-written? - Only in respect of some, only in respect of the Headquarters Archives. They still exist.

This problem started in July, 1995, the over-writing? - I believe that is when it started.

Would you be able to say whether an entry that had been entered on to the Trace system on 25th January, 1995 would have been available to someone who carried out a search on 8th February, 1995? - Yes, it should have been.

Would there be any reason why that should not become available? - No.

CROSS/

3.32 p.m.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: I may be missing something, but I am slightly confused as to where these earlier intelligence reports have been. It has obviously been possible to retrieve intelligence reports going back indeed as far as 1981. Are you able to tell us where these have been lying? - No.

No re-examination.

MALCOLM ROY (40), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. LAKE: I am presently a Police Sergeant stationed at Denny. I have 20 years' police service.

I understand that you were formerly the Force Criminal Intelligence Officer in Police Headquarters at Stirling? - That is correct, yes.

And you were there in 1990 when a computerised intelligence system was first introduced? - Yes, that is correct.

What was your responsibility in relation to the transfer of the previous paper records on to the computerised system? - I was responsible for the full back-record conversion from the paper system on to the computer.

Were all the paper records transferred on to the computer system? - No, not at that time. At that time I took the opportunity to have a weed of the information, and some information that was classed as outdated was destroyed.

How did you categorise the information that was outdated? - Well, it depended on each individual piece of information, what it was about, who it might be about, and I made a decision whether it should be kept or not.

There was no simple time cut-off applied to these things?
- No, not at that time, no.

Was/

Was the information that you weeded -- did that consist solely of the text entries, or did that relate also to the nominal files? - It related to the nominal files. If all the text was deemed to be for weeding and destruction, then there was no point keeping the nominal record for someone you didn't have any text on, so the nominal record was destroyed as well.

Could I ask you please to look at a few of the documents within the Police Intelligence File which is D Intel FI. I just want to ask you briefly: do you recognise some of these entries relating to Thomas Hamilton? If you don't, if you could just simply indicate that. The first within that file would be Document reference D2, which is also D2 in I(III). Do you see that is a flyer headed "Dunblane Rover Group"? - Yes.

Do you recognise that? - I do, yes.

When did you come across that previously? - I came across it in the Intelligence system when I worked in the office.

Are you aware whether that was information that was weeded out in the process of transferring to the computer system? - No, it wasn't weeded out. It was retained on the file.

Could I ask you to look at D3 please? Do you recognise that as an Intelligence log dated 22nd June 1988? - Yes.

Have you seen that previously? - Yes, again I have seen that within the files at the Intelligence office.

Was that one of the ones weeded out, or was it transferred? - No -- if I could explain, you are talking about weeding out and transferring. What happened, the old manual system consisted of box files with documents similar to that that you have that show the number of the record -- No. 379/88 -- that would be the 379th piece of information submitted to the Intelligence Office in the year 1988. Now, that was cross-referenced to a card that was kept in alphabetical order. So if someone came in and wished to know information about Thomas Hamilton, you would go to the/the card nominal index, find the name Thomas Hamilton, and on the back of it it would refer to entry 379 of 1988, and any other records kept for that person. When I did the back-record transfer, the information was not actually put into the computer. What actually happened was I created a nominal record like an old manual card for Mr. Hamilton, and on that card I marked the number "379 of 88", and any other reference that referred to that person. To actually physically go in and put all this information into the computer would have been far too big a job to do. So when the computer was set up, new information coming in was typed longhand into the computer, but the old paper files, the computer just acted as an electronic index, if you like.

So effectively it was only the nominal card that was set up on the Paradox system? - That was for previous information that was held. Any new information coming in on a subject that was held on the system would be typed into the computer and would be retrievable on the computer, but the old paper files, what these are -- all that referred to them was the number -- for example that number there "379/88".

So if someone were to look on the Paradox system and discover the nominal card for Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

How would they find the intelligence information referred to on that? - Right. When the nominal card was brought up on the screen one of the function buttons was pressed which in effect flicked the card over on to the back of the card, and there there would be a list of the previous information, the numbers on the file, and if there was new information there would be a computer reference to where the new information was within the computer, and you could then find that information on the computer through that reference number.

Can I ask you to look back a little on that file to Document DI? - Yes.

Could you tell us please what that is? - It is my understanding that that is a print of the nominal record of Thomas Hamilton that was taken from/

from the Force Trace computer system after the Paradox number records were converted on to the Trace computer system

And in the course of that transfer what was done with the information as to where to look for the intelligence submission? - I can't answer that question. I wasn't in the Intelligence Office when that transfer was made.

You see, that nominal ledger which forms Document DI, although it provides details of Thomas Hamilton, doesn't indicate how a party would go about finding the intelligence submissions on which this has been produced? - Yes, I appreciate that, but as I say I don't know -- when the information was transferred electronically from the Paradox system on to the Trace, I wasn't -- I was actually working away from the Force at the time. I don't know what happened when that was done.

No cross-examination.

MR. LAKE: This morning at the conclusion of the witnesses I had taken I made reference to a letter sent by a certain parent. Contact has now been made with that parent, who is happy that her letter be read out, but has requested that she be not identified in course of the proceedings.

LORD CULLEN: I see. So I take it no names -- other than of course Mr. Hamilton's -- will be mentioned?

MR. LAKE: That is my intention.

LORD CULLEN: Very well, if you will just proceed.

MR. LAKE: "On reading the newspaper reports of your Inquiry I have come to the conclusion that my account of my experience of meeting Thomas Hamilton may be relevant. I have been very upset by the events, and previously thought that there would be plenty of people with similar experiences and that one more voice would not make any difference. I now think that it would not be right for me to make that decision, and I would like to give my account for your information.

In/

In the Spring of 1993 my son, who is now 12, came home with a leaflet about the boys' club and asked if he could attend. As other boys we knew were also going to attend, and it was at the Stirling High School, and a father of one of the boys had agreed to take them and collect them from the school, then we agreed to let him attend.

He attended only a few times, when he came home with two videos saying that 'I was to look at these and please, please, could he go to the summer camp'. I watched the video, which started with a group of boys emptying a mini-bus of luggage. They seemed to be in school grounds. The next shots were of the boys in the school dinner hall helping themselves to food. There appeared to be no sound, and I fiddled with the controls of the video and realised, to my surprise, that there was sound as I could hear the sound of the cutlery and the scraping of chairs. I thought it strange that the boys were so quiet. There was no laughter and no talking throughout the whole video. The video went on to show boys dressed only in shorts and training shoes going through a series of exercises which resembled military drill, mixed with some quite strenuous gymnastics. The video seemed to focus particularly on one dark-haired boy. All the boys, about eight in total, had pained expressions and never smiled. The second video contained shots of a normal class doing similar exercises.

I was uneasy after watching the video. My son told me that the video was to be passed on to other parents. I did not express my uneasiness at that time, but was keen to hear the reaction of other parents. The other parents were equally if not more concerned, and one parent withdrew her son immediately. My son enjoyed the class so much that I knew he would be upset at being told he could not attend, so I started to ask questions. I asked my son about how he had heard about the club. He said that Thomas Hamilton had given out leaflets to boys in the park. He now tells me he thinks that the leaflets were given out at school. I asked him about the type of exercises they did. He had been complaining of pains. He described one particular exercise which I did not think would be physically within the capability of a boy of twice his age. As he is very small for his age and has a condition which makes games difficult, and his joints very loose/loose, I was even more surprised that he had been able to do this exercise. I was also concerned that they may cause some damage.

The next club night I agreed to collect the boys from Stirling High School. I arrived at the school and found that there was a seniors disco on in the assembly hall. I went to where I thought the gym hall was, to find it locked. I was puzzled and concerned. I found a janitor and asked him where the gym hall was. His description confirmed that I had found the right room, but I told him it was locked. He told me that this was to stop any of the young people in the assembly hall from wandering in. He came with me and unlocked the door.

Thomas Hamilton emerged from the changing room smiling. The boys were making normal noises in the changing room. I noticed the large video camera perched on top of a tripod. He started to dismantle this and pack it away. As he was doing so I introduced myself as my son's mother and asked him about the club. Although I was very concerned, instinctively I knew not to let my concern be seen, but I quietly questioned him without appearing threatening. He told me what a wonderful boy my son was and how he showed great promise as a gymnast. This did surprise me. He said how polite and well mannered he was. I asked about how many boys he had in the club. He said he had started with about 19 but it was now just 4. I suggested that these numbers may mean that the club would not be viable. He said that it did not matter to him. He only wanted to work with boys who were keen on sport and who were not just interested in drinking Coke and sitting around talking. He liked to work with boys like my son from good backgrounds who responded well to the discipline which he insisted on. I asked him about the video camera and why he needed it. He said it was used to play back the moves to the boys to show them where they went wrong. I asked him about how long the boys warmed up before their exercises. He said they spent about 10 minutes running and stretching. I asked about why the boys did not wear their T-shirts. He said that it was important that the muscles were visible so that he could see what they were doing wrong and that he could explain this to the boys by referring to the video. I asked/asked him about how many boys' clubs he ran. He said he had four others.

As the boys emerged from the changing room I started to herd them up and get them out. I was growing more uneasy. Mr. Hamilton repeatedly said what a wonderful boy my son was and referred to how he only wanted to work with boys from nice homes. He followed me out into the car park and on the way said what a nice house we had. I wondered how he knew which house we lived in. He said he liked old houses and had lived in an old house at the top of the town as a boy with his parents but they moved because the house was haunted. He said that he would wake up to feel very cold and could see something at the bottom of his bed. He said that it made noises. He said he asked to be moved from the room and that it was used for bed and breakfast purposes. He said that some of the guests were frightened and some thought it was great to be in a real haunted house. I cannot remember what my response was, but I was concerned to get away as quickly as possible. I was conscious all the time that I must not show my concern to him or to the boys.

I got the boys home and then talked over my concern to my husband. I concluded that, although there was no evidence of anything abnormal and he was quite open with his videos and his prejudices, I instinctively knew it was not right. We talked about the economics of the club. As he did not charge anything I could not work out how he could keep five clubs going at once. We also could not understand how one person could give up so much time to do this voluntary work. I was also concerned about his motives. If he was working to improve the lot of boys, then why only work with boys who clearly came from good homes where they wanted for little?

I decided to speak to other parents and to make some enquiries. I spoke to a friend at work -- her husband was a community educational officer in Lothian -- to find out if the club was part of a bigger group. He relayed the information that he knew of the club and that it was 'a one man band'. He also said that Lothian had banned his use of educational premises and that he would be concerned as a parent about sending his son to the club. I spoke/spoke on the telephone to Central Regional Council. A very concerned individual phoned me back at work and took details of my concern. She said that they were aware of the situation but that they were powerless to do anything as there was no direct evidence. She would keep details of my complaint, and that it would be passed on to the police. She added that I should withdraw my son if I was in any doubt. I asked whether it was legal to take videos of children without the permission of the parent. She said that the police had been informed of this concern as it was shared by others, but that there appeared to be nothing that they could do.

I spoke to other parents who had also been making similar enquiries. We all agreed to tell the children that the club was closing because there were not enough numbers. We all felt very bad about telling the children this white lie, but thought that it would make it easier for them. Throughout this time we were very conscious that the boys enjoyed the club and that they showed no concern at all about Mr. Hamilton.

The father of one of the boys agreed to go along to the club on the next night to explain to Mr. Hamilton why none of the boys had turned up. Apparently Mr. Hamilton was abusive.

Within a few days we all received a long, articulate and detailed letter explaining what his club was about and why he used the video and why he insisted on the boys being bare-chested. On reading the letter I realised that there was no doubt that my instincts were right. The tone was threatening. It had also been delivered to the house by hand between 11 p.m. and 6 a.m. I felt sick but decided I had done all I could.

I received at least two more letters along the same lines and in the same manner over the next few months. I found that I could not read them as they upset me too much. I put them in the bin.

In February 1996 I was surprised to get another letter. This time it had been posted. I still could only scan its contents before putting it in the bin.

On/

On realising that Mr. Hamilton was responsible for the deaths of the children at Dunblane I contacted some of the other parents who had children at the club at the time my son was attending to find that I was the only one who had got the letter in February.

I hope that this account will help your investigation" -- and that letter is dated 6th June 1996.

LORD CULLEN: Thank you. Do you want it to be given a number of any sort -- is that unnecessary? Perhaps not.

MR. LAKE: Yes, I understand the next number is R33 on the list of original Productions.

LORD CULLEN: Very well, that will be done.

ALLAN CASSIDY (72), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: I am a retired police officer and I live in Poole in Dorset. I live at Flat 5, 41 Cliff Drive, Poole, in Dorset.

You retired as a Police Inspector with Central Scotland Police? - That is correct.

When did you retire? - 22nd July 1977.

Just before you retired I think you did deal with an application for a firearms certificate submitted by a man called Thomas Hamilton? - That is correct.

Prior to that did you know of this person? - No.

Even after you had dealt with the application was his name of any particular significance to you? - None whatsoever.

Could you look please at the form itself, which is FAI, also D22? Do you recognise that/that as the application form dated 5th February 1977? I can see you are doubtful. Would you look at FA2, please, which is D23, and once you have got that beside you you may be able to answer the question more easily? - Yes.

So is that an application you dealt with, along with the RL3a form which you, I think, have initialled at one stage? - Yes I have.

Now, what was your role in the exercise of dealing with Hamilton's application for his original firearms certificate? - This would be submitted to me as the Duty Inspector in charge of the shift, or else it may have been on a particular day when I was dealing solely with reports, so it would be one of many that would come to me.

So what did you have to do with it? - Ensure that it was in fact correct, that the officer investigating it had collated the information, and that the applicant was suitable.

And can I take it really all you are able to do is to look at the form which he has submitted seeking his licence and then check that the officer who was enquiring into the application appeared to have carried out the appropriate enquiries? - That is correct.

Beyond that can I take it that your function wasn't to consider the merits of the application in any way? - No, it wasn't.

Now, from you where did the application form and the RL3a form go? - That would go to the Sub-Divisional Officer, Mr. Allan, who was the Chief Inspector at that time at Stirling.

Well, we have heard from him and we see his signature on it, on the 9th February. What is the date against your initial? - It is 9th of the second 1977.

So it is the same date as his? - The same date, yes.

So can I take it that in 1977 that was the standard procedure, that a Constable would carry out the appropriate enquiries and you would be one of/

of the officers who would check that everything appeared to have been done properly as the form and the RL3a were passed up the chain to be eventually dealt with by the Deputy Chief Constable? - That is correct.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: Mr. Cassidy, you told us one of the functions which you would have would be to examine that the enquiry officer had done all that was called upon him to do? - Yes.

Would it also be the case that if you were aware of any information, from your position as the Inspector -- was it Inspector you were at the time? - Inspector, yes.

From your position as Inspector, that you would input that information as the form was passed up the line? - I would, including any adverse report -- if such were the case.

That being an adverse report from the enquiry officer? - Yes, or if I knew of anything from my own personal knowledge, but I had no indication of that.

No re-examination.

LANCE RATTRAY (55), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I am a retired police officer. I live in Cambusbarron.

What rank did you hold when you retired? - I retired on the rank of Chief Superintendent.

When was that? - In April 1995.

Now, I think you did deal with certain matters affecting the firearms certificate held by Thomas Hamilton, and I would like in that connection to ask you to look at certain documents. Could you look please first of all at Document FA34, which I hope is D5IA? Is that an application for renewal of a firearms certificate? - Yes, by Mr. Hamilton.

I/

I think if you go to the very end where he has signed it, it is dated 3rd January 1986? - It is, yes.

And it is both an application for renewal and for variation of the existing firearms certificate? - Yes.

Now, I think you dealt with that application; is that right?
- I would need to see the other form. My signature is not on the document.

Let us look at the RL3a. Would you look please at FA35, which is D52? - Yes, I did.

Now, you were what rank at that time? - Superintendent.

And you recommended to the Chief Constable that the application should be granted; is that right? - I did, yes.

And that follows your examination of the application form? - Yes.

And the RL3a; is that right? - Yes.

Now, going back to the application itself, can you confirm to me that it explains that the applicant Hamilton has got a 9mm pistol, a .223 rifle and a .357 revolver? - It does, yes.

And that he seeks authority to hold a 7.62 rifle and a 9mm pistol? - Yes.

Now, the effect of that is that he would get authority, if this was granted, to both possess a 9mm Browning pistol and acquire another 9mm pistol? - That is correct.

Now, were you aware that this was the first time he had asked for authority to have two 9mm pistols? - I would be.

Would/

4 p.m.

Would you look now please at AD2A form which is FA36 of D53. Is there some sign on that document that it has passed through your hands? - Yes, it has been seen by me and referred to Headquarters.

And there is a date on which you have seen it? - Yes, 28th January.

That is 1986? - Yes.

We have already seen that the application was on 3rd January; is that right? - Yes.

If we go back to the RL3A on what date did you sign the RL3A? - 16th January.

So the document we are now looking at the AD2A, was seen by you at a later date? - Yes.

And you have stamped it 28th. I think it has actually got the 29th as the date, but it is obviously towards the end of January? - Yes.

And attached to it is there something in handwriting? - Handwriting and typing, yes.

I have got two separate sheets here. My document may be a little different. Is that one written on both back and front? You have got a sheet attached to a typewritten sheet? - Yes. I have got the tab.

The tab is handwritten by one officer to another? - Yes, it is.

Is that tab all handwritten? - No.

What is typed on it? - It is a note from myself to Chief Inspector Bell.

What does this note say? - This asks -- well, can I read it?

