Education — Failures and Family Involvement

Compiled by

PETER LANGMAN, PH.D.

This document focuses on school shooters' negative experiences with school personnel, whether these involved academic failures, disciplinary actions by administrators, or other conflicts. In some cases, the perpetrators clearly targeted school personnel in response to perceived injustices. In other cases, there may have been no direct connection between their negative experiences and victim selection. Even in these cases, however, failures, frustrations, and conflicts may have combined with other factors to put the perpetrators on the path of violence. A second focus is the involvement of family members in education, primarily in terms of employment in the field, but also in terms of their own academic achievements. As discussed in my book School Shooters: Understanding High School, College, and Adult Perpetrators, in some cases there may have been a connection between family involvement in education, the distress and conflict caused by the perpetrators' academic failures, and the selection of both venues (e.g., type of school) and victims (e.g., family members). Finally, education-related targets are noted; family members involved in education who were targeted are listed in parentheses. It is not assumed in all cases in which shooters had relatives involved in education that this was a factor in the attacks. Nonetheless, because school shootings occur in educational settings, this document presents information regarding both the families' connections to education and the perpetrators' experiences in education. The table below is divided into four sections; within each section, the ordering of items is chronological by attack date.<sup>1</sup>