Yes please? - "It would appear that so many dealers are not aware of the procedure to be adopted when selling, purchasing firearms as they have completed certificates showing they have purchased/purchased the gun".

Should they not have done that? - Well, I would need to refer to the original certificate to see. I can't honestly recall at this stage.

Is there a date on that reference? - 13th January.

And that is from you to which officer? - To Chief Inspector Bell who is then in charge of firearms.

Did you get a reply to that? - There is no written acknowledgement.

There is a handwritten part then on the same document? - This is from -- I can't read the signature but I would say it is an Inspector to Sergeant Binning, which says, "Apparently it is unlikely that a second 9mm pistol will be granted. See Mr. Hamilton and obtain full details of his reasons for requiring two pistols of the same calibre, i.e., why is one not sufficient. Then re-submit the attached to me".

ASAP? - Yes.

Is there a date on that? - Yes -- no, there is not.

Is there any way of telling whether that had been written before the RL3A was signed by you? - I would have to assume that it was completed before the RL3A was signed by me.

Well, if you turn to the typewritten part attached to AD2A, is that from Acting Chief Inspector Mill to the Chief Superintendent of A Division. Who was the Chief Superintendent of A Division then? - I can't recall if it was Mr. Gunn or Mr. Hunter.

What does it say? - It refers to the variation in the firearms certificate 4588 in the name of Mr. Hamilton, and refers to the above application in which Mr. Hamilton is applying to vary a certificate to include a purchase of a 7.62 rifle and an additional 9mm pistol. Mr. Hamilton is active in competition shooting throughout the country/country and it is his intention to purchase the additional weapons for this purpose. The additional 9mm pistol is of a type which is advanced in design to his existing one and includes a weighted handle for greater accuracy. The additional weapon would only be used as recognised ranges for that type of weapon.

That information has come to you later in January after the RL3A was completed; is that right? - That is correct.

At least after it was completed by you? - Yes.

You have stamped it, signed it, and passed it presumably with the application form and the RL3A further up the chain of command? - Yes.

Where would it go to from you? - It would go to the Firearms Department.

If you go back to the RL3A do we see at the foot someone has signed it? - It has been signed by Chief Inspector Alan Bell.

Why has he signed it? - He was the officer in charge of the Firearms Department at that time.

He has signed after the word "granted" has been left and he has added "Process please"? - Yes.

And the date stamp would appear to have been completed when he signed it? - 30th of January.

So he has dealt with it after, on the face of it, getting the AD2A explaining Hamilton's reasons for wanting a second 9mm pistol? - Yes.

Could you now look please at FA39 which should be D59. Is that another form of application? - Yes.

This time it is for variation? - Yes.

Only for variation; is that correct? - That is correct.

Would/

Would you also look please at FA40 which is an RL3A which is D60. Now, did you deal with this application? - I did, yes.

Can you also have FA27 which is D50. Is this the firearms certificate that was being varied? - It would be.

In terms of the application which you have just got in front of you? - Yes.

Now, that firearms certificate before variation authorises a .22 rifle, a .9mm pistol, a .223 rifle and a .357 revolver? - Yes. It authorises them or he possesses them.

Nothing to be purchased or authorised until the variation letter? - Yes.

It also varies the ammunition. A thousand .22 rounds to be possessed, 200 of each 9mm and .223? - That is correct.

If we can come back to the application for variation we are now looking at, he is in fact acquiring the other 9mm pistol; is that right? - That is correct.

He is seeking authority to acquire a 7.62 rifle and another .22 rifle; is that right? - Correct.

But what I am principally concerned about is the ammunition. There is a major change sought in the permission for ammunition; is that right? - Yes, there is.

What is it that he seeks to possess in the way of ammunition? - Well, he is seeking to increase the levels of ammunition in respect of all the calibres, all weapons.

In each case what is the total that he now seeks to possess? Just go along the line? - It is the same line for every calibre, yes.

What is it? - It is 1500.

And it is going up to 1500 from according to the certificate you have in front of you 1,000 in the/

the case of .22 and 200 9mm and .223? - Yes.

Would you agree with me that is.....

LORD CULLEN: I am not sure that is absolutely right. I am not sure you are referring back to 1970 -- which year are you going back to?

MR. BONOMOY: I am looking, sir, at this application which is 1987.

LORD CULLEN: And comparing it with the certificate for what year?

MR. BONOMOY: 1986.

LORD CULLEN: What number is that?

MR. BONOMOY: D50L. You have got the words "I renewed the certificate for three years from 14th February, 1986".

I/

4.15 p.m.

I think, Sir, that this is the point at which the application is made which results in the increase of authority to possess rounds of ammunition from 1,000 or 200, depending on the calibre, up to 1,500 in respect of either calibre.

LORD CULLEN: Yes, I appreciate there was an increase, but I am slightly puzzled still because if I go back to 51A, which is something you referred to a short time ago, I appreciate that is an application -- you see the "Amount desired to be possessed" -- did that still include .22?

MR. BONOMY: It doesn't appear to.

LORD CULLEN: I am just wondering whether in the meantime between 1977 and 1987 there has been a change. I am not suggesting there wasn't a big change between 1986 and 1987. I am just not quite clear what the existing authorisation was as at 1987.

MR. BONOMY: Well, yes, it may be -- if you look, sir, at D50L, which is the Certificate or Renewal dated the 14th February 1986 -- do you have that one?

LORD CULLEN: I have got that thank you, yes.

MR. BONOMY: In the Variation Section on the right-hand side there is a variation dated the 31st January 1986, and that deletes all reference to .22 ammunition.

LORD CULLEN: Yes. So it is that that we should compare with what is authorised in 1987?

MR. BONOMY: But that is the result of the variation which was carried out that Mr. Rattray has already just spoken about, which was dated 3rd January -- oh, no, sorry, he has dealt with another one -- yes, he dealt with the variation application for 3rd January 1986.

LORD CULLEN: Yes.

MR. BONOMY: That is the evidence he has/has just given us.

LORD CULLEN: That is right.

MR. BONOMY: And following that the certificate which is D50L was amended to delete any reference to .22 ammunition.

LORD CULLEN: That is right, and so therefore we should look at the 1986 authorisation and compare that with what is now being authorised or sought to be authorised; is that right?

MR. BONOMY: Yes, that is correct, and the 1986 authorisation is best shown, is it not, on that D50L, because the amounts aren't affected on the left-hand side of the page, it is simply certain types of ammunition that are deleted, or alternatively added, in total 200 and 100 -- there is no question of increasing beyond the 200 to possess or 100 to acquire. So I don't think it is an unfair representation of the point at which there is the significant change up to 1,500. I appreciate it might not be complete to do it this way, but it was the easiest way I thought.....

LORD CULLEN: No. It was merely I wasn't sure whether you were comparing what is now sought to be authorised with what the previous authorisation had been, which is 1986?

MR. BONOMY: Well, I hope that is the effect of what I am doing. I don't think there is another point where there is authority for a large increase up to 1,500.

LORD CULLEN: No.

MR. BONOMY: So all I was trying to do was identify that point. So the evidence is not perhaps as complete as it might be, going through every calibre, but it makes the point of principle which in my submission is the important point in this context.

LORD CULLEN: Yes.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMY: So if I can just ask you to look at D50L, which is the actual Firearms Certificate which was renewed in 1986, /

1986, and just confirm to me that there were a number of calibres of ammunition authorised in that. The only one at any stage which was as high as 1,000 was .22? - That is correct.

And that had been deleted by the time the certificate had had all these variations applied to it; is that right? - Yes.

And that the other calibres which could be held were no more than 200 or 100 rounds? - Yes. He is seeking an increase.

Yes. If you just stick though for the moment to the actual Firearm Certificate, is it clear from reading the front of it that the maximum he was, by 31st January 1986, authorised to hold, was 200 rounds, and that applied to more than one calibre of ammunition? - That is correct, yes.

So when he came to apply in 1987 for his renewal he was seeking a very significant increase from 200 to 1,500 in respect of each of the calibres he had? - He was, yes.

And this would be 9 mm, .22, .38 Special, .357, of which he only had 100; is that right? - Yes.

Now, that application involved what measure of consideration by you? - Well, there are no sort of arbitrary limits as far as ammunition is concerned, so that would be looked at by myself, and it would be seen that he was actively pursuing his interest in the gun Club, and had a requirement to use that amount of ammunition.

Now, how would you establish or how did you establish that he was actively pursuing his interest in the gun Club? - Well, I am trying to see if that was the time when Chief Inspector Mill submitted a report.

Well, I think that is the report you have already looked at? - Yes.

What you could look at now is the RL3a form which is FA40. Have you got it there? - Yes.

It/

It is also D60? - Yes.

Now, are there actually two sheets of this RL3a? -
There are.

If you look at the first sheet, are the six questions all answered "Yes"? - Yes.

And you will then see that question 7 has been completed? - Yes.

Now, could you read out what question 7 says? - "With reference to the applicant's.....".

I think we may have them the wrong way round. The reason why there are two sheets I think you will be able to confirm is that question 7 was answered at length? - It is a combination.....

And the two sheets were necessary, to run over? - Yes.

So can you read from the other page first? - "The applicant has sold the .22 Anschutz rifle, No. 102541, and has purchased the 9 mm Beretta pistol, number C5823OZ as shown.
Applicant wishes to purchase one 7.62 mm rifle and one .22 rifle. All weapons will be used for target shooting. With reference to 2, subpara 2, and 2 sub-para 3 on the certificate, the maximum quantity of ammo to be purchased or acquired at any one time is 1,500 and 1,000 rounds respectively for each calibre. Applicant would like to have maximum for weapons he possesses and those which he would like to purchase. Applicant's security for weapons and ammo has been checked and is very secure. With reference to the applicant's wish to be able to purchase and have 1,500 .38 ammo maximum, this is due to the fact that this .38 Special ammo can be fired from his .357 revolver.
There is no real basic difference in the ammo in that the .38 Special is slightly less powerful".

So that meant that he could keep 3,000 round of ammunition for that weapon? - Yes.

You will see the use of the expression "Maximum", and we have heard you say, as have others told us, there was no arbitrary limit, but was there in fact a limit? - I can't recall if there was a limit./

limit. If there was a limit it may well have been a policy within the force Firearms Department. But I honestly can't recall that.

In any event, were you satisfied on the basis of this report that this application should be granted? - Obviously, sir, yes I was.

Can you remember giving any particular consideration to the application, or is that too long ago now to ask you to remember it? - I'm afraid it is too long ago.

Now that you see all this there are no particular bells ringing in your mind about it? - None, no.

Adjourned until tomorrow at 10.00 a.m.

TUESDAY, 11th JUNE, 1996.

TENTH DAY.

LORD CULLEN: Let's begin again. What point had we reached? Who was to cross-examine next?

MISS DUNLOP: I think I was just about to ask one question or perhaps more accurately to raise one matter rather than one question.

LANCE RATTRAY (Recalled)

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: Mr. Rattray, I would like to ask you about AB2A that is attached to D52. Do you still have that in front of you? - Yes, I do.

This was the explanation as to why Mr. Hamilton needed an additional weapon, in particular an additional 9mm pistol, given he already had a 9mm pistol. Do you remember this? - Yes, I do.

The only question I wanted to raise was we see that an explanation is given of the advantages of a new 9mm pistol, that is that it is advanced in design and it includes a weighted handle for greater accuracy. But the memorandum doesn't explain why he needs to retain the old pistol. One can understand why he is buying a new one but why does he have to keep the old one too? - Members of pistol clubs frequently ask for a second weapon of similar calibre, and the explanation given by most is that the second weapon is required as a back-up for the first weapon or, as it appears in this case, the particular weapon that he is requesting may well be a weapon that he needs for a particular discipline, a type of target practice within range.

But would you agree that if the question was why does he need two 9mm pistols, this doesn't completely explain why, it simply explains what is beneficial about perhaps the new pistol but not why he should retain the old one? - I would still argue he is asking for a second 9mm pistol which he may need, if his weapon failed or non-functioned, he could still use it.

Indeed, but I am simply asking whether this explained in this memo. I don't see that explained/explained there? - The interpretation I am giving you this morning is how I feel that is how I probably saw it 10 years ago.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: Can you have D35 before you please. It is a document which is otherwise known as FA18. That should be a copy of a firearms certificate which was granted on 6th November 1984; is that right? - Yes, it is.

Is there as part of that certificate a section which deals with the purchase by the licence holder of ammunition? - Yes, there is.

And is that section completely filled in the copy which you have? - It is, yes.

BY LORD CULLEN: Just to be quite clear, this is a variation, is that right, rather than a grant or a renewal. Have I got that right? - Well, it is the schedule which is attached to the firearms certificate which shows various purchases that the applicant Mr. Hamilton has made in the course of the duration of that certificate.

But what happened on 6th November, was a variation?

MR. TAYLOR: That is correct, sir.

THE WITNESS: It is a variation.

BY LORD CULLEN: The Table down on the left-hand side at the bottom which on my copy is very indistinct, is that a table of the ammunition as varied? - It is a variation of weapons and ammunition.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. TAYLOR: But looking at the page which contains the tables of purchases, we see that these purchases have been spread over a period between December 1979 and December, 1984? - That is correct.

If we look at Production D49 which should be AD2A from Constable Brown to the Chief Superintendent of A Division, perhaps you could just read that out for the Inquiry? - In this memo from Constable 403 Brown he is advising his Chief Superintendent on 10th December, 1984 Thomas Watt Hamilton/

Hamilton of 39 Forth Crescent, Stirling, called at the police office in Stirling and requested a new firearms Form 2 to be issued to him as he had completed Table 2 which is the ammunition section of the form. The memo continues to say the firearms certificate is attached and indicates it be referred to the Firearms Department.

Was this unusual, for the firearms certificate to be surrendered for the purpose of having a new Table 2 appended to it? - It was relatively unusual inasmuch as the section which contains the part for the ammunition is quite lengthy and in normal circumstances would last several years.

If we move on through the paper trail to D50L this should be the firearms certificate with a variation on it? - Yes, I have it, for 31st January, 1986.

That's the one. Again if we have a look at Table 2 can you tell us what we find there? - It is in many respects similar to the previous certificate. It shows he made a fairly large number of purchases of ammunition between the period December, 1984 to October, 1986.

So we see that from the period covered in the two Table 2s, that is from 1979 to 1986, the Tables have been exhausted of any space; is that fair to say? - Yes, that's right.

Do you think that aspect would have had any bearing upon the thought processes in increasing the number of rounds of ammunition which Mr. Hamilton had authority to possess? - I would say so. It think it clearly shows he is a frequent user of ammunition.

I take it going back through the period of time it is difficult for you to say categorically that's the reason; is that so? - It is impossible for me to remember with any clear certainty, but on reflection you are looking at the certificate, that information would be there, and on the basis of that I would have been satisfied that his reasons for increase in ammunition were in order.

This morning you were asked some questions/questions in relation to Mr. Hamilton having permission to hold two hand guns of the same calibre. Can you say how usual or unusual it was for a licence holder to have such permission? - Relatively unusual. We always examined very carefully any requests for a second weapon of a similar calibre. I am not just talking about gun clubs; I am talking in respect of all applications.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: The firearms certificate number D35 has an oddity about it that doesn't seem to apply to the others. Have a look at the last page? - Are we talking about the firearms certificate which was granted in January, 1986?

No. It is the earlier one which has FA18 on the backing? - I do have that, sir. It is the firearms certificate granted in November, 1984 for the variation.

If you go to the back page of the certificate where you see the renewal section we see it covers the renewal granted on 14th February, 1980. Do you have that? - No, I'm sorry, sir, I don't follow that.

The back page of the certificate. You see at the bottom right-hand side "Renewal of certificate"? - Yes.

And it says, "I hereby renew this certificate for three years from 14th February, 1980"? - Yes, and further down from 1983.

And it says below that, "I hereby renew this certificate for three years from 14th February, 1983"? - Yes.

So we have two renewals on one certificate. Is that unusual? - I honestly can't answer that question. That is an administrative sort of.....

Would that not explain why the ammunition section got overloaded? - It may well -- obviously if the certificate has run for the duration of six years the certificate has obviously run because the period that he has been drawing ammunition is over at least a five year period.

The/

The point was being put to you -- I quite accept you can't actually remember a great deal about it -- the point was being put to you it would be because of this cluttering-up of the ammunition section on the certificate that perhaps Mr. Hamilton was allowed this huge increase in the amount of ammunition he could hold and acquire and this is a certificate which became cluttered because it was used for six years rather than three? - I never used the term "cluttered".

Sorry, it was my expression? - I am using the term he appeared to be using a reasonably large amount of ammunition during that period.

Is it also fair to say if you look at the ammunition section that the ammunition he was acquiring exclusively between the end of 1979 well into 1984 was .22? - Yes.

And over a period of four years there is actually no sign of him purchasing 9mm ammunition although he had authority to hold 9mm and .357 at that stage? - I don't know if he possessed it at that time.

Well, if you look at the ammunition section further up, in 1979 he was purchasing .357 Magnum ammunition? - Yes.

The 9mm creeps in I think because it has been put in out of order at 1984? - Yes.

He certainly was able to acquire .357? - Yes. He buys the 9mm in November, 1984.

Now, what is the extent of your knowledge of the practice of marksmen to re-load their cartridges? - I am aware of that practice but I have no technical knowledge of it.

Could that again be an explanation for the large number of purchases on Hamilton's certificate, that he wasn't a re-loader and only bought commercially produced ammunition? - That is correct, yes.

Lastly the memo which Miss Dunlop asked you about. You do accept that that simply explains why Hamilton wanted an additional weapon but doesn't really/really when you look at the memo explain why he needs to keep the old one? - It doesn't clearly explain in the memo, I accept that, but I still would argue that it may well be, although it is not recorded on paper, that the explanation was he required it as a back-up weapon.

This is not a criticism, it is an attempt to find out what was the approach of the police authority to these applications. Do I take it from your answer that you were prepared to make an assumption in favour of the applicant in dealing with applications for renewal? - Well, I don't know what you mean by the term "assumption".

Well, you have said a number of times that you assumed that he needed to have one as a spare? - Yes.

Now, my question is, is that indicative of the approach that was taken to renewals around the time we are talking about, that you made an assumption in favour of the applicant rather than against the applicant? - All I can say is it was not an unusual practice to allow a member of a gun club to have a second weapon of a similar calibre.

IAN/

10.20 a.m.

IAN MacKENZIE (49), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: I am a retired police officer. I retired from the police in 1995, at the end of July last year.

And what rank did you hold then? - A superintendent.

And are you now employed in a civilian capacity by the Central Police Force? - Yes. I am now the Force Data Protection Officer.

And it was Central Police that you were a superintendent with? - That is correct.

How long did you actually serve with the police? - I served as a cadet, up to retirement, in total -- 1963 I joined the cadets, so that would be 32 years.

Now, I want to ask you about a stage first of all around 1989 when you were Chief Inspector within the Headquarters Administration Unit? - That is correct.

In that role did you have responsibilities for firearms administration? - Yes, that is correct. That was one of my roles.

What were your responsibilities? - With regards to firearms?

Yes? - I was responsible for supervising the staff within the Firearms Department. I was also responsible for ensuring the accuracy of the records and also for ensuring the accuracy of firearms certificates that were submitted to the Deputy Chief Constable for signature.

In February 1989 you were acting superintendent in that role. Is that coincidental -- was the role actually the role of a Chief Inspector and you happened to be doubling up as an acting superintendent? - That is right. At that time the superintendent was absent on a course and I was doing his job as well as the job I had.

I wonder if you could have some documents/documents in front of you please? Could you have first of all FA43, which is -- is that actually two documents? - No, it is one. It is a firearms certificate application.

And it has got a note attached to it; is that right? - Yes.

Could you also have FA44? Is that the RL3a that relates to that application? - Yes, that is correct.

And is it one sheet or two sheets? - One sheet.

Would you also then have -- I don't know if I have the number for this. I suppose I could try FA45.

LORD CULLEN: Can you give the alternative reference of these?

MR. BONOMOY: If you just give me a moment, Sir, in case I give the wrong references here. I just want to be clear I have the right Production.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: Is that an additional RL3a or other similar type of form which was used for this application? - That is correct.

MR. BONOMOY: Sir, the references for all of these are D65L, which should be a note, followed by the application form D68, which is the RL3a and D69, which is the last document which was being used at that time as a supplement to the RL3a. It is a pity the documents are separated by another two which don't directly relate to this particular point.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: Now, the FA43, which is the application, is an application by Thomas Hamilton? - That is correct.

And what is it for? - It was to renew his firearm certificate.

With effect from what time? - It says "Renew before 14/2/89".

2Now, /

Now, the note that has been attached to the outside of it says what? - It is from the Chief Inspector. It says "The officer who did the inquiry the last time of renewal obviously didn't check the serial number. The wrong number is shown on the certificate".

So one of the guns has a mistake in the serial number? - That is correct.

I think it is just one letter that is wrongly recorded; is that right? - Yes. The serial number was given as FNO instead of FND -- sorry, it should read "FNO", and in fact it read "FND".

Were you that Chief Inspector? - No.

Somebody else? - Yes.

Which Chief Inspector was it? - Oh, sorry, my mistake, it looks as though it is addressed to the Chief Inspector from the sub-divisional sergeant.

So it would be addressed to you in fact? - No, it is addressed to "Chief Inspector", and looking at the form it would be addressed to Chief Inspector Paterson.

If you go to the RL3a -- I am jumping ahead a little -- at the foot of it your signature appears as "Acting Superintendent"? - That is correct.

And somebody has actually written in "Note correct serial number"? - That is me -- that is my note to the Firearms Department.

But that is not because the outer note was addressed to you in particular, but would be with the papers when you saw them? - Yes.

Can I take it that when it came to your responsibility to look at this application you would have all the documents that you have got there in front of you? - Yes.

Is that all you would have? - No, I would have his complete file.

Was/

Was that routine in 1989? - Yes.

Whose responsibility was it to put the whole file in front of you? - All these forms that you see here would be addressed to the Firearms Department. The staff in the Firearms Department would go to the file and bring out the relevant file and put the relevant file and these documents up to myself.

In 1989 what was the complement in the Firearms Department? - Two.

Who were they? - It would be Maria McEwan, and I think it was Ann-Marie Hunt.

Were they both civilian officers? - Yes.

When was the gradual civilianisation of that Department started? - I believe 1991.

Well, is this one not 1989? - No. The civilianisation wasn't in relation to the administration. The civilianisation was in relation to the inquiry.

So the person who now holds the administration post is Maureen Johnson? - Correct.

Which of these two ladies was her equivalent? - Well, none of these ladies did the job that Maureen Johnson now has.

A different job? - Yes.

Well, did they do part of the job she now has? - Yes. They would do, as I say, getting the file together and then typing up the certificates.

They are clerical staff? - Yes.

And it was their job to put the whole file in front of you? - Yes.

If we have heard in the Inquiry that that doesn't happen now, except in cases where there was a problem, then that would be a change? - Yes.

Is/

Is that a change you were aware of, that the file doesn't always get laid in front of the Chief Inspector now? - Yes. I have become aware of it over the years, but it wasn't the case when I was there.

Were you there, though, when that change took place? - No.

As a result of having the file you would have a file copy of his existing firearm certificate? - That is correct.

Did you pay attention to that when you dealt with the renewal? - I checked back to the time of the last renewal, normally, and I would check in the interim period between the renewal and this renewal, any variations that had taken place, any changes in his ownership of weapons, to make sure that all the details of transactions were properly and accurately recorded.

Could you have FA57, which is D50? Is that the previous certificate? - Yes. That was issued on the 31st January 1986.

Now, it has got some variations on it? - That is correct.

But they relate to the weapons and then the deletion of .22 ammunition, and the inclusion of additional ammunition because there was a 7.62 rifle added? - Yes.

But when you came to consider the renewal in 1989 the amount of ammunition that Hamilton could either hold or acquire would be the amount that we see on the outside bottom left of this firearm certificate? - The outside?

The front page, bottom left, we see the amount of ammunition he was entitled to either acquire or possess at the time he made his application to you for renewal -- subject to the variations on the right-hand side.....

LORD CULLEN: Mr. Bonomy, this is 1986, as varied then.

THE WITNESS: There was a variation in 1987, I understand.

LORD/

LORD CULLEN: Which is what we looked at yesterday. I think that might be covered by D59, is it? That may be nearer the application -- 59 is the application for variation. I am not sure we have a text for the certificate as varied in these papers. I may be wrong about that. I haven't seen it yet -- and Mr. Taylor I think agrees with me.

MR. BONOMOY: Yes, that is right, because I do have the certificates here in a bundle, and it is not one of them.

LORD CULLEN: I am simply going on the application and the fact it was shown as passed. I am assuming that would be incorporated as a proper variation at that time in 1987.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:
Could you also have in front of you please D59, which is FA43? - The application form?

That is an application for variation? - It is a renewal application, 1989.

BY THE COURT: Are you looking at a document that has a date at the top 31.3.87? - No, I am looking at a document that has got.....

LORD CULLEN: You should be looking at D59L, whatever that is in the other language.

MR. BONOMOY: The problem is the other language isn't clear on the backing.

THE WITNESS: I have now got a variation in front of me dated 31/3/87.

LORD CULLEN: That is the one.

MR. BONOMOY: That is the one.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:
Now, if you would look back then at the application form you were dealing with, and compare it with the variation application which you now have in front of you? Can you tell us whether your application was simply a renewal of what apparently Mr. Hamilton had authority for when he made his application to you? - Well, I would expect from the variation of 1987 there/there to be another certificate showing these variations. I don't have that.

I appreciate that, but since we don't have that at the moment, if you can just assume it was granted on the strength of the application you have been given? - Yes, I would assume that that was granted, and then I would have a certificate which accurately reflected what that variation said, yes.

Now, was he simply asking for a straightforward renewal of what he had at that time? - Yes, that is correct.

Now, would you look then at the RL3a, and the additional, supplementary form which seems to go with it? - Yes.

Now, why on this occasion was there an additional form over and above the usual RL3a form? - I believe at that time there was a change to try to introduce more standardisation into the administration procedure, to keep the inquiry officers aware of the type of questions they should be asking when they go to visit an applicant, and to look for reasons for duplicate calibre, to indicate the level of security and any other relevant information they may have.

Had this anything to do with legislation passed in 1988? - Yes, I believe that would be the case.

Can you remember that now as being the reason for this? - There was certainly a change in the level of security, and my understanding would be that would be the reason this was introduced.

If we look at the RL3a form, that has been completed by a Constable called Brown? - That is correct.

He has answered the various questions; is that correct? - Yes, he has.

But one of them this time has the answer "No". The other five have "Yes"? - That is correct.

And/

And the "No" relates to the serial number for one of the guns? - That is correct.

You have already dealt with that? - Yes.

Could you look at the form? - Yes.

Now, it requires additional information in relation to some of the matters which are the subject of the RL3a? - Yes.

Is that right? - Yes.

And none of these am I right in saying relates to the first question, which is whether the applicant is a suitable person to hold a firearms certificate? - No.

I think at the top of that form there is a column where each of four weapons is specified? - That is correct.

And that is the weapons which he possessed at that time? - Yes.

There is then a separate question dealing with the issue of duplicate calibre? - Yes.

Now, why was that introduced? - As I said earlier, I think it was a reason to standardise procedures and to make sure that where someone asked for duplicate calibre, the inquiry officer had to find out the reason for it.

So this was a form which the inquiry officer had along with the RL3a form? - Yes.

There is some guidance under the heading "Duplicate Calibre" given to that officer. What is the guidance? - "If applicant has/is applying for duplicate calibre -- C.G. competition purpose, i.e. balance-precet sights, etc., see below".

And what do we see below? - "If holder states firearm is for competition he must be a member of a Club. If holder states firearm is for sport he must have land permission".

There/

There is also an asterisk, but does the asterisk actually mean anything? - Where is that?

Before the words "see below" there is an asterisk. Do we see that asterisk further down? - Yes.

Now, that particular section has been completed by the inquiry officer. Could you read out what he has written in? - "Duplicate Calibre", it says, "Nos. 2 and 3 are required as 2 has an adjustable site for target shooting and 3 is required for competition shooting".

So Nos. 2 and 3 refers to the two weapons above that; is that correct? - Yes, the 9 mm Browning and the 9 mm Beretta.

So we have two self-loading weapons, both 9 mm, and we here have an explanation why both of them are required? - Yes.

What is the explanation? - "Nos. 2 and 3 are required as 2 has an adjustable site for target shooting and 3 is required for competition shooting".

Does/

10.40 a.m.

Does that mean anything to you? - It means that this applicant had a weapon which perhaps the sight had been adjusted for a specific discipline and kept for that discipline and the other one would be for any other use in the club.

Does it actually say that? - No.

What is the difference between target shooting and competition shooting? - Well, there is not a lot of difference in the actual shooting. I would say the difference in target shooting is that you would go along to a club and shoot at targets. If they wanted to progress from that and enter competitions either at that club or other clubs, that would be classed as competition shooting.

Well, No. 2 which is the one for target shooting, is the one on which there is more specification than an adjustable sight? - Yes.

But you seem to be suggesting that is for the simpler discipline and No. 3, about which there is no specification, is apparently for the more complex discipline? - I am not saying one is simpler or complex. I would say in competitions you are competing against others and target shooting is just when you go and shoot targets, various disciplines with a target.

Does it come to this; that you don't really understand the difference? - Between what?

Between these two concepts of target shooting and competition shooting? - Well, I know there is a difference in that people shoot at targets and never compete. Other people shoot at targets and compete. People who compete may have a weapon they like to use for that competition because the action on it is suited to them or whatever.

Would it not follow from that that you would expect them to use that same weapon, if it is the accurate one, for what they describe as target shooting? - Say that again?

If you are suggesting they need a really comfortable/comfortable and good weapon for competition shooting, would it not follow that they would also want to use that weapon for target shooting? - I don't know. It would be up to the individual what he felt comfortable with when he used it for competition.

But why would he want a less comfortable weapon for target shooting? Can you think of any logical reason why anybody would want a less good weapon for target shooting? - Well, all I can say to that is if I was going along and shooting on a regular basis and I was also involved in competitions, I might prefer to keep my good weapon for the competitions.

Now, please tell me if you think this is unfair but would it be fair to suggest that you are making certain assumptions on very limited information conveyed to you by the enquiry officer? - Well, personally I think the enquiry officer has conveyed me a reason why that person requires two weapons of similar calibre.

You are giving the impression that for a marksman there might be good reasons for keeping your weapon good, as if it might deteriorate in some way if you used it for practice. Is that what you have got in mind? - I am not saying it would necessarily deteriorate but anything can happen when you are shooting. I mean, there may be a jam or there may be anything in the weapon. I am not putting myself forward as an expert in shooting. I am not a shooter and have never been involved in club shooting. What I am saying is in my opinion the officer here has conveyed to me a reason that I would accept at that time for a duplicate calibre.

Yes, but would it be fair to say that if you just use the words target shooting for one weapon and competition shooting for another, at the time we are talking about, 1989, the police would accept that as a good reason for having duplicate calibre weapons? - For just mentioning the two?

Yes? - No, not necessarily.

Well, that is all this says? - That is what he said at this time. You said on all occasions.

But/

But if all that was ever advanced as a reason for having duplicable calibre is "I want it for target shooting and I want another for competition shooting", that would be good enough for the police in 1989? - Yes.

Now, there is also a section in this form which says "Other Relevant Information". For example, intended purchases? - Yes.

What did the enquiry officer have typed in at that stage? - "The applicant is authorised to possess a 7.62 rifle and a .22 rifle. He may purchase a .22 rifle in April 1989 when he disposes of his .223 rifle.

What is a 7.62 rifle? - What do you mean what is a 7.62?

What is it? - It is a rifle with calibre 7.62.

Is that for long-range shooting or target shooting or what? - On this occasion it is used on an authorised range so it is suitable for that particular weapon.

Now, what good reason is disclosed on this application form for giving authority to Thomas Hamilton to possess a 7.62 rifle? - The reason that he has been given authority to purchase, possess, a 7.62 rifle is that he is a member of a rifle club at which he can use that weapon.

What indication is there that he is going to acquire one? - On that, nothing.

So why should he be allowed to possess one? - Because I would expect the enquiry officer to ask him, "You put down here you want a 7.62 rifle" and I would expect the enquiry officer to say to him if he was going to purchase one.

Why did you not send it back and ask if that was going to happen? - That wasn't my role. My role was in the administration of the firearms certificate procedure. The enquiry and the recommendation of the weapon finished in this case with Mr. Matchett where he has got "Chief Constable recommended".

So/

So what were you actually doing with this paperwork?
- As I said at the very beginning, my job was to ensure the accuracy of the records and the accuracy of the certificate. My job was not to do the enquiry or anything with the enquiry.

So you were not even supposed to check whether there was a good reason advanced for possession of a 7.62 rifle? - No.

Well, whose job was it to do that? - The enquiry officer and his superior officers up to Mr. Matchett.

Who is above you, is it, or below? Where is Mr. Matchett in the chain? - If you look above my signature, the one before that says "Chief Constable recommended" and that is the enquiry as far as that part of it is complete. The bottom part is my instruction to the Firearms Department.

Who would deal with it after you? - Deal with what?

The application? - I would pass that into the Firearms Department. They would complete the certificate and it would come back to me for checking for accuracy and it would go to the Depute Chief Constable.

Would he be expected to think about questions like good reason? - No.

So he just signs what is stuck in front of him? - He would expect the officers below him to do all the necessary enquiry and in my case to make sure that it was accurate.

And you would expect the officers below you to make the necessary enquiry, is that right? - Well, there were no officers below me in the administration part of it.

Oh, I see. All right. So it would be the job of the sergeant whose initials are on the right-hand side. Who was he? - It is just.....

Not clear. It may be the Inspector in fact? - It may be.

His/

His job and the job of the Sub-Divisional Officer and the job of the Commander? - Yes.

To make sure that the thing was checked out properly? - Yes.

Now, can you part with these various documents and we will turn to another renewal. Can you have FA55 which is D83. Now, that is another application for renewal, is it? - That's correct, yes.

Is there any other document with that application? - No.

But there are two photographs? - There are two photographs, yes.

This is a new style application, different from the last one we looked at? - Yes.

Dated 12th January 1992? - That is correct.

Can you also have FA56 which is D85? Is that an LR3a form with that application? - Yes, that is correct.

Does it now incorporate the material in the two documents we looked at in the last renewal? - Yes.

Now, what was your responsibility in respect of this renewal? - My responsibility was to ensure the accuracy of the firearms certificate once it was prepared. There is a difference on this occasion from 1989 and you will note that Mr. Norman Lynch has now become the enquiry officer and there is not a police involvement in the enquiry so Norman Lynch would prepare this application for me and I would check it and make sure that the certificate accurately reflected that.

This time, though, did you have responsibility for checking things like whether there was a good reason and so on? - I was responsible for making sure that Mr. Lynch made all these enquiries, yes.

So/

So are you doing the job that the Inspector, Sub-Divisional Officer and the Commander were doing or supposed to do in the other cases? - Yes, for renewals only.

So this time you would be responsible for checking that there was a good reason? - Yes.

And you are quite clear that that was not your responsibility in relation to the earlier one? - Yes.

Now, on the LR3a form this time the reason for requiring the firearms are giving as for target shooting only at Stirling Rifle and Pistol Club, is that right? - That is correct.

Now, we still see this 7.62 calibre rifle on the application form? - That's correct, yes.

And no sign of buying it? - No.

It has been around for a while? - Now for three years.

It has been around for..... sorry? - Is it three years since the last one? Does it go back further than that?

A bit longer than that? - Yes. Sorry.

I think we saw it being added on the variation in 1987, if you remember. Do you remember we looked at the 1987 variation so that is when it was added? - Was it? Right.

So it has been around for four to five years? - Yes.

Ought you not to have been asking questions about that? - Yes, I would expect the enquiry officer to ask the question of Mr. Hamilton in this case, if he still wished authorisation and it is marked on the application form "If you still wish to retain authorisation please tick" and he has ticked the box Yes and I would expect Mr. Lynch to ask him for a particular reason why he hadn't bought it or when he was likely to buy it.

But/

No. But there is no record of that having been done? -

And you assume that he would do that? - Yes.

And be satisfied? - Yes.

So your check is really back to the original type of check in 1989, that everything looks as if it has been completed properly on the face of it? - Yes, although I would say the added difference is that Norman Lynch would come directly to me if he had any questions and I would speak to him if there was anything raised that I was not happy with.

But if Mr. Lynch is a good form-filler and he provides an answer to every question and ticks the right boxes and does not raise any queries with you, you would tend just to push that to the Depute Chief Constable for signature? - I would accept that Mr. Hamilton having specifically indicated that he still wished to retain authorisation for that, I would expect Mr. Lynch to have asked him that. You are right on that. I would expect him to do that but I would not with every application that came through stop and say "Now, did you do all the checks?" No.

Had you had any dealings with Mr. Hamilton? - No, none.

The 1989 and 1992 renewals followed incidents which were the subject of very extensive police investigation into Mr. Hamilton. Were you aware of these investigations? - No.

Not at all? - No.

I suppose you know now what these investigations were about? - Yes.

And indeed I think on my instructions you have had to look at the papers in connection with these incidents? - Yes, I was shown them last week.

Now, I appreciate that you are being asked with the benefit of hindsight to look at certain/certain things and therefore there is a limit to what it is right to ask you about this but can I ask you first of all having seen these documents whether it surprises you that information about these investigations did not percolate through to the person dealing with firearms? - Do you mean all the investigations in general or specifically?

No, the very fact he was subject to police investigation at a very extensive level. Running into hundreds of pages? - Are we talking about the incident in 19.....?

Well, both of them. There is one in 1988? - Right.

And that has two very substantial reports relating to it?
- Yes.

And there is the one in 1991 and that also has two substantial reports relating to it? - Right.

Now, is it surprising or is it odd that you didn't know anything at all about the police investigations of these two matters? - I find it difficult to answer that one. If somebody is investigated and there is no reason to believe as a result of the investigation that there is a suggestion that his firearms certificate should be revoked, I would not necessarily expect that to be in the firearms file. If there was a suggestion that the person was a danger and his firearms certificate should be revoked, I would have expected it to be in the file.

The Inquiry has heard, and you will have read, of Detective Sergeant Hughes' memo which was in November 1991? - That is correct.

And that is dealing with the question of firearms certificate? - Yes.

So it is obviously within the knowledge of the investigating officers at that time in that particular enquiry that Hamilton had a firearms certificate? - Yes.

What you are confirming I think is something we already know, that that particular memo never/never found its way on to the firearms file? - That is correct.

Now, because the firearms certificate is mentioned in it and because the memo expresses anxiety about whether he should have his firearms certificate revoked, I take it it should have got on to the firearms file? - Yes, I would have expected it to be.

Have/

11 a.m.

Have you read it? - Yes.

Would it have made any difference to the renewal in 1992 if it had been on the firearms file? - In my opinion, no.

Would it have made you either instruct or yourself carry out further inquiry? - Into what?

Any element of the subject matter of the memo? - I wouldn't have re-visited the memo itself. I would expect the procedure to be if anybody came up with any new information that would be brought to the attention of the Firearm's Department.

The memo says that Hamilton seemed to become increasingly stressed and had difficulty maintaining the group. It was during one such camp that he became increasingly angry and assaulted one of the boys. This particular child was in fact assaulted three times by Hamilton during the first few days of the holiday and was eventually removed by his parents. You didn't think to look any further at that? - After the decision for.....

No, if you had got this? - Sorry, I thought you were asking what would I have done in 1992 given the Chief Constable had marked it "No action" in 1991.

Yes, well, that's the question. That's the right question to ask you? - My answer would be I wouldn't have gone back to re-examine evidence that had already been examined by the Deputy.

That is because by the time you would have seen this memo for renewal in 1992 the Deputy Chief Constable who decides on renewals would have marked this for "No action"? - Yes.

Had marked it for no action? - Yes.

So it wouldn't have been your job to re-check the situation at all? - (No answer).

In 1992 were you still a Chief Inspector? - Until the end of 1992.

So/

So when were you promoted Superintendent? -
December.

One of the things we have heard that wasn't checked certainly in regard to some applications was the previous firearms licence. Can I take it that while you had a copy of the existing firearms certificate on file you would not ask to see Hamilton's existing certificate before deciding whether to renew it? - I would have possession of the existing certificate, yes.

It would come in with the application? - Yes.

Well, we have had evidence yesterday that it didn't, because the applicant had to hold it to support his continued retention of the firearm. Is that wrong? - That's wrong.

So you would have the certificate and therefore would be aware of the fact he wasn't buying ammunition? - Yes.

Didn't cause you any concern? - Well, not particularly, because his ammunition was dropping albeit slightly.

Well, can we just look at that. Could you perhaps have D58 which is FA42. Is that the one you dealt with, the renewal for 1989? - Yes.

So when it comes to 1992 you would have this in front of you? - Yes.

What does the certificate disclose about ammunition? - I haven't got that page.

FA41. What does this disclose about ammunition? - He had purchased ammunition in 1987.

Can that document relate then to that certificate if it appears to cover 1987? - This firearms certificate was issued first of all on 31st March, 1987 and it was varied -- it was renewed in 1989, on 14th February, 1989, and it was also varied at that time to alter the serial number.

Yes, but the one you have got should on the back page say "Renewal"? - Yes.

LORD/

LORD CULLEN: Yes, but on the outside of that it shows when it was first issued.

MR. BONOMOY: Yes, 31/3/87.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: You have a certificate that actually covers March 1987 until its renewal in 1992? - Yes.

And all we have is three purchases of ammunition in 1987? - There are three dates, yes.

Five separate purchases? - Yes.

Nothing after that? - No.

Did that not cause you, raise any questions in your mind? - Well, as far as persons who are members of a club, there are obviously some people who get ammunition at clubs, members of that club, and it wouldn't necessarily raise doubt in my mind.

We have seen some history of substantial purchases to the point where Hamilton had to get additional sheets on Schedule 2 for his firearms certificate? - Yes.

And he had authority to hold 1500 of each of the calibres and acquire 1,000 at a given time? - Yes.

Take that along with the fact that there is absolutely no sign of commercial purchases between 1987 and 1992, is there any ground in your view for asking a few questions? - As I say, I wouldn't have at that particular time, no.

BY LORD CULLEN: Is this something you might expect to be asked by other persons in the chain? - I would expect the inquiry officers to do any of these inquiries and find out if he is using a weapon and if he is still a member of a club, does he go to the club.

So far as the position about purchasing ammunition is concerned, is that the kind of matter you would expect the enquiring officer to ask questions about? - Not in great detail.

What/

What do you mean by "not in great detail"? - I wouldn't ask -- I would expect the enquiry officer to say "Are you buying a lot of ammunition at the moment", or whatever.

So you wouldn't really expect him to raise any question because of the possibility that he was purchasing in some other way? - Yes.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: The only other piece of material that might have been expected to get on to the firearms certificate relates to movement of a firearm and the taking of it by train to a house in Linlithgow. You weren't aware of a firearm being taken to a house in Linlithgow and shown to children whose photographs were taken with the firearm? - Not at that time, no.

You know now about that incident? - I have heard about it since.

Would you have regarded that as something which should have got its way on to the firearms file? - Yes.

What significance would that have had on the subject of renewal? - Obviously I don't know the full details of it and I don't know if -- well, I presume Hamilton wasn't spoken to so I don't know his side of it. But looking at the incident, given that the parents were there at the time, given there was no ammunition, and he was present, there didn't appear to be any danger, and I wouldn't have expected that to affect my decision to renew.

But it is something you might like to have had an opportunity at least of considering? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: You were asked some questions about the applicant giving as his reason for having two similar guns of the same calibre that one is for target shooting and the other is for competition shooting. Are there any forms of competition shooting to your knowledge which don't involve shooting at targets? - Not to my knowledge.

So in fact the difference is more apparent/apparent than real. You have competition shooting, you have target shooting. It is just different words? - Yes, but you are competing against others.

But when an applicant is giving as his purported reason for having two guns the same, competition shooting and target shooting, that doesn't seem to matter as long as he just uses a different word? - Some people genuinely want to use a weapon for competition.

But you've already told me competition shooting is target shooting. Competition is shooting at targets and competing against other people? - They are all shooting at targets. Competition is putting yourself up against somebody else.

Now, in relation to an applicant having to carry forward at a renewal authority which he has previously obtained to buy a weapon, carrying it forward because he has not yet purchased that weapon, you said that you would expect the enquiry officer to have asked the applicant "Are you going to buy this gun". Is that your evidence? - Yes.

And this is something you would expect to be done as a matter of routine? - A matter of routine at renewal.

So does that not mean on a previous occasion the applicant has been asked "Are you going to buy this gun" and has said "Yes" and he hasn't bought the gun? - That is correct. There may be many reasons for that.

Does that not necessarily raise a question about why he had said the last time he was going to buy a gun and hadn't bought it? - Not necessarily. It may be the case that the applicant sees a gun he would like to purchase and he then has to apply for a variation to his certificate.

Yes, but you are answering for the applicant. What I am asking you is do you not ask the question? - What question?

Do you not say to the applicant "Why did you say the last time you were going to buy this gun and/and not buy it"? - Yes, I would expect the enquiry officer to ask that question. That question can be answered in many ways. I wouldn't personally ask the question.

But each time somebody such as an enquiry officer is looking at a certificate which is for renewal which already has authority to buy a gun which has not been purchased, would you not expect the question to be asked more forcefully, "Why are you continuing to ask for authority to buy this gun and not buying it"? - I would certainly expect it to be asked. I wouldn't have used the word "forcefully".

Now, you have explained to us that there is a chain and at the bottom of the chain there are officers making the actual inquiries and then presumably as one moves up the chain there are more senior people who are not required to make inquiries personally but are making judgements and assessing whether someone is or is not a fit person to hold a firearms certificate. Is that a fair way of putting it? - The enquiry officer does the inquiry and he would then put it up to his superior officer, yes, and he has to decide on the evidence of the enquiry officer whether it should be recommended for renewal.

What I am interested to know is where in this hierarchy is the person who has all the information about the applicant and the power or responsibility to make a judgement. Who is that individual? - Well, if you look at the application the Divisional Officer at the time in 1989 was the person and he recommended to the Chief Constable that this person should be granted renewal of his certificate.

So the answer to my question is the particular individual in this hierarchy who has all the information and the power and responsibility to make judgements is the Divisional Commander? - He has got all the information from the inquiry, yes.

And he has the file in front of him? - Not the file.

Well, is there any individual who has the applicant's file and therefore access to all the information/information that is held and has the power or responsibility to make the decision on the applicant? - I would have all the information in front of me at the time of any renewal. I would have the previous certificate and I would have the full record of him being recommended from the Division. If the Division recommends this person, is satisfied with the weapon, they are satisfied with the inquiry, and I am satisfied having looked at the applicant's file, satisfied there is nothing there to the detriment of the individual, then I would tell the Firearms Department to process the application and it would be submitted to the Deputy Chief Constable for signature.

You have already been asked in evidence-in-chief about a number of areas which would appear to have required closer scrutiny. I am thinking in particular verifying there is good reason for every firearm on the certificate, and we have just spoken about good reason for a firearm for which authority was previously granted but which firearm was not actually purchased. That may be one area that would be looked at. You also have been asked about the question of the applicant not buying ammunition. But is it your position that you didn't see it as any part of your function to initiate inquiries on these matters, you simply assumed that those below you would have done all that was required of them in making inquiry? - I would expect the officers to inquire into the purchase of firearms and ammunition.

Do/

11.20 a.m.

Do you accept, however, that there is nothing in the paperwork which reached you to confirm that these inquiries have been made, that is more specific inquiries about why the applicant wasn't buying ammunition, or why he continued to require authority for certain types of gun? You are simply assuming in general terms that those below you have made the inquiry required of them? - Yes, I assumed they had carried out the inquiry, yes.

You were asked about Detective Sergeant Hughes' memorandum, and you said that it would have made no difference to you at the time of the renewal in 1992, because no action had been taken on the memorandum when it was submitted to the Deputy Chief Constable; is that correct? - Yes.

I would like you to consider the position without that knowledge -- that is without the knowledge that the Deputy Chief Constable has seen it and decided to take no action. So assume that you had opened the Firearms File and seen this memorandum. Would the memorandum have caused you to recommend that the applicant not receive a renewed firearm certificate? - The memo from Detective Sergeant Hughes would have raised concerns in my mind and from that I would have asked for further clarification on a number of issues in the memorandum.

Perhaps if you could have the memorandum in front of you. It is D82L. Now, put shortly you see that Detective Sergeant Hughes has been investigating allegations connected with a summer camp run by Hamilton in July 1989, and you see in the third paragraph that Detective Sergeant Hughes feels compelled to make this report because of the impression left with him by this man. Can I ask you firstly, how common an occurrence was this, that a police officer would make a report about the holder of a firearm certificate because that person had made him feel so concerned? - I would say it was most unusual.

In your experience is it unique? Can you think of another occasion in your working life when this has happened? - I can recall occasions when/when officers submitted reports indicating that an individual had committed a crime and that they thought the firearms certificate should be revoked, yes.

But can you recall an occasion on which an officer submitted a memorandum in which he said "This person in my opinion should not have a firearm certificate because of the type of person he is"? - "Because of the type of person" -- no, I can't recall any other one.

Now, you see in the fifth paragraph that Detective Sergeant Hughes considers that Hamilton is an unsavoury character and an unstable personality? - Yes.

You referred earlier to matters which might have caused you to want to make further inquiries. Can we take it that those comments would be such matters? - Yes, particularly the unstable personality.

We then see that Detective Sergeant Hughes refers to Hamilton becoming increasingly stressed and having difficulty in managing the group; and that stress apparently causing him to assault one of the boys -- so somebody resorting to violence under stress. Would that have been something that would have concerned you? - Yes, it is something I would have been looking for further information about, yes.

Well, there is already quite a bit of information there, is there not? - No, I don't think -- I mean, there is no mention of the level of violence. Was it serious? Was it unprovoked? Was it substantiated? There is nothing there that I could go to the Chief Constable and say "There is enough evidence on which you could make a recommendation".

Well, suppose it was substantiated. Supposing there were two sources of evidence this had happened. That takes away your concern about whether it was substantiated. Are you then saying that it might not be a problem that a person had resorted to violence under stress if it had been not much violence; is that what you are saying? - I have some difficulty here, because not only have I seen/seen this memo, but I have seen the report by Sergeant Hughes, so I have read the report and I have looked at the evidence he had put forward for this, and I am not convinced there is sufficient evidence for that. You talk about evidence of assault. It was one assault. It was assault on one boy who, according to Hamilton and other witnesses, was a bully, who had assaulted other boys, and that this was done by way of chastisement. Now, in these circumstances what I am saying is that on that evidence I would not have considered that to be grounds for a revocation.

So it wouldn't particularly have concerned you that somebody who is not a parent of a child has struck a child, including striking a child on the face, under stress? - Well, again I didn't see evidence of stress. From the evidence that I saw, my reading of the evidence, albeit it was only last week when I did see it, was that the boy was taken from the group and was punished, chastised as Hamilton put it, away from the group. I didn't see any evidence that it was a case of coming forward and just striking the child.

Can you perhaps turn to Page 2? I should have asked you to cast your mind over the last paragraph on Page 1 which refers to the taking of photographs of the children, and then the first paragraph on Page 2? - Yes.

In which the officer explains that he has not been able to recover all the photographs despite Mr. Hamilton's claim that he has handed them all over. Now, would you agree with me that that raises a question mark about the truthfulness of Mr. Hamilton? - I have got difficulty with that evidence, because what we are saying is that it is corroborated because we can't find it.

All I am asking you is would you agree with me that that raises a question about the truthfulness of Mr. Hamilton? - Oh, Mr. Hughes has raised that, yes.

Surely whether someone is truthful or not is very important in considering whether or not they should have a firearm certificate? - Yes.

And when Sergeant Hughes goes on to say as/as his final comment that Hamilton is a scheming, devious and deceitful individual who is not to be trusted, as a matter of common sense would you not agree that such a person should not have a firearm certificate? - Well, whether it is common sense or not, as far as I am concerned my decision would be based on the Firearms Act and whether or not I considered the person unfit to be entrusted with a firearm. The evidence that has been provided to me has not suggested that he is unfit to be entrusted with a firearm; and there is no evidence here that would suggest that Mr. Hamilton would commit further offences using a firearm.

But if the Act itself uses the word "entrusted", then is it not relevant that the person cannot be trusted in other circumstances?

Would you not extrapolate and say "If he cannot be trusted in certain circumstances then maybe he should not be trusted with a firearm"? -

No, I wouldn't accept that. To say that somebody has told a lie on an odd occasion -- to take that forward and say "Because they told a lie they should not have a firearm certificate", I wouldn't. I don't think the act allows that to happen. That is my opinion.

So is it your view of the legislation that it is necessary to wait for some incident involving a firearm before action can be taken? - No. My evidence is you are looking for evidence where there is violence or serious public disorder are two instances where I would expect to look for evidence, to substantiate that, and put that forward for revocation.

So is it your evidence that this memorandum, that what is being said, is not sufficiently adverse to the applicant? - Correct, and was not supported by the evidence that I had seen.

So really you think that this is not sufficiently adverse to the applicant, and that it wasn't warranted on the evidence collected by Detective Sergeant Hughes? - Correct.

Well, do you not think that as a matter of common sense somebody who fits all these characteristics should not have firearms? - I go back to the point, whether it is common sense or not, not, what I have to decide -- this is my view. What I have to decide is what the Act says, and what is the case law regarding revocation of firearms, and I could find no evidence in the report from Detective Sergeant Hughes which would lead me to recommend or suggest or advise to the Chief Constable that he should revoke.

Well, irrespective of whether or not what is said in the memorandum can be substantiated by evidence gathered, you don't think that fitness to be entrusted with a firearm covers matters such as untrustworthiness, deviousness, deceitfulness, violence? - Well, you add "violence" in at the end -- scheming, devious and deceitful, yes, they are all adjectives that have described Mr. Hamilton; but I would be looking for evidence that you could take that forward and say "Because of these things he cannot be trusted with a firearm", and I could not find any evidence of that.

So what sort of conduct would cause you to say that somebody is not fit to be entrusted with a firearm? - Well, as I said earlier, somebody who has committed a violent act, a serious violent act, or serious public disorder, would be examples of something.

Well, we know that convictions are relevant and we know that unsoundness of mind can prevent someone from having a firearm certificate, or intemperate habits? - Yes.

But there is another category of "Fitness to be entrusted". What do you think that means? Is that not talking about exactly this sort of thing? - No, I don't think so. My opinion is that you have got to have evidence that the person has committed, for example, a violent act, and that this is a likelihood, a danger, to the public safety, that the person will commit a further violent act and use that weapon.

Is it not simply a question of the character of the person? - What is the character of the person? What I am saying is that I didn't find evidence supporting what Sergeant Hughes has said.

But if Sergeant Hughes was right in his selection/selection of adjectives, and this is a scheming, devious, deceitful character, then is that not what the Act is meaning when it is talking about fitness to be entrusted? - I mean, he could be deceitful in his applications for firearms, there could be some form of deceit, but the evidence that was provided here I don't think these adjectives could be taken forward and used in that manner, no.

Would you agree that in considering whether somebody should have a firearm such issues as general temperament, stability, relationships, and judgment are important? - Yes.

And you don't think that these sort of things are covered by the categories.....? - I don't think Detective Sergeant Hughes has put forward, or there was no evidence in the report that I saw, of instability.

So if you had opened the Firearms File and if you had found this memorandum, even without the knowledge that the Deputy Chief Constable had previously seen it, and taken no action, you yourself would also have taken no action on it? - No, that is not what I said. What I said was if I had opened the file and found that AD2a, that memorandum there, I would have sought clarification of all the points that I have mentioned already with either Detective Superintendent Millar or back down to Detective Sergeant Hughes himself. I wasn't given that opportunity to do that. I was speaking in hindsight, obviously with the events of Dunblane as well, and it is very difficult to do that. But I am trying to place myself in the position in 1991, when this came in, what would I have done in 1991 with this report? And what I am saying is that I would have sought clarification of all the points that we have discussed this morning, and if I had been satisfied that there was evidence to go forward, that would have backed it, I would have put it forward to the Chief Constable. What I am saying is I have now been shown the report by Detective Sergeant Hughes which was prepared for the Procurator-Fiscal, on which no action was taken, and I don't think there was evidence in that to stand a revocation.

It is your position, is it, that you don't think that the evidence in those reports justified/justified what Detective Sergeant Hughes had written in the memorandum; is that your position? - Detective Sergeant Hughes was obviously of that opinion, and he quite rightly put that memorandum in. What I am saying is in my opinion the evidence wasn't there to back it up to the Court.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: Is it fair that I get the impression so far as the 1989 application is concerned you simply pushed paper? - What I did in 1989 -- my responsibility in 1989 was to ensure the accuracy of the records and to ensure the accuracy of the certificate that went through to the Deputy Chief Constable, yes.

So you simply checked that (a), the firearms, (b) the serial numbers, and (c) the details of ammunition, were the same on the certificate as were on the application? - Yes, and that the inquiries had been carried out to the satisfaction of the Divisional Officer.

But so far as the 1992 application was concerned, you have indicated your role was different? - Yes.

And that your examiner reported direct to you? - Yes.

Could I ask you please to look at 79L? I think probably there are photos there of a child and an adult; is that right? - Yes, that is correct.

Holding a Smith and Wesson, and also a revolver; is that right? - I have got photographs of children holding weapons, as well as an adult, yes.

Now, you were not aware of the Linlithgow incident when you renewed the certificate in 1989? - No, I don't think it had actually come to light then, had it?

Well, whenever it was, it certainly was before 1992? - That is correct, yes.

Am I right in thinking that so far as carriage is concerned, that people can carry firearms in a loose container, a canvas bag? - As far/far as I am aware, yes.

And I think we know that Hamilton went by train to Linlithgow? - Yes.

Are you seriously suggesting to me that someone who carries weapons like that in a public vehicle is a fit and proper person to hold a firearm certificate? - Well, the Firearms Guidance specifically mentions people carrying weapons on public transport, and indicates that they should be securely covered and held in an appropriate container.

But/

11.40 a.m.

But we have certainly heard on other occasions that there is no requirement I think. You have got to have a secure container at home and you have got to have a proper lockfast cabinet at home? - That is correct.

But there is no rule about the carriage of weapons? - And what the guidance says is you can carry them on public transport provided they are covered and held in an appropriate container.

If you had known of the Linlithgow incident prior to the 1992 renewal, what would you have done? - If I had known about the 1992 incident?

If you had known about the Linlithgow incident where he handed these weapons to children and carried them on a public service vehicle without going to a gun club or anything of the likes, what would you have done about the renewal at that time? - As I say, there is nothing wrong with carrying them on a public service vehicle. As I said earlier I think when asked about this, I would have looked at the photographs and statements and I would have been concerned to find out whether the parents were there, were the parents happy about it, was there ammunition and was there a danger. All these things before I made a decision. I would also have liked to have spoken to Hamilton or have someone speak to Hamilton, an operational officer speak to Hamilton, to ascertain what his position was. And also warned him that this was not conduct that he should carry on as a firearms certificate holder.

So clearly he would have been at risk of failure of renewal because of that? A question mark would have been raised? - There would certainly be a question mark as to whether or not he had been reported at the time.

Parliament has told the police that one of the criteria is whether an applicant was entrusted to hold a firearm? - Yes.

And you tell us your criteria on that would be whether someone had been subject to violent conduct or serious public disorder? - Or other serious/serious crimes.

But that is not what the section says. There is a separate section dealing with convictions? - In what respect?

Section 21 of the Act deals with lifetime disqualification for certain convictions? - That is correct, yes.

So you don't need convictions at all, do you? - I didn't say you needed convictions, I don't think.

But the police are given a discretion and one of the things they have got to consider is whether someone can be trusted with a firearm? - That is correct.

Are you seriously telling me that if you had seen the four reports to which Mr. Bonomy made reference, the two reports from the 1989 Inchmoan incident and the two reports of the Milarrochy 1991 incident, if you had seen all of these are you seriously telling this Tribunal that you would not have had considerable concerns about whether Hamilton could be trusted to hold a firearms certificate? - What I am saying is that the evidence that I was shown with regard to the two summer camps revolved around minor assaults on a child by way of chastisement which I would not have considered for revocation. The incident with regard to the photographs are entirely different and although it is not a proper way to handle firearms, I think that could have been dealt with by way of warning letter but I wasn't involved at the time. It wasn't my decision. Taking together these three, I would not..... I still don't think it was sufficient grounds to revoke.

Even the fact that Hamilton had at least a vendetta against the police and had been to the Inspectorate over complaints about senior officers? - I certainly would not have used that as a reason for revocation.

Are you serious? - To say that.....

Are you seriously telling me that someone who has made complaints about a senior Police/

Police Constable or Depute Chief Constable and makes complaint to the Inspectorate in Edinburgh is not someone you would not consider to be unfit to hold a firearms certificate? Are you actually telling this Tribunal seriously that that is your evidence? - Certainly if somebody complains against the police and takes that complaint forward to Her Majesty's Inspectorate I certainly would not use that as a way to revoke a certificate.

Someone who is seen as irrational and has a vendetta against the Scout Organisation, against the Local Authority and against the Police, is that not someone who there are very considerable question marks about? - (No answer).

MR. TAYLOR: I request the witness does not answer that question until the witness can establish a basis for the assertion that there is a vendetta against the Scouts and that there is a similar word used in relation to the Local Authority because as yet we have not heard what this witness's knowledge is in relation to these two aspects.

I think it would be necessary before he could answer this question that we have the proper understanding of the witness in relation to the two aspects.

LORD CULLEN: Mr. Gibb, are you putting this question to the witness on the basis of what he knew at a certain stage?

MR. GIBB: No.

LORD CULLEN: Or are you putting it to him hypothetically?

MR. GIBB: I am putting it to him hypothetically.

LORD CULLEN: Well, I think if you can make the hypothesis a little more specific then that might meet the point that Mr. Taylor is making.

MR. GIBB: Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. GIBB:
If you had been aware that of the four detailed reports which were in the possession of Central Scotland/

Scotland Police Force.....

LORD CULLEN: You may say what they are so that we are quite clear what you are asking.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. GIBB: They related first of all to the Inchmoan camp incident where there was a complaint against Constable Gunn which was reported on by Inspector Keenan and I think you have had an opportunity of seeing these papers, have you? - No.

You haven't? - No.

I had understood you had? - I was shown the initial report by D.S. McBain and the statements that he took regarding that summer camp. I haven't seen or been made aware of the contents of Inspector Keenan's report.

Have you seen anything of the detailed precognitions on which Detective Sergeant Hughes' memorandum, D82L, was based? Have you had an opportunity of seeing these documents? - I have seen the statements Detective Sergeant Hughes submitted in 1991.

Well, in fairness, if all you have seen is these, did it not cause you very considerable concern about the rationality of Mr. Hamilton? - No.

If, and I appreciate you were not aware, if you were aware that the 1991 reports had resulted in further complaint to the Chief Constable of Constabulary against Inspector Keenan, would that have caused you to have any concerns or warning bells about Hamilton's rationality? - To pursue a complaint, no, not necessarily.

LORD CULLEN: Well, this is a complaint that is found to be without foundation?

MR. GIBB: Yes.

BY LORD CULLEN: Does that make any difference to your view or not? - Sorry?

The mere fact that a person makes a complaint you say is not enough and I think I can understand/understand you saying that but if the complaint turns out to be without foundation, what is the position? - I am sorry. Are you saying that because Hamilton advanced this complaint and took it to the Inspectorate and that was found to be without foundation, would that have led me to believe that he was unstable or not? Is that the question?

I am simply adding a bit on to the question Mr. Gibb put to you? - I would say he was very determined but I would not necessarily say he was unstable.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. GIBB:
I think you are aware that when a renewal or a new application is made, the Scottish Criminal Records Office will also have details of any charges pending against any individual? - That is correct.

And that would come up as well? - Yes.

You have made a lot about the fact that there was no substantiation of the memo from Mr. Hughes? - Yes.

Do you mean by substantiation corroboration? - From the evidence that I saw the fact was not denied that he had assaulted the one boy but there was other evidence which said that he was justified in assaulting the boy by way of chastisement.

But there was a lot more to the precognitions that had been taken and formed the basis of Sergeant Hughes' memorandum than that? - That is correct and there were many discrepancies in it which he acknowledged in his report.

But his report was substantiated by the precognitions, wasn't it? There was substance to it if that is what substantiated means? - There was substance to the effect that he submitted the report to the Procurator-Fiscal with charges which I understand he would like Mr. Hamilton charged with. My understanding was that he was never charged and as such that would not appear on the SCRO computer.

But there was substance to what Sergeant Hughes said in his memo, albeit a decision was taken to not proceed with a prosecution? - Yes.

So/

So there was substantiation if that is what that adjective means? - There was substantiation he had assaulted the boy, yes.

All of the other things were substantiated as well. His apparent loss of control? - No, I didn't find that to be substantiated.

But there was evidence of it from Sergeant Hughes that he had seen that himself in the accompanying papers? - That he had seen?

An apparent loss of control. Is that not what Sergeant Hughes said in his memo? - Is this the memo dated 1991?

Yes, D82L? - Is that his memo of 1991?

Yes? - Yes, what is the point?

I had understood he had in fact seen Hamilton in a state of perhaps some loss of control but you were not aware of that? - No.

MR. TAYLOR: If this is being put to the witness, I think we should ascertain where it comes from because it is certainly the first time it has been aired at this Inquiry. It was never taken from Sergeant Hughes and from my reading of the papers it doesn't exist.

MR. GIBB: I am happy to depart from that line.

LORD CULLEN: I have to say I do recollect something of that kind.

MR. GIBB: I certainly recollect the words but I am certainly happy to accept Mr. Taylor's position on that.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. GIBB:
As an experienced officer dealing with firearms, would your view on the test to be applied to renewal be any different from that test to be applied to possible revocation? In other words, if you were looking to revoke a licence would you perhaps think it was insufficient to revoke it but when it came to renewal slightly different criteria would apply? - (No answer).

LORD/

LORD CULLEN: Mr. Gibb, is that asking about the statute as we can read the statute and we can notice the difference?

MR. GIBB: I am just asking the witness to tell us what would be done.

LORD CULLEN: Are you asking him for an opinion on a matter of law or what?

MR. GIBB: I am just asking him from his knowledge of the law when it came to renewal whether he dealt with it differently from revocation. It may be this officer cannot answer that I accept, sir. He was the one who was dealing with it. I just wondered whether he applied a different test to revocation from the one which came at renewal?

MR. BONOMOY: Well, it seems to me that is a fair way of putting it to the witness, whether he himself approached both matters in an identical way.

LORD CULLEN: I think if it is a matter of fact as to what his practice is that is perfectly all right.

Mr. Taylor, do you wish to enter this fray?

MR. TAYLOR: No, sir, if it is to be put as a matter of fact as to what he did.

LORD CULLEN: I am sorry to have interrupted you but you will have to rephrase it as a pure matter of fact.

MR. GIBB: Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. GIBB: Did you deal with revocations any differently than you dealt with renewals as a matter of fact during your years in this post? - No.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: You were asked some questions this morning about the number of rounds of ammunition which a certificate holder was entitled to have in his possession at any one time? - Yes.

And/

And I would like to take from you what you understand the guidance you received from the Scottish Office to be in that regard and therefore if you could have Document DIL before you. Is that now in front of you? - Yes.

Can you look please at paragraph 6.8 and sub-paragraph (j)? - Yes, I see that in front of me.

And the first sentence is to the effect that it is not possible to give firm guidance to the amount of ammunition which may be authorised by a certificate and it goes on to say that each case has to be dealt with on its own merits? - Yes.

Can you just summarise for us what the paragraph then goes on to tell us or tell you more particularly? - Do you want me to read it or just summarise it?

Maybe if you could read it that would be as well? - "While account should be taken of the fact that it is normal practice to purchase ammunition by batches for consistency of performance and that reloading or buying ammunition in bulk is cheaper, Chief Officers will wish to pay regard to the risks attendant upon unnecessarily large quantities of ammunition being held on private premises. Where larger quantities are authorised, particular attention must also be given to the security arrangements".

Now, from reading that paragraph are you able to form a view as to the underlying risk which is perceived in the event of there being large quantities of ammunition held on private premises? - Yes. Well, my reading of that would suggest that the risk was not for the holder using large quantities of ammunition. I would suggest that my reading of that is that if a person does hold large quantities of ammunition at home then the security must be of a particular standard to prevent any unauthorised access to or theft of that ammunition.

Can you now have D60L before you which is LR3a? I think we have looked at this document before in your evidence. The point I would like you to have particular regard for is in the second of the two pages and it is in the continuation of Answer/

Answer 7. Can you tell us what you find stated in the last few sentences there, starting in the middle at "With reference to 2 i and 2 iii on certificate"? - "Applicant would like to have maximum for weapons he possesses and those which he would like to purchase. Applicant's security for weapons and ammo has been checked and is very secure".

So does that indicate that the enquiry officer has ascertained how the ammunition is to be stored and retained? - Yes.

And it is putting into practice what one finds set out in the guidance at the paragraph we have just looked at? - That is correct.

Now, do you have the guidance before you still? Can you look please at paragraph 3.36? Albeit that this is dealing with variation, what is it that 3.36 tells us in relation to the time by which firearms require to be purchased when they have been authorised? - Well, 6.36 reads "Each case should be dealt with on its merits and, provided the good reason requirement is met, no general arbitrary limit should be applied in considering any of the following. (a) Number of rounds of ammunition to be held; (b) total number of firearms to be held; (c) number of firearms per calibre; (d) time by which firearms should be purchased".

Now, we have heard some evidence in relation to the intent of the firearms certificate holder, the applicant, at the time when he makes his application either to acquire a weapon or to vary his certificate to enable him to acquire a weapon. Can you tell the Tribunal, the Inquiry, from your understanding what the time frame for his intention to acquire should be? - Well, my understanding would be that the time would be within the life of that certificate so that if somebody applied for a grant or a renewal I would expect that they would have reason to purchase within that three years. Well, now five years but three years when I held it.

And that renewal of that certificate, if the intention did not materialise and the weapon had not been acquired, what would you expect the enquiry officer to do? - I would expect him to ask the applicant whether or not he still wished to retain that/that authorisation although it is ticked on the new application and to confirm with him that he was wishing to purchase within the lifetime of the renewed firearms certificate.

And/

12 o'clock.

And in your view that would be enough to comply with the terms of the guidance which we have just looked at? - Yes, that's my view.

And would it be the case that he, the applicant, would require to be a member of a club which had access to a range where that particular weapon could be fired? - Yes. The applicant -- or a rifle in this case would have to be a member of a club which had access to a range suitable for that weapon.

And would that be the good reason to which reference is made in paragraph 6.36 on the second line? - Yes, that's the good reason.

Now, if I have noted your evidence correctly this morning you said that you wouldn't ask the enquiry officer in every case if he had carried out the checks which you would have expected him to have carried out? - That is correct.

Does that mean that there would be some occasions that you would ask him if he had carried out these inquiries? - It would depend on the circumstances of the application and the renewal. We were in day-to-day contact, and any question that came up either from him or from myself would be dealt with by way of conversation.

How did you assess any quality control aspects? How did you fulfil any quality control aspect of what was being carried out by those officers answerable to you? - Well, as I said, I had responsibility for checking all the firearm files and I checked all the firearm files on every applicant that came through.

Did you, for example, have any sample checks of the officer to ascertain on random occasions he had made the inquiries you would expect? - You mean by that go and visit or speak to the applicant?

No, just ask the enquiry officer on a random basis from time to time? - I spoke to him -- I don't recall specific incidents -- but I would expect on a fairly regular basis to speak to him about/about applications and ask what like was the security for that one and what was the reason for another one.

You would be actually carrying out some form of check from time to time? - Yes.

BY LORD CULLEN: What would lead to that? Would that be sometimes you are checking and that you have raised a question on your part? - Yes, it may not be particularly clear from the documentation and I would speak to Norman Lynch.

That is to clarify some documentation that isn't quite clear. I think what Mr. Taylor was asking you was about monitoring, some form of test check where there is nothing on the document to indicate anything is amiss but you are actually simply checking to make sure things that aren't spelled out are in fact otherwise as they should have been. Did you do that? - No.

CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR.

TAYLOR: But on occasions, however, as his lordship has indicated, you did have cause to make inquiry of the officer? - Yes.

Would you be making inquiries consistently with one officer in these matters? - There was a very close relationship. It was virtually a one-to-one basis, and it was a daily occurrence to speak about firearms matters.

Are you able to indicate approximately how often you would have occasion to make inquiries of the officer as to whether he had fulfilled the functions which you had expected him to fulfil. Is it once a week or twice a week or once a fortnight? - As I have explained, did I have random samples at any stage -- I didn't do that, but I would speak to him on a regular basis about firearms certificates that came through.

And presumably you would have been able to form a view as to the capabilities of the officer? - Yes.

And if that officer enjoyed your confidence then presumably the need to carry out sampling would diminish? - Yes. I was confident having/having spoken to him on a number of occasions about security and types of weapons used that his knowledge gave me confidence in what he was doing.

His knowledge may be one thing but his thoroughness may be another. Was that something you were also confident about?
- Yes.

I take it that throughout this period which we have been examining today your actions would have been in accordance with the normal procedures set down by the Force? - Yes.

Some question arose in relation to the difference between competition and target shooting. I confess I know virtually nothing about the handling of firearms and competing in competitions. Could it be the case that if one is competing in some form of competition such as at Bisley for a particular discipline that the weapon which one is using, the gun which one is using, requires to conform to certain prescribed rules? - Yes. It is my understanding it is different disciplines using different weapons firing at different targets.

Might it be the case -- and please feel free to disagree with this -- might it be the case that the reason why the more sophisticated of the two weapons is being used for target as opposed to competition shooting, was that the rules for the particular discipline did not permit the more sophisticated weapon to be used? - That is certainly one contention, yes.

I suppose the other possibility of course might be that when completing the RL3a which was D65L they just got the weapons the wrong way round? - It may be. I don't know.

That would be a possibility though? - It could be a possibility.

And it would be an explanation for what was thought at one stage to be perhaps a conundrum? - Yes.

You were asked some questions about your part in the renewal of Mr. Hamilton's licence in 1992. I would be right in thinking, would I not, you did not actually sign his firearms certificate in/in 1992? - That is correct.

I think if we look at D87L, which is the firearms certificate which was issued, you see the date on that is 17th February, 1992? - Yes.

And the signatory is Mr. John Adamson? - Correct.

And presumably he too would have to exercise his mind as to whether or not he could append his signature to the certificate before doing so? - Yes.

And he would take into account the knowledge he had at the time before the certificate was issued? - Yes.

And, generally speaking, is that the reason why we find a number of signatures on various forms of RL3a all the way through, it goes up the ranks, and each person who signs it has an opportunity to comment if they consider there is anything adverse in relation to the application? - Yes.

BY LORD CULLEN: Just one matter before you are re-examined by Mr. Bonomy: you were looking at the guidance which was issued by the Home Office. If you look at paragraph 6.7 it points out that the Chief Officer of the police has to satisfy himself that the applicant has a good reason, and you will see that good reason applies not merely to the firearm but also to the ammunition in respect of which the application is made? - Yes.

I think you would have seen the guidance goes on to indicate that good reason applies to the number of rounds of ammunition to be held? - In that section.

If we go on to Section 6.36, for example, that was referred to you by one of those who was cross-examining you? - Yes.

So is this right then, putting these two things together, the Chief Officer of police has to be satisfied that there is good reason for the number of rounds of ammunition which are proposed to be held or acquired as the case may be? - Yes.

When/

When it comes to, for example, a renewal application how is it, by what method is it that it is found out that there is good reason for the number of rounds of ammunition to be held or as the case may be acquired? - Again the enquiry officer would be the person who asks specifically, did he propose in the lifetime of that certificate to purchase ammunition up to those amounts.

And if he was aware -- as I assume he would be aware -
- of what was shown on the existing certificate as to the amount of ammunition that had been purchased commercially, and it appeared to be very little indeed, would you not expect him to be asking for some explanation as to the situation bearing in mind the good reason had to be demonstrated? - Yes.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Following on from that, Mr. MacKenzie, could you have D65L in front of you which is the application for variation FA43. It is actually disclosed in that application in 1987 that he is in possession of 100 rounds of 7.62 calibre ammunition? - Yes, that is correct.

Did he have a weapon he could use for that? - No.

But he was seeking one? - Yes.

Would you have a look at the renewal for 1992 which is D83 (FA55). He still declares 100 7.62 rounds? - Yes, that is correct.

And hasn't acquired a weapon? - That is correct.

I assume the good reason for having this must be an intention to acquire the weapon? - Yes.

You said to Mr. Gibb that the role you played in 1992 was different from 1989. I know in theory there is a difference and there are missing personnel between you and the enquiring officer, but in fact it was established earlier that you really didn't do anything different between 1989 and 1992. Your role in fact was the same? - The role is different in that I now speak to the enquiry officer about any aspect that came up, as opposed to 1989 when any questions on the enquiry side would be dealt/dealt with by the operational officer.

But there is no sign you did ask the question in relation to the 1992 renewal? - No.

You have no recollection of doing so. Given the various questions you were answering of Mr. Taylor about your confidence in the enquiry officer and so on, were you speaking about one particular officer? - Yes, the enquiry officer -- there is only one to do renewals.

That is Mr. Lynch? - Yes.

So this question was related really to the period after 1989? - Yes.

You were asked also by Mr. Gibb about the photographs of the families with the guns and in regard to the guns being in the house. What is actually wrong with that? - About taking guns to the house? My understanding, although it is based on knowledge going back, would be that guns should be kept secure unless they are going to be used.

So they should not have been taken out in that household? - No.

Is that sort of behaviour in practice a ground for considering revocation? - I think the whole circumstances surrounding it would be examined to see whether or not it was serious enough to warrant revocation.

In the course of your time as Chief Inspector in charge of this procedure did you actually have occasion to recommend revocation of firearms licences? - Yes.

On a number of occasions? - Perhaps a handful each year.

So you are speaking from direct experience? - Yes.

Mr. Gibb also asked you about your view of Chief Inspector Hughes' investigation, and some question arose about whether Hughes had actually himself experienced Hamilton's reaction to stress. At page 900 of the transcript he was being questioned/questioned about that and one question he was asked was, "Did he appear to be somebody who was able to cope with a stressful situation?" and the answer Mr. Hughes gave was, "I got the impression on dealing with him on a number of occasions that he was actually quite angry when I was speaking to him, but he came across as quite calm underneath, so in that respect I suppose he was coping: and I don't under-estimate the job of having to look after so many boys on his own. At one point during the course of the week he evidently lost control to a degree, but I mean I don't know, he would maintain that he was acting in loco parentis, and that he was administering discipline and chastisement which was necessary to control a group of children such as the one he was having to care for. And it may well be the case, and obviously was the case, that he was maintaining at that time that he was exercising control and not in effect losing control".

MR./

12.20 p.m.

MR. TAYLOR: Sir, I wonder if it might be fairer if the witness actually had the passage before him? Presumably Mr. Bonomy is now going to ask him a question based on that fairly lengthy passage he has read out.

LORD CULLEN: Yes. Perhaps in the meantime we could try and straighten out what seems to be going wrong with the sound system.

RE-EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:
Now, it does indicate some direct dealings between Hughes and Hamilton, but that is the extent of it, I think. Can you tell me whether that makes any difference to your assessment of his fitness to continue to hold a firearm certificate? - No -- reading that, as I am reading it just now.

I think that may be what Mr. Gibb had in mind when he was referring to direct dealings between Hughes and Hamilton, but that makes no difference to your view? - No.

Now, can I ask you to look at the Guidance document, which is D1? You were asked to look at 6.8, letter J, and the part about "Chief Officers will wish to pay regard to the risks attendant upon unnecessarily large quantities of ammunition being held on private premises". Do you see it goes on "Where larger quantities are authorised, particular attention must also be given to the security arrangements"? - Yes.

Which suggests perhaps that the word "risks" in the previous sentence is wider than simply security arrangements. What risks do you think are envisaged there? - Well, reading it here, I mean, I read it as risks attendant on the ammunition being held on the premises, and I would equate it to the security and to the unauthorised access to or theft of the ammunition.

So the last sentence is rather curiously worded in these circumstances, "Where larger quantities are authorised, particular attention must also be given to the security arrangements", as if the previous sentence had something to do with matters other than security? - I don't know about that./

that.

Now, can you look at 6.9 while you are there. Do you see on the first line the first sentence provides: "In deciding whether a person can be permitted to have a firearm or ammunition without danger to public safety or to the peace, the main consideration is his character"? - Yes.

That is your understanding, is it, of the approach that ought to be taken? - Yes.

And that is before we ever get to questions of "Otherwise unfit to hold a firearm", we are already, in relation to public safety, and without danger to the public peace, obliged to consider, as the main consideration, the man's character? - Yes.

Can you look now please back at 6.36, and just confirm to me that that is concerned with no general arbitrary limits being applied on considering the various things referred to there; is that correct? - No general limit, yes.

Arbitrary limit? - Arbitrary limit, yes.

Why do you say that that means that if a person says he intends to acquire an additional firearm he has got the full period of the forthcoming licence to acquire it? - Because once it is granted it is on his certificate. He can then, throughout that period, make his decision when he is actually going to buy it, depending on the amount of money he has, or the particular weapon he wants to buy.

That seems to me that you were employing a general arbitrary limit, which was a generous one, which was the full period of the licence. You weren't actually applying your mind to it at all, you were applying a general arbitrary limit? - Well, I know of no way in which you can authorise someone to purchase or acquire a weapon and then during the course of that licence decide that he hasn't purchased it.

You can't be sure before you actually grant him the authority at all that he is going to do/do it within a certain length of time? - Well, you have to take the applicant's word that that is what he is wanting to do.

You wouldn't regard that as a condition you could impose? - I wouldn't, no.

And Mr. Taylor I think asked you what in that connection was meant by the expression "The good reason", or "the good reason requirement" in regard to proposed acquisitions of firearms. What do you regard, for a marksman, as being the normal good reason you would expect him to advance for wanting to acquire another weapon? - He may require a duplicate calibre, you mean, or another weapon?

An additional, a different type -- or a duplicate calibre, either. What would you normally expect to be advanced as a good reason? - Well, if it was a different calibre, that he wanted to start participating in shooting at targets in a new discipline.

You don't think what you should be looking for to satisfy the test of "good reason", is an intention to actually participate in or take up the sport within a certain time limit? - Going by the Guidance at that time, as I understand it, the good reason was simply that he had the opportunity to take up the use of the weapon.

Now, a number of questions were asked of you at the end about people exercising their minds on applications, and one of the answers you gave was that the Deputy Chief Constable, when he had the form placed in front of him, would be expected by you to exercise his mind on it, which I think is an entirely different answer from the one you gave me about the role of the Deputy Chief Constable. Can we be clear about what you would expect the Deputy Chief Constable to do, once you have passed on the recommendation that it be granted? - Yes. I would expect the Deputy Chief Constable to read through the completed firearm certificate, look at the weapons possessed, the weapons authorised to be purchased, the ammunition, and then sign the certificate if he is satisfied with that.

Does he get the application form? - No./

No. He only gets the firearm certificate.

Does he get the RL3a form? - No.

Does he get the file? - No.

Unless he asks for it? - Unless he asks for it.

And in some cases I dare say he will? - Yes.

THOMAS BARKER (39), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: I am presently the Deputy Director of Junior Training at the Scottish Police College in Tulliallan.

I take it you are a policeman? - I am indeed. I am a Chief Inspector.

Are you a Chief Inspector in a particular force or are you a Chief Inspector in the police college? - No. I am a Chief Inspector with Central Scotland Police, but currently on secondment to the police college.

And how long have you been Deputy Director of Junior Training there? - Since December 1993.

How long in the police all together? - I am in my 19th year in the police.

At the police college do they run any courses to train police officers in firearms administration? - There are no courses specifically to train in firearms administration, but as part of the basic training of new recruits to the police there is an element of training in firearms administration, yes.

Do all new recruits to the police force go through training at Tulliallan? - Yes, all new recruits./

recruits.

And do they all have to go through the course you are talking about? - They do indeed, yes.

Is there no way of avoiding it by joining at a particular age or something like that? - No. I know of no means whereby it can be circumvented.

Now, how long has this course included any training in firearms? - My understanding is since training started at Tulliallan, which was 1958.

Well, when you joined the police did you get some training in firearms? - I did, yes.

At Tulliallan? - At Tulliallan.

Now, can you tell me anything about the stage in the training of a police officer at which they go on this course? - The initial course the police officers go on is called the basic course and would generally be undertaken in the second week of police service. So officers coming on the course have no operational experience at all.

How long does it last? - It is a 10 week course at present.

How much of it is devoted to firearms? - In total five 50-minute periods will be devoted to training on firearms.

What sort of things are officers trained in? - Initially just a general introduction to firearms, what a firearm is, and thereafter we move on to the certification, for the Section 1 firearms and shotguns, and we also cover offences involving firearms.

Would you look please at Production D7, which no doubt has another number. It is also known as the Junior Division Basic Training Course, lesson notes, and is FA154? - Yes.

Now, what is that document? - The document here is a section from a more comprehensive document,/ document, which is issued to all basic students on arrival at Tulliallan for basic training.

And is it used in the course of the training course? - It is indeed. It is the basis of the firearms training.

And the section we have got relates to what? - The section we have here is the section that covers firearms on the basic training course itself.

And we see it is amended as at 9th October 1995? - Yes -- well, the first part is. Different parts have been amended at different times.

So this is the up-to-date version? - This was the most up-to-date version. It is constantly being updated. There is a new version to be issued in August this year. It is currently being updated.

I see it says "A computer assisted learning package is available in this subject"? - That is correct.

Would that give us more.....?

- The computer assisted learning package is for students use in their own time in the evenings, whereby there are graphics, etc., available on the computer package which will further expand on what is here; and there is also a question and answer session whereby the students can test themselves on what they have learned.

Do they have to pass a test on this at the end of the course? - There is an examination halfway through the course and at the end of the course, in which firearms will be incorporated, with other subjects.

Can I ask you to look at the introduction, and could you read out the first paragraph of the introduction please? - "Firearms are used for a wide variety of lawful purposes such as for sporting purposes, for pest control, and in connection with rifle Clubs etc. The law does not attempt to curtail these legal activities, but it is necessary to have some form of control over lethal weapons/weapons which can be used for criminal purposes. The Firearms Act 1968 and the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988 controls the possession and use of firearms and ammunition in Britain". Do you wish me to continue?

No, no, that is what I wanted you to read at the moment. We also have the Firearms Act 1992 now. You haven't got into that? - No, it is not referred to in this particular one.

This is basic stuff; is that right? - It is, it is basic training.

Can you confirm please that there is a section dealing with safety precautions for handling firearms? - There is, yes.

And then can you go to "Practical Considerations", and read the first two paragraphs of that section? - "When dealing with firearm inquiries all these circumstances must be considered, and an element of caution used. The safety of yourself and others is of paramount importance. If an officer is dealing with a routine firearm certificate renewal inquiry, it may be prudent to allow the owner of the weapon to break and prove it, and indicate identifying marks/serial numbers".

Now, I think it goes on to set out the definition of a firearm and to give examples of firearms? - It does, yes.

Including prohibited weapons? - Yes.

And it then goes on to give examples of ammunition?
- Yes, it does.

Again all fairly basic training? - Yes, very basic.

And then there is a section "Firearms: Certificates"? -
That is correct.

Can you read the first paragraph of the introduction to that section please? - "One of the ways that the Firearms Act 1968 and the Firearms (Amendment) Act, 1988 controls the possession and acquisition of firearms is by requiring persons to hold/hold a valid certificate authorising the possession of particular types of firearms and ammunition. The type of certificate required, if any, depends on the type of firearm concerned".

I think it then goes on to deal with the difference between firearms with rifled barrels, shotguns and air weapons? - Yes it does.

And is there then a section telling the student what Section 1 of the 1968 Act is all about? - There is, yes.

And then if we go over the page is there a section headed "Grant & Renewal of Firearms Certificates"? - That is correct.

Could you read the first part of that down to the end of the bit that is numbered "3"? - "Before a person is granted a firearms certificate, or before the certificate is renewed, the applicant must satisfy the Chief Constable of the following:-

(1) he has good reason for possessing or acquiring the relevant firearm and ammunition -- e.g. member of a shooting Club, permission to shoot game/vermin over suitable land, etc.; and (2) he can be permitted to possess the firearm or ammunition without endangering public safety or peace -- e.g. he is of good character, etc.; and (3) he has paid the appropriate fee for grant or renewal".

Now, can you just look through the rest and confirm to me that that is all that is said about what the test is for the Chief Constable in deciding whether an application for a firearm certificate should be granted? - Yes, that is all that is said.

And it doesn't say anything about not granting it where the Chief Officer has reason to believe that the person is a prohibited person? - No, it does not.

Or/

12.40 p.m.

Or if he has reason to believe he is of intemperate habits or unsound mind? - That would be covered in the section, the good character section. It doesn't actually say it in the notes but that would be expanded on in the class. The notes only put the basis.

Do you do this particular class yourself? - No, I don't.

And it doesn't actually say anything about the general proposition if for any reason he is unfitted to be entrusted with such a firearm? - No, it does not.

Now, I suppose students will rely to some extent on the notes that are distributed to them? - They do, yes.

Do you not think it might be a good idea to look at updating this aspect since there are not too many categories to be covered as a basis for not granting an application? - The notes are only a base for the classroom instruction which is expanded on by the instructor and he does that in conjunction with the Scottish Criminal Law Manual.

And does it contain the full Firearms Act? - It does not contain the full Firearms Act, no, but it is more comprehensive than the notes you have in front of you.

Will it contain sections dealing with applications for the grant and renewal of firearms certificates? - I think it concentrates mainly on offences.

Now, I think this document goes on to deal with the sale and transfer of firearms? - It does, yes.

And then it goes on to deal with shotguns which we don't need to look at here today. Then it goes on to deal with circumstances in which an officer can insist on the production of the certificate, is that right? - That's correct, yes.

There is then a section on the exemptions/exemptions from requiring a certificate? - That is correct.

And then examples of the forms which are used, is that right? - Yes, that is correct.

And that includes the schedules to the form which are important? - It does, yes.

Or tables rather? - Tables, yes.

Is there then a section dealing with firearms offences? - That is correct.

And does that complete this extract from the training notes? - It does, yes.

Now, that course you have told us all officers who join the force require to undergo. Are there any other courses? - There would be the advanced course after one year of police service. The officers would return to Tulliallan for further instruction.

Is that compulsory? - It is compulsory, yes.

Can you look please at FA155 which is also D8? What is that document? - That is an extract of the advanced training course notes which would be issued to students on arrival to undertake the advanced training course.

Is that again on firearms? - Yes, the section on firearms deals with miscellaneous aspects.

BY LORD CULLEN: Look at page 5 if you would please of the advanced manual. It deals there I see with revocation? - Yes, my lord, it does.

It says "A chief officer of police may revoke a firearm or shotgun certificate of a person living in his area if the person has become:- (1) a prohibited person; or (2) a danger to public safety". Do you see that? - Yes, my lord.

Have you had occasion to compare that language with the provision of the Act which deals with/with revocation of a firearms certificate? - No, I have not.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY:

Well, that is really the same point as the one I was making to you earlier. You will see that there are only two categories mentioned in the section you have been referred to? - Yes.

Can you just read out what these are? - "A chief officer of police may revoke a firearm or shotgun certificate of a person living in his area if the person has become:- (1) a prohibited person; or (2) a danger to public safety".

Now, the additional features that relate to revocation, while not expressed the same way, are again to do with the chief officer's satisfaction that the holder is of intemperate habits or of unsound mind or otherwise unfitted to be entrusted with such a firearm and again we see no reference to this? - That would be covered in the context of the lesson under the section of danger to public safety.

Now, do you actually instruct that particular group? - I don't, no. I have no instruction role at all. I purely manage the training.

Is there someone specialised in firearms who instructs both these courses? - At any given time there will be sergeant instructors who specialise in firearms and who will instruct the basic and advanced.

Now, the lesson notes this time deal with different subjects largely from the earlier one, is that right? - This time on the advance course concentration is on firearms dealers which was not touched on at all on the basic training.

Well, I see mention of dealers but it does say "Dealers and miscellaneous aspects" and after dealing with dealers it actually quite quickly moves to other things, doesn't it? - It does.

It deals with foreign visitors? - Yes.

Borrowing rifles on private premises? - That/

That is correct.

And then there are the particularly important criminal sections on the criminal use of firearms? - That is correct.

Then it actually sets out what prohibited persons are?
- Yes, it does.

And then revocation and search warrants. So it covers a wide variety of subjects? - It does, yes.

Now, can you tell me how long the course is this time?
- On this occasion it is an eight week course.

And how much of the time concentrates on firearms? -
On this course only three periods would concentrate on firearms.

And each how long? - 50 minutes long.

In view of the additional criteria for revocation, do you not yourself find it at least unfortunate that the section to which Lord Cullen drew your attention is restricted to prohibited persons and danger to public safety? - It could be expanded upon in the notes.

Well, I appreciate that would happen but I think you have already told us that students will pay considerable attention to these notes. They will remain with them perhaps longer than the spoken word? - I accept it, yes, that that may be.

And it may well be worth considering whether there could be greater specification in the notes, bearing in mind there only are I think five categories in there including the two here. Do you not think that is worthy of consideration? - I think it could be worthy of inclusion, yes.

Do you have any input into the drafting of this document? - I would myself authorise any changes to it. There is a unit specifically for drafting changes but they would have to be approved by myself before circulation to staff.

In view of what has been said to you this/this morning, do you think it would be an idea to put Sections 27 to 30 of the Firearms Act 1968 as amended or whether the two Sections we have looked at, the section in each relating to grant and renewal in the one instance and revocation in the other, might require revisal? - I think it is worth consideration to expand on it but I am satisfied those points are covered in the course of the instruction.

Now, are there any other courses at Tulliallan relating to firearms? - No, there are none at all.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: If I can take you back to D7. That is the basic training notes? - Yes.

On page I there is a section headed "Safety Precautions" and you were asked about that. Generally speaking, these five safety precautions are alerting readers to the fact that guns can cause death or injury by accident, aren't they? - They are, yes.

So they are saying things like "Treat a weapon as loaded and don't touch the trigger" but at the heart of that section in block capitals we see the slogan "Guns don't kill people. People kill people". Do you recognise that slogan? - I am familiar with it. I have been familiar with it since the start of my police service.

Is it fair to say that it is often quoted by members of what might be described as the gun lobby? - I have heard it quoted by many people but, yes, I think that would be fair comment.

Why is it there? - It is simply a reminder to students that it is people who kill people and therefore what comes after certification etc. is important. It is important to know about the mechanics of the firearm and about their performance but certification etc. is of more importance as well.

But the points immediately above that all relate to treating guns with caution? - The safe handling of weapons and the careful handling of weapons.

CROSS/

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. GIBB: Perhaps I can just clarify one point raised earlier. In your previous incarnation were you involved with firearms? - Never at all.

I think if you look at the initial guide to which you made earlier reference, which is D7L, there are I think 15 pages of it and then it goes to a page headed "Firearms: Offences"? - Yes.

And that quotes Section 19 of the Act and says that it is an offence to carry either a loaded shotgun or a loaded airgun or any other firearm loaded or unloaded if the person has suitable ammunition in his possession? - Yes, that is correct.

I wonder if you could look at D79L again please. That is the photographs. I think we have heard evidence that Hamilton took these two weapons to a house in Linlithgow but we have no evidence that he had ammunition with him and we have certainly had evidence that the weapons were unloaded. Would the information that he had done such a thing cause you any concern? Is that something you might draw your pupils' attention to as being something which is not conduct which you would expect a firearms holder to carry out by carrying weapons on a public service vehicle or a train or a bus, even unloaded? Is that something which would cause concern to you? - I would think it was simply an incident worth reporting and for consideration thereafter.

I appreciate you were not involved in the day-to-day administration but do you think that such behaviour might be relevant to the question of renewal of a firearms certificate? - I think depending on the circumstances it would be relevant. I don't know the lead-up to why the weapons were there or what the purpose was, what the lead-up to the weapons arriving at the house was.

All we know is they were taken to show the children. Would that cause you concern? - (No answer).

MR. TAYLOR: Well, sir, with the greatest of respect we know an awful lot more than that and I think if Mr. Gibb wants to pursue that further/further he must in fairness put the whole facts to the witness.

MR. GIBB: I don't need to pursue that any further.

RE-EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Do you know the source of that slogan "Guns don't kill people. People kill people"? - No, I don't.

AUSTIN FISHER (38), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you a Sergeant with Central Scotland Police? - Yes.

Now, you are in Police Headquarters? - That is correct.

How long have you been a police officer? - 20 years.

Your present responsibilities are what? - I am responsible just now for the officers' safety programme for the force training officers and in that also have involvement with probationary training and training outwith probation as well.

How long have you been involved in a training role? - Four years at local level and I did three years at the Scottish Police College.

When were your three years at the Scottish Police College? - 1989. For three years thereafter.

Which officers is it you actually train? - Just now personally I train officers outwith probation.

Who are on probation? - Outwith probation.

And have you previously been involved in the training of probationary officers? - I have, yes.

Now/

Now, how long does a new recruit to the police force remain a probationer? - For two years.

During that period does the officer have to attend the Police College at Tulliallan? - He does, yes.

How many courses does the officer have to undergo there? - He will do two courses.

During those two years does he get further tuition or training in your Force Headquarters? - Yes, he returns to us for training.

In relation to firearms is there any training during that two-year period? - There is, yes.

What is the nature of that? - The students do a two-period input on firearms legislation and they also have a practical exercise which is over three periods. In addition to that he will also have another two-period input by trained firearms officers about firearm safety.

Now, is any part of the training they get related to the procedures to be followed when acting as an enquiry officer in relation to an application for grant, renewal or variation of a firearms certificate? - Yes, that is actually done by the Firearms Registration Department.

Who in there would give training? - Mr. Lynch and Miss Johnson

Now, for probationary constables are there set lessons that are instructed by these two persons? - They do revision to try and bring it back down to local level from the Scottish Police College.

Does that involve a formal class session? - A two-period input, yes.

Now, what is the on the job training that the officer might have in carrying out that particular enquiry? - When they start probation they are allocated a tutor constable to work with them for about 18 months to two years and during that/that period if they have any firearms enquiries they would follow them through with the tutor constable.

And if they don't have they won't actually get any direct experience in carrying out that type of enquiry? - That could be the case.

Is that likely to be the case? - It is unlikely. The probationers do spend a period in town centres such as Stirling and Falkirk but they do migrate to the small stations where there is more likelihood of firearms enquiries.

During the two-year period as a probationer, how much of the time is spent actually on the job, either on the beat or in a vehicle or in the office just doing work or watching the work of other officers? - If you take into account the 16 weeks at the Scottish Police College and the six weeks with us over the two years, the remainder is on operations.

What tests do probationary constables undergo before the end of the probationary period? - They will have a written test. They have tests at the end of each visit to us, the six-week course, but before they are confirmed they will have to undergo a test at the Training Department covering the subjects.

That is the Central Scotland Training Department? - Yes.

Does that test cover firearms at all? - I believe it does, yes.

You are no direct knowledge of that? - No.

And did you say there are other tests in the course of the six-weeks training they get? - Yes, at the end of each module each week they are tested not just on what they have been taught that week but again on general knowledge.

No cross-examination.

After/

1.50 p.m.

After an adjournment for lunch.

LORD CULLEN: Before we pass to the next witness there is a statement I would like to make in regard to certain matters. At the Preliminary Hearing on 1st May I invited written submissions on various topics and I stated that I would select what should form part of the evidence, that is to say the written evidence for the Inquiry.

I have considered the written submissions which I have so far received and a list of the organisations and the persons whose submissions have been selected for this purpose has been prepared. This is sub-divided by reference to topics to which they relate. Copies of that list along with a full set of copies of the listed submissions are now available for inspection by the public and the Press and they are in boxes at either side of this hall. I will, of course, be prepared to consider additional or supplementary submissions as the Inquiry proceeds where these are considered necessary.

I should add this, that in view of the range of subjects which some of the submissions have addressed I should point out that consistently with my terms of reference I am concerned with issues which arise from circumstances leading up to and surrounding the events of the 13th March, 1996, and accordingly I will be concentrating on matters which have some tenable connection with those circumstances.

Now, Mr. Bonomy, can we resume.

ANN KEENAN (42) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: I think you work as a store detective? - That is correct.

You were formerly a police officer? - Yes.

With Central Scotland? - Central Scotland, /

Scotland, formerly Stirling and Clackmannan.

How long were you in the police? - I was in the police a total of six years.

Over what period? - 1974 to 1980.

During that period did you deal with one of Thomas Hamilton's applications for a firearms certificate? - I believe that is correct.

Would you look please at two documents which are FA1 and FA2, D22 and D23. Is one of these an application for a firearms certificate that you dealt with? - Yes.

I think it is dated 5th February, 1977; is that right? - Yes.

And is the other document that you have been given the RL3a form relating to that enquiry? - Yes.

Does it show that you were the enquiry or reporting officer who signed it? - Yes.

Do you have any direct recollection of this at all? - None whatsoever.

Can you remember what your duties were in those days in relation to this type of inquiry? - I was based at Stirling Police Office where I underwent general police duties which would include firearms licensing inquiries.

And this one was.....? - I am unable to recall this one. It was one of the routine duties I did undertake.

And so this would just be one in the course of your service? - It would be.

If you look at the RL3a form you will see there are six questions to be answered? - Yes.

And each one has been answered Yes? - That is correct.

The second of these questions is, "Does the applicant have a good reason for requiring the firearm/firearm or ammunition for which the application is made"? - Yes, I can see that.

Can you tell me how you would go about in those days dealing with that particular question? - I think in the application it asks as well why he has reason for it, and on the application form he said he was intending to use it at Callendar Rifle and Pistol Club, or other suitable club, firing ranges. I would think -- it is difficult to recall -- I would surmise I would be in touch with one of these clubs to find out if Mr. Hamilton had in fact made application for the club.

Is that how you would normally do that job, dealing with question 2? - It is nearly 19 years ago. I would suppose that is how I would have done it.

Have you no recollection that was perhaps the way you did these generally? - We would make inquiry at the clubs to find out if the applicant had in fact made application with it.

In those days can you remember whether the police kept a list of club members? - No, I am unable to recall that.

Was there a Firearms Department in those days in Central Scotland Police? - I am unable to recall that.

That was in the very early days of the Central Scotland Police? - Yes, it was.

Have you any recollection of how important the task of the reporting or enquiring officer, how importantly it was regarded by the officers further up the chain to whom the form was submitted? - I would think any application for any form of firearm would be dealt with as quite an important document.

Were you aware how much weight was placed on the enquiry or enquiry officer? - Yes.

What is your understanding of the weight that was placed on that? - If I had any problem with that I would put it up to my supervisory officer and seek advice.

Did/

Did you realise that those superior to you relied on you carrying out the necessary and appropriate inquiries because the answers to the questions didn't really give any indication of the degree to which the matter had been investigated? - I would have investigated according to the form, and any problem I had I would have referred it to the supervisory officer, but I would have made any enquiry that was relevant according to the application form.

Did you expect any check on your work to be done? - I would presume the supervisory officer would have looked at the work I had done, and if he had any problem he would have got back to me.

Seeing the form in front of you, does it make any difference to your recollection? - No, none.

You can't remember the incident at all? - No.

Did you ever encounter Thomas Hamilton to your knowledge apart from that occasion? - Not personally, no.

Had you heard about him? - I had.

Is that because of where you live? - Yes.

Before this investigation by you had you heard of him?
- No.

The second question on the form is "Is the applicant a suitable person to hold a firearms certificate"? - Yes.

Which is answered Yes? - Yes.

Was your state of knowledge of Hamilton at a later stage such that you would have answered that question any differently? - At that time he in my opinion would have been a suitable person if I had answered that Yes.

But some time later, when you came to know or heard of him, did you know of anything that would have led you to answer the question at a later stage/stage No rather than Yes? - Are you referring to because I live in Dunblane and there are all sorts of innuendos.....

I was wondering about the state of your knowledge because you have heard things about him? - In answer to that, it was all innuendo, it was all rumour, there was no fact.

Were you ever in possession of reliable factual information that suggested he was not a suitable person to have a firearms certificate? - No, never.

No cross-examination.

WILLIAM STEWART WISDOM (57) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. BONAMY: I think you are a retired police officer? - Yes.

And you live in Alva? - Yes.

And you work as an area manager? - Yes.

What rank were you when you retired from the police force? - Chief Inspector.

When was that? - It was on 30th November, 1990.

How long did you serve as a police officer? - Just short of 32 years.

Now, would you look please at certain documents relating to your involvement in Hamilton's firearms applications. First of all, at FA9. What is that document? - This is an application for variation of a firearms certificate.

That is D29. Would you also have in front of you FA10 which is D30. Is that the LR3a form which relates to the application for variation? - Yes. The dates appear to coincide.

The date of the application for variation is 19th August, 1977? - That is correct.

The/

The dates around that time compare with the RL3a form? - That is correct.

And the words "grant" and "renewal" have been taken out of the RL3a so that "variation" remains in? - Yes.

Do we see your writing on that document? - Part 7 is my writing.

7 is where it is stated to be additional information? - That is correct.

You have written something that you considered important I think at the time. Can you tell us what you have written? - Paragraph 7 says "Hamilton seen and warned verbally by me on 26/8/77 that he should not have acquired a .22 Smith and Wesson revolver without firstly applying for variation of his certificate. Hamilton fully accepted responsibility but states he was misinformed by the firearms dealer in Glasgow regarding proper procedure. Existing certificate will now require variation to delete reference to .22 Bostock pistol K3573P. This matter was reported on by PC556 (Anderson), Stirling, at which time (6/4/77) the necessary amendment should have been made to this certificate".

Now, tell us what that was all about? - Well, I don't have the firearms certificate but it would appear that at the time I was checking these documents the applicant had disposed of a weapon and acquired another weapon in its place without the proper variation procedures having been carried out.

So you warned him? - Yes, I did.

What did you say to him? - Quite honestly, I have no recollection of this event whatsoever. But having stated that in paragraph 7, I can still more or less imagine what I would say. I don't even recall where the warning took place but I would suspect it would be at the police office.

Do you remember other occasions when you had to warn people about their behaviour in terms of their firearms certificate? - I don't recall specific instances but I am certain that this was not a unique or only occasion.

So/

So in a situation like that what is the nature of the warning that is given? - Well, it is more or less a re-appraisal of what the requirements are under the Firearms Act and the proper procedure relating to acquiring or disposing of weapons, and it should be made clear to the person who has defaulted what the proper procedures were.

What rank were you then? - I was an Inspector.

As a result of this you were happy that the application for variation should be granted? - Yes. I saw no other reason that the application was faulty.

The end result was that he had a different .22 weapon from the one he originally got? - Yes.

Would you look at one other document in that same connection, it is not one I have got a number -- it will be FA7, which should be D28. It should be a memo from Constable Anderson to the Chief Superintendent dated 6th April, 1977. Do you have that? - Yes.

This is a note from Anderson to the Chief Superintendent dated 6th April, 1977. Anderson is the officer who investigated this matter; is that right? - Yes, that would appear to be the case.

It says there that Hamilton stated to him he had sold the .22 Bostock and purchased a Smith and Wesson .22? - Yes.

That is consistent with what you have reported on the other form? - Correct.

It says that he produced a receipt, and then Mr. Anderson says at the second-last paragraph "I checked Hamilton's firearms certificate and found it to be in order and did not require to be amended". That is not correct, is it? - It is not, no.

But that would explain why in April, this having been discovered, Hamilton did not apply for a renewal or variation of his certificate? - I am thinking that it would have been a retrospective variation/variation in any event.

Indeed, but it would have made sense for it to be done in April rather than August? - Yes, it would have.

And do we have here a possible explanation for it not being done in April? - An oversight is all I can put that down to.

It appears to be the officer didn't understand what you needed to do with the firearms certificate when you got a new weapon? - Yes, I would accept that.

Now, in August, 1977 what was your role in regard to firearms? - My role as the duty inspector would have been to check and examine applications presented through the chain of command by the enquiry or reporting officer. Normally it would be carried out by a constable initially, checked for accuracy by a sergeant, and then further checked by the duty inspector; that would have been my role.

No cross-examination.

LESLEY BELL (35) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: I think you live in Stirling? - That is correct.

A former police officer with Central Scotland Police? - Correct.

During which period did you serve with the police? - I served from 1981 until March of last year.

And were you a constable throughout that period? - I was, yes.

I think you dealt with one of Hamilton's application in 1986? - That is correct.

Could you have before you FA34 and FA35 which are D51A and D52. Are these the applications for renewal in January 1986 and the RL3a form dealing/dealing with the renewal? - Yes.

Those days I think you signed Lesley Johnson? - Yes.

Is it also your signature as reporting officer on the RL3a form? - It is.

Dated 12th January, 1986? - That is correct.

Do you remember dealing with this application? - I am sorry, no, I have no recollection.

Do you remember meeting Thomas Hamilton? - I do not, no.

In latter years after this date did you come across him at all? - No.

Did you ever hear things about him? - Not that I am aware, no.

Part of the application on this occasion was to acquire an additional weapon, a 7.62mm rifle and a 9mm pistol. You see that? - Yes, I do.

And at that time he had a pistol, a 9mm revolver, a .357, a Browning rifle? - That is correct.

Do these features of the application help to remind you of dealing with this at all? - No, I am sorry, they don't.

In the course of your service did you deal with a number of firearms applications? - Yes, I would have done.

Can you remember how you dealt with the question of the good reason any applicant had with the issue or whether or not he should be authorised to acquire additional weapons? - If it appeared that he had good reason, for example, he was a member of a gun club, perhaps wanted an increase in weapons for target shooting, then that was quite likely, that was a good reason.

What would the position be in those days when/when he was asking for authority to have an additional weapon which was of the same calibre and type as one of the other weapons he had?

- That wasn't unusual.

Have you any understanding of the circumstances in which people would wish to have two more or less identical weapons?
- Not being a person who shoots regularly I suppose if you are having a collection it would be quite usual to want more than one.

BY LORD CULLEN: Why more than one? - Well, people tend to build up collections.

Just building up a collection? - There may be minor differences perhaps in the way they fire.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY BONOMY: Do you remember whether you actually went to see Hamilton's house and his security arrangements? - I don't remember specifically doing so but I would have done.

Was it standard practice always to do that. - It was, yes.

When you did that did you make an appointment to go and see the person? - Yes.

It was never a situation where you would perhaps call in unexpectedly just to see what the normal routine arrangements of the household were? - Well, normally a phone call beforehand to save a wasted journey.

BY LORD CULLEN: Can I ask how much of your work at that stage was concerned with firearms? - It was the usual inquiries. They came up perhaps five or six in the year at the most.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMY: Do you remember whether it was common practice to check up on an applicant's membership of a gun club? - Generally I would have done so, yes.

How did you do that? - If there was a specific club mentioned I would have contacted perhaps the secretary or some other club member.

Was/

Was there any indication in this case of membership of a club? - Unfortunately there is nothing on the form and I can't recall.

BY LORD CULLEN: When it came to a renewal as a matter of routine would you check up in regard to a club if it was mentioned or would you just assume that the situation remained the same? - Generally I would check.

EXAMINATION CONTINUED BY MR. BONOMOY: Can I take it that check would be confined to establishing membership, not to the extent to which the individual applicant actually used his weapon? - Yes, it would be establishing if he was a member or not.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: If I could just ask you briefly: you said not being a person who shoots regularly. Did you shoot at all? - I have done in the past, yes.

So at the time you were making these inquiries were you a member of a gun club? - I shot with the police, at the police ranges during my probation, and I gave it up because I had problems with my ears, but I regularly shot.

So if you were questioning somebody about their shooting habits or something of that sort you would have some knowledge of the.....? - If I thought there was something not ordinary I would have asked other questions and passed it up to a superior officer.

No re-examination.

IAIN HUGHES BINNING (48) Sworn

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMOY: Are you an Inspector with Central Scotland Police? - I am.

How long have you been in the police? - 29 years.

I wonder if you would have three documents in front of you please: FA34, 35 and 36 which are D51a, 52 and 53. You have seen these in the course of the Dunblane Inquiry? - Yes.

Do/

Do you remember the circumstances they relate to? I see the documents in front of me and can relate them to what would have happened in 1986.

Do you remember doing the job in 1986? - No sir.

In those days were you a sergeant? - I was a sergeant in Stirling.

D53, which is AD2a, that has a handwritten note attached. Have you got that? - Yes.

There is a handwritten piece on it addressed to Sergeant Binning? - Yes.

Whose handwriting is that? - It looks like Inspector Marshall I think it is who has initialled that.

What does he say? - "Apparently it is unlikely that a second 9mm pistol will be granted. See Mr. Hamilton and obtain full details of the reasons for requiring two pistols of the same calibre, i.e. why is one not sufficient, and re-submit attached to me ASAP".

This is in connection with an application we have just heard something about from a previous witness, renewal and variation application in 1986? - That is correct.

And it includes a request to acquire or to have authority to acquire an additional 9mm pistol? - That is correct.

And this is a query that is being raised by Inspector Marshall? - That is correct.

What would you then be expected to do about it? - From that note it is asking me to go down and see Mr. Hamilton and ask him why he requires another 9mm pistol.

Is that what happened? - Well, I see from the AD2a on 28th January, 1986 from Acting Chief Inspector Mill, Stirling, it would appear that he has actually carried out that inquiry and not myself.

Could/

Could you read out his response? - This is the AD2a from Acting Chief Inspector Mill, Stirling, to the Chief Superintendent, A Division, dated 28th January, 1986. The memo from Inspector Marshall would appear to have come some time after the 13th January, and it refers to a variation in the firearms certificate granted to Thomas Hamilton, 32 Forth Crescent, Riverside, Stirling, "I refer to the above application in which Mr. Hamilton is applying to vary a certificate to include a purchase of a 7.62 rifle and an additional 9mm pistol. Mr. Hamilton is active in competition shooting throughout the country and it is his intention to purchase the additional weapons for this purpose. The additional 9mm pistol is of a type which is advanced in design to his existing one and includes a weighted handle for greater accuracy. The additional weapon would only be used at recognised ranges for that type of weapon". It is signed by Acting Chief Inspector Mill on 29th January, and on 28th January there is a signature there Chief Superintendent Rattray.

If you go to the RL3a form just after that I think the stamp of Mr. Bell of the Firearms Department is added to the RL3a form? - That is correct.

So it looks as if that information was available when the firearms renewal and variation has been granted on the 30th January?
- Yes.

Is/

2.30 p.m.

Is your name anywhere on the RL3a? - My name isn't. My signature is on the right-hand side of the RL3a after P.C. Johnson's signature.

Well, does that mean it is in the middle of the page? - It is in the middle of the page. I have initialled this and passed it on.

And what does that signify? - That signifies that I am content with the information that has been supplied by P.C. Johnson to me.

Now, what was the role of you as a sergeant in the context of this inquiry which led to you being satisfied and then applying your initials? - Well, in general terms if someone applies for a firearm certificate or a variation then you assign a constable to that task. When they come back to you, invariably you ask them regarding the security of the weapon, their permission to shoot, where they are likely to shoot, if their reasons for getting it are valid. You ask them to check crime intelligence. You ask to make sure they have checked their previous convictions, since the previous grant. And once you are satisfied these things have been done then you pass it on.

So you go through all these questions with the constable after the constable has done the investigation? - As a sergeant, yes.

Now, going up the chain, who gets it next? - At that time it would be Inspector Marshall who got it. He would be my inspector at the police office, Stirling.

Do we see his signature on it? - No, but we see his initials down below the word "station".

I am missing yours them. Are yours on the right-hand side off the end of my page? - Mine is the squiggle that says "IVPS 130" to the right of the date, dated 12/1/86.

I know it was a silly question for me to ask you, but you have given me the answer. It is off the edge of my page? - I take it yours is a photocopy, / photocopy, sir?

Yes? - Right.

Anyway, the explanation is under the word "station", which is where I was looking earlier for yours.....? - That is Inspector Marshall's.

What did he normally do before applying his initials to the form? - In general terms he may have come back to me -- he may not. If he had had a query he would have asked me. If he didn't have a query he would have examined it as a normal application, signed it and passed it on.

He wouldn't routinely grill you the same way as you were asking questions of the constable?
- Not necessarily.

Not routinely? - Not routinely. If there is a degree of trust -- which I would have trusted P.C. Johnson to carry out that inquiry, therefore if I asked her "Have you checked for previous convictions?", and she said "Yes", I would accept that "Yes" as being valid.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MISS DUNLOP: Could you just clarify the nature of the question that you would be asking Constable Johnson? Would you be asking her "What is this good reason?", or "Where is he going to shoot?", or would you just say to her "Have you checked he has good reason and have you checked where he is going to shoot?"? - I can't speak for this one on its own, because I can't remember, but in general terms because it is a firearms renewal and variation we ask these questions as a matter of course when the renewals come through with the certificates.

So it wouldn't be a case of asking her if she had asked the questions, you would pose the questions to her about the reasons and where he shoots? - I wouldn't check the whys and wherefores. I would ask "Have you checked where he shoots?" -- "Yes". "And is that valid?" -- "Yes". And if these questions are answered in the affirmative I would have accepted that.

So for something like the good reason to continue/continue to possess, and authority to acquire certain firearms, for example, might it be the case that you would simply say to her "Have you checked that?", and she would say "Yes, he has good reason", and you wouldn't probe it any further? - We are speaking hypothetically.

I appreciate that? - If I were to say "Has he got good reason to ask for another 9 mm gun?". And she had said "Yes, it is for a different type of shooting than what his other one is used for", then given that quite often you get this in shooting circles, that they may have more than one firearm because it is a sport with different positions and different targets and what have you, that there would be possibly a valid reason for him at that time possessing that gun, or that extra gun of the same calibre.

But you have explained there is a degree of trust, so if you posed a question to a junior officer like that and she simply said "Yes", then you might just leave it at that, because you trusted her? - Yes.

CROSS-EXAMINED BY MR. TAYLOR: Can you tell us how this trust would be developed between yourself and the officer? - Well, every police officer in your charge is your responsibility, so it is your responsibility to make sure they are trained up to whatever level you would wish them to be -- not just for firearms, but for the whole spectrum of police work. If P.C. Johnson, for example, had proven to me over a period that she could answer the questions I would pose regarding shotgun certificates, firearm certificates, then it gets easier on her the more I trusted her, and once that trust is assured, the number of questions asked would obviously reduce.

So as your confidence in her to do the job properly grows, so your scrutiny of her can become more relaxed? - Yes.

So at the outset do I understand then that if an applicant wanted to have, for example, two guns of the same calibre and you inquired of her if she had checked if he had good reason and the answer was simply given in the affirmative, you would want to know a little bit more possibly? - You/

You see, the other aspect is.....

This is at the outset, when you are first dealing with the officer? - Yes, but you are also dealing with your own experience as well. When I was a policeman doing inquiries into firearms, if someone came and asked for, to use this example, "Another 9 mm pistol", then through your own experience you get to gauge what shooting sportsmen require and what their needs are, therefore whilst I may have known an answer, if I may have known an answer, I may have not asked the officer when I have trusted her anyway to carry it through.

But in the absence of knowing the answer you would have asked the officer, beyond just accepting her word for it? - Yes.

And you would have knowledge of when to ask the questions through your own experience? - Yes.

No re-examination.

HUGH PATERSON (53), Sworn:

EXAMINED BY MR. BONOMY: I stay in Blairdrummond. I am a retired police officer.

When did you retire from Central Scotland Police? - Almost three years ago.

After serving for how long? - 31, 32 years.

I would like you to have certain documents in front of you, FA43 and FA44, which are D65 and D68. Now, do you recognise that these are documents relating to an application by Thomas Hamilton? - Yes.

And that that application was made in January 1989 for renewal of his firearms certificate? - Yes.

I/

I should have asked you to have one more document, which is probably FA45. It is also D69. So that document, along with the other single document you have got there I think comprises the RL3a for dealing with that case; is that right? - Yes.

Now, the signature "H. Paterson" appears as sub-divisional officer? - Yes.

On the RL3a? - Yes.

Is that you? - That is right.

These forms were apparently used during an interim phase before the updated form was finalised by the force for use in these inquiries, and we can see there is quite a lot of detail on the second of the forms I gave you; is that right? - Yes.

Now, as the sub-divisional officer completing a document which says "I have no objections to this application", what did you actually have in front of you, and what did you do with what you had in front of you? - I would have that document in front of me and the other documents relating to this application for renewal.

You would have all the documents I have given you? - Yes, that is right.

Would you have anything else? - The firearms certificate.

Anything else? - That is all I am aware of that I would have.

Now, what was the job you were then to do? - Examine these documents and see that the renewal related to the documents submitted.

And that was it? - Yes.

No other checking would be done -- you would simply be looking to see if the application and the RL3a and its supplementary form appeared to be consistent? - Yes.

And the investigation appeared to have been/
